Just one question on São Tome and Principe, which is you mentioned their sort of government structure and process, which has been, I think, one that we have encouraged and supported.

With respect to their economy, my understanding is they would also like to diversify their economy a little bit more. What role can the United States play with respect to that objective?

Mr. MUSHINGI. Thank you, Senator.

One role that we can play is, really, to build on what we already have. As I said, it is a small land footprint but the long maritime borders and for us talking about maritime security, that is one thing where, really, we can play the biggest role.

But I was really happy to see that when I looked at the American companies that are on the ground—Kosmos Energy, Caterpillar, Dell—so that gives me an idea of the openness that São Tome has to American businesses with American models and, if confirmed, that is what I will be pushing, and especially many of those companies or agencies that work in the security area when we are talking about maritime security in the Gulf of Guinea. Over.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Ambassador.

Ms. Aubin, the United States, as you know, has praised Algeria for its cooperation on counterterrorism issues and regional matters, and you referenced in your testimony its role as a mediator, notably, in Mali in 2015.

At the same time, its close ties to and its arms deals with Russia, especially in the aftermath of the CAATSA legislation passed here in Congress, have been concerning.

So what do you see as the main areas of agreement between the United States and Algeria and some of the areas of friction?

Ms. AUBIN. Thank you for the question, Senator Van Hollen.

I see the U.S. and Algeria having a lot of areas of agreement: regional stability in the Maghreb, the desire to have a more inclusive economic environment, and, certainly, they are very interested in the Human Rights Report—Trafficking in Persons Report and other reports that we do, and they are working to make gains in those areas.

You are right about Russia and Algeria's military relationship. Algeria procured two-thirds of its arms from Russia between 2015 and 2019. So that is an issue, and the sale of C-130s were part of the United States' larger policy goal of deterring Algeria from engaging in sanctionable activity.

And if confirmed, I will prioritize that in my conversations with Algerian officials.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. No, I appreciate that, because there were the arms sales, as you say, dating back to 2015 and before. But I think more concerning have been some of the arms sales since the CAATSA legislation passed.

What impact, if any, have you seen has that had on the calculations of the Algerian Government in terms of purchases?

Ms. AUBIN. So thank you for allowing me to clarify that I think the C-130 sales helped deter that, and I think the United States needs to continue conversations with Algeria to explain what Countering America's Adversaries Through Sanctions Act really means and how that will impact our relationship, moving forward.

And so that is something that I will prioritize in my conversations when I get there. Algeria has had a policy of sovereignty and noninterference in domestic affairs and that is how they have moved forward in their bilateral relationships.

But I think this is a really important point and if confirmed, I will continue to raise that with Algerian colleagues.

Thank you.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you. No, I appreciate that, and Senator Rounds mentioned his opposition to the former administration's policy change with respect to recognition of Moroccan sovereignty over the Western Sahara.

You already answered that question. I do want to go on record in agreement with my colleague, Senator Rounds, on that matter.

So let me turn now to Mr. Young, if I may, and a couple questions, because you covered a lot of it in your testimony with respect to the Republic of Congo.

One of the concerns I am sure you have seen expressed here on the Hill, in the United States, and elsewhere, has been the regional impact of weak control over the security sector and abuses committed by Congolese peacekeepers and park rangers.

Can you speak a little bit to that issue and, you know, what role you can play in expressing our concerns and what kind of changes that we can expect?

Mr. YOUNG. Thank you, Senator. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I think it is really important that we continue to direct dialogue with the Government on issues like these that my predecessor and our embassy is still having at this point, to have that regular dialogue, to have an open discussion.

In terms of the peacekeepers that you mentioned, sir, my understanding, and this is one of the positive signs that we have seen, and that is that those peacekeepers that I think you are referring to were, in fact, held accountable for the crimes that they committed.

So that was one plus that we have seen recently. But it is important that we—across this and across all of these issues around democratic progress that we have a dialogue with the Government, we have dialogue with civil society, with youth, with the security and maintain some of the training programs we have had with security forces and with law enforcement. I think those can help address the issues that you are referring to, sir.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Well, right. No, I am referring to the situation in Central African Republic, their troops there, and we do look forward to working with you to make sure that everyone is held accountable in what happened there.

Let me turn to Mr. Lamora. And as you referenced in your testimony, Cameroon has seen significant violence in recent years owing to the Anglophone Conflict as well as the Boko Haram insurgency in the far north.

I represent a very active and engaged and terrific Cameroonian-American constituency in the state of Maryland and I have been engaged with them in conversations about their concerns about what is happening.

Can you talk a little more about what the United States can do to support a peaceful resolution of Cameroon's Anglophone Conflict?

Mr. LAMORA. Thank you, Senator.

Yes. One of the things that we have been trying to do and will try to do with Cameroon is to bring the parties together to get them to talk. There has not been complete willingness on any side thus far to come to the table.

As you are aware I know, sir, the Swiss have led a process of trying to do that and we have supported and aligned ourselves with that. I think an important thing that we have been doing increasingly in recent weeks is to engage the French at higher levels.

France has a long-standing close relationship with the Government in Yaounde. Secretary Blinken recently raised his concerns, our concerns, about Cameroon with his French counterpart. I think greater French engagement certainly would help. We are hopeful that we can move that forward.

As I mentioned in my testimony also, following on the resolution that the Senate passed, S.R. 684, that talked about the possibility of sanctions, Secretary Blinken announced these visa sanctions, visa restrictions, earlier this week on those who are impeding peace in the Anglophone regions, in particular.

So I think there is a variety of things that we can do and that our international partners can do. But, ultimately, we can help move them all in the best direction we can.

But it will have to be the Cameroonian Government, the parties to the violence, and the Cameroonian people who really commit themselves to finding a peaceful way forward.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you.

Thank you all. I am getting word that another committee I serve on with the attorney general may be wrapping up and I hope to get over there and have a chance to ask him some questions.

So let me thank all of you, again, for your previous service to our country. I look forward to supporting your nominations and, again, thank you for what you do and to your families.

And with that, this hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 3:46 p.m., the committee was adjourned.]

TO HON. LARRY EDWARD ANDRÉ BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Gulf Influence in Somalia

Question. Countries such as the UAE, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, and Turkey are playing an increasing role in the Horn of Africa, particularly in Somalia, though much of their efforts remain bilateral and somewhat opaque. What seems certain, however, is that despite all four of these countries being allies and friends of the United States, their agendas and efforts often do not align with our own.

- What is your assessment of the influence of these actors in the Horn of Africa?

Answer. The Gulf states, particularly the UAE and Qatar, have significant influence in Somalia by virtue of their political, economic, and security engagement.

Our NATO ally Turkey's relationship with Somalia is strong. Turkey has built schools, hospitals, and infrastructure in Somalia. It also provides extensive security assistance focused on the recruitment, training, and equipping of both police and Somali National Army forces.

Question. Are their collective efforts contributing to or taking away from peace and stability in the region?

Answer. The Gulf rift has had a destabilizing impact on Somalia, as Gulf states vied for influence with the Federal Government (FGS) in Mogadishu and Federal Member States (FMS). The dispute distracted the FGS and its FMS from implementing security sector, political, and economic reforms critical to stabilizing the country, including countering the influence of al-Shabaab and ISIS.

Meanwhile, in recent months Turkey joined other countries when the United Nations Assistance Mission in Somalia (UNSOM) issued a joint statement welcoming the May 20 Summit. It did not join statements of concern about President Mohamed Abdullahi Farmaajo's term extension or subsequent violence in Mogadishu, which were issued immediately prior.

Question. If the latter, what is the United States doing to try and bring their efforts more in line with our own?

Answer. The United States repeatedly has urged external actors, including the Gulf states, not to use Somalia as a proxy battleground for bilateral disputes. We hold regular consultations with these governments and demarche them to join us and likeminded partners in seeking political progress and stability in Somalia.

Vision for Somalia

Question. Infighting between Somalia's Federal Member States and the central member states continues to threaten the stability of the country; the United States conducted airstrikes in Somalia against Al Shabab and Al Qaeda for over a decade while Al Shabab continues to carry out major attacks in cities and in the countryside; and Gulf actors compete for influence. Tensions between Ethiopia, Sudan, Eritrea, Kenya, and Somalia threaten the stability of the entire Horn of Africa.

- What are the United States' goals in Somalia in the short, medium, and long term?

- With the grave potential for instability in yet another country in the Horn of Africa, what will be your priorities if confirmed?
- How do you plan to work with Special Envoy Feltman and other Ambassadors in the region to develop a coherent and integrated approach to U.S. policy in the Horn?

Answer. The United States' near- and medium-term objectives in Somalia are to degrade terrorist groups that pose a threat to U.S. persons and interests; strengthen Somalia's security forces so that they can assume greater responsibility from the African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM); advance political reconciliation and governance reforms necessary for lasting stability; and promote economic growth and opportunity that will reduce Somalia's dependence on U.S. and international assistance, while delivering humanitarian aid to people in need. It is our hope that, over time, these efforts will lead to a peaceful, stable, democratic Somalia that respects human rights and fundamental freedoms and that can provide security and services for its citizens.

If confirmed, I will build on the work of Ambassador Yamamoto to bring to bear the full range of tools to help Somalis defend themselves and rid their country of terrorism. I will support Somalia's completion of a peaceful, inclusive, transparent, and timely electoral process and strengthened cooperation among Somalia's national and federal member state governments. And I will support the work of our development, humanitarian, and economic professionals to provide aid to Somalis in need and to promote inclusive economic growth.

The stabilization of Somalia is an international challenge that requires close coordination with its neighbors and other international stakeholders. I am committed to working closely with our Special Envoy for the Horn of Africa Envoy Jeffrey Feltman and our ambassadors in East Africa and in other critical partner capitals to ensure a cohesive and coordinated approach.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. LARRY EDWARD ANDRÉ, JR. BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. In the State Department's 2020 Trafficking in Persons Report, Somalia was identified as a special case due to ongoing conflict, insecurity, and protracted humanitarian crises. Given the complicated security situation and sustained insurgency by Al-Shabaab across the country, how will you work with the host government and U.S. Government interagency to help Somalia improve efforts of protection, prosecution, and prevention?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the U.S. Government's interagency commitment to working with the Somali federal and member state governments to help build the capacity of Somali institutions to prevent trafficking, prosecute those engaged in the illicit activity, and protect victims.

Question. In the State Department's 2020 International Religious Freedom report, the Somali Government is listed as continuing to discriminate against non-Islamic religions, including Christianity. In addition, Al-Shabaab has committed egregious crimes against those who practice religions other than Islam. What is your assessment of this particular issue and if confirmed, how will you work with the Office of International Religious Freedom to bolster religious freedom in-country?

Answer. Al-Shabaab's brutal treatment of those whose beliefs differ from their own is appalling. If confirmed, I would condemn Al-Shabaab's ruthless acts and urge that Somalia's laws allow all people to worship in a manner of their choosing. If confirmed, I would engage senior officials in the Federal Government of Somalia, as well as its Federal Member States, to advocate for religious freedom and express concern over actions by authorities against individuals and groups attempting to practice their faith freely. If confirmed, my team will continue to work closely with the Office of International Religious Freedom.

Question. In the 2020 Human Rights Report, Somalia was identified as having committed or baring witness to severe human rights abuses specifically committed by Al-Shabaab.

- If confirmed, what steps will you take to address these instances with the host government?
- How will you direct your embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground?

Answer. Al-Shabaab is the leading perpetrator of human rights violations in Somalia. Working with the Somali Government, AMISOM, and like-minded partners to degrade al-Shabaab militarily and economically while bolstering Somali governance and institutions should reduce their operational space to commit abuses against Somali and foreign nationals.

If confirmed, I would continue to engage with the highest levels of the Somali Government, sub-national authorities, and local communities, members of the diplomatic corps, the U.N., and NGOs to promote respect for human rights for all Somalis.

AMISOM

Question. There is much discussion about AMISOM's mandate in Somalia and potential realignments. If your opinion, what adjustments to AMISOM's mandate are needed to improve its effectiveness?

Answer. AMISOM remains critical to Somalia's stabilization, and its continued presence is necessary to provide time and space to build effective Somali security institutions. The United States supports a smart and deliberate conditions-based transition from AMISOM to Somali security forces. If confirmed, I am committed to working closely with the African Union, AMISOM troop contributors, the U.N., EU, and other international stakeholders to support revisions to AMISOM's mandate to enable it to conduct more effective operations against al-Shabaab, while supporting the development of Somali security forces that can ultimately take over the country's security.

Somaliland

Question. What is your perspective on U.S. policy toward Somaliland? Do you think the U.S. has missed an important opportunity over the last several years to support and engage more fully with a more stable and democratic entity at the best of Mogadishu?

Answer. The United States recognizes a single Somalia, which includes Somaliland. Given Somalia's federal system, I believe it is in the U.S. interest to maintain positive engagement with Somalia's national and regional government authorities, while also encouraging those authorities to strengthen cooperation with one another. In June 2020, in my capacity as U.S. Ambassador to Djibouti, I attended Djibouti-hosted talks between senior representatives of Somaliland and Somalia. This experience provided insights into the points of view of both sides and where their interests overlap. If confirmed, I am committed to continuing to engage with regional administrations like Somaliland to promote good governance, stability, and economic development, and to explore opportunities to strengthen cooperation.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. LARRY EDWARD ANDRÉ BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

Violence and Instability in Cameroon and Beyond

Question. U.S. relations with Cameroon have been mostly positive, although they have been adversely affected by concerns over human rights abuses, in particular in the Anglophone Northwest and Southwest Regions, and the pace of political and economic liberalization. Cameroon plays a key role in regional stability and remains a regional partner in countering terrorism in the Lake Chad Region.

- Last year, I joined with 19 of my Senate colleagues to sign a resolution calling for a ceasefire in Cameroon, and remain deeply concerned by the ongoing violence there. I am curious as to what you think it will take to conclude and uphold a ceasefire, guaranteed humanitarian access, and establish a process of political dialogue?

Answer. If confirmed, I will make resolving the Anglophone crisis my top policy priority. Our position remains that all sides must end violence and engage in an inclusive dialogue without preconditions. The Government is focused on countering armed separatists in the field and maintains that its convening of a Grand National Dialogue in 2019 and decentralization efforts thus far, including regional elections in late 2020 and the establishment of a special status for the two Anglophone regions, address the root causes of the crisis. I believe the Government must do more to resolve the crisis. Specifically, it must be willing to engage in an inclusive dialogue without preconditions. The armed separatist groups, as well, must be willing to engage peacefully in such a dialogue and cease human rights abuses, as called for in the Senate resolution.

If confirmed, I will consider all potential diplomatic tools to advance dialogue and end violence in the Anglophone Northwest and Southwest Regions. We will engage in discussions with other partners on the ground and look for tangible ways to advance peace in Cameroon.

Question. In 2019, the United States took the relatively rare step of terminating Cameroon's AGOA eligibility due to persistent gross violations of human rights. Unfortunately, this does not appear to have impacted the Government's behavior in the ongoing conflict. If confirmed, what other measures do you plan to take to hold state and non-state actors in Cameroon accountable for human rights abuses?

Answer. On June 7, 2021, Secretary Blinken announced that the United States was taking steps to impose visa restrictions on individuals who are believed to be responsible for, or complicit in, undermining the peaceful resolution of the crisis in the Anglophone regions of Cameroon. This decision reflects the continuing U.S. commitment to advance dialogue and promote respect for human rights. This decision followed cuts in security assistance in recent years, and, as you noted, the determination that Cameroon was ineligible for AGOA starting on January 1, 2020. These actions demonstrate the U.S. Government's resolve to back up words with actions.

If confirmed, I will consider all potential diplomatic tools to advance dialogue and end violence in the Anglophone Northwest and Southwest Regions. We will engage in discussions with other partners on the ground, as well as the Cameroonian Government and people, to identify tangible ways to advance peace in Cameroon.

Question. In addition to the internal violence related to the Anglophone Crisis, Cameroon is also facing threats from Boko Haram and ISIS West Africa. How do we square our support for Cameroon's efforts against Boko Haram and ISIS West Africa with our concerns about human rights abuses and political abuses inside Cameroon? In other words, how can the State Department ensure that President Biya does not use foreign counterterrorism assistance to fund its efforts against Anglophone separatists in the Southwest and Northwest part of the country?

Answer. Cameroon has long played a crucial role in regional stability. With the protracted crisis in the Central African Republic, instability in Nigeria, the terrorist threat posed by Boko Haram and ISIS-West Africa, and increasing incidents of piracy in the Gulf of Guinea, Cameroon's role as a partner in securing and maintaining stability in the region is even more important. Since early 2019, we have significantly reduced security assistance because the Government of Cameroon had not taken sufficient action to investigate credible accusations of gross violations of human rights by its security forces or hold the perpetrators accountable. The United States continues to review security assistance on a case-by-case basis so that assistance we provide aligns with U.S. interests, including promotion of respect for human rights. We vet potential recipients of security assistance, consistent with the Leahy laws, and do not provide assistance to Cameroonian security force units where there is credible information that the unit has committed a gross violation of human rights. U.S.-granted assistance is explicitly prohibited from being used in the Anglophone regions. We have made this prohibition clear at all levels of the Cameroonian Government and we carefully monitor the use of U.S. assistance to ensure this commitment is followed. Risk of misuse or potential diversion to the Anglophone regions are key criteria in our security assistance decision-making.

Since our cuts, the Cameroonian Government has taken some limited steps towards holding security forces accountable, including the conviction of four soldiers for murder in August 2020 and the arrest of soldiers believed to be responsible for one case of extrajudicial killings and one case of alleged torture of a detainee. While we hope these steps indicate a willingness to address the problem, abuses by government forces continue.

Between FY 2019 (the last year for which there is full obligation data) and FY 2020 funding, the State Department has obligated approximately $8.3 million in assistance to support the Cameroonian military. This funding supported professional military education; technical support for unarmed intelligence, surveillance, and reconnaissance platforms; small boat training; communications training; and air-to-ground integration training. If confirmed, I would work to ensure that U.S.-provided equipment is not misused by Cameroonian security forces, and would actively and fully address verified reports of such misuse.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. LARRY EDWARD ANDRÉ BY SENATOR MIKE ROUNDS

Question. Ambassador Andre, The U.S. maintains a very modest embassy on the compound of the Mogadishu International Airport, and our diplomats are extremely limited in their ability to leave the airport complex.

What is your perspective on this posture, and what do you believe is its impact on U.S. diplomatic relations with Somalia and our allies?

Answer. If confirmed, the safety of U.S. citizens in Somalia and of U.S. Embassy personnel will be my highest priority. I will work with the Diplomatic Security Service to maximize the ability of our diplomats to advance our goals and interests through engagements throughout Somalia whenever possible through effective risk mitigation and management decisions. I am doing that now in my role as Chargé d'affaires in South Sudan, which can be a dangerous place. I will consider both the security environment in Somalia and specific opportunities to advance the goals assigned to us through an interagency process. I will ensure we remain able to engage effectively with all levels of the Somali Government as well as with our international partners, many of whom are also located on the Mogadishu International Airport compound.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. MARIA E. BREWER BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question. Ambassador Brewer, as you know, Lesotho has been plagued with political instability since independence in 1966, and no prime minister has served a full term for the past decade.

- In light of Lesotho's recurrent political instability, what are some opportunities that you see for the U.S. to support the development of Lesotho's democratic institutions?

Answer. Promoting democratic governance is at the core of U.S. values and of what we seek to accomplish in Lesotho. Lesotho has a complicated history with several instances of political and armed instability, driven in part by politicians pulling the security services into political disputes and the security sector's inability to remain neutral. In recent years, Embassy Maseru has worked to improve civilian-military relationships, encourage the neutrality of security and law enforcement bodies, and support Lesotho's ongoing efforts to depoliticize its security forces. The mission also collaborates with like-minded partners (including the UK) to advance these goals. Building on existing U.S. Embassy efforts to promote civilian control of Lesotho's military and government accountability, if confirmed, I look forward to working with this committee, the interagency, and the Government of Lesotho to strengthen Lesotho's institutions, to further promote the professionalization of Lesotho's security forces and to foster improved civilian oversight of the military and law enforcement. I will also continue to work with the interagency to identify ways to reinforce Lesotho's ability to meet the needs of its people and build its capacity to be a better partner to us.

Question. Ambassador Brewer, support to the health sector, mainly through the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief, is a significant element of the U.S./Lesotho bilateral relationship.

- What is your assessment of the importance and effectiveness of U.S. support to combatting HIV/AIDS and other public health emergencies in Lesotho, including the COVID pandemic?

Answer. America's interests at home are strengthened by improving lives globally. Investments in preventing disease and improving public health and nutrition are among our best means to articulate and embody our values, while simultaneously pursuing our national security interests. U.S. support to combat HIV/AIDS and other public health emergencies in Lesotho is important because it is both the right and the smart thing to do. In Lesotho, our PEPFAR investment has seen a remarkable return in terms of lives saved and increased social stability.

Largely because of U.S. support, Lesotho is one of the first PEPFAR countries to achieve the UNAIDS targets for epidemic control; moreover, it has cut its rate of new HIV infections in half since 2016. These historic achievements lay the groundwork for an HIV/AIDS-free generation and are landmarks in PEPFAR's 18-year history.

U.S. health and development investments in Lesotho, including but not limited to PEPFAR, are important and effective, certainly in terms of controlling the HIV/AIDS pandemic, but also in terms of combatting COVID-19, TB and other communicable diseases; confronting health-related issues such as immunizations, clean water, and sanitation; and enhancing health security by preventing, detecting, and responding to infectious disease threats.

If confirmed, I will ensure good stewardship of U.S. taxpayers' investment in health and development in Lesotho. Building on the outstanding success achieved through our previous and existing partnerships with the Government and people of Lesotho, I will also work to secure sustainability and help Lesotho move towards self-reliance in meeting the future needs of its population.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. MARIA E. BREWER BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. In the State Department's 2020 Trafficking in Persons Report (TIP), Lesotho was identified as Tier 3 due to lack of significant efforts by the Government to increase prosecution, protection, and prevention. How will you work with the Lesotho Government to address these issues if you are confirmed as Ambassador?

Answer. I understand Lesotho was placed on Tier 3 due to chronic poor progress towards addressing our recommendations and credible allegations of official complicity. The Government of Lesotho has taken many steps to combat trafficking in persons since the release of the 2020 TIP Report. The Government convicted and sentenced the first trafficker in four years; closed key legislative gaps in anti-trafficking laws; criminalized all forms of sex trafficking and outlined stringent penalties; increased its investigations into official complicity; and launched a five-year anti-trafficking national action plan. The Secretary will release the 2021 TIP Report with updated tier rankings and updated prioritized recommendations this summer. If confirmed, I will continue to press for progress on recommendations in the TIP Report.

Question. Given Lesotho's enclosure by South Africa, a Tier 2 country, are there connections to be made with South Africa and the U.S. Embassy there to improve trafficking regionally?

Answer. Trafficking is indeed a regional problem that demands a regional response. If confirmed, I will not only lead our bilateral engagement urging the Government of Lesotho to pursue and punish traffickers and better protect victims, but will also work with the State Department's Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons and the U.S. Embassy in Pretoria to encourage regional solutions and inter-governmental cooperation to combat cross-border trafficking.

Question. In the State Department's 2020 International Religious Freedom report, Lesotho was identified as partially tolerant of religious freedom. What is your assessment of this particular issue and if confirmed, how will you work with the Office of International Religious Freedom to bolster religious freedom in-country and expand on the work the U.S. Embassy is currently undertaking to prevent further discrimination of religious minorities?

Answer. As noted in the 2020 International Religious Freedom report, the constitution of Lesotho prohibits religious discrimination and provides for freedom of conscience, thought, and religion, including the freedom to change religion or belief and to manifest and propagate one's religion. Religious leaders of all faiths have told the U.S. Embassy that there is broad religious tolerance among the people of Lesotho.

Some business and government leaders occasionally express distrust of entrepreneurs of South Asian origin, many of whom are Muslim. Nonetheless, the U.S. Embassy is unaware of any act of discrimination targeting Lesotho's Muslims, whether those who have recently immigrated to Lesotho or the longstanding Muslim communities in the north of the country.

If confirmed, I will continue the U.S. Embassy's regular contact with religious, government, business, and civil society leaders to discuss religious freedom and tolerance and the need to be proactive in preventing discrimination against adherents of the country's growing minority religions, particularly Islam.

Question. In the State Department's 2020 Human Rights Report, Lesotho was identified as having committed human rights abuses, including using the COVID-19 pandemic and subsequent lockdown as a façade to stifle freedom of assembly and movement.

If confirmed, what steps will you take to address these instances with the host government?

Answer. Many observers argued that Lesotho's previous administration used the COVID-19 pandemic as a pretext to stifle freedoms of peaceful assembly and movement. That was a clear human rights concern, as are ongoing problems such as trafficking in persons, police brutality, and child labor. The United States is also concerned about prolonged pretrial detentions and prison conditions. Some other concerns detailed in the 2020 Human Rights Report include reports of unlawful or arbitrary killings by security forces, arbitrary arrest and detention, and mistreatment while in custody. There are also issues with official corruption, a lack of judicial independence, violence against women, and continued criminalization of consensual same-sex sexual conduct between adults.

The mission pushes for greater accountability in cases of police abuse and encourages the Lesotho Mounted Police Service to strengthen its police complaints board, with some success. The mission also works to promote better understanding of community-based policing via training programs at the International Law Enforcement Academy in Botswana. If confirmed, I will continue these efforts as I engage the Government of Lesotho to address concerns detailed in the 2020 Human Rights Report.

Question. How will you direct your embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground?

Answer. The U.S. Embassy maintains excellent relationships with all of Lesotho's major civil society organizations, who rely on us to act as a voice of conscience both in the public sphere and in our private consultations with the Government. If confirmed, I will continue to work closely with Lesotho's community of civil society organizations. I will also encourage them to focus their attentions on the most pressing human rights concerns and will look for synergistic opportunities to cooperate with these groups to advocate for reform, accountability, and protection of human rights.

Question. In your opinion, is Lesotho a potential target for improved U.S. trade and investment? What tools should the U.S. apply in Lesotho to encourage export diversification and investment by American firms?

Answer. Yes. Several economic sectors in Lesotho have growth potential, including water (hydropower and pipeline infrastructure), diamonds, tourism, agriculture, and power generation. The Government has also noted that it seeks to improve transportation and its information technology infrastructure. In 2019, the United States exported about $1 million in goods to Lesotho, mostly machinery, medical instruments, and aircraft. In the same year, the United States imported around $325 million in goods, mostly apparel, precious stones, and some machinery.

Lesotho is a long-time beneficiary of trade benefits under the African Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA), which has helped create over 45,000 jobs in the textile industry. According to 2019 numbers, AGOA exports accounted for approximately 12% of Lesotho's GDP ($325 million out of $2.7 billion). One of the AGOA eligibility requirements is that a country must have established, or make progress towards establishing, a market-based economy. This creates a more-level playing field for U.S. companies and serves as a useful counterweight to actors seeking to influence Lesotho to adopt policies that would be counter to U.S. interests. By creating a more-level playing field for U.S. companies overseas, we contribute to economic prosperity at home, too. Several U.S. brands already manufacture products in Lesotho. If confirmed, I will utilize initiatives such as Prosper Africa to actively seek opportunities to increase reciprocal trade and investment.

Answer. America's interests at home are strengthened by improving lives globally. Investments in preventing disease and improving public health and nutrition are among our best means to articulate and embody our values, while simultaneously pursuing our national security interests. U.S. support to combat HIV/AIDS and other public health emergencies in Lesotho is important because it is both the right and the smart thing to do. In Lesotho, our PEPFAR investment has seen a remarkable return in terms of lives saved and increased social stability.

Largely because of U.S. support, Lesotho is one of the first PEPFAR countries to achieve the UNAIDS targets for epidemic control; moreover, it has cut its rate of new HIV infections in half since 2016. These historic achievements lay the groundwork for an HIV/AIDS-free generation and are landmarks in PEPFAR's 18-year history.

U.S. health and development investments in Lesotho, including but not limited to PEPFAR, are important and effective, certainly in terms of controlling the HIV/AIDS pandemic, but also in terms of combatting COVID-19, TB and other communicable diseases; confronting health-related issues such as immunizations, clean water, and sanitation; and enhancing health security by preventing, detecting, and responding to infectious disease threats.

If confirmed, I will ensure good stewardship of U.S. taxpayers' investment in health and development in Lesotho. Building on the outstanding success achieved through our previous and existing partnerships with the Government and people of Lesotho, I will also work to secure sustainability and help Lesotho move towards self-reliance in meeting the future needs of its population.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. TULINABO S. MUSHINGI BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question. What role can the United States play in efforts of the Lourenco administration to root out corruption and repatriate stolen assets?

Answer. The Government of Angola needs to continue to improve its public financial management capacity as well as to strengthen accounting, oversight, and auditing capabilities. It should also increase law enforcement and judicial capacity to investigate and prosecute corruption and financial crimes and better coordinate the efforts of public institutions working on the investigations. The Government should also ensure that private sector financial institutions are regularly reporting suspicious transactions to the appropriate authorities for action.

U.S. engagement includes technical assistance for Angola's Financial Intelligence Unit and Ministry of Finance. If confirmed, I would seek to expand cooperation on potential corruption investigations, capacity building in the justice system in constructing corruption cases, and capacity building in the Extractive Industry Transparency Initiative (EITI) reporting mechanisms.

Question. In advance of elections in 2022, what can the U.S. Embassy do to ensure free political expression and the conduct of fair elections?

Answer. The U.S. Government has encouraged the Government of Angola to follow through on its commitment to hold local government elections, which would be a positive step in the democratization process of Angola, giving people direct representation at the local level of government. If confirmed, I will continue to communicate this message.

Question. If confirmed, how will you ensure that Embassy Luanda exercises proper management and oversight of the U.S. presence in São Tome and Principe?

Answer. If confirmed, with your help, I will work to deepen the U.S. partnership with both Angola and São Tome and Principe. I have experience being accredited as ambassador to two countries concurrently, and will draw on that experience to ensure proper management and oversight of the U.S. presence in São Tome and Principe.

Question. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Promoting democracy, the rule of law, and respect for human rights has been a central theme throughout my 30-year career at the Department of State. From my early postings to the current one, I have endeavored to share with host country counterparts the U.S. position on human rights and democracy. My strategy has always been to honestly explain our position showing the benefits of respecting human rights and promoting democratic principles, a winning proposition for the host country as well.

I have supported the conduct of peaceful elections, passing laws on inclusive participation in elections, and raising disability awareness. I have advocated against restrictive LGBTQI+ laws, empowered women's participation in elections, given a voice to civil society, and emphasized the importance of a free press.

As Ambassador to Guinea-Bissau, our promotion of free and fair elections with credible and appropriately transparent processes led to the first ever peaceful transition of power between two civilian presidents in the history of the country.

During my tenure as Ambassador in Burkina Faso, I advised against a proposed constitutional amendment to presidential term limits, designed to extend the time in office of an already long-term sitting president. Additionally, I pushed the Government of Transition of Burkina Faso for timely elections during a sensitive time when some voices were considering a delay. Finally, following the free and fair presidential election, Burkina Faso and its people witnessed the first ever peaceful transition of power from one civilian government to another. Previously, in Mozambique I participated as an international observer in the country's first-ever democratic elections and worked closely with the rest of the Embassy team to empower the Mozambican people as they freely elected their leaders.

As the Deputy Chief of Mission in Ethiopia from 2009-2011, I encouraged the Ethiopian Government to allow civil society and opposition political parties to operate freely. Our Embassy efforts helped provide a path for opposition parties in Ethiopia to publicize their platforms, thus allowing a broader range of Ethiopian citizens to have a voice in their government, resulting in an increase in voter registration and participation.

Based on my dedication to promote and support respect for human rights and democracy during my career, I am honored to have been selected for the AFSA's Mark Palmer Award for the Advancement of Democracy in 2017. This award is given to members of the Foreign Service, by their peers, for the promotion of U.S. policies focused on advancing democracy, freedom and governance through bold, exemplary, imaginative and effective efforts during one or more assignments.

Question. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Angola and São Tome and Principe? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. Angola has made tangible progress towards transparency and good governance, while initiating the fight against corruption and promoting accountability for human rights violations and abuses. However, the legacy of corruption, lack of capacity and weak institutions are the biggest challenges, along with the need for increased professionalism in law enforcement. Civil society, press freedoms and political competition exist in Angola, but would benefit from further strengthening.

São Tome and Principe (STP) has a small land footprint but a large and strategically important maritime domain in the Gulf of Guinea shipping lanes. Enhancing the country's ability to monitor its waters and share information on maritime activity and piracy is a key component to improve regional security. If confirmed, I will continue to encourage São Tome's support for democracy, human rights, and rule of law and to support its development efforts.

Question. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Angola and in São Tome and Principe? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. The Government of Angola has made significant improvements on human rights-related issues over the last few years, and if confirmed, I will continue to engage with Angolan Government officials to support progress in this area. I will work to ensure the United States and Angola hold a human rights dialogue in 2021, which will give the United States an opportunity to assess progress and press on remaining human rights and democracy issues. Finally, the United States has encouraged the Government of Angola to follow through on its commitment to hold local government elections in 2022, which would be a positive step in the democratization process of Angola, giving people direct representation at the local level of government and if confirmed, I will continue to encourage the Government to prioritize forward progress in this area.

São Tome and Principe has a long record of good governance and support for democracy and human rights, and if confirmed, I will work with its government to encourage and support these priorities.

Question. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. U.S. Government assistance to Angola currently advances democracy and governance through several avenues, including by providing assistance to advance electoral reforms, enhance fiscal transparency and accountability, and promote increased participation by women in the political process. Additionally, the United States supports the introduction and expansion of good governance within financial administration and service delivery systems, which bolsters transparency, citizen participation, and accountability within planning and financial management processes. If confirmed, I will continue to engage within the Department and with inter-agency partners to support the establishment and continuation of complementary and expanded programs that advance U.S. interests in Angola and São Tome and Principe. I also will emphasize the importance of making continual progress on democracy and governance as an element of both countries' AGOA eligibility.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Angola and in São Tome and Principe? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Human rights NGOs—local, regional, and international—are active in both Angola and São Tome and Principe. Civil society organizations, regardless of where they are registered or where they operate, can be critical allies in advancing democratic governance, expanding respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and assisting the United States to strengthen its bilateral and multilateral relationships. If confirmed, I am committed to engaging broadly to help advance these objectives. I will leverage our strong relationships in Angola and in São Tome and Principe to communicate privately or publicly (as the situation dictates) to proactively address efforts to restrict or penalize civil society through legal or regulatory measures.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties, and I will advocate openly in support of access and inclusivity for all individuals in Angola and in São Tome and Principe, including women, minorities, and youth. If confirmed, I will work with the host governments, civil society, and like-minded missions to encourage genuine political competition. I will emphasize the importance of promoting diverse viewpoints and supporting an open arena for peaceful, good faith discussions of political differences.

Question. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Angola and São Tome and Principe on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in both Angola and São Tome and Principe?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage with media practitioners, like-minded missions, civil society, government, and international partners to underscore the importance of an independent, professional, and open media to a free and democratic society. I will seek resources to continue support to Angola and São Tome and Principe's media, including professional exchanges, targeted training programs, and seminars to educate journalists and media stakeholders about their rights. Angolan and São Tomean journalists have participated in U.S. Government-sponsored professional exchange programs on investigative reporting, safeguarding freedom of expression, and the media's role in strengthening democratic institutions.

Question. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage with civil society and government actors on countering disinformation and malign propaganda by foreign state and non-state actors. I also will commit to working with like-minded partners in Angola and in São Tome and Principe to counter disinformation and malign propaganda campaigns.

Question. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Angola and São Tome and Principe on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. The United States has a long and proud tradition of supporting the rights of workers, including to form labor organizations, internationally. If confirmed, I will commit to engage with unions, relevant government offices, and the private sector to support labor rights.

Question. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Angola and São Tome and Principe, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will strive to defend the human rights and dignity of all individuals in Angola and São Tome and Principe, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity.

Question. What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer (LGBTQ) people face in Angola and in São Tome and Principe?

Answer. President Lourenço has expanded legal protections for LGTBQI+ persons since he was elected, including decriminalization of homosexuality. However, LGTBQI+ persons in Angola tell us culturally they face resistance in being accepted, even at the family level. While not criminalized, homosexuality is stigmatized in São Tome and Principe. Members of the LGTBQI+ community can face ostracism and violence.

Question. What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTQ people in Angola and São Tome and Principe?

Answer. If confirmed, I will commit to defend the human rights and dignity of all individuals in Angola, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity. I will seek ways to expand Embassy support for the efforts of LGTBQI+ NGOs in Angola, including through advocacy, leadership development opportunities, and programmatic support. Similarly, I will reach out to the LGTBQI+ community in São Tome and Principe to respond to its concerns.

Question. Will you commit, if confirmed, to ensuring that you fully brief Members of Congress and/or their staff each time you are in Washington for visits or consultations during your tenure as Ambassador to Angola and São Tome and Principe?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit, in coordination with the State Department's Bureau of Legislative Affairs, to appropriately respond to requests for briefings and information by this committee.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. TULINABO S. MUSHINGI BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Strengthening Angola and the Region

Question. After decades of corrupt and authoritarian rule under former President dos Santos, Angola has undergone a remarkable transition since President Lourenço came to power in 2017. Under Lourenço, Angola has undertaken an economic and political reform agenda that aligns with U.S. interests and presents a unique opportunity to develop a mutually beneficial partnership.

- Four years into President Lourenço's term, Angola appears headed in the right direction with a growing economy, tangible efforts at political reform, and a focus on combatting corruption. What can the United States do to help Angola as it seeks to diversify its economy, improve governance, and continue combatting corruption?

Answer. Angola still faces many challenges in the form of high debt, a legacy of corruption, lack of capacity, and weak institutions, along with the need for increased professionalism in law enforcement. Civil society, press freedoms and political competition exist in Angola, but would benefit from further strengthening. If confirmed, I will continue to press for political and economic reforms, support the fight against corruption, and buttress Angola's development efforts. Opportunities exist for the U.S. Government to continue providing technical assistance and to cooperate further on potential corruption investigations, and on capacity building in the justice system in constructing corruption cases. As Angola explores options to diversify its economy and to create an environment more welcoming to investors, I will seek to foster continued U.S. investment if confirmed.

Question. Angola has a reasonably strong military, and recently played a helpful role in mediating conflict between Uganda and Rwanda. Is Angola prepared to take more of a leadership role in the region? Do you see potential for Angola increasing its participation in peacekeeping or other stability operations on the continent?

Answer. I understand that under President Lourenço, Angola has systematically raised its level of active participation in international organizations such as the African Union (AU), the International Conference of the Great Lakes Region (ICGLR), the Economic Community of Central African States (ECCAS), and the Southern Africa Development Community (SADC), successfully proposing candidates for leadership roles. Using these leadership roles, Angola has shown a willingness to be at the forefront of resolving some of the continent's most difficult crises, including its current role in encouraging stability in the Central African Republic and Chad.

Angola also recently enacted legislation which provides the structure for its military to be deployed in peacekeeping operations. The United States can better engage Angola to serve as a constructive voice in Southern and Central Africa by consulting with the Angolan Government in Luanda and in Washington, exchanging views and encouraging mutually beneficial courses of action.

Question. Despite Angola's vast natural resource reserves and economic reforms that have pleased international financial institutions, much of the country still lives in poverty and remains in need of assistance? How can the United States help ensure that Angola's wealth and opportunity reach all corners of the country?

Answer. U.S. Government assistance programs in health and landmine clearance improve the health and living conditions for Angolans throughout the country. Our programs stress capacity building within the Angolan Government and reinforce the need to address the issues of all Angolans. In addition, multiple small grant programs target economic development throughout the country. If confirmed, I will continue to engage within the U.S. Government to support the establishment and continuation of complementary and expanded programs that advance U.S. interests in Angola.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. TULINABO S. MUSHINGI BY SENATOR MIKE ROUNDS

Question. Ambassador Mushingi, the election of a new president in Angola in 2017 provided a clear opportunity for the U.S. to support political and economic reforms, including in the areas of anti-corruption and human rights. While the Angolan administration continues to make progress, there continues to be limited U.S.-support for Angola in the democracy and governance space.

- What opportunities do you see for U.S. engagement and assistance in this space?

Answer. The Government of Angola needs to continue to improve its public financial management capacity as well as to strengthen accounting, oversight, and auditing capabilities. It should also increase law enforcement and judicial capacity to investigate and prosecute corruption and financial crimes and better coordinate the efforts of public institutions working on the investigations. The Government should also ensure that private sector financial institutions are regularly reporting suspicious transactions to the appropriate authorities for action.

U.S. engagement in this space will include technical assistance for Angola's Financial Intelligence Unit and Ministry of Finance. Additional opportunities exist for the USG to cooperate further on potential corruption investigations and possible sanctions, capacity building in the justice system in constructing corruption cases/prosecutions in international courts, and capacity building in the Extractive Industry Transparency Initiative (EITI) reporting mechanisms.

The Government of Angola has made significant improvements on human rights-related issues over the last few years, and if confirmed, I and the Embassy will continue to engage with Angolan Government officials to support progress in this area. In 2020, the United States and Angola held their third ministerial level dialogue on human rights, discussing the need for respect for freedom of peaceful assembly and freedom of expression as well as the continued need for training of law enforcement, which the U.S. will continue to support, consistent with Leahy law and Department policy. I understand the United States and Angola are planning the 2021 human rights dialogue, which will give the U.S. an opportunity to assess progress and press on any remaining issues. Finally, Post has encouraged the Government of Angola to follow through on its commitment to hold local government elections, which would be a positive step in the democratization process of Angola, giving people direct representation at the local level of government.

Question. Ambassador Mushingi, China's presence looms large in Angola. Angola is one of China's largest borrowers in Africa, with more than $20 billion in outstanding debt to some Chinese entities.

- How can the United States help Angola to begin chipping away at that debt and the restraint put on Angola's economy and political system by China?

Answer. As a key condition of its IMF program, Angola cannot hold new oil collateralized debt. The United States supports the Debt Service Suspension Initiative (DSSI) agreed to by the G-20 which has suspended official bilateral debt payments for 40 countries including Angola since May 2020. Rolling back dependency on oil will require significant investment in other economic sectors to stimulate growth. The Embassy has leveraged U.S. interagency technical assistance and high-level messaging to support Angola's anti-corruption campaign and economic reforms, especially ongoing efforts to improve transparency and compliance in the financial sector. An improved environment will make U.S. firms more competitive in Angola. I understand that the Embassy has successfully advocated for U.S. investors to break into sectors long dominated by Chinese companies, such as telecommunications. President Lourenço lobbied U.S. private sector representatives in a December 2020 virtual roundtable to invest in Angola, demonstrating the high-level desire to attract U.S. investment in various sectors. If confirmed, I will lead the Embassy to continue reporting on opportunities for American companies and advocate for them to compete for tenders and other investment opportunities as the Angolan economy diversifies. Programs such as the DFC and Prosper Africa will also help target alternatives to Chinese investment and commercial interests.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. ELIZABETH MOORE AUBIN BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. In the State Department's 2020 Trafficking in Persons Report, Algeria was identified as Tier 3 due to lack of significant efforts to combat human trafficking in the reporting period. The Government made little to no attempts to improve resources for victims, including punishing victims for crimes their traffickers forced them to commit. What steps would you take as Ambassador, if confirmed, to engage with the host government and civil society organizations on bolstering efforts to improve prosecution and protection efforts?

Answer. If confirmed, improving Algeria's efforts to combat human trafficking will be one of my highest priorities. The Embassy is already working with the Algerian Government to improve its efforts to investigate, prosecute, and convict traffickers and proactively identify and assist trafficking victims, including by offering technical support. If confirmed, I will urge Algerian officials to pass a standalone Trafficking in Persons (TIP) law this year to bring their legal framework in line with international commitments and to formalize their victim referral mechanism. We will continue to support Algerian efforts to raise awareness of TIP in the law enforcement community, including through trainings for prosecutors and judges.

Question. In the State Department's 2020 International Religious Freedom Report and the 2021 U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom Annual Report, the U.S. identified Algeria as having poor religious freedom conditions, with the Government continuing its repression of Christian and minority Muslim communities. What is your assessment of this particular issue and if confirmed, how will you work with the Office of International Religious Freedom to bolster religious freedom in-country?

Answer. Government-led persecution of marginalized minorities, including Christian and minority Muslim and non-Muslim religious groups, continues to be a significant issue in Algeria. Our Embassy is in regular contact with a wide variety of religious leaders in Algeria and maintains an active dialogue with the Algerian Government on religious freedom issues. The United States Government has publicly and privately stressed the importance of religious tolerance and the equal and transparent application of the laws governing religious organizations. If confirmed, I will raise issues of religious persecution identified by the Office of International Religious Freedom with the Algerian Government and encourage embassy reporting on specific cases.

Question. Algeria was subsequently designated as a Special Watch List country by USCIRF for its actions to systematically repress religious minorities. If confirmed, will you suggest Algeria for the State Department's Special Watch List for engaging and tolerating severe violations of religious freedom?

Answer. USCIRF's Special Watch List (SWL) functions as a warning to avoid possible Country of Particular Concern (CPC) designation by the Department of State. For countries designated as CPCs, the International Religious Freedom Act provides the Secretary of State with a range of policy options to address serious violations of religious freedom. The SWL applies to countries that we deem to have engaged in or tolerated severe violations of religious freedom, but that do not meet all of the CPC criteria. If confirmed, I will prioritize the promotion of religious tolerance and impress upon the Algerian Government the seriousness of the potentiality of a SWL or CPC designation, and actions that could be taken now to preclude these designations.

Question. If confirmed, will you encourage embassy officials to attend public country proceedings on church closures to emphasize USG concern regarding this issue?

Answer. The Algerian Government continues to use COVID-19 restrictions and the status of churches as un-registered associations to justify closures. If confirmed, I will encourage embassy officials to attend public proceedings on church closures, as appropriate, to emphasize U.S. Government concern regarding this issue and to urge the Algerian Government to allow the legalization of religious minority groups by approving their requests to be registered associations.

Question. The constitutional referendum passed in November indicates a further erosion of religious freedom conditions in country. Please describe your potential engagement with the Algerian Government regarding this referendum.

Answer. The Algerian constitution provides for freedom of worship, but religious minorities continue to face difficulty registering as legally recognized organizations. Though the new constitution allows for the creation of a religious organization by declaration, the Government needs to amend the 2012 Law of Associations to implement this change. The State Department's Annual Human Rights and Religious Freedom Reports for Algeria cite this need and, if confirmed, I will continue to advocate for religious freedom.

Question. In the State Department's 2020 Human Rights Report, Algeria was identified as having committed severe human rights abuses, including government sanctioned attacks on freedom of assembly for protestors in early 2020. If confirmed, what steps will you take to address these instances with the host government?

Answer. If confirmed, I will prioritize the promotion of human rights and impress upon Algerian leaders the importance of these issues. The annual Human Rights Report regularly garners press attention and is studied carefully in Algeria. If confirmed, I commit to continuing my predecessors' tradition of meeting with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and in Algeria to support their efforts on advancing human rights. Our embassy is in regular contact with human rights activists and journalists in Algeria and maintains an active dialogue with the Algerian Government on human rights issues.

Question. How will you direct your embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground?

Answer. If confirmed, I will direct my embassy to maintain contact with civil society organizations in Algeria to support civil society development. Funding for the Middle East Partnership Initiative (MEPI) and other civil society assistance programs will empower nascent civil society in Algeria, building capacity to better represent citizens' interests and hold the Government accountable. If confirmed, I will also urge the Algerian Government to issue an updated NGO law to ease restrictions on registering and operating civil society organizations.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. ELIZABETH MOORE AUBIN BY SENATOR MIKE ROUNDS

Question. During the last two years we have seen significant political events in Algeria. These include a mass leaderless protest movement, a contentious election resulting in a successor to the long serving former president and a new constitution. What are your thoughts about how the events of the past two years have affected the U.S.-Algeria partnership and what opportunities do you think it creates for the U.S.?

Answer. The U.S.-Algeria bilateral relationship has remained strong through the momentous events of the last two years. Algeria has taken steps towards political and economic reform and the United States will continue to support efforts that expand observance of human rights, including freedoms of expression and association. We will also work to facilitate U.S. investment opportunities to deliver economic benefits to the American and the Algerian people. If confirmed, I will also promote the embassy's entrepreneurship programs for youth and women as well as pursue a grant-funded project to expand English language instruction in Algeria to better prepare Algerians for professional and commercial opportunities at home and abroad.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO EUGENE S. YOUNG BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. In the State Department's 2020 Trafficking in Persons Report, Republic of the Congo was upgraded to Tier 2 due to increased efforts to eliminate trafficking, but the Government still lacks adequate resources to screen vulnerable populations and lacks a national action plan and clear understanding of anti-tracking laws. How will you work with the host government and local civil society organizations to address these issues if you are confirmed as Ambassador?

Answer. As you note, the Congolese Government has shown the political will to address trafficking issues. The Government has drafted a national action plan against Trafficking in Persons but has yet to ratify it. The Congolese successfully prosecuted seven human traffickers and successfully repatriated eight victims in the past year. If confirmed, I will continue the positive work begun under my predecessor. My team and I will use the resources available from the State Department's Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons to help train and equip the Congolese police, judiciary, and legislators, as well as support the NGOs on the ground doing the heroic day-to-day work of identifying trafficking victims and their traffickers.

Question. The U.S. Embassy is actively engaging with government officials and organizations on religious freedom issues, including supporting virtual events with religious leaders and youths. How will you, if confirmed, continue this work and bolster efforts already underway?

Answer. One of the major components of Congo's stability is the ability of different religious groups to coordinate and work together to promote civil society and meet the needs of the Congolese people. This collaboration dates all the way back to the 1960s at the formation of Congo as an independent country. If confirmed, I will continue our Embassy team's efforts to bring together religious organizations, international partners, private businesses, and members of the Government to ensure international religious freedom continues to be a priority of our bilateral relationship.

Question. In the State Department's 2020 Human Rights Report, the Republic of the Congo was identified as having committed human rights abuses, notably that political activists and civil society members, including human rights defenders, continued to face intimidation, harassment and arbitrary detention by the Government or other state actors.

- If confirmed, what steps will you take to address these instances with the host government?
- How will you direct your embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground?

Answer. I share your concern about these developments and the treatment of journalists and human rights activists in the Republic of the Congo. This concern is something repeatedly conveyed by our staff at Embassy Brazzaville to the highest levels of the Government. This focus on human rights is a practice that I will continue if confirmed.

While Congo's human rights record is far from clean, we have seen some progress. Congolese peacekeeping troops who were accused of human rights violations while in CAR in 2016 did face consequences, and our ongoing training with the Congo military educates troops about human rights protections. If confirmed I would work alongside civil society organizations to bring increased attention to human rights violations and abuses and to offer what we can in terms of training programs and other resources to promote respect for human rights.

Question. As U.S. Ambassador, how will you engage with the international financial institutions, including the IMF, in the Republic of Congo over their engagement with the Sassou Nguesso administration despite significant corruption and lack of transparency in finances and debts?

Answer. Across Africa our goal is to increase debt transparency. Debt transparency is vital for maintaining debt sustainability, facilitating resolutions when necessary, and minimizing corruption. The Republic of Congo is in debt distress in part due to non-transparent Chinese lending. We can't always stop governments from excessive and corrupt borrowing, but setting the standard of transparency makes it harder to borrow corruptly and unsustainably. In fora such as the IMF where we can better control the terms of loan and financial programs, if confirmed, I will seek to engage in the process to insist on the inclusion of transparency measures.

Question. The Congo River Basin is one of the major focuses of U.S. supported conservation and environment programming, including through the Central Africa Regional Program for the Environment (CARPE). How can the U.S. better engage with the Republic of Congo these efforts?

Answer. Our embassy in Brazzaville has been hard at work ramping up our environmental cooperation with the Congolese. Thanks to the team's efforts, Congo's Minister of Tourism and Environment was the first African to speak at the international round table discussion before the recent Leaders' Summit on Climate. Our embassy is also working with the Congolese to develop side events focusing on the Congo rainforest for the upcoming COP 26 conference. Finally, a new USAID position in Brazzaville is set to come online later this summer. If confirmed, I will continue these efforts to engage Congo on this important area of bilateral cooperation.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO EUGENE S. YOUNG BY SENATOR MIKE ROUNDS

Question. As you know, Congo's president is one of Africa's longest serving leaders with power vested in him and a network of family and associates. One result has been prolific corruption in the oil sector. I'm curious about your thoughts on what tools you think you would employ as U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Congo to encourage anti-corruption and democratic development in one of the most kleptocratic and closed political and civic environments in Africa?

Answer. Corruption inhibits economic and democratic development and runs counter to American values. It damages trade, guts institutions, and destroys citizens' confidence in their government. Recent calls for more American investment in Congo to counter malign influence show me the Congolese people want to address this problem as well. If confirmed, I will push hard for that investment, and the transparency and fair dealing it brings. In addition, I will work with international partners such as the World Bank and IMF to increase transparency in Congo's borrowing, procurement, and financial systems.

Question. Congo has seen a rapid accumulation of debt over the past decade—much of it owed to China. Given this increase in China's influence, what opportunities do you think there are for us to increase our engagement with the Republic of Congo, both to support development in line with American values and to counter China's role in the country?

Answer. China's investment in the Republic of Congo is considerable. Chinese debt of over $4 billion risks permanent damage to Congo's future growth. However, there are important strengths in the U.S.-Congolese relationship that we can focus and build on to help counter Chinese influence. America's continued appeal as a country of ideas, future trends, and freedom resonates with the Congolese, especially the youth. Drawing a distinction with China by highlighting and demonstrating America's strengths is our best way of countering China's influence over the long term. Our areas of collaboration with the Government of Congo include environmental protection, human rights, and health development, among many others. These are areas where we believe the United States can do the most good for the American and Congolese people.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO CHRISTOPHER JOHN LAMORA BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Politics and Economy

Question. How do you intend to capitalize on the heightened attention Secretary Blinken and recent sanctions have brought to the Anglophone crisis, and how will you advance engagement with the French to work toward a peaceful resolution?

Answer. The Secretary's decision to impose visa restrictions on those involved in undermining peace in Cameroon reflects the U.S. commitment to advance dialogue to peacefully resolve the Anglophone crisis and support respect for human rights. This decision followed cuts in security assistance in recent years and the determination that Cameroon was ineligible for AGOA starting on January 1, 2020. These actions demonstrate the U.S. Government's resolve to back up words with actions. The United States will continue to consider all potential diplomatic tools to advance dialogue and end violence in the Anglophone Northwest and Southwest Regions.

We continue to engage other UN member states, particularly the French, in bilateral and multilateral fora and at all levels on the importance of rule of law and ending impunity in Cameroon and to explore ways we can work together to move towards a resolution of the violence in the Northwest and Southwest Regions. If confirmed, I will make resolving the Anglophone crisis my top policy priority and will engage in discussions with France and other partners on the ground and look for tangible ways to advance peace in Cameroon.

Question. What have been the impacts on Cameroon's economy and U.S.-Cameroon commercial ties of the termination of Cameroon's AGOA eligibility, and how would you seek to expand and protect U.S. commercial interests there?

Answer. Cameroon was found ineligible for AGOA in 2019 and lost AGOA benefits starting on January 1, 2020 under the criterion that excludes countries that engage in gross violations of internationally recognized human rights. Cameroon can regain AGOA eligibility by preventing such violations, by strengthening human rights protections in the law, and by impartially and transparently investigating reports of such violations and holding accountable those responsible.

In 2018, Cameroon exported roughly $220 million in goods and services to the United States; of that figure, $63 million was exported under AGOA, over 90 percent of which was crude petroleum. The United States will continue to pursue robust and diverse commercial ties, deploying other tools at our disposal toward realizing the enormous potential of this relationship for our mutual prosperity and economic growth. More than any government program, however, the entrepreneurial initiative of Cameroonian and American businesses and a business climate that helps them flourish will be the key to stronger commercial ties between the United States and Cameroon. If confirmed, I will urge the Government to take tangible steps to improve the business climate, advocate on behalf of U.S. companies, and direct our embassy to continue to look for opportunities to expand commercial ties, using all the tools and resources that we have at our disposal.

Question. It was recently reported that most of a $335 million loan to fight COVID-19 from the IMF could not be accounted for. How will you address endemic corruption and work to increase transparency and accountability of the Government of Cameroon?

Answer. The COVID-19 pandemic has highlighted the challenges in the fight against corruption in Cameroon. The United States is concerned about allegations about misuse of funding aimed at helping Cameroon respond to the pandemic. The Embassy provides financial and technical support to the fight against corruption. The Department of Treasury's Office of Technical Assistance assists the Ministry of Finance, specifically the Taxation Directorate, to identify and manage compliance and institutional risks and facilitate the efficacy of internal audit and employee anti-corruption investigations. Another transparency and good governance activity is the Fiscal Transparency Innovation Fund (FTIF). In 2018, the Department of State, through the FTIF, granted $276,500 to a financial auditing firm to train financial practitioners in the public and public sector on modern financial reporting norms and develop a plan for the adoption of International Financial Reporting Standards.

If confirmed, I would continue to explore opportunities like these to address endemic corruption in Cameroon and engage other diplomatic and international missions with a view to leveraging our resources and voices to advocate for change. I would also urge the Government to take meaningful steps to hold those complicit in corrupt practices accountable, change institutional practices that facilitate corruption, and do so transparently to help restore public faith in governance practices.

COVID-19

Question. How has COVID-19 impacted our health programs, and how do you intend to leverage U.S. Government bilateral global health program platforms to help the people of Cameroon respond to and address the impacts?

Answer. Cameroon has made significant efforts in managing the COVID-19 outbreak, despite challenges around national coordination, resurgence of cases fueled by limited adherence by the general population to mitigation measures, and concerns about mismanagement of COVID-19 funds. The COVID-19 pandemic has interrupted routine immunizations and service delivery across Cameroon's health sector, but we continue to support recovery of health systems and sustain gains made through the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief, the Global Health Security Agenda, the President's Malaria Initiative, and other global health programs.

Across U.S. agencies present in the health sector, including the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), the United States Agency for International Development (USAID), the Department of Defense (DOD), and Peace Corps, we have invested over $600 million since 2010 to strengthen the health system and fight HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, malaria, and other diseases, including COVID-19. U.S. public health experts have worked hand-in-hand with Cameroonian officials on COVID-19 preparedness and response efforts, helping to build capacity for emergency management, surveillance, laboratory testing, case management, and infection prevention and control. If confirmed, I will ensure that health diplomacy remains a priority. I will encourage the Government of Cameroon to increase spending on health, support efforts to improve accountability in the provision of health care nationwide and continue to work towards reaching epidemic control of HIV/AIDS within the next two years.

Democracy & Human Rights

Question. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have spent most of my career as a consular officer, focused on the protection of U.S. citizens and the application and enforcement of U.S. immigration law. I also served as an election observer in both Cameroon (1992) and the Central African Republic (1993), and I worked to improve prison conditions in the Dominican Republic (2002-05). In Ghana, where I was Deputy Chief of Mission (2018-21), we dedicated significant effort to combatting child labor in the fishing and cocoa sectors, addressing trafficking in persons, and promoting respect for the human rights of all individuals in Ghana. Through our DOJ Resident Legal Adviser, we also worked with the Ghanaian Ministry of Justice and court system to implement reforms on pre-trial detention, alternative dispute resolution mechanisms, and strengthening the public defender corps, all of which gave Ghanaians greater and more equitable access to justice.

Question. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Cameroon? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. Many Cameroonians and outsiders perceive poor governance to be the root of most problems in the country. They view the bureaucracy as slow-moving and suffering from internal competition, cite corruption as an endemic problem, and point to the ongoing investigation into the alleged misused of funds aimed at helping Cameroon to combat the COVID-19 pandemic as a tangible example of the issue. There are also concerns about the lack of space for political opposition leaders, human rights defenders, journalists, and others to operate in if they espouse views that run counter to the Cameroonian Government's views and policies. Cameroonians are also frustrated with lapses or failure of delivery of public services, deteriorating infrastructure, poverty, and lack of progress on decentralization. They hope that the Government will address the root causes of extremism in the Far North and those that led to the crisis in the Northwest and Southwest Regions, and address allegations of human rights violations and abuses by security forces.

Question. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Cameroon? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. Building the capacity of civil society to promote respect for human rights and democracy is a top priority for our mission in Cameroon. The United States provides funding to local organizations focused on supporting dialogue and peace initiatives related to the crisis in Anglophone regions, strengthening the rule of law, improving the legislative process, promoting access to justice, enhancing anti-trafficking efforts, monitoring elections, and promoting civil engagement and human rights.

Civil society actors focused on the protection of human rights and the promotion of democracy and good governance operate in a difficult political environment. They often face consistent harassment and arrests for exercising their oversight role and exposing human rights violations and abuses committed by the Government.

If confirmed, I will continue to advance opportunities to strengthen the capacity of civil society organizations and amplify their voices, encourage the Government to collaborate with these organizations for the betterment of Cameroon, and ensure that we coordinate our efforts with diplomatic and international missions. Strengthening civil society will allow them to better advocate for change to improve the lives of ordinary Cameroonians.

Question. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. Supporting democracy and governance is a priority for our mission in Cameroon. Through a $550,000 grant from the Bureau of Conflict and Stabilization Operations, we conducted programming from August 2019 through December 2020 that sought to strengthen civil society's capacity to support dialogue and peace initiatives related to the crisis in Anglophone regions. Each year, we support organizations with an estimated $400,000 through Africa Regional Democracy funding, with projects focused on strengthening the rule of law, improving the legislative process, promoting access to justice, enhancing anti-trafficking efforts, monitoring elections, and promoting civil engagement. We use Ambassador's Special Self-Help Funds, approximately $75,000 each year, to support grassroots community organizations to find local solutions to basic problems.

In 2019, USAID launched for the first time the Civil Society Sustainability Index (CSO SI) in Cameroon. The CSO SI assesses the capacity of civil society to serve as both a short-term partner in implementing development solutions and a long-term actor in ensuring that development outcomes are sustained. To further bolster the capacity of the civil society sector, USAID designed a new Civil Society Strengthening and Community Resilience program. The anticipated program will primarily focus on strengthening civil society capacity to deliver services and promote citizen engagement.

If confirmed, I will continue these efforts to bolster Cameroon's civil society capacity, exploring all potential funding options that could help us achieve this objective. I will also assess what additional resources we can tap and programs we can undertake to advance democracy.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Cameroon? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. The promotion of respect for human rights is a central pillar in our relations with Cameroon. If confirmed, I will continue and strengthen the relationships built by the mission and the Department of State more broadly with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Cameroon. I will continue to advance opportunities to strengthen the capacity of civil society organizations and amplify their voices, encourage the Government to collaborate with these organizations for the betterment of Cameroon, and ensure that we coordinate our efforts with diplomatic and international missions.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to continue and strengthen the relationships our mission has built with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties. I will strive to support the efforts of these figures and parties to develop a more inclusive political environment in Cameroon, including their efforts to advance electoral reform. I will urge the Government to ensure the freedoms of association and peaceful assembly for all political actors, even those who do not agree with the Government. Through public statements, small grants and other programming, and direct engagements, I will advocate for a political environment that is inclusive of women, youth, minorities, and Cameroonians who might otherwise be marginalized.

Question. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Cameroon on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Cameroon?

Answer. If confirmed, I will actively engage with Cameroon on press freedom issues. I will call on the Government to prevent and stop the harassment and arrests of journalists whose reporting is critical of the Cameroonian Government's policies, which has a negative impact on press freedom. I will also underscore the need for the Government to be transparent as doing so would make independent media outlets better positioned to share accurate information with ordinary Cameroonians. We will also continue to prioritize providing training and other capacity building opportunities for journalists. If confirmed, I will commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Cameroon.

Question. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue and, as appropriate, expand upon the Embassy's ongoing engagements with civil society and government counterparts to promote the importance of countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country.

Question. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Cameroon on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will commit to actively engage with Cameroon on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions, and call out incidents when this right is restricted.

Question. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Cameroon, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity?

Answer. Promoting human rights and democracy is a priority for our mission in Cameroon. If confirmed, I will use all diplomatic tools at my disposal to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Cameroon, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity.

Question. What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer (LGBTQ) people face in Cameroon?

Answer. Cameroonian society is conservative, with many Cameroonians vehemently opposed to the idea that basic civil, legal, and human rights extend to Cameroon's LGBTQI+ citizens. The constitution provides for equal rights for all citizens, but Cameroonian laws do not explicitly prohibit discrimination against LGBTQI+ persons in housing, employment, and access to government services such as health care. Since 2020, there has been an uptick in arrests of LGBTQI+ individuals. The overwhelming majority of these cases do not meet basic due process standards. Defendants have been accused and convicted based on their manner of walking or appearance, as well as unsubstantiated rumors. The recent sentencing of two transgender women to five years in prison for "attempted homosexuality" highlights the threats and stigma LGBTQI+ Cameroonians face.

Question. What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTQ people in Cameroon?

Answer. Promoting the basic human rights of LGBTQI+ people is a challenging endeavor in a society as conservative as Cameroon. It is, however, a priority of the Biden-Harris administration, and, if confirmed, I commit to carrying out the President's mandate. It is critically important that we remain aware and take account of the local context in carrying out this mandate. As I saw most recently in Ghana, the embassy's overriding principle must always be "First, Do No Harm." Even as we have the best intentions, we must not inadvertently make the situation worse. For instance, it may not always be appropriate to issue public statements in response to a given arrest, but to engage in quiet, closed-door diplomacy that minimizes additional risks to LGBTQI+ people. In gauging how, when, and whether to engage on this topic, it is invaluable to understand the local LGBTQI+ community, and I commit that, if confirmed, the Embassy team and I will engage with the LGBTQI+ Cameroonians and their allies.

Congressional Consultations

Question. Will you commit, if confirmed, to ensuring that you fully brief Members of Congress and/or their staff each time you are in Washington for visits or consultations during your tenure as Ambassador to Cameroon?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit, in coordination with the State Department's Bureau of Legislative Affairs, to appropriately respond to requests for briefings and information by this committee. As a former Pearson Congressional Fellow, I firmly believe that Congress has an important role to play not only in foreign policy legislation but also during the implementation process. It cannot be a one-way street in which the State Department merely advises Congress after the fact of the actions we have undertaken. Our foreign policy is stronger when the two branches of government coordinate.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO CHRISTOPHER JOHN LAMORA BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Anglophone Crisis Negotiations

Question. In January, the Senate passed a bipartisan resolution (S.Res.684), which calls on the State Department to engage other partners in helping end the Anglophone conflict, and specifically calls out the French, whom the Senate believes could get all the parties to the table. Secretary Blinken reportedly raised Cameroon with his French counterpart at a recent G7 meeting.

- How is the Department mobilizing other partners to assist Cameroon to find peace and justice, and how do you plan to lead such an effort once in-country?

Answer. The Secretary's decision to impose visa restrictions on those involved in undermining peace in Cameroon reflects the U.S. commitment to advance dialogue to peacefully resolve the Anglophone crisis and support respect for human rights. This decision followed cuts in security assistance in recent years and the removal of Cameroon's AGOA eligibility on January 1, 2020. These actions demonstrate the U.S. Government's resolve to back up words with actions. The United States will continue to consider all potential diplomatic tools to advance dialogue and end violence in the Anglophone Northwest and Southwest Regions.

We continue to engage other U.N. member states, particularly the French, in bilateral and multilateral fora and at all levels on the importance of rule of law and ending impunity in Cameroon and to explore ways we can work together to move towards a resolution of the violence in the Northwest and Southwest Regions. If confirmed, I will make resolving the Anglophone crisis my top policy priority and will engage in discussions with France and other partners on the ground and look for tangible ways to advance peace in Cameroon.

Question. What is your stance regarding U.S. leadership in mediating an end to the conflict in the Anglophone regions of Cameroon and do you classify it as an armed conflict at this stage of the crisis?

Answer. The United States has an important role to play in pushing for a resolution to the crisis in the Anglophone regions. If confirmed, I will continue to support the Swiss Government's efforts to advance dialogue with all sides and explore ways with the international community to move this effort forward. I will also support other meaningful initiatives that could advance peace on the ground, including local initiatives, and to amplify the voices of Anglophones who support peace. The United States stands ready to provide additional support if asked to do so and if appropriate.

Per the Geneva Conventions, which the United States has ratified, the International Committee of the Red Cross has the purview to designate a conflict as a non-international armed conflict. To date, they have not done so.

Question. Why do you think the Government of Cameroon has not heeded the U.S. calls for cessation of hostilities and a negotiated resolution of the conflict in the North West and South West regions?

Answer. The Cameroonian Government continues to focus on neutralizing the armed separatists through combat in the field and to advance disarmament, demobilization, and reintegration efforts in both regions to put an end to the violence and insecurity. The Government also believes that implementation of the recommendations offered during the Grand National Dialogue held in 2019 will address the grievances held by many Anglophone Cameroonians. This includes advancing decentralization, such as by holding regional elections in December 2020. If confirmed, I will continue to call for an inclusive dialogue without preconditions and for all parties to end violence.

Question. Would you support mediation or accountability efforts by international organizations such as the U.N. Security Council or the African Union?

Answer. The United States regularly engages U.N. Security Council member states and other countries regarding the need to resolve the Anglophone crisis. We also regularly raise the Anglophone crisis with the Secretary General's Special Representative and Head of the U.N. Office for Central Africa (UNOCA) Francois Fall. The United States supports UNOCA's role in promoting inclusive political dialogue in Cameroon and the resolution of the Anglophone crisis. We will continue to encourage UNOCA to engage the Government of Cameroon and encourage other U.N. member states, specifically including our P3 partners France and the UK, to play a constructive role to resolve the crisis. The United States has engaged and will look to increase our engagement with the African Union on Cameroon. If confirmed, I will highlight the need for efforts by international actors to be complementary and not compete with one another.

Sanctions

Question. On June 7, 2021, Secretary Blinken announced that the United States would impose visa restrictions on individuals who are believed to be responsible for, or complicit in, undermining the peaceful resolution of the crisis in the Anglophone regions of Cameroon. While I did applaud this important first step, I believe additional accountability measures are needed.

- What is your view regarding the use of sanctions to bring those responsible to account for their abuses and undermining of peace in Cameroon?

Answer. The decision to impose visa restrictions on those involved in undermining peace in Cameroon reflects U.S. commitment to advance dialogue to peacefully resolve the Anglophone crisis and support respect for human rights. This decision followed cuts in security assistance in recent years and the removal of Cameroon's AGOA eligibility on January 1, 2020. These actions demonstrate the U.S. Government's resolve to back up words with actions. The United States will continue to consider all potential diplomatic tools to advance dialogue and end violence in the Anglophone Northwest and Southwest Regions.

Trafficking in Persons

Question. In the State Department's 2020 Trafficking in Persons Report, the U.S. downgraded Cameroon to Tier 2 Watch List for recruiting child soldiers, a lack of standard operating procedures and convicting fewer trafficking crimes. Additionally, the Government has not passed anti-trafficking legislation to conform to international law. Yet, the Government did investigate more trafficking cases and identify more victims.

- If confirmed, how will you build on Cameroon's successes and strengthen their weaknesses, most notably, aiding in establishing a national framework for anti-trafficking?

Answer. The United States regularly engages with Cameroon on the issue of human trafficking. We have provided training to government and civil society stakeholders through the International Visitors Leadership Program and presented draft language for anti-trafficking legislation that would bring national law in line with international norms. We will continue to work with the Government of Cameroon to ensure that its security forces do not violate their internal regulations and recruit or use child soldiers. We will also encourage the Government to urge vigilance committees to refrain from doing so.

If confirmed, I will ensure that we will continue to engage constructively with the Inter-ministerial Committee on Trafficking in Persons and encourage the Government to make progress in the fight against human trafficking by focusing on milestones that need to be achieved on key deficiencies and by engaging more robustly with civil society.

International Religious Freedom

Question. In the State Department's 2020 International Religious Freedom Report, the Department noted Cameroon as having poor religious tolerance, including threats of non-state actors like ISIS-WA and Boko Haram.

- What is your assessment of this particular issue, and if confirmed, how will you work with the Office of International Religious Freedom to bolster religious freedom in-country?

Answer. Religious leaders wield significant influence and are potential allies in bringing peace to the Northwest, Southwest, and Far North Regions where persistent violence from non-state actors, armed separatists, and government actors infringes upon religious freedom and all aspects of life in the affected communities. The United States will continue to work with religious leaders and the Government to encourage greater cooperation and respect for the right to practice religion freely and unencumbered.

If confirmed, I will look for opportunities to resolve the ongoing conflict in the Anglophone regions through a framework that supports an inclusive peace process. Peaceful resolutions to the many ongoing conflicts in Cameroon will be pivotal in reducing the incidence of abuses against religious freedom. Under my direction, if confirmed, the embassy will also engage with the Office of International Religious Freedom and other key offices to determine how best we could assist religious leaders.

Human Rights

Question. In the State Department's 2020 Human Rights Report, the Department identified Cameroon as having committed severe human rights abuses. Amnesty International categorized the state-sanctioned behavior as "Security forces and armed groups continued to commit human rights violations and abuses. Hundreds of thousands of people were displaced due to violence; and gender-based violence against women was widespread."

- If confirmed, what steps will you take to address these instances with the host government?

Answer. Promotion of human rights remains a key element of our bilateral relations with Cameroon. While we have seen some progress in this area with specific cases, we would like the Government of Cameroon to share information about what it is doing to address human rights violations by security forces and to take steps to address violations writ-large beyond training. If confirmed, I will continue to call for accountability and transparency related to allegations of human rights violations committed by the Government. I will direct the embassy to look for opportunities to work with the Government to reduce incidences of human rights violations and urge them to hold accountable those found responsible for these violations.

Question. How will you direct your embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground?

Answer. Building the capacity of civil society is a top priority for our mission in Cameroon. We provide funding to local organizations focused on supporting dialogue and peace initiatives related to the crisis in Anglophone regions, strengthening the rule of law, improving the legislative process, promoting access to justice, enhancing anti-trafficking efforts, monitoring elections, and promoting civil engagement and human rights.

If confirmed, I will continue to advance such opportunities to strengthen the capacity of civil society organizations and amplify their voices, encourage the Government to collaborate with these organizations for the betterment of Cameroon, and ensure that we coordinate our efforts with diplomatic and international missions.

Question. In December 2019, the Trump administration curtailed U.S. military assistance to Cameroon because of gross human rights violations, including women and children's extrajudicial killings. To date, has there been an improvement in the Cameroon military's human rights record? If confirmed, how do you intend to work with the Government of Cameroon and its military leadership to improve on this issue?

Answer. Since early 2019, the United States has significantly reduced security assistance due to the Government of Cameroon's unwillingness to share information in response to credible accusations of gross violations of human rights by its security forces. The Government has since taken some steps towards holding security forces accountable, which we commend. These include the murder conviction in August 2020 of four soldiers for the 2015 killing of two women and two children in the Far North, the arrest and ongoing prosecution of soldiers believed to be responsible for the February 2020 extrajudicial killings in Ngarbuh, Northwest Region, and the arrest of soldiers involved in a case of alleged torture of a detainee in early 2021. However, the United States would like to receive more information from the Government of Cameroon on actions it has taken and plans to take to address allegations of human rights violations and to put measures in place that advance human rights that go beyond human rights training.

If confirmed, I will continue to encourage the Government to provide updates on investigations into allegations of human rights violations and continue to work with Cameroonian armed forces on areas of mutual interest. I will continue to review security assistance on a case-by-case basis so that assistance we provide aligns with U.S. interests, including promotion of human rights, and U.S. law requires those receiving our security assistance be vetted prior to receiving assistance.

Biya Succession

Question. If confirmed, you will arrive in Cameroon at a time when there is a lot of speculation about the wellbeing of the country's president, Paul Biya, who is 88 years old and has been in power for four decades. Does the State Department have a contingency plan in place should the country be thrust into a succession battle during your tenure?

Answer. President Biya's current term of office doesn't end until 2025, and Biya has not made clear whether he intends to run for reelection at that time. The State Department has a plethora of experience responding to various political transitions around the world, should such a scenario arise. We will draw on that experience, and our regularly updated emergency plans for all scenarios, including natural disasters or other major events. If confirmed, I will ensure that crisis management planning will remain a top priority for our Mission.

Question. In several Francophone African countries—Togo, Gabon, Democratic Republic of Congo, and recently Chad—dying and long-serving presidents have manipulated fragile constitutions to pave the way for their sons to replace them should they pass away while in office. Is such a scenario likely in Cameroon, and if so, what should be the U.S. position if this occurred?

Answer. The United States supports peaceful, timely, and civilian-led transitions of power to a democratically elected government throughout the world. We advocate for free, fair, and secure elections that reflect the will of the people in all countries, including Cameroon. President Biya is serving a seven-year term, and the next elections are to be held in 2025. The Cameroonian constitution outlines a democratic process in the event of a succession. If confirmed, I will advocate for good governance, peace, prosperity, and the promotion of human rights in Cameroon, as well as for efforts by Cameroon to support stability in the region despite the ongoing conflicts within its borders.

Security

Question. Another crisis that confronts Cameroon is in the Far North region, where the country is part of the multinational Task Force battling Boko Haram and other violent extremists in the Lake Chad Basin. In the past year, Boko Haram attacks on civilian populations have increased. Some analysts believe that Cameroon may have moved military equipment and personnel initially assigned to this region of the country into the Anglophone areas of the North West and South West.

- To what extent is this divided focus undermining Cameroon's contribution to fight against Boko Haram and broader counterterrorism efforts in the Sahel?

Answer. Cameroon has always played a crucial role in regional stability. With the protracted crisis in the Central African Republic, instability in Nigeria, the terrorist threat posed by Boko Haram and ISIS-West Africa and increasing incidents of piracy in the Gulf of Guinea, Cameroon's role as a partner in securing and maintaining stability in the region is even more important.

Cameroon has been a leader in both the efforts to address piracy in the Gulf of Guinea and the fight against terrorism and has contributed troops to the United Nation's peacekeeping mission in the Central Africa Republic since 2014. The ongoing violence in the Anglophone regions and the Far North, along with insecurity on its eastern border, could put at risk Cameroon's ability to continue to lead these efforts to ensure the security of Central African region.

If confirmed, I will continue to push for the Government to pursue dialogue with separatist armed groups in order to end the violence in the Northwest and Southwest. We will also continue to push the Government hold those found responsible for violations of human rights accountable for these violations.

Question. While restrictions currently exist, which security assistance, if any, should the U.S. prioritize to Cameroon in the future?

Answer. All U.S. security cooperation activities with Cameroon take place in full coordination with the Government of Cameroon. The United States works with Cameroonian armed forces on areas of mutual interest. If confirmed, I will ensure that our security assistance will continue to focus on assisting the Cameroonian military in its efforts against ISIS-West Africa and Boko Haram as part of the Multinational Joint Task Force, maritime security, training, and assistance to develop professional military forces, and health security through disease vector research and HIV/AIDS assistance.

Regional Impact

Question. Do you agree that a further escalation of the conflict in the Anglophone regions of Cameroon contributes to greater instability in neighboring Nigeria and could soon jeopardize vital U.S. interests in the Gulf of Guinea and most of West and Central Africa?

Answer. Cameroon has always played a crucial role in regional stability. With the protracted crisis in the Central African Republic, instability in Nigeria, the terrorist threat posed by Boko Haram and ISIS-West Africa and increasing incidents of piracy in the Gulf of Guinea, Cameroon's role as a partner in achieving and maintaining stability in the region is even more important, despite the continuing crises within the country's borders.

Cameroon has been a leader in both the efforts to address piracy in the Gulf of Guinea and the fight against terrorism. The country has also contributed troops to the United Nation's peacekeeping mission in the Central Africa Republic since 2014. The ongoing violence in the Anglophone regions of the country, combined with the need to address the continuing threats posed by Boko Haram and ISIS-WA in the Far North Region and insecurity on its eastern border, could put Cameroon's ability to continue to lead these efforts to ensure the security of the Central Africa region at risk.

If confirmed, I will continue to urge the Government to pursue dialogue with separatist armed groups in order to end the violence in the Northwest and Southwest Regions. We will also continue to call on the Government to hold those found responsible for violations of human rights accountable for these violations.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO CHRISTOPHER JOHN LAMORA BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Anglophone Crisis

Question. The Anglophone Crisis in Cameroon has killed thousands, displaced more than 800,000, and kept more than one million children out of school. In January, the Senate passed S.Res.684, which I introduced with Senator Risch, calling on the Government of Cameroon and separatist armed Anglophone groups to end all violence, respect the human rights of all Cameroonians, and pursue a genuinely inclusive dialogue toward resolving the ongoing conflict. The resolution also called on the U.S. Government to help bring about and support that dialogue.

- If confirmed as Ambassador to Cameroon, what steps would you take to help initiate the dialogue process, and how would you ensure that all relevant stakeholders are represented?

Answer. If confirmed, I would continue to urge all parties to end violence and to engage in an inclusive dialogue without preconditions. I would make clear U.S. support for the Swiss Government's efforts to advance mediation between the Government and separatist armed group leaders and encourage the Government to take concrete steps to move this effort forward.

The United States regularly engages U.N. Security Council member states regarding the need to resolve the Anglophone crisis. We raise the Anglophone crisis regularly during briefings by the Secretary-General's Special Representative and Head of the U.N. Office for Central Africa (UNOCA) François Fall. We will continue our engagement with France and other key allies both bilaterally and in multilateral fora to find ways to work together to achieve tangible progress towards peace. The U.S. Government will continue to consider all the tools at our disposal aimed at promoting a peaceful resolution of the ongoing violence, which has resulted in much suffering.

Question. I appreciate Secretary Blinken's recent decision to impose visa restrictions on some of those responsible for undermining peace in Cameroon. Are any financial measures, such as Global Magnitsky sanctions, also being considered?

Answer. The recent decision to impose visa restrictions on some of those responsible for undermining peace in Cameroon is one of many possible approaches we can take to push for peace and dialogue. It is yet another sign of our commitment to back up words with actions. The U.S. Government will continue to consider all the tools at our disposal to encourage a peaceful resolution of the crisis in the Northwest and Southwest Regions.

Question. How could we be better engaging our international partners, especially France, to address this conflict?

Answer. The United States remains closely engaged with France and other international partners regarding the crisis in Cameroon, including at the highest levels. For example, Secretary Blinken discussed Cameroon in May with French Foreign Minister Jean-Yves Le Drian, and Undersecretary for Political Affairs Victoria Nuland discussed Cameroon in high-level meetings with the French. We continue to support the efforts by the Swiss-led process to encourage dialogue between the Government and the armed separatist groups. We also support efforts by the U.N. Office in Central Africa (UNOCA) to advance peace in Cameroon.

If confirmed, I will engage with all of these actors and determine how best we can work together to make a positive difference on the ground. Advancing peace in Cameroon will be my top priority.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO CHRISTOPHER JOHN LAMORA BY SENATOR MIKE ROUNDS

Question. As you know, the U.S. has limited leverage with Cameroon regime, particularly since the suspension of security assistance. With these limitations, I am curious about your view on potential U.S. leadership in mediating an end to the crisis in the Anglophone regions?

- If this is even feasible, are there resources you think could help mediation?

Answer. The United States is deeply concerned about continued violence in Cameroon and condemn all attacks against civilians. There is no military solution to this crisis; dialogue is needed to restore peace and improve respect for human rights. The United States appeals to all parties to enter into a broad-based dialogue without pre-conditions.

The United States has an important role to play in pushing for a resolution to the crisis in the Anglophone regions. If confirmed, I will continue to support the Swiss Government's efforts to mediate dialogue and explore ways with the international community to advance this effort and other meaningful efforts. I will also review the different tools, including the implementation of appropriate measures under U.S. law such as the visa restrictions that the Secretary recently announced and coordinating with appropriate Department of Justice prosecutions of those inciting violence. We have to press for a resolution to this crisis, including through discussions with French Government officials and P3 counterparts. The United States has provided and will continue to provide strong support for peace, but the responsibility for the resolution of the crisis in the Northwest and Southwest Regions ultimately lies with the Cameroonian people.

Question. In the north of Cameroon, terrorism has accelerated. Meanwhile, in other regions, violence between security forces and armed separatists claiming to represent the Anglophone minority has spurred concerns over Cameroon's territorial unity.

- Do you think the U.S. is adequately leveraging diplomatic and assistance tools, both with Cameroonian stakeholders and our European and African allies, to address these challenges as well as challenges to democratic development?

Answer. I understand we continue to engage Cameroonian stakeholders and key international actors bilaterally and multilaterally on the importance of the rule of law and ending impunity in Cameroon and to explore ways we can work together towards a peaceful resolution of the violence in the Northwest and Southwest Regions, and advance good governance and promote respect for human rights nationwide.

Our diplomatic engagement is deployed at various levels, including at the most senior level of the U.S. Government. For example, Secretary Blinken discussed Cameroon in May with French Foreign Minister Jean-Yves Le Drian, and Undersecretary for Political Affairs Victoria Nuland discussed Cameroon in high-level meetings with the French. We also engage regularly with U.N. Special Representative François Fall who heads the U.N. Office for Central Africa.

The United States regularly reviews our assistance to ensure that we do no harm, that we support civil society, human rights defenders, and humanitarian workers, and that we comply with Leahy laws. We have consistently said all those responsible for human rights violations and abuses must be held accountable, and we have taken actions to back up this principle. If confirmed, I will continue to consider what more can be done to address Cameroon's complex challenges, always with a view to benefit the Cameroonian people.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO CHRISTOPHER JOHN LAMORA BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

Violence and Instability in Cameroon and Beyond

Question. U.S. relations with Cameroon have been mostly positive, although they have been adversely affected by concerns over human rights abuses, in particular in the Anglophone Northwest and Southwest Regions, and the pace of political and economic liberalization. Cameroon plays a key role in regional stability and remains a regional partner in countering terrorism in the Lake Chad Region.

- Last year, I joined with 19 of my Senate colleagues to sign a resolution calling for a ceasefire in Cameroon, and remain deeply concerned by the ongoing violence there. I am curious as to what you think it will take to conclude and uphold a ceasefire, guaranteed humanitarian access, and establish a process of political dialogue?

Answer. If confirmed, I will make resolving the Anglophone crisis my top policy priority. Our position remains that all sides must end violence and engage in an inclusive dialogue without preconditions. The Government is focused on countering armed separatists in the field and maintains that its convening of a Grand National Dialogue in 2019 and decentralization efforts thus far, including regional elections in late 2020 and the establishment of a special status for the two Anglophone regions, address the root causes of the crisis. I believe the Government must do more to resolve the crisis. Specifically, it must be willing to engage in an inclusive dialogue without preconditions. The armed separatist groups, as well, must be willing to engage peacefully in such a dialogue and cease human rights abuses, as called for in the Senate resolution.

If confirmed, I will consider all potential diplomatic tools to advance dialogue and end violence in the Anglophone Northwest and Southwest Regions. We will engage in discussions with other partners on the ground and look for tangible ways to advance peace in Cameroon.

Question. In 2019, the United States took the relatively rare step of terminating Cameroon's AGOA eligibility due to persistent gross violations of human rights. Unfortunately, this does not appear to have impacted the Government's behavior in the ongoing conflict. If confirmed, what other measures do you plan to take to hold state and non-state actors in Cameroon accountable for human rights abuses?

Answer. On June 7, 2021, Secretary Blinken announced that the United States was taking steps to impose visa restrictions on individuals who are believed to be responsible for, or complicit in, undermining the peaceful resolution of the crisis in the Anglophone regions of Cameroon. This decision reflects the continuing U.S. commitment to advance dialogue and promote respect for human rights. This decision followed cuts in security assistance in recent years, and, as you noted, the determination that Cameroon was ineligible for AGOA starting on January 1, 2020. These actions demonstrate the U.S. Government's resolve to back up words with actions.

If confirmed, I will consider all potential diplomatic tools to advance dialogue and end violence in the Anglophone Northwest and Southwest Regions. We will engage in discussions with other partners on the ground, as well as the Cameroonian Government and people, to identify tangible ways to advance peace in Cameroon.

Question. In addition to the internal violence related to the Anglophone Crisis, Cameroon is also facing threats from Boko Haram and ISIS West Africa. How do we square our support for Cameroon's efforts against Boko Haram and ISIS West Africa with our concerns about human rights abuses and political abuses inside Cameroon? In other words, how can the State Department ensure that President Biya does not use foreign counterterrorism assistance to fund its efforts against Anglophone separatists in the Southwest and Northwest part of the country?

Answer. Cameroon has long played a crucial role in regional stability. With the protracted crisis in the Central African Republic, instability in Nigeria, the terrorist threat posed by Boko Haram and ISIS-West Africa, and increasing incidents of piracy in the Gulf of Guinea, Cameroon's role as a partner in securing and maintaining stability in the region is even more important. Since early 2019, we have significantly reduced security assistance because the Government of Cameroon had not taken sufficient action to investigate credible accusations of gross violations of human rights by its security forces or hold the perpetrators accountable. The United States continues to review security assistance on a case-by-case basis so that assistance we provide aligns with U.S. interests, including promotion of respect for human rights. We vet potential recipients of security assistance, consistent with the Leahy laws, and do not provide assistance to Cameroonian security force units where there is credible information that the unit has committed a gross violation of human rights. U.S.-granted assistance is explicitly prohibited from being used in the Anglophone regions. We have made this prohibition clear at all levels of the Cameroonian Government and we carefully monitor the use of U.S. assistance to ensure this commitment is followed. Risk of misuse or potential diversion to the Anglophone regions are key criteria in our security assistance decision-making.

Since our cuts, the Cameroonian Government has taken some limited steps towards holding security forces accountable, including the conviction of four soldiers for murder in August 2020 and the arrest of soldiers believed to be responsible for one case of extrajudicial killings and one case of alleged torture of a detainee. While we hope these steps indicate a willingness to address the problem, abuses by government forces continue.

Between FY 2019 (the last year for which there is full obligation data) and FY 2020 funding, the State Department has obligated approximately $8.3 million in assistance to support the Cameroonian military. This funding supported professional military education; technical support for unarmed intelligence, surveillance, and reconnaissance platforms; small boat training; communications training; and air-to-ground integration training. If confirmed, I would work to ensure that U.S.-provided equipment is not misused by Cameroonian security forces, and would actively and fully address verified reports of such misuse.

TUESDAY, JUNE 15, 2021

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:04 a.m. in Room SD-106, Hon. Robert Menendez, chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Menendez [presiding], Cardin, Shaheen, Kaine, Schatz, Van Hollen, Risch, Johnson, Portman, Young, Cruz, and Hagerty.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ, U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

The CHAIRMAN. This hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

We are here today to consider nominees for three important positions, Ambassador Todd Robinson to be Assistant Secretary of State for International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs, Ambassador Daniel Kritenbrink to be Assistant Secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific Affairs, and Mr. Brett Holmgren to be Assistant Secretary of State for Intelligence and Research.

So congratulations to the three of you on your nominations. We appreciate your commitment and willingness to serve our country and your families as well.

Ambassador Robinson, it is nice to have you back before this committee for another confirmation hearing, this time as the nominee to lead the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs, which we know as INL, one of the most important offices for strengthening democratic governance and the rule of law globally.

INL's work around the world is critical to countering narcotics trafficking, criminal syndicates, money laundering, and other financial crimes, addressing the criminal use of ransomware and malware, combating illegal mining and fishing, and supporting efforts to combat gender-based violence.

Over the last decade, authoritarian leaders have increasingly wielded criminality and kleptocracy as tools to debilitate democracy at home and foment instability beyond their borders.

I welcome President Biden's recent directorate establishing the fight against kleptocracy as a key national security priority and making it clear that we will tackle its corrosive impact.

INL has a central role to play in that fight. INL is also at the forefront of our international efforts to combat narcotics trafficking.

CDC data shows that over 70,000 Americans died from drug overdoses in 2019, including over 2,800 in my home state of New Jersey.

I am particularly concerned about the lethal impact of fentanyl as well as the illicit production and trafficking routes that extend through Mexico and back to China. While we must improve our public health responses to address drug abuse domestically, INL's work is essential to countering drug trafficking by transnational criminal organizations.

So I look forward to hearing from you about your vision for the Bureau and your plans for strengthening justice systems and law enforcement cooperation to advance our national security interests.

Ambassador Kritenbrink, I am also pleased to have you back before this committee for another confirmation hearing. I think the last time we saw each other was in China, and your post there—your career as a public servant and your extensive experience in the region will be critical as you take on this important role.

In recent years and under administrations and Congresses of both parties the United States has reassessed and rebalanced our approach to the Indo-Pacific to take into account the reality of our competitive relationship with China.

Although this new era of strategic competition may not be what many of us had hoped for in the U.S.-China relationship, it is our reality and we must deal with it with clear-eyed pragmatism, starting with rebuilding and replenishing the sources of our national strength here at home and our alliances and partnerships abroad.

The recently passed Senate China competition package, including the Strategic Competition Act that the ranking member and I and other members of this committee authored, marks our effort to contribute to that process.

Beyond China, the region you will be responsible for is rich with pressing challenges, from North Korea's nuclear and missile programs, which only grew stronger under President Trump's ill-conceived North Korea policy, to a coup plunging Burma back into chaos, to a roll back in human rights and democracy across the region.

I know that you are intimately familiar with these issues and we look forward to hearing your thoughts on how we can best position the United States for success there in the years ahead.

Mr. Holmgren, the independent analysis of the State Department's Bureau of Intelligence and Research has long been recognized as among the best, most reliable, and most careful of the intelligence community.

We have today a nominee for the Assistant Secretary of INR that brings a great breadth of experience to its mission.

Mr. Holmgren has held significant experience relevant to INR's mission, including serving as a senior director for intelligence and for counterterrorism at the National Security Council, as well as service at the Central Intelligence Agency and the Pentagon.

I have little doubt that such experience would be of immense benefit to the State Department Bureau.

INR is an invaluable resource for the Secretary of State, senior officials, and department overall. Indeed, the Bureau could also be of immense benefit to this committee.

Our oversight of U.S. foreign policy would be better served by more regular contact and briefings from INR, and I look forward to that engagement with you should you be confirmed, something that has been missing in the past and I hope, under your leadership, we can engage with the committee more robustly.

In closing, the three of you have an immense task ahead, but I have no doubt about your knowledge and experience will serve you well and the nation well as you take on these new responsibilities.

I look forward to each of your testimony. Let me turn to the ranking member for his opening remarks.

STATEMENT OF HON. JAMES E. RISCH,
U.S. SENATOR FROM IDAHO

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, these are important nominations we are hearing today. There is a broad swath of responsibility here and an important responsibility.

Personally, my top two foreign policy priorities are China and global health. Regarding China, my main concerns are the Chinese Communist Party's aggression and coercion in the Indo-Pacific and the urgency of the Taiwan issue.

To counter Chinese aggression, I believe we must ensure that the State Department is appropriately resourced in terms of funding and personnel in the Indo-Pacific.

I am interested to hear from you, if confirmed, plans to advocate for this critical region in this—in the State Department budgeting process.

Additionally, our network of alliances and partnerships is key to advancing a free and open Indo-Pacific. The U.S. security commitments, including extended deterrence and commitments to help allies and partners develop advanced capabilities, are crucial to this effort, and it is important to remember U.S. policy will only be successful if we work closely with our allies.

Also, I am particularly concerned about Chinese aggression against Taiwan. Taiwan is an important democratic partner, and how we support and work with Taiwan will have significant implications for our strategy in the region and our alliance system. Taiwan must be a main focus of the administration and the State Department.

Regarding global health, the Indo-Pacific region is in great need of more COVID-19 vaccines, especially given China's aggressive vaccine diplomacy.

Supporting our partners as well as countries in need during this global health crisis will be a mark of U.S. commitment to the region.

Finally, I believe it would be a mistake to use U.S. taxpayer dollars to buy and distribute Chinese vaccines.

Moving on to the nomination of Assistant Secretary of State for Intelligence and Research, I am concerned about reports of directed energy attacks against State Department personnel, both abroad and here at home.

This has been widely written about, greatly discussed, but the amount of information available is pretty de minimis. The Bureau of Intelligence and Research will play an important role in helping to identify the perpetrator and the means of these attacks.

The Assistant Secretary also has a responsibility to provide our committee and the Intelligence Committee with up to date information on all investigations into these attacks.

If confirmed, I expect to be in regular contact on this important issue. In addition to supporting the intelligence needs of the Secretary of State, INR must also work closely with the intelligence community.

It is imperative that the Bureau maintain its analytical independence from policymakers within the State Department to ensure information is objective and accurate.

Finally, the nomination of Assistant Secretary of State for International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs. Transnational criminal organizations, money laundering, and trafficking of people, narcotics, and weapons undermine international stability and pose complex threats to U.S. public health and security.

INR plays an important role in improving the capacity of our foreign partners to disrupt and dismantle transnational criminal activity. But these efforts do not exist in a vacuum.

I am concerned about the negative impact the administration's decision to reduce our military presence in Afghanistan will have on narcotics production and associated criminal activities, including funding terrorism.

I am also concerned that the administration's open borders policy has incentivized record-breaking waves of illegal migrants and undermine U.S. efforts to improve governance, security, and economic prosperity in Mexico and in the North and Central America.

I look forward to hearing plans you have to overcome these and other international law enforcement challenges, should you be confirmed.

We have a lot to cover today, and with that, I yield back my time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Risch.

With that, we will start with our nominees and their testimony. All of your full records will be included in the—I am sorry. Your full statements will be included in the record. We ask you to summarize in about five minutes or so so we can have a conversation with you.

We will start with Ambassador Robinson and work our way down. Thank you.

STATEMENT OF HON. TODD D. ROBINSON OF NEW JERSEY, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF CAREER MINISTER, TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE (INTERNATIONAL NARCOTICS AND LAW ENFORCEMENT AFFAIRS), VICE KIRSTEN DAWN MADISON

Mr. ROBINSON. Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today as the nominee to be the Assistant Secretary of State for International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs.

I am honored by President Biden's nomination and the support of Secretary Blinken for the opportunity to continue to serve the American people.

I would like to take the opportunity to recognize the support of my friends, colleagues, and, most importantly, my family, my mother, Willetta BaCote, and my brothers, Mark Robinson and Jeffrey BaCote. Their encouragement has been invaluable to me.

The Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs, INL, which I called home for three and a half years as the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State, is a key component in protecting the American people by countering crime and supporting the rule of law to maintain stability abroad.

I look forward to the possibility of leading my Foreign Service, civil service, contractor, and local staff INL colleagues working in Washington and more than 90 countries.

If confirmed, I commit to working with Congress to tackle the great challenges laid out in the president's national security agenda, including combating narcotics trafficking, addressing transnational organized criminal threats, corruption and cybercrime, countering Chinese malign influence, and tackling issues of bias and discrimination in criminal justice systems.

Stopping illegal drugs like synthetic opioids from reaching America will be among my highest priorities. We know some terrorist organizations traffic drugs to fund their illicit activities. Transnational criminal organizations have seemingly limitless appetites for illicit profits from synthetic drugs.

If confirmed, I will prioritize INL's critical engagement with partners and allies to combat this threat. Transnational criminal organizations are not static, so INL cannot be either.

Working with our interagency partners, such as the Departments of Justice and Homeland Security, INL can lead the effort to ensure that our programs are better coordinated and show results.

Example—after the People's Republic of China scheduled fentanyl as a regulated chemical class in 2019, direct flows of fentanyl from the PRC to the United States dropped precipitously.

However, nonfentanyl opioids and precursor chemicals continue to flow from the PRC to Mexican criminals that manufacture the fentanyl and traffic it to the United States.

If confirmed, I will prioritize continued diplomatic engagement at all levels to decrease the shipment of these precursors from the PRC and to reinvigorate shared security cooperation between the United States and Mexico.

In fact, U.S.-Mexico cooperation must continue to address another high priority issue, the management of migration across the region and to the U.S. southern border.

Strategic thinking and data will help us address irregular migration and build a smarter border. INL is working closely within the administration to shape a central America—Central America root causes strategy to look at the drivers of this migration.

I know this topic is a high priority to members of the committee and I look forward to hearing your thoughts on how we can make our foreign assistance dollars more effective on this issue.

If confirmed, I vow to respond to these complex challenges using the experience gained in relationships built over my 35-year Foreign Service career.

Another global challenge we confront today is corruption. Simply put, corruption kills. I saw its effects in Guatemala where political, economic, and social elites, at times working with criminal organizations, buy judges and threaten independent and courageous judicial actors.

I saw it in Venezuela, where the Maduro regime reaps ill-gotten profits by selectively distributing food and pillages that nation's natural resources.

As President Biden and Secretary Blinken have noted, corruption undermines U.S. foreign policy and national security interests around the world, and damages the credibility of countries where U.S. businesses may want to invest.

INL, with our interagency partners, acts as a bulwark against global corruption, and if confirmed, I would seek to enhance this work by identifying like-minded crime fighters around the world, build their capacity to prevent, investigate, and prosecute corruption, and reinvigorating multilateral global anti-corruption networks.

INL can also use rewards and visa restrictions to promote accountability for corrupt actors globally. If confirmed, I commit to working with the Congress on advancing America's interests at home and abroad.

Thank you for this opportunity and I look forward to your questions.

[The prepared statement of Mr. Robinson follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. TODD D. ROBINSON

Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today as the nominee to be the Assistant Secretary of State for International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs. I am honored by the President's nomination and the support of Secretary Blinken for the opportunity to continue to serve the American people.

I look forward to the possibility of leading my foreign service, civil service, contractor, and local staff INL colleagues working in Washington and more than 90 countries.

If confirmed, I commit to working with Congress to tackle the great challenges laid out in the President's national security agenda including combating narcotics trafficking; addressing transnational organized criminal threats, corruption and cybercrime; countering PRC malign influence; and tackling issues of bias and discrimination, in criminal justice systems.

Stopping illegal drugs, like synthetic opioids, from reaching America will be among my highest priorities. We know some terrorist organizations traffic drugs and other commodities to fund their illicit activities. Transnational criminal organizations have seemingly limitless appetites for illicit profits from synthetic drugs. If confirmed, I will prioritize INL's critical engagement with partners and allies to combat this threat.

Transnational criminal organizations are not static, so INL cannot be either. Working with our interagency partners such as the Departments of Justice and Homeland Security, INL can lead the effort to ensure that our programs are better coordinated and show results. Example: after the People's Republic of China (PRC) scheduled fentanyl as a regulated chemical class in 2019, direct flows of fentanyl from the PRC to the United States dropped precipitously. cursors from the PRC, and to reinvigorate shared security cooperation between the United States and Mexico.

In fact, U.S.-Mexico cooperation must continue to address another high priority issue—the management of migration across the region and to the U.S. southern border. I saw its effects in Guatemala where political, economic, and social elites—at times working with criminal organizations—buy judges and threaten independent and courageous judicial actors. I saw it in Venezuela where the Maduro regime reaps ill-gotten profits by selectively distributing food rations and pillages that nation's natural resources. As President Biden and Secretary Blinken have noted, corruption undermines U.S. foreign policy and national security interests around the world and damages the credibility of countries where U.S. businesses may want to invest.

INL, with our interagency partners, acts as a bulwark against global corruption. INL can also use rewards and visa restrictions to promote accountability for corrupt actors globally.

Criminals and state-actors use technology to target the American people, our institutions, and critical infrastructure. The detrimental impact of cybercrime on America is clear, with one in four U.S. households affected, and annual losses reported to the FBI last year of $4.2 billion. If confirmed, I will want INL to build the necessary know-how and cross-border cooperation to address 21st century transnational security challenges.

Finally, given its decades of criminal justice sector reform experience, INL has a unique responsibility to work with foreign partners to recognize, prevent, and counter bias and discrimination within their criminal justice systems. If confirmed, INL programs and partnerships will continue to reflect a respect for human rights and best practices in balancing individual rights with public safety.

If confirmed, I commit to working with the Congress on advancing America's interests at home and abroad. Thank you for this opportunity and I look forward to your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.
Mr. Holmgren?

STATEMENT OF BRETT M. HOLMGREN OF MINNESOTA, NOMINATED TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE (INTELLIGENCE AND RESEARCH), VICE ELLEN E. MCCARTHY

Mr. HOLMGREN. Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee, it is an honor to appear before you today as the nominee to be Assistant Secretary of State for the Bureau of Intelligence and Research.

I am deeply grateful to President Biden and Secretary Blinken for the confidence they have placed in me, and to Director of National Intelligence Avril Haines for supporting my nomination.

I would not be here today if it were not for the love and support of my family, my wife, Dana, my son, Teddy, my parents, Michael and Mary, and my siblings, Stacy, Christa and Ryan. Each of them has inspired me to live my life with a sense of purpose, love, and humility.

Like many Americans of my generation, the tragic events of 9/11 were a turning point in my life. I left my home state of Minnesota 18 years ago to pursue a career in public service, to defend the freedoms, values, and liberties we all cherish.

I came to Washington with a sense of optimism, and a deep and abiding belief in the ideals of this country, that America is a force for good in the world and that all men and women are created equal with the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Those ideals derived from my upbringing in Minnesota, where I was surrounded by family who believed deeply in the role of public service.

Both of my grandfathers were World War II veterans, and my parents, both of whom were public school teachers for 40 years, instilled in my siblings and me the importance of service.

I still share that same sense of optimism and commitment to public service that I brought with me to Washington two decades ago.

While I may be a new face to members of this committee, I have a long track record of working on intelligence and foreign policy issues. As an analyst first at the Defense Intelligence Agency and later at the CIA, I authored all sorts of analytic products to inform policy decisions.

Through deployments overseas, including in war zones, I have seen firsthand the key role that intelligence plays in shaping national security and the tremendous sacrifices of our diplomats, intelligence officers, and warfighters.

Throughout my career, I have also served in policy roles in the Pentagon and on the National Security Council staff at the White House.

These experiences gave me a richer understanding of the vital role and the limitations of intelligence in shaping policy. Most significantly, I gained through these experiences a greater appreciation for the importance of analytic objectivity and the need for the intelligence community to tell the policymaker what they need to know, not what they want to hear.

I have been nominated for this position at a time when the United States and its allies are facing a diverse interconnected array of threats against the backdrop of a global pandemic that is straining governments and societies, fueling unrest, and accelerating global competition.

From China, Russia, Iran, North Korea, the continuing threat of terrorism, cyber, emerging technologies, these threats pose new challenges and opportunities.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that INR has a unique role to play in addressing these challenges. As the oldest civilian intelligence agency in the United States, the Bureau has a long and proud history of providing policymakers with valuable insights into America's most pressing national security issues, while empowering diplomats with the information and analysis needed to advance U.S. foreign policy.

If confirmed, I look forward to leading this remarkable institution. I understand the role comes with important responsibilities, including serving as the principal intelligence adviser to the Secretary of State and as the head of one of the nation's 18 intelligence agencies, providing timely objective all-source information to inform consideration of foreign and national security policies, and finally, assuring that intelligence and sensitive law enforcement activities are conducted consistent with and supportive of U.S. foreign policy objectives.

If confirmed, four inter-related imperatives will shape my approach to leading INR.

First, I will ensure that INR's capabilities and resources are aligned and strategically prioritized to address the most pressing challenges and opportunities to include China, Russia, Iran, North Korea, as well as global health security, cyber, climate change, and how to capitalize on the revolution in open source intelligence.

Second, I will prioritize investments in INR's greatest assets, its people. We must continue to attract, train, and retain the best and brightest while placing much greater emphasis on diversity recruitment.

Third, I will focus on upgrading INR's technology to empower its analysts with the tools they need to improve the delivery of INR's products and services to better support its customers, especially U.S. diplomats overseas.

Finally, I will insist on strong cybersecurity practices throughout INR to safeguard the confidentiality, integrity, and availability of its data systems and networks.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I want to recognize the important role that I believe congressional oversight plays in ensuring that U.S. intelligence activities are lawful, ethical, and consistent with our values.

If confirmed, I look forward to partnering closely with Congress as we confront the many challenges ahead.

Thank you, and I look forward to your questions.

[The prepared statement of Mr. Holmgren follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF BRETT M. HOLMGREN

Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee, it is an honor to appear before you today as the nominee to be Assistant Secretary of State for the Bureau of Intelligence and Research. I am deeply grateful to President Biden and Secretary Blinken for the confidence they have placed in me, and to Director of National Intelligence, Avril Haines, for supporting my nomination.

I would not be here if it were not for the love and support of my family: my wife, Dana, our son Teddy, my parents, Michael and Mary, and my siblings Stacie, Krista and Ryan. Each of them has inspired me to live my life with a sense of purpose, love, and humility.

Like many Americans of my generation, the tragic events of 9/11 were a turning point in my life. I left my home state of Minnesota nearly 18 years ago to pursue a career in public service to defend the freedoms, values, and liberties we all cherish. I came to Washington with a sense of optimism and a deep and abiding belief in the ideals of this country—that America is a force for good in the world, and that all men and women are created equal with the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Those ideals derive from my upbringing in Minnesota, where I was surrounded by family who believed deeply in the role of public service. Both of my grandfathers were World War II veterans. My parents, both of whom were public school teachers for 40 years, instilled in my siblings and me the importance of service. I still share the optimism and commitment to public service that I brought with me to Washington nearly two decades ago.

While I may be a new face to many of the members here today, I have a long track record of working in and with the Intelligence Community. As an analyst, first at the Defense Intelligence Agency and later at Central Intelligence Agency, I authored all-source intelligence products to inform policy decisions. Through deployments overseas, including in warzones, I have seen firsthand the key role that intelligence plays in shaping national security and the tremendous sacrifices of our diplomats, intelligence officers, and warfighters.

Throughout my career, I have also served in policy roles at the Pentagon and on the National Security Council staff at the White House. These experiences gave me a richer understanding of the vital role and the limitations of intelligence in shaping policy. Most importantly, I gained a greater appreciation for the importance of analytic objectivity and the need for the Intelligence Community to tell the policymaker what they need to know, not what they want to hear.

I have been nominated for this position at a time when the United States and its allies are facing a diverse, interconnected array of threats against the backdrop of a global pandemic that is straining governments and societies, fueling unrest, and accelerating global competition. From China, Russia, North Korea and Iran, to terrorism, cyber, climate change, and evolving technologies, these threats pose new challenges and opportunities for the Intelligence Community.

INR plays a unique role in addressing these challenges. As the oldest civilian intelligence agency in the United States, the Bureau has a long and proud history of providing policymakers valuable insights into America's most pressing national security issues, while empowering our diplomats with the information and analysis to advance U.S. foreign policy.

If confirmed, I look forward to leading this remarkable institution, serving as the principal intelligence advisor to the Secretary of State and the head of one of the Nation's 18 intelligence agencies. INR's responsibility to provide timely, objective, all-source analysis and to assure that intelligence and sensitive law enforcement activities are consistent with, and supportive of, our foreign policy objectives is more critical than ever.

If confirmed, four interrelated imperatives will shape my approach to leading INR. First, I will ensure that our capabilities and resources are aligned and strategically prioritized to address the most pressing challenges and opportunities, to include China, Russia, Iran and North Korea, as well as global health, cyber, climate change and how to capitalize on the revolution in open-source intelligence.

Second, I will prioritize investments in INR's greatest asset—its people. We must continue to attract, train, and retain top talent while placing greater emphasis on diversity recruitment.

Third, I will focus on upgrading INR's technology infrastructure to empower our analysts with the tools they need to improve the delivery of our products and support our customers, especially our diplomats overseas.

Finally, I will insist on strong cybersecurity practices throughout INR to safeguard the confidentiality, integrity, and availability of our data, networks, and systems.

In closing, I want to recognize the important role that Congressional oversight plays in ensuring that U.S. intelligence activities are lawful, ethical, and consistent with our values. If confirmed, I look forward to partnering with Congress as we confront the many challenges ahead.

Thank you, and I look forward to your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much, Mr. Holmgren. Thank you.

Ambassador Kritenbrink?

Am I pronouncing your name correctly?

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Okay. Thank you.

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

STATEMENT OF HON. DANIEL J. KRITENBRINK OF VIRGINIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE (EAST ASIAN AND PACIFIC AFFAIRS), VICE DAVID STILWELL

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I am deeply grateful to President Biden, Vice President Harris, and Secretary Blinken for their confidence in me.

I want to thank my wife, Nami, children, Mia and Joe, my parents, Don and Joyce, and sisters, Kay and Nancy, for their love and support.

It would be the honor of a lifetime to serve as Assistant Secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific Affairs, a region in which I have been engaged for 24 out of my 27 years in the U.S. Foreign Service.

If confirmed, I look forward to consulting closely with the Senate and, of course, with this committee.

President Biden and Secretary Blinken have placed diplomacy at the center of U.S. foreign policy and emphasize the centrality of a free and open Indo-Pacific to the security and prosperity of the American people.

If confirmed, I would focus on the following six priorities.

First, revitalizing ties with allies and partners. Our network of alliances and partnerships is our greatest strategic asset, enabling us to pool our strengths to advance shared interests, deter common threats, and promote universal values, to include our commitment to a free and open Indo-Pacific that is rules based and unconstrained by coercion, the peaceful resolution of disputes, freedom of navigation and over flight, and respect for human rights.

If confirmed, strengthening these relationships will be my top priority. The priority placed on our treaty alliances was demonstrated by President Biden's hosting of his Japanese and Republic of Korea counterparts in April and May.

The president's hosting of the first ever Quad leaders summit in March showed the resolve of the Indo-Pacific democracies—Australia, India, Japan and the United States—to work together to support the region.

I support ASEAN's centrality and, if confirmed, will work to strengthen our partnership, our strategic partnership, with ASEAN, including treaty allies Thailand and the Philippines.

If confirmed, I will reinforce our partnership with friends in the Pacific Islands, including our unique relationship with the Freely Associated States. I will also further develop our robust ties with our democratic partner Taiwan.

Second, prevailing in our strategic competition with China. The People's Republic of China is our biggest geopolitical test.

I support approaching the PRC from a position of strength by working with allies and partners, engaging with international organizations, standing up for our values, and investing in our diplomatic and military capabilities and the American people.

Secretary Blinken has said our approach to China will have competitive, adversarial, and cooperative aspects. The United States will counter PRC attempts to erode the international rules-based order, push back on unfair PRC trade practices, secure critical supply chains, protect sensitive U.S. technology, and build our strength at home.

We will continue holding Chinese authorities responsible for the ongoing genocide in Xinjiang, the trampling of autonomy and civil liberties in Hong Kong, and systematic repression in Tibet.

We will bolster partners' capacity to resist PRC intimidation and oppose China's unlawful maritime claims. We will also cooperate with Beijing when in our interests, such as on the climate crisis, counter narcotics, and nonproliferation.

As President Biden has said, we are not looking for conflict, but welcome stiff competition and will defend U.S. interests across the board.

Third, reducing the threat posed by North Korea's nuclear and missile programs. President Biden has stated we remain committed to the complete denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula and will work with allies to address that threat through diplomacy and deterrence.

If confirmed, I will work to ensure North Korea and others abide by U.N. Security Council resolutions while supporting a calibrated and practical diplomatic approach that prioritizes the security of the United States, our allies, and our deployed military forces.

Fourth, supporting inclusive economic policies that benefit all Americans. If confirmed, I will ensure that our diplomats in the region fight for every job in the interests of American workers by insisting on market access and fair treatment, stopping intellectual property theft and currency manipulation, and combating corruption.

Fifth, promoting democracy and human rights. Our values and our example are critical to successful diplomacy in Asia.

If confirmed, I would work with our allies and partners to support democracy, promote human rights, and stand against abuses wherever they occur.

In Burma, I would work with partners to press the military to reverse course following the February 1 coup, cease violence, release those unjustly detained, including American citizens, and return Burma to the democratic path chosen by its people.

I would work to support the people of Burma by holding accountable those responsible for violence. I would also promote accountability for PRC officials responsible for human rights violations across China.

Sixth, if confirmed, I pledge to address global priorities in the region, particularly combating COVID-19 and the climate crisis.

If confirmed, I will also prioritize the safety and well being of my team, maintain their focus on top goals, and ensure they represent the diverse talents of the American people.

Thank you for inviting me to testify here today. I look forward to your questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. DANIEL J. KRITENBRINK

Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I am deeply grateful to President Biden, Vice President Harris, and Secretary Blinken for their confidence in me. I want to thank my wife Nami, children Mia and Joe, my parents Don and Joyce, and sisters Kay and Nancy, for their love and support.

President Biden and Secretary Blinken have placed diplomacy at the center of U.S. foreign policy, and emphasized the centrality of a free and open Indo-Pacific to the security and prosperity of the American people. If confirmed, I would focus on the following six priorities.

First, revitalizing ties with allies and partners. Our network of alliances and partnerships is our greatest strategic asset, enabling us to pool our strengths to advance shared interests, deter common threats, and promote universal values—including our commitment to a free and open Indo-Pacific that is rules-based and unconstrained by coercion; the peaceful resolution of disputes; freedom of navigation and overflight; and respect for human rights. If confirmed, I will reinforce our partnership with friends in the Pacific Islands, including our unique relationship with the Freely Associated States. I will also further develop our robust ties with our democratic partner Taiwan.

Second, prevailing in our strategic competition with China. The People's Republic of China is our biggest geopolitical test. I support approaching the PRC from a position of strength, by working with allies and partners, engaging with international organizations, standing up for our values, and investing in our diplomatic and military capabilities—and the American people. Secretary Blinken has said our approach to China will have competitive, adversarial, and cooperative aspects. We will continue holding Chinese authorities responsible for the ongoing genocide in Xinjiang, the trampling of autonomy and civil liberties in Hong Kong, and systematic repression in Tibet. We will bolster partners' capacity to resist PRC intimidation and oppose China's unlawful maritime claims. We will also cooperate with Beijing when in our interests, such as on the climate crisis, counternarcotics, and nonproliferation. As President Biden has said, we are not looking for conflict but welcome stiff competition and will defend U.S. interests across the board.

Third, reducing the threat posed by North Korea's nuclear and missile programs. President Biden has stated we remain committed to the complete denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula and will work with allies to address that threat through diplomacy and deterrence. If confirmed, I will work to ensure North Korea and others abide by U.N. Security Council resolutions while supporting a calibrated and practical diplomatic approach that prioritizes the security of the United States, our allies, and our deployed military forces.

Fourth, supporting inclusive economic policies that benefit all Americans. If confirmed, I will ensure our diplomats in the region fight for every job and the interests of American workers by insisting on market access and fair treatment, and by stopping intellectual property theft and currency manipulation. We will also work with regional partners to foster economic development that is transparent and sustainable, including via APEC.

Fifth, promoting democracy and human rights. Our values and our example are critical to successful diplomacy in Asia. If confirmed, I would work with our allies and partners to support democracy, promote human rights, and stand against abuses wherever they occur. In Burma, I would work with partners to press the military to reverse course following the February 1 coup, cease violence, release those unjustly detained, including American citizens, and return Burma to the democratic path chosen by its people. I would work to support the people of Burma by holding accountable those responsible for violence. I would also promote accountability for PRC officials responsible for human rights violations across China. Throughout the region, we will champion transparency, the rule of law, civil society, and independent media.

Sixth, addressing global priorities, particularly combating COVID-19 and the climate crisis. On COVID-19, if confirmed, I pledge to support our work with regional partners and international initiatives such as COVAX and the Quad Vaccine Partnership to provide U.S. leadership in the fight to end the pandemic. On the climate crisis, I would work to advance climate solutions with countries in the region, which include some of the world's largest emitters as well as those most vulnerable to climate change.

If confirmed, I will also prioritize the safety and well-being of my team, maintain their focus on top goals, and ensure they represent the diverse talents of the American people.

Thank you for inviting me to testify. I look forward to your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you all. We will start a round with five minutes. I am going to ask, first, before that some perfunctory questions that we ask all of our nominees.

It is very brief questions that speak to the importance that this committee places on responsiveness by all officials in the executive branch and that we expect and will be seeking from you.

So I would just simply ask you each to provide a yes or no answer.

Do you agree to appear before this committee and make officials from your office available to the committee and designated staff when invited?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. HOLMGREN. Yes.

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you commit to keep the committee fully and currently informed about the activities under your purview?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. HOLMGREN. Yes.

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you commit to engaging in meaningful consultation while policies are being developed, not just providing notification after the fact?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. HOLMGREN. Yes.

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And finally, do you commit to promptly responding to requests for briefings and information requested by the committee and its designated staff?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. HOLMGREN. Yes.

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. Thank you very much.

Now, Ambassador Kritenbrink, as you know, and I think the Senate has spoken with collectively and nearly one voice and that is not easy these days, we believe that China is our major geostrategic challenge in the world, and you address some of that in your remarks.

The Senate passed a sweeping China competitive bill. That includes the strategic competition that this committee put out led by the ranking member and myself and supported by the 19 members of the committee, a truly bipartisan effort.

What do you think of that legislation? What tools would you, if confirmed, want to see in your toolbox that Congress can provide? And can you elaborate on how you plan on approaching the China challenge?

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Let me say again what an honor it is to be here today and I think, Mr. Chairman, you have identified, obviously, very correctly the major challenge that the United States faces today, and I would argue that our friends and partners around the world face today.

I do believe, Mr. Chairman, as I attempted to outline in my statement, for us to prevail in this strategic competition with China we need to do so from a position of strength.

I think we are stronger when we do that together with our like-minded partners around—our like-minded partners and allies around the world.

But, Mr. Chairman, I think we will do our best when we are fully united here at home as well. I am very grateful to you and members of this committee for the support and leadership that you have shown on these issues. I know when Secretary Blinken testified last week he stated his strong support for the bill that you described.

And I might say, as a career diplomat, the more tools and resources that the Senate and other members of Congress can give us as diplomats the more effective we can be.

Of course, to prevail in this long-term competition with China, I think it will be, largely, determined by how we do as a nation together and many of the investments we make here at home.

But I am very grateful for the leadership that the Senate has shown on these issues, and I can pledge to you that with the resources made available to us we will compete and we will prevail in this competition with China in every domain.

The CHAIRMAN. Let us talk about some of the elements of that competition. In Taiwan, given the increased muscle flexing and threatening rhetoric from Beijing, some policymakers and analysts have called for an end to the policy of strategic ambiguity with regard to Taiwan.

There is increasing concern that Beijing may seek to make the cross-straits an early test for this administration. How can the United States most effectively signal our resolve and deter Chinese aggression towards Taiwan?

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Mr. Chairman, thank you.

I do think showing strength and clarity and deterrence is key. What I think is crystal clear to me, Senator, is the United States commitment, rock-solid commitment, to meeting our obligations under the Taiwan Relations Act, to provide Taiwan with the means to maintain a credible self-defense.

If I were confirmed, I pledge to the committee that I will work very hard to support meeting those obligations and, further, to support further developing our very robust unofficial relationship with our Taiwanese democratic partners. It is one of our most important partners in—

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you—I agree. Do you support strategic ambiguity or do you think we need additional clarity or a new framework for managing the cross-strait relations?

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Mr. Chairman, my own view is that the framework outlined by our long-standing one-China policy based on the Taiwan Relations Act, the three joint communiqués, and the six assurances to Taiwan provides the framework that has ensured cross-strait stability and Taiwan security for these many decades.

I do think that maintenance of that status quo and of that security is a dynamic situation. As the threat from the PRC grows, as Beijing's aggressive and bullying behavior vis-à-vis Taiwan grows, I think that our response has to be calibrated as well.

But I am confident that the framework that we have and meeting those obligations in the Taiwan Relations Act gives us the tools to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Holmgren, let me ask you, we rely on the Bureau of Intelligence and Research for insights and particular perspective that sometimes varies from the rest of the intelligence community, and when there is an opinion or assessment that is different for the IC, it is critical that we understand those differences.

Do you agree to be candid with the committee when those differences occur and to make sure we understand where and why INL comes to different conclusions?

Mr. HOLMGREN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I think that, as you know, INR has a long and proud history of speaking truth to power and telling it like it is, and if there are instances where INR reaches a conclusion that is different than the rest of the intelligence community, I believe, absolutely, that it would require informing and engaging with this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

One other question. The Bureau of Intelligence and Research's analysis is going to be critical to our understanding as policy-makers and in response to a number of pressing issues, including the apparent attacks on U.S. personnel and the origins of COVID-19.

Do you commit to engaging proactively with the committee as INR's work on these matter advances and to keep us fully informed on your assessments both on these and other critical matters?

Mr. HOLMGREN. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Risch?

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I want to follow up, Mr. Kritenbrink, on the Taiwan issue that was raised by the chairman.

What—I had the same questions he had, and I think all of Congress does, really. But what—from your expertise and your experience in this area, what do you think the end game is here for the—for the Chinese Communist Party as far as Taiwan is concerned? And what do you think the end game is and how do you think they intend to achieve it?

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Well, Mr. Ranking Member, I am reluctant to try to put myself in the shoes of the leadership in Beijing, but they have stated that their long-term goal is reunification.

I think where I believe that we should remain focused and, if confirmed, where I would remain focused as EAP Assistant Secretary would be on meeting our obligations and responsibilities under the Taiwan Relations Act. I am confident that we have the tools to do so.

For example, through the support of this committee and others in Congress, the United States has made available to the authorities on Taiwan more than $30 billion in arms sales since 2009.

I think it is also incumbent upon us to further develop our robust relationship with Taiwan in every sector. They are a top 10 trading partner, which is vitally important. We have important cultural and other relations as well.

They play a very critical important role, we believe, in international health and, therefore, we should support growing Taiwan's international space as well to make sure that they fully participate in organizations where sovereignty is not required and have a meaningful role in those that do.

So I believe, Mr. Ranking Member, that we have the tools to continue to grow this robust partnership with Taiwan and to meet our commitments to ensure that Taiwan can maintain a credible self-defense.

Senator RISCH. I appreciate your thoughts in that regard. All good thoughts. I guess what crosses my mind is that we all know that the Communist Party wants reunification.

We also know that that is not the same view that Taiwan has, and, obviously, where you have two different views that are very much opposed, at some point in time it is going to come to a crossroads and that is what I am concerned about is what happens at that point.

What—how is that resolved?

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Yes, sir, Mr. Ranking Member.

I think the best thing that we can do is to continue to demonstrate our resolve and our commitment to meeting our rock-solid obligations, and I think by doing so I am confident that we can continue to effect the stability across the strait that we have benefited from for many years.

But, Mr. Ranking Member, I would, again, reemphasize we are deeply concerned by the increase in aggression and harassment and coercion that we have seen directed at Taiwan, and we continue—we intend and if I were confirmed I would intend to continue—to show our resolve to, again, meeting our obligations under the Taiwan Relations Act.

Senator RISCH. I appreciate that. There is no doubt that the coercion and harassing and everything else has ratcheted up tremendously to the point, for instance, where Taiwan is having trouble scrambling jets every time that there is an incursion into airspace.

And that is done intentionally, there is no doubt, and that is something that is going to be on our plate, I think, sooner rather than later.

Mr. Holmgren, the matter of the Havana syndrome issue, as you know, has been kicking around for some time and, obviously, we are in an open session and cannot talk about all the details of it.

But I am assuming that you have been involved in that in some fashion. Am I right on that or not?

Mr. HOLMGREN. Thank you, Ranking Chairman. I very much share the concerns about these incidents. I have spoken to some of the victims of these attacks, and I can tell you they are they are suffering and their families are suffering.

And, if confirmed, I would have no higher priority than ensuring the safety and security of U.S. citizens, their families, and U.S. personnel overseas and would commit to ensure that INR is continuing to support the department and the interagency, especially CIA and DOD, with information and analysis around the origins of these incidents. So I believe it is a serious increase.

As a testament, I have committed to asking for a classified briefing, if confirmed, on my first day in office.

Senator RISCH. Well, thank you. This is, certainly a vexing problem and I can tell you it is very high up on the priority of this committee and the Intelligence Committee, particularly since it affects our hard-working people around the world and outside the United States.

Mr. Robinson, the—Afghanistan produced and, I guess, continues to produce about 90 percent of the world's opium, and with us downsizing in Afghanistan, this is going to be the problem that it was before we ratcheted up there. It is going to raise its ugly head again.

What are your thoughts on this?

Mr. ROBINSON. Thank you, Senator, for that question.

I share your concerns, frankly, about the production and distribution of opioids from Afghanistan. We know that they are also interested in, perhaps, trying to get back into government and my—what I would say to the Taliban and to anybody there who is producing narcotics or opioids is that, you know, if you want to be seen as credible and you want to be treated as part of the international community, then you cannot do these things.

The other part of that, though, is while we may be drawing down in Afghanistan, there are programs that INL would wish to continue in that region. The hard part is figuring out how to—how to do that and keep our people safe.

So those are the two—sort of the two priorities we would have. One, you know, making sure that we are continuing programs that would go against, obviously, narcotics trafficking and sending very strong messages to those in government that they also have to commit to fighting against the narcotics trafficking.

But it is also very important if we are going to continue our programs there, and we want to continue our programs there, to make sure that we are taking care of our people and making sure that they can be there safely.

Senator RISCH. Thank you very much.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

I understand that Senator Cardin is with us virtually.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And let me start by thanking all three of our nominees for their prior service to our country and their willingness to serve in these critical positions that they have been appointed to.

I want to talk about the issue of fighting corruption, and, Ambassador Robinson, I must tell you, I think you said it very succinctly in your—in your statement—in your testimony when you said that corruption kills. It also is the fuel for autocrats in fighting democracies and trying to bring our democratic countries down.

Freedom House just recently issued their 2021 report that shows that we have the continuing trend of erosion of democratic states, and one of the principal reasons has been the growth of corruption that fuels this type of activity.

I enjoyed our conversation, but I just really want to drill down a little bit more on specifics. You laid out part of that in your comments to our committee. But I want to just get your assurance that you will work with Congress and leverage both branches of government in fighting corruption.

There is legislation pending in the United States Senate that I have introduced with Republican colleagues, bipartisan legislation that would establish a greater capacity within our missions and

State to understand the circumstances of corruption in each country, to use a rating system similar to what we do in trafficking in persons so that we can have consequences and international standards as to what we expect countries to do to fight corruption.

We have legislation that would establish specific funds so we can respond quickly to opportunities to help countries deal with corruption, and we have the Magnitsky sanctions to make them permanent.

So do I have your assurances that you will work with Congress to strengthen our tools to fight corruption globally?

Mr. ROBINSON. Absolutely, Senator. You have a firm commitment to work with Congress, to use all of the tools that we have in our toolbox to fight corruption, and I will further commit that you will not find a more stronger advocate to fight corruption than me.

It was to my—to my great joy to see the Biden/Harris administration raise corruption to the national security level. I think that that will—that will help us go after official corruption, unofficial corruption, in the region and around the world.

And further, it will give us greater tools to identify crime fighters around the world that we can partner with to fight this—to fight this scourge. There is no doubt corruption undermines democratic institutions around the world, and I know the bread and butter—INL's—one of INL's main jobs is going after those who would—who would take part in corrupt acts.

Senator CARDIN. I would just quote from my friend, Kara-Murza, who is one of the leading opposition leaders in Russia, who says that Putin steals from the Russians to spend it in the West.

So he uses the corrupt resources in order to try to undermine our system, and we have got to speak out against that. The Magnitsky sanctions are, of course, one area at some of these other tools that we are suggesting can help.

I just really want to underscore that we are all sincere about this. But we need the push of Congress to help prioritize within each of the missions countries that have significant problems of corruption to focus on this issue.

So I am going to hold you to your commitment to work with us to strengthen those tools so that we can all fight this a little bit more effectively.

Mr. Kritenbrink, Asia—China, of course, is the most significant country in that region from the point of view of concern about the United States on the erosion of governance.

Their One Road policy is, certainly, based upon using marketing—government-controlled economies and corruption to try to control the economics of the world. The Belt and Road Initiative really needs to be addressed.

Do you—are you committed to working with us to root out the way that it is based in corruption, stealing intellectual property, intimidating countries, so that we can take China on in a more aggressive way?

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Yes, Senator, absolutely. I would—I would simply say that I agree with you wholeheartedly that we need to counter China's Belt and Road Initiative, as it is offered through means of coercion, corruption, lack of transparency, unsustainable debt loads, and the like.

Countries, I think, need to be very careful in signing on to the Belt and Road. But I think even more importantly, Senator, we need to have an affirmative agenda, affirmative programs that we can offer as an alternative, and I am very grateful to you and other members of Congress for giving us those tools, whether it is the BUILD Act or other resources we have at our disposal.

I would also note, Senator, that I was encouraged by the communiqué that came out of the G-7, and it is quite clear to me that our democratic partners around the world see eye to eye with us on this challenge.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you. I look forward to working with you. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator HAGERTY?

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I want to thank each of you for your service.

I would like to start with you, Mr. Robinson, if I might. The issue that I have been deeply concerned about is fentanyl, and the impact on youth in my home state has been significant, particularly so since the borders have collapsed. In late January, we have seen an increase not only in overdoses but in deaths from fentanyl.

And I would like to read a definition to you, if I might, to see if we are on the same page. According to United States law, a weapon of mass destruction is defined as the following. One of these definitions is a weapon that is designed to cause death or serious injury through toxic or poisonous chemicals.

Would you define fentanyl as a weapon of mass destruction under these sort of circumstances?

Mr. ROBINSON. Senator, that is a great question. I do not know if I would define it as a weapon of mass destruction. But I absolutely am heartbroken by what fentanyl is doing to our communities across the United States.

I think—I think that we have a lot of work to do here at home on the demand side. But, more importantly, I think that there is very much we can do in terms of diplomatic engagement to work with our partners in Mexico, to work with our partners in—well, to work with China to stop the flow of precursors to Mexico and stop the distribution from Mexico by narcotic—

Senator HAGERTY. Yes. I was just in Mexico about two weeks ago meeting with their foreign minister and economic minister, and they are deeply concerned at the increase in inflow of fentanyl and its precursors from China coming into Mexico. It is being mixed there, shipped across the borders, and killing our children.

So as a parent, as an American, I very much appreciate your efforts here and I look forward to working with you, should you be confirmed, in pushing back against what I would call a weapon of mass destruction that is being unleashed against our population here.

Thank you.

Mr. ROBINSON. Thank you, sir.

Senator HAGERTY. Ambassador Kritenbrink, it is wonderful to see you again. My regards to Nami and to your two children.

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Thank you.

Senator HAGERTY. Again, thank you for your service at a most challenging time. I think you are the perfect person—

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Thank you.

Senator HAGERTY.—be brought forward for this position. I would like to talk with you about an area that you and I have had plenty of conversations before, and that is—that is the Quad and the Indo-Pacific.

I think that we have made great strides with our allies in the Quad. I think there is a lot more that we can do. I would love to get your perspective on how we might engage other nations in that effort.

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Thank you, Senator, very much for your comments.

I fully agree. I think the Quad is a vitally important mechanism. I was deeply impressed and grateful for the president's hosting of the first ever leaders level Quad summit, and I think it truly has shown that the four Quad democracies in the region have decided to stand together and advance these interests and these values that we share.

But they have also agreed, we have also agreed, to work in very practical areas, and I think, as a career diplomat, I am focused on the ways in which we, together with our partners, can move the needle in the region in practical ways.

So the Quad leaders summit issued a roadmap and a work plan for the rest of the year focused on public health, particularly, combating COVID-19, focusing on climate, but also issues related to technology, and I know you and I have discussed that in detail.

I think—I think we need to focus in those practical ways, but I do agree with you, Senator, it cannot be just the Quad. It has to be all of our like-minded partners, whether it is our treaty allies, whether it is our important friends and partners in ASEAN or across the region.

I think most of the region is united behind the vision of a region that is peaceful, stable, where countries large and small play by the rules, large countries do not bully small countries. I think that is where we need to focus our energy.

Senator HAGERTY. I appreciate your perspective on—

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Senator, the Quad is central.

Senator HAGERTY. Yeah, I appreciate your perspective on that.

I would just like to turn to one more thing and that is the movement of supply chains from China out—you know, companies that are trying to derisk their exposure to China.

Of course, I want every one of those companies to come back to American shores, to see those jobs back in America. But to the extent that those jobs do not come back here, what are the opportunities that we might have with some of our allies in the region to work together for joint economic prosperity, to work together to strengthen our economic ties, and that will bring our national security ties even closer?

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Thank you, Senator.

I fully agree. I think we need to focus on supply chain resiliency, security, to make sure that neither we nor the world are completely dependent upon and vulnerable to one country.

Again, as we do that, the preference, of course, would be to bring most of those home. Where that is not possible, I think ensuring that those supply chains are diversified and resilient and strong is key, particularly, working with like-minded democratic partners, I think, especially in the technology space, especially related to semiconductors, but also, as we discovered in COVID-19, even personal protective equipment and other medical equipment as key.

But I think—when I think about our competition with China, I do think these issues related to our economic competition, particularly related to technology and the resilience of our supply chains, will probably be central to that competition.

And I would be committed to doing everything possible, both within the State Department and across the U.S. Government, to advance—

Senator HAGERTY. Should you be confirmed, I look forward to working with you closely.

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Thank you, Senator.

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you for your service, Ambassador Kritenbrink.

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Thank you, Senator.

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator KAINE?

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thanks to this panel of nominees. I think you are all very highly qualified for these positions. Look forward to supporting you.

Ambassador Kritenbrink, I think I am going to spend my five minutes with you talking about a topic that matters a lot to me, the Chinese persecution of Uighurs in the Xinjiang province.

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Yes.

Senator KAINE. There is a sizable Uighur population in Virginia, and I have talked to many of my constituents as well as just following news about this.

The leadership of Xi Jinping has seen China not only become bolder and more effective in projecting malign influence and power worldwide, but the Government has become more ruthless in many ways—uses of technology, forced sterilization, separation of families, and attempting to reduce and disperse its Uighur Muslim population.

Both Secretaries of State Pompeo and Blinken have indicated that this is a genocide under the technical term, an intentional and very strategic effort, in the words of China's own officials, to, basically, carry out the elimination or reduction of the Uighur population and other Muslim populations in Xinjiang province.

Last week, we had a joint subcommittee hearing in this committee. It was the first joint subcommittee hearing we had had in seven years and it was about China's atrocities in the Xinjiang province.

The chair—the subcommittee I chair on Western Hemisphere, Global Democracy, and Human Rights worked together with the Subcommittee on East Asia, chaired by Senator Markey. Senators Rubio and Romney were very involved in this.

And we heard from a number of witnesses in very powerful ways. One was my constituent, Ms. Rushan Abbas. She spoke very movingly about her sister, Dr. Gulshan Abbas, who has been in detention for three years. Her birthday was last Saturday, her third birthday in prison.

They know she is in prison. They do not know where she is, but they did find out that she was secretly sentenced in a secret trial to a 20-year prison term. She is a physician who had made her career in the Xinjiang province just helping patients.

U.S. efforts, global efforts thus far to combat the terrible atrocity have not been effective. So what more can we do as a committee, as an administration, as a country, to increase pressure on China to end this grim persecution of the Uighur and other Muslim populations in Xinjiang?

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Senator, thank you very much for your comments and your leadership on this issue.

I agree completely with your assessment of the challenge. I had the privilege of viewing most of your hearing last week and I, too, was moved by the testimony, particularly of Ms. Abbas.

The ongoing genocide in Xinjiang shocks the conscience. We estimate more than 1 million Uighurs have been forcibly detained, put into reeducation camps, forced to provide labor, and many other disturbing allegations about how they are being treated.

I think, Senator, working together with this committee, our obligation is to continue to shine a very bright light on this ongoing genocide, and I have been gratified to see that our other partners around the world, whether it is the G-7 or Japanese and Korean partners or our Quad partners as well have all spoken out against the abuses happening there.

But more importantly, Senator, I think we need to continue to take steps using all the tools that the U.S. Government has at its disposal to hold to account the leaders who are carrying out these atrocities.

And if I were confirmed, I would be committed to doing just that. I know that we have used a variety of tools, including Global Magnitsky tools, to sanction a number of the leaders, officials, and entities who are carrying out this repression in Xinjiang, including the Xinjiang party secretary, Chen Quanguo.

And if I were confirmed, Senator, I pledge that we will continue to work not just to shine a bright light on the abuses, but also to take steps to hold those responsible accountable.

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Ambassador.

Two additional items in my last 40 seconds is related to the same topic.

First, a lot of U.S. companies may be directly or indirectly, even unknowingly, facilitating this persecution in Xinjiang through their contacts in the region.

Human Rights Watch had witness before us last week, Dr. Sophie Richardson, who indicated that they have written U.S. companies to get information to try to make sure the companies are aware of the dangers and they, generally, have not gotten responses.

It is my hope that we might work together with you, should you be confirmed, so that a request by the U.S. Government might produce a response from some of these companies.

And then, in addition, we need to work with allies outside the region. China is engaged in a pretty aggressive practice of having Uighurs arrested—

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Yes.

Senator KAINE.—in countries like the UAE and Egypt and Saudi Arabia, allies in the United States, and then deported back to China, and we need to work with our allies to make sure that they do not facilitate the long arm of this gruesome persecution campaign all over the globe.

And I would look forward to working with you on that together as well.

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Yes, sir.

Senator, again, I fully agree with your assessment and your recommendation on both points. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you and members of the committee on both of those issues.

Senator KAINE. Great. Thank you so much.

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Thank you.

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

I understand Senator Young is with us virtually.

Senator YOUNG. Yes, Mr. Chairman. Thank you so much.

Ambassador Robinson, in the midst of this global pandemic, Americans have continued to suffer under the scourge of narcotics trafficking, much of that being trafficked through our southern border.

Despite some public calls for the designation, the Trump administration notably refrained from designating the Mexican drug cartels as a foreign terrorist organization.

As the cartels use kidnapping, execution-style killings, the targeted killing of journalists and politicians, and with the flow of narcotics and violence into the United States continuing unabating it seems clear that the legal standard for this designation of foreign terrorist organization has been met.

But I understand that Mexico may oppose such a designation. If confirmed, Mr. Ambassador, would you consider such a designation?

Mr. ROBINSON. Thank you, Senator, for that—for that question, and I absolutely share your concerns with—about the malign influence of narcotics traffickers and the threats they pose to communities throughout the region.

I think, you know, it is probably worth, you know, looking at. I am not a lawyer so I do not know what the legal definition is.

But there is no doubt that the influence of narcotic traffickers throughout the region is crushing to communities, not just in the United States but in Mexico, in Colombia, and throughout Central America.

And I will, certainly, commit to you that we will use all of the necessary tools to go after these criminal organizations and traffickers.

Senator YOUNG. Well, I thank you for that. Perhaps you could—I understand you are not being—you are not an attorney, and you will want to refer to others' analysis.

I am an attorney. I do not want to overstate my qualifications to make this assessment, and attorneys can disagree.

But it seems to me that the legal definition is, indeed, met as I look at the different pillars that need to be analyzed. Time does not permit me to get into those.

But I also understand that there will be diplomatic considerations that play into this. What secondary effects may undermine the effectiveness of such a designation? This would be diplomatic analysis on your part.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think that is—I think that is a great question. I would—you know, I would have to talk to—you know, should I be confirmed, I would make it my—one of my missions to talk to governments in the region to find out what secondary effects there may be.

I, certainly, do not see why there would be obstacles to using maximum efforts to go after the narcotics traffickers and criminal organizations, and if this is a tool that we could effectively use, I would, certainly, want to engage with the governments in the region and governments globally to see what further we could do to sanction these groups.

Senator YOUNG. Like I said, I will look forward to working with you on that. I am encouraged by what seems to be an aggressive bias for action on this. I expect the Mexicans may indicate a lack of motivation to work with us on other matters if we go this direction.

That can be a concern, and there may be some—an increased migration flow into this country of Mexican nationals fleeing terrorism if the terrorist designation is made.

But with that said, would you commit to working with my office in working through this matter should you be confirmed, sir?

Mr. ROBINSON. Should I be confirmed, absolutely, Senator. I will work with your office.

Senator YOUNG. Okay, thank you. I know our time is winding down. I just wanted to put one other matter, a stake sort of in the ground about my interest in it. Perhaps we can work together, should you be confirmed.

One of the missions of your bureau is to enforce maritime rights and practice law enforcement at sea in the Indo-Pacific region. Admittedly, Ambassador Robinson, this is a mission larger than any single federal agency.

It will involve collaboration and cooperation with the Navy and the Coast Guard and other entities and agencies and individuals.

And given China's predatory actions at sea throughout the Pacific, I would be interested in exploring your priorities for INL's practicing of maritime law enforcement throughout the Pacific, especially in Oceania, and seeing where INL might better coordinate with the Coast Guard, moving forward. I would like to help do anything I can to ensure that INL is successful in this mission.

So thank you for your desire to serve.

Mr. ROBINSON. Thank you, Senator. And I agree, I think that that INL has a fairly good story to tell about cooperation in that region on maritime security.

I know when I was deputy assistant secretary we worked very closely with partner countries, allies in the region, on that issue. We did the same in West Africa.

And so I would be happy to, should I be confirmed, work with your office on this.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Shaheen?

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to each of you for your willingness to be considered for these critical posts at this time.

I would like to begin with you, Ambassador Robinson, because I come from a state that has been very hard hit by the opioid epidemic, and fentanyl has been the killer.

We have one of—have had one of the highest overdose death rates in the country, and so I share the concerns that have been expressed on both sides of the aisle about how we respond to this and I appreciated your comments.

Senator Portman, who is also a member of this committee, and I recently introduced legislation to build the capacity of foreign law enforcement agencies to detect and interdict fentanyl and other synthetic drugs, and also to try and increase collaboration between the United States and foreign countries.

As someone who has worked in this arena in the past, can you tell me if you think there are particular best practices or areas where cooperation has really worked to make a difference to address this issue?

Mr. ROBINSON. Thank you, Senator, and it is a very important point. I just want to emphasize how heartbreaking it is to know—to see the ravages of this drug on American communities and, particularly, communities like your state—in your state.

Actually, INL, working on the—with the interagency, working with our partners in DEA and the Department of Justice, we have been able to do lots of training and capacity building globally, working with like-minded police organizations in countries around the world on training, identifying strategies, you know, making sure they are looking at going after the money and going after governments that participate in these things.

So there is a—there is a whole range of tools that we can use to work with police organizations on these issues, and I would be happy to explore that with your office, should I be confirmed.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, thank you. Perhaps you could look at the legislation that we are introducing and see if there are ways that we can make it more effective and other authorizations or other needs that you might have at INL.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yeah, absolutely, Senator.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Mr. Holmgren, you have been asked about Havana syndrome, and this is something that my office heard about almost immediately after the attacks because I have some constituents who have been affected by it.

And I am still concerned that six months into this new administration that we are still hearing from some of those people who have been affected about the lack of coordination, about the inability to meet with leadership, and particularly at State about the willingness of State to cooperate with the Department of Defense and the red tape that is still involved with getting treatment.

So can you commit to not just trying to get to the bottom of that but to finding out what is causing it and why there is not more, at this point, coordination around how we are responding to this serious concern that is affecting too many employees within the federal government?

Mr. HOLMGREN. Thank you, Senator, for that important question and for your leadership—excuse me—on this issue.

I absolutely commit to understanding if there are ways in how we can improve the interagency coordination process on this and, in particular, what role INR can and should be playing to both support the department but also, as you mentioned, the interagency.

I understand that the NSC has established a coordination cell. I think that is a good—a very good positive development to bring together the different parts of the interagency and that State has now—has a lead, a person responsible for coordinating the State Department's efforts.

And so, if confirmed, I am—I am eager to be involved in that. As I said up front, I have friends and former colleagues from CIA and other places that are affected by this, and so I think it is—I take it as a personal responsibility to address the issue.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, thank you. I really appreciate that.

And I will say to you what I have said to others, that I think one of the challenges with this issue is the classified nature of all of the information, and it makes it very difficult when there is an unwillingness of our State Departments and agencies to share with members of Congress what is going on and also to share with members of the public.

So I would urge you to look at ways in which we can unclassify information that is not going to be harmful so that people really understand what is going on.

Mr. HOLMGREN. Thank you, Senator. I hear your concern and I pledge to do that.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Ambassador Schatz?

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Schatz. I was giving you—I do not know if it is a promotion.

[Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Some would consider it a promotion.

Senator SCHATZ. We can ask Ambassador Hagerty if that is a promotion or not.

The CHAIRMAN. He is here, so I do not know. That may be the answer. I am sorry.

Senator Schatz?

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you all for your service.

Ambassador Kritenbrink, I want to start with Oceania. Secretary Blinken spoke at the Pacific Island Conference of Leaders a week ago.

These kinds of engagements are really meaningful. They underscore our commitment to the region, including helping them to confront COVID and the climate crisis.

Can you just talk about how you will engage in Oceania and your role to ensure that it will be elevated in our Indo-Pacific strategy?

And I think, you know, generally speaking, as we think on this committee, in the broader Senate, in the media, when we think about our Asia Pacific strategy, when we think our Indo-Pacific strategy, everyone is immediately thinking about China and China only.

And it occurs to me that there is a vast ocean full of nations—
Mr. KRITENBRINK. Yes, sir.

Senator SCHATZ.—that we need to reengage with that are our longtime partners and allies and friends, and for both moral reasons and strategic reasons, we need to reengage, and I am wondering if you can comment on that.

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Senator, thank you very much for your comments and for your leadership on these issues.

I fully agree with your assessment. If confirmed, I would be committed to making sure we expand our robust engagement with the countries—with the Pacific Island countries.

I think, Senator, the first issue that you identified is one of the most important. First, we have to show up. We have to demonstrate our commitment by engaging and participating in meetings and organizations like the PIF.

Secondly, Senator, I believe that we need to engage across the board because we have a number of vital national interests that are implicated amongst our Pacific Island friends.

You mentioned climate, of course. Important security issues at play, issues related to illegal and unregulated fishing. Of course, climate change is an existential threat for many of these partners and, of course, COVID-19 is a great challenge across the region.

If I were confirmed, Senator, I would be committed to upping our engagement across the board to advance those interests and to ensure that our strategic competitors like China as well do not take advantage or use their malign influence to advance their interests at the expense of ours or our partners in the Pacific Islands.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you.

Ambassador Robinson, I want to stay on Oceania for the moment. I introduced a bill with Senator Murkowski to elevate all of Oceania in U.S. foreign policy.

One aspect of this bill is to increase our ability to counter the Chinese Government's foreign practices—foreign corrupt practices in Oceania, and much of that work runs through INL.

We have heard, though, that INL does not have the resources to be present in the Oceania region to the extent that you may wish and that they have had to make quote/unquote, “hard choices” about not prioritizing the Pacific Islands.

I was glad, however, to see that the president's budget carves out funding in INL to counter the Chinese Government's global malign influence campaign. But we need to make sure that Oceania is part of that effort.

Can you talk about what you see in Oceania and what we ought to do about it through INL?

Mr. ROBINSON. Thank you, Senator. I think that is a—that is a very important question.

You know, as you have pointed out, most of our focus has been on focusing on the malign influence of China in the region. I suspect I would have to look more closely, but I suspect much of the work we are going to do INL would do in the region, if I am confirmed, would focus on China's malign influence.

But there are—you know, there are other issues in the region that we can—that we can and should focus on, and we spoke about it a little earlier. Working with like-minded partners on maritime safety, for instance, will be key.

And, you know, INL can take a look at issues a little bit outside of our area. We do work on wildlife trafficking. We do work on illegal mining. We do work on illegal fisheries.

And so all of those issues or many of those issues might get us closer to the region and closer to the issues that you are raising.

Senator SCHATZ. Final question. I will make it quick.

You know, I have been working on Lacey Act amendments. I know Senator Merkley and others have prioritized this over the many, many years.

The thing with the Lacey Act is it does not quite get to about half of all of the tropical deforestation, which is the result of illegal deforestation for commercial agriculture.

And so I am wondering if we can work with you and the other relevant federal agencies to get more supply chain transparency and also to dig into the root causes that result in deforestation, clear cutting for agriculture and for commodity development.

The Lacey Act was a very important start, but we are sort of stuck there, and even our partners in the business community who want to do the right thing have great difficulty in terms of the supply chain transparency.

So I think it is time for another round of collective thinking about what is the next iteration of the Lacey Act so that we can actually make sure that we do not just declare that we find illegal deforestation offensive to us and to the globe but that we are actually going to crack down on it, and I am wondering if I can have your commitment to work with us on that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Absolutely, Senator, you have my commitment.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Van Hollen?

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member. Congratulations to all of you on your nominations.

Let me start with you, Ambassador Kritenbrink.

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Yes, sir.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. I was pleased to see the statements made by President Biden and others at the recent NATO summit regarding a more coordinated coherent strategy with respect to China's efforts to use its centralized economic power to export its authoritarian model, and I was pleased to hear your response to Senator Hagerty with respect to the Quad and you also mentioned other allies in the area including, of course, South Korea and others.

One of the important issues that has come up with respect to the situation in the South China Sea is the importance of something many of us have been in favor of for a long time, which is ratifying the Law of the Sea Treaty.

In your opinion, would that be an important step that the United States could take along with the international community to provide clear rules of the road that would benefit not just the United States but others in the region and around the world?

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Senator, thank you very much for your question.

I know that when Secretary Blinken was asked that same question in testimony last week, he stated that he was not yet aware if there was an administrative—administration position, but that he personally supported the ratification and believed it would be helpful.

I think what I would say, Senator, is whatever we can do to reinforce the rules-based international order where countries large and small play by the rules the better.

The great irony, of course, is that even though the United States has not ratified UNCLOS we do abide by it because we believe it represents customary international law.

China, of course, has ratified it and violates it on a daily basis.

Nonetheless, Senator I am—I would be supportive of any action that strengthens our position on maritime issues, including our legal rates.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. So would not it put the United States in a stronger position vis-à-vis China and its violations of the Law of the Sea Treaty if the United States were a party to the agreement?

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Well, I would associate myself with Secretary Blinken's comments on that last week.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. I will take that—I understand. He said he was personally in favor of it and I—

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Thank you, Senator.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. So—

Mr. KRITENBRINK. But can I just underscore? I think you have hit the nail right on the head that we have to advance our interests in supporting the rules-based international order.

Many other things we need to do in the maritime domain as well, but that is a key one. Thank you, sir.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you.

Let me ask you about a piece of legislation that we passed a couple years ago here. It was called the BRINK Act. I authored it together with Senator Toomey, and it was designed to close some of the loopholes in the sanctions that we have imposed on North Korea.

There was a recent U.N. panel of experts report on the implementation of international sanctions against North Korea, and they painted a picture of a very leaky sanctions regime, especially with respect to some goods flowing from China.

They also mentioned key imports, refined petroleum and coal, had surged into North Korea last year. So the BRINK Act establishes a secondary sanctions regime similar to the earlier Iran sanctions regime that helped bring Iran to the table for the JCPOA.

Could you commit to working with us and the Department of Treasury to make sure that we fully apply this law? And what is your current assessment of, you know, the role sanctions can play in putting pressure on the North Korean regime?

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Senator, thank you very much.

If confirmed, I can assure you that I would look forward to working with you and your team on these issues.

As I noted at the outset, the Biden administration—Biden/Harris administration is committed to the denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula, and, if confirmed, I would support an approach that relies both on sanctions enforcement and deterrence as well as a practical calibrated approach open to democracy.

If confirmed, I would be delighted to learn more about the BRINK Act and how we can strengthen the sanctions regime.

But, Senator, I do agree, enforcing the sanctions regime with tools that we have, together with U.N. tools, I think is vitally important to the denuclearization goals that we have.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you. And again, thank all of you for your service.

And Mr. Holmgren, let me just say I think INR is one of those great agencies in the federal government that punches way above its weight.

So I hope you will hold your own within the IC because, in my experience, INR has called it right more than the other agencies, on average.

Mr. HOLMGREN. Thank you, Senator. It is an honor to be nominated to lead INR.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Cruz?

Senator CRUZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Congratulations to each of the three of you.

Mr. Holmgren, let us start with you. If confirmed, you would be the principal intelligence adviser to the secretary and other State Department principals.

You would be charged with driving the intelligence apparatus advising the secretary of state on the risks and the benefits of reentering any nuclear deal with Iran.

I want to ask you about that. One of the most troubling aspects of the catastrophic Obama Iran nuclear deal were the enormous holes in verifying Iranian compliance.

Some of those holes were obvious, such as giving Iran weeks to clean up sites before inspections and functionally prohibiting inspection of military facilities.

Others were less obvious but even more damaging. One side deal forced the IAEA, the United Nations' nuclear watchdog, to prematurely close investigations into past Iranian nuclear weapons work, leaving the scope and the nature of Iran's weapons program unknown.

According to Bloomberg, the Obama administration provided Congress with a classified annex, saying that the deal could still be verified if Iran fully complied and did not cheat.

Today, we know, of course, the deal failed to detect vast portions of Iran's nuclear weapons program. We know it because of daring raids and revelations by our Israeli allies.

We know that between the implementation of the deal in January 26 to May 2018 the IAEA was not aware that Iran was concealing a nuclear weapons archive, nor was the IAEA aware that Iran was contained—had containers at a warehouse called Turqazabad where the IAEA later reportedly discovered traces of man-altered uranium.

The agency subsequently visited three other undisclosed sites and found nuclear material at two of them. The IAEA has never inspected any facility run by the SPND, a military organization employing nuclear weapons scientists, which, until last year, was run by the founder of Iran's nuclear weapons program. That is unknown sites and zero military facilities inspected.

Despite all of this, the Biden administration is rushing to reenter the Iran deal.

Mr. Holmgren, do you support reentering the deal in light of those failures?

Mr. HOLMGREN. Senator Cruz, thank you for that question.

As a former intelligence analyst who focused on the Middle East, I very much appreciate the multi-dimensional threat that Iran poses—their state sponsorship of terrorism, their nuclear ambitions, cyber, human rights violations, and their ballistic missile capabilities.

So I very much appreciate the threat. If confirmed to lead INR, which is part of the intelligence community, my commitment to you and to this entire committee is that we will supply objective information and analysis regarding all of Iran's malign activities to include its compliance with the—with the nuclear requirements as part of the JCPOA even if those conclusions diverge from your policy interests, but especially, because I think it is even more important, if the intelligence community has a different view based on all sorts of information of where policymakers are that we would absolutely provide that information to support the secretary but also other policymakers as well as this committee.

Senator CRUZ. In your assessment, what additional measures would be required to close the loopholes that allowed these failures in the prior deal?

Mr. HOLMGREN. Senator, I am not—I am not privy to—I have not been in government the last few years so I am not privy to the—any classified details and additional measures.

But what I could tell you is that, from an intelligence perspective, I think having an incredibly strong collection and analytic regime focused on Iran's compliance would be—certainly, would be a top priority.

As I mentioned in my opening remarks, I view Iran as one of the top big four threats we face, and so making sure that INR has the resources and the expertise to provide objective analysis would absolutely be a priority for me, sir.

Senator CRUZ. Okay.

And, Mr. Kritenbrink, the Obama administration implemented a policy that forbade our Taiwanese allies from displaying symbols of their sovereignty, whether flags or medals or uniforms, on U.S. soil.

During the Trump administration, I pressed the Trump administration to change that policy to reverse the ban, and they did so.

Unfortunately, after Secretary Blinken came through his confirmation hearing where I asked him about it and he committed to maintaining the policy of allowing Taiwan to display its symbols of sovereignty, subsequently, the Biden State Department reversed that policy and now prohibits our Taiwanese allies from displaying their symbols of sovereignty.

This committee just a few weeks ago took up legislation I had to reverse the new Biden ban and to return to the preexisting policy that allowed Taiwan, like our other allies, to display their symbols of sovereignty.

This committee passed that overwhelmingly. The Senate passed it overwhelmingly in a bipartisan manner. If confirmed, will you restore the previous policy allowing our Taiwanese allies to display their symbols of sovereignty, and if not, why not?

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Senator, thank you very much for the question.

I want to emphasize at the outset, Senator, if confirmed, I would be absolutely committed to growing our robust and vitally important partnership with democratic Taiwan.

I would argue that our partnership with Taiwan is perhaps stronger than it has ever been, from our commitments demonstrated under the Taiwan Relations Act, including $30 billion in arm sales since 2009, to the provision of vaccines, to our close health cooperation to the visit by three members of the Senate in just the last few weeks.

I think we have made clear our commitment to growing that partnership with Taiwan.

Senator, since 1979, for decades now, the United States has followed a set of contact guidelines for our engagement with Taiwan, and my understanding, Senator, is for decades now those guidelines have outlined that during our important engagements with our unofficial—our Taiwan counterparts to advance our unofficial relationship that symbols of sovereignty are not allowed on U.S. Government property.

And those guidelines, as I understand them, Senator, have been in place for decades and were in place for the vast majority of the previous administration as well.

Based on the briefings and discussions that I have had, Senator, the new guidelines that have been enacted under the Biden administration are significantly liberalized. They are explicitly designed to further develop our relationships and our partnership with Taiwan, and they have been welcomed by the Taiwan leadership, including President Tsai herself.

So I can assure you, Senator, that I am committed in every way to growing our partnership with Taiwan and I will hasten to add that, of course, I will always enforce U.S. law.

Senator CRUZ. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Thank you.

Ambassador Robinson, I am going to close up with you, I think, because this will be the last set of questions. I do not want you to think I—you have no—none of my attention. So let me just, briefly, make a statement about Mexico.

I had some deep concerns about Mexico over the last year. In the fall, the United States arrested Mexico's former defense minister on drug trafficking charges. Very literally this case highlighted that Mexican drug trafficking organizations are capable of co-opting individuals at the highest levels of Mexico's Government.

When we released General Cienfuegos, albeit under some rather murky circumstances, the López Obrador government responded by publishing U.S. law enforcement documents, in violation of our mutual legal assistance treaty and then pushing a law to the Mexican Congress that seemed intent on constraining bilateral law enforcement cooperation.

I understand how important the U.S. trade, economic, political, and security relationship is with Mexico and I am fully supportive of efforts to strengthen it.

However, we have to be clear eyed. We cannot ignore evidence about the links between certain members of Mexico security forces and drug traffickers.

So, if confirmed, I trust you will give these issues your full attention?

Mr. ROBINSON. Absolutely, Mr. Chairman.

I share your concerns and look forward, should I be confirmed, to working with the interagency and working with the Congress to addressing and focusing on these issues.

The CHAIRMAN. And one last question for you. We had a very good in-depth discussion so a lot of the issues have been raised.

As I thought, fentanyl and others have been raised. I am increasingly concerned by reports that the Assad regime is earning hard currency in the face of international sanctions and cratering currency and economy by manufacturing and exporting Captagon, a potent and addictive amphetamine, often with the cooperation of Hezbollah.

This drug is being smuggled, often by Hezbollah, across Lebanon's border with Syria and through Lebanon's weak import and export controls to be distributed throughout Europe and the Middle East, prompting bans on Lebanese exports recently that the Lebanese economy can ill afford.

What steps can we take to counter such drug smuggling, including assistance to strengthen the Lebanese border and customs enforcement?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, that is a great question.

INL has a great track record on working with the government of Lebanon on training and capacity building, and we will continue. Should I be confirmed, I would make sure that we would continue to do that.

I would also say that we can work with the interagency—we have been working with the interagency to track these shipments, particularly with DEA, and working with like-minded partners in the region.

We know Saudi Arabia is particularly concerned about this, the trafficking of this drug, and we can continue to work with like-minded partners on this issue.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I just want to highlight it because, of course, we often hear about fentanyl, as we should because it is causing deaths in America. But in this case of this Captagon, you have got a lot of bad players.

You have Hezbollah, you have Assad, and undermining what little is left of the Lebanese economy. That is a bad trifecta, at the end of the day.

So I hope that you will make it one of your priorities upon confirmation.

Mr. ROBINSON. I share your concern, Chairman, and should I be confirmed, we will absolutely track it.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator? All right.

With that, with the thanks of the committee, this record will remain open until tomorrow at the close of business.

There may be questions for the record. We would urge the nominees to answer those questions expeditiously so you can be considered for a business meeting.

And with that, this hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 11:37 a.m., the committee was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. TODD D. ROBINSON BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Central America/Illegal Migration

Question. Given your previous experience in Central America and at INL, can you describe the nexus between transnational criminal organizations and human smuggling/trafficking across Central America and Mexico? What financial benefits would you estimate drug trafficking groups are reaping from the increased flows of illegal migrants arriving at our Southwest border?

Answer. Systemic corruption and impunity contribute to the permissive environments that enable the illicit activities of transnational criminal organizations across Central America and Mexico, some of which are involved in smuggling migrants across countries' borders or are profiting from the exploitation of individuals in sex trafficking or forced labor, including forced criminal activity. I understand corruption, insecurity, and low levels of trust in institutions are among the root causes driving irregular migration in the region, including to the United States, and undermine economic growth and development, weaken the rule of law, and lead to a loss of hope. If confirmed, I will continue to press these governments to take concrete actions to combat corruption and impunity, improve democratic governance, and strengthen the rule of law. Reliable estimates of the ill-gotten financial gains of drug trafficking groups or transnational criminal organizations are hard to confirm, but remain a concern.

Mexico/Illicit Narcotics

Question. What specific actions would you encourage Mexico take to meaningfully tackle transitional criminal activities through its territory, including trafficking of fentanyl and other illicit narcotics?

Answer. INL strengthens Mexico's capacity to reduce the production and trafficking of fentanyl and other illicit drugs. I understand that INL supports Mexico's recent steps to regulate fentanyl precursor chemicals and encourages Mexico to increase and better integrate its investigations into precursor chemical diversion, drug production, and trafficking. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department works to strengthen cooperation on this vital issue through the cabinet-level security dialogue committed to during Vice President Harris' June 8 meeting with Mexican President López Obrador.

Venezuela

Question. Can you describe how the Maduro regime's involvement in transnational criminal activities impacts peace and stability in Colombia?

Answer. Colombia has worked hard to extend effective state presence throughout its national territory, but the Maduro regime's mismanagement and its tolerance of illicit activities and evident lack of interest in controlling such activities within its own borders has made Colombia's task vastly more difficult. The Maduro regime's profit-seeking ties with dissident members of the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia, the Colombian-origin National Liberation Army, and Venezuelan paramilitary groups facilitate illicit activity, public corruption, and graft schemes. These relationships, combined with historically weak government presence at the border between Colombia and Venezuela, have allowed Colombian terrorist groups and narcotraffickers to operate with impunity. Venezuelans and Colombians are the victims of the Maduro regime's inability or unwillingness to provide security within Venezuela and of the predatory behavior of these criminal groups.

Cuba/State Sponsor of Terrorism

Question. Should Cuba be removed from the list of state sponsors of terrorism (SST) while they continue to harbor U.S. fugitives and U.S.-designated Foreign Terrorist Organizations?

Answer. I understand the administration has committed to carefully reviewing decisions made in the prior administration, including the decision to designate Cuba as a State Sponsor of Terrorism.

If confirmed, I look forward to supporting the administration's review of Cuba policy. Our priority in Cuba, as the rest of the Hemisphere, needs to be democracy, human rights, and the rule of law.

Afghanistan

Question. Given the Biden administration's decision to withdraw troops from Afghanistan, how can INL realistically and effectively counter Afghanistan's opium problem or provide oversight of existing counternarcotic programs?

Answer. I understand that most cultivation and production of poppy in Afghanistan occurs in areas under Taliban influence or control, compounding the challenge of implementing effective counternarcotics projects. INL has a constructive working relationship with the Afghan Government and supports specialized counter-drug enforcement units in Afghanistan, such as the National Interdiction Unit and the polygraphed Sensitive Investigative Unit, with enablers including a modern wiretap system and a team of U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration mentors. These units have mounted successful operations in insurgent-held areas. Additionally, INL funds border and customs police to effectively search and profile passengers and cargo at ports of entry, treatment for Afghans suffering from substance use disorders, licit alternatives to poppy for farmers, and capacity building for the Afghan Government. If confirmed, I look forward to continuing to utilize a tiered approach to monitoring existing projects, including third party monitors for end-use monitoring and implementation activities, and multiple organizations to provide assessments and evaluations on INL activities.

Lebanon-Internal Security Forces (ISF)

Question. As Lebanon faces a potential state collapse, please comment on continued assistance to the ISF in Lebanon.

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to prioritize our support to the ISF, a key partner in maintaining peace in Lebanon. Following the August 2020 Port of Beirut explosion, I understand INL increased efforts to provide basic equipment support to the ISF, including PPE as it dealt with the COVID crisis, address internal corruption, and improve internal and external cooperation through cross functional collaboration. This includes human resource automation efforts, which can reduce administrative demands, increase productivity, reduce costs, and provide more transparency and accountability within the ISF. Continued support to the ISF can help mitigate further instability in Lebanon.

West Bank-Palestinian Security Forces (PASF)

Question. Is this an appropriate focus for the PASF without securing concessions on pay to slay? How have Israeli attitudes towards the PASF evolved following recent violence with Hamas and Gaza? USSC has also suggested that PASF should be allowed to attend US military training and schools. Is this an appropriate use of taxpayer dollars given the PASF's non-state status?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure INL delivers its assistance consistent with its authorities and other U.S. laws. The shift in focus reflects improved performance and maturity by the PASF since we began providing assistance in 2007. I understand that INL believes taking this new focus will sustain that trend. The PASF units INL assisted performed well in their daily missions as well as during crises, especially including the latest round of violence, when they had to coordinate with Israeli security forces. The PASF will receive their operational training at their own training centers in Jericho. If confirmed, I will ensure that any decision to send a small selection of well-vetted senior officers to U.S. military institutions is based solely on a commitment to provide them the best leadership training available that will make them better officers and further improve the performance of the PASF.

Libya

Question. How does INL plan to work with the MOI in Libya to re-establish a governmental monopoly on the use of force and reduce the presence of non-state militias and mercenaries?

Answer. A move away from the informal and hybrid relationships that have developed over the past war-torn years will require a combination of different strengths across the Department to address these challenges, particularly with disarmament, demobilization, and deradicalization, and to facilitate the movement towards re-legitimization of criminal justice institutions and law enforcement.

To that end, I understand INL aims to help build the capabilities of legitimate institutions that can provide for civilian security focused on their needs, incorporate the rule of law, and include greater emphasis on appropriate use of force that is compliant with international standards on human rights. INL is developing opportunities with the Ministries of Interior and Justice to return criminal justice facilities previously damaged by the hostilities witnessed in Libya back to Ministry of Justice control and out of the hands of militias.

Tunisia

Question. How does INL plan to work to ensure allegations of police violence and credibility and transparently investigated, and those found responsible held to account? Are there ways in which INL can tailor programming to ensure police officers and unit commanders are held accountable for instances of excessive use of force? What role should Tunisia's police unions play moving forward?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure INL continues to work across the Tunisian criminal justice sector to foster and institutionalize transparency and accountability. INL's law enforcement programming incorporates international best practices, including the use of modern policing techniques, methods of internal accountability, transparency to the public, and citizen-oriented approaches. INL complies with statutory provisions to vet units and individuals for potential gross violations of human rights and encourages the Government to investigate and hold accountable those responsible. The 2014 Tunisian constitution permits internal security forces to unionize; however, it does not define the unions' role beyond the prohibition to strike, and INL does not work with the unions.

Question. Are there specific steps that INL can take to advance security sector reform in Tunisia? What does INL consider to be the most pressing priorities in terms of advancing a wider security sector reform agenda?

Answer. Given security challenges, the need for broad reform, and limited resources, security sector reform in Tunisia has not been linear. Within this dynamic environment, INL designs its programming in Tunisia to address civilian criminal justice sector reform holistically across law enforcement, justice, and corrections. INL prioritizes assistance to the Government of Tunisia to improve core operational capacities and competencies in support of fair, transparent, and independent criminal justice organizations responsive to citizens' needs.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. TODD D. ROBINSON BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Addressing Corruption and Kleptocracy

Question. The Combating Global Corruption Act obliges the Executive to identify corruption in countries and rank them; establishes minimum standards for combating corruption; and evaluates foreign persons engaged in grand corruption for consideration under the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Accountability Act.

- If confirmed, in what ways will you strengthen efforts at the State Department to focus on combating corruption abroad?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work across the department to combat corruption as a top foreign policy priority of the Biden-Harris Administration. The Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs plays a key role in the promotion of internationally recognized standards and commitments to prevent and combat corruption, provides targeted foreign assistance to strengthen criminal justice systems and institutions to both resist and root out corruption abroad, and implements visa restrictions to promote accountability for corrupt actors. I will work to expand these efforts and our partnerships and coordination across the interagency to ensure the range of foreign assistance and diplomatic tools are brought to bear in cultivating strong, transparent institutions to prevent and combat corruption abroad.

Question. Do you see opportunities to improve our whole-of-government approach towards fighting corruption?

Answer. The United States enforces one of the most robust anticorruption frameworks in the world. The President's National Security Study Memorandum on the fight against corruption presents a unique opportunity to further integrate the expertise of U.S. federal agencies into these efforts and create a more expansive and effective whole-of-government response to this complex threat. The Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs maintains deep partnerships across the interagency in support of our shared mission to disrupt and deter transnational organized crime and corruption, both at home and abroad. If confirmed, I will continue to support these vital partnerships, and the State Department's commitment to this Administration priority.

Strengthening the Global Magnitsky Act

Question. The Global Magnitsky Act has proven valuable as a tool that can penalize human rights abusers and corrupt actors without rupturing bilateral relations. The Global Magnitsky Act sunset was removed in the U.S. Innovation and Competition Act of 2021.

- Do you agree that “Magnitsky-like” sanctions are an effective tool for countering human rights abusers and corruption around the world?

Answer. The Global Magnitsky sanctions program is an effective and impactful tool as part of our broader efforts to combat corruption and promote human rights globally. The Global Magnitsky sanctions program, along with other similar tools, such as Section 7031(c) visa restrictions, promotes accountability of corrupt actors and human rights abusers and deters future corruption and human rights abuse abroad.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to robustly implementing the Global Magnitsky Act through high-impact sanctions designations, including by appropriately staffing relevant State Department offices and bureaus?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work across the Department and interagency to use all available tools, including the Global Magnitsky sanctions program, to combat corruption globally. The Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs (INL) has a dedicated team focused on implementing a range of deterrence tools, including supporting implementation of the corruption prong of Global Magnitsky. If confirmed, I will continue to support robust implementation of these tools in conjunction with INL's foreign assistance and diplomatic efforts to disrupt and deter corruption abroad.

Question. If confirmed, would you support the permanent authorization of Global Magnitsky sanctions?

Answer. If confirmed, I would support the permanent authorization of the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Accountability Act. This sanctions program has demonstrated its impact and supports our broader efforts to prevent and combat corruption and protect human rights abroad.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. TODD D. ROBINSON BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Guatemala

Question. Given your extensive background and experience in Central America, most recently as United States Ambassador to Guatemala, you understand the threats these nations are facing—not just from violent transnational criminal organizations, but also from external malign actors like China and Russia, which are trying to gain a foothold in our hemisphere.

- Do you believe that the United States' approach should be to disengage from these governments and cut our assistance to them?

Answer. It is in the U.S. national interest for Central American countries to have strengthened democratic governance, expanded economic opportunity for their citizens, and the capacity to address the security challenges that cause many to flee the region and present direct harms to the United States. U.S. foreign assistance is an essential element of our regional strategy that includes strengthening civil society, promoting transparency and rule of law, combating corruption, and improving respect for human rights. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that our foreign assistance is accompanied by robust U.S. diplomatic engagement and appropriate oversight. President Biden is clear-eyed about the challenge and has insisted governments step up as true partners in creating the conditions for economic opportunity and security, which includes fighting corruption and impunity.

Question. During your time as United States Ambassador to Guatemala, please describe your knowledge, if any, of Russia's involvement in Guatemala's mining sector.

Answer. During my tenure, our embassy kept track of various issues affecting Guatemala's economy, including in the area of energy and mines. If confirmed, I will prioritize countering the malign influence of Russia and other actors in Guatemala and elsewhere as part of our efforts to bolster good governance and combat corruption.

Question. What is your knowledge of the legal issues related to the EXIMBAL nickel mine, owned by Russian interests, and the (then) Canadian-U.S.-owned San Rafael mine?

Answer. According to news reports, the Constitutional Court (CC) initially suspended operations of the EXIMBAL nickel mine in July 2019 for failure to conduct consultations with affected indigenous communities under International Labor Organization convention 169 (ILO 169), confirming the decision again in June 2020. However, the mine, owned by Switzerland-based Solway Investment Group, continued production until February, when the Ministry of Energy and Mining (MEM) suspended the mine's exploitation license to conform with the CC's July 2019 ruling, confirmed again by the CC on March 1.

Operations of the San Rafael mine have been suspended since 2017, also for failure to conduct community consultations in accordance with ILO 169. In 2018, the CC ordered the Guatemalan Government to conduct community consultations prior to reopening the mine.

Question. Can you provide the most recent update on the cases mentioned above?

Answer. I understand that in June, deputies from the political party Unidad Nacional de la Esperanza alleged to the MEM that Fenix mine continues to conduct some operations illegally, despite its ordered suspension. Pre-consultations with local indigenous groups under ILO 169 are scheduled to begin July 15 in Izabal. The pre-consultation process for the San Rafael mine began on May 21 in Santa Rosa. The next meeting is scheduled for June 20.

Question. Can you describe the role played by Gazprombank and VTB Bank, two entities sanctioned by Treasury, in the mining sector in Guatemala?

Answer. I do not have current information about the role played by Gazprombank and VTB in Guatemala's mining sector. On the issue of sanctions, if confirmed, I will prioritize working with colleagues across the interagency to pursue appropriate measures, including visa revocations and sanctions, to promote accountability for corruption.

Question. Are you aware of any evidence that Guatemalan authorities worked with VTB Bank through CICIG?

Answer. No. To my knowledge, CICIG was an independent, U.N.-backed commission that helped Guatemala build capacity and make progress in the fight against corruption during its tenure.

Assistance with Law Enforcement Agencies

Question. If confirmed, will you ensure strict oversight of U.S. support for security forces under the control of the Palestinian Authority and ensure any assistance complies with all U.S. legislative restrictions on these funds?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will ensure strict oversight of U.S. support for security forces under the control of the Palestinian Authority (PA). I will ensure any assistance complies with all U.S. legislative restrictions on these funds. I understand INL provides its assistance through letters of agreement that ensure strict oversight, and conducts end-use monitoring of the materials it supplies to ensure it is accounted for and being used for the purposes it was provided. I understand INL will implement a robust vetting process, including Leahy vetting and vetting through the Department's Risk Analysis and Management Office, to mitigate the risk that U.S. Government resources could benefit terrorist groups or their supporters. If confirmed, I will ensure INL also vets all recipients of PA assistance, including students enrolled in training programs, for suspected terrorist organization affiliation and human rights violations. If the vetting results show any level of doubt, INL will exclude them from the program.

Question. If confirmed, what actions do you intend to take in order to combat Hezbollah?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to continuing our support to Lebanon and exploring ways to adapt our support to address the pressing needs of key partners in the security and judicial sectors such as targeted interventions to improve criminal information collection, analysis, and sharing; build on efforts to eliminate security vacuums that criminals and terrorists exploit by expanding police professionalization efforts; and solidify and sustain anti-crime gains through the delivery of specialized skills. Such support bolsters legitimate institutions in Lebanon and can help counter Hezbollah's malign influence.

Question. What is your position on reports of Hezbollah financing itself with networks involved in the drug trade in Latin America?

Answer. I am concerned about Hezbollah's purported role as a facilitator of the narcotics trade. Financial supporters, facilitators, and sympathizers of Hezbollah operate in the Western Hemisphere, raising funds in support of the organization through a variety of illicit activities, including narcotics trafficking and trade-based money laundering. As a part of INL's broader efforts to combat transnational crime, I understand INL will continue to prioritize anti-money laundering and counter-narcotics programming globally.

Question. What is your view on U.S. cooperation with law enforcement authorities in Ukraine?

Answer. I understand the United States has worked closely with Ukraine's Ministry of Internal Affairs to advance sweeping law enforcement reforms since 2014, starting with the creation of the Patrol Police. The Ministry continues to be a constructive partner on law enforcement reform, to include providing support and development of the Patrol Police in the major cities and rolling out the newly established Territorial Community Police Officer initiative in rural communities throughout Ukraine. The foundation of both reform efforts incorporates the respect for human rights and adopts international best policing practices to ensure officers are trained to be accountable, service-oriented, and transparent. If confirmed, I look forward to continuing this cooperation on advancing meaningful law enforcement reform in Ukraine.

Question. What actions will you take to work with the law enforcement agencies of our partners and allies to prevent the export of products produced with the forced labor of Uyghurs in China?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration is committed to working with partners and allies to address the People's Republic of China (PRC) Government's ongoing atrocities in Xinjiang and will consider and support the use of all appropriate tools to promote accountability for those involved, including import restrictions for goods made with forced labor. If confirmed, I will support Secretary Blinken's call on other governments to take "concrete actions" to ensure no companies or governments provide the PRC with products or services that facilitate repression in Xinjiang or purchase goods from Xinjiang made with forced labor. If confirmed, I will also strengthen our law enforcement partnerships and coordination with allies to ensure we are taking a multilateral approach to stopping the genocide and crimes against humanity in Xinjiang, including by working with the interagency in its efforts to identify and block the import to the United States of goods produced through forced labor.

Question. Please elaborate with specificity on the issues you kept track of with respect to energy and mines during your tenure.

- For example, did you discuss litigation involving the U.S.-based Tahoe Resources' El Esocabal silver mine (Minera San Rafael), owned by Canadian-U.S. interests, with anyone, and if so, with whom? Please detail what was discussed.
- Did you discuss the nickel mine owned by the Russian concern CGN, located in Izabal, known variously as EXIMBAL?

Answer. I had several discussions on this issue with various persons during my time in Guatemala. In fact, for the purposes of advocacy for U.S. business, Tahoe Resources was treated as an American company despite its ownership being largely Canadian. I believe we made this determination after consultation with the Department of Commerce. I know I had at least two (maybe more) meetings with representatives of Tahoe Resources in Guatemala and one in Washington, DC. I discussed the issue with Guatemalan congressional representatives. I discussed the issue with members of Guatemala's court system (both Supreme Court and Constitutional Court). I also discussed the issue with members of Guatemala's executive branch (both the President, the Vice President, and cabinet members). In addition, I discussed the issue with visiting U.S. congressional delegations.

Among the issues discussed were:

1. The possibility of clearing a path for the mine to open or reopen successfully;
2. The value of the mine to the community around the mine and the value of the mine to Guatemala to show it was open for foreign direct investment;
3. The obstacles to full functionality of the mine and the role of a consultative process between the mining company and the local community;
4. The mining company's journey through Guatemala's judicial process.

I do not recall that I ever discussed EXIMBAL. However, that is not to say it was not discussed by other U.S. officials at the embassy. These issues—San Rafael and/or EXIMBAL—would have been largely handled by the Economic Section and/or the Commercial office.

Question. Did you ever meet with any legal representative of either Gazprombank or VTB Bank?

- If so, what dates and how many times?
- Did you discuss Russia's involvement in the mining sector with them, or litigation involving EXIMBAL or Minera San Rafael? If so, please provide details.

Answer. I do not recall that I ever met with any representative of Gazprombank or VTB Bank.

Question. How frequently did you meet with the attorney general of Guatemala?

- In your meetings and conversations, did you discuss Russia's involvement in the mining sector with the attorney general?
- Did you discuss litigation involving Minera San Rafael? If so, when?

Answer. I met formally and informally with the attorney general of Guatemala on a fairly regular basis between 2014-2017. I do not believe the attorney general and I ever discussed Russia's involvement in the mining sector. I also do not believe we discussed litigation involving Minera San Rafael.

Question. How frequently did you meet with members of Guatemala's Constitutional Court?

- In your meetings and conversations, did you discuss Russia's involvement in the mining sector with them?
- Did you discuss litigation involving Minera San Rafael?

Answer. Over the course of my three years in Guatemala, I met with members of the Constitutional Court both formally and informally on a regular basis. Other embassy representatives did as well. Apart from the political upheaval that occurred during that time, we had technical programs with the supreme and constitutional courts involving case tracking systems and equipment to expand the ability of the courts to reach beyond the capital.

I do not believe I discussed Russia's involvement in the mining sector with any court members. The Minera San Rafael issue was discussed as the case wound its way through the Supreme and Constitutional Courts.

Question. Did you meet with any non-governmental organizations involved in court-ordered consultations with respect to the Minera San Rafael to discuss issues related to the mining sector?

Answer. Since I met with several NGOs on numerous topics during my time as Ambassador over four years ago, I do not recall specific conversations with respect to the Minera San Rafael issue. If this issue was discussed, it would have been to understand Tahoe Resources' concerns to see if any agreement could be brokered between the two sides.

Question. What past information did you have with regard to the role played by Gazprombank and VTB in Guatemala's mining sector dating back to your tenure as U.S. Ambassador to Guatemala or as Senior Advisor for Central America in the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs?

Answer. I do not recall that I had any prior knowledge of either Gazprombank or VTB in Guatemala's mining sector. It was not something I was tracking during my time in Guatemala or later in Washington.

Question. Did you meet with any agents of either Gazprombank or VTB bank? If so, how many times? Was CICIG discussed?

Answer. To the best of my recollection, I have never met with any representatives of either bank.

Question. According to testimony from Bill Browder before the CSCE in 2018, VTB Bank—an entity sanctioned by the U.S. Department of Treasury—gained legal status as an “interested party” in a legal case against the Bitkov family. In 2015, a criminal case was opened against the Bitkovs at CICIG's direction. Immediately after, officers raided the Bitkov's home and detained the family.

During your time as Ambassador to Guatemala, were you ever briefed on this issue? If so, when? If so, what was your takeaway when you were in this post?

Answer. To the best of my recollection, I was never briefed on this issue. Any knowledge I had of this issue came from open sources. There were some local newspaper articles on the Bitkovs and I also remember a long in-depth article about their case in either the Atlantic Monthly, Vanity Fair, or the New Yorker magazine. To my knowledge, while I was in Guatemala (2014-17), the State Department was not tracking the Bitkov case beyond the fact that they had been swept up in a larger probe of corruption within the Guatemalan Government.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. TODD D. ROBINSON BY SENATOR TED CRUZ

Question. In recent months the Mexican Government has shifted to a confrontational and in some senses even adversarial approach to the United States, including by undermining the Drug Enforcement Agency's (DEA) capability to operate in Mexico, publishing sensitive information that had been shared by the Department of Justice (DOJ), and maneuvering to ensure the freedom of former Defense Minister Salvador Cienfuegos Zepeda from drug charges. To what degree are you concerned about the status of the U.S.-Mexican relationship in these dimensions?

Answer. U.S.-Mexico security cooperation remains a top national security priority. If confirmed, I look forward to comprehensive conversations with the Mexican Government to deepen our security cooperation and ensure it works for the benefit of the United States and Mexico. I look forward to working to strengthen collaboration through the cabinet-level security dialogue committed to during Vice President Harris' June 8 meeting with Mexican President López Obrador.

Question. What steps will you take to ensure that the Mexican Government understands their recent actions against the DEA are unacceptable and returns to a posture of cooperation?

Answer. Law enforcement cooperation between the United States and Mexico is vital to countering the shared threat of transnational crime. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the Mexican Government to strengthen this cooperation, including through the cabinet-level security dialogue committed to during Vice President Harris's June 8 meeting with Mexican President López Obrador.

Nicaragua

Question. What role, if any, should INL play in regards to the situation in Nicaragua?

Answer. I condemn the Ortega regime's repression of its own people and the clear erosion of democratic norms in Nicaragua. Civil society must be supported to promote accountability for human rights abuses and corruption. INL engages with relevant elements of civil society in Nicaragua—including independent media, human rights, and anticorruption organizations—to address narcotics and criminal threats, improve civic education, and strengthen the rule of law through discreet programs aimed at minimizing the risk to individuals from government persecution. If confirmed, I look forward to continuing these efforts.

Bolivia

Question. How do you plan to engage with the Government of Bolivia on drug production, trafficking, and interdiction?

Answer. I am concerned about drug production and trafficking in Bolivia. Should the Arce administration be interested in partnering with the United States to combat narcotics trafficking and associated criminality, if confirmed, I welcome the opportunity to enhance coordination with Bolivia.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO BRETT M. HOLMGREN BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Directed Energy Attacks/Havana Syndrome

Question. INR plays a role in supporting the U.S. Government's efforts to identify the perpetrator and means of the directed energy attacks against State Department personnel, as well as a key role in providing SFRC with up to date information on all USG investigations into these attacks.

- How is INR contributing to the investigation into these nefarious sonic attacks on our US diplomats?

Answer. My understanding is that INR has provided intelligence support to the Department on the anomalous health incidents since January 2017, and is facilitating the passage of available information and material between relevant elements of the Intelligence Community and the Department. If confirmed, I am committed to getting up to speed quickly on this matter, and I will have no higher priority than supporting the Department and the IC in ensuring the safety of U.S. personnel, their family members, and U.S. citizens overseas.

Question. Will you commit to keeping this committee fully informed as this investigation progresses?

Answer. Yes. Secretary Blinken has committed to working with Congress on this matter. If confirmed, I will also commit to working closely with Congress on this issue and will keep this committee fully informed of the Bureau of Intelligence and Research's assessment of these incidents.

Question. Will you commit to redoubling efforts to identify the culprit? And will you do a survey of the policy issues/regional focus the victims were working on?

Answer. My understanding is that INR is coordinating with multiple agencies to identify the cause and culprit of these incidents, to include understanding where the various incidents occurred. If confirmed, I will make sure INR continues to leverage its deep expertise to assist the Department, the Intelligence Community, and the interagency in protecting all U.S. personnel overseas.

State Department and Membership in the Intelligence Community

Question. INR also plays an important role in supporting the intelligence needs of the Secretary of State, but it also plays a role in the intelligence community (IC). It is imperative that INR maintain its analytical independence from policymakers within the State Department while also best supporting those same policymakers.

- How do you propose to ensure that INR remains in-step with the intelligence community while maintaining an autonomous analytical State Department point of view?

Answer. I believe that constant training and adherence to the Intelligence Community's analytic tradecraft standards, as well as a willingness of leadership to support analysts in speaking truth to power, are at the core of protecting the independence and integrity of INR analysts and Intelligence Community products. INR has a well-earned reputation for deep expertise and analytic independence while still supporting State Department policymakers. If confirmed, I commit to ensuring that INR maintains both its analytic objectivity and quality and timely support to policymakers.

Question. Do you feel that detailees from other IC components would be beneficial for INR? Will you commit to increasing the number of detailees at INR from other IC components to better plug into IC capabilities and improve the connection of intelligence to policy?

Answer. Having served as a detailee when I was in the Intelligence Community (IC), I believe strongly in the value of exposing IC analysts to other departments and agencies and believe that the receiving agencies receive an extraordinary benefit from bringing in outside expertise and perspectives. Such detail assignments can build bridges across the IC and provide useful points of view to both agencies. If confirmed, I am committed to reviewing the status of detailees to INR and will look for ways to strengthen joint duty assignments to benefit both INR and the broader IC.

Question. If confirmed, will you make more resources available to ensure the Department employees have more access to the classified email systems used by other agencies to share and discuss intelligence relevant to policy makers?

Answer. I understand that INR allows appropriately cleared Department personnel to access intelligence reporting and analysis directly through a classified system, which includes an e-mail capability. I believe that we can balance the need to protect sensitive information with the need for access for appropriately cleared Department personnel. If I become aware of sensitive intelligence that Departmental personnel need to see in order to do their jobs, I would advocate for and seek to facilitate that access, consistent with appropriate clearances and the need to protect sensitive sources and methods.

Question. How do you propose to better distribute timely intelligence to regional bureaus? Is there more INR can do to improve communication between INR and the regional bureaus to improve collection guidance?

Answer. I believe INR has a responsibility to help facilitate access to intelligence and analysis by regional bureaus for appropriately cleared personnel. Customer feedback (including from regional bureaus) into collection guidance is also key to improving intelligence support to policy. If confirmed, I will review INR's existing processes for providing intelligence to regional bureaus and for receiving collection requirements and will make improvements, if necessary.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO BRETT M. HOLMGREN BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. If confirmed, what steps will you take to fully uncover the origin of SARS-CoV-2? Do you commit to make this a priority?

Answer. It is vital that we understand the origins of SARS-CoV-2 in order to prevent or minimize the risk of another global pandemic in the future. On May 26, 2021, the President asked the Intelligence Community (IC) to redouble its efforts to collect and analyze information that could bring us closer to a definitive conclusion, and to report back to him in 90 days on the origins of SARS-CoV-2. If confirmed, I am committed to prioritizing INR's efforts to support the IC's work to understand the origins of SARS-CoV-2.

Question. What actions do you believe are important to take to prevent the next pandemic?

Answer. I believe the Intelligence Community, of which INR is a component, has an important warning function to play in evaluating all sources of information and providing assessments that could shed light on an emerging pandemic in the future. If confirmed, I commit to reviewing INR's analytic resources and expertise related to global health security and will ensure that INR provides accurate and timely intelligence to policymakers on such matters moving forward.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO BRETT M. HOLMGREN BY SENATOR TED CRUZ

JCPOA Verification

Question. Under a plan aimed at facilitating the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA), the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) prematurely closed its file on the Possible Military Dimensions (PMDs) of Iran's nuclear program. The decision rendered permanently opaque the scope and nature of Iran's weapons program, and was broadly criticized for foreclosing the possibility of baselining that program—a critical prerequisite to robust monitoring and verification. According to Bloomberg, the Obama administration provided Congress with a classified annex saying that the deal could still be verified if Iran fully complied and didn't cheat.

It has now been confirmed that under the deal, the IAEA failed to detect vast portions of Iran's nuclear weapons program. Between the implementation of the deal in January 2016 to May 2018, the IAEA was not aware that Iran was concealing a nuclear weapons archive. Nor was the IAEA aware that Iran was storing containers at an alleged nuclear warehouse reportedly called Turqzabad, where the IAEA later reportedly discovered traces of man-altered uranium. The agency subsequently visited three other undisclosed sites and found nuclear material at two of them. According to public reports, the IAEA has never inspected any facility run by SPND, a military organization employing nuclear weapon scientists, which until last year was run by the founder of Iran's nuclear weapons program

- Do you support reentering the deal, in light of these failures?

Answer. I believe it is critically important that the Intelligence Community (IC) and the Bureau of Intelligence and Research (INR) focus on the range of threats posed by Iran—from its state sponsorship of terrorism and nuclear ambitions to its development of ballistic missiles. If confirmed in my role as the Assistant Secretary for Intelligence and Research, I will ensure that INR, which is a component of the IC, provides the Secretary of State and other policymakers with the best available intelligence and analysis on Iran to inform policymakers as they assess the best possible options to address Iran's nuclear ambitions.

Question. In your assessment what additional measures would be required to close the loopholes that allowed these failures?

Answer. If confirmed in my role as the Assistant Secretary for Intelligence and Research, I will ensure that the Bureau of Intelligence and Research (INR), which is a component of the Intelligence Community, provides the Secretary of State and other policymakers with the best available intelligence and analysis on Iran to inform policymakers as they assess the best possible options to address Iran's nuclear ambitions. I would also ensure that INR has the resources and expertise to address this threat.

Iran/NPT

Question. As traditionally understood, Article IV of the NPT entitles member states to the benefits of peaceful civil-nuclear technology to the extent that they are members in good standing with the NPT. In the last administration, Special Representative of the President for Nuclear Nonproliferation Jeffrey L. Eberhardt confirmed to the SFRC in writing that "Iran's standing as a non-nuclear-weapon State Party to the NPT cannot be described as 'good.'"

- Do you consider Iran's past possession of the Nuclear Archive seized by Israel, including the materials in the Archive relevant to the development of nuclear weapons, to constitute non-compliance by Iran of its obligations under the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT). If yes, please explain why. If no, please explain why.

Answer. nuclear activities and will ensure that INR provides the best available intelligence and analysis that describes the actions and intentions of Iran to help inform treaty compliance verification.

Question. Do you consider Iran's past concealment of the Nuclear Archive seized by Israel, including the materials in the Archive relevant to the development of nuclear weapons, to constitute non-compliance by Iran of its obligations under the NPT. If yes, please explain why. If no, please explain why.

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that the Bureau of Intelligence and Research (INR) prioritizes analysis focused on Iran's nuclear activities and will ensure that INR provides the best available intelligence and analysis that describes the actions and intentions of Iran to help inform treaty compliance verification.

Question. Do you consider Iran a member in good standing of the NPT? If yes, please explain why. If no, please explain why.

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that the Bureau of Intelligence and Research (INR) prioritizes analysis focused on Iran's nuclear activities and will ensure that INR provides the best available intelligence and analysis that describes the actions and intentions of Iran to help inform treaty compliance verification.

Question. Do you consider Iran to be entitled to benefit from nuclear technology pursuant to Article IV the NPT? If yes, please explain why. If no, please explain why.

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that the Bureau of Intelligence and Research (INR) prioritizes analysis focused on Iran's nuclear activities and will ensure that INR provides the best available intelligence and analysis that describes the actions and intentions of Iran to help inform treaty compliance verification.

Question. Do you consider Iran to be entitled to benefit from nuclear technology for any reason? If yes, please explain why. If no, please explain why.

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that the Bureau of Intelligence and Research (INR) prioritizes analysis focused on Iran's nuclear activities and will ensure that INR provides the best available intelligence and analysis with respect to its use of nuclear technologies.

Iran/UNSCR 2231 snapback

Question. UNSCR 2231 ended a long-standing international arms embargo against Iran, described across the previous six resolutions terminated by paragraph 7(a) of the resolution. After an effort to extend that embargo, the Trump administration took two measures. First, it invoked the "snapback mechanism" described in paragraphs 10-15 of UNSCR 2231, reversing the termination of those resolutions. You and others have publicly suggested that the U.S. was not entitled to invoke that mechanism. Second, the Trump administration implemented EO 13949, "Blocking Property of Certain Persons with Respect to Conventional Arms Activities of Iran," which authorizes sanctions for transfers to and from Iran of arms or related material or military equipment. As a result, the U.S. established a baseline deterrent against major arms sales to Iran. Multi-billion dollar arms agreements publicly described and anticipated by Russia, China, and Iran did not occur.

However, in February 2021, the Biden administration rescinded that decision. In June, it was revealed that Iran had dispatched two warships believed to be carrying arms intended for transfer to Caracas. The Biden administration declared it would take "appropriate measures" to counter this "threat."

- What measures does the administration believe it has to counter the reported shipment of arms to Venezuela by Iranian warships?

Answer. I have never publicly suggested that the United States was not entitled to invoke the "snapback mechanism." If confirmed in my role as the Assistant Secretary for Intelligence and Research, I will ensure that the Bureau of Intelligence and Research (INR), which is a component of the Intelligence Community, provides the Secretary of State and other policymakers with the best available intelligence and analysis on Iran to inform policymakers as they assess the best possible options to address Iran's nuclear ambitions. I would also ensure that INR has the resources and expertise to address this threat.

According to press reports on June 17, 2021, the Iranian ships believed to be headed towards Venezuela recently changed course and are currently headed towards the coast of Africa.

Question. Do you agree with the decision to rescind invoking the snapback mechanism?

Answer. If confirmed in my role as the Assistant Secretary for Intelligence and Research, I will ensure that the Bureau of Intelligence and Research (INR), which is a component of the Intelligence Community, provides the Secretary of State and other policymakers with the best available intelligence and analysis on Iran to inform policymakers as they assess the best possible options to address Iran's nuclear ambitions. I would also ensure that INR has the resources and expertise to address this threat.

Question. Do you believe that Russia would be in violation of any UNSCR if Russia sold advanced weapons to Iran? If so, which ones?

Answer. I believe it is vitally important for the Intelligence Community and the Bureau of Intelligence and Research (INR) to focus on destabilizing activities and cooperation between Iran and Russia. If confirmed, I will ensure that INR prioritizes analysis focused on Iran's destabilizing activities and cooperation with Russia and will ensure that INR provides the best available intelligence and analysis that describes the actions and intentions of Iran and Russia to help inform treaty compliance verification.

Question. Do you believe that Russia would be in violation of any UNSCR if Russia purchased advanced weapons from Iran? If so, which ones?

Answer. I believe it is vitally important for the Intelligence Community and the Bureau of Intelligence and Research (INR) to focus on destabilizing activities and cooperation between Iran and Russia. If confirmed, I will ensure that INR prioritizes analysis focused on Iran's destabilizing activities and will ensure that INR provides the best available intelligence and analysis that describes the actions and intentions of Iran and Russia to help inform treaty compliance verification.

Question. Do you believe that China would be in violation of any UNSCR if China sold advanced weapons to Iran? If so, which ones?

Answer. I believe it is vitally important for the Intelligence Community and the Bureau of Intelligence and Research (INR) to focus on destabilizing activities and cooperation between Iran and China. If confirmed, I will ensure that INR prioritizes analysis focused on Iran's destabilizing activities and will ensure that INR provides the best available intelligence and analysis that describes the actions and intentions of Iran and China to help inform treaty compliance verification.

Question. Do you believe that China would be in violation of any UNSCR if China purchased advanced weapons from Iran? If so, which ones?

Answer. I believe it is vitally important for the Intelligence Community and the Bureau of Intelligence and Research (INR) to focus on destabilizing activities and cooperation between Iran and China. If confirmed, I will ensure that INR prioritizes analysis focused on Iran's destabilizing activities and will ensure that INR provides the best available intelligence and analysis that describes the actions and intentions of Iran and China to help inform treaty compliance verification.

Question. Do you believe that Iran would be in violation of any UNSCR if Iran conducted any activity related to ballistic missiles designed to be capable of delivering nuclear weapons, including launches using such ballistic missile technology?

Answer. I believe it is critically important for the Intelligence Community and the Bureau of Intelligence and Research (INR) to focus on Iran's ballistic missile program and nuclear ambitions. If confirmed, I will ensure that INR prioritizes analysis focused on Iran's ballistic missile program and nuclear ambitions and will ensure that INR provides the best available intelligence and analysis that describes the actions and intentions of Iran to help inform treaty compliance verification.

Question. Do you believe that Iran would be in violation of any UNSCR if Iran conducted any activity related to ballistic missiles capable of delivering nuclear weapons, including launches using such ballistic missile technology?

Answer. I believe it is critically important for the Intelligence Community and the Bureau of Intelligence and Research (INR) to focus on Iran's ballistic missile program and nuclear ambitions. If confirmed, I will ensure that INR prioritizes analysis focused on Iran's ballistic missile program and nuclear ambitions and will ensure that INR provides the best available intelligence and analysis that describes the actions and intentions of Iran to help inform treaty compliance verification.

EO 14034

Question. On June 11, the Biden Administration published in the Federal Register Executive Order 14034, which revoked Executive Order 13942 of August 6, 2020 (Addressing the Threat Posed by TikTok, and Taking Additional Steps To Address the National Emergency With Respect to the Information and Communications Technology and Services Supply Chain), Executive Order 13943 of August 6, 2020 (Addressing the Threat Posed by WeChat, and Taking Additional Steps To Address the National Emergency With Respect to the Information and Communications Technology and Services Supply Chain), and Executive Order 13971 of January 5, 2021 (Addressing the Threat Posed by Applications and Other Software Developed or Controlled by Chinese Companies). Those three EOs had restricted applications controlled by Chinese companies. According to EO 13971, “[b]y accessing personal electronic devices such as smartphones, tablets, and computers, Chinese connected software applications can access and capture vast swaths of information from users, including sensitive personally identifiable information and private information. This data collection threatens to provide the Government of the People’s Republic of China (PRC) and the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) with access to Americans’ personal and proprietary information—which would permit China to track the locations of Federal employees and contractors, and build dossiers of personal information.”

- Please assess the potential intelligence risks associated with these applications including the risk to State Department personnel and their families overseas.

Answer. Since I have not been in government for the last five years, I am not privy to any classified assessments or intelligence that has informed this administration's or the last administration's executive orders. However, I take seriously the threat posed by the use of Chinese-developed software, hardware, firmware or Chinese-operated communication networks, and I believe it is vitally important that U.S. departments and agencies conduct threat and risk assessments of any and all foreign-owned—especially Chinese—software, firmware and hardware to minimize the risk posed to U.S. government employees and their family members.

If confirmed, I will ensure that INR provides the best available intelligence and analysis to help inform policy decisions about what steps to take to minimize the Chinese counterintelligence risk to State Department personnel and their families.

State Department

Question. The Obama administration was broadly criticized, especially in the context of its Middle East policy, for co-mingling unclassified documents with classified documents. This practice requires that documents be placed in a secure location, unnecessarily limiting access to unclassified documents and stifling public debate. The Biden administration already seems to be repeating such practices: according to an exchange during the State Department press briefing on February 11, a notification describing the lifting of terrorism sanctions on Iran-controlled terrorists in Yemen was unnecessarily transmitted to a Congressional SCIF.

- Can you commit to ensuring that unclassified information is not unnecessarily comingled with classified information in notifications provided by the State Department to Congress? If not, why not?

Answer. I have a deep and sincere commitment to transparency and Congressional oversight of intelligence activities. If confirmed, I am committed to working to ensure that information provided to Congress is, to the fullest extent possible, in a format that facilitates its access by authorized personnel, while complying with Executive Order 13526, the Department of State classification guide, and the executive branch rules on the handling and storage of classified information.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. DANIEL J. KRITENBRINK BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

North Korea

Question. If confirmed, how would you recommend that the Biden administration approach North Korea?

Answer. Our goal remains the complete denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula. Our policy toward the DPRK will not focus on achieving a grand bargain, nor will it rely on strategic patience. Instead, the United States will take a calibrated, practical approach that is open to, and seeks to establish diplomacy with, the DPRK to make progress that increases the security of the United States, our allies, and our deployed forces. At the same time, the United States will continue to implement sanctions and work with our partners and allies to promote the full implementation of U.N. Security Council resolutions. The United States will continue to consult closely with the Republic of Korea, Japan, and other allies and partners at every step of the way. If confirmed, I will work to support the administration's approach as we work toward this goal.

Question. What is the pathway to denuclearization and a stable, peaceful and prosperous Korean Peninsula?

Answer. The United States will pursue diplomacy and dialogue, based on previous commitments such as those in the 2018 Panmunjom Declaration and Singapore Joint Statement, while continuing to implement U.S. sanctions and working with partners and allies to promote implementation of U.N. Security Council resolutions. This will be essential to achieve the complete denuclearization of and a permanent peace on the Korean Peninsula. The United States will take a calibrated, practical approach to make progress that increases the security of the United States, our allies and our deployed forces. The United States has and will continue to consult closely with the Republic of Korea, Japan, and other partners as we pursue complete denuclearization and a stable, peaceful and prosperous Korean Peninsula. If confirmed, I will work to support that objective and advance our diplomacy to that end.

Question. What does success with North Korea look like?

Answer. Our goal remains the complete denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula. The United States will take a calibrated, practical approach that is open to and seeks to establish diplomacy with the DPRK to make progress that increases the security of the United States, our allies and our deployed forces. This will be essential to achieve the complete denuclearization of and a permanent peace on the Korean Peninsula. If confirmed, I will work to achieve that goal.

Burma

Question. If confirmed, what are the first three steps that you would recommend to the Secretary to reset our policy towards Burma?

Answer. If confirmed, first, I will continue to use all tools available to exert pressure on the junta and deny the regime international credibility. I will encourage the international community to do the same in order to restrict the junta's access to financial institutions and enhance scrutiny of any financial ties to or transactions with the military. I will further strengthen our robust engagement within the U.S. interagency to identify ways to exert pressure on the military regime, including financial pressure applied both bilaterally and multilaterally. Second, if confirmed, I would work to continue to support Burma's pro-democracy movement, including the "National Unity Government" (NUG), various ethnic and religious groups, and others working peacefully to restore Burma's democratic transition. The United States will continue to encourage our partners, allies, and other members of the international community to engage representatives of the pro-democracy movement, including in international organizations and major international events. Third, if confirmed, I will continue to promote human rights, justice, and protections for members of Burmese civil society and all people from Burma, and encourage other countries to adopt programs similar to the Temporary Protective Status (TPS) extended to people from Burma in the United States in March for 18 months. In sum, if confirmed, I will utilize every tool and opportunity available to the United States and the international community to expose the junta's horrific brutality, deny the junta credibility, promote accountability, and support the human rights and aspirations of the people of Burma, who yearn for democracy and do not want to live another day under military rule.

South China Sea

Question. I welcomed the Trump administration's clarification of our legal position on China's unlawful claims in the South China Sea. But, as you know, international law is not self-enforcing, and having now taken this position, it is critical that we make our legal position a reality, not just rhetoric.

- What does the Biden administration intend to do to implement this new approach? What consultations are you planning with partners and allies on how to forge a unified approach to the South China Sea?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration has reaffirmed the July 2020 policy statement on the U.S. position on maritime claims in the South China Sea and regularly consults with partners and allies to support international law in this crucial waterway. The United States has made clear that we stand with Southeast Asian claimant states in resisting Chinese intimidation. The administration is committed to using all of the tools at its disposal—diplomatic, military, economic, and informational—to uphold a free and open South China Sea. If confirmed, I would support U.S. efforts across each of these domains.

Freedom of navigation and adherence to international law in the South China Sea are vital interests for the entire international community. As a result of U.S. diplomatic efforts with allies and partners in Asia and beyond, we have seen a greater willingness by countries to underscore the importance of making and pursuing maritime claims in accordance with international law. Ten nations, including the United States, have formally protested China's unlawful maritime claims through the United Nations. An increasing number of countries are also demonstrating their commitment to freedom of navigation through transits, presence operations, and working with Southeast Asian claimants to strengthen their maritime domain awareness and law enforcement capacity. If confirmed, I would support the many U.S. programs designed to build our partners' maritime capacity. Moreover, if confirmed, I would also support the activities of the U.S. military, including freedom of navigation operations and presence operations, designed to demonstrate that U.S. forces will fly, sail, and operate anywhere that international law allows.

Hong Kong

Question. How can the United States—working with our partners in the international community—be effective in exercising leverage to support the people of Hong Kong?

Answer. If confirmed, I will stand united with our allies and partners in speaking out for human rights and fundamental freedoms, promoting accountability for the PRC's assault on Hong Kong's autonomy, and seeking to support people in Hong Kong. I will strengthen coordination with allies and partners on joint actions and messaging, recognizing that a multilateral approach will have the greatest effect in promoting accountability and stopping Beijing's erosion of Hong Kong's autonomy.

Together with partners and allies, I will continue to demonstrate the depth of international concern about Hong Kong and the strength of international support for Hong Kongers.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. DANIEL J. KRITENBRINK BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Indo-Pacific Strategy

Question. What should our main goals be in the short-, medium-, and long-term be in the Indo-Pacific? What are the areas in which the State Department can strengthen its role in pursuing these goals?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration is committed to a free and open Indo-Pacific region. If confirmed, to achieve this, I will work to revitalize ties with our allies and partners; prevail in our strategic competition with China; reduce the threat posed by North Korea's nuclear and missile programs; support inclusive economic policies that benefit all Americans; promote democratic resilience and respect for human rights; and address global priorities, particularly combating COVID-19 and the climate crisis. Investing in our capabilities and working with allies and partners, including in regional organizations, will be critically important to prevailing in our strategic competition with China and in defending the international rules-based order, its foundational values, and international law. If confirmed, I pledge to work closely with Congress in advancing these priorities.

Question. In terms of specific regional initiatives, what aspects of the Trump administration's Indo-Pacific strategy will be retained; what will be changed; and what will be discarded?

Answer. The Trump administration recognized that the United States has deep and enduring interests in the Indo-Pacific. The Indo-Pacific region accounts for half the world's population and two-thirds of global economic growth, and it sits on the front lines of our strategic competition with China. To protect U.S. interests in this important region, if confirmed, I will deepen ties with our allies and partners, including regional organizations, and promote the values we share, including the rules-based international order and freedom of the seas and skies, prosperity, good governance, and human rights. I will work to prevail in our strategic competition with China while countering PRC attempts to erode the international rules-based order. The United States will remain focused on enhancing U.S. economic engagement in the region, including on infrastructure, clean energy, and the digital economy. If confirmed, I will also work together with partners to address shared challenges such as transnational crime, climate change, pandemic recovery, global health security, and the threat posed by the DPRK's nuclear program.

Vaccines for the Indo-Pacific

Question. Several Indo-Pacific countries, such as the Philippines—a U.S. treaty ally—have purchased U.S. vaccines directly from U.S. companies. Do you believe the United States should lift export controls on its vaccines so that these countries can secure the supplies they have purchased? Do you believe U.S. allies and partners should receive priority for delivery of vaccines purchased?

Answer. The administration's top priority is saving lives and ending the pandemic. The COVID-19 pandemic is a global challenge that requires a global response, and we have not imposed any bans on the export of vaccines or vaccine inputs. If confirmed, I will work with the rest of the U.S. Government to facilitate access to vaccines to countries in need. We are working with partners to increase vaccine manufacturing and distribution, as well as to respond to country requests. Our principles for sharing U.S. vaccines include achieving broad global coverage and responding to surges and other urgent situations and public health needs, while being responsive to country requests. The administration considered public health criteria, including the potential impact of the donated doses in reducing the global burden, incidence, and severity of COVID-19 and limiting the emergence and spread of SARS-CoV-2 variants of concern. We also considered factors such as the effect on U.S. national and economic security and recipient countries' access to other sources of vaccines.

Question. Which countries would you consider to be priority countries for U.S. vaccines in the Indo-Pacific? What is the country-by-country breakdown of the vaccine donations that the Biden administration has already announced in the Indo-Pacific, whether through COVAX or through bilateral donations?

Answer. On June 3, the administration announced that the United States will share at least three-quarters of its first 25 million donated vaccine doses (approximately 19 million) through COVAX. Of these doses, approximately seven million will go to the Indo-Pacific: India, Nepal, Bangladesh, Pakistan, Sri Lanka, Afghanistan, Maldives, Malaysia, Philippines, Vietnam, Indonesia, Thailand, Laos, Papua New Guinea, Taiwan, and the Pacific Islands. Of the remaining 25 percent of the 25 million vaccine doses (approximately six million) to be shared directly, the Republic of Korea has received one million Johnson & Johnson doses. Our principles for sharing U.S. vaccines include achieving broad global coverage and responding to surges and other urgent situations and public health needs, while responding to country requests. We also considered factors such as the effect on U.S. national and economic security and recipient countries' access to other sources of vaccines. If confirmed, I commit to making combating the COVID-19 pandemic and strengthening global health security in the region a top priority.

Question. With regard to U.S.-purchased vaccines: Your answer indicates that the United States has not imposed any sort of export restrictions with respect to U.S. manufactured COVID-19 vaccines. Does this mean the administration has no restrictions—including de facto restrictions—on U.S. companies delivering vaccines purchased via a commercial contract? Please explain.

Answer. The United States has not imposed any bans on the export of vaccines or vaccine inputs. The United States is committed to using all available tools, including the Defense Production Act (DPA), to expand domestic vaccine manufacturing and ensure that all Americans can be vaccinated quickly, effectively, and equitably. But these actions are not export prohibitions, and manufacturers in the United States are free to export such products so long as they first fulfill the terms of their contracts with the U.S. Government. What we're all dealing with here is a global shortage of materials—that's a very different issue and separate from the DPA. Pfizer and Moderna are now exporting doses abroad and we have already lifted the DPA priority ratings for AstraZeneca, Novavax, and Sanofi.

Question. With regard to U.S.-donated vaccines: The United States is also buying up vaccine stocks and donating them to other nations. Are our donations being prioritized over commercial orders? If so, how are we prioritizing those donations (including for countries seeking vaccines commercially and through COVAX simultaneously)?

Answer. On the 500 million Pfizer doses, thanks to our work scaling up Pfizer's manufacturing, they will be able to deliver on these 500 million doses without relying on the Defense Production Act. The world is embarking on an unprecedented vaccine production effort and there is more production demand than can be supplied at this time. At the same time, the United States Government orders make up a small part of the demand on supply, and the manufacturing companies are making the allocation decisions.

Our work on a vaccine supply strategy is guided by a three-part approach. First, having successfully secured enough vaccine supply for Americans, we are donating surplus U.S. vaccine supply and encouraging other countries with surplus supplies to do the same. We will continue to donate additional vaccine doses across the coming months as supply becomes available—but we know that won't be sufficient. So, second, we are working with U.S. vaccine manufacturers to significantly increase vaccine supply for the rest of the world. And third, we are working with our partners, investment entities, pharmaceutical companies and other manufacturers to create the kind of global vaccine production and manufacturing capacity and capabilities that can not only help the world beat this pandemic, but also help prepare the world to respond to potential future threats.

Question. Please provide a country-by-country breakdown of vaccine donations to the Indo-Pacific as stated in the question. Of all the donations announced, how many doses will each country receive (and when)?

Answer. On June 4, 1.1 million doses of the J&J vaccine arrived in the Republic of Korea. On June 20, 2.5 million doses of the Moderna vaccine arrived in Taiwan. We are in active conversations with potential recipient countries about needs, absorptive capacity, and national vaccine plans, as well as logistics and legal considerations, and that will in part determine allocation and distribution plans. As we do so, we will work through logistics like coordinating with country health ministries and organizations like UNICEF and the World Health Organization, as appropriate. Our immediate goal is to get doses on the ground as quickly as possible—but again, this is a complex logistics operation. We will continue to work to keep you all updated as these doses land in country.

On June 21, the Biden-Harris administration announced plans to allocate the remaining 55 million doses towards the commitment to donate 80 million doses by the end of June, including: Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Cambodia, India, Indonesia, Laos, Malaysia, Maldives, Nepal, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Sri Lanka, Taiwan, Thailand, Vietnam, and the Pacific Islands. We continue to work with the White House and the interagency to facilitate access to these doses.

COVID Origins

Question. Do you support a thorough investigation by the U.S. Government into the origins of COVID-19? Do you commit, if confirmed, that EAP will prioritize this issue and contribute to any State Department or interagency processes? Will you commit that EAP will not prevent the release of findings or outcomes of the investigation that could potentially strain our relationship with China?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration has made clear it supports a robust and transparent investigation into the origins of the COVID-19 pandemic. The administration has called for a second phase of the World Health Organization's investigation into COVID-19 that must take place in China and have full access to all information on the origins of the virus. An impartial public health investigation into the origins and early spread of any novel outbreak is vital to protecting against future health security threats. It is imperative to have transparency on the early events of the pandemic and determine how COVID-19 spread so future emergence events with pandemic potential can be averted. The Biden-Harris administration has committed to continuing to review all available information about the origins of COVID-19, and President Biden has requested the U.S. intelligence community redouble their efforts to collect and analyze information relevant to the origins of the virus, report back on their analysis and their recommendations for areas of further inquiry that may be required, including specific questions for the PRC. If confirmed, I commit to ensuring EAP continues supporting these efforts to identify the origins of the pandemic and will share relevant information with Congress as appropriate.

Biosecurity Issues

Question. Do you believe that the U.S. Department of State has a role to play in determining whether the United States conducts, funds, or engages in research and development or other cooperation on gain-of-function research or other potentially high-risk research related to pathogens, viruses, or toxins? From your perspective, what role should EAP play in cases where these concerns relate to Indo-Pacific countries within EAP's purview?

Answer. The Department of State participates in the interagency processes, led by the National Security Council and the White House Office of Science and Technology Policy, that address oversight policies for research that might pose particular concerns. These policies require careful consideration of risks and benefits, and where appropriate, measures to mitigate risks. Subject to these policies, decisions about the funding of specific research proposals are made by the responsible funding agency. If confirmed, I will work with other State Department bureaus and the interagency to make sure that EAP provides any necessary information in a timely manner to make informed decisions in the best interest of the United States.

Question. Should the United States conduct, fund, or engage in research and development or other cooperation on gain-of-function research or other potentially risky research related to pathogens, viruses, or toxins with countries where we have concerns about any or all of the following: (1) biosecurity standards, (2) violations of the International Health Regulations, (3) intellectual property theft of vaccines or health-related technology, or (4) compliance with the Biological Weapons Convention?

Answer. Factors that bear on the risk of accident, misuse, or misappropriation should be taken fully into consideration in considering whether to conduct, fund, or engage in such research. Federal funding and oversight policies help guide these decisions for research that might pose particular concerns. These policies require careful consideration of risks and benefits, and where appropriate, measures to mitigate risks. If confirmed, I will work with other State Department bureaus and the interagency to make sure that EAP provides any necessary information in a timely manner to make informed decisions in the best interest of the United States.

Question. What is the benefit to the United States and to global health more broadly of providing to China innovative intellectual property related to vaccines?

Answer. Incentives for innovation, including the protection of intellectual property (IP), are crucial to support innovative new treatments against COVID-19 and other devastating diseases. The United States supports voluntary licensing agreements on mutually agreed terms and opposes forced technology transfer. The administration believes strongly in IP protections and the importance of safeguarding U.S. innovation from illicit acquisition. The decision to support a waiver of IP protections for COVID-19 vaccines reflects the extraordinary circumstances of this pandemic. We are committed to working with other WTO members and will be clear-eyed about potential risks as we enter text-based negotiations. These negotiations will take time given the consensus-based nature of the WTO and the complexity of the issues involved. If confirmed, I will make it a priority to support efforts to combat the COVID-19 pandemic and strengthen global health security in the region.

Defense Issues

Question. Do you believe that extended deterrence is foundational to U.S. strategy in the Indo-Pacific region? Will you commit that you will advocate against policies, whether declaratory policy or otherwise, that erode or dilute U.S. extended deterrence commitments?

Answer. Yes. Extended deterrence is foundational to U.S. strategy in the Indo-Pacific region. If confirmed, I commit to advance policies that strengthen our extended deterrence commitments to our allies and partners.

Question. In your experience, how would U.S. treaty allies react to major change in U.S. declaratory policy with respect to nuclear weapons, such as the declaration of a sole purpose doctrine? What impact would declaration of a sole-purpose doctrine have on U.S. extended deterrence commitments in the region, and therefore overall stability and security in the region?

Answer. The United States is committed to maintaining a strong, credible deterrent to defend the United States and our allies, while also taking steps to reduce the role of nuclear weapons. Extended deterrence in the Indo-Pacific region plays a critical role in advancing U.S. national security interests, including providing assurance to allies and promoting nonproliferation. If confirmed, I commit to advance policies that strengthen our extended deterrence commitments to our allies and partners. If confirmed, I will also consult closely with our allies and with Congress as we review the vital role the U.S. nuclear arsenal plays in extended deterrence.

Question. Will you prioritize the issue of overseas basing by the People's Liberation Army, as raised by Deputy Secretary Sherman on her recent trip to Cambodia?

Answer. I have serious concerns about the PRC's military presence and construction of facilities at Ream Naval Base on the Gulf of Thailand. During her recent trip to Cambodia, Deputy Secretary Sherman sought clarifications on the demolition of two U.S.-funded buildings at Ream without notification or explanation and observed that a PRC military base in Cambodia would undermine its sovereignty, threaten regional security, and negatively impact U.S.-Cambodia relations. Maintaining an independent and balanced foreign policy is in the best interests of the Cambodian people. If confirmed, I will make this a priority issue.

Question. Is the status of the Philippines and Thailand as States Parties to the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons consistent with their treaty alliances with the United States?

Answer. U.S. alliances with the Philippines and Thailand are forged in common experiences and shared values, and they serve as an anchor for peace and security across the Indo-Pacific region. The United States remains fully committed to these deep and abiding alliances. If confirmed, I will consistently convey current U.S. policy to oppose the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons, which does nothing to address pressing proliferation and security challenges.

Question. How can the United States expedite providing advanced and critical capabilities to Indo-Pacific treaty allies and other key partners? Do you commit to prioritizing expediting such capabilities to regional allies and partners?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to working closely with the Bureau of Political-Military Affairs and Congress to ensure Indo-Pacific treaty allies and key partners are receiving the advanced and critical defense and security capabilities necessary for their national security and to advance the U.S. national interest in peace and stability of the region.

Each year, the United States provides hundreds of millions of dollars in security assistance and cooperation to critical allies and partners to advance our foreign and national security goals for the region. This assistance provides training, equipment, and assets to security partners across the Indo-Pacific region.

The United States arms export regime ensures close allies and partners have access to advanced capabilities, provided they have a track record of protecting the technology, respecting human rights, and using the equipment for its intended purpose. The State Department Bureau of Political-Military Affairs continually reviews exports available for important Indo-Pacific allies.

Economic Engagement

Question. What role can the State Department play in expanding U.S. economic engagement in Southeast Asia? What are the current obstacles to U.S. commercial activity in that part of the region?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with partners and allies to address Southeast Asia's most pressing economic needs: access to expertise and capital to help build the infrastructure, energy, and digital foundation to allow these countries to grow their economies. Through major economic initiatives like the Infrastructure Transaction and Assistance Network, Asia Enhancing Development and Growth through Energy, and the Digital Connectivity and Cybersecurity Partnership, the State Department and our interagency partners are providing technical assistance, commercial advocacy, and financing for projects. We will also continue to engage through APEC, ASEAN's economic track, and further deepen our commercial engagement through events like the annual Indo-Pacific Business Forum to underscore the U.S. commitment to the region's economic growth. If confirmed, I will also ensure that our diplomats in the region fight for every job and the interests of American workers by insisting on market access and fair treatment, stopping intellectual property theft and currency manipulation, and combating corruption.

Question. Do you commit to robust support of the Infrastructure Transaction and Assistance Network? Will you prioritize coordination and cooperation with the interagency on deployment of U.S. Government tools to support infrastructure abroad?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to prioritizing coordination and cooperation with the interagency to promote quality infrastructure development in the Indo-Pacific region. The Infrastructure Transaction and Assistance Network plays a key role in providing the technical assistance, advocacy, and financing tools necessary for the region's growth. I commit to continuing the program's efforts to promote transparent, private-sector infrastructure investments in the region.

Energy Policy

Question. The Biden administration has taken multiple steps to prevent the United States from engaging with other countries on coal, oil, and natural gas. This includes disallowing the U.S. International Development Finance Corporation from financing fossil fuel development projects. In the Indo-Pacific, nations like Vietnam and Indonesia are still heavily reliant on coal and gas and are not in an economic position to switch to other alternative fuels quickly. In the absence of U.S. engagement or engagement from other partners like Japan, what alternatives will Southeast Asian countries have in satisfying growing energy demands? Is it in the U.S. interest, for example, for these countries to become reliant on coal from China, which is building and financing coal plants all over the world?

Answer. The Indo-Pacific presents concurrent challenges of rapidly growing energy demand coupled with reliance on unsustainable fossil fuels, aging infrastructure, and outdated market mechanisms to deliver energy requirements. U.S. engagement to address these challenges, while simultaneously reducing greenhouse gas emissions, will focus on bolstering partners' energy security, supporting sustainable development goals, and implementing decarbonization strategies.

If confirmed, I will work with other State Department bureaus as well as with the U.S. International Development Finance Corporation—and through the Asia Enhancing Development and Growth through Energy (EDGE) program and the Infrastructure Transaction and Assistance Network (ITAN)—to support countries' improved energy efficiency, the deployment of renewable energy infrastructure and technologies, and financing for projects in the Indo-Pacific region.

Counter PRC Malign Influence Fund

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to conduct oversight of how funds are appropriated to the Countering PRC Malign Influence Fund (originally called the Countering Chinese Influence Fund) and how they are used by the Department? Do you commit that these funds will only be directed to projects and initiatives that have a direct nexus to malign influence from China? Do you commit that you will take steps to ensure this fund will not be pulled from to support efforts unrelated or tangentially related to China that the Department wants to fund for advancing other priorities?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the Deputy Secretary and other senior leaders in the Department and at USAID to engage in a full review of the CCIF to ensure the funds are used strategically in a manner that advances U.S. economic, diplomatic, military, and technological leadership in our strategic competition with China and in support of a stable and open international system. The PRC's use of coercive and corrupting tools of influence to undermine and interfere in countries are a major concern for the United States and our partners around the world. I support the CCIF's overall goals and objectives, including efforts to increase transparency and accountability associated with the Belt and Road Initiative.

International Organizations and Human Rights

Question. If confirmed, how will you work to ensure that the Government of Thailand respects freedom of expression and internet freedom?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to prioritize human rights in our relationship with Thailand, including on freedom of expression and Internet freedom. I believe that free and open access to, and the free exchange of, information and ideas, including through the Internet, is fundamental to democracy and important to all people. I will urge the Royal Thai Government to respect the rights of those who exercise their freedom of expression and to protect human rights across the board, consistent with Thailand's international obligations and commitments.

China Human Rights

Question. If confirmed, how will you work to pressure the Government of China to respect the rights of minority groups, in particular the Uyghurs, Turkic Muslims, Tibetans?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration is committed to putting democratic values at the center of our foreign policy and to standing up for democracy, human rights, and human dignity. If confirmed, I will work with partner and allies to address our shared concerns regarding the human rights situation in the People's Republic of China, and will consider all appropriate tools to promote accountability for those responsible for abuses.

Hong Kong

Question. As the Chinese Communist Party has increased its repression of the people of Hong Kong, how will you work to promote freedom of speech and expression?

Answer. The State Department will consider all available tools to promote freedom of speech and expression, including public diplomacy and statements, joint messaging with like-minded partners, the imposition of sanctions and visa restrictions, and the use of the Hong Kong Policy Act to underscore that Hong Kong is no longer autonomous. If confirmed, I will proactively support these efforts.

Trafficking in Persons

Question. In last year's State Department Trafficking in Persons Report, Singapore was ranked as a Tier 1 country after spending 10 years on Tier 2. Singapore has made significant strides in identification and protection of victims, partnering with NGOs and foreign governments to develop trainings for police and civil society, as well as building trafficking shelters.

In last year's State Department Trafficking in Persons Report, Singapore was ranked as a Tier 1 country after spending 10 years on Tier 2. Singapore has made significant strides in identification and protection of victims, partnering with NGOs and foreign governments to develop trainings for police and civil society, as well as building trafficking shelters.

- If confirmed, what steps will you take to work with Singapore and like-minded stakeholders to capitalize on this success?

Answer. Singapore has taken steps to curb human trafficking, including through adoption of the 2014 Prevention of Human Trafficking Act, which criminalizes all forms of human trafficking. The State Department works closely with the Singapore Interagency Task Force on Trafficking in Persons and Singaporean civil society to address this challenge. If confirmed, I pledge to continue working closely with Singapore on anti-trafficking efforts.

Question. How can we use Singapore as a model for the region to support victims and eventually eradicate human trafficking?

Answer. The State Department believes Singapore's efforts can offer a positive example in combating trafficking in persons for other countries in the region. After spending ten years as a Tier 2 country, Singapore ranked Tier 1 in the 2020 Trafficking in Persons Report for the first time since 2006. Singapore has demonstrated serious efforts in prosecuting labor trafficking, as well as with the identification and protection of victims. Singapore has also partnered with foreign governments to offer victim identification trainings for its officials. The Government is also taking steps to prevent trafficking within its large migrant worker population by introducing new measures to decrease the risk of indebtedness for foreign workers. If confirmed, I will make combating trafficking in persons a priority, and will look for ways to use the Singapore experience as an example for other countries to study in making progress on these issues.

Human Rights Regionally

Question. The ongoing COVID-19 pandemic has exacerbated an already precarious human rights situation across Southeast Asia. Authoritarian governments have used COVID-19 restrictions as a facade to further squash dissent, protestors, online expression and discussion, as well as other practices of human rights. If confirmed, what are your priorities for protection of human rights regionally?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work across the interagency to promote human rights in the region and hold accountable perpetrators of violations and abuse. At the center of our whole-of-government efforts for a free and open Indo-Pacific is building the capacity of our partners to promote civil society, rule of law, transparency, and good governance across the region. I will prioritize addressing systemic challenges that enable malign influence, including the atrocities against Uyghurs and other minority groups in Xinjiang, as well as repression in Tibet; a further crackdown on freedom online; attacks against Burmese protesters; the assault on freedoms in Hong Kong; and the targeting of activists and journalists in places like Cambodia and Malaysia.

Question. How will you work with other stakeholders at the department, interagency, and on the ground regionally to combat the growing encroachment on human rights by authoritarian governments?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with our partners within the State Department, including the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor, as well as interagency partners such as USAID, Treasury, and DoJ, to promote anti-corruption and fiscal transparency, democracy assistance, youth and emerging leader development, media and internet freedom, and to protect fundamental freedoms and human rights for all in the region. I will also work with likeminded governments, civil society, and private sector partners to support and empower human rights defenders and civil society organizations.

Burma

Question. It has been roughly four and a half months since the violent military coup in Burma, endangering thousands and threatening ending democracy in country. Since the coup, we have seen thousands of arbitrary arrests, detentions, and a severe crackdown on human rights. If confirmed, how will you engage with the relevant stakeholders to support human rights defenders in country and work to return Burma to a civilian-led rule?

Answer. If confirmed, I will utilize every tool and opportunity to expose the junta's horrific brutality, promote accountability, and support the aspirations of the people of Burma, including ethnic and religious communities, who yearn for democracy and do not want to live another day under military rule. The United States will continue to support Burma's pro-democracy movement, including the "National Unity Government" (NUG), various ethnic and religious communities, and others working peacefully to restore Burma's democratic transition. In addition, the United States will continue to encourage our partners, allies, and other members of the international community to engage representatives of the pro-democracy movement, including in international organizations and major international events.

The United States has also engaged the pro-democracy movement, including the NUG, at high levels, and has encouraged other countries to do so as well, which has served to further empower and support human rights defenders in the country. If confirmed, I will make it a top priority to support the Burmese people and work to return Burma to the democratic path chosen by its people.

Question. The plight of the Rohingya must also not be forgotten. I am deeply concerned about the potential forced return of Rohingya refugees from Bangladesh to Burma, which constitutes a violation of international law. What steps will you take alongside the bureaus of Population, Refugees, and Migration (PRM) and Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor (DRL), and alongside our international partners to support the already robust United States Government (USG) response to the Rohingya refugee crisis?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to promote justice and accountability for the atrocities and other abuses the military has committed against the people of Burma, and humanitarian assistance for all vulnerable communities in and from Burma, including Rohingya. The United States will continue providing this life-saving humanitarian assistance, including through ongoing coordination with international partners.

In addition to urging the military to restore the democratically elected government, release all those unjustly detained, and end violence, I will ensure achieving justice and accountability for atrocities against Rohingya remains pivotal to our policy. The United States continues to support the voluntary, safe, dignified, and sustainable return of Rohingya refugees and internally displaced persons, when conditions allow.

During his confirmation hearing, Secretary Blinken promised a comprehensive review of military atrocities against Rohingya. If confirmed, I intend to support that process and secure international support for any determination made by the Secretary.

Vietnam

Question. The Communist Party of Vietnam (CPV) bore witness or committed significant human rights abuses during the reporting period for the State Department's 2020 Human Rights Report, including torture, arbitrary killings, serious restrictions on free expression, the press, and the internet, significant corruption, trafficking in persons, as well as substantial interference with the freedom of assembly and association. If confirmed, please describe your action plan for engaging with the CPV regarding the improvement of human rights in country.

Answer. I am concerned about the human rights situation in Vietnam, and if confirmed, I would be committed to pushing for improvements. Despite progress in some areas, including labor rights, the trend of escalating harassment, unjust arrests and convictions, and increasingly harsh prison sentences of journalists and activists for peacefully exercising their right to express their opinions is deeply troubling. Vietnam is an extremely important partner in the Indo-Pacific region, but that partnership will reach its fullest potential only when the Vietnamese Government improves its human rights record.

If confirmed, I will work with the Government of Vietnam to improve its implementation of its human rights obligations and commitments. I will urge the Government of Vietnam to encourage law enforcement and the judicial system to effectively and fairly enforce existing constitutional guarantees and laws protecting human rights, including freedom of religion or belief. I will continue to raise our concerns with the Government of Vietnam, including during the annual U.S.-Vietnam Human Rights Dialogue, and call on Vietnam to respect and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, consistent with its international obligations and commitments.

Repatriation of Foreign Terrorist Fighters

Question. There are around 10,000 ISIS fighters housed at various detention facilities around the world. This includes at least 2,000 Foreign Terrorist Fighters (FTF) that U.S. Central Command (CENTCOM) characterizes as "hardcore foreign terrorist fighters." Many of these FTFs are housed at Internally Displaced Persons (IDP) camps, like al Hol in northeastern Syria. The al-Hol IDP camp has become fertile ground for ISIS recruitment of vulnerable populations, posing a serious risk to global security. Despite this risk, countries with foreign terrorist fighters have failed to make any progress to date towards repatriating their nationals.

- Can you commit to working with countries in the East Asia Pacific region to help mitigate the threat posed by FTFs including through increased support to humanitarian agencies providing assistance to vulnerable IDP populations?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to working with countries in the East Asia Pacific region to help mitigate the threat posed by FTFs, including through encouraging increased support to humanitarian agencies providing assistance to vulnerable IDP populations. I will also urge partners to provide additional support to vulnerable IDP populations within Syria. The U.S. Government strongly believes that repatriations—followed by appropriate prosecution of the FTFs in domestic courts of law—is the best way to keep these fighters off the battlefield and hold them accountable for their crimes. The United States regularly engages in diplomatic discussions with our local partners (including the Syrian Democratic Forces) and foreign allies on this dire issue. We have and will continue to work through ASEAN fora to address FTF issues and capacity building for the ASEAN Humanitarian Centre for disaster management.

Question. How do you plan to engage with EAP countries to advance repatriation efforts of their nationals, which remains a critical to ensure the enduring defeat of ISIS?

Answer. The U.N. has expressed serious concern at the deteriorating security and humanitarian situation at al-Hol and Roj camps in northeast Syria, and is urging all member states to repatriate their citizens without delay. If confirmed, I will urge partner nations to repatriate their citizens without delay. We continue to strongly encourage countries to take back their citizens from Syria and Iraq. The United States believes that repatriations, followed by a.) prosecution of FTFs would be the best way to keep fighters off the battlefield and address security threats; and b.) rehabilitation and reintegration of associated family members are the best ways to end the humanitarian crisis in al-Hol and Roj IDP camps.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. DANIEL J. KRITENBRINK BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. In your engagements with Beijing, will you require meaningful progress as a precondition for further rounds of dialogue?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support the administration's approach to work with China when it is in our national interest to do, conducting practical, results-oriented diplomacy that will require meaningful progress from Beijing.

Question. Do you commit to raise issues that Beijing deems "sensitive"—such as human rights, Taiwan, Hong Kong, Tibet, and the Uyghurs—regardless of whether doing so may affect the CCP's willingness to engage in further dialogue?

Answer. Yes. The Biden-Harris administration is committed to putting democratic values at the center of our foreign policy and to standing up for democracy, human rights, and human dignity. If confirmed, I will always be willing to speak out on behalf of our values.

Question. As you know, the CCP has failed to uphold many of its agreements with the United States. Xi Jinping told President Obama that Beijing would not use its intelligence services to steal intellectual property for commercial gain. Xi made the same promise to President Trump in 2017 and 2018, but this theft has not stopped. Xi promised President Obama that China would not militarize the South China Sea. And in Hong Kong, Beijing has violated its commitments under the Sino-British Joint Declaration and the Basic Law.

- Can you name a single bilateral agreement between the United States and the PRC that Beijing has honored in full and without later reneging?

Answer. China's failure to uphold past international commitments is a significant factor in how we will develop our approach to China. If confirmed, I will support the administration's approach of remaining clear-eyed and keeping these past shortcomings in mind as we deal with Beijing.

Question. Do you believe that the CCP can be trusted to uphold any of its commitments, including those pertaining to climate change?

Answer. I believe the United States must judge Beijing by its actions, not its words, and work with allies and partners to impose costs on China when it violates international norms and agreements. We know that addressing the climate crisis will require significant additional action by China. As such, we will continue to press Beijing to raise its climate ambition significantly during this critical decade. At the end of the day, we will consider what Beijing actually does—not what it says it will or won't do—to determine whether the PRC is serious about climate action.

Question. How will you ensure that Beijing fulfills its climate change commitments given its record of broken promises?

Answer. We know the climate crisis will not get addressed successfully without significant additional action by China. The Paris Agreement sets forth a robust transparency framework, under which Parties, including China, will need to report and be reviewed with respect to their greenhouse gas emissions and the extent to which they implement and achieve their respective nationally determined contributions. The United States will continue to press Beijing to raise its climate ambition significantly, including to update and implement existing Paris Agreement targets as ambitiously as possible. If confirmed, I would consider what Beijing actually does—not what it says it will or won't do—to determine whether the PRC is serious about climate action.

Question. Do you believe that the Chinese Communist Party's united front and intelligence activities inside the borders of the United States, and those of our allies and partners, challenge the integrity of our policymaking? Why and how should we address this problem?

Answer. It is important that we bring greater transparency to bear on PRC influence activities in the United States and abroad. China's use of information operations and other coercive and corrupting efforts to undermine and interfere in democracies poses a threat to the United States and our allies and partners. If confirmed, I will push back on Beijing's attempts to write the rules of the information age by working with allies and likeminded partners to support an affirmative, democratic vision for the global information space, while building resilience against these threats and exposing China's influence activity. I would also work to educate important U.S. constituencies, including state and local governments, on these threats.

Question. If confirmed, will you maintain the requirements that PRC diplomats report certain categories of meetings to the U.S. Government, including meetings with educational institutions and Chinese community groups?

Answer. It is important that there is transparency in China's influence activities in the United States. If confirmed, I commit to review this policy carefully.

Question. If confirmed, will you maintain the prior administration's designation of multiple Chinese media outlets as foreign missions, as well as its visa restrictions on PRC reporters (who frequently act as intelligence gatherers as much as reporters)? Are you prepared to explain and defend the difference between these PRC media outlets and a genuine free press?

Answer. It is important that there is transparency in China's influence activities in the United States. If confirmed, I will always be prepared to explain and defend the difference between China's state-run media outlets and a genuine free press.

Question. If confirmed, will you maintain the prior administration's policy of denying visas to certain classes of PRC-national researchers, including those who have concealed their affiliation with the People's Liberation Army?

Answer. National security is the State Department's top priority when adjudicating visa applications. It is a critical U.S. interest to make sure that we protect the technology and intellectual property that is produced in this country and that, if used to advance the PRC's military modernization, could undermine our security. We must likewise guard against efforts by visa applicants to unlawfully conceal information in the course of the visa application process and, where appropriate, take legal action. If confirmed, I will review the tools available to address these challenges, including visa policy.

Chinese Influence Operations

Question. If confirmed, how do you plan to support Australia, and other victims of PRC economic coercion and United Front activities, to build resistance to the CCP's political influence inside their countries?

Answer. If confirmed, I would not leave Australia and other allies and partners alone in the face of PRC economic coercion and United Front activities. We will face down these threats from a position of collective strength. I will work with the Global Engagement Center (GEC) to counter PRC propaganda and disinformation, including through programs that identify and expose the PRC's malign influence tactics and techniques and puncture Beijing's false narratives. I will also support continued coordination and cooperation through the counter disinformation working group with Australia, announced at Australia-United States Ministerial Consultations (AUSMIN) last year. U.S. and other foreign firms have also faced economic coercion such as boycotts and other pressure tactics for challenging PRC preferred narratives. If confirmed, I will work to align our actions with those of democratic and like-minded partners to counter these threats and to advance bilateral and multilateral efforts that build resilience abroad to PRC covert, coercive, and corrupt activities. Efforts to diversify supply chains, support increased trade between like-minded partners, and encourage best practices to screen potentially threatening investments will help to build resilience and reduce the impact of PRC coercion.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to ensuring that human rights concerns are integrated into every senior bilateral engagement, and that specific prisoner cases are raised at the highest levels, both publicly and privately?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration is committed to putting democratic values at the center of our foreign policy and to standing up for democracy, human rights, and human dignity. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that human rights issues are integrated into bilateral engagements with the People's Republic of China at all levels. This requires not only general statements but also raising specific cases, both publicly and privately, as appropriate.

Question. Do you see the link between China's pervasive, egregious human rights abuses, and its failure on so many other fronts to be a responsible global actor?

Answer. I am alarmed by human rights violations and abuses in China and call on PRC authorities to respect the human rights and fundamental freedoms to which their citizens are entitled, consistent with China's international obligations and commitments. If confirmed, I will work to continue holding accountable PRC authorities responsible for abuse, while also countering PRC attempts to erode the international rules-based order.

Question. What are the appropriate tools for holding the PRC and its officials accountable for its atrocities against Uyghurs and other Muslims in Xinjiang? If confirmed, do you commit to using such tools in a timely fashion?

Answer. The People's Republic of China (PRC) is committing crimes against humanity and genocide in Xinjiang against Uyghurs, who are predominantly Muslim, and members of other ethnic and religious minority groups. If confirmed, I will consider all appropriate tools to promote accountability for those responsible and deter future abuses, to include but not limited to, actions already implemented by the U.S. Government: visa restrictions, import restrictions, export restrictions, and financial sanctions.

Question. What actions can the U.S. take to address the issue of forced labor in Xinjiang, including to protect against retaliatory actions from China?

Answer. The U.S. Government has condemned the People's Republic of China (PRC) Government's retaliatory actions against individuals, businesses, and organizations that stand up for human rights. If confirmed, I will consider all appropriate tools to promote accountability for PRC Government actors and entities responsible for the atrocities and human rights abuses in Xinjiang, including forced labor, and work with interagency partners to address PRC actions. I also commit to working with the like-minded countries and the private sector to counter economic retaliation against companies when they take actions to avoid complicity in PRC human rights and forced labor abuses.

Question. How can the U.S. best provide support to civil society actors in Muslim-majority countries who are conducting advocacy on this issue?

Answer. If confirmed, I will commit to working with partners and allies, civil society, advocates, and other groups around the world to address our shared concerns over the PRC Government's atrocities in Xinjiang.

Question. Will you work to ensure that discussions over arbitrary mass detention and forced labor in Xinjiang are integrated into trade discussions?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration is committed to putting democratic values at the center of our foreign policy and to standing up for democracy, human rights, and human dignity. If confirmed, I will work to ensure we continue integrating our Xinjiang concerns into bilateral engagements with the People's Republic of China at all levels.

Question. If confirmed, what actions will you take to work with countries hosting Uyghur communities to ensure they do not summarily deport Uyghurs to China?

Answer. The PRC Government's atrocities in Xinjiang raise serious refoulement concerns. If confirmed, I will work with other governments to ensure that Uyghurs, who are predominantly Muslim, and members of other ethnic and religious minority groups that have escaped repression in Xinjiang are not forcibly returned to China.

Question. Do you believe the United States can and should use its diplomatic and economic leverage to protect Uyghurs from unjust deportation from other countries back to China?

Answer. If confirmed, I will consider all available tools to ensure that Uyghurs and other vulnerable individuals are not forcibly returned to China.

Question. Do you believe that the CCP is engaged in a deliberate campaign of cultural erasure against Tibetans, whose civilization is distinct from that of China and boasts its own rich language, literature, religion, and culture?

Answer. The PRC Government has deliberately suppressed the distinct cultural, linguistic, and religious identity of Tibetans. If confirmed, I will make addressing these abuses a priority.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to convey clearly to Beijing the United States position that we will not accept a Chinese-controlled process to select the next Dalai Lama?

Answer. The PRC Government should have no role in the succession process of the Dalai Lama or any other Tibetan Buddhist lama. If confirmed, I will call on the PRC to respect the religious freedom of Tibetans, including by ending its interference in the selection, education, and veneration of Tibetan Buddhist religious leaders.

Question. If the Chinese authorities attempt to force a politically chosen successor on the Tibetan people, will you commit to impose serious sanctions in response?

Answer. If confirmed, I will consider the use of all appropriate tools, including financial sanctions and visa restrictions, to promote accountability for PRC officials responsible for abusing the religious freedom of Tibetans, including by interfering in the succession process of the Dalai Lama, consistent with the Tibetan Policy and Support Act of 2020.

Question. Would you, if confirmed, personally commit to pressing the PRC leadership to address Tibetan concerns through the resumption of dialogue with the Dalai Lama, or his representatives, without preconditions?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with our allies and partners to press Beijing to return to direct dialogue with the Dalai Lama or his representatives, without preconditions, to achieve meaningful autonomy for Tibetans.

Question. Will you commit to regularly raise the case of the Panchen Lama and press for his release?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to engaging the PRC Government on the case of the Panchen Lama.

Question. Will you ensure that no U.S. official meets with, or provides a public platform to, the individual that Beijing appointed in his place?

Answer. The PRC Government should have absolutely no role in the succession process of the Dalai Lama. If confirmed, I will work to ensure all U.S. engagements reflect this position.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to direct our diplomatic missions in the region, including in Hong Kong, to do their utmost to assist Hong Kongers who fear political persecution under the National Security Law, and use all consular options, including Special Public Benefit Parole, to provide safe harbor?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that our diplomatic missions in the region, including Hong Kong, will continue to do their utmost to assist Hong Kongers who fear persecution, to include working to pursue all options, as appropriate, to provide avenues for those who seek to depart.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to ensuring that the State Department maintains a high degree of pressure on Beijing for its violations of Hong Kong's autonomy and prioritizes this issue above all other competing interests in Hong Kong?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure the State Department will continue to put pressure on PRC and Hong Kong officials responsible for undermining Hong Kong's high degree of autonomy as promised in the Sino-British Joint Declaration and Basic Law. Maintaining Hong Kong's high degree of autonomy is a central focus of our policy toward Hong Kong.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to appoint only senior officers as Consul General who are strongly committed to the democratization of Hong Kong?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with State Department leadership and human resources to identify suitable candidates for Consul General who will carry out the Department's policy of advocating for Hong Kong's high degree of autonomy, promote fundamental freedoms and human rights, and build support for international pressure on the PRC to meet its obligations under the Sino-British Joint Declaration.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to advocate on behalf of Hong Kong protesters who are imprisoned for violations of the so-called National Security Law, or for similar politically motivated charges, both in your private conversations with Hong Kong and PRC central government officials, as well as in public diplomacy?

Answer. If confirmed, I will advocate by any available means on behalf of Hong Kong people imprisoned on politically motivated charges. We continue to stand with the people of Hong Kong and for their human rights, and fundamental freedoms.

I will ensure that we continue to support the aspirations of people in Hong Kong and for the system and rights that the PRC promised them.

Question. Did you agree with former Secretary Pompeo's decision to decertify Hong Kong as sufficiently autonomous to warrant special treatment under U.S. law?

Answer. On March 31, in conjunction with the Hong Kong Policy Act Report, Secretary Blinken again certified to Congress that Hong Kong does not warrant differential treatment under U.S. law in the same manner as U.S. laws were applied to Hong Kong before July 1, 1997. If confirmed, I am committed to continuing to work with Congress and our allies and partners around the world to stand with people in Hong Kong against the PRC's egregious policies and actions that undermine the autonomy and freedoms promised in the Sino—British Joint Declaration and Hong Kong's own Basic Law.

Question. If confirmed, will you use decertification and all other available means to deny legitimacy to the government of the Hong Kong Special Administration Region until the fundamental freedoms guaranteed under Basic Law are restored?

Answer. The State Department has a variety of policy tools available to deny credibility to the government of Hong Kong, including the Hong Kong Policy Act, under which we certified again this year that Hong Kong is no longer autonomous. In addition, under Executive Order 13936, the Department has authority to impose sanctions on Hong Kong and People's Republic of China (PRC) officials in connection with efforts to undermine Hong Kong's autonomy. The Hong Kong Autonomy Act also authorizes sanctions on foreign persons that materially contribute to the failure of the PRC to meet its obligations under the Sino-British Joint Declaration or Hong Kong's Basic Law, as well as on foreign financial institutions that knowingly engage in significant transactions with such persons. If confirmed, I will continue to evaluate all available tools and use them as necessary to pressure the Government.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to robust efforts to increase Taiwan's international space and to counter Beijing's attempts to isolate Taiwan in international organizations and beyond?

Answer. Yes. The Biden-Harris administration's support for Taiwan is rock-solid. If confirmed, I plan to continue to deepen our ties with Taiwan in the face of PRC efforts to constrain its international space and to support Taiwan's membership or meaningful participation in international organizations.

Question. If President Biden follows through with his campaign promise to assemble a summit of democracies, will you ensure that Taiwan is invited to participate and at the same level as other participants?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support President Biden's commitment to host a Summit for Democracy. I believe the global community of democracies would benefit from Taiwan's participation in such events and could learn from Taiwan's experience of democracy under pressure due to foreign malign influence, including disinformation campaigns that seek to undermine its democratic processes.

Question. Do you agree with former Vice President Pence's statement that "America will always believe that Taiwan's embrace of democracy shows a better path for all the Chinese people?"

Answer. Yes. Taiwan is a leading democracy and a critical economic and security partner. If confirmed, I will continue to strengthen U.S. ties with Taiwan as an important priority.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to use your position as Assistant Secretary to promote Taiwan as a model of democratic success that China and others should emulate?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will continue to work with allies and partners to highlight the positive role that Taiwan plays in addressing global challenges and encourage them to stand with Taiwan in defending against threats to its democratic values.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to do your utmost to ensure that Taiwan's requests for the sale of military equipment will be processed as quickly as possible?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will support making available to Taiwan the defense articles and services necessary to enable Taiwan to maintain a sufficient self-defense capability, consistent with the Taiwan Relations Act and our "one China" policy.

Question. Will maintaining Taiwan's defense capabilities be a top priority for EAP under your leadership?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, in response to the growing PRC threat, I will continue deepening our unofficial security relationship with Taiwan to ensure it has sufficient capabilities to defend itself, consistent with the Taiwan Relations Act.

The United States notified more than $32 billion worth of arms to Taiwan since 2009, but arms sales alone cannot ensure Taiwan's ability to defend itself, nor should the impact of arms sales be judged on total value alone. Our expanding security cooperation seeks to encourage Taiwan to prioritize cost-effective, resilient, distributed, and sufficient capabilities. We are also encouraging Taiwan to prioritize reserve force reform, civilian defense capabilities, and cybersecurity and critical infrastructure resilience.

U.S. security cooperation with Taiwan is calibrated to meet the threat from the PRC and is consistent with the U.S. "one China" policy, which is guided by the Taiwan Relations Act, the Three Communiques, and the Six Assurances. If confirmed, as part of that cooperation, I also will encourage Taiwan to spend on defense an amount commensurate with the growing threat it faces.

Question. Do you commit to wholeheartedly support the full scope of bilateral defense cooperation, including joint trainings and exercises and any other substantive exchanges that will enhance Taiwan's security posture?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will support engagement that would advance U.S. interests and foreign policy objectives. The United States has long maintained our abiding interest in peace and stability in the Taiwan Strait.

In response to the growing PRC threat, we will continue deepening our unofficial security relationship with Taiwan to ensure it has sufficient capabilities to defend itself.

Question. If confirmed, will you work with our U.N. Ambassador to look for bold and creative ways to promote Japan's candidacy for permanent membership on the U.N. Security Council?

Answer. A reformed Security Council that is representative, effective, and relevant is in the best interest of the United States and all U.N. member states. If confirmed, I would support a modest enlargement of the Security Council for both permanent and non-permanent members, provided doing so does not diminish its effectiveness or its efficiency, and does not alter or expand the veto. Regarding member state suitability, we remain principally focused on a country's ability and willingness to contribute to international peace and security.

Question. If confirmed, will you work with your counterpart in Tokyo, and at the Department of Defense, to ensure that U.S. forces and Japanese forces are planning for possible Taiwan contingencies?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that the United States and our allies and partners pool our collective strength to advance shared interests and deter common threats. We will underscore the importance of peace and stability across the Taiwan Strait.

Question. Will you encourage Tokyo to engage in security cooperation with Taiwan to complement existing U.S. cooperation with Taiwan?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will encourage our allies and partners to continue to work together to advance our shared prosperity, security, and values in the Indo-Pacific region. Japan is a capable, thoughtful, and dynamic ally that has helped us to secure our interests and values in Asia more effectively than we could have done alone.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to strengthen U.S. relations with Mongolia and protect its sovereignty against potential encroachment by the People's Republic of China?

Answer. Yes. Mongolia is a democracy and our strategic partner, and if confirmed, I will work to continue strengthening our bilateral relationship and supporting Mongolia's sovereignty.

Question. If President Biden follows through with his campaign promise to assemble a summit of democracies, will you ensure that Mongolia is invited to participate?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support President Biden's commitment to host a Summit for Democracy. Participating governments will be expected to deliver on both domestic and international commitments that advance democracy, fight corruption, and protect human rights. As a vibrant democracy, I expect Mongolia will be favorably considered for participation.

- Will you, as a matter of policy, seek to increase U.S. investment in Mongolia and bilateral trade ties?

Answer. Yes. As Mongolia's strategic partner and proud "third neighbor," the United States will continue to seek opportunities to increase both bilateral trade and U.S. investment in Mongolia.

Question. If confirmed, will you work with your counterpart in Ulaanbaatar to promote programs to protect the Mongolian language, culture, and Buddhism, and wherever possible, to extend such promotion to Mongolians in the PRC?

Answer. Yes. Mongolia holds a unique place in world history and possesses a rich culture stretching back centuries. If confirmed, I will work to promote programs that protect Mongolian language, script, culture, and Buddhism, wherever they are found.

Question. Mongolia's presidential election on June 9, 2021 was conducted in a manner that was free and fair, but the incumbent president was blocked from running for reelection in a manner that many Mongolians found troubling. The Mongolian People's Party (MPP) now controls the presidency in addition to holding a supermajority in the parliament and yielding significant influence over the judiciary. If confirmed, do you commit to efforts to guard against democratic backsliding in Mongolia and to ensure that the MPP does not revert to its authoritarian past under the influence of its authoritarian neighbor?

Answer. Mongolia recently conducted a free and fair presidential election, its eighth since the country's peaceful transition to democracy in 1990. As strategic partners, Mongolia and the United States share a common commitment to democratic values and the strengthening of democratic institutions. The U.S. has a strong strategic interest in ensuring Mongolia remains a stable and viable democracy. If confirmed, I will continue the U.S. tradition of working closely with our Mongolian counterparts to deepen their democracy and to strengthen good governance and civil society in Mongolia.

Korea

Question. If confirmed, what will you do to expand U.S.-ROK trade and investment ties, and encourage Seoul to diversify its trade and investment away from China in order to reduce its vulnerability to Chinese economic coercion?

Answer. The U.S.-ROK Alliance is bolstered by our strong and growing economic relationship and grounded in our shared democratic values. If confirmed, I will support the full and faithful implementation of the U.S.-Korea Free Trade Agreement, which remains the foundation of our bilateral trade and investment relationship and an important pillar of our bilateral relationship. I will work, in cooperation with my U.S. Government colleagues, to continue to expand robust U.S.-ROK economic ties, promote Korean investment in the United States, and enhance our mutual prosperity and security through close collaboration on supply chain diversification, regular coordination on economic security matters, and enhanced cooperation between our two countries to advance our common vision of a free and open Indo-Pacific and world.

Question. What is your opinion of the South Korean Government's decision to ban the distribution of leaflets and other materials into North Korea by North Korean human rights organizations?

Answer. As a global policy, the United States advocates for the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms around the world. With regards to the DPRK, if confirmed, I will continue to promote the free flow of information into, out of, and within the DPRK. It is critical for the North Korean people to have access to fact-based information not controlled by the North Korean regime. The United States promotes and supports freedom of expression around the world, including with valued allies like the Republic of Korea.

The United States has been in close contact with the ROKG to express our strong views about the importance of the free flow of information into the DPRK and freedom of expression.

We respect the fact that the ROK, as a democracy with an independent and strong judiciary, has tools in place to allow for review of the law.

If confirmed, I will continue to work with our partners in the NGO and North Korean escapee community to promote human rights in North Korea and North Koreans' access to information.

Question. If confirmed, how would you respond to a resurgence of the protest movement in Thailand?

Answer. The United States supports freedom of expression and the right to peaceful assembly as essential to Thailand's democracy. The United States does not support any political party or position in Thailand; we support the democratic process, human rights, and the rule of law. If confirmed, I will continue to urge the Royal Thai Government to respect the human rights of those who exercise their freedom of expression. I will also call on the Royal Thai Government to respect the human rights of those who have been arrested or detained, including adequate access to medical care and the legal counsel of their choosing. Thailand is a valued U.S. ally and partner, and the strong relations we have built up over time allow the United States to engage constructively with the Royal Thai Government.

Our shared history, shared interests, and the common values that unite our peoples make me confident that we can continue to navigate these challenges for the good of both countries.

Question. How will U.S. policy promote human rights and democracy in Thailand going forward?

Answer. The United States strongly supports human rights and democracy in Thailand, the Indo-Pacific, and around the world. We are committed to a long-term partnership with Thailand, and the promotion of democracy, human rights, and fundamental freedoms has been a major part of U.S. engagement with Thailand for many years. If confirmed, I will continue to support our robust diplomatic engagement to advance democracy and the protection of human rights in Thailand. I will call on the Royal Thai Government to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to act in a manner consistent with its international obligations and commitments.

Question. If confirmed, how will you work to counter PRC influence in Thailand and increase awareness of the risks of dependency on trade and investment from China?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to strengthen our alliance with Thailand and our partnerships in Southeast Asia, while also working to counter the PRC's malign influence in the region. I will review our approach to enhancing economic engagement with Thailand and regional partners. I will encourage internationally accepted best practices in trade and investment and an open and inclusive approach to economic development. Furthermore, if confirmed, I am committed to working with Thailand to combat COVID-19 and climate change; to strengthen our defenses, including in cyberspace; and to produce and secure the technologies of the future. Additionally, I will support Thailand as a regional leader in the Mekong region and key partner in the Mekong-U.S. Partnership.

Question. If confirmed, what would you do to deny legitimacy to the junta that seized power in February?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to use all tools available to exert pressure on the junta and deny the regime international credibility. In the immediate aftermath of the coup, we worked quickly to impose sanctions on those responsible for the coup, as well as state-owned enterprises and military-affiliated companies that are providing financial resources to the military regime. The United States has worked with our international partners to deny the regime access to hundreds of millions of dollars in resources in international financial institutions, as well as pushed for an arms embargo and restriction on the export of dual use technology. We have encouraged the international community to use all levers available to restrict the junta's access to financial institutions and enhance scrutiny of any financial ties to the military.

In addition, the United States has engaged the pro-democracy movement, including the "National Unity Government" (NUG), at high levels, which has served to further deny international credibility to the regime. If confirmed, I will utilize every tool and opportunity to expose the junta's horrific brutality, promote accountability, and support the democratic aspirations of the people of Burma, including ethnic and religious communities, who yearn for true democracy and do not want to live another day under military rule.

Question. Do you commit to block the junta's efforts to replace the legitimate representatives of Myanmar at international organizations?

Answer. If confirmed, I will make it a top priority to support the Burmese people and work to return Burma to the democratic path chosen by its people. The United States has strongly condemned the military's actions to overturn the will of the people of Burma as freely expressed in elections in November 2020. The United States has also engaged the pro-democracy movement, including the "National Unity Government" (NUG), at high levels, which has helped deny international credibility to the regime. The United States will continue to support Burma's pro-democracy movement, including the NUG, various ethnic and religious groups, and others working peacefully to restore Burma's democratic transition. If confirmed, I will support U.S. efforts to continue encouraging our partners, allies, and other members of the international community to engage representatives of the pro-democracy movement, including in international organizations and major international events, and push for dialogue among all relevant stakeholders to secure a peaceful resolution to the crisis in Burma.

Question. If confirmed, will you work with the Treasury Department to impose punishing sanctions on all industries that fund the Tatmadaw, including the oil and gas industry and the mining industry?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue our robust engagement within the U.S. inter-agency, including the Treasury Department, to identify ways to exert additional pressure on the military regime, including financial pressure. The United States has already sanctioned over 30 military leaders, adult family members, commanders, and military units responsible for the coup and the horrific violence. We have sanctioned top revenue generators for the military, including the largest military conglomerates, the Myanmar Economic Corporation (MEC) and Myanmar Economic Holdings Limited (MEHL). We have designated the largest state-owned enterprises in the gems, timber, and other sectors that the military has used to enrich itself at the expense of the people of Burma. In addition, we have successfully led an international effort with partners and allies, including the UK, Canada, and EU, to sanction the same individuals and entities, further denying the military international credibility and access to revenue.

While we have sought to impose significant sanctions on the regime, the United States has also been careful to avoid steps that could hurt the interests of the people of Burma and deepen the humanitarian suffering caused by the coup, and negatively impact our partners in the region. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that, in identifying potential additional targets designed to exert pressure on the military regime, including the oil and gas industry and the mining industry, we also continue to study and take into account the impact on the people of Burma.

SUBMITTED TO HON. DANIEL J. KRITENBRINK BY SENATOR TED CRUZ

Taiwan

Question. If confirmed, will you restore the Trump administration's policy allowing our Taiwanese allies to display symbols of their sovereignty? If not, why not?

Answer. In keeping with longstanding U.S. policy across Democratic and Republican administrations, the United States Government does not permit displays of Taiwan sovereignty, including flags, on United States Government premises. Though the United States does not maintain diplomatic relations with Taiwan, U.S. support for Taiwan has never been stronger, as demonstrated by, for example, ongoing arms sales designed to enable Taiwan to maintain a sufficient self-defense capability, the provision of vaccines announced by three U.S. Senators during their visit to Taipei on June 6, and the repeated and unprecedented public mentions of Taiwan in the recent U.S.-Japan joint statement, U.S.-ROK joint statement, U.S.-EU joint statement, and G7 leaders' communique.

To deepen and broaden our unofficial relationship with Taiwan, the Biden-Harris administration also issued new Guidelines for Interacting with Taiwan ("contact guidance"), which are more permissive than any previous iterations. Taiwan has welcomed the new contact guidance, including through statements by President Tsai, Foreign Minister Wu, and TECRO Representative Hsiao. If confirmed, I will work to further develop our robust ties with our democratic partner Taiwan and ensure we fulfill our commitments under the Taiwan Relations Act.

Question. On June 11, the Biden administration published in the Federal Register Executive Order 14034, which revoked Executive Order 13942 of August 6, 2020 (Addressing the Threat Posed by TikTok, and Taking Additional Steps To Address the National Emergency With Respect to the Information and Communications Technology and Services Supply Chain), Executive Order 13943 of August 6, 2020 (Addressing the Threat Posed by WeChat, and Taking Additional Steps To Address the National Emergency With Respect to the Information and Communications Technology and Services Supply Chain), and Executive Order 13971 of January 5, 2021 (Addressing the Threat Posed by Applications and Other Software Developed or Controlled by Chinese Companies). Those three EOs had restricted applications controlled by Chinese companies. According to EO 13971, "[b]y accessing personal electronic devices such as smartphones, tablets, and computers, Chinese connected software applications can access and capture vast swaths of information from users, including sensitive personally identifiable information and private information. This data collection threatens to provide the Government of the People's Republic of China (PRC) and the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) with access to Americans' personal and proprietary information—which would permit China to track the locations of Federal employees and contractors, and build dossiers of personal information.”

- Please assess the potential intelligence risks associated with these applications including the risk to State Department personnel and their families overseas.

Answer. Under Executive Order (E.O.) 13873, Securing the Information and Communications Technology and Services Supply Chain, the Secretary of Commerce evaluates potential threats to the United States presented by information and communications technology or services designed, developed, manufactured, or supplied by persons owned or controlled by, or subject to the jurisdiction or direction of the People's Republic of China and other designated foreign adversaries.

To enhance this effort, on June 9 President Biden issued E.O. 14034, which instructs the Secretary of Commerce to evaluate transactions involving foreign adversary-connected software applications that may pose a risk to Americans' data, utilizing clear criteria that may indicate a heightened risk, including software applications that are owned, controlled, or managed by persons that support foreign adversary military or intelligence activities, or are involved in malicious cyber activities, or involve applications that collect sensitive personal data. If confirmed, I will work with colleagues at the Department of Commerce in assessing these risks, as well as the risk to State Department personnel and their families overseas.

State Department

Question. The Obama administration was broadly criticized, especially in the context of its Middle East policy, for co-mingling unclassified documents with classified documents. This practice requires that documents be placed in a secure location, unnecessarily limiting access to unclassified documents and stifling public debate. The Biden administration already seems to be repeating such practices: according to an exchange during the State Department press briefing on February 11, a notification describing the lifting of terrorism sanctions on Iran-controlled terrorists in Yemen was unnecessarily transmitted to a Congressional SCIF. Can you commit to ensuring that unclassified information is not unnecessarily comingled with classified information in notifications provided by the State Department to Congress? If not, why not?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to working to ensure that information provided to Congress is, to the fullest extent possible, in a format that facilitates its access by authorized personnel, while complying with Executive Order 13526, the Department of State classification guide, and the executive branch rules on the handling and storage of classified information.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. DANIEL J. KRITENBRINK BY SENATOR BILL HAGERTY

Question. Ambassador Kritenbrink, I would like to bring to your attention the case of Greg Kelly, a Tennessee constituent who, in my view, has been wrongly detained for nearly three years in Japan. I'm deeply concerned about Mr. Kelly's treatment by the Japanese legal system.

After being taken into custody in November 2018, Mr. Kelly—who maintains his innocence—was forced to wait for nearly two years for his trial in Japan even to begin in September 2020. News media now report that it has been proven at trial that the entire case against Greg Kelly was fabricated for the sole purpose of preventing Renault from taking over Nissan. There is no deadline by which the court in Japan must deliver a verdict in Mr. Kelly's case, and he likely faces the prospect of no decision until well into next year.

- If confirmed, do you commit to working with me and to using every tool at your disposal to get Greg Kelly back to the United States and home with his family?

Answer. One of the most important tasks of the Department of State and U.S. embassies and consulates is to provide assistance to U.S. citizens who are incarcerated or detained abroad. We take this obligation to assist U.S. citizens arrested or detained abroad seriously. Mr. Kelly's case is a high priority for the Bureau of Consular Affairs and the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs. The Department is actively monitoring Mr. Kelly's case and Embassy Tokyo's American Citizens Services unit has been in frequent, regular contact with Mr. Kelly and his legal teams. While the Department cannot intercede on the merits of his case, the Department monitors developments in his case very closely. The Department continue to urge the Japanese authorities to ensure Mr. Kelly's trial and verdict are concluded as expeditiously as possible. If confirmed, I will make Mr. Kelly's case a priority, and I look forward to working closely with you and your office on his case.

NOMINATIONS

TUESDAY, JULY 13, 2021

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:07 a.m. in Room SD-G50, Hon. Robert Menendez, chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Menendez [presiding], Cardin, Kaine, Markey, Booker, Van Hollen, Risch, Johnson, and Hagerty.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ,
U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

The CHAIRMAN. Good morning. This hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee shall come to order. We are here to consider nominees for four important positions: Ambassador Gentry Smith to the Assistant Secretary of State for Diplomatic Security, Ambassador Rena Bitter to be Assistant Secretary of State for Consular Affairs, Ms. Monica Medina to be the Assistant Secretary of State for Oceans and International Environmental and Scientific Affairs, and Mr. Marc Knapper to be the Ambassador to Vietnam.

Congratulations to the four of you on your nominations, our thanks for your willingness to serve our country in this capacity, and the members of your family because this is a family sacrifice as well. So we appreciate their sacrifices.

I see that our distinguished colleague and member of this committee, the senator from Massachusetts, is going to be introducing Ms. Medina this morning.

So we will turn to him first before any opening statements.
Senator Markey?

STATEMENT OF HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY,
U.S. SENATOR FROM MASSACHUSETTS

Senator MARKEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, very much and Ranking Member Risch, thank you so much as well.

It is my pleasure this morning to introduce President Biden's nominee to be Assistant Secretary of State for the Bureau of Oceans and International Environment and Scientific Affairs, and my friend for 38 years, Monica Medina.

It is impossible to think of anyone more qualified for this job.

The CHAIRMAN. You knew her in your infancy then?

Senator MARKEY. And, again, I am now in the infancy of my second adulthood, as the Senate Foreign Relations Committee makes it possible for us to enjoy extended political life expectancy.

It is impossible to think of anyone more qualified for this job. Monica has been working for decades and across multiple administrations on environmental law and policy.

She understands the interconnected world we live in and knows that the 21st century U.S. foreign policy goes not simply beyond the water's edge, but to the seas and the skies and the sands of the world where universal threats and their solutions lie.

Monica won a Reserve Officers Training Corps scholarship while at Georgetown University, and while working at the Defense Department in the Obama administration, she worked to end discrimination against women in the military, to provide them with opportunities that were previously closed to them simply because of their gender.

Monica has always been a fierce fighter for justice and never backs down from a tough challenge, and she has confronted some of the world's toughest global challenges.

Ms. Medina has called out the connection between illegal wildlife trafficking and organized criminal networks. She has fought against illegal fishing, which is tied to global piracy and human rights violations.

Just like the climate crisis, these are global spanning threats to our national security, and Monica's expertise in these areas is why former Secretary of Defense Leon Panetta and the Center for Strategic and International Studies have turned to her as an expert and advisor.

Monica knows that we cannot protect ourselves at home without a robust strategy abroad, and diplomacy is not just something that she has practiced in international work. She has worked across the aisle with stakeholders from different states and industries in the United States to protect our oceans and our ocean economy.

After the Deepwater Horizon oil spill, she worked with the five Republican governors of affected states to get $1 billion in restoration funds from oil company BP so that states could quickly start rebounding from the disaster.

Her work at the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration was praised by groups like the Seafood Harvesters of America, who support her experience and legacy of protecting our oceans, and the workers and communities that depend upon them.

Louis Pasteur once said that science knows no country because knowledge belongs to humanity, and is the torch which illuminates the world.

Science is the highest personification of the nation because that nation will remain the first which carries the furthest the works of thought and intelligence.

Monica Medina has dedicated her career to promoting America's excellence in these two realms, the tools of science and the values of humanity, because it is there where America's excellence and promise to the world is to be found.

She knows that, and throughout her distinguished career, she has become supremely prepared for the role of Assistant Secretary of State for the Bureau of Oceans, Environment, and Science.

She has been training for it in every position in which she has served, every mission that she has fulfilled, every discussion she has held with key stakeholders.

I am so grateful for her continued commitment to our country and planet, as well as for our years of friendship, and I hope my colleagues will join me in supporting her for this important position.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Markey. A rather glowing introduction—

Senator MARKEY. Well deserved.

The CHAIRMAN [continuing]. And we know that you have, I am sure, well earned. I know that you may have other committee business to do, and so at your leisure you are welcome to depart from us, and thank you for your introduction.

Let me turn to our panel, speak briefly about each of them, turn to Senator Risch, and then we will listen to your testimony.

Ambassador Smith has served the United States and the State Department during his entire professional career with two and a half decades, ensuring the security of U.S. diplomatic personnel and U.S. citizens here and abroad.

He has been a special agent protecting the secretary of state, the regional security officer in multiple foreign posts, a deputy assistant secretary and senior advisor in the Bureau of Diplomatic Security.

He has served as director for the Office of Foreign Missions for which he was previously confirmed by the Senate. There is no question in my mind that he is fully qualified and deeply experienced for this position.

Ambassador Smith's experience and commitment will be needed, as the State Department faces multiple challenges in keeping its personnel safe, including a relatively new one.

Indeed, U.S. personnel have recently faced the prospect of silent stealthy assaults from what may be some sort of directed energy weapons, first employed in Cuba and now showing up in other parts of the world.

These incidents deserve the full attention of the United States in order to ensure accountability and that the parties responsible are brought to justice, but most of all, to protect personnel.

So, Ambassador Smith, I trust that, if confirmed, you will be devoted in your efforts to meet this and all threats against U.S. diplomatic and other personnel.

Ms. Medina, as our colleague, Senator Markey has said, your knowledge and experience, including as Principal Deputy Undersecretary of Oceans and Atmosphere at the Department of Commerce and in various leadership roles focused on ocean conservation and environmental policy, suits you well for this position.

If confirmed as Assistant Secretary for the Bureau of Oceans, International, Environmental and Scientific Affairs, you will be responsible for maintaining U.S. leadership on cooperative efforts to maintain the health and sustainability of the world we all share.

If confirmed, you will also be responsible for managing U.S. diplomacy on addressing global plastic pollution, protecting endangered species, and combating wildlife trafficking, representing the U.S., the Montreal Protocol, and the Arctic Council, among others.

I know you are up to that challenge. As you may know, I co-authored the Save Our Seas 2.0 Act, and I look forward to working with you on the next steps to combating plastic pollution and other global environmental problems.

Ambassador Bitter, I am pleased to see you back before the committee. Your service in Laos these past several years, apparently, may not have made headlines in Washington, but it has been with distinction.

The position you are nominated for as Assistant Secretary for Consular Affairs is perhaps one of the most challenging positions in the department today.

The effects of the COVID pandemic have been particularly felt in the CA on the massive repatriation of American citizens abroad carried out by the department last year, to the financial challenges resulting from the consular office fee-for-service model at a time when fees have dried up as a result of decreased international travel.

That is something that has changed dramatically. We have now a huge demand and a big backlog on passports, which several colleagues on the committee have raised with me. I am sure that may be raised with you as to how we deal with it.

The mismanagement of the department, broadly speaking, and the Consular Affairs in particular over the past four years leaves the next Assistant Secretary with no shortage of challenges.

As Consular Affairs is also the part of the department that has the most engagement with American citizens processing passports and visas, supporting overseas travelers in need, and the like, it is also a bureau that receives a high level of congressional scrutiny.

While the challenges in the bureau are evident, I am confident in your abilities and capacity to serve capably in this position.

Finally, I am pleased to see Marc Knapper before the committee for consideration as our next ambassador to Vietnam.

We look to develop a genuine strategic partnership with Hanoi, one animated by our shared interests and our values, and I can think of few more qualified Foreign Service professionals than Mr. Knapper to be entrusted with this important task.

In closing, while the four of you have a series of challenges ahead, I am confident that your knowledge and experience will serve you well as you take on your new responsibilities upon confirmation. I look forward to each of your testimonies.

And with that, let me turn to the distinguished ranking member for his opening comments.

STATEMENT OF HON. JAMES E. RISCH,
U.S. SENATOR FROM IDAHO

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I want to thank the witnesses for being here today and being willing to serve in these positions, and your families, who we know share the sacrifices that you make.

I want to start with the nomination of Assistant Secretary of State for Oceans and International Environment and Scientific Affairs.

The COVID-19 pandemic has exposed what I believe to be serious gaps in U.S. international pandemic prevention, preparedness, and, importantly, response efforts. This includes the failure of the Department of State over multiple administrations of both parties to adequately prioritize global health policy and diplomatic engagement beyond the PEPFAR program.

We now realize how important that is. PEPFAR, of course, was an exception to that. It was very successful, and it is important that we duplicate the success that we had in PEPFAR in what will undoubtedly be future challenges of a global health nature.

Ms. Medina, if confirmed, you will lead the bureau responsible for ensuring foreign policy coherence and program integrity for global health and biosecurity.

I look forward to hearing from you how you plan to improve State's leadership in these vital areas, which, as I said, I think suffer some shortcomings, which have become painfully obvious as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic.

In addition, COVID-19 has brought to light the risks of collaboration on life sciences research with countries that do not share our interests like China.

If confirmed, you will have a role in overseeing international scientific cooperation and global health security, and it is critical that you work across the department to prevent the misuse of such research.

Lastly, as we discussed when we met last month, the Columbia River Treaty remains an important issue to myself and the rest of the Northwest delegation. I look forward to hearing more about how you plan to make Columbia River Treaty negotiations a priority.

Next, we have the nomination of Assistant Secretary of State for Diplomatic Security. For decades, the State Department has struggled with what has been dubbed colloquially a bunker mentality, which greatly over-prioritizes security to the detriment of our diplomatic effectiveness.

Security is undoubtedly very important, but as with all things, it must be put in its proper place. This severe risk aversion often keeps our diplomats cooped up behind embassy walls instead of engaging with the local community and conducting traditional diplomacy.

America's adversaries do not place similar burdens on their diplomats, putting the United States at a strategic disadvantage.

Earlier this year, I introduced legislation to improve the process for investigating security incidents abroad so that the department's diplomats can safely do their jobs, promote U.S. interests with host countries, and engage local populations with appropriate protection.

If confirmed, it will be vitally important to ensure the department learns to manage risk more effectively.

Ambassador Smith, I look forward to hearing your thoughts on these issues.

Moving on to the nomination of Assistant Secretary of State for Consular Affairs, the Bureau of Consular Affairs has a unique opportunity to demonstrate how the State Department assists U.S. citizens every day while also advancing our national interests.

Whether it is helping Americans who lost a passport on vacation get home or visiting U.S. citizens who have been incarcerated abroad, Consular Affairs often directly serves the American people.

However, last year's travel restrictions and resulting loss of visa fee revenue greatly hurt the Bureau's finances, potentially affecting its ability to provide these important services.

As vaccination rates climb, there will be more people seeking to travel. Demand for passports and visas are rapidly increasing, leading to significant delays in processing times.

Ambassador Bitter, I look forward to hearing your plan to get Consular Affairs fully operational and to reduce these extremely irregular passport processing times.

Finally, we have the nomination of Ambassador to Vietnam. Vietnam is an important U.S. partner and an ASEAN member. I am very glad to see the recent U.S. donation of 2 million Moderna vaccine through COVAX to Vietnam in addition to separate donations to Indonesia and Malaysia.

Southeast Asian countries need vaccines. Given the importance of this region to the United States and the pressure some countries are facing from China to accept its clearly substandard vaccines, it is crucial that the United States continue to prioritize deliveries to our partners there.

We need to redouble our efforts following the nontransparent COVAX procurement deal announced earlier this week that will allow China to profit mightily from the distribution of its substandard vaccines, all of this very erotic.

Beyond vaccines, I think it is crucial that we advance collaboration with Vietnam in important areas such as the South China Sea and the Mekong region, and the crisis in Myanmar.

We should also continue to prioritize all forms of energy engagement, including liquefied natural gas.

Finally, in closing, I continue to support engagement with Vietnam to promote freedom of speech and religion.

Mr. Knapper, I look forward to hearing how you will tackle all these issues if you are confirmed.

We have a lot to cover today, and I will yield back.

Mr. Chairman, thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Risch.

All right. We will start our testimony from our nominees. We would ask you to summarize your statement at about five minutes.

All of your full statements will be included in the record, without objection, and we will start with Ambassador Smith and then move down the aisle.

Ambassador Smith?

STATEMENT OF GENTRY O. SMITH, OF VIRGINIA, NOMINATED TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE [DIPLOMATIC SECURITY]

Mr. SMITH. Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee to be the Department of State's Assistant Secretary for the Bureau of Diplomatic Security.

I am grateful for the confidence that the president and Secretary Blinken have placed in me and I am humbled by the opportunity to lead such an outstanding organization.

In the 105-year history of diplomatic security, I am just the third DS agent to be nominated to serve as Assistant Secretary.

In my 30-year career with the Foreign Service, I am proud to have served as a DS agent for 27 years prior to my appointment as the director for the Office of Foreign Missions, a position that I held into my retirement in 2017.

I would like to thank you for your continued and unwavering support for both the department and for diplomatic security. I am very proud to be associated with the outstanding women and men who labor tirelessly to protect America's diplomatic facilities, critical information, and, most importantly, American lives.

They also conduct extensive important law enforcement investigations necessary to keep our country safe.

I want to thank my wife, Georgette, our adult children and their spouses, and our six adorable grandchildren for the love and support and for allowing me to return to rejoin an institution that I love.

It is, indeed, an honor to lead the dedicated special agents, security engineers, diplomatic couriers, security technicians, and other specialized personnel in providing a secure environment in which to conduct U.S. foreign policy.

I first joined Diplomatic Security in 1987 after proudly serving as a police officer in Raleigh, North Carolina. These were the early days of building the Diplomatic Security Service.

I grew up in the organization as it grew to meet increasing global security challenges as well as domestic challenges and U.S. national security interests.

Having served in Cairo during both Gulf wars and Rangoon during a period of unrest and uncertainty that rivals the current situation, I am familiar with the importance of strong leadership and requisite security operations.

Upon returning to the U.S. and serving in senior positions in Diplomatic Security, I am proud to have collaborated closely with other department colleagues, the intelligence community, DOD, and members of Congress to construct and improve diplomatic facilities here and abroad while enabling our personnel to project U.S. Government interests around the world.

I am also proud and honored to have received Senate approval to lead the Office of Foreign Missions during my last tenure with the department.

My body of work within the department and subsequent experiences as an independent consultant in the private sector is what has prepared me to assume leadership as the assistant secretary for Diplomatic Security.

I am aware that there will always be challenges as we seek to advance U.S. interests around the world. With support and continued guidance from members of this committee and Congress as a whole, my top priority, if confirmed, will be to help to ensure that the department effectively protects its physical assets, information, and, most importantly, lives.

At the same time, however, I recognize that effective diplomacy is virtually impossible without the ability to take considered risk in service of strategic goals and objectives.

It will be my responsibility to evaluate various threat-mitigating strategies and help the department make the best possible calculations in support of American diplomacy.

Risk management is particularly critical in high-threat countries, most notably at the moment in Afghanistan as American troop levels are drawn down.

Closer to home, we need to do more to promote diversity, equity, inclusion, and accessibility within our ranks, while empowering diplomatic security agents to conduct effective investigations in support of protective details, as well as passport and visa fraud.

The recent SolarWinds intrusion has underlined the importance of DS' role in maintaining a 24/7 watch on the department's global cyber infrastructure, a challenge which promises to intensify over the coming years.

I also look forward to overseeing further improvements in our law enforcement and other security training at the department's new Foreign Affair Security Training Center in Blackstone, Virginia.

Finally, if confirmed, I look forward to working closely with this body to ensure your interests and concerns are properly address and that we work together to protect our personnel, facilities, and national interests abroad and domestically.

Thank you for your time and consideration, and I am happy to entertain any of your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.
Ambassador Bitter?

STATEMENT OF THE HON. RENA BITTER, OF THE DISTRICT OF COLOMBIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE [CONSULAR AFFAIRS]

Ms. BITTER. Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today and grateful to President Biden and Secretary Blinken for the trust they have placed in me.

It is with no small measure of humility that I approach the responsibility before me, if confirmed. I believe there is no part of the Department of State more directly responsible for the security and well-being of Americans at home and abroad than the Bureau of Consular Affairs.

In fact, diplomats have been serving their fellow citizens abroad in consular missions since before the Constitution was written.

These are the oldest and most vital functions of the Department of State. Consular work is not glamorous and it can often be heart-breaking. But colleagues in the bureau do not do this work for recognition. They are the truest of public servants, working under sometimes very difficult conditions on behalf of the American people.

For a recent example, the men and women of the Bureau of Consular Affairs led the repatriation of nearly 100,000 Americans at the beginning of the pandemic, often risking their own health and safety.

The Senate recognized this effort with Senate Resolution 567 commending the department for its efforts on behalf of our fellow citizens.

I would also like to add my thanks to the Bureau for all it does on behalf of the American people, much of which takes place below their notice.

If confirmed, it would be the honor of a lifetime to lead this extraordinary team. I have had many jobs and many proud moments during the span of my 27-year career, but the proudest have revolved around Consular Services.

In Amman, my team issued the very first Special Immigrant Visas for Iraqi translators at the start of that program in 2006. I understand on a very personal level the U.S. Government's commitment to the men and women who serve beside us.

Another proud moment was more recent as ambassador when I received a letter from two grieving New England families whose newlywed children were tragically killed while on their honeymoon in Laos.

The families wrote to thank me for the compassionate support they received from our embassy team during their time of immeasurable grief. They enclosed their children's joint obituary from their hometown paper, in which the families thanked our consular officer by name.

As I said, the work can often be heartbreaking, but it is vital and never more so than now. President Biden promised to craft a foreign policy for the middle class. A strong healthy Bureau of Consular Affairs will be critical to this effort.

But the global pandemic has taken a toll on the bureau. I know the department is very grateful to Congress for its support for consular services over the last several months.

I am aware that the bureau has had to make some difficult decisions due to pandemic-related constraints on space and resources. More difficult decisions lie ahead. But prior to the pandemic, international visitors contributed more than $260 billion to the U.S. economy and directly supported millions of jobs, and we must get back there again.

If confirmed, my top priority will be that we do, to see that the bureau is able to meet the need for consular services even in this constrained resource environment and with the continued uncertainty of the global pandemic.

A related priority, if confirmed, I will work with department stakeholders and our partners in Congress to develop a more resilient funding model so the bureau will always have a stable platform from which to carry out its mission.

Finally, I believe the Bureau of Consular Affairs has no more important partner than Congress. The Department of State is charged with representing the interests of U.S. citizens around the world with reminding foreign governments that the United States has no higher priority than the welfare of its citizens, and with ensuring that our foreign policy reflects that goal.

I believe executing these responsibilities are at the heart of the mission that the president and secretary have entrusted me with and to which I am prepared to dedicate all my energy.

If confirmed, I will advocate for your constituents. On a personal note, I would like to thank my family and my family of friends, who have put up with long absences over the course of my career, and then generously welcomed me home as if I had never been gone. Many of them are here today or watching.

When I last had the honor to appear before this committee, my nephew, Josh, was among them sitting behind me. He died in December, and today, as every day, we mourn his absence.

But I think he would be pleased to know that our love for him would be memorialized in the Congressional Record, and I thank the committee for indulging me in doing so.

With that, I thank you and I welcome your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Ambassador, and our sympathies to you and your family for the loss of your nephew.

Ms. Medina, the floor is yours.

STATEMENT OF MONICA P. MEDINA, OF MARYLAND, NOMINATED TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE [OCEANS AND INTERNATIONAL ENVIRONMENTAL AND SCIENTIFIC AFFAIRS]

Ms. MEDINA. I want to begin by thanking Senator Markey.

Make sure my microphone is on. There. Can you hear me now?

Thank you, Chairman Menendez. I want to begin by thanking Senator Markey for that very kind introduction and for decades of friendship.

Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee, it is a tremendous honor to appear before you today as the president's nominee for Assistant Secretary of State for the Bureau of Oceans, International, Environmental, and Scientific Affairs, or OES.

I am deeply honored to be nominated by President Biden and for the trust that he and Secretary Blinken have placed in me. I am also thrilled to have the chance to serve my country again.

I would like to begin by thanking my family. I am eternally grateful to my husband, Ron, and our grown children, Hannah, Michael, and Daniel, for their constant support and encouragement as I pursued a career in environmental conservation, even when it took me far from home.

I also must thank my mother, Jeanne, a retired middle school teacher, who, through her passion for elephants and other wildlife, taught me the importance of biodiversity to life on Earth.

If confirmed, I am eager to consult, engage, and collaborate with members of this committee and to build on your great work on ocean conservation, ending wildlife trafficking and illegal fishing, stemming the rise of future pandemics, fighting plastic pollution, and other OES issues of interest to you.

I would not be here today if it were not for the opportunity the U.S. Army gave me to attend Georgetown University on an Army ROTC scholarship at a time when there were not many women who received them.

Both my parents were teachers, and I could not have afforded a private university like Georgetown otherwise, and my dream was for a career in government and law.

I could not have imagined then that my scholarship would lead me to where I sit today, that I would serve twice in the Pentagon, once in uniform, work in positions of responsibility on the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee staff, at the Department of Justice, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, and the Department of Commerce twice, and now, with your approval, at the State Department.

OES is at the forefront of our responses to the global challenge of the present and also the global challenge of the future. Clearly, our nation must continue to work to defeat COVID-19 globally and better prepare for and prevent future pandemics.

Likewise, there is no greater long-term threat to our safety and security than climate change. I look forward to supporting the administration's work on both these fundamental threats to our health, security, and prosperity.

I would, additionally, raise three areas of particular concern to me. My decades of experience attending and representing the U.S. at international meetings leads me to believe that there will be increasing global tensions over limited natural resources.

If confirmed, I would dedicate special attention to the following.

First, the loss of biodiversity is a crisis and it is often overlooked. But there is great bipartisan work being done here in Congress to conserve species globally and to assist countries in Africa, Asia, and the Americas in their efforts to do the same.

I greatly admire the International Conservation Caucus' efforts to work collaboratively with legislative counterparts from around the world to ensure that we do not lose elephants or rhinos or tigers or penguins or pangolins to extinction.

Second, the ocean needs our attention. There is too much tension, damage, and lawless behavior in the seas due to deep disagreements over a plethora of hot-button issues, such as excessive maritime claims, illegal, unreported, and unregulated fishing, the dramatic changes and rapid development in the polar regions, and the disregard by bad actors of global shipping, safety, and security rules as well as pervasive plastic pollution and ocean chemistry changes.

I am very impressed by the work of the Ocean Caucus on these issues, and if confirmed, implementing the recently passed Save Our Seas 2.0 Act will be a priority of mine.

Finally, given the rapid growth and competition in space exploration and commercialization, space policy is at a key inflection point.

A new space race could escalate global tensions among superpowers and create problems for future generations if we do not work to ensure today that space actors are complying with their obligations under international law and space activities are pursued in a manner that is safe, responsible, and sustainable.

All of these issues also merit special attention by OES, in my view, because they are central to addressing our nation's strategic competition with China. Moreover, each of these challenges must be handled in a way that ensures the equitable inclusion of diverse stakeholders and the private sector in our solutions.

In tackling these and other challenges, I want to assure the committee that I will work every day on behalf of the American people with the goal of ensuring that our efforts around the world support Americans at home and make their lives better.

Thank you for considering me for this position, and I look forward to answering your questions.

In tackling these and other challenges, I want to assure the committee that I will work every day on behalf of the American people, with the goal of ensuring that our efforts around the world support Americans at home and make their lives better. Diplomacy, cooperation, and compassion for our fellow residents of the planet we call home have never been more important.

Thank you again for considering me for this position, and I look forward to answering your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.
Mr. Knapper?

STATEMENT OF MARC EVANS KNAPPER, OF CALIFORNIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE SOCIALIST REPUBLIC OF VIETNAM

Mr. KNAPPER. Thank you, Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, distinguished members of this committee, for the opportunity today to appear before you. I am honored in the faith that President Biden and Secretary Blinken have placed in me.

I also want to express my deep love and gratitude to my wife, Suzuko, and our son, Alex, for their support and their sacrifice. They have repeatedly changed homes and schools and have been distant from family and friends so that we could serve the United States overseas. Without them, as well as my parents, Jay and Yolanda Saltsman, I would not be here today.

The United States-Vietnam relationship has undergone a profound transformation since the normalization of diplomatic relations 26 years ago, and my own family history tracks the arc of our relationship with Vietnam.

My late father, Marine Colonel Roger Knapper, was a decorated Vietnam combat veteran who often recounted difficult memories from his time at war. Yet, he also talked many times of his earnest wish to return to Vietnam and see that beautiful country at peace and thriving.

This wish was fulfilled three times during my previous service at our embassy in Hanoi, and although he will not make it back for a fourth visit, we will always be grateful for the efforts and sacrifices he and millions of other Americans have made during our long journey with Vietnam.

Our two countries have moved from a history of conflict to a comprehensive partnership that spans political, security, economic, and people-to-people ties.

If confirmed, I will work to continue developing the U.S.-Vietnam relationship across a wide range of shared interests in four key areas.

First, security. Our two countries have significantly expanded our security cooperation, including through U.S. support to strengthen Vietnam's maritime capabilities.

The U.S. and Vietnam share an interest in upholding international law and resisting China's provocative behavior in the South China Sea and Mekong region, and, if confirmed, I will make every effort to deepen our cooperation in this area.

Second, trade and investment. Bilateral trade with Vietnam has grown significantly, increasing from nearly nothing in 1995 to more than $90 billion in 2020, benefiting American manufacturers, farmers, and ranchers as well as consumers.

But despite this growth, challenges remain, and if confirmed, I will advocate for a level playing field for U.S. companies and investors, including by urging Vietnam to maintain equitable market access for U.S. digital services and agricultural products.

Third, war legacy and humanitarian issues. If confirmed, providing the fullest possible accounting for U.S. personnel missing from the Vietnam War era will be my solemn duty. Furthermore, for decades, Vietnam has provided critical assistance to those efforts and we are grateful.

Since 1993, the U.S. has also contributed more than $160 million to mitigate lingering threats posed by unexploded ordnance, and together with Vietnam, we have successfully completed the remediation of dioxin contamination in Danang, and in 2019, we broke ground on another project to remediate dioxin at the Bien Hoa airbase.

Our cooperation on these issues as well as providing $125 million since 1989 in humanitarian assistance, supporting over a million persons with disabilities regardless of the cause, has been an important foundation for our bilateral relationship.

Fourth, and finally, people-to-people ties. The bonds between the American and Vietnamese people are strong and growing.

Prior to the pandemic, nearly 700,000 Americans traveled to Vietnam annually, including more than 1,200 American students, and here in the U.S., we welcome 30,000 Vietnamese students each year. These people-to-people ties are an important bridge between our two countries.

All that said, our thriving relationship is not without its challenges. We remain deeply concerned about Vietnam's human rights record, in particular, reports of the troubling trend of harassment, arbitrary or unlawful arrests, unjust convictions, and harsh sentences of journalists and activists.

If confirmed, I will press the government of Vietnam to respect the freedoms of expression, association, peaceful assembly, and religion and belief.

Only when we see significant progress on human rights can our two countries' partnership reach its full potential, and as always, my number-one priority will be protecting the safety and welfare of all United States citizens in Vietnam and I will also make the safety and welfare of Mission Vietnam personnel a top priority.

The thriving U.S.-Vietnam partnership is a result of the courage, goodwill, and painstaking work of dedicated people in both countries who believed in the possibility of peace and reconciliation between two former enemies.

Our overarching goal remains to advance American interests and support the development of a strong, prosperous, and independent Vietnam that contributes to international security and respects human rights and the rule of law.

Thank you for considering my nomination. I look forward to your questions.

[The prepared statement of Mr. Knapper follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF MARC E. KNAPPER

Thank you Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch and distinguished members of this committee for the opportunity to appear before you today. I am honored in the faith that President Biden and Secretary Blinken have placed in me.

I also want to express my deep love and gratitude to my wife, Suzuko, and our son, Alex, for their support and their sacrifice. They have repeatedly changed homes and schools and been distant from family and friends so that we could serve the United States overseas. Without them, as well as my parents Jay and Yolanda Saltsman, I would not be here today.

The U.S.-Vietnam relationship has undergone a profound transformation since the normalization of diplomatic relations 26 years ago. My own family history tracks the arc of the United States' relationship with Vietnam. My late father, Marine Colonel Roger Knapper, was a decorated Vietnam combat veteran, who often recounted difficult memories from his time at war. Yet, he also talked many times of his earnest wish to return to Vietnam and see that beautiful country at peace and thriving. This wish was fulfilled three times during my previous service at our Embassy in Hanoi. Although he will not make it back for a fourth visit, we will always be grateful for the efforts and sacrifices he and millions of other Americans have made during our long journey with Vietnam.

Our two countries have moved from a history of conflict to a Comprehensive Partnership that spans political, security, economic, and people-to-people ties. If confirmed, I will work to continue developing the U.S.-Vietnam relationship across a wide range of shared interests in four key areas.

First, security. Our two countries have significantly expanded security cooperation, including through U.S. support to strengthen Vietnam's maritime capabilities. Last year, Vietnam welcomed the USS Theodore Roosevelt, the second U.S. aircraft carrier to visit since we established diplomatic relations. The United States and Vietnam share an interest in upholding international law and resisting provocative behavior in the South China Sea and Mekong region, and if confirmed I will make every effort deepen our cooperation in this area.

Second, trade and investment. Bilateral trade with Vietnam has grown significantly, increasing from nearly nothing in 1995 to more than $90 billion in 2020, benefiting American manufacturers, farmers and ranchers, and consumers. Despite the growth, challenges remain. If confirmed, I will advocate for a level playing field for U.S. companies and investors, including by urging Vietnam to maintain equitable market access for U.S. digital services and agricultural products.

Third, war legacy and humanitarian issues. Providing the fullest possible accounting for U.S. personnel missing from the Vietnam War era remains our most solemn duty. For decades, Vietnam has provided critical assistance to those efforts. Since 1993, the United States has contributed more than $160 million to mitigate lingering threats posed by unexploded ordnance. Together with Vietnam, we successfully completed the remediation of dioxin contamination in Danang in 2018, and in 2019 we broke ground on the 10-year dioxin remediation project at the Bien Hoa airbase area. We have provided more than $125 million since 1989 in humanitarian assistance, directly and indirectly supporting over a million persons with disabilities, regardless of the cause. Our cooperation on these issues continues to build a foundation of trust to expand our relationship.

Fourth, people-to-people ties. The bonds between the American and Vietnamese people are strong and growing. Prior to the COVID-19 pandemic, nearly 700,000 Americans traveled to Vietnam annually, including more than 1,200 American students. Here in the United States, we welcome 30,000 Vietnamese students each year. On the occasion of the 25th anniversary of U.S.-Vietnam relations last year, we signed an agreement to bring Peace Corps volunteers for the first time ever, a significant and symbolic milestone.

Our thriving relationship is not without its challenges. We remain deeply concerned about Vietnam's human rights record, in particular reports of the troubling trend of harassment, arbitrary or unlawful arrests, unjust convictions, and harsh sentences of journalists and activists. If confirmed, I will press the Government of Vietnam to respect the freedoms of expression, association, peaceful assembly, and religion or belief. Only when we see significant progress on human rights can our partnership reach its fullest potential.

As always, my number one priority will be protecting the safety and welfare of all United States citizens in Vietnam. I will also make the safety and welfare of Mission personnel a top priority.

The thriving U.S.-Vietnam partnership is the result of the courage, goodwill, and painstaking work of dedicated people in both countries, who believed in the possibility of peace and reconciliation between two former enemies. Our overarching goal remains to advance American interests and support the development of a strong, prosperous, and independent Vietnam that contributes to international security, and respects human rights and the rule of law.

Thank you for considering my nomination. I look forward to your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.

We will start a round of five-minute questions, and before I start my own line of questions, I have some overarching questions for the committee.

First, I have a few questions that speak to the importance that this committee places on responsiveness by all officials in the executive branch and that we expect and will be seeking from all of you.

So I would like to ask each of you to provide a simple yes or no answer to the following questions.

Do you agree to appear before this committee and make officials from your office available to the committee and designated staff when invited?

Ms. BITTER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. KNAPPER. Yes.

Ms. MEDINA. Yes. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. Do you commit to keep the committee fully and currently informed about the activities under your purview?

Ms. MEDINA. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. KNAPPER. Yes.

Ms. BITTER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you commit to engaging in meaningful consultation when policies are being developed, not just providing notification after the fact?

Ms. BITTER. Yes.

Ms. MEDINA. Yes.

Mr. KNAPPER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And finally, do you commit to promptly responding to requests for briefings and information requested by the committee and its designated staff?

Ms. BITTER. Yes.

Ms. MEDINA. Yes.

Mr. KNAPPER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. Thank you very much.

Ambassador Bitter, let me ask you, there is a lot of issues under what will be your portfolio. From the question of COVID vaccines for American citizens abroad, which will not be only within the responsibility of the Bureau of Consular Affairs but I cannot imagine that you will not be engaged in it, what do you think are the primary challenges for CA and the department, more broadly, on administering such a vaccine program in the face of a global pandemic for American citizens abroad?

Ms. BITTER. Thank you, Senator, I am aware of the concern that members of Congress have and also this issue, I know, is of great concern to many Americans. You know, the way that the department has approached this is that it has worked in the interagency to try to make sure that vaccines are available to countries who have yet to acquire them.

And then within the department, we have tried to make available consular information to Americans abroad to ensure that they are aware of how they can get access to vaccines where they are available and make sure that they have information about local medical providers in healthcare, and that is the general form of consular services to those abroad.

And if there are particular needs, of course, the embassies abroad are always prepared to address consular services and whatever needs American citizens have.

The department has not typically provided medical care to private citizens. So I think there would be many challenges attendant upon that, not least of which would simply be the issues involved in just administering the vaccines. It would be quite challenging.

The CHAIRMAN. I hope we will think about—and I understand that the department has not been involved in delivering health care services to citizens abroad, but in the global pandemic, I hope we will think about how we help an American citizen living abroad, maybe because of work or some other reason, to find access to a vaccine, because when a country has its own vaccination program, of course, it is focused on its own citizens and so that leaves an American citizen in limbo, potentially.

So I hope we will give a little thought to how we can create a greater connection for American citizens abroad in that context.

Let me turn to the question of passports. As you may know, an artifact of the COVID crisis is the department remains considerably backed up on passport processing at the National Passport Center.

I was listening to several of our colleagues on the committee and my own experience back in New Jersey of citizens for months who have applied for their passport and cannot get a response and, of course, with the opening of the world and the surge in demand, there is a greater demand.

Do you have a sense—I know you are not there, but in your briefings do you have a sense of the current backlog and what is your thoughts about working to clear it up?

Ms. BITTER. Thank you, Senator.

I am very aware of this issue and I know it is very important to you and to your constituents. It is important to the department as well, and just I share your concern about the length of time that it is currently taking, and the department takes very seriously its responsibility in this area.

It is a very visible part of the work that the department does and it is important to get secure and efficiently issued visa—passports, rather, out to American citizens as quickly as possible.

You know, like many organizations, the bureau and its partners have been faced with ramping up in a situation where COVID restrictions are lifting more slowly than demand is rising. So it is a pretty fast-moving situation.

The department is reviewing each passport agency according to the science and deciding when they can fully reopen. So it is an evolving situation.

I know, again, that this is something of great concern to you and I would be very happy to work with my colleagues in Congressional Affairs to make sure that members and your staff can get up to the minute briefings and the most recent information.

But right now, I think it is taking, between the passport office and its partners, up to 18 weeks for passports that are not expedited to be processed.

The CHAIRMAN. Yeah. Well, I will say that briefings are great. Actions are more important. What we really need is some type of surge capacity for a period of time to deal with the backlog.

I do not think that we can—many Americans, it is not just a question of travel for leisure, but it is travel for business again. It is travel to see family members who they may not have seen for well over a year and a half, two years, because of COVID. So it is about a family reunification issue as well.

I will tell the secretary as well, but I really urge you all to think about a surge capacity for a period of time to get us into a more reasonable period of time in which people have to wait.

Finally, not because there are not many more issues, but I appreciate the important work the department does to vet visas to assure there is no fraud and abuse.

But I can tell you I have a regular stream of complaints about the department's transparency and communication and sometimes its agility and responsiveness when it comes to processing visas for non-American family of U.S. citizens to visit the United States, student visas and work and business visas.

I am interested in your thoughts about where and how we can improve the visa application and processing system so that applicants, even if they are turned down, face an open, transparent, and rapid process that speaks to our best values as a nation.

I cannot tell you how many times—I know that an applicant has to overcome the hurdle of showing that they have roots in their country, that they are likely to return, that they are not likely to stay in the United States. I am very familiar with the immigration law in that respect. So that is a hurdle they must meet.

But I cannot tell you how many times I have had individuals who have properties in their country, businesses in their country, deep family ties in their country, and no reasonable expectation that they would stay in the United States, and many of them feel they get arbitrarily and capriciously just rejected.

So there is the feeling, you know, we want people in the world to think of the United States as a place that is welcoming and follows rules of law.

Yet, they feel that they have not had, so to speak, their day in court. I understand the incredible crush on consular officers. But we have to think of how we can process in a better way.

Do you have any thoughts on that?

Ms. BITTER. Thank you, Senator. I would not be telling the truth if I had not said to you that I have not heard those comments as well. I have. And I think they speak to issues of respect and issues of making sure that our consular officers are able to have what are sometimes quite quick interactions in a respectful and clear way. It can be a very challenging job.

But I am very conscious of the fact and we all are, in the department, and I know the Bureau of Consular Affairs is as well, that these officers are often the first or sometimes the only Americans that these host country nationals will meet, and it is enormously important that that interaction does reflect our values and does reflect the best that we have to offer.

So I take your point, and I share it and I share your concern, and if confirmed it would be my goal to make sure that every consular officer in every embassy and every interaction that they have with host country nationals reflects the diplomats that they are and reflects the best values of America.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. Thank you.

Senator Risch?

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

First of all, I want to associate myself with the remarks regarding a surge to get caught up on the visas and passports.

Certainly, one of the great freedoms Americans have is the freedom to travel and also to welcome their non-American family members here to the United States and it is important we get caught up on that, as we go forward.

I want to focus, however, on another area that the chairman and I are working together on and that is global health. We are here where we are on the pandemic and we are really focused on vaccines today, and that is important. It is very important.

I think the only way we are going to get past this is a good vaccine program not only in the United States but around the world.

But, more importantly, I think we need to look to the future, and I think one of the most important things that this committee can do is to work on a protocol for the future and establishing protocols and infrastructure that will get all of the countries pulling the wagon together to address a global pandemic.

That did not happen this time. We all know that. There were major flaws, major holes in various countries attempted to get through this.

And so the chairman and I have been working on global health policy and a global health bill, and I hope, Ms. Medina, that you will familiarize yourself with that and commit to helping us get in place an infrastructure protocol for dealing with these things when they happen immediately.

There is no substitute for being able to address the challenge immediately, and that is primarily what our legislation is designed to do.

We all know, and the stories are legion, as far as the failures right at the beginning of this pandemic that caused no end of problems for the world, including the number of deaths. And so I would like to hear your thoughts on that.

Ms. MEDINA. Senator Risch, thank you very much for that question. And as you know, when we discussed it in your office and with your staff, there is no higher priority for the Bureau of Oceans, Environment, and Science than dealing with the current crisis and preventing and preparing for future crises, and I look forward to working with you, if confirmed, to try and build up, bulk up, the ability of the bureau to be that repository of expertise and to prepare the U.S. for what is likely to be additional challenges like the one we faced in the future.

And I look forward to working with you on your legislation and to hearing your thoughts, if confirmed, about how we could do that together.

Senator RISCH. Well, thanks. And I will tell you that we all know the United States Government is big, it is complex, it has got many agencies, and there is an important function that Congress can play and, hopefully, we will play with legislation that the chairman and I have been working on as far as resolving who is in charge and who makes those decisions because, again, sometimes you get people of equal stature in the Government making conflicting decisions, and somebody has got to straighten that out, and this legislation attempts to address that and, hopefully, will address that.

In addition to that, of course, it is the same thing internationally, and that is establishing some type of structure internationally where these kind of questions can be answered and answered clearly.

We had a lot of gray areas particularly during the early parts of the pandemic, and these, in the best interest of the American people, in the best interest of the world, need to be straightened out and that responsibility is right here with the Foreign Relations Committee.

So we are attempting to discharge that responsibility. We will, certainly, look to you for your assistance and help, and we believe that the State Department is the appropriate place as a clearinghouse for making these kind of decisions.

And, again, I fully appreciate that we are focused on vaccine right now. But it is really important that we walk and chew gum at the same time and prepare for the next pandemic.

So with that, my time is up. Thank you.

Senator CARDIN [presiding]. I understand we have Senator Booker by WebEx who is next.

[Pause.]

Senator CARDIN. I understand he is not available. We will go to Senator Kaine.

Senator KAINE. Thank you to my colleagues and congratulation to the nominees for your appointments. I have questions. I have a million questions for all of you. But in five minutes, I am going to ask questions of Mr. Smith and Mr. Knapper.

Mr. Smith, Virginia is the home for training of security professionals who work not only for the State Department in the capacity center that you referenced in your opening statement at Fort Pickett in Blackstone, Virginia, but also the Marine security guards that protect our embassies around the world are trained at a wonderful facility at Quantico.

I have worked very hard as a member of this committee over the nine years I have served on it to advance the security training of our State Department professionals.

The siting of the training center at Fort Pickett was something I was very involved in in the early part of my time on the committee.

It has come a long way and I think there is even more that can be done there, and I would hope at some point, should you be confirmed, to possibly visit with you so we could assess together its current status and what more might be done to enhance the security training of State Department personnel.

Mr. SMITH. If confirmed, Senator, I look forward to that, and thank you for your support.

Senator KAINE. Right. Thank you so much.

And, Mr. Knapper, with respect to Vietnam, I traveled on a bipartisan CODEL to Vietnam in April of 2019. It was a tremendous visit, and we found so much interest in deeper partnerships with the United States on military cooperation.

There was appreciation for the U.S. role, led by Senator Leahy for decades now, to work on cleanup of dioxins and other contaminants at military bases in Vietnam, and the warm welcome we received from Vietnamese officials and the Vietnamese public was very heartwarming.

But of the number of concerns I have about Vietnam, one that is most significant is the deplorable absence of press freedom. The organizations that rank countries in the world for press freedom put Vietnam very low on the list of recent ranking. Had them 175th out of 180.

One of the things that seemed pretty vibrant in 2019 was, while the press was being cracked down on, there was still a pretty vibrant and open internet culture. But that has also been significantly constrained in the last two years.

What can the United States do? What would you do as ambassador, should you be confirmed, to try to promote broader notions of press and freedom and freedom of speech in Vietnam?

Mr. KNAPPER. Well, thank you, Senator, and thank you to you and your colleagues for the great support that Congress has provided our bilateral relationship over the years.

As for press freedoms and other freedoms in Vietnam, I fully agree. We have serious, serious concerns. This is something that, if confirmed, I will make a focus of mine.

I think one way we can seek to improve the situation is just to never miss an opportunity to raise with senior Vietnamese officials our deep concerns and to underline the point that our relationship will never reach its full potential unless we are able to see improvements in some of these areas, whether it is freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of assembly.

As you noted, the internet is increasingly a contested area for these basic freedoms and, you know, among the messages we can deliver to the Government of Vietnam is that they have signed on to a number of international treaties in which they have committed to support universal rights, such as those of freedom and assembly.

And so I think a point we can strongly make is that should Vietnam seek to earn its place in the international community as a leader it is going to have to abide by some of the commitments it has made internationally.

Senator KAINE. The last thing I will say about the U.S.-Vietnam relationship is one of the powerful, I think, attraction of the U.S. relationship to the Vietnamese people: Their deep concern about China and the historic animosity that they have had because of Chinese incursions into Vietnam.

Shortly before our visit, there were massive protests all around Vietnam that were a little bit unusual, street protests, and they were fomented by the Communist Party leadership of Vietnam prepping to do sort of a sweetheart deal where China and Chinese companies would be able to come into an economic zone without really any competition from anyone else.

And it was notable to see that the Vietnamese Government wanted to do it, that the Vietnamese people took to the streets to stop them from doing it, and that at least in some temporary way it caused the Communist Party leadership of Vietnam to step back.

There is a deep desire for deeper relationship with the United States to be a counterpoint to a China that has been so often an aggressor against Vietnam, and that is important for us to know and it is important for us to contemplate as we seek to build a deeper relationship with Vietnam.

I look forward to working with all of you should you be confirmed. Very high qualified panel.

Thank you. I yield back.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you.

Senator Hagerty?

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you, Senator Cardin, and congratulations to each of you for being nominated today.

I take particular interest in one of our nominees. That is Ambassador-to-be Marc Knapper.

Marc, I am delighted to see that Suzuko and Alex have joined you today. I would say this—that I am certain Colonel Roger Knapper is smiling today, too. I am sure he takes a great deal of pride in your career.

It has been my great honor to have served with you for the past four years working with you, and I also take a great deal of pride in the fact that you are sitting here today.

I am also very optimistic. I think that you will be confirmed and I think that you are going to work with a great team—my former DCM, Joe Young, Dan Kritenbrink, I think, at EAP. We are going to be very well represented in an area that presents great strategic challenges for America today.

So I am very, very pleased to see you here. You know, America is challenged in the South China Sea like never before. The world is challenged in the South China Sea like never before, because of the claims that China continues to maintain, I think, without foundation to sovereignty over much of that region.

You have had unique experience, Marc. You have had experience in Japan. You have had experience in Hanoi. You have had experience dealing with India on the India desk, with China and Mongolia, and, certainly, you did a wonderful job as DCM and charge d'affaires in South Korea.

You understand this region. I see great opportunity between Vietnam and the United States from an economic standpoint that has been manifest. We have seen great trajectory there. I think economic ties support strategic ties.

But what I would really like to talk about for a moment is the strategic opportunity that Vietnam presents for the United States, for our Quad partners, and for the safety and security of that region. I would love to get your thoughts on the role that you would play and help lead as our Ambassador to Vietnam.

Mr. KNAPPER. Thank you very much, Senator, and thank you very much for your kind words about my family.

I mean, you are absolutely right. Right now, I think our shared view with Vietnam is that there is no greater challenge we face right now than that of China, China's aggressive and provocative behavior, particularly some of its sweeping and unlawful maritime claims in the South China Sea, what it is doing along the Mekong River, damming and releasing water, causing deep, deep problems for 66 million people who live along that river and rely upon it for their livelihoods.

If confirmed, Senator, I will make a priority deepening our strategic relationship with Vietnam. Right now, we have what we call a comprehensive partnership. We hope to raise it to a strategic partnership, and I will take steps to do that by strengthening even further our security relationship with Vietnam.

This is something that you mentioned, Ambassador Kritenbrink. He did a great job over three years in bringing us to the next level.

I would like to take us further. I think deepening our economic partnership by opening the market there further to American agricultural goods, digital services.

As you said, strengthening our trade and economic ties can only benefit our strategic sort of interactions and our strategic sort of interdependence. And so this, if confirmed, will be a priority of mine, as well as deepening our people-to-people ties.

The shoulders upon which all of our efforts with Vietnam stand are the ties between our two peoples, whether it is young people going back and forth, students studying in each other's countries. And so that will also be, sir, a priority of mine, if confirmed.

Senator HAGERTY. Well, thank you very much. I look forward to working with you along all of those lines and know that you have a strong ally in the United States Senate, only with me but with the members of this committee, in achieving these goals.

Could I turn to you, Ambassador Bitter?

There is an area, again related to China, which is a deep concern of mine. I am certain that you are aware of this concern, and that is overseas students coming from China that pose a security threat to the nation.

I would just like to ask you in very specific terms if you are familiar with the Executive Order 10043. That executive order suspends the entry of certain students and researchers from the People's Republic of China.

Ms. BITTER. Yes, Senator.

Senator HAGERTY. And if you are confirmed, do you agree to notify me and this committee if there are any changes made to that executive order?

Ms. BITTER. Yes, Senator.

Senator HAGERTY. And in the meantime, do you agree to uphold the tenets of that executive order?

Ms. BITTER. Yes, Senator.

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you very much, Ambassador. I appreciate it.

I yield back.

The CHAIRMAN. [presiding]. Thank you. Senator Cardin?

Senator CARDIN. Well, first, let me thank all four of our nominees for their service to our country and our willingness to continue to serve our nation. We thank you. We thank your families. We know that this is very much a family commitment.

Ambassador Bitter, I would like to start with you. I just want to concur with Senator Menendez's comments in regards to the passport issues. And as Senator Menendez said, you are not responsible for the current backlog. Eighteen weeks is unacceptable. Unacceptable.

We have constituents who, in good faith, have made travel plans, expecting that if they requested a passport document that it would be done in a matter of a few months, not four months.

And some are suffering now extreme economic hardships as well as personal hardships not being able to get those documents and they do not fall into the narrow definition of a life's emergency that would require more immediate action.

We are also concerned that some have requested passport support months ago, may not even be at the front of the line in regards to people who are now requesting help. And again, we recognize that you are not responsible for the current circumstances.

I thought Senator Menendez made an excellent point about the need for surge. I would like to get your commitment that this will receive your priority, if confirmed, and that we cannot allow an 18-week backlog in passport applications.

Ms. BITTER. Yes, Senator, you have my commitment. I share your concern and it will be my top priority, if confirmed.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you very much.

Mr. Knapper, I want to follow up on the questions that were asked by Senator Kaine in regards to Vietnam. I have been to Vietnam. Vietnam, certainly, is a much different country than it was when we were at war with Vietnam.

We have made significant progress in improving our relationship between our two countries. We were on the path towards the Trans-Pacific Partnership on a good governance section that was important to deal with the corruption in the country and good governance.

Vietnam was making progress, I would suggest, on basic human rights even though it is an authoritarian government, and now we have seen a backsliding, as Senator Kaine said, on freedom of the media.

I could also add the right of their citizens to peacefully protest their government has been very much infringed upon. And they have now changed their cyber laws in regards to comments about history can be now challenged by the Government and infringing upon the use of the internet.

These are trends that are very disturbing, and I would like to drill down a little bit more about your strategies for dealing with the human rights issues in Vietnam, and how you will keep us informed and work with us as we look at the tools that we have given the administration to advance human rights and making sure that they are used fully in Vietnam.

Mr. KNAPPER. Well, thank you, Senator.

I think one area in which we have seen progress over the past few years have been in the expansion of rights afforded to women, minorities, people with disabilities, members of the LGBT community, and I think one of the ways we were able to secure and see these advances was thanks to sort of increased cooperation with and assistance to the NGOs and activists within Vietnam who work within these specific areas and with these groups.

And so, if confirmed, I would seek to not only continue the great work that the U.S. Government has done, not just with activist groups and NGOs within Vietnam but also groups in the United States—the Vietnamese-American community, for example—to identify problematic areas, to try and identify potential strategies and tactics, going forward, because this is absolutely a priority area for me personally.

I worked on these issues 15 years ago when I previously served in Vietnam, and it will continue to be an area of focus for me and for Mission Vietnam. And you absolutely have my commitment to work with you and your colleagues, sir, in the Congress to look for opportunities and tools to further seek to improve the situation there in Vietnam.

Thank you.

Senator CARDIN. I would just add that it is very important that our mission in Vietnam support the NGOs and civil society groups that are working to advance these priorities so that our embassy is always a home for those who have roles to improve the governance in Vietnam and sometimes need the support of our embassy.

And I see you are shaking your head yes and I will just put your shaking of the head yes into the record.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will yield back.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. I prefer an oral answer when I ask you a question, but I do not want to interpret your headshaking as a yes and then maybe you tell me later on it was a no. So—

Mr. KNAPPER. Well, it was actually a head nodding, Senator.

[Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Okay.

I understand there are no other members.

Oh, I am sorry. Senator Van Hollen just walked in.

Senator Van Hollen?

Senator Van Hollen: All right. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Risch, and to all of you, congratulations on your nomination.

And let me start, if I could, with you, Ambassador Bitter, and I know Chairman Menendez asked you some questions about the current backlog in passport processing.

You know, obviously, we have been through a very difficult time with COVID. I recognize that, and the State Department has had to deal with all of the pressures that that brings.

In our state office, we have gone from things like small business access to PPP loans being the top priority and other issues to now number one relates to getting passports, where my understanding is we now have about a four-and-a-half-month average backlog.

And the other big issue, of course, is as families now have the opportunity to reunite and visit with friends, the issue of visas for people coming just to visit family and friends in the United States.

Can you talk about what we can do right now to address these issues and what, if confirmed, you would do?

Ms. BITTER. Thank you, Senator.

I am very aware of these issues, and I should take this opportunity, of course, to thank Congress for the support that it has given to the bureau over the last several months.

As all of you know, the bureau is under tremendous financial pressure since the start of the pandemic, and Congress has been enormously responsive in filling some of those gaps and allowing the bureau to continue to deliver consular services.

But so I know that the bureau is very grateful and that it will be continuing to engage with Congress on future budgets.

I just want to point out that these issues are not just money related. So while the U.S. is experiencing a return to what feels a little like normal, our posts overseas are still working under some pandemic space constraints, which means that they cannot offer the same number of appointments that they used to because they cannot have the same number of people in their waiting room.

So these restrictions are very important. They protect our staff, they protect the customers, they protect the community, but they do limit possibility to provide services.

And as a result, what has happened is my colleagues overseas have had to make some difficult prioritization decisions about how to use the space that is available to them.

If confirmed, this is very much job one. I recognize that visas also impact your community with respect to small businesses maybe relying on workers overseas that are unable to get back, family reunification, all of those issues. Right now it is a very difficult time.

Senator Van Hollen: Well, thank you for that statement. You know, this is the area where our constituents most frequently interact with the State Department, right, and so that is where they are really feeling the presence or lack of responsiveness and services.

So our office is working very closely with the team at the State Department. We are grateful for the relationship we have. But this is a big, big issue, the visa part but also just getting a passport for U.S. citizens who is here.

Ms. Medina, thank you for your testimony, and I appreciate your mentioning the issue of biodiversity, as you mentioned, and we are seeing a disappearance of biodiversity at alarming rates around the world and look forward to working with you on those issues, going forward.

Mr. Smith, thank you for taking on this assignment. As you well know, you know, Foreign Service officers go into the Foreign Service to really get to know and interact with the countries where they are serving.

And so while it is absolutely true that we have to provide security, I hope, as you think this through, you will also find ways to make sure that our Foreign Service officers overseas can interact with the rest of the population. Otherwise, they might as well just be in D.C.

In Kabul, we have, of course, a particularly immediate situation, and I know you will be monitoring that very carefully with respect to the situation there.

Finally, if I could, Mr. Knapper, congratulations on your nomination to Vietnam. Lots of issues to cover.

But let me just ask you about one, because over the past several years we have seen Vietnamese authorities increase their scrutiny over Vietnamese citizens' activities on the internet and social media, cracking down on any kind of free expression, requiring U.S. and other internet-based companies and social media companies to force them to comply with laws that can crack down on people's speech or try to force them.

Can you just talk briefly about how we are dealing with that situation?

Mr. KNAPPER. Well, thank you, Senator.

The one specific case right now that is attracting the most attention, of course, is that of Facebook, and the Vietnamese Government, in some instances, demanding that Facebook removed certain posts that it finds offensive or contrary to political order, so to speak.

And right now, the U.S. embassy in Hanoi, we are working very closely with Facebook folks on the ground there as well as the Vietnamese Government to try and find a way forward that, again, preserves the space on Facebook and other social networking sites to allow for free speech and to allow for the free expression of political and other views, and also just allowing an American company to be able to operate without a threat of its data being cut off or throttled, is the term that they use.

But, if confirmed, Senator, I will absolutely focus on this as a human rights issue, but also as a press freedom issue.

Thank you.

Senator Van Hollen: I appreciate that. As you say, it is really part of the larger, I think, growing challenge in Vietnam with respect to human rights. But thank you all for your testimony.

Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Some final questions.

Ambassador Smith, as I mentioned in my opening remarks, I am deeply concerned about what seems to be an emerging threat of directed energy attacks targeting U.S. personnel and our ability to pivot and adequately protect them and their families in the face of these attacks.

I hope that will be a major focus for you upon your confirmation?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, it will, Senator, and I look forward to engaging as we progress on this issue.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, that is incredibly important to us because, you know, we ask our people to do incredible work for the United States. We put them, sometimes, in harm's way. We need to do everything possible to protect them.

And this is something that seems to be challenging and escaping us. So I hope this will become one of your highest priorities upon taking office.

One of the most significant challenges I can see on the horizon is the security at Embassy Kabul. What is your current assessment—I know you are not there yet but from your experience of our ability to ensure the safety and security of the embassy compound?

And will you commit to keeping the committee updated on the steps that Diplomatic Security has taken to ensure the safety of U.S. personnel?

Mr. SMITH. If confirmed, Senator, yes, I will commit to that. Afghanistan will continue to garner a lot of attention, particularly as U.S. forces continue to withdraw, and it is going to be important for Diplomatic Security to remain very much engaged both with our colleagues and contacts here and also with the Afghan forces on the ground to see how they can help to enhance our security operations.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, if you, when you get confirmed, I hope you will give us an assessment of what is needed, if anything is needed beyond what we have.

And also Port-au-Prince—we, obviously, have an ongoing difficult situation in Port-au-Prince. I know you will pay attention globally. But these are some hotspots that I think we need to pay attention to.

Do you have any sense of that, our embassy at Port-au-Prince?

Mr. SMITH. Again, I agree with you that Port-au-Prince is definitely a point of concern at this moment. I have not received any additional briefings on the activities there beyond what is in the open source.

But look forward, if confirmed, to focusing very, very clearly and specifically on that activity as well.

The CHAIRMAN. Okay. We will look forward to hearing from you once you are confirmed.

Mr. Knapper, finally, as you contemplate the possibilities of taking the relationship that we have with Vietnam to the next level and inaugurating a genuine strategic partnership, an aspiration I certainly support, how will you balance our very real shared strategic interests with Vietnam with our ongoing human rights concern?

A couple years back we had the president of Vietnam here. It was a very interesting exchange. First time in my 30 years of doing foreign policy and sitting with foreign dignitaries that he did not take any questions.

And it is not our process in the committee when we are meeting with a head of state to allow them to ramble along and eventually never take a question.

That was emblematic, in my mind, of what is going on in Vietnam. What sort of linkages or conditioning do you think is appropriate and constructive as we consider additional military security, economic or diplomatic engagement, with Vietnam?

Mr. KNAPPER. Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

I think you really have nailed the challenge that we face. It is, you know, how do we address our shared strategic interests in the region with Vietnam while staying true to our values regarding human rights, religious freedom, other areas.

And I think, if confirmed, I would like to build upon the good progress we have made so far. We have been able to keep that balance, I believe, between ensuring that our values related to universal human rights are upheld and asserted in our high-level conversations with the Vietnamese Government, but at the same time recognizing that in Vietnam we have no stronger or more vocal partner within ASEAN when it comes to speaking out against the challenge that China poses in the South China Sea and elsewhere in the region.

So as I mentioned earlier, Mr. Chairman, I think there are ways to point out to our Vietnamese Government and Communist Party of Vietnam interlocutors that there will be limitations to how much our relationship can grow under the circumstances in which we have concerns about human rights and religious freedom.

And I think we have to make clear that as we do consider ways to expand the relationship that we will let them know that there are potential breaks on progress that we will have to consider.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Ms. Medina, I do not want you to think that I—you have no object of my affection or interest. So but between your statement—your answers with Senator Risch and Senator Markey’s incredible description of your history, I think you have answered the issues I am concerned about.

So we look forward to working with you upon your confirmation. Global health for myself and for the ranking member is a critical issue, and while it may not seem in the title of your position to be the focal point, it is a focal point for this committee. So we will look forward to working with you on that.

With no other member, as I understand it, either virtually or present, to come before the committee, the record will remain open until the close of business on Wednesday, July the 14th for questions.

I would urge the nominees if you get questions for the record to answer them fully expeditiously so we can consider your nominations at a business meeting.

And with the thanks of the committee for your willingness to serve, this hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 11:27 a.m., the committee was adjourned.]

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. GENTRY O. SMITH BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Risk Tolerance for Diplomats Abroad

Question. Diplomacy is an inherently dangerous business, and effective diplomacy cannot be conducted without accepting some degree of risk.

- How do you think the culture should change at the State Department to accommodate more risk management as opposed to risk avoidance?

Answer. I agree that the Department must balance the essential need to protect our people with the need to engage our partners around the world to advance U.S. interests. Department leadership acknowledges that our national security mission entails diverse types of risk and is committed to managing it appropriately. The Bureau of Diplomatic Security (DS) goes to great lengths to facilitate our nation’s diplomacy in challenging places, including high-threat locations, and welcomes further efforts, including with Congress, to ensure that the Department is able to meet mission objectives while protecting our personnel.

To quote Secretary Blinken, “The safety and security of our personnel abroad should not be politicized, nor should we assume negligence if, and when, prudent, calculated risk decisions play out with negative consequences.”

Question. How do you view your role in promoting that cultural shift in the department? What specifically could you do as assistant secretary—if confirmed—that would better enable our diplomats to get outside our posts abroad and advance America's interests?

Answer. This is an issue that, if confirmed, I intend to examine closely, in concert with senior Department leadership, especially with regard to what the Department can do to further enable diplomacy in High Threat/High Risk locations. Department leadership acknowledges that our national security mission entails diverse types of risk and is committed to managing these risks appropriately. My experience has been that the Bureau of Diplomatic Security goes to great lengths to facilitate our nation's diplomacy in challenging places, including high-threat locations, and welcomes further efforts, including with Congress, to ensure that the Department is able to meet mission objectives while protecting our personnel.

Talent Retention

Question. The Bureau for Diplomatic Security (DS) loses a lot of mid-level officers at the senior-two and senior-three levels for many reasons, but two frequent ones are lack of jobs at their level that reflect interest/ability and lack of promotion opportunities due to the limited number of positions available.

- If confirmed, what can you do as Assistant Secretary to address the loss of mid-level officers?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to working with senior Department leadership to look at ways to retain existing staff and expand opportunities for mid-level officers. We will continue to engage with Global Talent Management to assess the availability of positions at all levels and ensure that we provide all officers ample opportunities to compete for promotion.

Question. What policies or internal measures can you pursue to help address the loss of mid-level officers who leave due to the lack of promotion potential?

Answer. DS recognizes that mid-level officers have expressed concerns regarding assignments and the slow pace of promotions. In the past we sought to address concerns by reclassifying some positions to provide more opportunities for advancement. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Global Talent Management's leadership to explore additional ways to address these concerns.

Resources

Question. DS has multiple responsibilities that sometimes lead to a competition for resources. How do you feel DS should prioritize resources to the various missions?

Answer. The safety of our personnel and security of our information and facilities are among the Department's highest priorities. Congress has been very supportive to DS in providing the resources it has requested. If confirmed, I intend to work with Department leadership and this committee to prioritize resources to its various missions.

Key Personnel Skills

Question. The State Department faces a shortage of speakers of critical languages. Many of our pool of qualified speakers have close family ties to countries where the language is needed. Do you feel the current DS system of issuing preclusions adequately mitigates CI vulnerabilities that are identified during the background investigation?

Answer. The State Department is committed to a diverse, skilled workforce. Some assignment limitations are preclusions that reflect the Department's inability to accredit diplomats to foreign countries of which they are citizens or to foreign countries that consider them citizens. In adjudicating security clearances, the Department utilizes the whole person concept to determine whether facts and circumstances indicate that eligibility is clearly consistent with the national security interests of the United States. Any doubt is resolved in favor of national security. Part of this process identifies potential CI vulnerabilities and considers whether they are mitigated under the National Security Adjudicative Guidelines. The Department is committed to protecting its employees and national security information.

Programming

Question. Where does DS programming fit within the broader Department of State and interagency security sector capacity building structure and related planning processes?

Answer. Diplomatic Security is an important contributor to security capacity building in partner nations around the globe. DS serves as the primary implementer of the Department's Antiterrorism Assistance (ATA) program, which provides selected foreign governments with counterterrorism training, equipment, and technical assistance in coordination with policy guidance and funding provided by the Bureau of Counterterrorism. Regional Security Officers (RSOs) frequently work with host country governments, local organizations, and other diplomatic missions to provide advisory security opinions to schools, hospitals, and similar institutions.

Question. What are DS's comparative advantages in the U.S. Government's security sector capacity building framework and tool set?

Answer. Numerous U.S. Government agencies have resources and skills that can contribute to assisting foreign development beneficial to the national interest. While Diplomatic Security possess its own impressive cadre of security professionals and world class training and assistance programs, DS' greatest asset is in the organization's status as a security and law enforcement agency and integral part of the Foreign Service. DS personnel are trained investigators, cyber experts, security engineers, analysts, and diplomats. That broad functionality allows DS to soundly evaluate and deploy needed security and training assistance, whether those efforts ultimately originate from within DS or from another agency.

Question. How can DS better leverage these advantages to further political goals?

Answer. Diplomatic Security should continue its role as the lead law enforcement representative on an embassy's Country Team. A Regional Security Officer's ability to advise a Chief of Mission on both diplomatic and security consequences assures that U.S. foreign policy goals are examined from both a political and security dimension.

Havana Syndrome

Question. Between late 2016 and May 2018, the State Department found that certain Embassy Havana community members suffered a series of unexplained injuries, including hearing loss and cognitive issues. Many other U.S. Government officials in other countries have experienced similar incidents.

- If confirmed, will you commit to continuing the investigation into the circumstances surrounding the sonic attacks?

Answer. If confirmed, I intend to continue to prioritize the application of DS' technical and investigative talent to support the investigation to identify the source and cause of these unexplained health incidents. I look forward to working with Congress on this very important issue.

Question. Will you seek to ensure the safety and security of U.S. diplomatic personnel in Havana and other posts where personnel were injured?

Answer. There is no higher priority for the Department or for me than the safety and security of our personnel and this certainly includes mitigating against unexplained health incidents. I know that this issue is a top priority for Secretary Blinken. If confirmed I will work closely with the interagency to fully apply DS technical and investigation resources to ensure that our efforts to determine cause and attribution remain a priority.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to work constructively with other government agencies on finding the cause of the attacks as well as on how best to support those U.S. Government employees who have been injured?

Answer. If confirmed, I intend to continue coordinating with multiple agencies to identify the source and cause of these reported injuries. In addition, I intend to focus on ways to strengthen the already robust mitigation efforts that are taking place to further enhance the safety and security of all USG personnel and family members overseas under our security responsibility.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to regularly sharing new information, including updates on any live investigations, to Congress?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work through the Bureau of Legislative Affairs to ensure that Congress promptly has the information it needs to perform its Constitutional obligations, consistent with obligations involving interagency information and existing practices for the protection of law enforcement activities.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. GENTRY O. SMITH BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Risk Management

Question. Some former State Department officials, Members of Congress, and other stakeholders have expressed concern with what they view as a growing level of risk intolerance at U.S. missions abroad, especially at high-risk posts, which they maintain inhibits U.S. diplomats from effectively fulfilling their mandates. I am considering a hearing on this topic in my subcommittee.

- What is your view on the State Department's current diplomatic security risk management approach? In your view, how, if at all, should the current approach be adjusted more towards risk tolerance or, alternatively, more towards mitigating risks facing U.S. diplomats and other personnel under Chief of Mission Authority?

Answer. I agree that the Department must balance the essential need to protect our people with the need to engage our partners around the world to advance U.S. interests. Department leadership acknowledges that our national security mission entails diverse types of risk and is committed to managing it appropriately. The Bureau of Diplomatic Security (DS) goes to great lengths to facilitate our nation's diplomacy in challenging places, including high-threat locations, and welcomes further efforts, including with Congress, to ensure that the Department is able to meet mission objectives while protecting our personnel.

To quote Secretary Blinken, "The safety and security of our personnel abroad should not be politicized, nor should we assume negligence if, and when, prudent, calculated risk decisions play out with negative consequences."

Question. What is your view of the Accountability Review Board (ARB) process? Do you believe the ARB process is excessively tilted toward finding someone to blame in the case of a security incident, or alternatively, does action need to be taken to ensure accountability? What kinds of adjustments, if any, would you suggest Congress make to the ARB process?

Answer. The Department recognizes that the advancement of foreign policy inherently involves diverse types of risk, and that taking considered risks can be essential to advancing U.S. interests. If confirmed, I would welcome working with Congress to look at ways to improve the ARB process.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. GENTRY O. SMITH BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. Since 2016, U.S. personnel posted to the Embassy in Havana, Cuba have reported a common set of symptoms now referred to as "Havana Syndrome." Since then, these symptoms have been reported in many other countries hosting U.S. diplomats, including China and Russia. These often debilitating injuries present a major risk to U.S. diplomatic personnel there.

- What is your assessment of the risks present to U.S. diplomatic personnel assigned to Havana?

Answer. If confirmed, I will closely assess the situation in coordination with Department of State stakeholders and interagency partners.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. RENA BITTER BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. Last year's travel restrictions and the resulting loss of visa fee revenue negatively impacted Consular Affairs' finances. Now, as vaccination rates climb and more people seek to travel, demand for passports and visas are rapidly increasing, leading to significant delays in processing times for passports and visas. Some of these delays take extra months. If confirmed, what is your plan to reduce lengthy passport processing times?

Answer. If confirmed, my number one priority will be the reduction of service backlogs impacting both our domestic passport agencies and our overseas posts. Prior to COVID-19, our domestic passport service standards were up to three weeks for expedited applications, and up to eight weeks for routine applications. It is my goal to return to these timelines as quickly as possible, not only through the use of overtime and increased hiring, but also by exploring how we might utilize Department staff to surge domestic passport processing capacity. Addressing visa backlogs overseas will require solutions tailored to the unique needs of each post, but I will devote myself and the CA team to identifying and implementing these solutions as quickly as possible.

Question. It appears that the Biden administration is not currently prioritizing visas for seasonal workers and other business-related needs. How are you going to better balance the needs of our small and medium-sized businesses, who often rely on seasonal workers to survive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue efforts to sustain the long-standing program of temporary workers coming to the United States, which is vital to maintaining supply chains for food and other critical items. In addition, I will seek to continue existing policies to waive the in-person interview requirement for certain first-time H-2 applicants and those renewing within 48 months. These provisions will continue to permit the processing of many H-2 applications without the need for an in-person appearance, which creates efficiencies in processing while still adhering to COVID health protocols.

Question. Upon a determination by the Secretary of State that the detention of a United States national abroad is unlawful or wrongful, how will you work to efficiently transfer such cases from the Bureau of Consular Affairs to the Special Envoy for Hostage Affairs?

Answer. The Bureau of Consular Affairs (CA) works closely with the Office of the Special Presidential Envoy for Hostage Affairs (S/SPEHA) and other Department offices to implement the Robert Levinson Hostage Recovery and Hostage-Taking Accountability Act. CA works hand in hand with S/SPEHA, the relevant regional bureau, post, and the Department's Office of the Legal Adviser to develop recommendations on individual cases. When a detention is determined to be wrongful, the transfer of the case to S/SPEHA is a smooth and efficient process. If confirmed, I pledge to help facilitate continued close collaboration.

Question. How do you plan to ensure that all families with relatives held abroad are given timely access to information?

Answer. The U.S. Department of State has no greater responsibility than the protection of U.S. citizens overseas. Some of our most vulnerable U.S. citizens abroad are those who are arrested or detained in a foreign country. Consular officers stand ready to provide all appropriate consular services in cases where U.S. citizens are detained and arrested abroad. We will continue to work with local authorities to ensure our embassies or consulates are notified of a U.S. citizen arrest, and our consular officers will seek access to the citizen without delay. Consistent with the decision of the detained citizen and in line with the Privacy Act, consular officers provide status updates to family members as soon as possible. I pledge, if confirmed, that CA will continue to prioritize service to these U.S. citizens including providing as much information as possible to their families.

Question. What steps will you take to improve the Bureau of Consular of Affairs with regards to United States nationals held abroad?

Answer. With all detentions, consular officers seek prompt access to ensure detained U.S. citizen prisoners are:

- receiving adequate food and necessary medical care;
- not being mistreated;
- able to access legal counsel;
- having communications facilitated with their families consistent with their preferences under the Privacy Act, and
- receiving all substantive and procedural protections under local law and fair trial guarantees consistent with international obligations, including human rights law.

If confirmed, I will seek to ensure individuals have access to any medication or medical attention they may need and highlight our concerns to local authorities, that officers also assist with the transfer of funds from family and friends in the United States to pay for attorneys' fees, food, and medicine while incarcerated, and that they raise concerns and protests regarding credible allegations of mistreatment. In cases where potential indications of a wrongful detention exist, I will ensure CA consults with S/SPEHA and other relevant Department offices on whether a wrongful detention determination by the Secretary as called for under the Levinson Act might be appropriate.

SUBMITTED TO HON. RENA BITTER BY SENATOR TIM KAINE

Question. State Department statistics released this month show fewer children are being successfully returned to the U.S. following parental abduction than before—See <https://bit.ly/3nExd6J>

The percentage of children returned to the U.S. as share of all reported outgoing abductions has steadily dropped from 2011 to 2020.) While recognizing that not all returns to the U.S. are for cases that happened in previous years, we are nonetheless concerned by the apparent decreases in proportion of children returned to the U.S.

- To what do you attribute this decline?

Answer. Each child’s case, and each country, is unique. If confirmed, I will ensure the Bureau of Consular Affairs continues to assist parents seeking the return of their abducted children and to engage with countries to promote procedures to achieve better outcomes for children and families in child abduction cases. I will direct our focus to those countries cited for demonstrating a “pattern of noncompliance” in our Annual Report to Congress on International Child Abduction, and those countries that are not party to the Hague Abduction Convention, as these are the countries from which it may be the most challenging to resolve cases.

In referring to the data publicly shared by the Department, I am also encouraged to observe that from 2010 to 2019, there was more than a 50 percent drop in the number of international parental child abductions reported to the Department. If confirmed, I will ensure the Bureau of Consular Affairs continues its robust efforts in collaboration with U.S. Customs and Border Protection to prevent these abductions from occurring in the first place.

Question. What would you do as Assistant Secretary to more forcefully and effectively advocate for the return of abducted children to the U.S.?

Answer. Consular Affairs has no more important role than the protection of U.S. citizens abroad, especially children wrongly removed or retained abroad by a parent from their U.S. homes. If confirmed, I will prioritize our engagement on international parental child abductions with both our Hague Convention partners and non-partner countries, with special focus on the 11 countries cited for demonstrating a “pattern of noncompliance” in our 2021 Annual Report to Congress on International Child Abduction. I will ensure we use every effective means to get these countries to work with the United States to quickly resolve these cases and help parents bring their abducted children home.

Question. If confirmed, would you support efforts to routinely inform parents applying for passports for minor children about the potential for international child abduction?

Answer. If confirmed, I will maintain the Bureau of Consular Affairs’ priority focus on the prevention of international parental child abduction. All recipients of a U.S. passport currently receive a flyer advising them of the risks of international parental child abduction and providing contact information for the Office of Children’s Issues. I am also encouraged that close to 55,000 children are actively enrolled in the Children’s Passport Issuance Alert program, and I will continue the Department’s work to strengthen this important child abduction prevention program.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. RENA BITTER BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. The COVID–19 pandemic has placed an incredible strain on the State Department’s ability to process visas. This is, in part, due to the need to protect the safety and health of our diplomats in countries where the pandemic is still uncontrolled. However, as countries increase the vaccination of their citizens and the spread of the pandemic decreases, the U.S. should resume regular consular services in many countries.

- If confirmed, how do you plan to address the consular services backlog?

Answer. If confirmed, my number one priority will be the reduction of service backlogs at both our domestic passport agencies and our overseas posts. Prior to COVID-19, our domestic passport service standards were up to three weeks for expedited applications, and up to eight weeks for routine applications. It is my goal to return to these timelines as quickly as possible, not only through the use of overtime and increased hiring, but also by exploring how we might utilize Department staff to surge domestic passport processing capacity. Addressing visa backlogs overseas will require solutions tailored to the unique needs of each post, but I will devote myself and the CA team to identifying and implementing these solutions as quickly as possible.

Question. One consequence of the shutdown of consular services in most embassies has been the practice of referring citizens in one country to have their interviews conducted in another country. For example, ordinary Cubans have had to travel to Guyana.

- In your opinion, what message does it send to ordinary Cubans when they have to travel to Guyana to process their visas, but the Cuban baseball team was able to get visas in Havana to play a game in the U.S. earlier this year?

Answer. I am sympathetic to the financial and other difficulties Cuban citizens face in applying for visas and recognize there are humanitarian reasons that individuals may want to seek an appointment with the consular section in Havana. The U.S. Embassy suspended routine visa services following the ordered departure of non-emergency personnel in September 2017. The consular section must also comply with Cuban COVID-19 restrictions. Embassy Havana continues to provide emergency assistance to U.S. citizens in Cuba, and to provide limited non-immigrant visa services including for medical emergencies and official and diplomatic travelers. I am hopeful future conditions may permit a reevaluation of what services can be provided by the Embassy.

Question. During the Trump administration, the State Department decided to allow Americans born in Jerusalem to list "Israel" as their place of birth in their passports. This is a policy and is reflective of U.S. law that recognizes Jerusalem as the capital of Israel.

- If confirmed, do you commit to upholding this policy decision?

Answer. If confirmed, I have no plans to seek to change the Department's current policy regarding the place of birth listed on U.S. passports for U.S. citizens born in Jerusalem.

Question. The Visa Waiver program is an initiative that allows citizens of participating countries to travel to the U.S. for 90 days without a Visa. Many of the participating countries are among our strongest allies and partners, such as the United Kingdom, Ireland, Japan, South Korea, and Taiwan. For several years, the State Department has worked to include Israel in the Visa Waiver program.

- If confirmed, do you commit to working with Israel on these efforts?

Answer. The Secretary of Homeland Security, in consultation with the Secretary of State, may designate countries for participation in the Visa Waiver Program when and if the country meets established statutory and policy criteria. I commit to continuing the efforts to work with Israel on its progress to qualify for designation into the program.

Question. In 2014 the Obama administration agreed to afford multi-entry, non-immigrant visas (B1/B2) with ten years' validity to qualified PRC nationals. Now that two subsequent administrations have determined that the PRC is a strategic competitor, and have sought to calibrate U.S. policy accordingly, it is time to revisit the risks associated with visa policy.

- If confirmed, do you commit to evaluate the security risks of providing multi-entry visas of such long duration to PRC nationals, particularly Chinese Communist Party members and military personnel?

Answer. Yes, I will work with the administration and the Department to evaluate all security risks posed by the People's Republic of China. We maintain robust vetting of all non-immigrant visa applications, including for B1/B2 visas, under our longstanding Security Advisory Opinion process. In addition, the Department and its partners continuously vet all visa holders and may revoke a visa at any time if we identify potential security concerns. Currently, B1, B2, and B1/B2 non-immigrant visas are limited to one-month, single-entry for members of the Chinese Communist Party, as well as their spouses and unmarried children under the age of 21. This change went into effect in December 2020 and is being applied at all visa units worldwide. We will continue to assess how to update and adapt visa vetting processing to best address threats to U.S. national security. Presidential Proclamation 10043, which went into effect on June 1, 2020, has also suspended the entry of PRC students and researchers with ties to China's Military-Civil Fusion.

SUBMITTED TO HON. RENA BITTER BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

Question. COVID-19 has wreaked havoc on the State Department's ability to meet passport and visa demand. Right now, wait times for a new U.S. passport are 18 weeks for routine services and 12 weeks for expedited services.

Relatedly, many U.S. embassies and consulates around the world are still only processing non-immigrant visas in emergency situations. For those that are issuing visas, the estimated wait time to receive an interview appointment can range from a couple of weeks for a student visa to months for a tourist visa.

As you can imagine, I have received a great deal of correspondence from constituents who are exasperated for themselves and family members as they seek to travel around the world.

- What plans do you have in mind to address these severe backlogs? What do you intend to do on Day 1 to help get Consular Affairs back on track?

Answer. If confirmed, my number one priority will be the reduction of service backlogs impacting both our domestic passport agencies and our overseas posts. Prior to COVID-19, our passport service standards were two to three weeks for expedited applications, and six to eight weeks for regular applications. It is my goal to return to these timelines as quickly as possible, not only through the use of overtime and increased hiring, but also by exploring how we might utilize Department staff to surge domestic passport processing capacity. Addressing visa backlogs overseas will require solutions tailored to the unique needs of each post, but I will devote myself and the CA team to identifying and implementing these solutions as quickly as possible.

Question. Through nearly two decades of U.S. assistance programming in Afghanistan, the United States has funded, through cooperative agreements and grants, multiple programs on human rights, democracy assistance, support for independent media, and the empowerment of women and marginalized groups.

Thousands of Afghan nationals directly implemented U.S.-funded civilian aid and development programs across the country, alongside U.S. and international personnel. They demonstrated a commitment and dedication to this important work for their country despite the fact that the association with the United States placed their lives at risk.

I visited Afghanistan in 2018, and have seen firsthand the dedication and sacrifice that Afghan nationals have given to support our efforts. These brave men and women are now under threat as the Taliban has stated in no uncertain terms that it plans to target those who helped the United States as translators, interpreters, and in other ways over the years. Many of these nationals have applied for Special Issuance Visas to come to the United States with their families, but the backlog for processing their applications runs into the thousands.

- What is your plan for addressing this backlog and potentially saving the lives of thousands of Afghans who helped us in our war efforts over the past two decades?

Answer. I take seriously our commitment to the Afghan men and women who have assumed enormous risks to support our military and civilian personnel. I am very cognizant of the threats they face and fully agree that assisting them is a top priority. The Department has increased resources and undertaken steps to streamline the process at every application stage. If confirmed, I will ensure my team completes processing of SIV applications to the fullest extent possible. We will also keep working with Congress to identify where we can make the SIV application process more efficient and adjust requirements that do not impact national security.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO MONICA P. MEDINA BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. The COVID-19 pandemic has exposed serious gaps in U.S. international pandemic prevention, preparedness, and response efforts, including the failure of the Department of State—over multiple administrations—to prioritize global health policy and diplomatic engagement beyond the PEPFAR program. What is your plan to improve State Department leadership on global health security?

Answer. The COVID-19 pandemic demonstrates how global health security is essential to U.S. national and economic security. The State Department is strongly positioned to lead the global effort to beat COVID-19 and increase the global capacity to prevent, detect, and respond to future outbreaks, and the Secretary has appointed a Coordinator who reports directly to him to work across the Department and with other agencies to elevate global health policy in the Department's diplomatic efforts. If confirmed, I will immediately look closely at the bureau's structure and resources and come back to you to discuss this issue further, with a view to working with the committee as it considers how to strengthen health security at the Department. If confirmed, I am committed to work with Coordinator Gayle Smith of the Secretary's Office of Global COVID-19 Response and Health Security, other offices across the interagency, and with partners to improve global health security capabilities, as well as to increase transparency and accountability. This includes modernizing and strengthening international institutions including the World Health Organization, and International Health Regulations.

Question. Do you agree that the Department needs to play a more active role in the interagency on global health security, including by ensuring foreign policy and program coherence among the U.S. agencies implementing global health programs overseas (CDC and USAID) as well as with other international partners?

Answer. Yes. The Department is playing an active and robust role on global health security within the interagency process. But the Bureau needs to build up greater capacity to deal with this and other health crises in the future. If confirmed, I am committed to working with Coordinator Gayle Smith of the Secretary's Office of Global COVID-19 Response and Health Security on these issues, as well as other offices in the Department and across the interagency. The Biden-Harris administration recognizes that COVID-19 and health security are global challenges that require global responses, and I will engage with international partners and allies on this important issue. The United States will continue to engage multilaterally to respond to and recover from COVID-19 as well as to prepare for, detect, and rapidly respond to emerging biological threats.

Question. Is there currently a review process within the United States Government for approving or disapproving life sciences or biological research collaboration with other countries that could pose dual-use concerns, including research on pathogens, viruses, and toxins? What role, if any, does the Department of State play in this review process? Within the Department of State, what role does OES play in this process?

Answer. Because I am not currently an employee of the State Department, and I understand that much of this work is outside the purview of OES, I have not taken a hard look at this process. It is my understanding that there are a variety of review processes that may apply to international life science collaboration, depending on the nature of that collaboration and the pathogens or other materials involved. These include reviews undertaken by agencies before funding certain types of research deemed to pose particular risks, and, where applicable, export licensing and visa vetting. The Department of State is in general not involved in the decisions of funding agencies to support specific research activities. I understand that much of this work is outside of the purview of OES. If confirmed, I will work colleagues in other bureaus at the State Department and across the interagency to learn more about these issues, and will work with you to assist any committee oversight over such activities.

Question. If such a process exists, what type of evidentiary information must be included to determine whether such research collaboration is appropriate?

Answer. Because I am not yet in the Department, I have not looked into this question or been specifically briefed on it. I have been advised that the types of information required depend on the nature of the research collaboration and the pathogens or other materials involved. However, it is my understanding that they would typically include the pathogens, if any, to be worked with, the nature of the activity, the identities of the individuals involved, and the purposes for which the activity would be conducted. Information regarding the location of the work and the applicable biosafety standards may also be required. If confirmed, I will look further into this issue and will work with you and your staff on it.

Question. What steps has the Department of State taken to act on or implement the recommendations of the following guidance documents? Please be specific with respect to each document listed below:

- UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT POLICY FOR OVERSIGHT OF LIFE SCIENCES DUAL USE RESEARCH OF CONCERN, available at <https://bit.ly/2YYcFvs>
- NATIONAL SCIENCE ADVISORY BOARD FOR BIOSECURITY, PROPOSED FRAMEWORK FOR THE OVERSIGHT OF DUAL USE LIFE SCIENCES RESEARCH: STRATEGIES FOR MINIMIZING THE POTENTIAL MISUSE OF RESEARCH INFORMATION (2007), available at <https://bit.ly/3AfOqGZ>
- RECOMMENDED POLICY GUIDANCE FOR DEPARTMENTAL DEVELOPMENT OF REVIEW MECHANISMS FOR POTENTIAL PANDEMIC PATHOGEN CARE AND OVERSIGHT (P3CO) (2017), available at <https://bit.ly/3u2cMSt>
- U.S. DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, FRAMEWORK FOR GUIDING FUNDING DECISIONS ABOUT PROPOSED RESEARCH INVOLVING ENHANCED POTENTIAL PANDEMIC PATHOGENS (2017), available at <https://bit.ly/3CmAQ5o>
- NATIONAL SCIENCE ADVISORY BOARD FOR BIOSECURITY, RECOMMENDATIONS FOR THE EVALUATION AND OVERSIGHT OF PROPOSED GAIN-OF-FUNCTION RESEARCH (2016), <https://bit.ly/3zkTRTQ>.

Answer. As I understand it, these policy documents primarily provide guidance for other Federal agencies considering funding of certain types of research or work with potential pandemic pathogens. I am advised that the Department of State does not fund such research. However, the Department of State has been involved in actively promoting the development and adoption of such oversight systems abroad, including through presentations and discussions at international meetings. If confirmed, I will look further into how these documents are being used and implemented by agencies with such research funding and will work with you and your staff to understand how each is being implemented.

Question. As we discussed when we met last month, the Columbia River Treaty remains an important issue to myself and the rest of the northwest delegation. This treaty has been in the process of being renegotiated for years and will determine energy production and costs as well as water flows. If confirmed, you will lead the bureau responsible for overseeing some of the technical inputs that negotiators will consider.

Answer. The Columbia River is the lifeblood of the region. I am generally familiar with the complicated issues regarding this key shared resource from my time at NOAA. If confirmed, I will give a close look into the whole range of negotiating issues as they stand now and determine how OES can best provide greater support to the U.S. negotiating team. Canada and the United States have a shared interest in building back the regional economy and being good stewards of the region's water resources.

Question. If confirmed, will you make Columbia River Treaty negotiations a priority?

Answer. I understand the importance of reaching agreement with Canada on the modernization of the Columbia River Treaty regime. Canada and the United States have a shared interest in building back the regional economy and being good stewards of the region's water resources. If confirmed, I will look into the whole range of negotiating issues and determine how OES can best support the U.S. negotiating team.

Question. What was the total amount of appropriations in Fiscal Year (FY) 2019 used by the Department of State on global climate change programs? From which accounts did the funding come? Please provide specific details about all global climate change programs funded, including the objectives, results, and amounts of FY 2019 appropriations spent. If confirmed, how would you adjust this spending, if at all?

Answer. The Department of State used $13,500,000 of FY 2019 Economic Support Funds on global climate change programs. These programs protect the environment while promoting economic growth and enhancing sustainable landscapes, clean energy, and adaptation. In FY19, allocated funds went to the following programs:

- SilvaCarbon—U.S. Forest Service
- Climate Fellows—U.S. Forest Service
- Clean and Advanced Technology for Sustainable Landscapes—U.S. Department of Energy
- Caribbean Natural Infrastructure Partnership for Resilience—U.S. Forest Service
- Offset National Emissions through Sustainable Landscapes—U.S. Aviation Industry Groups

- Carbon Accounting and Reporting for Wetlands—Environmental Protection Agency
- Avoiding Deforestation through a Commodities Jurisdiction Approach—Competitively Awarded Program
- Private Investment for Enhanced Resilience—Competitively Awarded Program
- Clean Energy Ministerial—U.S. Department of Energy

Question. In your March 31, 2020, opinion piece in the Washington Post, you wrote about the environmental “unexpected bright side” of the pandemic and point out the economic tradeoffs of doing with less. How will you measure and report on economic and social tradeoffs of climate programs at the State Department?

Answer. The pandemic has been an immense tragedy. It is clear that it and the climate crisis impact our economies and societies in complex and challenging ways. It is imperative that we learn from this experience and use that knowledge to build back better. If confirmed, I hope to work within the E family, and with the Department and the interagency, to address these issues holistically.

SUBMITTED TO MONICA P. MEDINA BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Authorities

Question. The position of Assistant Secretary of State for Oceans and International Environmental and Scientific Affairs has not been held by a Senate-confirmed official since 2014.

- Secretary Blinken has noted that the State Department likely requires additional hiring authorities to bring in more personnel to address emerging, complex foreign policy challenges that fall within the remit of OES, including climate change, global health, and technology. Do you share this view? Could you elaborate on the kinds of skill sets you think need to be added to the Bureau’s work?

Answer. Yes, I agree. The Bureau has in its purview two of the major crises facing our country and the world today—climate and health—and they are likely to be difficult challenges for the foreseeable future, requiring more resources for the Bureau. OES needs the right mix of people, fresh and diverse perspectives, and people who understand how to apply the latest scientific understanding and technologies to these problems.

SUBMITTED TO MONICA P. MEDINA BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. If confirmed, how will you work with our allies and partners in the region to counter the Chinese Communist Party’s illegal territorial claims?

Answer. This matter is an important problem, and if I am confirmed, it will be a priority for me. I have been to China and Japan with the Secretary of Defense, and I understand the issue well. The United States can and should push back on the PRC’s coercive behavior, unlawful maritime claims in the South China Sea, and disregard for the marine environment. Countering the PRC’s tactics requires a government-wide effort that leads with diplomacy, development, and economic engagement. Secretary Blinken recently affirmed in his statement on the 5th anniversary of the Arbitral Ruling on the South China Sea that freedom of the seas is an enduring interest of all nations and is vital to global peace and prosperity. If confirmed, I will look forward to working with our ASEAN partners along with other partners and allies including Australia, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Japan, New Zealand, and the European Union to preserve the rules-based order in the Indo-Pacific region including the East and South China Seas.

Question. If confirmed, how do you intend to work with other federal agencies and international partners to crack down on illegal, unreported and unregulated (IUU) fishing practices in the South China Sea?

Answer. Ending IUU fishing is a top priority of mine because of the detrimental food security impacts it has in the regions where it is occurring, as well as because of the human rights and environmental harms it is causing. Nowhere is this security and environmental challenge more urgent than in the South China Sea. When I worked for Secretary Panetta at the Department of Defense, I witnessed the growing tensions in this region and the national security concerns it creates first-hand.

I understand that the State Department and OES work with interagency partners to monitor and address IUU fishing by PRC vessels, support capacity building for coastal states threatened by it, and implement multilateral fisheries enforcement and management schemes. OES and its interagency partners also engage directly with the PRC on broader fisheries conservation and management issues to push for Beijing's responsible oversight of its fleet. I understand the State Department and other agencies have also done work with Southeast Asian coastal States to strengthen fisheries law enforcement and maritime domain awareness in the region. If confirmed, I look forward to continuing the Department's leading role in the recently formed Maritime SAFE Act Interagency IUU Fishing Working Group, where we are working with our interagency partners, as well as with key stakeholders, to coordinate and strengthen U.S. efforts to combat IUU fishing wherever it occurs. It is imperative, in my view, that we step up our efforts in international fora and at international meetings to confront China on its aggressive actions that undermine the rule of law on the seas.

Question. Is there currently a review process within the United States Government for approving or disapproving life sciences or biological research collaboration with other countries that could pose dual-use concerns, including research on pathogens, viruses, and toxins? What role, if any, does the Department of State play in this review process? Within the Department of State, what role does OES play in this process?

Answer. Because I am not currently an employee of the State Department, and I understand that much of this work is outside the purview of OES, I have not yet taken a hard look at this process. It is my understanding that there are a variety of review processes that may apply to international life science collaboration, depending on the nature of that collaboration and the pathogens or other materials involved. These include reviews undertaken by agencies before funding certain types of research deemed to pose particular risks, and, where applicable, export licensing and visa vetting. The Department of State is in general not involved in the decisions of funding agencies to support specific research activities. I understand that much of this work is outside of the purview of OES. If confirmed, I will work colleagues in other bureaus at the State Department and across the interagency to learn more about these issues, and will work with you to assist any committee oversight over such activities.

Question. If confirmed, what actions will you take to work with our allies and partners in Africa and Latin America to combat Chinese illegal fishing?

Answer. Department's continued close work with the U.S. Coast Guard, NOAA, and other agencies and partner governments around the world to strengthen the rules and improve enforcement processes and capabilities for international fisheries. The Bureau plays a role in 16 bilateral cooperative fisheries law enforcement agreements between the U.S. Coast Guard and partner countries in the Pacific and West Africa, and I fully support its efforts to pursue additional agreements throughout the world, including in Latin America and Africa. These agreements allow for the United States to assist coastal and flag States to enforce their domestic laws, strengthening and supporting development of partner nations' capabilities. In addition, I understand that the Maritime SAFE Act IUU Fishing Working Group has recently determined that a number of regions in Africa and Latin America are "priority regions," as described by the Act. OES will continue to collaborate with its interagency partners through that Working Group to determine the best approaches to strengthening the capabilities of countries in those regions to address IUU fishing individually and through regional cooperation.

Question. If confirmed, what actions will you take to work with other agencies in investigating the origins of the COVID-19 pandemic?

Answer. Like many, I very much want to know the origins of COVID-19. It is imperative that we learn what caused this tragedy and act to do everything we can to prevent it from happening again. President Biden recently requested a deeper review of the origins of COVID-19 by the U.S. intelligence community, with support from the National Labs and other agencies of the U.S. Government. As part of this review, President Biden has asked for investigation into all areas that may be relevant. I look forward to the results of this report and, if confirmed, identifying next steps for follow-up and assisting in whatever capacity I can. Additionally, the World Health Organization (WHO) is currently working on developing Phase 2 of its study of the origins of COVID-19, including in China.

Question. If confirmed, and absent passage of my bill, what actions will you take to combat the deplorable action of finning sharks in foreign nations?

Answer. Shark populations are declining globally and in my view we need to do more to conserve them. The United States, through the Department of State and the NOAA National Marine Fisheries Service, has spearheaded a series of agreed shark finning prohibitions in RFMOs in both the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. The United States works through RFMOs to strengthen enforcement of current fishing prohibitions—and strengthen the measures themselves when needed—as part of our work to support the conservation and sustainable management of key shark species. If confirmed, I will press for continued and expanded U.S. leadership in these and other international organizations to ensure the sustainability of these vital species, as well as continuing to work with other countries to develop and enforce national conservation and management measures, including species-specific data collection programs for sharks.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO MARC EVANS KNAPPER BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question. As you contemplate the possibilities of taking this relationship to the next level and inaugurating a genuine strategic partnership what is your vision of what such a partnership should look like and encompass?

Answer. Twenty-six years since the normalization of diplomatic relations, the U.S.-Vietnam partnership has never been better. We have moved from a history of conflict and division to a Comprehensive Partnership that spans political, security, economic, and people-to-people ties.

I am confident that the positive momentum in our relationship will continue. The United States and Vietnam have a common sense of purpose and a common vision for a rules-based order in the Indo-Pacific. We seek to deepen our cooperation that spans our close collaboration on war legacy and humanitarian issues to regional security and shared prosperity. We also seek to deepen cooperation on climate change, pandemic disease, wildlife and drug trafficking, maritime security, and transnational crime.

Our interests include maintaining the peace and stability that has allowed regional and bilateral trade to flourish over the last quarter century.

If confirmed, I commit to consulting closely with Congress as the administration considers next steps in the relationship.

Question. If confirmed, how will you balance our very real shared strategic interests with Vietnam with our on-going human rights concerns? What sort of linkages or conditioning do you think is appropriate and constructive as we consider additional military-security, economic or diplomatic engagement with Vietnam?

Answer. Twenty-six years since the normalization of diplomatic relations, the U.S.-Vietnam partnership has never been better. We have moved from a history of conflict and division to a Comprehensive Partnership that spans political, security, economic, and people-to-people ties.

The United States and Vietnam have a common sense of purpose and a common vision for a rules-based order in the Indo-Pacific. We must continue to build on the progress in the bilateral relationship, but as the Biden-Harris administration has committed to putting human rights back at the center of American foreign policy, we must also bring all the tools of our diplomacy to defend human rights, including freedom of expression, and religion or belief. If confirmed, I will continue to press Vietnam to improve its implementation of human rights obligations and commitments.

Question. As Beijing continues to pursue its aggressive and expansionist tactics in the South China Sea, where are the opportunities—and necessity—for greater US-Vietnam maritime partnership?

Answer. We will continue to support Vietnam's enhancement of its maritime security and law enforcement capabilities to better monitor its maritime domain and resist coercion in the South China Sea.

In 2017 and 2020, the U.S. Government officially transferred to Vietnam through the State Department's Excess Defense Articles (EDA) program two 378-foot Hamilton-class cutters, with the second arriving in Vietnam earlier this summer. These vessels are the largest in Vietnam's fleet and significantly enhance Vietnam's maritime security capabilities. The United States has also transferred to Vietnam 24 Metal Shark patrol boats and six Scan Eagle UAV, as part of our effort to work with Vietnam to make it better able to protect its sovereignty and rights in the South China Sea. Through the State Department's International Narcotics and Law Enforcement program, we are developing four training facilities for Vietnam's Coast Guard. We are bringing U.S. Coast Guard personnel to Vietnam to train Vietnamese Coast Guard and DFIRE Fisheries Enforcement counterparts on key maritime law enforcement skills to ensure that maritime law enforcement capabilities forces are modern, resilient, and capable. If confirmed, I will continue to seek opportunities for maritime capacity building.

Vietnam sent its first cadet to the U.S. Air Force Academy in August 2020, and we are hopeful to have more Vietnamese cadets attend U.S. service academies in the coming years.

Question. How and where can the United States work with Vietnam to assure continued ASEAN centrality as a strategic counterweight and to develop functional problem-solving regional architecture?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration is committed to deepening our engagement with ASEAN as part of reinvigorating our multilateral partnerships. ASEAN plays a central role in the U.S. vision of a free and open Indo-Pacific. Secretary of State Blinken has publicly reaffirmed the United States' steadfast support for ASEAN centrality and to expanding our work together.

Vietnam, as Chair of ASEAN in 2020, helped the organization respond to the challenges of the COVID-19 pandemic and we applauded them for their leadership.

We will continue to seek opportunities to partner with Vietnam and other ASEAN partners to advance U.S. priorities and interests on pressing regional issues. This extends beyond our meetings with ASEAN to ASEAN-related fora such as the East Asia Summit, ASEAN Regional Forum, and Mekong-U.S. Partnership. As part of the non-traditional security pillar of this partnership, the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement is developing a program to combat Transnational Organized Crime in the region, building Vietnam's capacity to investigate and prosecute crime in cooperation with its neighbors.

We will also continue our work to build the capacity of the ASEAN Secretariat on political, economic, and socio-cultural issues, and broader efforts to develop human capital and support the next generation of ASEAN leaders, including through capacity building seminars at the Young Southeast Asian Leaders Initiative (YSEALI) Academy at Fulbright University Vietnam (FUV).

Question. What would be your priorities—resilience, zero-carbon energy resources—to work with Vietnam on climate change?

Answer. The 2020s will be the decade for climate action, and no region of the world has a more pivotal role in realizing the global goal of net-zero emissions by 2050 than the economies in the Indo-Pacific region. We will continue to work with Indo-Pacific countries to increase regional ambition, implement 2030 targets and net-zero goals, enhance the impact of climate financing, and increase adaptation and resiliency through regional frameworks such as the Quad as well as bilateral engagements.

I was pleased that Vietnam was invited to the Leaders' Summit on Climate and appreciated hearing from President Nguyen Xuan Phuc about the challenges Vietnam faces from climate change. Vietnam is increasingly vulnerable to the threats associated with climate change, evidenced by record floods that caused horrible devastation last year. Vietnam is also a significant greenhouse gas emitter.

If confirmed, I will prioritize elevating climate change in my discussions with Vietnamese Government and business leaders and urging Vietnam to transition to a cleaner energy environment and to commit to setting a net-zero emissions date.

Question. Cyber and Human Rights: in recent years Vietnam has cracked down on numerous bloggers and journalists, and adopted troubling new laws and regulations, that have closed down freedom of expression in cyberspace. How and where can we work with Vietnam to assure that civil society actors and journalists have space and freedom to operate in the cyber realm—and to convince Vietnam that China's model of digital authoritarianism is contrary to Vietnam's interests.

Answer. I am concerned about the shrinking environment for the exercise of freedoms of expression and association online and offline. The trend of harassment, arbitrary or unlawful arrests, unjust convictions, and harsh sentences of journalists and activists for exercising their human rights is deeply troubling.

If confirmed, I will advocate with the Government of Vietnam to respect freedom of expression, both offline and online, and engage with social media companies to promote approaches that preserve freedom of expression online and an open, interoperable, reliable, and secure internet.

Question. Fulbright Vietnam University: The establishment of FVU, with congressional support, has been a really success story for the bilateral relationship in recent years. Where do you see opportunities for FVU to continue to grow and contribute to Vietnam's development? For example, is there a role for FVU to serve as a hub for cyber-security education and training for Vietnam and for the region?

Answer. Fulbright University Vietnam (FUV) is an incredible symbol of the strength of our partnership with the people of Vietnam and Southeast Asia. It is the first private, independent, non-profit Vietnamese university, and is based on American higher education traditions of open inquiry, research, and critical analysis.

The U.S. Government has helped FUV develop into a center of academic independence that models core principles, including academic freedom, meritocracy, transparency, and equal access. FUV has brought world-class university standards to Vietnam and helped unlock tremendous potential in Vietnam's education sector.

We are proud to partner with FUV to create the YSEALI Academy at FUV, which offers executive-level capacity-building seminars for entry- to mid-level professionals from ASEAN countries and Timor-Leste around the themes of technology and innovation, public policy, and entrepreneurship.

If confirmed, I look forward to exploring all possible avenues to use FUV as a platform, including for cybersecurity training and educational programs on the Mekong Delta, for increased engagement with the Vietnamese people and with leaders across Southeast Asia.

Question. Even though we are many decades from the end of the war, legacy issues including cleaning up of UXO and addressing the use of Agent Orange continue to be important to both the Vietnamese and American people. What priorities would you have in addressing these or other war legacy issues, if confirmed?

Answer. Addressing humanitarian and war legacy issues is a foundational element of the strong relationship between the United States and Vietnam. Providing the fullest possible accounting for U.S. personnel missing from the Vietnam War era remains our most solemn duty. I acknowledge the Senate's longstanding support of U.S. initiatives in this regard.

Since 1993, the United States has contributed more than $160 million to conventional weapons destruction (CWD) efforts to clear unexploded ordnance (UXO), risk education, victims' assistance, and capacity building. The U.S.-funded UXO clearance program targets high-priority sites in the most UXO-contaminated provinces of central Vietnam: Quang Tri, Quang Binh, and Tha Thien Hue. Our progress with UXO authorities in these areas is a prime example of how provincial level success can be replicated at the national level going forward. If confirmed, I will advocate for these successes to be adopted at the national level for effective implementation of U.S. taxpayer funding, and to make real progress for the people of Vietnam.

Separately, the United States and Vietnam successfully completed the remediation of dioxin contamination in Danang in 2018, and in 2019 we broke ground on the 10-year dioxin remediation project at the Bien Hoa airbase area. The United States has provided more than $125 million since 1989 in humanitarian assistance, directly and indirectly supporting over a million persons with disabilities, regardless of the cause.

Our cooperation on these issues continues to build a foundation of trust to expand our relationship and, if confirmed, I will prioritize deepening our cooperation in these efforts.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO MARC EVANS KNAPPER BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. What should our main goals for the Indo-Pacific region be in the short-term, medium-term, and long-term?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration is committed to advancing a free and open Indo-Pacific region. To achieve this, I will work to revitalize ties with our allies and partners, advance inclusive economic policies that support all Americans, and promote democratic resilience and respect for human rights. I will invest in capabilities and work with allies and partners, including in regional organizations, to defend the international rules-based order, its foundational values, and international law. I will also work closely with Congress and partners in the region to address pressing challenges, including the threat posed by the DPRK nuclear program, transnational crime, recovery from COVID-19, and climate change.

Question. What are realistic goals for the U.S.-Vietnam strategic partnership in the next decade? Please be specific.

Answer. Twenty-six years since the normalization of diplomatic relations, the U.S.-Vietnam partnership has never been better. We have moved from a history of conflict and division to a Comprehensive Partnership that spans political, security, economic, and people-to-people ties.

I am confident that the positive momentum in our relationship will continue. The United States and Vietnam have a common sense of purpose and a common vision for a rules-based order in the Indo-Pacific. Over the next decade, we seek to deepen our cooperation that spans our close collaboration on war legacy and humanitarian issues to regional security and shared prosperity. We also seek to deepen cooperation on climate change, pandemic disease, wildlife and drug trafficking, maritime security, and transnational crime..

Our interests include maintaining the peace and stability that has allowed regional and bilateral trade to flourish over the last quarter century..

Question. If confirmed, what are the three main things you will seek to accomplish in your first 100 days as U.S. Ambassador to Vietnam?

Answer. The U.S.-Vietnam relationship has undergone a profound transformation since normalization of diplomatic relations in 1995, and our ties are thriving. President Biden's Interim National Security Strategic Guidance noted that the United States will deepen our partnership with Vietnam to advance shared objectives. I look forward to leading those efforts.

If confirmed, I will seek to deepen our security ties with the conclusion of a General Security of Military Information Agreement with Vietnam, which would enhance information sharing and expand defense trade. I will also press Vietnam to take bold steps to commit to a cleaner energy future, using the November COP 26 Conference in Glasgow as a catalyst for action. Finally, I will seek to expand on the progress that ethnic and religious minorities, the disabled, and LGBTQI+ citizens in Vietnam have made, but will express serious concern to Vietnam's leadership to underscore our commitment to supporting universal human rights—and stress that improvements in this area can only strengthen our overall relationship.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to continuing economic cooperation with Vietnam on cultivating liquefied natural gas in addition to other renewable resources? In light of recent policy changes by the Biden administration, what tools will you have at your disposal to advance such energy cooperation with Vietnam?

Answer. Vietnam is projected to be one of the fastest growing energy demand markets in the region. The State Department is committed to supporting Vietnam's economic aspirations, energy security and sustainable development, and to support U.S. companies seeking opportunities to invest and trade in this dynamic market.

At the same time, the United States is committed to working with key partners around the world, like Vietnam, to encourage them to select policies, measures, and investments that direct their economic growth toward a climate-aligned pathway. Those decisions will be critical to achieving the goals of the Paris Agreement and a global net zero future by 2050. The science is unequivocal: we have no alternative. We must keep the Earth's warming to 1.5 degrees Celsius to avoid catastrophe. To get there, the science says the world needs to get to a state of net zero greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions by around mid-century.

As we head further into the 2020s, we must grow more discerning of the future role for natural gas in achieving the world's climate goals. If we are to achieve net zero emissions by 2050, the world must be especially judicious about new gas infrastructure. That said, Vietnam has an opportunity to eliminate coal projects and continue the impressive growth of solar and wind power over the past two years.

If confirmed, I will work with U.S. companies and U.S. agencies to plan their energy investments in a way that ensures access to cleaner and affordable energy and advances our climate goals.

Question. What else do you think the U.S. should provide to Vietnam in terms of security assistance, especially with respect to South China Sea issues?

Answer. We will continue to support Vietnam's enhancement of its maritime security and law enforcement capabilities to better monitor its maritime domain and resist coercion in the South China Sea.

In 2017 and 2020, the U.S. Government officially transferred to Vietnam through the State Department's Excess Defense Articles (EDA) program two 378-foot Hamilton-class cutters, with the second arriving in Vietnam earlier this summer. These vessels are the largest in Vietnam's fleet and significantly enhance Vietnam's maritime security capabilities. The United States has also transferred to Vietnam

24 Metal Shark patrol boats and six Scan Eagle UAV, as part of our effort to work with Vietnam to make it better able to protect its sovereignty and rights in the South China Sea. Through the State Department's International Narcotics and Law Enforcement program, we are developing four training facilities for Vietnam's Coast Guard. We are bringing U.S. Coast Guard personnel to Vietnam to train Vietnamese Coast Guard and DFIRE Fisheries Enforcement counterparts on key maritime law enforcement skills to ensure that maritime law enforcement capabilities forces are modern, resilient, and capable. If confirmed, I will continue to seek opportunities for maritime capacity building.

Vietnam sent its first cadet to the U.S. Air Force Academy in August 2020, and we are hopeful to have more Vietnamese cadets attend U.S. service academies in the coming years. We are also providing Vietnam with T-6 trainers, so that Vietnam's future Air Force pilots will learn on state-of the art, American-model aircraft.

Question. What are your views on Vietnam's use of a maritime militia in the South China Sea? What are your views on the new unit Vietnam just stood up in this maritime militia?

Answer. The United States supports maritime law enforcement within the bounds of international law and has consistently opposed the threat or use of force to settle maritime and territorial disputes.

The United States opposes the use of coercion and intimidation by any claimant seeking to assert its maritime claims in the South China Sea and calls for all states to ensure that all of its maritime forces and other vessels act in accordance with international law, avoid provocative behavior, and behave in a professional manner.

Question. Apart from maritime cooperation, what do you see as the major opportunities for growth in the U.S.-Vietnam security relationship?

Answer. Our defense relationship has become one of the strongest pillars of the overall relationship. While much of our current or future planned security assistance to Vietnam aims to enhance the country's ability to enforce international maritime law and police its EEZ, we hope to expand upon peacekeeping efforts, search-and-rescue abilities, humanitarian/disaster relief capacity, military medicine, and the development of Vietnam's Coast Guard and Air Force.

Question. What challenges does Vietnam's reliance on Russian defense technology and weapons present to the growth of the U.S.-Vietnam security relationship?

Answer. Vietnam is working to diversify defense partners and suppliers, and is evaluating and exploring future procurement opportunities with the United States. In this context, the United States is focusing support on strengthening maritime law enforcement and domain awareness capabilities, peacekeeping efforts, search-and-rescue abilities, humanitarian/disaster relief capacity, military medicine, and the development of Vietnam's Coast Guard and Air Force.

Question. If confirmed, what will be your top three priorities for working with Vietnam on Mekong issues?

Answer. The United States has long been a presence in the Mekong subregion and has long been a partner of Vietnam. The Mekong subregion matters to America. Not only is the subregion home to Vietnam, one of the fastest growing economies in the world, it is also home to a growing and incredibly dynamic population. Helping the subregion's economy thrive and innovate, including by ensuring opportunities for marginalized populations and helping talented young people realize their full potential, benefits us all and also helps fulfill President Biden's foreign policy for the middle class. The subregion is also the front line for strategic competition with PRC, and we want to ensure the Mekong states are secure, independent, and prosperous. Vietnam supports our efforts through the Mekong-U.S. Partnership to ensure the subregion is prosperous, resilient, and that the people of the region enjoy good governance and security.

If confirmed, I will prioritize support of a sustainable Mekong basin development plan, work with Vietnam on its efforts to combat climate change, and press for greater economic connectivity across the sub-region.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to working with Congress on matters related to the financial sustainability of Fulbright University Vietnam?

Answer. Fulbright University Vietnam (FUV) is an incredible symbol of the strength of our partnership with the people of Vietnam and Southeast Asia. It is the first private, independent, non-profit Vietnamese university, and is based on American higher education traditions of open inquiry, research, and critical analysis.

The U.S. Government has helped FUV develop into a center of academic independence that models core principles, including academic freedom, meritocracy, transparency, and equal access. FUV has brought world-class university standards to Vietnam and helped unlock tremendous potential in Vietnam's education sector..

If confirmed, I will work with Congress to continue our work to help FUV continue to flourish and achieve financial sustainability.

Question. Vietnam has signed and ratified the Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons (TPNW) and was among the original 50 states parties to the treaty when it entered into force on January 22, 2021. Will you commit to raising U.S. concerns about TPNW with counterparts in Vietnam?

Answer. Yes, as appropriate. While the United States understands and shares the desire to advance nuclear disarmament goals, we do not support the TPNW. The TPNW is incompatible with U.S. extended deterrence relationships that are still necessary for international peace and security and may reinforce divisions that hinder the international community's ability to work together to address pressing proliferation and security challenges. The U.S. position on this issue has spanned administrations. Seeking to ban nuclear weapons through a treaty that does not include any State Parties that possess nuclear weapons will not reduce nuclear arsenals.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to raise with the Vietnamese Government its alleged use of extraterritorial tactics against dissidents and others? For example: Vietnam's hacking of its own dissidents' accounts overseas; the alleged abduction of a Vietnamese oil executive from Berlin; and the alleged abduction of a Radio Free Asia journalist from Bangkok?

Answer. I am deeply concerned by report of such tactics against individuals for exercising their fundamental human rights. These activities run counter to Vietnam's international human rights obligations and commitments. If confirmed, I commit to engage with the Government of Vietnam to underscore our strong objection to these tactics and ensure Vietnam adheres to its international human rights commitments.

Question. According to Freedom House's Freedom of the Net report, internet freedom in Vietnam dropped to an all-time low in 2020. What will you do to ensure that the internet in Vietnam remains free and open?

Answer. I am concerned about the shrinking environment for the exercise of freedoms of expression and association online and offline. The trend of harassment, arbitrary or unlawful arrests, unjust convictions, and harsh sentences of journalists and activists for exercising their human rights is deeply troubling.

If confirmed, I will advocate with the Government of Vietnam to respect freedom of expression, including online, and engage with social media companies to promote approaches that preserve freedom of expression online and an open, interoperable, reliable, and secure internet.

Question. In the State Department's 2021 Trafficking in Persons Report, Vietnam was identified as a Tier 2 Watch List country for the third consecutive year. Because Vietnam was listed for three years on the Watch List, it was subject to a downgrade to Tier 3, but was provided a waiver for its general efforts to eliminate trafficking. It is clear the Vietnamese Government must improve its protection, prevention, and prosecutorial efforts in this coming reporting period in order to improve its ranking. How will you work with the host government to address these issues if you are confirmed as Ambassador?

Answer. In recent years, the Vietnamese Government has demonstrated significant efforts by providing trafficking victims the affirmative right to legal representation, increasing TIP funding for law enforcement and victim support, passing new legislation that better protects workers migrating overseas and prohibits brokerage fees for overseas migrant workers, continuing large-scale awareness campaigns in communities vulnerable to trafficking, and training law enforcement officials.

Significant challenges remain, however, including insufficient victim screening, cumbersome and ineffective victim identification and assistance procedures, limited interagency coordination, and the need to better address predatory recruitment practices that charge workers seeking overseas employment higher fees than the law allows.

If confirmed, I will encourage the Government of Vietnam to vigorously prosecute all forms of trafficking and convict and punish traffickers, especially in cases involving forced labor or complicit officials. I will also encourage the Government to expand victim screening amongst vulnerable groups such as migrant workers, individuals in commercial sex, and child laborers, and improve victim identification and referral mechanisms.

Question. In the State Department's 2020 Report on International Religious Freedom, Vietnam was depicted as a country which is not particularly tolerant of religious freedoms. In one example, Vietnam continues to enforce a Law on Belief and Religion (LBR), which requires religious groups to register with the State and allows government entities to harass unregistered groups. What is your assessment of this particular issue and, if confirmed, how will you work with the Ambassador-at-Large for International Religious Freedom to bolster religious freedom in-country?

Answer. Vietnam's Law on Belief and Religion, while imperfect and inconsistent with international standards, reduces registration times and grants legal status to some religious groups. Some groups who remain unregistered in remote areas continue to face harassment from local authorities.

The United States remains concerned that the law maintains significant government control over religious practices and exacerbates uneven implementation of the law at the subnational level. The State Department's annual international religious freedom report to Congress detailed these concerns, and if confirmed, I will continue to raise them with Hanoi.

If confirmed, I will also continue to work closely with the Ambassador-at-Large to emphasize the importance of religious freedom with Vietnam's leaders, including cases of individuals harassed or imprisoned for their beliefs.

Question. In the State Department's 2020 Human Rights Report, Vietnam was identified as continuing to undermine fundamental human rights like speech, assembly, press, religion, and association. If confirmed, what steps will you take to address these instances with the Vietnamese Government?

Answer. I am very concerned about the human rights situation in Vietnam and committed to pushing for improvements. Despite progress in some areas, the trend of escalating harassment, unjust arrests and convictions, and increasingly harsh sentences of journalists and activists for peacefully exercising their right to express their opinions is deeply troubling. Vietnam is an important partner in the Indo-Pacific region, but that partnership can only reach its fullest potential if the Vietnamese Government improves its human rights record.

If confirmed, I will work with the Government of Vietnam to improve its implementation of its human rights obligations and commitments. I will urge the Government of Vietnam to ensure law enforcement and the judicial system effectively and fairly enforce existing constitutional guarantees and laws protecting human rights, including freedom of religion or belief. I will continue to raise our concerns with the Government of Vietnam, including during the annual U.S.-Vietnam Human Rights Dialogue, and call on Vietnam to respect and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, consistent with its international obligations and commitments.

Question. In the State Department's 2020 Human Rights Report, Vietnam was identified as continuing to undermine fundamental human rights like speech, assembly, press, religion, and association. If confirmed, how will you direct your embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground in Vietnam?

Answer. If confirmed, I will encourage my team to continue its longstanding work with civil society organizations who are trying to make space for positive progress in Vietnam. I will also continue the strong engagement with human rights and civil society organizations in the United States, including the Vietnamese-American community and local human rights NGOs in Vietnam, as previous Ambassadors have done.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MARC EVANS KNAPPER BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Cybersecurity

Question. Over the past several years, Vietnamese authorities have increased their scrutiny over Vietnamese citizens' activities on the Internet and in social media. Vietnam's new cybersecurity law, which went into effect in recent months, criminalizes the "distortion of history, denial of revolutionary achievements, undermining national solidarity, taking advantage of cybersecurity protection activities to violate national security, national interests or sovereignty, or disrupt public order."

What has been the impact of measures such as these on Vietnamese citizens' online activities?

Answer. I am concerned about the shrinking environment for the exercise of freedoms of expression and association online. The trend of harassment, arbitrary or unlawful arrests, unjust convictions, and harsh sentences of journalists and activists for exercising their rights, both offline and online, is deeply troubling.

If confirmed, I will advocate with the Government of Vietnam to respect freedom of expression, including online, and engage with social media companies to promote approaches that preserve freedom of expression online and an open, interoperable, reliable, and secure Internet.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO MARC EVANS KNAPPER BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. If confirmed, how will you support the Vietnamese Government's efforts to counter the Chinese claims in the South China Sea?

Answer. The U.S. position on the South China Sea is principled and longstanding. In keeping with its global policy, the United States does not take a position on the territorial disputes over land features among the many South China Sea claimants, while at the same time taking a strong principled position on compliance with the international law of the sea. Like Vietnam, the United States has a national interest in upholding international law, including freedom of navigation and overflight, and opposing the use of coercion to resolve disputes.

The United States will continue to support Vietnam's enhancement of its maritime security and law enforcement capabilities to better monitor its maritime domain and resist coercion in the South China Sea. In 2017 and 2020, the U.S. Government officially transferred to Vietnam through the State Department's Excess Defense Articles (EDA) program two 378-foot Hamilton-class cutters, with the second arriving in Vietnam earlier this summer. These vessels are the largest in Vietnam's fleet and significantly enhance Vietnam's maritime security capabilities. Through the State Department's International Narcotics and Law Enforcement program, we are developing four training facilities for Vietnam's Coast Guard. We are bringing U.S. Coast Guard personnel to Vietnam to train Vietnamese Coast Guard and DFIRE Fisheries Enforcement counterparts on key maritime law enforcement skills to ensure that maritime law enforcement capabilities forces are modern, resilient, and capable.

If confirmed, I will continue to support the development of a strong and independent Vietnam through its maritime capacity building, and will remain united in our support for peaceful resolution of disputes, including through international dispute resolution mechanisms.

Question. Since the Vietnam War, the United States and Vietnam have repaired their relationship. Vietnam is now a key strategic partner in the Indo-Pacific. However, it is my sincere belief that that relationship cannot reach its full potential unless Vietnam commits to respecting the human rights of its people. For example, in April, journalist Tran Thi Tuyet Dieu was sentenced to eight years in prison for reporting news on Vietnamese political figures. If confirmed, what steps will you take to press for the release of Dieu and other Vietnamese people who are unjustly targeted by Vietnamese security services?

Answer. I am deeply concerned by the convictions of individuals for exercising their freedom of expression and peaceful assembly. These convictions run counter to Vietnam's international human rights obligations and commitments. Vietnam should ensure its laws and actions are consistent with those obligations and commitments.

If confirmed, I will engage with activists, their family members, and lawyers to determine the facts in specific cases and urge authorities to release all persons detained for exercising their rights in Vietnam.

I will stress, above all, the need to follow through on the commitment that the Vietnamese Government has made to fundamentally reform the laws under which activists have been targeted in the past, to bring the country's laws into full compliance with its constitution and with its international obligations.

Question. How will you promote U.S. cooperation with Vietnam, which is important, while simultaneously encouraging Hanoi to embrace meaningful political reforms and protect the basic rights of its citizens?

Answer. Twenty-six years since the normalization of diplomatic relations, the U.S.-Vietnam partnership has never been better. We have moved from a history of conflict and division to a Comprehensive Partnership that spans political, security, economic, and people-to-people ties.

The United States and Vietnam have a common sense of purpose and a common vision for a rules-based order in the Indo-Pacific. We must continue to build on the progress in the bilateral relationship, but as the Biden-Harris administration has committed to putting human rights back at the center of American foreign policy, we must also bring all the tools of our diplomacy to defend human rights, including freedom of religion or belief. If confirmed, I will continue to press Vietnam to improve its implementation of human rights obligations and commitments.

NOMINATIONS

TUESDAY, JULY 20, 2021

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:04 a.m. in Room SD-G50, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Robert Menendez, chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Menendez [presiding], Shaheen, Coons, Booker, Van Hollen, Risch, Johnson, and Young.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ, U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

The CHAIRMAN. Good morning. This hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

We are here today to consider four important nominations, Ms. Paloma Adams-Allen, to be a Deputy Administrator for Management and Resources at the Agency for International Development, Dr. Karen Donfried to be Assistant Secretary of State for Europe and Eurasian Affairs, Ambassador Mary Catherine Phee to be Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, and Ms. Anne A. Witkowsky to be Assistant Secretary of State for Conflict and Stabilization Operations.

Congratulations to the four of you on your nominations. We appreciate your willingness to serve our country in these capacities, as well as those members of your family, because we recognize that this is a family sacrifice as well. So we thank them as well.

Ms. Adams-Allen, your lifelong dedication to international development and distinguished career of government service, including as Deputy Assistant Administrator at the Latin American Caribbean Bureau of the United States Agency for International Development, I believe makes you eminently qualified for this position.

If confirmed, your knowledge and experience as a development professional and your distinguished tenure as the President and CEO of the Inter-American Foundation will be needed as you take the role of Deputy Administrator for Management and Resources at USAID.

I am pleased to see that President Biden's budget aims to restore the value and use of international development and foreign assistance as part of the overall goal of achieving U.S. foreign policy objectives. I know Administrator Power is entirely committed to this vital task, and I appreciated her testimony in the budget last week. I have no doubt you will share that commitment.

Dr. Donfried, your nomination is a testament to the Biden administration's efforts to rebuild the trans-Atlantic relationship, which, I believe was significantly damaged during the last administration. If confirmed, I believe your knowledge and experience, including as Senior Director for European Affairs at the National Security Council will serve you and the country well, as the Biden administration works to advance a renewed trans-Atlantic relationship.

It is imperative that this position be filled as soon as possible as we need to see forward movement on critical issues including those related to Russia, Turkey, Belarus, and our support for Ukraine, among others. I look forward to hearing from you about these and other issues.

Ambassador Phee, I am pleased to see you back before the committee, the position you are nominated for to be the Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs comes at a critical time for Africa, a Continent with enormous promise and challenges. However, the impacts of the third wave of COVID-19 on top of political and security challenges could roll back years of democratic progress and economic growth.

Indeed, the Biden administration faces a series of challenges in Africa, from China and Russia, which continue to pursue actions that are inimical to U.S. interest to conflict, to instability, and a flawed electoral exercise in Ethiopia, to a fragile transition in Sudan, which could be destabilizing to the entire Horn of Africa.

These are just a few among the many challenges facing Africa and U.S. interests there. In short, the challenges in the region are pressing and vast, I know that you are well equipped, based on your experience, to carry on and meet those challenges, and trust that if confirmed you will do so with skill and commitment.

Ms. Witkowsky, your knowledge and experience, including as a Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Stability and Humanitarian Affairs will be critical, if you are confirmed, to be the next Assistant Secretary of State for Conflict and Stabilization Operations. Indeed, your commitment and expertise with many of today's complex conflicts from Burma, Venezuela, Ethiopia, the Sahel, Yemen, to Afghanistan will be needed as CSO develops long-range, strategic policies and plans in order to address ongoing conflicts, as well as to prevent future ones. I will look forward to hearing from you about how you will approach this task.

In closing, while the four of you have a series of challenges ahead, I am confident that your commitment and experience will serve you well, as you take on these new responsibilities upon confirmation. I look forward to your testimonies.

And now I turn to the ranking member for his opening remarks.

STATEMENT OF HON. JAMES E. RISCH,
U.S. SENATOR FROM IDAHO

Senator RISCH. Thank you Mr. Chairman. And I certainly embrace a number of the issues that are going to be facing these people.

And thank you, each of you, for your willingness to serve, and your families, because they always share the sacrifice.

I want to start with the nomination of Assistant Secretary of State for European Eurasian Affairs. For starters, I am concerned the administration has refused to use visa sanctions to shut down the Nord Stream 2 Pipeline, this is a continued aggravation for us, and I would like to see that resolved.

Putin has boasted that its completion will be a victory for Russian power. I would also note that any deal with the Russians would be in violation of U.S. law. And I expect to hear more from you on this topic, Dr. Donfried.

On Chinese maligned influence, Europe is a key partner, I have been encouraged to see the increased U.S.-European discussions on working together to combat China's actions.

In Georgia, I am increasingly worried by steps backward. The past weeks more than 50 journalists were beaten. One of them died from his injuries, and several judges were pushed onto the Supreme Court in contravention of the April 19th Agreement.

I know Senator Shaheen shares my concerns in that regard, and we had a number of discussions on that. I hope you will work to address the issues with Georgia's Government.

Ukraine remains a big focus on The Hill. We are disappointed to see the administration refusal to send additional help to Ukraine this spring in order that they might defend from their belligerent neighbor. I hope you will address this today.

On to the nomination of Assistant Secretary for African Affairs, the Biden administration has stated that Africa is a priority, but it is unclear where Africa fits in that priority list. First, I am troubled by the conflict and humanitarian situation in Tigray, however, I am concerned that the U.S. is so focused on the Tigray crisis, that it is ignoring the significant challenges to peace, democracy that we face across Ethiopia.

This is a complex challenge. I get that. I look forward to hearing how we navigate Ethiopia's challenges, and the other crises across the Horn of Africa, which is becoming more and more of a focus and a crisis.

Aside from Ethiopia, I remain deeply concerned about the lack of initiative the international community has shown, including our European, French, and African partners, in pushing for a resolution to the crisis in Cameroon, as well as corruption challenges by the regimes in Zimbabwe and South Sudan.

African countries are crucial partners in our fight to combat malign Chinese influence. The United States remains the top contributor of health and humanitarian assistance to Africa, but we must do more to commit ourselves to building strong economic and security partnerships with our African allies.

Next we have the nomination of Assistant Secretary of State for Conflict and Stabilization Operations. Like many, I am concerned by this administration's response to the crisis unfolding in Afghanistan. It is clear that the administration had no plans in place to manage the withdrawal and provide for the people that worked side by side with our troops.

President Biden publicly stated that his administration was, "Working closely with Congress to change the authorization legislation in order to expedite the processing of Afghan special immigrant visas.” But I have yet to see such outreach on the specific legislative fixes they are seeking.

Finally, we have the nomination of a Deputy Administrator of the USAID for Management and Resources. U.S. foreign assistance can help advance the national security, economic and humanitarian interests of the United States, but it must be thoughtfully targeted and designed to ensure the greatest possible impact. The responsibility for aligning roughly two-thirds of the U.S. foreign assistance budget, with the strategic objectives of the United States overseas falls here.

I am eager to hear about the modernization of USAID’s workforce, and operations to stretch the aid dollars further so we can save lives and advance U.S. interests. We have a lot to cover today.

I will yield back. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Risch.

Okay. So we will turn to our nominees. All of your statements will be included in the record without objection.

We will start with Ms. Adams-Allen, and move down the aisle as I introduce you.

So the floor is yours, Ms. Adams-Allen.

STATEMENT OF MS. PALOMA ADAMS-ALLEN OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, NOMINATED TO BE A DEPUTY ADMINISTRATOR OF THE UNITED STATES AGENCY FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT [MANAGEMENT AND RESOURCES]

Ms. ADAMS-ALLEN. Thank you, Senator.

Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, members of the committee, it is an honor to appear before you today as President Biden’s nominee to be Deputy Administrator for Management and Resources of the United States Agency for International Development.

I would like to thank the President and Administrator Power for their trust in me. I am grateful for the opportunity to return to USAID, an agency dear to my heart, at a moment when its leadership and development expertise are so urgently needed.

I am here today before you because of the love and support of so many. My mother, Emilie Adams, a proud Minnesotan who instilled in me a deep sense of fairness and justice; my father, Llewelyn Adams, who I credit for my strong Jamaican work ethic; my husband, Travis Allen, still the best human I know; my daughters, Priya and Emilie, whose creativity and empathy inspire me every day; and a network of extended family, friends, colleagues, and neighbors spanning the globe. Thank you all.

My international development and diplomacy experience started early, informed by the duality of my upbringing: summers spent in the relative wealth and safety of my mother’s community in the United States, and the school year spent in the beauty and vulnerability of my father’s home country in Jamaica. It was in the jarring journey back and forth between these worlds that I settled on what I wanted to do with my life: pay forward the incredible privilege I have as an American, by working to fuel hope and opportunity in communities like the one that helped raise me.

This early decision informed my 20-plus years working in the foreign assistance arena, primarily Latin America and the Caribbean.

During a decade in policy and programming roles at the Organization of American States, I saw the potential of multilateralism to calm tensions between neighboring countries, and mobilize regional support for humanitarian crises like the 2010 earthquake.

But it has been my experience in the federal government, serving in leadership and management positions at USAID, and now as Head of the Inter-American Foundation, where I have been able to effect the change I dreamed of as a child. During a decade of public service, I have had the honor of investing in and learning from young people bravely building peace in El Salvador; smallholder farmers in Colombia selling their coffee to global corporations, and proud grandmothers in Haiti financing businesses through their savings and loans associations.

Throughout my career, I have demonstrated an ability to successfully manage complex operations, effectively steward resources, create and lead diverse purpose-driven teams, and advance reforms designed to enhance the impact and sustainability of development investments.

And I have done so in a bipartisan manner, recognizing and respecting Congress' role as an equal partner in U.S. foreign assistance. If confirmed, I will draw upon this experience to effectively oversee USAID's management and resources needs.

As the U.S. Government's lead the global development agency, USAID needs to be nimble enough to respond to an ever-evolving set of geopolitical challenges and crises, and to do so with the management and oversight commensurate with the responsibilities given to it by the American people through the Congress.

If confirmed, my top priority will be positioning USAID to further maximize its development impact, by [1] better aligning strategy and resources to deliver results; and [2] expanding the Agency's partner base to include more nontraditional U.S. and local implementing partners with strong in-country knowledge, expertise, and a commitment to sustainability.

In order to maximize impact, we must support and invest in USAID's greatest strength, its people. If confirmed, my focus will be on making sure the Agency has a staff equipped with the right tools, and bolstered by a supportive culture, one that recognizes and responds to the outsized demands placed on USAID, and embraces the values of diversity, equity, and inclusion.

And finally, if confirmed, I will prioritize enhancing USAID's ability to rapidly respond and take advantage of emerging opportunities as conditions change on the ground. There are multiple layers to this goal, but perhaps most important is building on prior efforts to enhance the Agency's procurement capabilities so that it programs resources in a faster, more responsive manner.

Again, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today, and I look forward to your questions.

[The prepared statement of Ms. Adams-Allen follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF PALOMA ADAMS-ALLEN

Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, members of the committee, it is an honor to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee to be Deputy Administrator for Management and Resources of the United States Agency for International Development.

I would like to thank the President and Administrator Power for their trust in me. I'm grateful for the opportunity to return to USAID, an Agency dear to my heart, at a moment when its leadership and development expertise are so urgently needed.

I am here before you today because of the love and support of so many—my mother, Emilie Adams, a proud Minnesotan who instilled in me a deep sense of fairness and justice; my father, Llewelyn Adams, who I credit for my strong Jamaican work ethic; my husband, Travis Allen, still the best human I know; my daughters, Priya and Emilie, whose creativity and empathy inspire me every day; and a network of extended family, friends, colleagues, and neighbors spanning the globe. Thank you all.

My international development and diplomacy experience started early, informed by the duality of my upbringing: summers spent in the relative wealth and safety of my mother's community in the United States, and the school year spent in the riotous beauty and vulnerability of my father's home country of Jamaica. It was in the jarring journey back and forth between these worlds that I settled on what I wanted to do with my life: pay forward the incredible privilege I have as an American, by working to fuel hope and opportunity in communities like the one that helped raise me.

This early decision informed my 20+ years working in the foreign assistance arena, primarily focused on Latin America and the Caribbean. During a decade in policy and programming roles at the Organization of American States, I saw the potential of multilateralism to calm tensions between neighboring countries and mobilize regional support for humanitarian crises like the 2010 Haiti earthquake. But it has been my experience in the federal government, serving in leadership and management positions at USAID and now as head of the Inter-American Foundation, where I have been able to affect the change I dreamed of as a child. During a decade of public service, I have had the honor of investing in and learning from young people bravely building peace in El Salvador; small holder farmers in Colombia selling their coffee to global retailers; and proud grandmothers in Haiti financing micro and small businesses through their savings and loans associations.

Throughout my career, I have demonstrated an ability to successfully manage complex operations, effectively steward resources, create and lead diverse purpose-driven teams, and advance reforms designed to enhance the impact and sustainability of development investments. And I have done so in a bipartisan manner, recognizing and respecting Congress' role as an equal partner in US foreign assistance. If confirmed, I will draw upon this experience to effectively oversee USAID's management and resources needs.

As the U.S. Government's lead global development agency, USAID needs to be nimble enough to respond to an ever-evolving set of geopolitical challenges and crises—and to do so with the management and oversight commensurate with the responsibilities given to it by the American people through the Congress.

If confirmed, my top priority will be positioning USAID to further maximize its development impact, by (1) better aligning strategy and resources to deliver results; and (2) expanding the Agency's partner base to include more non-traditional U.S. implementing partners and local organizations, with strong in-country knowledge, expertise, and a commitment to sustainability.

In order to maximize our impact, we must support and invest in USAID's greatest strength and resource: its people. If confirmed, my focus will be on making sure the Agency has enough staff, equipped with the right tools, and bolstered by a supportive culture—one that recognizes and responds to the outsized demands placed on USAID, and embraces the values of diversity, equity, and inclusion.

And finally, if confirmed, I will prioritize enhancing USAID's ability to rapidly respond and take advantage of emerging opportunities as conditions change on the ground. There are multiple layers to this goal, but perhaps most important is building on prior efforts to enhance the Agency's procurement capabilities—so that it programs resources in a faster, more responsive manner.

Again, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today, and I look forward to your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.
Dr. Donfried?

STATEMENT OF DR. KAREN DONFRIED OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, NOMINATED TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE [EUROPEAN AFFAIRS AND EURASIAN AFFAIRS]

Dr. DONFRIED. Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, members of the committee, thank you for this opportunity to appear before you today.

I have long valued my bipartisan collaboration with this committee, dating back to 1991, when I began a decade of work on Europe at the Congressional Research Service. If confirmed, it would be a pleasure to work with you from the State Department on issues I care passionately about and on which the United States is and shall remain a force for good.

It is an honor to be nominated by President Biden to serve under Secretary Blinken as the Assistant Secretary of State for European and Eurasian Affairs. If confirmed, I will work enthusiastically to serve the American people, and advance the interests of the United States, to reinvigorate our alliances and partnerships, to strengthen democracy in Europe and Eurasia, and to address the challenges we face around the world.

My greatest support, if confirmed for this position, will come from my husband, Alan Untereiner, our daughter, Hannah, and our son, Michael. They are an endless source of love and inspiration. Although born in New York City, I spent my early childhood in Heidelberg, where my father, a theologian, did his doctoral work, and my mother worked as a nurse at U.S. Army Headquarters.

That experience gave me the gift of speaking German fluently, which, in turn, allowed me, two decades later, to complete a Master's degree in Munich, where I met Alan, a fellow American studying abroad. Trans-Atlantic relations have been an integral part of my life story.

Professionally, I served in the George W. Bush administration as a member of the State Department's Policy Planning Staff, and in the Obama administration both as the National Intelligence Officer for Europe, and as the Senior Director for European Affairs at the National Security Council. For the past seven years, I have led the German Marshall Fund of the United States.

If confirmed, I will have the responsibility, and the honor and joy of leading EUR, covering 50 countries, with 79 posts and 12,000 hard-working, dedicated public servants. I will treat each and every one of them with the care and respect they deserve, as well as work energetically to recruit and develop more diverse talent for the Bureau.

President Biden defines his number one job as ensuring that America's foreign policy benefits the American people and the American middle class. I am eager to support him in achieving this goal, including by revitalizing our alliances and partnerships. The strength of America's alliances is one of our greatest assets. Whether we are confronting the COVID-19 pandemic, economic or social inequality, climate change, corruption, threats to energy security, an aggressive Russia, an increasingly assertive China, cyber threats, or technological competition, the United States is most effective when we cooperate with our allies.

Europe is home to many of our closest allies and partners. Together, we must stand firm against Russia's broad range of destabilizing actions while recognizing there are areas of mutual interest on which we might cooperate. Allies and partners must work together to blunt the Kremlin's attempts to undermine democracies and democratic institutions.

We must confront Russian aggression against its neighbors by standing with the people of Ukraine, Georgia, and Belarus. And we must stand up for universal human rights, including in Russia. The Kremlin's persecution of political opponents, such as Aleksey Navalny, remains deeply disturbing.

Additionally, we must work with our allies to counter an assertive China in the political, diplomatic, economic, military, and technological domains. How we manage our relationship with China is the biggest geopolitical test of the 21st century.

We must work to preserve the free and open rules-based order we built together with our allies seven decades ago in the wake of World War II. The Marshall Plan remains one of the most compelling examples of the United States exercising enlightened leadership.

But 2021 is not 1947. We must modernize our alliances to meet new challenges. Secretary Blinken has made clear that while we applaud the significant progress many NATO allies have made in improving defense investments, we need to do more. The common threats we face demand it.

Allies share values and interests, but we will not always agree. To manage those differences requires trust; if confirmed, I will work to deepen that trust to achieve policy successes that advance U.S. interests. If confirmed, I will seek to deepen cooperation between EUR and this committee to ensure that our diplomacy delivers for the American people.

I look forward to your questions. And thank you for your consideration.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF DR. KAREN E. DONFRIED

Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I have long valued my bipartisan collaboration with this committee, dating back to 1991, when I began a decade of work on Europe at the Congressional Research Service. If confirmed, it would be a pleasure to work with you from the State Department on issues I care passionately about and on which the United States is and shall remain a force for good.

It is an honor to be nominated by President Biden to serve under Secretary Blinken as the Assistant Secretary of State for European and Eurasian Affairs (EUR). If confirmed, I will work enthusiastically to serve the American people and advance the interests of the United States, to reinvigorate our alliances and partnerships, to strengthen democracy in Europe and Eurasia, and to address the challenges we face around the world.

My greatest support, if confirmed for this position, will come from my husband, Alan Untereiner, our daughter, Hannah, and our son, Michael. They are an endless source of love and inspiration. The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.
Ambassador Phee?

STATEMENT OF HON. MARY CATHERINE PHEE OF ILLINOIS, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE [AFRICAN AFFAIRS], A MEMBER OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE AFRICAN DEVELOPMENT FOUNDATION, AND A MEMBER OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE AFRICAN DEVELOPMENT FOUNDATION

Ambassador PHEE. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Risch, distinguished members of the committee; I am honored to be President Biden's nominee for the post of Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, and grateful to the President and to Secretary Blinken for their confidence.

I began my career as a public servant in these halls in the office of Senator Pat Moynihan. Senator Moynihan kept only two documents on his desk: the U.S. Constitution, and the U.N. Charter. He inspired my career in the Foreign Service, and taught me an abiding respect for this institution, and this committee.

My career in foreign policy began in Nairobi, Kenya, at the United Nations Environment Program. In Kenya I was introduced to the talent and generosity of the African people. Kenyan politics were also my first exposure to the enduring challenges of governance, security, and sustainable development. Applying U.S. diplomacy to effectively meet such challenges has been the dominant theme of my career.

I thank this committee for its bipartisan recognition of the growing political, economic and cultural power of the diverse countries in sub-Saharan Africa. It is up to the State Department to translate this recognition into respectful partnerships that advance our shared interests, values, and aspirations.

If confirmed, I will work to support President Biden's agenda to expand the quantity and quality of our engagement with African Governments, institutions such as the African Union, and critically, African publics.

To stand up to the threat of autocracy, the President has charged us with demonstrating that democracy is the best system to meet the challenges of our interconnected world. Africans agree and are raising their voices to set new destinies for their countries, as we see in Nigeria. The bravery of the Sudanese people in demanding a civilian-led government is another extraordinary example.

Across the Continent we will reinvigorate our focus on human rights, accountability, and good governance. President Biden has declared the fight against corruption, especially the theft of public assets for private gain, to be a core national security interest.

We see a direct correlation between African Governments that are authoritarian and the incidence of internal conflict, displacement, and migration. Many are contending with an active threat from the Islamic State, and other violent extremists like al-Shabaab in Somalia.

Diverse societies struggle to uphold inclusive and equitable power-sharing arrangements, and collaboration with regional and international partners, tailored U.S. diplomatic, development and security assistance can play a critical role to support peace and security.

This imperative is driving our current intensive effort to urge all parties to the conflict in Ethiopia to implement an immediate and unconditional ceasefire to put a halt to atrocities against civilians.

Climate change also threatens stability. Desertification in the Sahel disrupts farming and has displaced hundreds of thousands, and reckless exploitation threatens the rainforest in the Congo Basin, and the Continent's biological diversity. It is in our mutual interests to work together on environmental sustainability.

Africa is the fastest-growing and the youngest continent. By 2050, one in four persons in the world will be African. Workforce development and job creation will be necessary to tap the ambitions of the youth bulge. We are committed to expanding two-way trade and investment, and to advancing the regional goals of the African Continental Free Trade Area. Among other strengths, the U.S. private sector offers innovative American options for green energy, and digital economies, as well as a commitment to social responsibility.

All these priorities are now threatened by the devastating human toll of COVID-19. Consistent with America's generous tradition of investment in Africa's health systems, exemplified by the landmark PEPFAR program, the White House has just announced the donation of 25 million COVID-19 vaccines for Africa. The Development Finance Corporation is also investing in vaccine production in South Africa and Senegal.

Mindful of the challenges at home and humble about the challenges in Africa, our best asset will be a dynamic and affirmative U.S. policy agenda that enlists African partners in building free-market democracies that offer liberty and prosperity and realize the Continent's full potential.

Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, with the Strategic Competition Act, you have given us our marching orders and new tools. If confirmed, I commit that U.S. embassies in Sub-Saharan Africa will act to confront the Chinese challenge to the international rules-based order.

Finally, and not least, if confirmed I promise to be a champion of the people of the State Department's Africa Bureau, to unleash their full potential with a vigorous commitment to diversity and inclusion, and to cultivate the special esprit de corps that has traditionally defined the Bureau. Thank you.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. MARY CATHERINE PHEE

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Minority Member, distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to be President Biden's nominee for the post of Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, and grateful to the President and to Secretary Blinken for their confidence.

I began my career as a public servant here in the office of Senator Pat Moynihan. To guide his work, Senator Moynihan kept only two documents on his desk: the U.S. constitution and the U.N. Charter. He inspired my career in the Foreign Service, and taught me an abiding respect for this institution, and this committee.

My career in foreign policy began in Nairobi, Kenya, at the United Nations Environment Program. In Kenya I was introduced to the talent and generosity of the African people, and the beauty and richness of the African landscape. Kenyan politics were also my first exposure to the enduring challenges of governance, security and sustainable development. Applying U.S. diplomacy to effectively meet such challenges has been the dominant theme of my career.

I thank this committee for its bipartisan recognition of the growing political, economic and cultural power of the diverse countries in sub-Saharan Africa. It is up to the State Department to translate this recognition into respectful partnerships that advance our shared interests, values and aspirations. If confirmed, I will work to support President Biden's agenda to expand the quantity and quality of our engagement with African Governments, institutions such as the African Union, and, critically, African publics.

To stand up to the threat of autocracy, the President has charged us with demonstrating that democracy is the best system to meet the challenges of our interconnected world. We know that the majority of Africans agree and are raising their voices to set new destinies for their countries, as we see in Nigeria. The bravery of the Sudanese people in demanding a civilian-led government is another extraordinary example. Across the continent we will reinvigorate our focus on human rights, accountability, and good governance. We see a direct correlation between African Governments that are authoritarian and the incidence of internal conflict, displacement, and migration. Many are contending with an active threat from the Islamic State and other violent extremists like al-Shabaab in Somalia. Diverse societies struggle to uphold inclusive and equitable power-sharing arrangements. In collaboration with regional and international partners, tailored U.S. diplomatic, development and security assistance can play a critical role to support peace and security. This imperative is driving our current intensive effort to urge all parties to the conflict in Ethiopia to implement an immediate and unconditional ceasefire that puts a halt to atrocities against civilians, to permit the delivery of humanitarian assistance, and to restore stability through political dialogue.

Climate change also threatens stability. Desertification in the Sahel disrupts farming and has displaced hundreds of thousands, and reckless exploitation threatens the world's second largest rainforest in the Congo Basin and the continent's wonderland of biological diversity. It is in our mutual interests to work together on environmental sustainability.

Africa is the fastest growing and the youngest continent. By 2050, one in four persons in the world will be African. Workforce development and job creation will be necessary to tap the ambitions of the youth bulge. We are committed to expanding two-way trade and investment and to advancing the regional goals of the African Continental Free Trade Area. Among other strengths, the U.S. private sector offers innovative American options for green energy and digital economies, as well as a commitment to social responsibility.

Consistent with America's generous tradition of investment in Africa's health systems, exemplified by the landmark PEPFAR program, the White House has just announced the donation of 25 million COVID-19 vaccines for Africa. Earlier the President committed the United States to providing 500 million Pfizer vaccine doses to Gavi, the Vaccine Alliance, for distribution by COVAX to 92 low- and lower middle-income countries and economies, and the African Union. The Development Finance Corporation is also investing in vaccine production in South Africa and Senegal. This pandemic highlights how our fates are intertwined.

Mindful of the challenges at home and humble about the challenges in Africa, our best asset will be a dynamic and affirmative U.S. policy agenda that enlists African partners in building free market democracies that offer liberty and prosperity and realize the continent's full potential. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Minority Member, with the Strategic Competition Act you have given us our marching orders and new tools. Finally, and not least, if confirmed I promise to be a champion of the people of the State Department's Africa bureau, to unleash their full potential with a vigorous commitment to diversity and inclusion and to cultivate the special esprit d'corps that has traditionally defined the bureau.

Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Ms. Witkowsky?

STATEMENT OF MS. ANNE A. WITKOWSKY, NOMINATED TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE [CONFLICT AND STABILIZATION OPERATIONS], AND TO BE COORDINATOR FOR RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT

Ms. WITKOWSKY. Thank you, Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and distinguished members of the committee. It is an honor to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee to serve as Assistant Secretary of State for Conflict and Stabilization Operations, and Coordinator for Reconstruction and Stabilization.

I am deeply grateful to President Biden and to Secretary Blinken for the confidence they have placed in me for this nomination.

I am joined here today by my husband, John, and our son Jack, with our daughter Elizabeth watching remotely. I want to underscore how much their love and support means to me, as well as that of my mother, sister, and all family members.

Growing up in the Midwest, I am grateful my parents modeled for me the values of public service. My father served in the Army Corps of Engineers in World War II, and as the first Chairman of the Illinois State Board of Education, while my mother volunteered for many civic organizations.

I have by now had the opportunity to serve in the Executive Branch across four administrations; within the Department of Defense, the Department of State, and on the White House National Security Council staff. While I have held positions outside government as well, there has been no greater privilege than to serve alongside the talented and dedicated men and women in the national security community, in the civil service, foreign service, the military services, law enforcement and intelligence.

Throughout, I have learned the critical importance of effectively using all U.S. national security tools, including diplomacy, development and defense to support U.S. policy priorities and advance U.S. interests and values.

From my experience pursuing conventional arms control in Europe at the end of the Cold War, to advancing counterterrorism policies and programs in the post-9/11 period, to supporting the Department of Defense response to the Ebola outbreak in West Africa, I have learned that the U.S. Government is most effective when integrating our policies, programs, and activities to work at common purpose. That is a key lesson I intend to bring to my position as Assistant Secretary, if confirmed.

The Bureau of Conflict and Stabilization Operations, or CSO, has a vital role to play in developing and carrying out U.S. conflict prevention and stabilization policy and programs, working in close cooperation with USAID and the Department of Defense. Preventing conflict is hard, and outcomes can be tough to measure. Yet, when we do not address instability at the front end, too often we find ourselves having to address it in different, more costly ways at the back end.

The strategic environment for the CSO mission is growing more challenging. The number and duration of violent conflicts is increasing. Democracy is backsliding for the 15th straight year, and authoritarianism is on the rise. We see territory controlled by governments being reduced, as non-state armed actors gain ground.

The COVID-19 pandemic has taken a toll on populations globally. The displacement of people is at a recorded high; climate change, corruption, gender inequality, and the rapid spread of disinformation pose additional underlying challenges.

Therefore, if confirmed, I will place priority on strengthening the Bureau's contributions to the U.S. Government's effectiveness in meeting these challenges.

Policies and best practices should be regularly adapted, drawing from lessons learned. We will deepen and renew U.S. partnerships on these issues, bilaterally and with multilateral organizations, to advance common objectives. And we must work collaboratively with civil society.

If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with the Members of this committee, including those who have been instrumental in providing new tools to break the costly cycle of conflict. Among those tools are the Global Fragility Act of 2019, and the Elie Wiesel Genocide and Atrocities Prevention Act of 2018, as well as the Women, Peace and Security Act of 2017, all bipartisan legislation.

CSO will exercise leadership, working with other State Department bureaus and interagency partners, to advance their implementation, together with the 2018 Stabilization Assistance Review.

And as I consider our plans, we will identify how the work of CSO can reinforce support for democratic values and human rights at the heart of our foreign policy. That work must be anchored in understanding how Russia's malign efforts undermine democracies and exploit instability, and the geostrategic challenge of China's ambitions.

Finally, I will be dedicated in full to building a strong workforce, one that is committed to advancing diversity, equity, and inclusion.

Thank you again for this opportunity to lead the CSO Bureau, to advance American interests and values toward a more peaceful and safer world.

I look forward to your questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF ANNE A. WITKOWSKY

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Thank you all very much. So first I have a series of questions on behalf of the committee as a whole, and a simple yes or no to the question by each of you, is what we request. These are questions that speak to the importance that this committee places on responsiveness of all officials in the executive branch and that we expect and will be seeking from you.

So with a simple yes or no answer: Do you agree to appear before this committee and make officials from your office available to the committee and designated staff when invited?

Ms. ADAMS-ALLEN. Yes.

Ms. WITKOWSKY. Yes.

Dr. DONFRIED. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Ambassador?

Ambassador PHEE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Do you commit to keeping the committee fully and currently informed about the activities under your purview?

Ambassador PHEE. Yes.

Ms. ADAMS-ALLEN. Yes.

Ms. WITKOWSKY. Yes.

Dr. DONFRIED. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Did I hear a yes from you, Doctor?

Dr. DONFRIED. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Okay.

Do you commit to engaging in meaningful consultation while policies are being developed? Not just providing notification after the fact?

Ambassador PHEE. Yes.

Ms. ADAMS-ALLEN. Yes.

Ms. WITKOWSKY. Yes.

Dr. DONFRIED. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And do you commit to promptly responding to request for briefings and information requested by the committee and its designated staff?

Ambassador PHEE. Yes.

Ms. ADAMS-ALLEN. Yes.

Ms. WITKOWSKY. Yes.

Dr. DONFRIED. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. Thank you, all.

So we will start a round a five-minute questions. I will start with myself. There is a lot of room, a lot of waterfront to cover here with all four of you. So it will be difficult.

But let me start by focusing with you, Dr. Donfried, on a series of issues that I am very much concerned about. Section 231 of CAATSA is a provision that imposes sanctions on entities that conduct significant transactions with the Russian defense and intelligence sectors. I help write that law. Do you agree to section 231 of CAATSA has prevented significant funding from going to the Russian defense and intelligence sectors? And do you support its full implementation?

Dr. DONFRIED. Chairman Menendez, it is such an honor to appear before the committee, and I will turn to your question, but I do not want to let this opportunity pass to thank you for your support of GMF. And as you were giving your opening comments earlier, I had a flashback to 2019 when you delivered an important keynote speech about the importance of trans-Atlantic relations on GMF stage in Brussels. And I just want to thank you for not only your leadership of this committee, but also being such an important public voice on these issues.

You mentioned your role on CAATSA, and I would absolutely agree with you that that legislation has been important in pushing back against Russian influence and countering its malign activities. And if confirmed, I would, indeed, commit to the full implementation of CAATSA.

The CHAIRMAN. Very good. Do you commit to regularly engaging with me in efforts to ensure its full implementation?

Dr. DONFRIED. Chairman Menendez? If confirmed, I would look forward to working closely with you on its full implementation.

The CHAIRMAN. Now what do you think about CAATSA sanctions on Turkey unless Ankara gets rid of its Russian S-400 system?

Dr. DONFRIED. Chairman Menendez, I would say that we have to keep sanctions on Turkey for as long as it has the S-400s.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. So, let me turn to a few other things. The administration has yet to impose congressionally mandated sanctions in response to the attempted murder of anti-corruption activist, Alexei Navalny, as required under the Chemical and Biological Weapons Act. These sanctions were due on June the 2nd. I will note that they were pending since the past administration and neither have yet acted on it.

If confirmed, will you commit to briefing us on why the administration continues to ignore the law?

Dr. DONFRIED. Chairman Menendez, I find Russia's use of chemical weapons chilling and shocking. And if confirmed, I will follow the law and I will stand up to Russia's reckless and aggressive behavior. And I will look forward to the opportunity to consult with you in so doing.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Now let me turn to the Eastern Mediterranean. This is an increasingly important, I think, part of the world, we passed the Eastern Mediterranean Security and Partnership Act, which I think enhanced our relationships with critical countries in the region: Greece, Cyprus, Israel, to mention some, and creating a new paradigm in the Eastern Mediterranean in both energy and security.

But we wake up today to see a statement by President Erdogan of Turkey with reference to Cyprus saying that peace talks on the future of ethnically-divided Cyprus can take place only between two states, only between two states.

Now this is in violation of U.N. Security Council Resolution 550 that called upon members to not recognize the Government in the North, that calls for Varosha to come under U.N. administration, and that considers any attempt to resettle Varosha by other than its inhabitants, to be inadmissible.

And it further violates the U.N. Resolution 789, that called for a significant reduction in foreign troops, that calls for U.N. peacekeepers to be deployed to Varosha, and called for a recommitment to the peace process.

Erdogan is violating all of the U.N. Security Council Resolutions. He is in the north of Cyprus today instigating, and creating a challenge to a country that is part of the European Union. Now I will say that over several administrations, we have been rather passive, from my view, about this engagement. And all we see is Erdogan encroaching in the exclusive economic zone of not only Cyprus, seeking to do so with Greece.

It has played, in my view, a nefarious role in a variety of things in the region. And unless we take an assertive role and push back, we are going to find ourselves with a significant challenge.

Now I would like to hear from you, if you were to be confirmed, what role you would take, what position you would take as it relates to these issues?

Dr. DONFRIED. Chairman Menendez, thank you for your engagement on the Eastern Med. It has made a real difference. And I have been following the breaking news from Cyprus as I entered this hearing room, and this latest announcement by the Turkish Cypriot leader and by Turkish President Erdogan about the Turkish Cypriots taking control over parts of Varosha is exactly part of the narrative you are talking about.

This is a move that is clearly inconsistent with U.N. Security Council Resolutions. I do not know if the U.S. Government has yet issued a statement about this, but I am certain this action will be condemned, and these actions are provocative, they are destabilizing for the region, and they are an impediment to any settlement for Cyprus, that will be on the basis of a bizonal, bicommunal federation.

And if I were to be confirmed, I would want to work closely with you on this. In this particular case of Varosha I think that we need to refer the situation to the U.N. Security Council. We need to encourage the international community to give a strong response to this action. We also need to work to deescalate tensions in the Eastern Mediterranean, and I do appreciate your engagement on this.

The CHAIRMAN. So I have your commitment that if you are confirmed, this will be one of your priorities in your portfolio?

Dr. DONFRIED. Yes, Chairman, it would.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.
Senator Risch?

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. And I certainly want to associate myself with those remarks regarding Erdogan and his actions throughout the globe.

Ms. Donfried, I want to start with our relationship with our friends in Europe, and particularly as it relates to both of ours and Europe's relationship with China. One of the ways, as we push back on the Chinese challenge, is it is going to take a real partners to do that. No country is going to be able to do it alone. If we put our population, Europe's population together, we are still only about a third of what the Chinese population is.

Because we have common and shared values with our European allies, it is the most natural alliance there is to push back against China. I authored a report on this, and I think others have given speeches on it, and also done reports on it. What are your thoughts on how we can work together with Europe to push back on the challenges we are going to get from China?

Dr. DONFRIED. Ranking Member Risch, thank you for that question. I have read your November 2020 Report and I would commend it. The comprehensiveness and breadth of the view you took on how the United States can work more closely with Europe on these key challenges in the relationship with China, I think in many ways is path-breaking.

And I would commit to you that I would look forward to working with you on how we flesh out what you called a concrete agenda for trans-Atlantic cooperation on China. I think there is no better moment for us to be doing this because I think Europe understands today much more than it has over the past decade, the challenge China poses.

And when President Biden made the trip to Europe just last month, at the G7, at the NATO Summit, at the U.S.-EU Summit, we saw this commitment on the part of our allies to work with us on the agenda. I think that we can put U.S. diplomatic muscle to good effect here. Thank you.

Senator RISCH. Well, I appreciate that. And I think we have all got to commit ourselves to getting China to comply with international norms, and rule of law, and enforcement of rule of law. And if we do not, it is going to be a long 21st century for all of us if we do not, if we do not do that.

Let us turn to Georgia for a minute. I and other members of this committee, have been disappointed in what has been happening in Georgia. Senator Shaheen and I were there when they had their elections in October of 2012, which we thought was a new dawn, and a new beginning. And after that we have been regularly disappointed as to what happens there.

And they come to Washington, D.C., all the time, the different parties, and each of them try to engage us and get us to take sides in their political maneuvering, which every country does. And we keep telling them that they have got to resolve this themselves. We are not going to take sides in this.

But they are not making much progress. You get to a point where you wonder whether or not it is time to just reevaluate where you are with this. What are your thoughts Georgia?

Dr. DONFRIED. Thank you, Ranking Member Risch. And I am grateful to you and Senator Shaheen for that trip that you made.

And I also would point to the CODEL that Senator Shaheen and Senator Portman took to Georgia quite recently, and I think that broad bipartisan engagement is critical in the relationship.

If confirmed, I would continue to push for the full and prompt implementation of the agreement that was signed on April 19, and urge all parties in Georgia to support that agreement. And I cannot underscore enough how important electoral reform and judicial reform is for Georgia. As you well know, Georgia has made substantial strides to strengthen its democracy, but it has much more distance to travel, and I will press for them to cover that distance.

At the same time, I would reaffirm U.S. support for Georgia's territorial integrity and sovereignty, and continue to support for Georgia's integration in the Euro-Atlantic community, which is tied to the strength of Georgia's democracy. And I would look forward to working with you on these issues.

Senator RISCH. Well, thank you. I certainly appreciate those thoughts.

My time is up. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Coons?

Senator COONS. Thank you, Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch. And thank you to our nominees today. And particularly to your families who have supported you in your careers in Foreign Service, so far.

Dr. Donfried, if I might? I want to associate myself with the concerns raised by the chairman about Turkey's nefarious role, both in Cyprus and in the region, and my concerns about that. We will have a hearing about Turkey, I believe tomorrow, where we will explore that more thoroughly. And the ranking member raised concerns about China that I might well have just echoed, but I would like to ask you specifically about the path forward in U.S.-German relations.

President Biden just welcomed Chancellor Merkel to the White House. We have long enjoyed a close and positive relationship. There are upcoming elections. I think Germany is one of the central powers in all of Europe. One of our core allies, one of the most important nations in the world in terms of sharing our values and an economy built on advanced manufacturing.

What do you see as the future of U.S.-German relations, and how does our work with them in Europe, around collective security, and in the rest of the world, in terms of pushing back on China, have positive and negative aspects? How do you intend to navigate all this?

Dr. DONFRIED. Senator Coons, thank you very much for that question. And I remember being at a site event at the Munich Security Conference with you in Germany.

Senator COONS. Mm-hmm.

Dr. DONFRIED. And I am mindful of how very knowledgeable you are about these issues as well. As you know, Germany is a critical partner and ally of the United States. It is, of course, the largest and wealthiest member of the European Union. And we just saw Chancellor Merkel visit President Biden last week, where the discussion based on the press conference, seemed to cover many of the issues you just referred to.

There is an election in Germany on September 26th, so as we saw last week, in many ways, this was a farewell visit by Angela Merkel as Chancellor after 16 years in office. So we are all expecting change in this relationship. It may well be that her party, the center-right party, maintains the chancellery, but the coalition is likely to look different.

And that will matter for German policy, particularly with regard to countries like China and Russia, where if you had the Greens in coalition, I think you would see a greater sensitivity to the human rights violations that we see those countries make. So I think it is an exciting moment for the relationship with Germany. While on the one hand we can celebrate what has been, I think there will be opportunities for the U.S. Government to forge and deepen cooperation on issues like China. Thank you.

Senator COONS. Thank you. And I am looking forward, hopefully, to participating in the Munich Security Conference again with the leadership of this committee and many other colleagues.

Ambassador Phee, if I might? Great to see you again, since we last visited in Juba in 2017. Congratulations on your nomination.

There is so much to discuss across the Continent. Let me just bear down on a few things quickly, if I might. Since my visit to Ethiopia a few months ago, on behalf of our President, the situation in Tigray, and the U.S. bilateral relationship with Ethiopia, has deteriorated significantly.

Could you just, briefly, outline your plans to make progress in opening up humanitarian relief, making progress towards a ceasefire and then, God willing, peace and some reconciliation in Tigray? And what do you think might be the path towards accountability for those who have committed human rights violations, and for possibly rebuilding the U.S.-Ethiopia relationship on the other side of this, if possible?

Ambassador PHEE. Thank you, Senator. And it is an honor and a privilege for me to see you again, in this environment.

I want to thank you and other members of the committee, including Ranking Member Risch who introduced a resolution on Ethiopia, for the efforts you have made to make clear, U.S. concerns about the situation that has resulted from the conflict in Tigray.

Your efforts have been instrumental in making sure that all parties to the conflict understand that the United States urgently seeks an immediate end to hostilities, unconditional humanitarian access, accountability for atrocities, and a new course to achieve the political and economic reforms sought by the Ethiopian people.

And if confirmed, I am committed to using all available tools in partnership with this committee to achieve those critical objectives, and to working with you to help Ethiopia get back on track.

The Prime Minister started his premiership with a positive direction, with important rhetoric that was responsive to the desire of the Ethiopian people for economic and political reforms.

That initial positive start has gone badly off track, and it is in our interest to work across the political spectrum in Ethiopia to get it back on track, both for the immediate concern for the civilians who are suffering, but also so that Ethiopia can regain its leadership role in the Horn. Thank you.

Senator COONS. Thank you. Thank you, Ambassador.

Mr. Chairman, could I continue, or should I have a number of additional questions? I did not know if you were doing a second round or not.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you say you have a hundred additional questions?

Senator COONS. A few.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, a few.

Senator COONS. A very few.

The CHAIRMAN. Because I have at least a hundred.

Senator COONS. Maybe two.

The CHAIRMAN. Actually, happy to let you go on.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for your forbearance.

If I might, Ms. Witkowsky; the Global Fragility Act is a, I think, promising new tool. There are many areas of fragility, Ambassador Phee and I might have gone on at greater length if we had the opportunity about the Sahel, and about Mozambique, and other places where there are significant conflicts.

The CSO Bureau has an important role to play in the implementation of the Global Fragility Act that Senator Graham and I wrote and was signed into law last December. And it tries to come up with strategies that will prevent instability. Can you just briefly share your vision for how you will employ this new tool?

Ms. WITKOWSKY. Senator Coons, thank you very much. And thank you so much for your leadership on this important issue, and for providing the opportunity of this new tool to the U.S. Government, to move forward on the complex and difficult challenges of addressing fragility.

The Global Fragility Act maps an important new way of doing business on fragility, with its ten-year commitments, its emphasis on solutions being locally led, and its requirements for tighter integration among bureaus, agencies, the field, and Washington.

If confirmed, I see that CSO will play a leadership role in the day-to-day implementation, of the Global Fragility Act implementation, one of coordination, and working with all relevant agencies who are participating in moving forward to implement the Act and supporting our embassies, working with civil society. And that process will amass to the higher-level process that you have mandated under the Steering Committee in the Act.

I look forward to drawing in my many years of leading large agency and interagency efforts to move forward successfully with its implementation. And I can assure you that implementing the Global Fidelity Act will be a high priority for me.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Ms. Witkowsky.

My last question for Ms. Adams-Allen; you have been involved in the Inter-American Foundation. Ambassador Phee will be on the Board of the Africa Development Foundation, both of them relatively small, agile responsive. One of my real concerns is about increasing localization and flexibility of our assistance programs.

I just visited Guatemala, and had a chance to visit a shelter for trafficked children, a site that I know Samantha Power, the Administrator, also visited. I am really concerned about the lack of credible partners for us to work with in a number of the countries, in Central America, and in other places in the world.

What is your strategy for increasing the localization of assistance programs so that we are not solely reliant on government partners? And what would you think about piloting that in Central America, where I think we are genuinely constrained in terms of the quality of the government partners we have available to do robust development projects with?

Ms. ADAMS-ALLEN. Thank you for the question, Senator. I could not agree more about the need to localize U.S. foreign assistance and make sure that it is sustainable and it is really locally owned. As you mentioned, this is precisely what The American Foundation does, and it is my contention that there are actually numerous potential local partners across the world.

But I know particularly in Central America that USAID could tap into a pipeline of existing, vetted, tested local partners who are working on issues of livelihoods, crime prevention, peace building, and governance in the affected communities.

In terms of a strategy, you know, if confirmed, I think it will be important for USAID to build on existing efforts, not only looking at the model of the USADF, OIF, but also building on the new Partner's Initiative and the Local Works program that they have been testing at USAID.

I think it is going to be crucial to streamline the procurement processes at USAID so that small local organizations can have access to partnership potentials with USAID.

Third, I think it is going to be crucial to strengthen the capabilities within USAID, in particular, the technical staff, and the contracting staff who are the ones we are going to need to support local organizations.

Senator COONS. Thank you very much. Thank you to the panel.

Thank you for your forbearance, Mr. Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Van Hollen?

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Risch. Congratulations to all of you on your nominations.

Dr. Donfried, it is good to see you, it was good to catch up with you a little bit the other day. You know, one of the key responsibilities I think of this portfolio you have will be to work with our European partners to counter China's use of unfair economic policies, and trade policies, to establish a set of agreed-upon rules of the road. And I know that it is going to be part of what you are focused on.

I want to also associate myself with the comments the chairman made regarding CAATSA, and the importance of fully enforcing CAATSA, and making sure that, you know, Turkey continues to see those sanctions applied because of the purchase of the S-400s.

I heard in your response to Chairman Menendez, a reference to Erdogan's, President Erdogan's visit to Cyprus today, which of course is the anniversary of the illegal Turkish invasion of Cyprus. And he is taking some very provocative steps, including talking about resettling parts of the Varosha, which would be a gross violation of numerous United Nations Security Resolutions, and U.S. policy statements with respect to not changing the status quo, except for through a negotiated settlement.

Senator Menendez and I, and Senator Rubio, and others, sent a letter to the President Biden last week on this issue. It has now come to pass. So in addition to just making strong statements condemning the action, I think it is important that we work with our European allies in the EU to look at other sanctions that can be imposed for the violation of law here, rule of law.

President Biden has sort of recentered U.S. policy on rule of law. So do you agree that it is important to stand firm, together with our partners in the EU, on this violation?

Dr. DONFRIED. Senator Van Hollen, thank you for taking the time last week to meet with me. I appreciated that. And to your question, yes, I do agree we should work closely with the European Union, with our European allies on how we pushed back against this. I think we will be stronger for doing so.

And I also look forward to working closely with you and with the chairman, if confirmed, on these critical issues around stability and peace in the Eastern Mediterranean.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. I appreciate that. We are going to be having a hearing. I know that the chairman has organized a hearing tomorrow on Turkey specifically. So I will have a greater chance to talk about that. But we just see this series of very provocative moves in Cyprus, in the Eastern Mediterranean, also walking away from the parameters of a bizonal Federation that had defined the talks for peace in Cyprus.

Ambassador Phee, if I could? You have a huge portfolio. I look forward to working with you on all the issues including trying to really increase U.S. investment in Africa. My question relates specifically to Sudan. Senator Coons and I visited Sudan, I think back in May now, and Sudan, of course, is one of those countries where in a world where we see retrenchment, and people moving in the wrong direction, i.e. issues of democracy and rule of law, Sudan is a bright spot.

And I know you agree that we should do everything we can to support their transition from dictatorship to democracy. At the end of June, Prime Minister Hamdok gave a very important speech. And one of the things he focused on was the importance, the urgent importance of consolidating the military, which consists, as you know, of various militia, including the RSF, under a unified command, and that command be under civilian control.

The U.S. continues to have a law in place based on the Bashir Government coup decades ago that limits our ability to engage with the armed forces through security systems.

Would you agree that we should look at ways of changing that? Given the fact that we now have seen a peaceful revolution and where the United States could play, I think, a constructive role, carefully, but a constructive role in helping Sudan, integrate and consolidate its military under unified command under civilian control?

Ambassador PHEE. Senator, it is an honor and pleasure to see you again. And I thank you for your leadership of the Africa Subcommittee. And I thank you for your efforts, such as the recent trip that you took with Senator Coons.

You have perfectly captured, I think, this critical moment in the Sudanese transition. The Senate has already played such a vital role in supporting the transition by giving us the tools, helping to dismantle. As you note, some of the architecture that was put in place during the Bashir regime. And if confirmed, I absolutely commit to review the important option you have suggested here today, about how we might work more effectively with the security forces.

In tandem with the Prime Minister's announcement, there were also statements made by the military leadership about the importance of working together. So there are real opportunities for us to continue to support this very critical transition, which will have such a transformative impact on the Continent. Thank you.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Well, thank you. I look forward to working with you. And while it has taken a long time, I know AID is finally finalizing its $700 million commitment. So the committee looks forward to working with you as that moves forward as well.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. There are presently no other members seeking recognition. But there is one member on their way here, so I have a few extra questions, so I am just going to pursue them now.

Let me go back to you, Dr. Donfried. You have a very large universe to cover. Earlier this year the Biden administration recognized the Armenian genocide. Do you support the administration's decision to recognize the Armenian genocide?

Dr. DONFRIED. Chairman Menendez, I do. And I would like to thank you for your leadership on that issue. You have been a long-time champion of the U.S. Government officially recognizing the Armenian genocide. And I think it puts the United States in a very good place to be on the right side of history on this issue.

The CHAIRMAN. There is another issue in the region that is a little more complicated—well, that it took a long time for us to recognize the genocide, but I am glad. And I give credit to President Biden for doing so.

But given Azerbaijan's aggression last August in Nagorno-Karabakh war, the administration continued the use of waivers for Section 907 restrictions. I have to be honest with you, and based on the declared meaning of Section 907 as I read it I am not quite sure—it was quite a stretch, to go ahead and waive. What are your views on that?

Dr. DONFRIED. Chairman Menendez, if I am confirmed, I would look forward to working closely with you on that issue, of the waivers for that assistance to Azerbaijan. I think it is critical that we make sure that any support we are giving to Azerbaijan is not in any way affecting the balance of power between Azerbaijan and Armenia, and that we are committed to resolution of Nagorno-Karabakh.

The CHAIRMAN. No, I appreciate that. The Azerbaijanis are now interfering in the physical territory of Armenia, and a border issue. And it just seems to me they will continue to be aggressive unless they have a clear message that it is not acceptable.

I understand that you have had the chance to review the Ukraine Security Partnership Act. Do you support the legislation which would give increased security assistance to the country?

Dr. DONFRIED. I am grateful for the broad and bipartisan support there is on this committee for U.S. support for Ukraine. And I would read with great interest, the Act, which has many interesting and important ideas captured in it. And if confirmed, I would very much look forward to working with you on how we can increase our support for Ukraine.

The CHAIRMAN. Finally, last week the British Government proposed halting all prosecution of British soldiers and militants involved in three decades of conflict in Northern Ireland, which sparked an angry response from victims' families, and politicians in Belfast and Dublin. The Stormont House Agreement provides a framework to deal with legacy issues from the troubles. Do you support the implementation of the Stormont House Agreement as a way to deal with legacy issues?

Dr. DONFRIED. Chairman Menendez, I mentioned earlier that I spent 10 years at the Congressional Research Service, and one of the issues, I spent a great deal of time on then, was Northern Ireland. And it was a bright time because actually we saw the peace process move forward, and that Stormont House Agreement, or the Good Friday Agreement, I think has to be the basis for U.S. policy toward the Island of Ireland to maintain peace there. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Ambassador Phee, let me ask you. The situation in Tigray and across Ethiopia is rather bleak. The Ethiopian Government's unilateral cease fire does not appear to be getting much traction, and worryingly, it appears to me that we may be entering a new phase of the conflict characterized by the mobilization of ethnic militia, and even more mass atrocities.

What more can the United States do to get the parties, to reach a negotiated ceasefire? If you were to be confirmed, what advice would you be giving?

Ambassador PHEE. Chairman Menendez, thank you for raising this very disturbing issue, which poses such a threat to the civilians of Ethiopia, and to this stability of the Horn. If confirmed, I would enthusiastically endorse the efforts of our Special Envoy, Ambassador Jeff Feltman, who is working right now to mobilize the support of partner nations in Africa, of the partner nations in the Gulf who are engaged in Ethiopia, our partners in Europe, and our partners in the United Nations.

This problem requires all of us pulling together to help Ethiopia stop the current fighting, to stop the spread that you have correctly identified as a genuine threat, and to work on a national dialogue, to address the political and economic performance that are so desperately needed.

The CHAIRMAN. Yeah. And I think we have to look at, if the type of atrocities that are being reported are such, I think we have to look about what other consequences for such atrocities. If we look away then, you know, at the end of the day, others in other parts of the world will do it.

Ambassador PHEE. Chairman Menendez, I fully agree with that sentiment. We have, as you know, a longstanding and multifaceted partnership with Ethiopia, and there are options for us to act in that direction if it becomes necessary. And if confirmed, I would commit to pursuing those options to make clear, just as you have said, that this kind of action is unacceptable.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me turn to the situation of the Sahel, which continues to be deeply concerning, with violence in the region fueling what U.N. agencies deemed the world's "fastest-growing displacement crisis". As you may know, I am the lead sponsor of S615, the Trans-Sahara Counterterrorism Partnership Program Act, which calls for a whole-of-government strategy for the Sahel.

Do I have your commitment, if you are confirmed, to develop a strategic approach to the Sahel?

Ambassador PHEE. Chairman Menendez, you absolutely do. If confirmed, I would address the concerns that are outlined in your legislation, and I would do our best to pull together all the elements of the U.S. Government capability to help support a better outcome in the Sahel.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Now, Sudan's civilian-led transition to democracy is in a critical phase of the transitional government led by Prime Minister Hamdok, has initiated laudable reforms over the last two years, but there are several intractable problems that need to be addressed. What in your view are the major obstacles to democratic transition and stability in Sudan?

Ambassador PHEE. Chairman Menendez, in my view, the main obstacle to the transition in Sudan is helping the military understand that there is a new way of governance in the country, and that it is time for the civilians to remain at the forefront. That is the most important challenge we face, and it is incumbent upon us to do all we can to help them realize that transition.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, Senator Risch?

Senator RISCH. Briefly. Ambassador Phee, I wanted to talk about this one detail that Senator Van Hollen mentioned. And it prodded me into thinking about it some more. And that is, regarding the $700 million that has been provided for Sudan as a result of the legal peace settlement, what are your thoughts on how the U.S. should use that amount?

Ambassador PHEE. Ranking Member Risch, I understand that we should use that money exactly for the purposes for which you appropriated it, which is to help consolidate support for the transition to help provide economic sustainability in Sudan, so that there is popular support for this transition to continue. I understand there is frustration in the pace of disbursement, and if confirmed, I would undertake to immediately look at that issue.

Senator RISCH. Yeah. Frustration would be an understatement. The mechanics that are in place, are you familiar with those or?

Ambassador PHEE. No, sir. I am not as familiar as I should be.

Senator RISCH. I might do that as an additional question for the record. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Well thank you.

Senator RISCH. I do not want our other two nominees to think I have no affection for your work. I do. And I will be submitting a series of questions for the record. For that fact, there will be a series of questions to all of the nominees from me, and I am sure from other members.

The CHAIRMAN. I would urge you to answer them fully and expeditiously so that the committee can consider your nominations at a business meeting.

With no other members before the committee, this hearing will be adjourned. The record will remain open until the close of business tomorrow, which, questions for the record will be submitted.

And with thanks to the committee, this hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 11:13 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO MS. PALOMA ADAMS-ALLEN BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion (DEI)

Question. Last July, the Government Accountability Office (GAO) issued a report depicting extensive demographic data demonstrating the serious challenges the Agency faces when it comes to building a diverse workforce. The GAO concluded “mixed progress” in the Agency’s efforts to increase diversity, and presented a number of troubling findings, including numerous barriers to promotion for racial and ethnic minorities in early- or mid-career Civil Service positions.

- Will you commit to prioritizing actions to address these problems?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to prioritizing actions to address these problems.

Question. Please describe what actions you believe USAID should prioritize to realign and advance the goals of USAID’s Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion initiative?

Answer. Ensuring USAID remains the world’s leading development agency requires the Agency center the principles of diversity, equity, and inclusion in everything it does—reflecting them in its people, its workplace culture, policies and practices, and funding and program approaches. If confirmed, I will make diversity, equity, and inclusion foundational priorities for both our mission around the world and how we support and invest in our workforce. The report you referenced, for example, presented data demonstrating that “promotion outcomes at USAID were generally lower for racial and ethnic minorities than for whites in early to mid career.” If confirmed, I will engage staff across the agency to understand the challenges facing them as they seek to advance in their USAID careers, solicit their advice on how to create more internal ladders and equitable opportunities for professional development and promotion, and treat these issues with the urgency they demand. I understand that one of Administrator Power’s first acts at the Agency was to approve the new DEI Strategy, affirming her commitment to integrate diversity, equity, and inclusion throughout the Agency’s work with a workforce that reflects the diversity of our country. If confirmed, I commit to implementing this Strategy, including by ensuring that staff’s perspectives and experiences are reflected in USAID’s plans for recruiting, retaining, and investing in a workforce that reflects the rich diversity of our country.

Question. That same GAO report indicated significant understaffing in USAID’s Office of Civil Rights and Diversity, a deficiency that reduces USAID’s capacity to respond effectively to allegations of discrimination, identify potential barriers to equal employment opportunity, and submit required reports on diversity and inclusion efforts.

- Will you commit to ensuring that this Office is adequately staffed and empowered to responsibly execute its mission?

Answer. Answer: Yes, if confirmed, I will immediately review staffing and resource needs for USAID’s Office of Civil Rights and Diversity (OCRD) and commit to enhancing its ability to deliver its mandate. I understand the Agency increased OCRD’s operating budget from less than $400,000 in FY2017 to $2,723,000 in FY2021, exclusive of salaries and benefits, while doubling OCRD’s staff allocation from 13 to 25 in FY2020. In addition, I understand that OCRD’s Acting Director has a regular channel through which to engage with USAID’s senior management to discuss EEO Program matters, should OCRD have additional needs or seek additional resources in the future. If confirmed, I will ensure that OCRD has the resources and the access needed to address concerns about discrimination and to advance the Agency’s diversity, equity, and inclusion goals.

Question. How will you approach restoring expertise and recruiting new talent?

Answer. Attracting and retaining purpose-driven development professionals with deep technical expertise and broad programmatic and management experience is key to the Agency delivering on its mission, and doing so nimbly and effectively in increasingly complicated settings. Rebuilding the Agency’s workforce must include examining what the practice of development will look like 10-15 years from now, and identifying and recruiting talent to position the agency for the future. If confirmed, I commit to leading a thoughtful, forward-looking workforce planning effort.

Tapping into needed new talent demands that USAID expand its recruitment pipelines beyond traditional sources, to include U.S. community colleges, minority serving institutions, and professional organizations. I understand that USAID is currently engaging and recruiting diverse high-quality talent through targeted outreach and recruitment events and expanded partnerships with organizations serving underrepresented groups. If confirmed, I will focus on expanding the Agency's external recruitment pipelines so as to bolster its staffing overall, as well as prioritizing the retention and promotion of underrepresented groups as part of a broader effort to fill gaps in expertise by tapping into internal talent pools.

Question. USAID's greatest asset are the international development and humanitarian experts on staff.

- How will you establish a culture where the Agency's actions are based on the insights and talents of its experts?

Answer. USAID cannot accomplish any of its national security and development priorities without the top-notch development professionals who everyday tackle global development and humanitarian challenges with passion, integrity, and skill, so as to empower partners (communities, governments, local and international organizations) as they build a better world for all of us. I experienced this commitment and expertise firsthand in my time at the Agency and now in my current role at the Inter-American Foundation. Building a culture that draws on and leverages the expertise and experience of development and humanitarian professionals requires that leaders look to the experts and seek out their input into and leadership on policy, programming, and operational considerations.

Throughout my career, I have created and led diverse, purpose-driven teams; fostered open, inclusive, and transparent workplaces; and empowered staff by removing obstacles to growth and success, while relying on their expertise and championing their creativity and know-how. If confirmed, I will continue that approach and work to empower USAID staff by always seeking their input, promoting their leadership, and unlocking the support and resources they need to thrive.

Question. Workforce planning is essential to ensuring USAID has expertise and capacities to successfully execute the Agency's wide range of activities and achieve results that often require years of work and engagement.

- Will you commit to advising each Bureau in developing a workforce plan for its programs and missions?

Answer. Yes. I agree that comprehensive workforce planning is essential to ensuring that USAID has the expertise and capacities required to address the increasing global needs and manage increasingly complex programs in more than 100 countries. If confirmed, I commit to working with USAID's office of Human Capital and Talent Management, Bureaus, and Missions, to conduct comprehensive strategic workforce planning that positions the Agency to meet the needs of the moment, as well as adapt to future challenges and opportunities. This effort must include analyzing the Agency's current workforce, identifying skills gaps, anticipating future staffing and expertise needs, and developing and implementing an Action Plan to secure and support the range of expertise (policy, technical, operational, and management) needed to ensure the Agency's continued success. I look forward to working with you to support that strategy, if confirmed.

Question. What do you think USAID can do to improve FSNs' standing within USAID and ensure these hardworking professionals are afforded ample opportunities for professional growth, promotion, and recognition for their work?

Answer. Foreign Service Nationals (FSNs), which constitute nearly half of USAID's global workforce, are an integral part of achieving the Agency's mission. They are a critical link to cultivating and maintaining trust and strong relationships with local communities, which is the foundation for successful development and humanitarian assistance. I understand that USAID is currently working on various initiatives designed to enhance recognition for the value that FSNs bring to the Agency, and to enhance morale among this critical part of the workforce. Specifically, USAID is working to promote leadership opportunities for FSNs at all levels; increase virtual FSN fellowship programs; increase the number of senior-level FSN-13 positions; expand professional development and training opportunities; and expand the use of ladder positions within the FSN workforce to enhance career development. If confirmed, I commit to working with USAID leadership in Washington and its overseas Missions to further advance initiatives that will afford FSNs with opportunities for inclusion, professional growth, promotion, and recognition for their contributions to the Agency.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MS. PALOMA ADAMS-ALLEN BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

China and COVAX

Question. Global health is one of the largest parts of USAID's annual budget and, in 2021, the agency received significant additional resources to support U.S. international COVID-19 relief efforts. Importantly, USAID also is responsible for managing U.S. engagement with COVAX, the vaccines pillar of the WHO-supported Access to COVID-19 Tools (ACT). Unfortunately, while the United States has made $4 billion (as well as 580 million vaccine doses) available to COVAX, China has contributed nothing. Worse yet, China now stands to profit from a pandemic that it unleashed upon the world through the sale of its state-owned vaccines to COVAX.

- If confirmed, how will you ensure U.S. contributions to COVAX will not be used to underwrite or subsidize the purchase and distribution of China's state-owned, substandard COVID-19 vaccines?
- If confirmed, will you prioritize resources for bilateral, in-kind contributions of U.S. vaccines over financial contributions to COVAX? If not, why not?

Answer. I understand that funds from the generous $4 billion U.S. contribution to Gavi in support of COVAX were not used to purchase vaccines made by Chinese companies. These funds were allocated by Gavi prior to the facility's decision to purchase Sinopharm and Sinovac vaccines. I also understand that there are no further contributions of U.S. funds to COVAX planned at this time. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that the U.S. continues to signal concern about procurement of lower-efficacy vaccines, and urges China to pick up its fair share of the global burden on vaccine access rather than simply profiting off of other donors' generosity.

I understand that the decision on when to use bilateral, in-kind contributions of U.S. vaccines over financial contributions to COVAX was based on multiple factors including global and domestic vaccine supply variables. If confirmed, I will work with my interagency colleagues to review the current facts, supply projections and needs in order to continue to advance global COVID vaccine availability as fast and safely as possible.

U.S. International Food Aid and Cargo Preference

Question. The Office of Management and Budget (OMB) has released a memo which, among other things, directs the new OMB Made in America Office to "review how best to ensure agency compliance with cargo preference requirements to maximize the utilization of U.S.-flag vessels, in excess of any applicable statutory minimum, to the greatest extent practicable." This is likely to increase pressure upon USAID to exceed existing cargo preference requirements for food aid under the Food for Peace Act, notwithstanding the fact that the Government Accountability Office (GAO) repeatedly has found that such requirements significantly increase the cost of food aid while failing to advance the statutory purpose of the Cargo Preference Act of 1954.

- Do you agree that U.S. cargo preference requirements for food aid have outlived their statutory purpose?
- If confirmed, will you work with OMB to mitigate the deleterious impact of U.S. cargo preference requirements on life-saving food aid?
- In your estimation, how would an increase of cargo preference requirements impact USAID's budget and ability to meet historic levels of need for food aid?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to working with Congress and the interagency, including OMB, to make USAID's food assistance programming as effective and efficient as possible. Each food assistance modality (U.S. in-kind food, locally and regionally procured food, and cash-based programming) is critical to USAID's ability to appropriately respond to unprecedented global humanitarian needs. An increase in cargo preference requirements would directly result in increased transportation costs for food assistance programs, which would reduce the amount of resources USAID can dedicate to purchasing agricultural commodities to respond to historic levels of global hunger.

Material Support

Question. The United States has strict laws prohibiting the provision of material support to designated foreign terrorist groups.

- If confirmed, will you commit to ensuring that USAID and its implementing partners strictly adhere to all relevant material support laws, regulations, policy directives, and vetting requirements?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to working with USAID staff and partners to ensure compliance with all applicable laws and regulations. I understand that USAID has numerous vetting tools and monitoring safeguards, financial accountability mechanisms, as well as an independent Office of Inspector General, whose work I am committed to supporting if I am confirmed.

Question. If confirmed, what measures will you seek to put in place to ensure not only that all contracts and agreements contain the required material support clauses, but also that adherence is closely monitored and transparently reported to Congress by USAID?

Answer. I am committed to ensuring that USAID funding does not fall into the wrong hands, whether it be terrorism, fraud, or waste. I understand that USAID has numerous vetting tools and monitoring safeguards, financial accountability mechanisms, as well as an independent Office of Inspector General, whose work I am committed to supporting if I am confirmed.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to working with the Department of Justice, the Department of Treasury, and the Department of State to eliminate ambiguity and ensure that USAID's implementing partners, including USAID's humanitarian assistance partners, have clear guidance on what constitutes material support, how to identify intentional and incidental breaches, and how to respond?

Answer. Understanding that USAID does not administer U.S. sanctions programs, if confirmed, I do commit to working with the Department of Justice, the Department of Treasury, and the Department of State to ensure that all implementing partners, including those who support humanitarian programs in some of the most challenging operating environments in the world, have clear guidance about applicable sanctions.

USAID Staffing

Question. Whether Foreign Service, Civil Service, Foreign Service Limited, Foreign Service National, or other, USAID's most valuable asset is its people. Unfortunately, with at least 22 different hiring mechanisms and outdated assumptions about how specific missions, bureaus, and offices should be supported, the agency is in desperate need of a modernized strategic staffing plan that is flexible and adaptive to today's challenges. The budget request includes an increase for USAID's operating expenses and proposes to increase the number of Foreign Service Limited positions, including for global health and humanitarian assistance.

- If confirmed, how will you approach modernizing USAID's arcane staffing mechanisms?
- Should an increase in resources for additional direct-hire positions be paired with a decrease in the number of contractors USAID retains using program funds? If not, why not?
- If the requested increase for direct-hire positions is approved, how will positions be prioritized? Should the recruitment, hiring, and deployment of competent, field-based contracting and agreement officers (COs and AOs) be a priority?

Answer. I understand that USAID is committed to strengthening its global workforce to advance the Agency's mission and U.S. national security priorities. In my experience, USAID has complex requirements and needs to increase both the size and agility of the career workforce while also improving non-career employment mechanisms.

As the administrator stated in her recent testimony before the committee, USAID's staffing has not increased at the same rate as the programmatic needs and requirements. With regard to USAID's Contracting and Agreement Offices, she noted in her testimony that each USAID acquisition and assistance officer has managed over $65 million annually over the past four years: more than four times the workload of their colleagues at the Department of Defense who manage an average of approximately $15 million. I will work to rationalize non-career hiring mechanisms and strategically grow the Civil Service and Foreign Service, while building the overall cohesiveness of the Agency's workforce. If confirmed, I look forward to updating you on the Agency's progress in this area.

USAID Budget Allocations

Question. Section 653(a) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2413) requires that “not later than thirty days after the enactment of any law appropriating funds to carry out any provision of this Act (other than section 451 or 637) or the Arms Export Control Act, the President shall notify the Congress of each foreign country and international organization to which the United States Government intends to provide any portion of the funds under such law and of the amount of funds under that law, by category of assistance, that the United States Government intends to provide to each.” Unfortunately, delays in the appropriations process, the imposition of overlapping spending directives, and other factors relating to the relationship between OMB, the Department of State, USAID, and the Congress have contributed to excessive delays in submission of the mandated 653(a) Report. Moreover, it has become common practice for the relevant agencies to consult only with the committees of Appropriations—rather than with the authorizing committees responsible for oversight of the Foreign Assistance Act—in finalizing such report.

- In your view, what are the chief constraints to delivering the 653(a) report in a timely fashion? How can the process be fixed?
- If confirmed, will you commit to working with the Committees on Foreign Relations in the Senate and Foreign Affairs in the House on the development and execution of the 653(a) report in an open and transparent manner?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to working in an open and transparent manner with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and the House Foreign Affairs Committee on the 653(a) report. As you note, while Section 653(a) of the FAA requires that the report be submitted within 30 days of enactment, I understand that has not been possible in years past. If confirmed, I commit to working within the Agency and with interagency stakeholders to improve the timelines for the submission of the 653(a) report.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MS. PALOMA ADAMS-ALLEN BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

USAID Transformation

Question. The Trump administration had submitted proposals to Congress under its Transformation initiative to make changes to the Bureau for Management and create a Bureau for Policy, Resources, and Planning (PRP). PRP would have combined the functions of the Bureau for Policy, Planning and Learning and the Office of Budget and Resource Management (among others). Congress did not approve such changes and the Biden administration withdrew the proposed changes in May, 2021. Prior to the withdrawal, some international stakeholders had recommended that the Biden administration complete the proposed changes, in particular realizing the PRP Bureau.

- How do you respond to those who advocated for the completion of USAID’s organizational restructuring?
- In your view, do additional structural changes need to be made to USAID’s central bureaus and/or independent offices? If so, what challenges would those changes seek to address?

Answer. I understand that USAID successfully completed the majority of its restructuring efforts, co-locating vital capabilities related to humanitarian assistance; food security and water; and the Agency’s technical assistance to the field. I also understand that USAID’s staff were heavily involved in the prior organizational restructuring and so any further changes need to be thoughtfully considered. If confirmed, I will engage with the administrator, my co-deputy, and the Agency’s internal and external stakeholders, to assess the need for any further change to USAID’s organizational structure.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO DR. KAREN DONFRIED BY SENATOR ROBERT MENEDEZ

Question. Will you commit to providing vital humanitarian assistance to the people Nagorno-Karabakh including supporting the clearance of unexploded ordnance?

Answer. From the onset of last years fighting between Armenia and Azerbaijan in and around Nagorno-Karabakh, the United States has worked to meet urgent humanitarian assistance needs for vulnerable populations fleeing the violence and the communities that host them. If confirmed, I will support the provision of humanitarian assistance to areas affected by the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict. I understand the Department continues to work with other relevant agencies to evaluate the needs of the region and explore opportunities to fund possible programs to clear post-conflict unexploded ordnance in and around Nagorno-Karabakh.

Question. I do not support the administration's decision to waive sanctions on Nord Stream 2. I think it was a mistake that will only bolster Russia's position in Europe. The measures announced last week when the German Chancellor visited Washington fall well short of what is needed to support Ukraine right now.

- What specific further measures do you think the U.S. should take to bolster Ukrainian security and energy transit in the wake of the administration's decision to waive sanctions on Nord Stream 2?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the administration's policy of supporting Ukraine's independence, sovereignty, and territorial integrity against Russian aggression in any form. I commit to providing the assistance Ukraine requires to defend itself, including lethal weapons, based on a U.S. and Ukrainian assessment of Ukraine's defense requirements. On energy security, I believe an extension to Ukraine's gas transit agreement with Russia will help to preserve gas transit revenues for Ukraine and provide time for Ukraine to eliminate its dependence on Russian gas and transit fees, as it has long sought to do. Ukraine should also diversify its energy resources, with an emphasis on clean and sustainable energy.

Question. The Belarusian opposition leader is in Washington this week. The U.S. has yet to announce long overdue sectoral sanctions.

- If confirmed, do you commit to advocate for the imposition of these sanctions?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to advocate for additional measures, including sanctions, to apply continued pressure to the Lukashenka regime to release all political prisoners and start a facilitated dialogue, inclusive of the opposition and civil society, that will lead to free and fair elections.

Question. Will you also commit to ensure that the administration produces a new Executive Order on Belarus that would authorize new sanctions?

Answer. In the May 28 White House statement following the forced diversion of the RyanAir flight, the U.S. Government previewed the Treasury Department's development of a new draft executive order designed to increase pressure on the Lukashenka regime. If confirmed, I will support these efforts.

Question. How does the Biden administration's public commitment to counter corruption correspond with the U.S.-led effort to push for an amendment to Bosnia's election law, which could significantly strengthen the position of ethnic party leaders?

Answer. The administration has made clear that by countering corruption and demonstrating the advantages of transparent and accountable governance, we can secure a critical advantage for the United States and other democracies. Efforts to strengthen democratic processes and reduce corruption in Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) are mutually reinforcing. If confirmed, I will work with others in the administration to encourage reforms that address corruption and implement relevant decisions of BiH's Constitutional Court and the European Court of Human Rights. I will also support efforts to ensure that BiH's electoral system meets international recommendations for electoral integrity, including those made by the OSCE's Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights and the Council of Europe.

Question. Does this not undercut U.S. efforts to counter patronage and machine politics in the country?

Answer. Limited constitutional and election law reforms are necessary to further BiH on its Euro-Atlantic path, a primary goal of U.S. foreign policy for the Western Balkans. The United States welcomes efforts among BiH's political and civic leaders to reach solutions that will increase the integrity, transparency, fairness, and legitimacy of BiH's democratic processes. If confirmed, I will work to bring all actors to the table to forge compromise and local ownership of an improved electoral system that represents and protects the rights of all citizens of BiH.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DR. KAREN DONFRIED BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. Which country or countries do you believe are the most important to U.S. interests in Europe?

Answer. NATO is indispensable for the advancement of U.S. interests in Europe and to our security. NATO, founded 72 years ago and comprising 30 Allies, is a pillar of stability for the world and the essential forum for Transatlantic security and political issues. The United States is firmly committed to advancing NATO's founding values, enshrined in the Washington Treaty, of democracy, individual liberty, and the rule of law. The United States' commitment to Article 5 is ironclad. If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with all of our NATO Allies and the Alliance's partners to safeguard our shared interests in our challenging security environment. The European Union is also a fundamental partner for the United States, as many issues on which we coordinate, including economic security issues, climate policy, and sanctions, among others, are EU competencies.

Question. Do you believe that the U.S. should err on the side of undertaking diplomacy with the European Union, or should it focus its diplomatic efforts bilaterally?

Answer. The United States and the European Union are natural partners to write the rules of the road for the 21st century economy, rules based on our shared democratic values and harnessing the power of the largest economic relationship in the world. At the June 15 U.S.-EU Summit, the leaders of the European Union and the United States renewed our transatlantic partnership and committed to resolving long-standing disputes in order to work together on common challenges. If confirmed, I will endeavor to support that renewed partnership. The U.S.-EU partnership does not supplant the need for bilateral diplomatic efforts with member states and other likeminded countries. If confirmed, I will pursue diplomacy with the EU and bilaterally to further U.S. policy objectives.

Question. How do you believe relationship between the United States and the European Union (EU) has changed since the United Kingdom removed itself from that bloc? What challenges has the United Kingdom's departure from the EU presented for American diplomacy?

Answer. The Biden administration has already worked in concert with both the EU and the UK on sanctions actions targeting Russian officials linked to the poisoning of Alexey Navalny and Chinese officials due to human rights abuses in Xinjiang. The administration supports a strong UK and a strong EU and welcomed the entry into force of the EU-UK Trade and Cooperation Agreement and the Northern Ireland Protocol. The United States has been unequivocal in its support for the Belfast/Good Friday Agreement, which is an historic achievement that must be protected. If confirmed, I look forward to working with both partners to address the range of global challenges as the UK and the EU continue to adjust to their new post-Brexit relationship. I support the renewed commitment to the U.S.-EU partnership made by leaders at the June 15 U.S.-EU Summit. The UK's post-Brexit foreign policy presents opportunities for even closer cooperation on shared priorities. If confirmed, I look forward to collaborating with the UK as it works with a broad range of partners to carry out its Global Britain agenda, including global economic, health, and climate priorities.

Question. In your opinion, what do you believe the United States will gain from the deal that was recently struck between the United States and Germany that will allow the NordStream 2 pipeline to go forward?

Answer. The package announced on July 21 puts in place measures in order to prevent the worst-case scenario—an operational Nord Stream 2 pipeline without any risk-reduction measures for Ukraine or other countries that stand to be impacted by the pipeline. The measures represent a significant commitment by Germany, supported by the United States, to push back against the Kremlin's malign activities and to advance a more secure and sustainable energy future for Ukraine and other frontline NATO and EU countries. It also makes clear that the United States will not allow the Kremlin to weaponize energy resources against our allies and partners and commits Germany to take national measures and pursue measures at the European Union-level to impose costs on Russia should it attempt to use Nord Stream 2 or any other pipeline to achieve aggressive political ends.

Question. Which nations do you believe the United States should work most closely with to counter China's growing malign influence and actions around the world? Which countries do you see as most aligned with U.S. goals and values vis-à-vis China?

Answer. The United States must engage the People's Republic of China (PRC) from a position of strength, which includes acting in close cooperation with our Allies and partners across Europe and Eurasia. There has been a convergence of views among the world's democracies on PRC activities as evidenced by the outcomes of last month's G7, NATO, and U.S.-EU summits. If confirmed, I would work with U.S. Allies and partners to respond to the PRC's non-market practices, speak out against Beijing's human rights abuses and forced labor practices, and address the systemic challenges from the PRC to the rules-based international order.

Question. What are your views on the recently agreed-upon EU-China Comprehensive Agreement on Investment? Should the United States be engaging with the European Parliament to stop its ratification?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to early consultations with our EU and European partners on shared concerns about the People's Republic of China (PRC), including through the recently relaunched U.S.-EU dialogue on China and the U.S.-EU Trade and Technology Council. The European Parliament has conditioned any further action on the Comprehensive Agreement on Investment (CAI) on the lifting of the PRC's retaliatory sanctions. Ultimately, the onus will be on the PRC to uphold its commitments on forced labor, state-owned enterprises, and subsidies.

Question. Many European countries have pledged to keep unsafe telecommunications companies out of their networks. What do you view as the next priority areas for cooperation between the United States and the EU?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to continuing our engagement with European allies and partners on secure development and deployment of 5G networks, including through the U.S.-EU Trade and Technology Council. The United States advocates for measures that exclude untrusted vendors, in line with the Prague Proposals and the EU 5G Toolbox. If confirmed, I will continue working with allies and partners to support a diverse supply chain of trustworthy telecommunications equipment and services. This includes support for open, interoperable approaches like Open RAN (radio access network) technologies that promise to increase vendor diversity and market competition and have the potential to lower costs and improve security.

Question. To what extent do you believe that there is an emerging Russia-China axis? Some suggest that the United States should try to drive wedges between the two nations to destroy any emerging axis. Do you agree with that analysis?

Answer. It is not surprising that Beijing and Moscow would seek to deepen their ties, but we should not overestimate this alignment. Russia and the PRC collaborate when it is mutually beneficial, but a deep-seated lack of trust realistically limits their so-called "strategic comprehensive partnership." Areas of friction between the two suggest they may each have reasons to hedge against over reliance and potentially slow their convergence for their own reasons. If confirmed, I would work closely with European partners and Allies to push back effectively against Russian and PRC actions that run contrary to our values and the international standards of rule-based behavior.

Question. It is likely that Russia has placed nuclear weapons in Kaliningrad, and there is great concern that they may do the same in occupied Crimea. How should the United States respond, if at all, should Russia place nuclear weapons in Crimea? Would that action, in your view, dramatically change the way that the United States looks at Black Sea security?

Answer. The administration will continue to oppose Russia's occupation and attempted annexation of Crimea, which is sovereign Ukrainian territory. If Russia were to deploy nuclear weapons in Crimea, it would represent a significant escalation of tensions not just with Ukraine, but in the Black Sea region, and in Europe. If confirmed, I will continue to work bilaterally and through NATO with Ukraine and other partners and Allies in the Black Sea region and across the entire Eastern Flank to improve their ability to deter and defend against the full spectrum of Russian military threats.

Question. Russia has increased its provocations in the Black Sea and is increasingly turning the region into a Russian lake. Do you believe that the U.S. and NATO responses to Russia's actions and growing militarization of Crimea have been adequate? If yes, why? If no, what more would you like to see done to push back on Russia in the Black Sea?

Answer. Russian provocations in the Black Sea and other parts of Europe, including its military build-up and exercises, require robust NATO deterrence and strong support for NATO partners. The United States continues to work bilaterally and through NATO with our Allies, as well as Ukraine, Georgia, and other NATO partners, to improve their ability to deter and defend against threats to their security. Since Russia's 2014 invasion of Ukraine, NATO has implemented the most significant reinforcement of its eastern flank in the post-Cold War era. In the Black Sea region, these crucial deterrence activities include tailored Forward Presence, a series of land, air, and maritime measures that have increased NATO's presence and exercises and improved situational awareness and readiness in Romania and Bulgaria. All of this is a necessary and proportionate response to Russia's aggressive behavior. If confirmed, I will work with our NATO Allies and partners to modernize their militaries and enhance their capabilities in order to enhance deterrence and defense in the Black Sea region.

Question. Does Turkey's behavior with regard to increasing ties with Russia change how we and our allies think about future NATO expansion and the evolution of the NATO Strategic Concept?

Answer. Turkish-Russian relations are transactional and fraught with strategic rivalries. If confirmed I will urge Turkey not to retain the Russian S-400 system it took delivery of in 2019 and remind Ankara that any new major Russian purchase risks additional CAATSA sanctions. Turkey is a critical ally, it has NATO's second-largest military, and it is a key contributor to Allied missions. Ankara's support for Ukraine's and Georgia's sovereignty, and Turkey's efforts to counter Russia in Syria, the Caucasus, and Libya create significant pressure on Turkey-Russia relations. If confirmed I will work to advance the U.S. and Turkey's many shared interests while also being frank with Turkish counterparts on areas of disagreement.

Question. Since undersea gas fields were discovered in the Eastern Mediterranean some years ago, littoral nations have been developing strategies to harvest and export it. Turkey and the Eastern Mediterranean Gas Forum have emerged as competitors over the future economic development of the zone.

- How should the U.S. engage with parties to ensure that economic development is executed in a safe, stable, and fair way?

Answer. The United States supports regional cooperation to bring durable energy security to the region, create new markets, and provide economic prosperity in the Eastern Mediterranean. The Biden administration is committed to ensuring stability in the Eastern Mediterranean. If confirmed, I commit to encouraging peaceful and diplomatic resolutions to disagreements in the region.

Question. What are the challenges and threats we face surrounding the issue?

Answer. Recent offshore gas discoveries in Israel, Egypt, and the Republic of Cyprus (ROC) have redefined regional relationships, which presents both challenges and opportunities. These new energy sources, if managed well, can continue to improve economic and political cooperation in the Eastern Mediterranean while reducing reliance on Russian and Iranian supplies. This gas would also serve as a useful transition fuel as the region continues to reduce emissions and moves to greater reliance on renewable resources. New routes and types of fuel for European and Middle Eastern partners help to end dependence on Russian gas. Turkey added more LNG to its energy mix in 2020, some of it from the United States, in part to reduce its reliance on Russian and Iranian pipeline gas.

Question. What are the security implications in the region?

Answer. Long unresolved maritime boundary disputes have led to naval confrontations between littoral states. The United States supports all efforts to reduce tensions in the Eastern Mediterranean. Resource development in the Eastern Mediterranean should promote cooperation and provide a foundation for durable energy security and economic prosperity throughout the region. The "3+1" format including Greece, Israel, the ROC, plus the United States, and the East Mediterranean Gas Forum (EMGF), which Egypt hosts and in which the United States is an observer, are venues to promote greater cooperation, energy security, and economic prosperity. The United States supports the EMGF as a technical platform.

Question. President Biden and his administration have repeatedly made commitments to upholding universal rights at home and abroad. In Turkey, authorities are abusing people's human rights and attacking peaceful dissidents at an alarming rate.

- How will you work to address human rights violations in Turkey?

Answer. President Biden's administration has elevated democracy, human rights, and rule of law in our bilateral agenda with Turkey. If confirmed, I will continue to publicly and privately urge Turkey to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the rights to freedom of expression, peaceful assembly, fair trials, and association, which are important to any healthy democracy. If confirmed, I will reinforce at the highest levels of the Turkish Government that addressing democratic backsliding could positively impact our bilateral relationship. I will also ensure a continued strong focus in our own assistance on media freedom and freedom of expression and will work with the EU and international partners to defend fundamental freedoms.

Question. How is Turkey's declining human rights record impacting its relationship with the United States?

Answer. I share your concerns about the steps the Turkish Government's has taken which have weakened the freedoms of expression, association, fair trial, and peaceful assembly. Such moves erode the foundations of democratic society, stifle growth, and undermine the rights of Turkish citizens as guaranteed by their constitution. Turkey is a key Ally and critical regional partner. It is in our shared interest to keep Turkey anchored to the Transatlantic community. That means effectively pressing and supporting Turkey to do more to bolster rule of law, protect human rights, support fundamental freedoms, uphold the rules-based international order, and stand united with the Transatlantic community in addressing global challenges from Iran, Russia, and the PRC.

Question. Do you believe that the United States should try to drive a wedge between Russia and Turkey? If so, how should we undertake that task?

Answer. Russia attempts to harmfully influence domestic processes and drive wedges between the United States and its Allies, including Turkey, using manipulative energy tactics, corrupt business deals, and disinformation. Turkish-Russian relations are dynamic, transactional, and frequently divided by strategic rivalries. For example, Russia and Turkey are often on the opposite side of regional conflicts (e.g., Syria and Libya). At the same time, Turkey is heavily dependent upon Russian energy supplies. Russian tourists, construction sector projects, and agricultural purchases are important for the struggling Turkish economy. If confirmed, I will work with Turkey to prevent Russian influence from weakening a key NATO Ally or harming our bilateral relationship with Ankara.

Question. If confirmed, how will you work with the EU and its member states to ensure that North Macedonia and Albania are given a true and fair chance at admission to the EU?

Answer. The United States recognizes that a prolonged delay in starting accession negotiations with North Macedonia and Albania will have significant political consequences in both countries and could severely set back recent reform progress in North Macedonia and the entire Western Balkans. Both countries have enacted difficult and essential reforms to meet conditions for opening negotiations and deserve to advance on their accession paths. If confirmed, I will work closely with the EU and its member states as part of our shared political and financial commitment to the Western Balkan region.

Question. France and Bulgaria, for two different reasons, have stymied efforts to open accession negotiations with Macedonia and Albania. If confirmed, will you engage with France and Bulgaria on this topic? If so, how?

Answer. Although the EU approved opening accession negotiations with North Macedonia and Albania in March 2020, Bulgaria has blocked the official start of negotiations since November due to its ongoing dispute with North Macedonia. On June 10 in Paris, French President Macron reaffirmed support for North Macedonia's EU accession without delay. On May 21, the Portuguese EU Council Presidency presented to both countries' leaderships a promising, creative resolution proposal, to which the current Slovenian EU Presidency committed its continued support. If confirmed, I will work with all countries involved to see the EU hold the first Intergovernmental Conferences with North Macedonia and Albania as soon as possible.

Question. How do you believe the United States should interact with the EU as we work together to find a solution to the issues between Kosovo and Serbia? Should the United States be in the lead on these efforts? The EU?

Answer. From its inception, the United States has strongly supported the EU-facilitated Dialogue to normalize Kosovo-Serbia relations. If confirmed, I will closely coordinate with our EU partners and engage both Kosovo and Serbia to advance the process. A comprehensive normalization agreement remains the only way for Kosovo and Serbia to unlock their EU futures. The United States believes normalization should be centered on mutual recognition, as the best way for these two neighbors to put this dispute behind them. Both parties have re-engaged in the EU-facilitated talks—the most recent high-level session took place on July 19 in Brussels—and both countries have reiterated their commitments to normalizing their relations.

Question. Russia and China have voiced their shared belief that the Office of the High Representative to Bosnia should be shut down in 2022, saying that Bosnia has achieved the progress necessary to have such oversight removed. Do you agree that the Office of the High Representative has outlived its usefulness? If yes, why? If no, what do you believe should be the path forward for Bosnia and Herzegovina?

Answer. The United States remains steadfast in our support of the Office of the High Representative (OHR) in Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH). The OHR plays a critical role in pressing for BiH's progress towards reconciliation, consolidation of democratic institutions, and further Euro-Atlantic integration. The conditions for closing the OHR were clearly laid out in 2008 in the 5+2 Agenda with the support of the Peace Implementation Council Steering Board, including Russia. These conditions have not yet been achieved, and urgent reforms are still necessary. Focus on the fulfillment of the 5+2, plus anti-corruption initiatives, will advance BiH on its Euro-Atlantic path. If confirmed, I will collaborate with incoming High Representative Christian Schmidt on these priorities.

Question. Earlier this year, Senator Menendez and I passed the Ukraine Security Partnership Act out of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. It aims to support Ukraine in its fight against Russian-backed separatists in the east and push the country to continue necessary reforms of its military and defense sectors. In the bill, we propose placing conditions on Foreign Military Financing (FMF) and International Military Education and Training (IMET) funding.

- What is your view on Ukraine's historical response to conditionality?

Answer. It is my belief that certain types of conditions on assistance, such as those imposed by the IMF or Department of Defense, can be powerful drivers for reform. The Department of Defense, in consultation with the Department of State, has annually certified that Ukraine has met the certification requirements described in Section 1237 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2017 (c)(2). If confirmed, I will continue to work closely with the Department of Defense and my colleagues in the Bureau of Political-Military Affairs to ensure the conditions placed on future assistance further advance Ukraine's Euro-Atlantic integration and military transformation efforts.

Question. Do you believe that increasing conditionality on a portion of military support for the country would provide incentive for further reforms?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to advance our objectives of ensuring Ukraine has the military capabilities it needs to defend itself against ongoing Russian aggression, is systematically advancing security sector reform priorities, and is taking full advantage of U.S. assistance programs like IMET. I am committed to working with my colleagues in the State Department's Bureau of Political-Military Affairs to support a policy approach that most effectively achieves these objectives.

Question. What do you believe are the areas that are most ripe for reform in Ukraine?

Answer. Ukraine has made tremendous strides in its thirty years of independence, and particularly since the 2014 Revolution of Dignity. These gains have been made often with significant U.S. support. There remains a real need to continue to make progress, and, if confirmed, I will push for further progress on economic and rule of law reforms that address corruption and strengthen the independence, transparency, and integrity of Ukraine's democratic institutions. I will also work with Ukraine to help hold accountable corrupt actors who stand in the way of reforms or try to undermine Ukraine's efforts to ensure a bright, prosperous, and secure future for all Ukrainians.

Question. China is increasingly making inroads in Ukraine, wooing it with appealing business deals and the promise of vaccines. What steps should the United States and its allies take to keep Ukraine firmly rooted in the West and to keep Ukraine's valuable technological know-how from falling into the wrong hands?

Answer. The United States is committed to ensuring that American companies can operate on an even playing field in Ukraine, providing a meaningful alternative to China's predatory approach as well as promoting entrepreneurship and fair practices. If confirmed, I will focus on supporting Ukraine's economic and corporate governance reforms, countering the PRC's predatory business practices, and leveraging U.S. assistance to ensure outcomes in line with U.S. and Ukrainian national security interests.

Question. Ukraine continues to fight two wars: one with the Kremlin and its various attempts to undermine Ukraine's freedom and independence; and a second with its own demons, particularly the entrenched corruption that has so often undermined Ukraine's democratic transition and Euro-Atlantic ambitions.

- Should the United States continue to condition certain types of assistance on continued economic and anti-corruption reforms? Should existing conditions for aid be expanded?

Answer. It is my belief that certain types of conditionality, such as those imposed by the IMF for financial assistance to Ukraine, can be powerful drivers for economic and anti-corruption reform. At this time, I consider the conditions for continued IMF disbursement, if met by Ukraine, an important motivator of crucial judicial and corporate governance reform and protecting central bank independence. If confirmed, I will continue to encourage Ukraine to address the concerns of the IMF and the U.S. over backsliding on legislative action and empowerment of anticorruption institutions.

Question. What further incentives does the United States, along with our European partners, have to encourage Ukraine to complete its land reform, decentralization, privatization of State-owned-enterprises, and creation of an independent and responsive judiciary?

Answer. If confirmed I will continue to work in coordination with our European partners, and directly with Ukraine, to support its chosen Euro-Atlantic path, including by providing assistance and pushing for progress on economic and rule of law reforms that strengthen the independence and transparency of Ukraine's democratic institutions. I welcome the judicial reform laws recently passed by Ukraine's parliament with the strong backing of the President of Ukraine and have been encouraged by Ukraine's willingness to challenge the influence of corrupt oligarchs. For Ukraine to be a strong, secure, and democratic state, it must tackle endemic corruption and ensure the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all Ukrainians.

Question. Since its independence, Georgia has made generally good progress in instilling democracy and implementing market-based economic reforms and has been a strong U.S. partner with ambitions to join the EU and NATO. However, over the past few years, the country has suffered democratic backsliding and oligarchic capture of the judiciary, media, and the ruling political party.

- What levers can be used to push Georgians, including and especially the ruling party Georgian Dream, to reform Georgia's judiciary and complete electoral reforms? Should we consider sanctions?

Answer. Much work remains to reverse backsliding and strengthen democratic institutions and norms in Georgia. Deeper electoral and judicial reforms, and the effective implementation of reforms, are needed to level the playing field and introduce transparency, independence, impartiality, and accountability. If confirmed, my team and I will support Georgia in these efforts, employing diplomatic engagement, exchanges, and assistance programs. We will also seek to take lessons learned from across the region to advance important reforms, which will strengthen Georgia's resilience to Russia's aggression and ongoing occupation of 20 percent of Georgia's territory. We will evaluate all available tools and forms of leverage to push Georgia's governing party to complete these reforms inclusively and transparently.

Question. Has the political and governance situation in Georgia reached the point at which we should re-evaluate our relationship with the country, including by conditioning certain aid to Georgia?

Answer. I share your concern about the current political tensions and lack of progress on urgently needed reforms. It is in the U.S. interest, however, to continue to support Georgia in becoming more democratic, more capable of countering Russian and other malign influence, more able to defend the rights of its citizens throughout its internationally recognized territory (included that occupied by Russia), and more economically prosperous. U.S. foreign assistance programs are an integral part of furthering U.S. strategic interests in Georgia and any proposed conditionality should be approached with this in mind. If confirmed, my team and I will evaluate all available tools and forms of leverage, and I would welcome the opportunity to work closely with you to advance U.S. interests in Georgia.

Question. The U.S. Embassy in Russia has been working under duress for a number of years and is now facing extreme pressure due to restrictions on the hiring of locally employed staff. The Russian Embassy in Washington and the Russian Government in Moscow have not proved terribly willing to work with the United States to make sure that our embassy is fully staffed and able to continue operations.

- What can be done to negotiate a solution with Russia and restore our full embassy operations?

Answer. I am disappointed by the decision of the Russian Government to impose restrictions on the U.S. mission to Russia. It is at times like these that we need more open channels of communication between our governments, including through our respective embassies. Locally employed staff are key members of our workforce around the world. Their contributions are important to our operations and to our bilateral missions. If confirmed, I am committed to working to put our Mission on better footing to advance on our vital national security priorities.

Question. What can be done to support our embassy until we reach a solution, or if we cannot?

Answer. I look forward to working across the Department to identify how we can best leverage resources—both financial and personnel—to support Embassy Moscow. If confirmed, I am committed to ensuring our embassy colleagues receive the support needed to continue executing core functions.

Question. What do you believe should be the role of sanctions in the creation and execution of U.S. foreign policy? With respect to Russia, how do you believe the sanctions imposed on that country since 2014 have affected the Russia's economic and foreign policy decision-making?

Answer. Sanctions are a critical tool in both the formulation and implementation of U.S. foreign policy, serving as a key deterrent to Russia as well as conveying U.S. intent. U.S. sanctions on Russia, especially those implemented in coordination with allies, send a clear message: that the international community will not stand by while Russia continues to violate international norms and laws. The sanctions imposed since 2014 have deterred and deprived Russia of the resources to carry out its aggressive and destabilizing activities around the globe. The legislative tools that Congress has created are key to the effective use of sanctions, and if confirmed, I will advocate to use them to promote accountability and impose costs for Russia's harmful activities.

Question. Given the wide range of Russian malign behavior, how can the United States (including Congress) and Europe do a better job of more clearly defining the conditions necessary for rolling back or removing sanctions with respect to Russia?

Answer. Sanctions are designed to cause a change in behavior, and the most useful sanctions are those with clearly defined intent. The administration sent a clear message to Russia that its activities against the United States would no longer be tolerated via the sanctions imposed in its April 15 action, "Imposing Costs for Harmful Foreign Activities by the Russian Government" including through the issuance of Executive Order (E.O.) 14024. This EO is an important complement to existing legislative sanctions tools, providing the flexibility to target Russian entities engaged in hostile or destabilizing activity around the globe. If confirmed, I will advocate to use all these tools to push back against harmful behavior by Russia.

Question. Do you believe that the imposition of more sanctions on Russia would accomplish U.S. policy goals? What are other measures besides economic sanctions that could be effective tools with respect to U.S. foreign policy vis-à-vis Russia?

Answer. U.S. sanctions on Russia, especially those implemented in coordination with allies, send a clear message: the international community will not stand by while Russia continues to violate international norms and laws. The sanctions imposed since 2014 have imposed a measure of deterrence and diminished the resources to carry out Russia's aggressive and destabilizing activities around the globe. The administration has been clear that it will use every tool available—including economic sanctions—to promote accountability and impose costs on Russia for its continued acts of aggression.

Question. As relations between the U.S. and Russia have worsened, the level of people-to-people contact has likewise diminished.

- If confirmed, what outreach do you intend to undertake with to everyday Russians, if any?

Answer. The Russian Government has intensified its crackdown on civil society and independent media and is specifically targeting programs promoting cultural and academic exchanges with Western countries, including shutting down Bard College's 25-year-old joint degree program with Russia's Smolny University. It is therefore even more critical now for us to engage with everyday Russians and to share our values and insights from the American experience in democracy. The U.S. Embassy Russia has been able to adopt a wide range of new virtual tools, hybrid engagements, and exchange programming for this purpose. If confirmed, I am committed to continuing and finding new ways to expand outreach to the Russian people.

Question. Are there new, more creative mechanisms (perhaps through technology) that the United States can use to rebuild person-to-person relationships between Americans and Russians?

Answer. I support the continued use of new technology and other tools to facilitate person-to-person interaction between Americans and Russians, who continue to be interested in engagement with the West despite obstacles. In addition to the work the U.S. Embassy is already doing with virtual and hybrid engagements, the U.S. Agency for Global Media is exploring ways to enhance its ability to reach Russian audiences, including through the Open Technology Fund, even if the Kremlin forces Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty to leave its physical bureau in Russia. If confirmed, I am committed to strengthening civil society partners and people to people engagements to foster mutual understanding.

Question. The State Department just released the 2021 Trafficking in Person's Report, which identified a troubling trend of backsliding on trafficking prevention, prosecution, and protection efforts from a number of Western European nations, including Norway, Switzerland, Ireland, Portugal and more. It is clear that something must be done to address this serious, ongoing issue to curb this scourge.

- If confirmed, please outline what steps you would take in your various bilateral relationships to address this problem.

Answer. Trafficking in persons is an appalling crime. If confirmed, I will prioritize bilateral engagement across Europe and Eurasia to press governments, including Ireland, Norway, Portugal, and Switzerland, to address the concerns the Department has highlighted in this year's Trafficking in Persons (TIP) Report, and to take concrete action to combat trafficking. If confirmed, I will call out shortcomings where they exist, and use the annual reports to assist each government to identify priority areas for improvement and encourage each to implement the TIP Report's recommended improvements.

Question. If confirmed, will you raise this issue with Foreign Ministries at the first opportunity?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will raise this issue with foreign ministries as combating human trafficking is a priority for the United States and will also be a priority of mine.

Question. Anti-Semitism is on the rise globally, but especially across Europe. If confirmed, what steps will you take alongside the Office of the Special Envoy To Monitor and Combat Anti-Semitism to address this concerning and growing problem?

Answer. Anti-Semitism is abhorrent. If confirmed, I will prioritize combating anti-Semitism in the region alongside the Office of the Special Envoy to Monitor and Combat Anti-Semitism. If confirmed, I intend to work with Congress and implement the following priorities: securing Jewish communities; reporting, investigating, and prosecuting hate crimes; countering anti-Semitism both on- and off-line; promoting the International Holocaust Remembrance Alliance Working Definition of Anti-Semitism; building and strengthening coalitions across different faith communities, civil society, and the private sector; and promoting Holocaust education, remembrance, and commemoration, and combating Holocaust distortion and denial.

Question. Across Europe, there are over 100 detained journalists who were imprisoned for simply doing their jobs. In 2021, the Council of Europe notes 6 journalists have been killed in Europe alone. These statistics are staggering and require immediate attention and action from the United States Government. If confirmed as Assistant Secretary, how will you address this problem and assure our partners and allies that we will not allow the abuse and imprisonment of journalists anywhere in the world?

Answer. Promoting and defending independent media is key to an informed citizenry and healthy democratic institutions and processes. If confirmed, I will seek to deepen our engagement with partners in Europe to address the challenges facing journalists in Europe and the media globally. This includes working through regional organizations including the Council of Europe. Additionally, I will support efforts to promote accountability for those who commit abuses against journalists through bilateral and multilateral diplomacy; public messaging; sanctions and visa restrictions; and foreign assistance programs, including rapid response resources that support journalists, civil society activists, and human rights defenders under threat.

Question. The lack of meaningful progress regarding Cyprus on the political front and the subsequent peacekeeping mission, United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP), is quite troubling.

Answer. The status quo is unacceptable. If confirmed, I will continue to support a Cypriot-led comprehensive settlement to reunify the island as a bizonal, bicomunal federation to benefit all Cypriots and the wider region. The United States appreciates the U.N. Secretary-General's efforts to restart political discussions on Cyprus. If confirmed, I will encourage both sides to demonstrate the necessary openness, flexibility, and compromise to find common ground to restart formal talks. I believe UNFICYP continues to play an important role in preventing a resurgence of fighting between the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities, supervising ceasefire lines, maintaining a buffer zone, and supporting the Secretary-General's Good Offices.

Question. Do you believe reaching a political settlement is possible?

Answer. Yes. But ultimately, the responsibility for finding a solution lies first and foremost with the Cypriots themselves.

Question. Turkish President Erdogan's recent behavior regarding Varosha is unacceptable and a flagrant disregard of current international norms and two U.N. Resolutions. If confirmed, what actions would you take to address this issue and growing, illegal Turkish activity in northern Cyprus?

Answer. The announcement by Turkish Cypriot leader Tatar and Turkish President Erdogan on July 20 regarding the transfer of parts of Varosha to Turkish Cypriot control was clearly inconsistent with U.N. Security Council Resolutions 550 and 789, provocative, unacceptable, and incompatible with their past commitments to engage constructively in settlement talks. If confirmed, I will work to urge Turkish Cypriots and Turkey to reverse their decision announced on July 20 and all steps taken since October 2020, and work with the international community to give a strong response to this action. I will also underscore the need to avoid provocative unilateral actions that increase tensions on the island and hinder efforts to resume Cyprus settlement talks in line with U.N. Security Council resolutions.

Question. Do you see President Erdogan's calls for "a two-state solution" in Cyprus as feasible?

Answer. A Cypriot-led comprehensive settlement to reunify the island as a bizonal, bicomunal federation is the only path to lasting peace and stability. This is the only framework with broad international community support and approved by the U.N. Security Council.

Question. Maintaining recent stability in Kosovo remains a priority, but some Security Council members (including the United States) have indicated a desire to downsize the mission. If confirmed, would you support a strategic review of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK)?

Answer. Although the U.N. Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) has operated in Kosovo since its independence in 2008, it has long since fulfilled its original purpose. U.N. engagement with Kosovo in a more appropriate form that acknowledges and strengthens Kosovo's sovereignty could provide an important support for continued development of democratic institutions. If confirmed, I would continue to urge that the U.N. Security Council consider better ways of helping Kosovo to realize its full potential, which a strategic review could identify. It should be noted that Russia, as a permanent member of the U.N. Security Council, unhelpfully insists on UNMIK remaining in its current incarnation. I would also caution that change to the NATO security presence should be conditions-based.

Question. Since the August 9th presidential election, Belarusians have peacefully protested in unprecedented numbers to contest the official results, which fraudulently awarded Alexander Lukashenka another term. The Government has responded to these peaceful protests with violence, initiating a campaign of disappearances, arrests, torture, and violence against the protestors and journalists. Since the protests began, the United States has increased its support of civil society in Belarus. What more can the United States-through USAID and along with our European allies-do to assist Belarusian advocates of democracy?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to work energetically with partners and Allies to keep pressure on the Lukashenka regime to end repression, release all political prisoners and begin an inclusive dialogue with the opposition (including the Co-ordination Council led by Svyatlana Tsikhanouskaya) that leads to free and fair elections under international observation. Specifically, I plan to continue efforts to coordinate and strengthen economic sanctions, provide assistance and support for civil society- including those working to support human rights, free press, democracy, and Belarus' independence- and keep pressure on the regime through all bilateral and multilateral diplomatic channels.

Question. The International Monetary Fund is in the process of sending around $1 billion to Belarus as part of its program to use Special Drawing Rights to help the world's poorer countries emerge from the coronavirus pandemic. In Belarus, this money will go right into Lukashenka's pocket and will help keep him in power.

- What can or should the United States do to make sure that these monies are not given to Mr. Lukashenka?

Answer. It is my understanding that the United States retains the right to refuse to purchase Special Drawing Rights (SDRs) from any country that we choose, including those under U.S. sanction regimes. We are working with Treasury to develop a strategy to engage our like-minded allies to do the same. However, these countries will not automatically be able to exchange their SDRs- which are reserve assets- for hard currencies. Belarus would need to find a willing country to provide them with hard currency in exchange for their SDRs. If confirmed, I will continue working with our partners at the Department of Treasury to increase transparency around SDR exchanges.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to working to keep these funds out of Lukashenka's hands?

Answer. Yes, I commit to using all tools at my disposal to prevent the Belarusian authorities from exchanging their SDRs for hard currency.

Question. How important is it that the United States and its European allies take steps to make our own systems less friendly to kleptocracy and less penetrable by dirty money?

Answer. The United States will continue to work with European partners to combat corruption by supporting efforts to recover and return stolen assets; deny safe haven to those who engage in corruption; combat money-laundering; stem foreign bribery; and empower and protect civil society and independent media. The United States supports the work at the OSCE and Council of Europe to help participating states implement more effective and transparent anticorruption policies and mechanisms and ensure countries are following through on their international anticorruption commitments. If confirmed, I will also support the work of countering corruption in our own system and continued use of sanctions related to the Global Magnitsky Act, Executive Order 14033 on the Western Balkans signed by President Biden on June 8, 2021, and others.

Question. Will the administration make a concerted push on anti-corruption in the EU and its periphery with the dual purpose of benefitting European citizens and making it more difficult for malign actors like Russia and China to gain a foothold?

Answer. The United States remains committed to combatting corruption not only in Europe, but across the globe. Fighting corruption benefits citizens while also making it more difficult for malign actors to exert their influence. If confirmed, I will continue to work with governments across Europe and Eurasia to strengthen anti-corruption efforts, and encourage these countries to work to fulfill their obligations under the U.N. Convention against Corruption, and to implement the recommendations of regional organizations, such as the OSCE and the Council of Europe, to combat corruption. I will also support the continued use of sanctions related to the Global Magnitsky Act, Executive Order 14033 on the Western Balkans signed by President Biden on June 8, 2021, and others to combat corruption in the region.

Question. The United States and France share several overlapping priorities in Sub-Saharan Africa and work together on many fronts, including fighting the terror threat in the Sahel. However, American and French interests in the region do not always align, including with regard to the ongoing conflict in Northwest and Southwest Cameroon.

- If confirmed, how will you engage our French partners to ensure that we employ a mutually-beneficial partnership across the Sahel and West and Central Africa that reflects the various points of leverage and capability the United States and France each bring to the table?

Answer. France has significant ties in the Sahel and West and Central Africa, and is a steadfast partner in the fight against terrorism. Our shared priorities include security, governance, economic development, and recovery from the COVID-19 pandemic. If confirmed, I will continue our deep cooperation in Africa with France. I will engage the French on our priorities in West and Central Africa, encouraging them to use their strong political, economic, security, and cultural influence toward long-term stability in these regions. I will work within our interagency to support French efforts when mutually beneficial.

Question. How can the United States better coordinate with France to holistically address security threats and improve diplomatic engagements in the Sahel and West and Central Africa from a holistic perspective?

Answer. Both France and the United States share security, governance, economic development, and recovery from the COVID-19 pandemic as priorities in the Sahel and West and Central Africa. These priorities cannot be achieved independent of one another. If confirmed, I will work strategically and tactically with the French to ensure that our efforts are mutually supportive and reinforcing. I will encourage the French to use their strong political, economic, security, and cultural influence to promote the political, security, and democratic reforms that are the best path to long-term stability in these regions, and work with our interagency to support French objectives when aligned with ours.

Question. How can the United States better coordinate and collaborate with the European Union, as well as individual European Governments such as the U.K., to enhance policy consistency and advance mutually-beneficial opportunities for trade, investment, development, and security cooperation with the African Union, regional bodies, African Governments, and private sector partners?

Answer. The EU and European Governments are crucial partners of the United States to advance prosperity and security in Africa. On June 12, President Biden and G7 leaders agreed to launch a global infrastructure initiative called Build Back Better World that will mobilize private sector capital in four areas of focus—climate, health and health security, digital technology and gender equity and equality. The scope of this initiative will include Africa, as well as Latin America, the Caribbean and the Indo-Pacific. The June 15 U.S.-EU Summit Joint Statement confirmed that the United States and the EU are committed to peace and sustainable development in Africa, and plan to provide support for a sustainable economic recovery from the pandemic. U.S.-EU cooperation resulted in the U.N. Human Rights Council's July 13 decision to adopt an EU-led and U.S.-cosponsored resolution on the Tigray region of Ethiopia, and to defeat hostile amendments. If confirmed, I will work collaboratively with our European partners to continue our cooperation.

Question. Russian malign activity in Africa is increasingly a growing concern, particularly given credible reports of elections interference across the continent and deployment of Russian mercenaries, including through the Wagner Group in Northern Mozambique and through nontransparent transfers of weapons and training via Russian security sector support to the Touadera administration in the Central African Republic (CAR). From your perspective, how can the Bureau of European Affairs and the Bureau of African Affairs coordinate to more effectively counter the malign activities and influence of Russia in Africa generally and, more specifically, of Yevgeny Prigozhin and affiliated mining and security companies (like the Wagner Group) in Africa?

Answer. Russian harmful activity in Africa is a matter of grave and growing concern. The use of proxies like Prigozhin's enterprise in the Central African Republic and elsewhere is a particular threat to stability, good governance, and human rights on the continent. I know the Bureaus of European and Eurasian and African Affairs are already working in close coordination on this issue, something I would seek to continue and build upon if confirmed. I would also prioritize collaboration with our European Allies and partners on this issue, as they too are invested in the future of the African continent, directly and via various U.N. programs. The UK and EU have already designated Prigozhin for sanctions, a clear signal that they also take this threat seriously.

Question. There are around 10,000 ISIS fighters housed at various detention facilities around the world. This includes at least 2,000 foreign terrorist fighters (FTFs) that U.S. Central Command (CENTCOM) characterizes as "hardcore foreign terrorist fighters." Many of these FTFs are housed at Internally Displaced Persons (IDP) camps, like al Hol in northeastern Syria. The al-Hol IDP camp has become fertile ground for ISIS recruitment of vulnerable populations, posing a serious risk to global security. Despite this risk, countries with foreign terrorist fighters have failed to make any progress to date towards repatriating their nationals.

- Can you commit to using all tools at your disposal to press the Europe and Eurasia region to repatriate nationals from camps for ISIS fighters and affiliates in northeast Syria?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I intend to encourage countries to repatriate their nationals from northeast Syria, including foreign terrorist fighters and associated family members, and to prosecute them, as appropriate. As I understand it, the Department holds that repatriation—followed by appropriate prosecution in domestic courts of law—is the best way to keep these fighters off the battlefield and hold them accountable for their crimes. If confirmed, I will also support repatriation of associated family members as a means to rehabilitate and reintegrate individuals into their local communities, as appropriate.

Question. How do you plan to engage with EUR countries to advance repatriation efforts, which remains a critical to ensure the enduring defeat of ISIS?

Answer. If confirmed, I intend to continue our consistent diplomatic outreach to European and Eurasian countries urging them to repatriate their nationals from northeast Syria. I will collaborate with the interagency in their work to support countries' efforts to repatriate their nationals with logistical and planning assistance for repatriations, including the use of U.S. Government assets to transport foreign fighters and associated family members out of the region.

Question. United Nations humanitarian assistance program in Syria relies on the border crossings from Turkey to deliver aid to millions of Syrians. Although Russia held off from vetoing the renewal of the last remaining border crossing, it will need to be renewed in December. In the event all border crossings between Turkey and Syria close, what alternatives do we have to get aid to the Syrian people? How could we pressure the Assad regime and Russia to provide aid in our stead?

Answer. The United States led a successful diplomatic campaign to overcome Russian opposition and renew the U.N. Security Council's mandate authorizing cross-border humanitarian assistance from Turkey into Syria. I continue to believe that cross-line assistance alone cannot meet existing humanitarian needs, which is why extending the cross-border mandate at Bab al-Hawa for another year was so important. If confirmed, I will work with my colleagues in the Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs to move forward on a political solution in line with U.N. Security Council Resolution 2254 and continued engagement between the United States, Russia, Turkey, and other key players in Syria.

Question. In your assessment, what are the top five most pressing challenges the People's Republic of China (PRC) poses to both the United States and Europe?

Answer. The most pressing challenge posed by the PRC is its attempt to undermine the rules-based international order, including the multi-lateral U.N. system. If confirmed, I will stand up for democracy, human rights, and human dignity in Hong Kong, Xinjiang, and Tibet. I will work to support Taiwan, a leading democracy and essential partner, in keeping with U.S. commitments. I will make it a priority to support efforts to ensure supply chains for critical supplies are secure and free of forced labor. I will work with Allies and partners to defend access to the global commons, including freedom of navigation under international law. And finally, if confirmed, I will work with Congress and Allies to confront Beijing's coercive economic practices, unfair and illegal trade practices, and cyber theft.

Question. What are the areas that the United States and EU have the most opportunity to work together on mutual challenges posed by the PRC, and which areas still require regulatory reform (either U.S. or EU) to better facilitate cooperation?

Answer. The United States and EU intend to closely consult and cooperate on the challenges posed by China, including through the U.S.-EU dialogue on China and the U.S.-EU Trade and Technology Council. It is important that the United States and EU work together to confront Beijing on the ongoing genocide in Xinjiang and human rights abuses in Tibet and Hong Kong, protect freedom of navigation in the East and South China Seas, and ensure peace and stability in the Taiwan Strait. If confirmed, I will work with the EU to promote an open, free, secure, and reliable digital space and, along with likeminded partners around the world, work to ensure the rules governing tomorrow's technology are based in democratic values.

Question. How do you view Europe's attempts at strategic autonomy, and what challenges does it pose to U.S. cooperation with Europe on issues related to the PRC?

Answer. We welcome efforts of our Allies and partners to strengthen their capacity and capabilities, but it is important that these efforts be compatible with our alliances and contribute to Transatlantic security. Together, the United States and its Allies and partners set the global rules of the road, and we must continue to do so. If confirmed, I will seek to resolve difficult issues with our European Allies and partners while safeguarding U.S. interests and ensuring a level playing field for U.S. companies. As Secretary Blinken has noted, the United States will be much more effective in engaging the PRC when we do so with our Allies and partners.

Question. The United Kingdom has previously joined U.S. freedom of navigation operations in the South China Sea, and France recently announced it would set up a coast guard network with the Pacific Island nations to deter predatory and coercive behavior. What other opportunities are there for the European countries to increase their presence in the Indo-Pacific?

Answer. The Biden administration supports robust engagement by European counterparts in the Indo-Pacific. Some European countries, including Germany and the Netherlands, have published Indo-Pacific strategies, and EU member states have tasked the European Commission and European External Action Service to release an Indo-Pacific strategy by September. The United States supports the UK's "Indo-Pacific Tilt" to the region and its ongoing deployment of the UK-led Aircraft Carrier Strike Group 21 which plans to transit through the South China Sea. If confirmed, I plan to support ongoing efforts by the EU and European counterparts to direct more diplomatic, military, economic, and other resources to the region.

Question. In my China-Europe report published last fall, I discuss the importance of overcoming barriers to U.S.-Europe technology cooperation to counter Chinese technology supremacy, including working through competing regulatory approaches on joint-R&D, data transfer, and privacy shields. What steps do the U.S. and Europe each need to take with respect to technology regulations, and what do you see as the hardest obstacles to overcome in this area?

Answer. President Biden and his EU counterparts established the U.S.-EU Trade and Technology Council as a forum to demonstrate to the world how democratic approaches to trade, technology, and innovation can improve the lives of our citizens and counter authoritarian influence in the digital realm. Discussions on an enhanced Privacy Shield framework also underscore our shared commitment to privacy, data protection, and the rule of law; our mutual recognition of the importance of transatlantic data flows to our respective citizens, economies, and societies; and our common interest in aligning against the growing government surveillance ambitions of authoritarian states. If confirmed, I will work to deepen cooperation in these important areas.

Question. The latest EU strategy on China mentions "the importance of peace and stability across the Taiwan strait." What should the EU do to better support Taiwan in light of an increasingly aggressive PRC?

Answer. Taiwan is a leading democracy, a critical U.S. security and economic partner, and a key U.S. partner in addressing shared global challenges. The United States continues to encourage European allies and partners to engage and publicly support Taiwan. The U.S. commitment to Taiwan is rock solid and contributes to the maintenance of peace and stability across the Taiwan Strait and in the Indo-Pacific. If confirmed, I will support the administration's efforts to support Taiwan and encourage our European Allies and partners to do the same.

Question. My China-Europe report, published last fall, covers the growing presence of PRC companies in building undersea cables. The previous administration focused on this issue through its Clean Cable initiative, and by providing financing for specific cable projects in the Indo-Pacific. A PRC company—Huawei Marine (now called HMN Technologies)—is currently constructing an undersea cable that terminates in Marseilles, France. Please describe your understanding of PRC activities in the undersea cable market and the implications and risks for U.S. and allied interests. Do you commit to prioritizing this area of technology if you are confirmed?

Answer. As with 5G networks, the Biden administration views the security of commercial undersea communications cables as a high priority. The secure development and deployment of undersea cables and related infrastructure in both developed and developing economies is of critical concern to the United States. Countries and citizens need to be able to trust that such equipment will not introduce risks that threaten national security, personal privacy, or human rights. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging on this topic with our European allies and partners to promote open, interoperable, reliable, and secure information and communications technology infrastructure.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO
DR. KAREN DONFRIED BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question. Support for Governance, Democracy, and Human Rights: Supporting democracy, human rights, and good governance, which begins with fighting corruption and must continue to be a priority of U.S. policy.

- What more can we do to further these efforts with our European partners, especially on the battle against corruption?

Answer. The United States will continue to work with European partners to combat corruption by supporting efforts to recover and return stolen assets; deny safe haven to those who engage in corruption; combat money-laundering; and stem foreign bribery. If confirmed, I will support the OSCE's work to help participating States create robust anti-money laundering regimes, a solid ethics infrastructure, and sound financial and resource management.

Question. How can we better work within the OSCE to address these issues?

Answer. If confirmed, I would also encourage the OSCE to take a cross-dimensional approach to anticorruption that focuses on building the capacity of law enforcement, strengthening legal frameworks, and defending members of civil society and the media which expose corruption.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. MARY CATHERINE PHEE BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question. Somalia: As you are aware, the Trump administration ended our troop presence in the country and the Biden administration has dramatically reduced the pace of counter-terrorism operations there.

- If confirmed, what actions will you take to support a sustainable political transition in Somalia?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to supporting Somali efforts to complete a timely, peaceful, and transparent electoral process, which is vital for the advancement of political reconciliation and governance, security, and economic reforms. I am prepared to engage with Somali leaders to ensure they follow through with their commitments with respect to the electoral and government formation processes. I also will coordinate closely with other international partners to ensure consistent policies and messages, and to discourage efforts that could exacerbate political tensions or disrupt a political transition.

Question. In what specific areas should the United States focus security assistance in Somalia going forward? Are there lessons learned from long running security assistance programs that you believe could be better applied?

Answer. The United States supports efforts to advance peace and security in Somalia with a wide range of activities. If confirmed, I am committed to reviewing State Department-administered security assistance programs in Somalia to ensure they are effectively and efficiently advancing our policy goals. If confirmed, I will prioritize close coordination with regional and international partners in the security sector, accountability of U.S. security assistance, and mentorship and training of partnered forces.

Lessons learned applicable to Somalia include biometric enrollment of Somalia National Army (SNA) forces receiving U.S. support, sustained mentorship and training of SNA and African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM) forces and the introduction of clear accountability procedures for U.S. assistance when transferred to partners. With regard to lessons learned on mentoring, U.S. security assistance monitoring has identified that the SNA-Danab program improved by recruiting for clan appropriate battalions, increasing the recruitment of women, and ensuring the Federal Government of Somalia and its Member States agree to both support SNA-Danab. Over time, the results have demonstrated increased unit cohesion and pride, successful joint operations with the AU Mission in Somalia Forces, and lower instances of desertion.

Somalia

Question. As you are aware, the Trump administration ended our troop presence in the country and the Biden administration has dramatically reduced the pace of counter-terrorism operations there.

- If confirmed, how will you work to better manage the sometimes of unhelpful engagement of outside actors in Somalia, including neighboring states and countries from the Middle East like Turkey, the UAE, and Qatar? If confirmed, how do you plan to engage the Bureau of Near East Affairs on issues relate to the Horn of Africa and the Red Sea Corridor?

Answer. The United States has close and constructive relations with many of the external actors engaged in Somalia, including the Gulf states, Turkey, and some of Somalia's neighbors. If confirmed, I would collaborate with the Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs to employ U.S. influence and leverage to encourage our Gulf partners to engage strategically to promote long-term security and stability in Somalia specifically and the Horn of Africa more broadly.

Nigeria

Question. Poor governance and leadership have prevented Nigeria from reaching its full potential. Endemic corruption remains a challenge. There is little accountability for extrajudicial killings by security forces. ISIS West Africa Province remains a potent force in the northeast, and, intercommunal violence and banditry plague various parts of the country.

- If confirmed, how will you engage with the Nigerian Government on these challenges?

Answer. The United States has a strong and enduring relationship with Nigeria, Africa's largest democracy and economy. Nigeria's stability and economic growth can advance our mutual prosperity as well as that of West Africa and the broader continent. If confirmed, I will continue to raise the profile of our engagement with Nigerian leaders to advance our national security priorities and strengthen our collaboration to address security, economic, and governance challenges. Working with other State Department bureaus and U.S. Government agencies, I will support our investments in training Nigerian security forces to build their effectiveness in fighting common threats and serving the Nigerian people, increase accountability for military or police personnel who commit human rights violations and abuses, and strengthen security forces coordination. Working across the U.S. interagency and in partnership with Nigeria's new Ambassador to the United States as well as civil society stakeholders and the Nigerian diaspora, I will undertake a holistic approach to our bilateral relationship that emphasizes shared values and candid dialogue. Through the annual Bi-National Commission and in other bilateral and multilateral meetings and fora, I will engage actively with Nigerian leaders within and beyond government to champion the strengthening of democratic institutions, diversification of its economy, and pursuit of important reforms.

Question. Do you commit to working with the committee to develop a coherent framework in which to provide security assistance before moving forward with additional arms sales and security assistance programs in Nigeria?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to working with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to actively reinforce the importance of civilian protection, and respect for human rights in all elements of our security assistance to Nigeria. I will urge the Nigerian Government to hold security force elements accountable for human rights abuses and violations. To help Nigeria reduce the risk of civilian harm, I will support a combination of legal training and advising to provide stronger underpinnings for the Nigerian military and police to address systematic human rights concerns, develop a professional process for military justice and police accountability, and develop more disciplined security forces.

Arms sales and security assistance programs in Nigeria help bring about incremental institutional reform. I will seek to combine military and law enforcement capability sales with comprehensive training and maintenance programs. Our goal, which the Nigerian Government supports, is greater professionalism of Nigerian security services. Recent improvements demonstrate that Nigeria is a willing security partner, making needed investments and security sector institutional reforms that will bring lasting results in combatting a variety of security challenges.

Question. If confirmed, what new, innovative approaches will you recommend that administration take to mitigate conflict, stop human rights abuses, counterbalance Russian influence, and help the people of CAR achieve a stable democracy?

Answer. The United States supports CAR's efforts to develop strong institutions and strengthen the rule of law through capacity building and technical assistance. If confirmed, I will work to increase coordination within the Department of State, across the U.S. Government, and with likeminded partners such as the European Union and France to ensure our efforts are aligned and mutually supportive to strengthen the CAR Government's ability to mitigate conflict, stop human rights abuses and violations, hold those responsible for such actions accountable, and help the country achieve a stable democracy that does not require the support of dubious external actors. Specifically, to counterbalance Russia's influence, I will pursue opportunities to stand up to negative Russian behavior.

Question. As the U.S. engages to strengthen accountability, security, and inclusiveness, will you commit to supporting processes and institutions, rather than a specific individual or leader?

Answer. Yes. Across administrations, the United States has worked to advance democracy and human rights in the DRC, prevent conflict, and promote economic development. If confirmed, I will work with the DRC Government and our civil society partners, as well as our partners in the region and at the United Nations, to promote political, economic, and security reforms.

The recent inauguration of a new cabinet in the DRC opened an historic new chapter in the country's political history. If confirmed, I will urge DRC leaders to heed the calls of the Congolese people for reforms. I will emphasize to DRC leaders the early imperative of undertaking the legal, financial, and technical preparations necessary for free and fair elections in 2023, including reform of the Independent National Electoral Commission. I will also work with our partners in the DRC to counter pervasive corruption that undermines the country's institutions and will pursue accountability for corrupt actors with all tools at our disposal.

Question. What actions should the administration be taking right now to help support a credible presidential election in 2023, and what specific steps do you plan to take if confirmed to support credible elections?

Answer. If confirmed, I will emphasize to DRC leaders the early imperative of undertaking the legal, financial, and technical preparations necessary for free and fair elections in 2023, including reform of the Independent National Electoral Commission. To be credible, those elections must be inclusive, conducted transparently and impartially, and held in accordance with constitutional deadlines. I will also continue to work with this committee on issues related to the 2023 elections. Appreciating your longstanding interest in this issue, I will work with you to ensure we take your views on board in advance, and that we have the appropriate resources in place to help our Congolese partners with this important task.

Zimbabwe

Question. U.S. policy regarding Zimbabwe has been largely consistent across recent administrations, including the rigorous implementation of ZDERA and other sanctions. Yet the Zimbabwean Government of today is no less authoritarian and corrupt than it was under former president Robert Mugabe.

- If confirmed, how will you approach U.S.-Zimbabwe relations?

Answer. I share the committee's deep concern over the Government of Zimbabwe's authoritarian and corrupt practices, including the targeting of opposition political figures, journalists, and members of civil society through harassment, arrests, and detentions. I appreciate the willingness of this committee to publicly call out repression by the Zimbabwe Government. The Department of State, Africa Bureau, and U.S. Embassy in Harare issue condemnations when appropriate and publicly voice our support for the courageous Zimbabwean women and men who speak out against government corruption and abuses.

The United States supports democratic governance programs that improve electoral processes, refine citizen advocacy strategies, and enhance public accountability measures. We provide support to those the Zimbabwean Government singles out for abuse, and we impose targeted sanctions to promote accountability for corrupt actors and those who abuse human rights and undermine democratic processes.

But we should continue to look at all options. If confirmed, I will work with this committee, civil society, regional neighbors, and likeminded partners to shine a brighter light on the situation in Zimbabwe so that, together, we can increase the pressure on the Government of Zimbabwe to respect democratic principles and human rights. If confirmed, I will also work with our interagency partners to mobilize our sanctions programs to promote accountability for those individuals who are currently active in corruption and human rights abuses.

Question. Is it time to rethink our Zimbabwe policy, in your view?

Answer. We should continually examine our policy towards Zimbabwe to ensure that it is timely and effective. The United States currently employs a blend of programs and strategies in Zimbabwe to strengthen democratic institutions, promote equitable economic growth, boost public health, and improve food security for the benefit of the Zimbabwean people. If confirmed, I will review these programs and strategies.

If confirmed, I will be guided by the Zimbabwe Democracy and Economic Recovery Act in our efforts to press the Government of Zimbabwe to respect democratic principles, basic freedoms, and human rights, and to support those citizens who seek to build an open and accountable system. I also will work with this committee, likeminded partners, and subject matter experts within civil society to examine ways to ensure that our policy towards Zimbabwe is relevant and effective.

Question. What new measures should the U.S. pursue in advancing democracy and human rights in Uganda?

Answer. This year's flawed elections in Uganda underscored the continuing deterioration of both Uganda's democracy and respect and support for human rights and freedoms. Helping the Ugandan people reverse this trend will take new ideas and increased engagement with Ugandan leaders and the country's beleaguered civil society. If confirmed, I will assess what more the United States can do to promote democracy, human rights, and accountability in Uganda and seek to develop options for advancing these goals and objectives.

Question. Given democratic and human rights deficits in Uganda, what will you recommend if confirmed, relative to continued cooperation with the Museveni regime on regional security matters?

Answer. Uganda plays an important role in supporting regional security and counterterrorism efforts in Somalia and elsewhere in the region. During deployments, Ugandan units have been among the most capable and professional in regional missions. The conduct of specific Ugandan troops at home, however, is of concern. If confirmed, I will ensure that U.S. policy in Uganda appropriately reflects the centrality of democracy and respect for human rights called for by President Biden. In addition to working with the African Union (AU), the United Nations (U.N.), and the Government of Uganda to ensure that personnel are properly vetted, follow the rules of armed conflict, and respect human rights, I support working with the AU and the U.N. to identify potential new troop contributors that would reduce AMISOM's reliance on forces that may be implicated in human rights abuses. There is also a need to engage the AU and the U.N. in a timely and credible process to identify and remove potential troop contributors that may be implicated in human rights abuses.

Question. How serious is the new leadership in Tanzania about pursuing genuine political reform?

Answer. President Hassan has taken some encouraging steps in the early days of her administration. These include significant revisions to Tanzania's approach on COVID-19, reengagement with the international community, and overtures to the business community suggesting greater openness to foreign investment. Her initial outreach to opposition political parties and civil society organizations was welcome but needs to be accompanied by significant democratic and human rights reforms. The arrest of leading opposition politicians on July 20 was gravely concerning. If confirmed, I will prioritize U.S. engagement in Tanzania to encourage rule of law, good governance, political pluralism, and people's freedom to exercise their rights without fear of harassment.

Question. What steps will you take if confirmed to incentivize the new Tanzanian leadership to repair the damage of the Magufuli era, both in terms of political reform at home, and Tanzania-U.S. bilateral relations?

Answer. The new Tanzanian leadership has been much more receptive to engagement with both Embassy Dar es Salaam and senior Department of State officials. Such engagement has already contributed to the Hassan administration's increasingly positive steps with regard to its COVID-19 policy. If confirmed, I would work with Embassy leadership to continue to highlight to the Tanzanian Government the additional, potential benefits of closer cooperation with the United States, including renewed support for the country's development and economic recovery efforts. At the same time, I would underscore the democratic and economic reforms that would be required on the part of the Tanzanian Government in order to attain such support and repair in full the Tanzania-U.S. bilateral relationship.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. MARY CATHERINE PHEE BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. If confirmed as Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, what specific actions will you take to meet the administration's stated goal of prioritizing Africa?

Answer. If confirmed, I intend to engage respectfully with African partners to meet global challenges—including security, global health, climate change, freedom and democracy, and mutual prosperity. You would see greater attention to our relationships with African states and publics, with regional institutions like the African Union, and with the African bloc in international organizations.

If confirmed, I look forward to participating in an interagency policy process as the Biden-Harris administration develops a fresh U.S. strategy for Africa that enumerates our national interests in Africa and develops operational actions to advance them, guided by the priorities of this committee. Responding to President Biden's direction, I would highlight the role of democracy and human rights and add a new emphasis on anti-corruption. Without good governance, African states will not be well-positioned to expand peace and security and manage the threats posed by terrorism and migration. I will ensure that we work with our African partners to mitigate and adapt to climate change. I will support programs that promote two-way trade and investment to create opportunities for African youth that benefit workers there and here. In line with this committee's direction, I will work to advance an affirmative agenda rooted in our values and our longstanding investments in development, security and people to prevail in the strategic competition with China. In this effort, we will seek to expand our partnership with Europe and other likeminded nations to reinforce our collective impact.

I will also capitalize on our soft power—engaging with youth, encouraging education opportunities, and engaging the diaspora. Finally, I will join the U.S. Government campaign to help Africa mitigate the negative impacts of the COVID-19 pandemic.

Question. What changes in U.S. posture toward Africa are needed to demonstrate to our African partners that “Africa is a priority”?

Answer. We need to expand the quantity and quality of our engagement across the Continent. As Secretary Blinken noted in his January 19 testimony before this committee, senior-level engagement on a consistent basis will be one important way to demonstrate our commitment. Showing up and showing respect is important. Consistent with our values, we must champion leaders seeking positive change and hold others to account. This approach means reinvigorating our focus on human rights, transparency and accountability, and the fight against corruption which are essential for stability and economic growth. Expanding trade and investment, tackling climate change, and responding to COVID-19 are all shared priorities between the United States and African nations. If confirmed, I will support diplomacy that translates this rhetoric into action.

Question. What specific policies and strategies will you pursue to ensure that you and the Bureau of African Affairs are meeting what you've indicated as “President Biden's agenda to expand the quantity and quality of our engagement with African Governments, institutions . . . [and] African publics”? What changes, if any, are needed within the Bureau of African Affairs to ensure they are best prepared to carry out this vision?

Answer. As Secretary Blinken noted in his January 19 hearing before this committee, the United States has engaged African countries as partners in pursuing our shared interests and values—including security, global health, climate change, freedom and democracy, and shared prosperity. Expanded senior-level engagement on a consistent basis will be one important way to demonstrate our commitment. If confirmed, I will actively support engagement through senior-level visits to Africa, increased consultations with the African Union and African regional organizations, initiatives and economic opportunities to harness the innovation and energy of Africa's youth, university partnerships and training opportunities, and active engagement with the African diaspora here in the United States, to name a few. If confirmed, I will closely review the Africa Bureau's organization, management, staffing, and budget to align our resources to support execution of this vision.

Question. If confirmed as Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, will you commit to work with Secretary Blinken to ensure that ambassadorial positions in Sub-Saharan Africa are filled by qualified, experience nominees in a timely manner?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I am committed to working with Secretary Blinken to ensure that ambassadorial positions in Sub-Saharan Africa are filled by qualified, experienced nominees in a timely manner.

Question. If confirmed as Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, will you commit to work with Secretary Blinken to ensure that first-time career ambassadorial nominees will not be the first choice when identifying nominees for high-profile and strategic U.S. missions in Sub-Saharan Africa?

Answer. The Department of State has a robust process for choosing Chiefs of Mission. If confirmed, I am committed to working with the Secretary and other Department leadership to ensure that we identify highly qualified individuals for every one of these positions in the Bureau of African Affairs.

Question. Under your leadership as Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, if confirmed, what actions will you pursue to ensure that hard to fill posts in Sub-Saharan Africa are sufficiently and consistently staffed?

Answer. I recognize that the Africa Bureau is chronically understaffed, both in numbers of assigned positions and vacancies in those positions. If confirmed, I will personally prioritize personnel and allocate additional resources to support that effort. I am committed to an inclusive workplace and will build on the Bureau's progress to date in implementing management reforms designed to support diversity in recruitment, hiring, and retention.

Other actions I intend to pursue include reviewing staffing levels across the continent with the goal of aligning staffing to our most pressing national interests; exploring options for enhancing incentives for service at hardship posts; and attending to morale and reinvigorating the sense of public service that attracts professionals devoted to making a difference for the United States in Africa.

Question. If confirmed as Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, how will you ensure that the Bureau of African Affairs has the requisite capacity, including sufficient number of trained contract officers and staff, to ensure that it can implement, monitor, and conduct appropriate oversight of TSCTP and other programs?

Answer. If confirmed, I will start by reviewing existing capacity within the Bureau of African Affairs in order to identify any necessary increases in resources necessary to appropriately implement, monitor, and conduct appropriate oversight of TSCTP and other programs. I will work with the leadership of the Department of State to secure required support. I also commit to working with the committee toward our shared goal of improving the effectiveness, transparency, and oversight of TSCTP.

The Africa Bureau has already made a number of changes to respond to the OIG's recommendations. These include, but are not limited to, establishing a TSCTP secretariat to facilitate coordination and implementing best practices around procurement, management, and oversight of AF-funded TSCTP programs. If confirmed, I will review the TSCTP and consult with the committee to ensure we have the appropriate resources, authorities, flexibility, and management controls in place to meet shared objectives for this important program.

Question. How can the Department of State, in coordination with other relevant departments and agencies, support our African partners to manage the activities and impacts better of armed groups on populations, economies and governance?

Answer. Tailored U.S. diplomatic, development, and human rights-sensitive security assistance can play a critical role to support peace and security. While security cooperation is necessary, it is not sufficient to address the drivers of violence and extremism. Sustainable gains—whether governance, security, or economic—require a holistic approach across our government and in coordination with African and other partners.

If confirmed, I plan to work closely with the Department of Defense, USAID, other U.S. Government agencies, and our allies and partners to support African efforts to reduce the activities of armed groups and support policies and programs that build democratic governance structures that respect human rights and deliver liberty and prosperity.

Question. How can the Department of State better address the cross-border movement of armed groups, including through the development and execution of regional approaches?

Answer. Armed groups and illicit traffickers exploit weak border controls and inadequate surveillance but also often benefit from assistance or indifference from border communities that often are underserved by governance, administration, security, and economic opportunities offered by regional and national governments. Addressing cross-border movement of armed groups requires holistic approaches and regional cooperation and information-sharing. Working with partners to build professional, capable, and accountable security and intelligence services to monitor and secure often vast and porous borders must complement rather than replace efforts to provide stability and economic opportunities to vulnerable communities along borders. The Department of State and our embassies across Africa are committed to leverage our influence and diplomatic engagements to promote cross-border collaboration, exercises, information sharing, and coordination among security sector and civilian entities from neighboring and regional states to develop improved cross-border protocols, relationships, and operational effectiveness. Programmatically, the Africa Bureau is reinvigorating the Trans-Sahara Counterterrorism Partnership (TSCTP) and the Partnership for East Africa Counterterrorism (PREACT) in part to strategically identify resources and expertise to address these issues and support regional and sub-regional efforts in West and East Africa to increase border management and security.

Question. What are your views on the role trade and investment could and should play in building stronger ties between the United States and the African continent? How should U.S.-Africa trade and investment initiatives factor into the U.S. global strategy to counter China in Africa?

Answer. We need to do more to boost trade and investment. We want to be partners in creating responsible and sustainable trade and investment that secures good livelihoods for both Africans and Americans. If confirmed, I will advocate for U.S. companies that provide the world class products, technology, and services that Africans seek to grow their economies. I commit to working with interagency partners to mobilize all the tools of the U.S. Government to support this effort and meet the challenges posed by China. The positive economic contributions to Africa that U.S. companies bring—robust training, capital, and high labor and environmental standards—are our best way to compete with strategic competitors such as China.

Question. How can the U.S. Government better promote African countries as destinations for U.S. private sector foreign investment? How can the U.S. improve access for African firms seeking to do business here? How can we best engage the U.S. African diaspora?

Answer. As Secretary Blinken noted in his January 19 testimony to this committee, the United States, using our economic diplomacy and the tools of the DFC, USAID, MCC and Treasury, will work with the U.S. private sector, African Governments, and international financial institutions to increase trade and investment in Africa and promote U.S. business. If confirmed, I will ensure our Embassy Deal Teams in Africa prioritize trade and investment opportunities, as well as business climate reforms that can provide a strong foundation for economic growth more generally. I will make full use of all U.S. Government tools, including through Prosper Africa, to bring opportunities to the attention of the private sector.

If confirmed, I will make full use of USAID's programs to help African firms utilize the preferential access provided by the Africa Growth and Opportunity Act. Likewise, I want to ensure we are making full use of the SelectUSA program at the Department of Commerce to promote the United States as an investment destination for African investors. I agree that we need to work robustly to tap the dynamic African diaspora in the United States as a partner in promoting greater two-way trade and investment between the United States and Africa. If confirmed, I will promote active outreach to diaspora organizations as a vital piece of our engagement.

Question. How can the U.S. Government most effectively support efforts to improve the enabling environment for competitive foreign investment by U.S. firms in Africa? What types of partnerships work best, and how can the U.S. best incentivize reforms and other actions necessary to foster economic opportunity and expand two-way trade and investment with the African continent?

Answer. The Prosper Africa initiative can play an important role in ensuring effective coordination of U.S. Government assistance to improve investment and business climates toward the overall goal of expanding trade and investment. U.S. Government programming needs to be targeted at areas where there is strong host country will to reform. I believe there is potential to do more in partnership with our private sector, particularly in the technology area, to incentivize governments to implement needed reforms, given our firms generally have a clear sense of what needs to be done. Successful partnerships require clear goals and expectations.

I noted in my testimony the importance of greater efforts on governance, human rights, and anti-corruption. I see these areas as vital components of work to build sound, prosperous economies, and to attract needed investment. If confirmed, I will also support our soft power efforts—engaging with youth and encouraging educational opportunities, that amplify our good governance messaging.

Question. Do you agree that countries like Zimbabwe, South Sudan, and Somalia are unsuited for strategic investments under Prosper Africa?

Answer. I agree that Zimbabwe, South Sudan, and Somalia are currently unsuited for strategic investments under Prosper Africa. I also believe we should support U.S. businesses and investors across Africa wherever possible when they see opportunities for increased trade and investment.

Question. If confirmed as Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, will reinforcing democratic institutions and norms in Africa be a priority?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed as Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, I will prioritize reinforcing democratic institutions and norms in Africa.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to ensuring that messaging from the Bureau of African Affairs and its embassies and leadership consistently reinforce U.S. democratic values and interests, including the need to respect democratic institutions and norms, advance human and political rights, and enhance citizen responsive governance?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed as Assistant Secretary I commit to ensuring that messaging from the Bureau of African Affairs and its embassies and leadership consistently reinforce U.S. democratic values and interests.

Question. If confirmed, how will you engage our French partners to ensure that we employ a mutually-beneficial partnership across the Sahel and West and Central Africa that reflects the various points of leverage and capability the United States and France each bring to the table?

Answer. Given its colonial history, France has significant ties in the Sahel and West and Central Africa and concerns about the direct threats posed to Europe from migration and terrorism. Our shared priorities include promoting improved security, governance, economic development, and recovery from COVID-19. France has been a steadfast partner in the fight against Islamic State-Western Sahara (IS-WI) and Al Qaeda in the Maghreb (AQIM). If confirmed, in line with President Biden's direction to revitalize partnerships with key allies, I will act to sustain and build on the historic strong coordination between the United States and France, aligning our respective comparative advantages to holistically address the security and governance challenges across the region.

Question. How can the U.S. better coordinate with France in Africa to holistically address the security threats and improve diplomatic engagements, particularly in the Sahel and West and Central Africa, from a holistic perspective?

Answer. Both France and the United States share security, governance, and economic development as priorities in the Sahel and West and Central Africa. These priorities cannot be achieved independent of one another. If confirmed, I will encourage the French to use their strong political, economic, security, and cultural influence toward African political, security, and democratic reforms that are the best path to long-term stability in these regions, and work with our interagency to support French objectives when aligned with ours. The United States and France regularly coordinate on issues of mutual concern and, if confirmed, I commit to working with France and our other allies and partners in Europe, including the EU, to holistically address the security threats and improve diplomatic engagement across the continent. Specifically, I see continued areas for improved coordination with our French partners in the Sahel and towards resolving the crisis in Cameroon. As your report on U.S.- European cooperation noted, the significant demographic and economic shifts underway across the African continent requires a strong transatlantic alliance, in coordination with our African partners, to collaborate on countering malign influence, and promoting the growth of healthier, more stable, democratic societies that share our values and interests.

Question. Political and ethnic tensions and violence in Burundi have contributed to instability, human rights abuses, and humanitarian crises in central Africa's Great Lakes region for decades. On June 9, 2020, the Government of Burundi announced that sitting President Pierre Nkurunziza (age 55) died suddenly of "cardiac arrest," two and a half months before he was expected to step down following general elections on May 20, 2020. Nkurunziza's elected successor, CNDD-FDD party head Evariste Ndayishimiye, was inaugurated in late August, after the constitutional court upheld his victory with 68% of the vote in the May 2020 elections.

- How optimistic are you about deepening ties with the new Burundian administration under President Ndayishimiye?

Answer. If confirmed, I will need to assess the approach of President Ndayishimiye's administration and will review Burundi's progress.

Question. Do you feel that upgrading Burundi's ranking in the State Department's 2021 Trafficking In Persons Report from Tier 3 to Tier 2 Watch List was warranted based on an objective assessment of progress made in Burundi on TIP issues?

Answer. I understand that Burundi's 2021 Trafficking in Persons ranking as Tier 2 Watch List is based on the Burundian Government's overall increasing effort to counter trafficking in persons. This effort included increasing investigations and prosecutions of suspected trafficking offenses, convicting traffickers, and referring victims to assistance. The Government also developed and implemented the country's first-ever national data collection system on law enforcement's efforts to combat human trafficking and trained officials on its use. If confirmed, I will commit to working with Burundi to ensure it continues to prioritize countering trafficking in persons.

Question. What additional tools does the United States have at its disposal to encourage a peaceful and enduring resolution to the Anglophone conflict in Cameroon?

Answer. On June 7, 2021, Secretary Blinken announced that the United States was taking steps to impose visa restrictions on certain individuals who are believed to be responsible for, or complicit in, undermining the peaceful resolution of the conflict in the Anglophone regions of Cameroon. Secretary Blinken's decision to restrict the visas of individuals responsible for undermining peace in Cameroon is a concrete example of options the Department of State can exercise to push for peace and dialogue. If confirmed, my focus would be to continue urging all parties to end violence and to engage in an inclusive dialogue without preconditions. I would make clear U.S. support for the Swiss Government's effort to advance mediation between the Government and separatist armed group leaders and encourage the Government to take concrete steps to move this effort forward. I will also review the different tools we have to hold human rights violators accountable, including sanctions, and continue the practice of reviewing security assistance on a case-by-case basis. I will continue to pursue engagement with France, other likeminded partners, and U.N. Security Council member states to find ways to promote a peaceful resolution of the ongoing violence.

Question. How can the United States more effectively encourage France to use its significant leverage in Cameroon to encourage the Government to engage in meaningful dialogue and end the conflict?

Answer. The United States and France share an interest in stability and prosperity in Sub-Saharan Africa and meet regularly to discuss how to advance those priorities, including the critical effort to press the parties in Cameroon to pursue an inclusive and constructive path toward peace and stability. Secretary Blinken regularly consults with his counterpart French Foreign Minister Jean Yves Le Drian. If confirmed, I will support ongoing U.S. engagement with France, a key partner in Cameroon, as well as with the UK, the EU, Canada, Switzerland, Germany and other allies, to align our efforts in support of dialogue to resolve the Anglophone conflict.

Question. How is the Department mobilizing other partners to assist Cameroon to find peace and justice, and how do you plan to lead such an effort once in-country?

Answer. The United States regularly engages allies and U.N. Security Council member states at the highest level regarding the need to resolve the Anglophone conflict. If confirmed, I will continue to strongly engage with France, which is key in this process, the UK, the EU, Canada, Switzerland, Germany and other key allies both bilaterally and in multilateral fora to find ways to work together to achieve tangible progress towards peace.

If confirmed, I will also make clear U.S. support for the Swiss Government's efforts to advance mediation between the Government and separatist armed group leaders and encourage the Government to take concrete steps to move this effort forward. The Department of State can support the likeminded countries' effort to support the Swiss Process through coordinated actions and messaging. The process of working with our allies and NGO partners is a regular on-going effort, which I will continue with focus and vigor.

Question. What is your perspective on the performance of the Tshisekedi administration to date?

Answer. The United States supports President Tshisekedi's goal of building a more peaceful and prosperous DRC. Since President Tshisekedi took office in 2019, the U.S.-DRC partnership has contributed to the freeing of individuals who have been unlawfully or arbitrarily detained; establishment of an anti-trafficking agency; the highest-level corruption conviction in DRC history; and related steps that merited the reinstatement of DRC's AGOA eligibility.

The recent inauguration of a new cabinet in the DRC opened an historic new chapter in the country's political history. If confirmed, I will emphasize to DRC leaders the early imperative of undertaking the legal, financial, and technical preparations necessary for free and fair elections in 2023, including reform of the Independent National Electoral Commission. To be credible, those elections must be inclusive, conducted transparently and impartially, and held in accordance with constitutional deadlines. I will also urge DRC leaders to heed the calls of the Congolese people for reforms in the mining sector and security apparatus.

Question. Is it your assessment that the Tshisekedi administration is in a position to continue to advance reforms, including in the areas of anti-corruption and in the security and mining sectors?

Answer. The United States supports President Tshisekedi's and the Government's goal of building a more peaceful and prosperous DRC. Since President Tshisekedi took office in 2019, the U.S.-DRC partnership has contributed to the freeing of individuals who have been unlawfully or arbitrarily detained; establishment of an anti-trafficking agency; the highest-level corruption conviction in DRC history; and related steps that merited the reinstatement of DRC's AGOA eligibility. The recent inauguration of a new cabinet in the DRC opened an historic new chapter in the country's political history. If confirmed, I will work with our partners in the DRC to counter pervasive corruption that undermines the country's institutions and will pursue accountability for corrupt actors with all tools at our disposal. I will also urge DRC leaders to heed the calls of the Congolese people for reforms in the mining sector and security apparatus.

The United States supports the Congolese Government's efforts to stabilize eastern DRC by addressing the drivers of escalating violence, including holding those in the military responsible for corruption and human rights abuses and violations to account. If confirmed, I will urge the Congolese Government to continue to work with the U.N. Organization Stabilization Mission in the DRC (MONUSCO) in support of the peacekeeping mission's efforts to protect civilians, reduce intercommunal tensions, and strengthen state institutions.

Question. In your view, how can the United States continue to support democratic reforms in the DRC, including by enhancing prospects for free, fair, and transparent elections in 2023?

Answer. If confirmed, I will emphasize to DRC leaders the early imperative of undertaking the legal, financial, and technical preparations necessary for free and fair elections in 2023, including reform of the Independent National Electoral Commission. To be credible, the 2023 elections must be inclusive, conducted transparently and impartially, and held in accordance with constitutional deadlines. Knowing of your longstanding interest in this issue, I will work with you to ensure we take your views on board in advance, and that we have the appropriate resources in place to help our Congolese partners with this important task.

Question. If confirmed, how will you work with Congress and USAID to ensure the $700 million is programmed efficiently and effectively to support Sudan's ongoing transition?

Answer. If confirmed, I will stress the importance of timely consultations with Congress by the Africa Bureau and our USAID colleagues on the utilization and effective programming of these appropriated funds. I will also ensure we consult closely with Sudan's civilian led transitional government to ensure these new resources will assist the Government to meet the urgent needs of the Sudanese people at this moment in the transition, and to support efforts related to human rights and accountability, conflict mitigation, and democracy and governance, especially in support of marginalized communities long shut out from having a voice in determining Sudan's future.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to work with Congress to ensure the $700 million is programmed appropriately?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I am committed to working with Congress on the programming of these funds, working closely with USAID to ensure that funds are used appropriately and effectively in support of Sudan's transition.

Question. Given that the United States is a significant stakeholder in ensuring that South Sudan achieves sustainable peace and development, what diplomatic investments would you make as Secretary of State bilaterally, regionally, and with multi-lateral institutions?

Answer. Expedited progress on the integration of security forces, anti-corruption, transitional justice, and a permanent constitutional process leading to post-transitional elections is key to achieving sustainable peace and development in South Sudan. If confirmed, I will make clear to South Sudan's leaders our serious concerns about delays in implementation of commitments in these areas and look for opportunities to increase pressure on those officials responsible for such delays. I would also invigorate the use of all available diplomatic and development tools to provide support to South Sudanese civil society and non-governmental organizations seeking positive change. Additionally, I would consult with regional and international partners to review critically and comprehensively our current approach towards South Sudan. I intend to collaborate with U.S. Ambassador to the U.N. Linda Thomas-Greenfield to ensure that the United Nations Mission in South Sudan (UNMISS) has the necessary resources and mandate to support accelerated implementation of South Sudan's peace process. Finally, I would continue to prioritize diplomatic efforts to press South Sudan's leaders to do more to facilitate the unhindered delivery of humanitarian assistance to the people of South Sudan, to ensure the safety of humanitarian workers in the country, and to hold accountable those responsible for growing violence against humanitarian organizations.

Question. What is your perspective on the ongoing U.S. assistance review, announced in 2018, for South Sudan? If confirmed, how would you support a timely conclusion to the assistance review and enable action on its findings?

Answer. I understand the Biden-Harris administration continues to evaluate the findings of the assistance review in South Sudan conducted under the last administration to ensure that programs are being implemented efficiently and are consistent with our objectives. If confirmed, I would work to continue this process and ensure that programs are strategic, effective and have adequate oversight. The United States Government continues to work to maximize the impact of our humanitarian assistance in South Sudan and mitigate risks of diversion or obstruction of aid or perpetuation of kleptocratic governance.

Question. How would you take a fresh look at U.S. policy in the Horn of Africa as Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs?

Answer. A stable and prosperous Horn of Africa is critical to U.S. economic and security interests. The external actors who are most engaged in the Horn are U.S. partners in the Persian Gulf. If confirmed, I will collaborate with the Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs to employ U.S. influence and leverage to encourage our Gulf partners to engage strategically to foster peace and security in the Horn—a shared goal. I will also consult with the Special Envoy for the Horn of Africa, Ambassador Jeff Feltman, to review our policy, especially our engagement with regional and international partners, to hone a coherent and integrated U.S. approach.

Question. There is broad consensus that U.S. policy toward Somalia needs reconsideration. What is your perspective on U.S. policy toward Somaliland? Do you think the U.S. has missed an important opportunity over the last several years to support and engage more fully with a more stable and democratic entity at the behest of Mogadishu?

Answer. The United States recognizes a single Somalia, which includes Somaliland. The United States has maintained a positive relationship with the authorities in Hargeisa and has encouraged the Federal Government of Somalia and Somaliland to cooperate on issues of mutual interest and to engage in constructive dialogue on questions related to Somaliland's status. If confirmed, I am committed to reviewing U.S. engagement with Somaliland to ensure it effectively advances U.S. interests, including with respect to our relationship with Mogadishu.

Question. From your perspective, what tools (including those currently underutilized) does the United States have at its disposal that are underutilized to encourage democratic and economic reforms in Zimbabwe?

Answer. I share the committee's deep concern over the human rights abuses, economic mismanagement, and kleptocratic behavior that we continue to see in Zimbabwe. I appreciate this committee's condemnation of the Government of Zimbabwe's abuse of human rights and repression of its people. The Department of State, Africa Bureau, and U.S. Embassy in Harare regularly issue similar condemnations and publicly voice our support for the courageous Zimbabwean women and men who speak out against government corruption and abuses.

The United States supports democratic governance programs that improve electoral processes, refine citizen advocacy strategies, and enhance public accountability measures. We provide support to those the Zimbabwean Government singles out for abuse, and we impose targeted sanctions to promote accountability for corrupt actors and those who abuse human rights and undermine democratic processes.

But we should continue to look at all options. If confirmed, I will work with this committee, civil society, regional neighbors, and likeminded partners to shine a brighter light on the situation in Zimbabwe so that, together, we can increase the pressure on the Government of Zimbabwe to respect democratic principles and human rights. If confirmed, I will work with our interagency partners to use our sanctions programs to promote accountability for those individuals who are currently active in corruption and human rights abuses.

Question. An area of considerable debate has been the value of reincorporating political party programming into the portfolio of U.S. democracy assistance to Zimbabwe. Do you commit to reviewing the Department of State's posture on political party support in Zimbabwe?

Answer. Since the 2018 election, the Government of Zimbabwe has systematically weakened the opposition through manipulated court rulings, harassment and incarceration of key figures, and thinly veiled actions to install pliant political figures in parliament.

If confirmed, I commit to reviewing the Department of State's posture on political party support in Zimbabwe.

Question. What is your assessment of the appropriateness of Nigeria for this designation?

Answer. The Department is reviewing this designation as part of the annual process. That process is underway, and the Department will consider all available information. I take this issue very seriously and do not wish to prejudge the process or the Secretary's decision.

Question. What is your assessment of the drivers of conflict in Nigeria? How do the drivers of conflict in Nigeria differ across geographical regions?

Answer. Nigeria faces growing insecurity on multiple fronts, including kidnapping and banditry in the North West, insurgency from the Islamic State in West Africa (ISIS-WA) and Boko Haram in the North East, communal violence including herder-farmer conflict in various regions, attacks by Biafran separatists in the South East, and piracy in the Gulf of Guinea. The drivers of conflict are numerous and overlapping, and also vary across regions. Experts have cited the proliferation of small arms, increasing competition over land and water resources, lack of accountability and access to justice, as well as politics, ethnicity, and religion among contributing factors. Ineffective state security responses, poor governance and service delivery, endemic corruption, and lack of economic opportunity also create conditions that are ripe for conflict.

The United States is partnering with Nigeria to build more effective and accountable security forces to better respond to the country's security challenges and protect civilians. The U.S. Government also helps Nigerians prevent and mitigate conflict through our diplomacy, police and justice reform programs, peacebuilding programs, early warning and early response programs, dialogue efforts, and development programs.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. MARY CATHERINE PHEE BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question. How can the United States support a peaceful resolution of Cameroon's Anglophone conflict?

Answer. I share your concerns about the ongoing violence in Cameroon and the conflict in the Anglophone region. If confirmed, my focus would be to continue urging all parties to end violence and to engage in an inclusive dialogue without preconditions. I would make clear U.S. support for the Swiss Government's efforts to advance mediation between the Government and separatist armed group leaders and encourage the Government to take concrete steps to move this effort forward. I will also review the different tools we have to hold human rights violators accountable, including sanctions. I will continue to pursue engagement with France, key allies, and U.N. Security Council member states, to find ways to promote a peaceful resolution of the ongoing violence.

Question. How can the United States balance support for the counterterrorism campaign in the north with efforts to promote a peaceful resolution of the Anglophone conflict?

Answer. Cameroon has long played a crucial role in regional stability. With the protracted crisis in the Central African Republic, instability in Nigeria, the terrorist threat posed by Boko Haram and ISIS-West Africa, and increasing incidents of piracy in the Gulf of Guinea, Cameroon's role as a partner in securing and maintaining stability in the region is even more important. Since 2018, the Department has significantly reduced security assistance because the Government of Cameroon had not taken appropriate action to investigate credible allegations of gross violations of human rights by its security forces and hold the perpetrators accountable. If confirmed, I commit to continuing the practice of reviewing security assistance on a case-by-case basis to ensure the assistance the United States provides aligns with U.S. interests, including promotion of respect for human rights. I will also ensure the Department vets potential recipients of security assistance, consistent with the Leahy laws, and does not provide assistance to Cameroonian security force units where there is credible information that the unit has committed a gross violation of human rights.

Question. Would you advocate the use of sanctions on Cameroonian officials and others responsible for hindering a resolution of the Anglophone conflict?

Answer. On June 7, 2021, Secretary Blinken announced that the United States was taking steps to impose visa restrictions on certain individuals who are believed to be responsible for, or complicit in, undermining the peaceful resolution of the conflict in the Anglophone regions of Cameroon. I understand the Department of State continues to work on expanding visa restrictions on individuals on both sides of the conflict. Secretary Blinken's decision to implement a visa restrictions policy on some of those responsible for undermining peace in Cameroon is the first of many possible approaches the Department of State can take to push for peace and dialogue. It has encouraged both the UK and the EU to look at utilizing their new sanctions laws. It is yet another sign of the commitment to back up words with actions. If confirmed, I will consider all the tools at our disposal aimed at promoting a peaceful resolution of the ongoing violence which has resulted in much suffering and threatens to become even more critical day by day.

Question. According to the U.N., nearly 5.2 million of the Tigray region's 5.7 million people are in need of emergency food assistance, and more than 2 million have been displaced by violence. U.N. humanitarian agencies have scaled up to meet the needs of civilians in Tigray, distributing food aid to more than 1.4 million people and working to reach people with shelter, clean water, hygiene supplies, and other critical relief items and services. The U.N. is also working to identify and provide support to survivors of gender-based violence, which has been widespread during the conflict. Unfortunately, the U.N. and its partners are only able to help a fraction of the people in need because parties to the conflict—largely the Ethiopian and Eritrean militaries—continue to block humanitarian access to large parts of the region.

- How is the administration working to address this issue?

Answer. Intensified conflict in western Tigray and the expansion of conflict into the neighboring Afar region has effectively blocked overland access for humanitarian supplies. In light of these recent developments, the Biden-Harris administration has prioritized the establishment of direct talks between the Ethiopian Government and the Tigray People's Liberation Front (TPLF) with the aim of achieving a negotiated ceasefire. Special Envoy for the Horn of Africa Jeffrey Feltman is working in close coordination with international partners to create the necessary conditions for such talks to occur. Ending hostilities is an essential component of ensuring that sufficient humanitarian supplies can reach the Tigray region. In addition, the Biden-Harris administration has taken a number of steps to press all parties to provide unhindered humanitarian access. On May 23, we put in place a visa restriction policy under Section 212(a)(3)(C) of the Immigration and Nationality Act for any current or former Ethiopian or Eritrean Government officials, members of the security forces, or other individuals—to include Amhara regional and irregular forces and members of the Tigray People's Liberation Front (TPLF)—responsible for, or complicit in, undermining resolution of the crisis in Tigray. This includes those who have conducted wrongful violence or other abuses against people in the Tigray region of Ethiopia, as well as those who have hindered access of humanitarian assistance to those in the region. If confirmed, I would carefully review the option of implementing additional sanctions against those who are preventing access to humanitarian assistance. It will also be important to continue to encourage our likeminded partners to support such targeted sanctions.

Question. What leverage or pressure points do we have with the Ethiopian Government that can be brought to bear to ensure that the U.N. and other humanitarian actors are able to access vulnerable communities?

Answer. Sustained diplomatic engagement with all parties to the conflict is essential to press for unhindered humanitarian access. If confirmed, I would work closely with our Ambassador, Special Envoy Feltman, and international partners to continue to make clear to the Ethiopian Government its responsibility in this regard and the impact of interference with humanitarian assistance on our bilateral relationship. The Biden-Harris administration has already ended most non-humanitarian U.S. development and security assistance programming to Ethiopia. The Department of State has established a visa restriction policy including on those who have hindered humanitarian access to those in the Tigray region. If confirmed, I would carefully review the option of implementing additional sanctions against those who are preventing access to humanitarian assistance.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. MARY CATHERINE PHEE BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

Question. What next-level plans and programs does the United States Government have prepared to increase pressure on those who are responsible for perpetuating violence and instability in the region?

Answer. In addition to the visa restriction policy under Section 212(a)(3)(C) of the Immigration and Nationality Act announced by Secretary Blinken on May 23 with regard to the issuance of visas for any current or former Ethiopian or Eritrean Government officials, members of the security forces, or other individuals-to include Amhara regional and irregular forces and members of the Tigray People's Liberation Front (TPLF)-responsible for, or complicit in, undermining resolution of the crisis in Tigray, the Biden-Harris administration has ended most non-humanitarian U.S. development and security assistance programming to Ethiopia. If confirmed, I would carefully review the option of implementing additional sanctions against those who are undermining resolution of the conflict, who are engaging in human rights abuses, violations, or atrocities, or who are preventing access to humanitarian assistance. These could include Global Magnitsky designations under E.O. 13818 and a new Executive Order (E.O.) establishing a Tigray-specific sanctions regime. It will also be important to continue to encourage our likeminded partners to support such targeted sanctions. The goal of these measures is to increase pressure on all the parties to the conflict to agree to an immediate negotiated cessation of hostilities, an end to human rights abuses and violations, and unhindered humanitarian access to the Tigray region.

Question. What measures does the State Department intend to take to hold Prime Minister Abiy accountable for ignoring, misleading, and deflecting the international community while civilians were facing grave human rights abuses?

Answer. In concert with international partners, the Biden-Harris administration has consistently called out human rights abuses committed by all parties to the conflict, including the Ethiopian Government, and stressed the need for accountability. Because of concern about human rights violations, abuses, and atrocities, the Biden-Harris administration has suspended most non-humanitarian U.S. development and security assistance to Ethiopia and established a visa restriction policy. If confirmed, I commit to reviewing the feasibility of additional measures, such as imposition of targeted Global Magnitsky sanctions and a new Executive Order establishing a Tigray-specific sanctions regime. At the United Nations, the United States played a leading role in arranging an open meeting of the Security Council on July 2 on the situation in Tigray and is continuing to press for additional action by the Security Council. The United States also worked with partners on the U.N. Human Rights Council to successfully arrange for the adoption of a Tigray-specific human rights resolution that calls for ongoing joint investigations by the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Ethiopian Human Rights Commission, and mandates reporting on their progress and outcomes. Additionally, the Department of State is exploring support for additional documentation and associated accountability and transitional justice options that could be used to address atrocities and other abuses that have been and continue to be committed by parties to the conflict in Tigray. If confirmed, I am committed to employing U.S. leverage and influence to hold all parties to the conflict to account.

Question. What are our like-minded partners in Europe and elsewhere doing to help address these concerns?

Answer. I understand that the Department of State is working in close coordination with the G7 and other like-minded partners to increase pressure on all parties to the conflict to agree to an immediate negotiated cessation of hostilities, an end to human rights abuses and violations, and unhindered humanitarian access to the Tigray region.

The Department of State is also collaborating with international partners in an effort to open communication among the parties to the conflict with the goal of achieving an immediate negotiated ceasefire. Special Envoy for the Horn of Africa Ambassador Feltman and other State Department officials coordinate closely with an Ethiopia contact group of like-minded international partners. Special Envoy Feltman is actively engaging with influential countries such as the UAE, Saudi Arabia, Kenya, and Sudan. At the United Nations, the United States played a leading role in arranging an open meeting of the Security Council on July 2 on the situation in Tigray and is continuing to press for additional action by the Security Council. The United States also worked with partners on the U.N. Human Rights Council to successfully arrange for the adoption of a Tigray-specific human rights resolution that calls for ongoing joint investigations by the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Ethiopian Human Rights Commission and mandates reporting on their progress and outcomes. If confirmed, I commit to sustaining these intensive efforts to work with like-minded partners.

Question. What is the Biden administration's policy position on Somalia? What role should the United States play in helping to address armed conflict, terrorism, and political crisis in the country? What changes, if any, would you seek to State Department-administered security assistance programs in Somalia?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration supports efforts to advance peace and security in Somalia by countering the threat from al-Shabaab and ISIS-Somalia operating in the country. This effort addresses the drivers of instability by promoting democratic governance and market-oriented economic reforms that are necessary for lasting stability. It is imperative that the United States continue to coordinate closely with the Somalis and international partners, such as the United Nations, the African Union, Somalia's neighbors, the European Union, the United Kingdom, Turkey, and Gulf states, to tackle the country's considerable security and political challenges. If confirmed, I am committed to reviewing State Department-administered security assistance in Somalia to ensure these programs are effectively and efficiently advancing our policy goals.

Question. Two of the largest troop contributing countries to AMISOM, Ethiopia and Uganda, are credibly accused of committing serious human rights violations at home. Has the time come to seek a new configuration and/or new partners for AMISOM?

Answer. Somalia continues to require regional and international support to mitigate the threats from al-Shabaab and ISIS-Somalia and address the drivers of instability. While AMISOM has played an important role during the past 10 years in liberating territory from al-Shabaab and stabilizing parts of Somalia, reconfiguring the mission (1) to better respond to the terrorist threats and (2) to transfer increasing security responsibility to Somalia's security forces must be a priority during upcoming negotiations for a new mandate in 2022. I agree that troubling new developments in the region should also be considered in upcoming negotiations. If confirmed, I commit to working with the African Union, the United Nations, and individual AMISOM troop contributing countries to ensure that personnel are properly vetted, follow the rules of armed conflict, and respect human rights. There is a need to engage the AU and the U.N. in a timely and credible process to identify and remove potential troop contributors that may be implicated in human rights abuses.

Question. Would we not be better off with partners that will not use the threat of pulling their troops from AMISOM as leverage for getting the United States and others to refrain from taking a hard stance on corruption and human rights abuses in their home countries?

Answer. AMISOM troop contributing countries (TCCs) participate in the mission because it serves their interests to mitigate the threat from al-Shabaab to their own countries. I am not aware of a serious threat to withdraw troops from Somalia, despite occasional resistance to U.S. efforts to combat corruption and human rights abuses in TCC capitals.

Ethiopia/Sudan Border Dispute

Question. A long simmering border dispute between Sudan and Ethiopia in the al-Fashaga region of Sudan appears on the brink of turning hot. The United Arab Emirates had, for a time, taken the lead on mediating this dispute, but their role is no longer clear.

- Who is currently leading the mediation effort in this long-running dispute?

Answer. I share your concern about the risk of escalating tension between Sudan and Ethiopia generated by a military buildup and recent violence along the border of Ethiopia and Sudan in the al-Fashaga area. My understanding is that the UAE initiative is currently inactive. If confirmed, I will join the efforts of Special Envoy for the Horn of Africa Ambassador Feltman and U.S. embassies in Addis Ababa and Khartoum to encourage both governments to engage in constructive dialogue to de-escalate tensions as part of a U.S. Horn strategy to address the interlinked political, security, and humanitarian crises in the region. I will also engage international and regional partners, including the UAE, to explore ways to persuade the two parties to agree to a mutually acceptable resolution.

Question. What is the Department doing to alleviate the pressure on this potential hot spot?

Answer. The Department of State continues to engage the two parties to press for a de-escalation of tensions and to call for no further violence. If confirmed, I will join the efforts of Special Envoy for the Horn of Africa Ambassador Feltman and the U.S. embassies in Addis Ababa and Khartoum to press the two parties to find a mutually acceptable resolution in coordination with international and regional partners.

Question. How confident are you in President Tshisekedi's commitment to advance reforms in the mining sector, state security apparatus, and election process?

Answer. The United States supports President Tshisekedi's goal of building a more peaceful and prosperous DRC. Since President Tshisekedi took office in 2019, the U.S.-DRC partnership has contributed to the freeing of individuals who have been unlawfully or arbitrarily detained; establishment of an anti-trafficking agency; the highest-level corruption conviction in DRC history; and related steps that merited the reinstatement of DRC's AGOA eligibility.

The recent inauguration of a new cabinet in the DRC opened an historic new chapter in the country's political history. If confirmed, I will emphasize to DRC leaders the early imperative of undertaking the legal, financial, and technical preparations necessary for free and fair elections in 2023, including reform of the Independent National Electoral Commission. To be credible, those elections must be inclusive, conducted transparently and impartially, and held in accordance with constitutional deadlines. I will also urge DRC leaders to heed the calls of the Congolese people for reforms in the mining sector and security apparatus.

Question. The DRC holds over 51 percent of the global cobalt reserves and produces nearly 70 percent of the total cobalt feedstock globally. Underpinned by huge demand for from the battery sector, competition for control over global cobalt feedstock supply chains has intensified in recent years. What is the Department of State doing to support more responsible trade missions and U.S. commercial delegations to the DRC and to assist the DRC's efforts to improve the transparency of its minerals trade, including strong support for implementation of the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative (EITI), beneficial ownership transparency, and the formalization of the artisanal mining sector?

Answer. The United States is working with the DRC Government to bolster economic opportunities for all Congolese, including by establishing conditions that attract American companies to the DRC, expand trade, advance gender equality and women's entrepreneurship, and encourage business climate reforms to promote inclusive development. The reinstatement of the DRC's AGOA eligibility on January 1, 2021, affirmed the Tshisekedi Government's positive progress on reform, and bolstered our effort to expand U.S.-DRC commercial ties to benefit workers in both countries.

The United States supports responsible minerals sourcing and trading and works closely with the private sector to support conflict-free minerals supply chains, emphasizing compliance with section 1502 of the U.S. Dodd-Frank Act. The Public-Private Alliance for Responsible Minerals (PPA), forged by the Department of State, USAID, and the Department of Labor and inclusive of U.S. companies and civil society organizations, seeks to improve due diligence and develop the governance systems needed for ethical supply chains of critical minerals in the DRC and Great Lakes region. PPA programming also aims to increase transparency and monitoring of child labor in artisanal mining in the DRC's cobalt supply chain while building government capacity to do the same.

The United States has been one of the strongest supporters of the EITI since its founding in 2003. In addition to providing financial support, as well as capacity building to improve EITI's financial management and operational effectiveness, the Department of State serves on the EITI International Board. In a related initiative, the Department of State is supporting improvements to the governance of the DRC's mining royalties with a Fiscal Transparent Innovation Fund grant to the Carter Center.

Finally, the Critical Minerals Security Initiative provides the Department of State with a new tool to engage U.S. companies operating in the critical materials and minerals supply chain in countries such as the DRC. If confirmed, I commit to supporting and expanding these efforts to promote responsible minerals sourcing and trade.

Question. What are the prospects for regional military operations and the imposition of martial law in eastern DRC to address the security and humanitarian crisis in the region?

Answer. The United States remains deeply concerned about continued violence, humanitarian crises, and allegations of human rights abuses and violations in eastern DRC. The expanding role of ISIS-DRC and other armed groups in conducting horrific acts against civilians is of particular concern. To tackle these challenges, the United States has called for an end to the violence, justice and accountability for those responsible, the professionalization of state security services, and inclusion of local communities and the U.N. Organization Stabilization Mission in the DRC (MONUSCO) in peace and reconciliation efforts.

The United States supports the Congolese Government's efforts to stabilize eastern DRC by addressing the drivers of escalating violence, including holding those in the military responsible for corruption and human rights abuses and violations to account. We have reiterated this message since the Government imposed a "state of siege" in two provinces in eastern DRC most affected by the conflict. If confirmed, I will urge the Congolese Government to continue to work with MONUSCO in support of the peacekeeping mission's efforts to protect civilians, reduce intercommunal tensions, and strengthen state institutions.

We welcome President Tshisekedi's diplomatic outreach to the DRC's neighbors. If confirmed, I will support diplomatic solutions and cross-border cooperation. As appropriate, I will share the U.S. view that any potential regional military cooperation must be conducted in a transparent manner in coordination with the DRC Government and MONUSCO.

Question. What changes, if any, would you seek to the U.N. peacekeeping operation in DRC, MONUSCO?

Answer. The U.N. plays a critical role in the stabilization of the DRC, particularly in eastern DRC, where armed group violence remains widespread. The MONUSCO mandate, last renewed in December 2020, prioritizes tasks to protect civilians, support stabilization efforts, and strengthen state institutions. MONUSCO has transitioned out of the Kasai provinces due to favorable gains in security and is scheduled to transition out of Tanganyika province by mid-2022 as part of a responsible, conditions-based transition to allow for more resources to focus on North Kivu, South Kivu, and Ituri provinces.

The Department of State continues to promote reforms to support the offensive operations mandate of the Force Intervention Brigade (FIB), including through the addition of new units and improved operational capabilities. If confirmed, I will collaborate with U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Linda Thomas-Greenfield to encourage MONUSCO to improve its ability to protect civilians, conduct effective quick-reaction operations, and build state capacity in support of sustainable peace in this restive region.

Question. What is the Department doing in response to the Government of Nigeria's growing levels of intolerance for universal human rights and freedoms?

Answer. President Biden has charged us with restoring democracy and human rights to the forefront of U.S. diplomacy. Advocacy for human rights and fundamental freedoms is foundational to our relationship with Nigeria, Africa's largest democracy. The United States is engaging Nigeria's Government at the highest levels to urge Nigerian leaders to uphold their country's constitution and our shared democratic principles. The Department of State spoke clearly when Nigeria recently suspended Twitter operations. If confirmed, I commit to engaging directly about these foundational rights.

The Department of State also supports programs to strengthen the capacity of government institutions and civil society to promote respect for human rights. Of note, the Department of State supported the demands of Nigerian civil society who successfully pressed for the establishment of judicial panels of inquiry in 28 Nigerian states to examine allegations of human rights violations and abuses by Nigeria's now-defunct Special Anti-Robbery Squad (SARS) and the Nigerian Police Force.

Question. What efforts does the Department have underway and in the planning process to assist journalists and protesters in Nigeria to exercise their rights to freedom of association and freedom of expression?

Answer. The Department of State is committed to partnering with Nigerian journalists and civil society activists who, despite facing many hardships and risks, are highly active and well-established, and in many respects serve as a model for the continent. The Department of State employs a range of foreign policy tools to promote media freedom, including public messaging; sanctions and visa restrictions; and foreign assistance programming. In addition to multi-donor-funded initiatives like the Lifeline Fund for Embattled CSOs, the Department of State has established emergency mechanisms to respond to specific needs of journalists in crisis. If confirmed, I will prioritize support for and engagement with journalists and civil society.

Question. What impacts have reported abuses by Nigerian security forces had on U.S.-Nigeria military relations?

Answer. Nigeria faces multiple drivers of instability: a terrorist threat from ISIS-West Africa and Boko Haram, entrenched insurgencies, banditry, pastoralist/farmer conflict, ethnic divisions, piracy in the Gulf of Guinea, a rising separatist movement in the South, and widespread criminality. In contending with these challenges, Nigerian security forces have committed incidents of human rights violations and abuses. In response, the U.S. Government has limited—in line with our laws and policies—the provision of certain military training and capabilities that could otherwise be useful to Nigeria in combatting these security challenges. To address the parallel priorities of security and human rights, the Biden-Harris administration is committed to engaging with the Nigerian Government and security services to support the institutional reforms and improved professionalism that will promote conduct that respects human rights. In seeking U.S. military sales that include mandatory training and maintenance programs, the Nigerian Government has shown a commitment to the investments and security sector institutional reforms that will enable the expansion of U.S.-Nigeria military relations and the improvement of Nigerian security capabilities.

If confirmed, I will work with the Nigerian Government to actively promote the professionalization of their security forces to reinforce the importance of civilian protection and respect for human rights. I will urge the Nigerian Government to hold security force elements accountable for human rights abuses and violations.

Question. To what extent does China's engagement in Africa threaten U.S. interests? How should the United States respond?

Answer. As Secretary Blinken has said, there are adversarial, competitive, and cooperative aspects of our relationship with China, and this dynamic applies to our respective partnerships in Africa. Our best asset will be a dynamic and affirmative U.S. policy agenda that enlists African partners in building free market democracies that offer liberty and prosperity and realize the continent's full potential.

Africans and Americans alike support democracy, the rule of law, open competition, and human rights. This robust foundation will help us achieve a mutually beneficial relationship.

If confirmed, I commit to working with Congress and interagency partners to mobilize all the tools of the U.S. Government to boost socially responsible and climate-friendly trade and investment that secures good livelihoods for both African and American workers. Following the President's lead, I will liaise with the EU, the G-7 and other likeminded partners to engage African partners in the struggle to uphold the international rules-based order, in line with the guidelines in the Strategic Competition Act.

Question. Are there any areas where cooperation with China might advance U.S. goals?

Answer. Where cooperation might advance U.S. goals, such as efforts to promote peace and stability, we will consider collaboration. If confirmed, I am committed to working with you to ensure American values and interests prevail.

Question. What is the administration's approach to supporting COVID-19 responses in Africa?

Answer. Recognizing the devastating human loss and the debilitating second-order economic impacts of COVID-19, the Biden-Harris administration has committed to providing and supporting the rollout of COVID-19 vaccines across Africa. This commitment includes activities that will support public health and case management interventions to stop transmissions and mitigate the impacts of the pandemic across Africa. In May, President Biden committed to sharing 80 million COVID-19 doses from the U.S. supply with the world. In total 25 million of these doses are being shared with Africa and distribution has been coordinated closely with the African Union and COVAX. Of this allotment, more than one million doses have thus far been donated to Africa, with Djibouti being the first African country to receive vaccine doses on July 17. The President subsequently committed the United States to provide 500 million doses of Pfizer vaccine to Gavi for distribution via COVAX to 92 low- and lower-middle-income economies as defined by Gavi's COVAX Advance Market Commitment (AMC), and to the African Union. Almost half of the COVAX AMC countries are in Africa.

The Biden-Harris administration is also supporting the expansion of vaccine manufacturing capacity in Africa. The U.S. International Development Finance Corporation (DFC), with international partners, announced on June 30 a financing package for Aspen, Africa's largest manufacturer of pharmaceuticals located in South Africa, to increase production capacity for COVID-19 vaccines, and on July 9 U.S. announced its commitment to support Fondation Institut Pasteur de Dakar (IPD) to boost vaccine production in Senegal.

Finally, since the start of the pandemic, the Department of State and U.S. Agency for International Development have provided roughly $541 million in health, humanitarian, and economic support assistance to more than 40 countries in Sub-Saharan Africa. The Biden-Harris administration will also provide additional foreign assistance under the American Rescue Plan Act to Sub-Saharan Africa to support COVID-19 vaccine preparedness and delivery activities to ensure 'shots in the arms' of African people. In addition, this funding will support public health efforts, strengthen case management, and interventions to stop and help mitigate the pandemic's effects on economic growth, food security, education, democracy, and women and girls.

Question. The Biden administration just announced that it was sending 25 million vaccines to three African countries—Burkina Faso, Djibouti, and Ethiopia. In your view, what are the key challenges to more effective vaccine distribution?

Answer. Over the last two decades, the U.S. Government invested roughly $100 billion in Africa's public health infrastructure. The result is strong systems that allowed partner countries to prepare for and respond rapidly to COVID-19. Rapid and equitable distribution of novel COVID-19 vaccines, however, is a complex operational challenge with legal, regulatory, logistics and cold chain considerations. Thanks to Congressionally-appropriated funding from the American Rescue Plan Act, the U.S. Government is supporting vaccine preparedness in Sub-Saharan Africa, working with international partners and COVAX to provide technical assistance, logistics support, build cold chain capacity, and enhance vaccine absorptive capacity. To date, U.S.-supplied vaccines have been successfully donated to four African countries, and COVAX has delivered vaccines to over 40 sub-Saharan African countries. As in the United States, vaccine hesitancy in Africa remains a concern. To respond, the United States partners every day with national and local African health ministries and services, as well as international and NGO partners, in support of messaging campaigns to address vaccine hesitancy in African populations as well as to confront COVID-19 vaccine mis- and disinformation.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MS. ANNE A. WITKOWSKY BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Stabilization Priorities:

Question. If confirmed, what criteria would you utilize when assessing whether the United States should engage more closely in conflict-affected countries and regions?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue CSO's efforts to incorporate data, evidence, and quantitative and qualitative methods into policy-making and prioritization when assessing whether the United States should engage more closely in conflict-affected countries and regions. CSO's analytical tools, such as the Instability Monitoring and Analysis Platform (IMAP), provide global data analytics on state fragility, instability, and conflict. CSO is monitoring the impacts of climate change, the COVID-19 pandemic, gender inequality, human rights abuses, and democratic backsliding to understand how these factors impact conflict risk and how targeted interventions might mitigate these trends.

Question. With these criteria in mind, are there any countries or regions where conflict is either already evident or at risk of occurring where you believe the United States should consider dedicating more resources and attention?

Answer. Several countries, such as those laid out in this year's report to Congress pursuant to the Elie Wiesel Genocide and Atrocities Prevention Act of 2018, including Ethiopia and Burma, warrant increased attention and action, and it will be critical to monitor and address the broader, regional impact of the situations in these countries.

CSO Role in Preventing Conflict and Promoting Stability

Question. In addition to the Department of Defense, the U.S. Agency for International Development, and other federal agencies, the State Department's regional bureaus, Office of Foreign Assistance, and Chiefs of Mission are responsible for elements of the U.S. Government's efforts to prevent conflict and promote stability abroad.

- With this in mind, if confirmed, in what areas do you anticipate directing the CSO Bureau to play a leading role in these efforts, including through the work of CSO stabilization advisors in the field?

Answer. If confirmed, and in support of the Under Secretary for Civilian Security, Democracy, and Human Rights, I will direct CSO to continue its leading role in coordinating the U.S. Government's efforts to implement the Elie Wiesel Genocide and Atrocities Prevention Act of 2018, 2018 Stabilization Assistance Review, and Global Fragility Act (2019) while integrating and advancing the Women, Peace, and Security Act (2017) as a cross-cutting priority. CSO informs key U.S. strategies, policies, and programs on conflict prevention and stabilization by combining quantitative data analytics with the qualitative expertise of its stabilization advisors, particularly in peace process support, security sector stabilization, and strategic prevention. Deployed CSO stabilization advisors provide technical conflict and stabilization expertise to DOD Geographic Combatant Commands and to U.S. embassies in Africa, Asia, Europe, the Middle East, and the Western Hemisphere.

Question. Similarly, where is the Bureau better positioned to play a complementary role in efforts led by other agencies and State Department bureaus?

Answer. Given its unique conflict expertise and advanced analytics tools, CSO complements other U.S. Government efforts to prevent conflict and promote stability by deploying Stabilization Advisors, harnessing data analytics, and leading, informing, and implementing policy and programs on conflict prevention and stabilization. If confirmed, I will continue CSO's close coordination with other State Department bureaus and other agencies, including the J Family Bureaus, the Office of Foreign Assistance, USAID's Bureau of Conflict Prevention and Stabilization (CPS), the Department of Defense Office of the Under Secretary of Defense, and the Department of Treasury.

Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19): Many analysts have expressed concern regarding the potential impacts of COVID-19 on fragile states.

Question. How would you prioritize addressing COVID-19-related challenges in the context of the many risk factors capable of exacerbating violence and instability in fragile states?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure CSO continues to consider the impact of COVID-19 as a risk factor for instability and the interacting effects of COVID-19 and other drivers of conflict. CSO is currently monitoring the impacts of the COVID-19 pandemic on countries experiencing fragility, including through disruptions to remittances and tourism revenues and the general capacity of states' ability to deliver medical and other services to their citizens. CSO is also monitoring state repression through exploiting lockdowns, delays in elections, and other warning signs of democratic backsliding. I will ensure this work continues, and I will work across the department and interagency to investigate how targeted outreach and programming may mitigate COVID-19-related challenges.

Leveraging CSO Data Analytics: Former CSO officials have identified a need to ensure that CSO data analytics tools are utilized by other State Department officials and bureaus in policy and programming decisions.

Question. Please share your understanding of how the State Department is currently leveraging CSO's analytics tools, such as its Instability Monitoring and Analysis Platform? If confirmed, how, if at all, would you work to ensure these tools are used more widely?

Answer. If confirmed, I would ensure that CSO's analytics capabilities and tools continue to be incorporated into all aspects of CSO's work, including support for the Global Fragility Act (GFA), the Elie Wiesel Genocide and Atrocities Prevention Act of 2018, and the Women, Peace, and Security Act. Since October 2019, CSO's analytics products have been requested and utilized by more than 50 State Department bureaus and embassies. CSO's Instability Monitoring and Analysis Platform (IMAP) provides all State Department employees and select interagency partners with global data analytics on state fragility, instability, and conflict, supporting the administration's policy to make evidence-based decisions guided by the best available data. I am eager to work with Congress to ensure that robust analytics continue to play a key role in CSO's work and to expanding opportunities for analytics to improve policies and programs at all levels.

CSO's Role in Atrocity Prevention

Question. What is CSO's role in interagency efforts related to atrocity prevention? And, what are the specific activities CSO has engaged in related to atrocity prevention?

Answer. CSO supports the National Security Council process to coordinate interagency implementation of the Elie Wiesel Genocide and Atrocities Prevention Act of 2018 (Elie Wiesel Act) and serves as the Secretariat of the White House-led Atrocity Early Warning Task Force. In collaboration with other bureaus and agencies, CSO provides atrocity risk assessments for countries of concern and develops atrocity risk response plans targeted at likely pathways or scenarios to atrocities. CSO produces a classified quarterly Early Warning Assessment that identifies countries at risk of large-scale and deliberate civilian killings, a key indicator of potential atrocity. This assessment is one of three primary risk lists the Task Force uses to guide and prioritize its efforts. CSO funds a small amount of atrocity prevention programming, complementing efforts of other bureaus and agencies. To fulfill the Elie Wiesel Act's mandatory training requirements, CSO worked closely with stakeholders to develop the Department's first virtual atrocity prevention training that has trained over 2,700 Department personnel since its launch in February, 2020.

Role of Women in Conflict Stabilization

Question. If confirmed, how, if at all, will you direct the CSO Bureau to continue implementing the U.S. Strategy on Women, Peace, and Security and elements of the Global Fragility Strategy focused on encouraging the meaningful participation of women in processes connected to peace and security?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support CSO's robust Women, Peace, and Security (WPS) efforts. CSO works closely with the Secretary's Office of Global Women's Issues, among others, to ensure that conflict-sensitive gender analyses, data on gender-based violence, and meaningful consultations with local women and girls will inform the development, implementation, and monitoring of GFA implementation efforts. CSO developed a new Gender Analysis of Conflict Tool to guide more nuanced assessments of how gender norms drive both men and women towards violence or peace.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MS. ANNE A. WITKOWSKY BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Mission and Mandate

Question. In your view, what is the Bureau for Conflict and Stabilization Operations' mandate? Is CSO principally charged with policy formulation, program implementation, both, or none of the above?

- If confirmed, how would you work with the relevant regional and functional bureaus within the Department of State and with the relevant regional and functional bureaus at USAID to clarify roles and responsibilities, ensure unity of effort, and reduce duplication and waste?

Answer. CSO's mandate is to anticipate, prevent, and respond to conflict that undermines U.S. national interests. CSO is charged with both policy formulation and program implementation. Among CSO's highest policy priorities are coordinating interagency implementation of the Global Fragility Act (2019), the 2018 Stabilization Assistance Review, and Elie Wiesel Genocide and Atrocities Prevention Act of 2018.

It is my understanding that CSO coordinates closely with other bureaus and agencies, and I am committed to ensuring unity of effort and preventing duplication, particularly among State, USAID and the Department of Defense. If confirmed, I will reinforce current coordination efforts to implement policy priorities.

Global Fragility Act

Question. In your view, what role should CSO play in country selection, strategy design, and program implementation under the Global Fragility Act?

Answer. If confirmed, I pledge to work closely with my colleagues in the White House, across the U.S. interagency in Washington and the field, and with multilateral partners and civil society, to ensure full implementation of the Global Fragility Act (GFA), including country selection, strategy design, and program implementation. CSO's expertise and coordination role will be critical to innovative implementation of the GFA and will advance ongoing learning, monitoring, and adaptive management to inform policy and programming decisions.

Question. Does CSO have the authority to act as arbiter of disputes between the relevant Federal departments and agencies charged with implementing the Global Fragility Act, to include U.S. embassies in selected partner countries?

Answer. CSO does not currently have formal authority to act as arbiter of disputes among the relevant Federal departments and agencies charged with implementing the Global Fragility Act, to include U.S. embassies in selected partner countries. If confirmed, I will work closely with the White House, across the U.S. interagency including embassies and missions in the field, and with multilateral partners and civil society to implement fully the Global Fragility Act. I will work to enhance CSO's coordinating role and build consensus among all involved.

Data, Analytics, and Early Warning

Question. The White House-led Atrocity Early Warning Task Force (the Task Force) was designed to serve as a focal point for the relevant Federal departments and agencies, policy makers, and civil society working to identify and address the early warning signs of atrocities.

- If confirmed, what steps will you take to ensure that existing and future data analytics and forecasting tools developed and managed by CSO are relevant and readily available for use within the Department, and by overseas missions?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that CSO commits and advocates for the necessary resources to keep its data analytics tools and capabilities freely available to support the Department and its overseas missions. My understanding is that all State Department employees and select interagency partners are able to freely access CSO's Instability Monitoring and Analysis Platform (IMAP) which includes global data analytics on conflict and instability, forecasting tools, and past reports and products. I look forward to engaging with you further on evidence-based policy making.

Question. What is the task force's role in identifying security priorities and regional policy?

Answer. The Atrocity Early Warning Task Force (AEWTF) coordinates a whole-of-government approach to strengthen the U.S. Government's ability to forecast, prevent, and respond to atrocities. To inform security and regional policy development, the Task Force conducts global atrocity risk forecasting, using both quantitative and qualitative methods, and shares early warning signs with policy decision-makers. The Task Force has worked closely with relevant regional directorates to conduct atrocity risk assessments and produce corresponding atrocity risk response plans for at-risk countries. The AEWTF is a functional Interagency Policy Committee, for which close and ongoing partnership with regional directorates and policy processes is critical. If confirmed, I will support CSO's role in atrocity prevention, which President Biden reaffirmed as a core moral obligation and national security priority for the United States.

Question. How does the task force define success?

Answer. My understanding is that the Atrocity Early Warning Task Force defines success as early warning leading to early action. This process includes early identification and communication of atrocity risk, development of atrocity risk assessments and response plans for countries at-risk, and securing long-term attention through integration of atrocity prevention in existing regional policy processes.

Question. What efforts can the task force undertake to amplify public messaging on signs of atrocities and/or other conflict indicators?

Answer. Pursuant to recommendations engendered by the Elie Wiesel Genocide and Atrocities Prevention Act of 2018, the Atrocity Early Warning Task Force has progressed on improving public messaging through civil society, Hill, and public engagements. The 2021 congressional report - released by Secretary Blinken - sent a clear signal that the U.S. Government will publicly call out atrocities that have occurred or are ongoing - a strong risk factor for further atrocities. These efforts can be useful to shed light on, and raise the costs for, perpetrators of potential or ongoing atrocities, but their use must be weighed carefully according to context. If confirmed, I will evaluate where CSO should recommend the Task Force amplify its public messaging.

Question. If confirmed, how would the Bureau of Conflict and Stabilization Operations address the on-going crisis in Afghanistan?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that the Bureau of Conflict and Stabilization Operations (CSO) remains engaged in the Department's efforts to address the on-going crisis in Afghanistan through peace process support, atrocity prevention, and stabilization initiatives. CSO will continue to provide technical support to the U.S. Special Representative for Afghanistan Reconciliation (SRAR) and others involved in the negotiations. CSO will continue to participate in the interagency processes to mitigate atrocity risks facing women and minorities via planning discussions, recommendations for short- and long-term civilian protection, and atrocity risk analysis.

Question. If confirmed, how would the Bureau of Conflict and Stabilization Operations address the on-going crisis in Tigray?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that CSO contributes to Department efforts to address the on-going crisis in Tigray by urging Ethiopians to come together to confront growing divisions. CSO currently supports efforts to promote a negotiated ceasefire and inclusive political dialogue to end the conflict in Tigray. CSO stands ready to support preparations to assist Ethiopians to advance post-election dialogue and national reconciliation in Ethiopia.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MS. ANNE A. WITKOWSKY BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Ethiopia

Question. As the second most populous country in the African continent and given its recent transition toward democracy in 2018 with the election of Prime Minister Abiy. With the recent June 21 general election and allegations of irregularities in the voting process, conflict and violence are expected to increase. The political violence has proven to have devastating impacts on the country, from disrupting Ethiopia's response to the COVID pandemic to the famine in the Tigray region which is reported to have spawned the most severe hunger crisis the world has seen in more than a decade. CSO's mission includes both conflict-resolution as well as crisis mitigation in regions determined to be vital to American interests.

- Does the current conflict in Ethiopia pose a threat to American interests and if so, in what ways?

Answer. Yes. A secure, stable, peaceful, and developing Horn of Africa is critical to U.S. economic and security interests. Conflict and instability in Ethiopia adversely affect the entire Horn of Africa region. The United States has a strong interest in supporting democracy and human rights overseas, and the current conflict undermines these efforts. For that reason, the Biden-Harris administration has urged all parties to end the hostilities, pursue a negotiated ceasefire and inclusive political solution, and hold accountable all those responsible for human rights violations and abuses.

Question. What steps could CSO take to ensure a fair and verifiable election to help secure democracy in Ethiopia and prevent further loss of life in the region? Is there a role for the bureau in such a situation?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that CSO continues to join Department leadership in supporting Ethiopians who exercised their right to vote on June 21. The Department is calling for the September 6 elections to be free and fair. The September 6 elections will cover several areas that did not participate in the June elections due to logistical and security challenges. While elections alone are not a sufficient marker of democracy or true political reform, these elections are part of a democratic political process that should involve dialogue, cooperation, and compromise among all Ethiopians on the future of their country.

Burma

Question. On February 1, 2021, the military of Burma launched a military coup d'état, endangering their nascent democracy by detaining State Counsellor Aung San Suu Kyi, President Win Myint, and other members of parliament. The situation has been further escalated by gross human rights violations, including the ongoing ethnic cleansing of the Rohingya people. The coup has also sought to create "media blackouts" in the region, preventing information from leaving and entering Burma during a political and public health crisis. Senior generals of the Tatmadaw have been sanctioned by the United States Government for perpetrating gross human rights violations and are subject to ongoing investigations into their conduct by the International Criminal Court and the International Court of Justice.

- What steps besides sanctions and investigations could the U.S. Government and its subsidiaries, such as the CSO, be taking to bring about an end to the military coup in Burma, especially considering that, as of today, the coup leaders remain in power and are continuing to persecute the Burmese people and foreign nationals, such as journalists, in what can only be described as authoritarianism in its most severe form?

Answer. The United States has led the international community's immediate and forceful response to the military coup in Burma. The United States has galvanized allies and partners to take concrete action and urge the regime to end violence, release all those unjustly detained, and restore Burma's path to democracy. I understand that such efforts include diplomatic outreach to ASEAN members, Japan, the Republic of Korea, and other countries in the region. The administration has worked with international partners to deny the regime access to hundreds of millions of dollars in resources in international financial institutions, and pushed for an arms embargo as well as restrictions on exports of dual use technology. The Department continues to urge all countries to use all available levers to restrict the junta's access to financial institutions. If confirmed, I will work diligently to ensure that CSO continues to add value to State Department efforts to support the people of Burma.

Stabilization Priorities

Question. With many countries in conflicts to keep a close eye on around the world, it is important to assess how the US will engage in specific regions.

- If confirmed, what criteria would you utilize when assessing whether the United States should engage more in conflict-affected countries and regions?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to strengthen CSO's analytical capacities to incorporate data, evidence, and quantitative and qualitative methods into policy-making and priority setting as the Department assesses its engagement in conflict-affected countries and regions. CSO's analytical tools provide the State Department and interagency partners with a basis for decision making on state fragility, instability, and conflict. I understand that among other factors, CSO is monitoring the impacts of climate change, the COVID-19 pandemic, gender inequality, human rights abuses, and democratic backsliding, to understand how these factors impact conflict risk, how targeted intervention might mitigate these trends, and what adjustments might be recommended for policy focus and attention.

Question. With these criteria in mind, are there any countries or regions where conflict is either already evident or at risk of occurring where you believe the United States should consider dedicating more resources and attention?

Answer. It will be critical to monitor and address the broader, regional impact of the situations in those countries laid out in this year's Elie Wiesel Act report to Congress, including Ethiopia and Burma. If confirmed I will ensure CSO provides full analysis of conflict criteria as the Department determines its engagement in countries or regions where conflict is already evident or at risk of occurring.

NOMINATIONS

TUESDAY, JULY 27, 2021

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:02 a.m., in Room SD-G50, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Benjamin L. Cardin presiding.

Present: Senators Cardin [residing], Shaheen, Murphy, Kaine, Markey, Booker, Van Hollen, Young, and Hagerty.

Also present: Senator Graham.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

Senator CARDIN. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

We are convened today to consider four of President Biden's nominations: the Honorable Rufus Gifford of Massachusetts to be the chief of protocol; Ms. Lee Satterfield of South Carolina to be an assistant secretary of state; the Honorable Isobel Coleman to be deputy administrator of the United States Agency for International Development; and the Honorable Christopher Lu to be representative of the United States of America to the United Nations for U.N. Management and Reform. Senator Hagerty and I both agree that we will defer our opening statements because we have some of our distinguished—have two of our distinguished colleagues that are with us to introduce. And since I might have some judicial nominations before the Judiciary Committee this year, I will recognize Senator Graham.

STATEMENT OF HON. LINDSEY GRAHAM, U.S. SENATOR FROM SOUTH CAROLINA

Senator GRAHAM. Thank you. I owe you one. Okay. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman and Ranking Member. I really appreciate this. It is a big treat for me. Ms. Satterfield is from South Carolina, a University of South Carolina graduate with a degree in journalism. Her father was a legendary football coach at Furman that won a national title, and she is being nominated to be the assistant secretary for the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs at State. She has been endorsed by the last six assistant secretaries for the position, the Alliance for International Exchange, Public Diplomacy Council, and the Public Diplomacy Association of America, and Trey Gowdy. I do not know how much you care about the last one, but he is a good golfer, for whatever that matters. But the reason Trey is doing this, she is well respected in our State, and we are proud of the fact that President Biden chose her for this job, and I look forward to helping.

In this position—she has been involved in this space for a long time. She launched the Center for Diplomatic Engagement, the Center for Global Leadership. She has executive branch experience. Prior to this nomination in the Obama administration, she served as acting assistant secretary of state and deputy assistant secretary of state in the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs, so she knows what she is talking about. She has also served as deputy chief of staff of protocol of the United States. During the Clinton administration—you must have been a child back then. During the Clinton administration, she served as the chief of staff for the Secretary of Labor, and as special assistant to the President, and staff director for the White House Office of Public Liaison.

I cannot think of a more qualified, decent person to have this job representing our Nation at a critical moment as we engage the world, and I wholeheartedly support this nomination. And thank you, Mr. Chairman, for letting me speak first.

Senator CARDIN. Well, Senator Graham, we very much appreciate you coming to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Thank you. Senator Markey for an introduction.

STATEMENT OF HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY,
U.S. SENATOR FROM MASSACHUSETTS

Senator MARKEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, very much. It is my pleasure to introduce Ambassador Rufus Gifford, a native of the great Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and to welcome his husband, Stephen, his mom, Ann, and his father, Chad, all of whom call the Bay State home. Rufus' two golden retrievers are no doubt watching at home on C-SPAN 2 as we gather.

It is not every day this committee considers a nominee with as eclectic a career as Rufus Gifford. His credits include Hollywood producer, reality TV star show, ambassador, congressional candidate, and cookbook co-author. It was an unconventional route to today. After graduating from Brown University in the mid-1990s, he set out for Hollywood to produce the next great American film. He jokes that he wanted to make classics like Chinatown or Ordinary People. Instead, instead he gave American audiences Daddy Care 2 and Dr. Dolittle 2. Jokes aside, after his time in Tinsel Town, Rufus discovered his true calling in politics and public service.

After honing his skills as a—as a staffer on the Kerry Campaign in 2004, he met then Senator Barack Obama in 2007, which began a decade-long professional journey with the 44th President. In 2013, President Obama nominated Rufus to be U.S. Ambassador to Denmark, and he was unanimously confirmed by the United States Senate. Shortly after arriving in Copenhagen, Rufus agreed to be the headliner of a reality TV show, I Am the Ambassador. Rufus often reminds people that it is more of a documentary than a reality TV show. I Am the Ambassador may have lacked the cliffhangers and the drama of the Kardashians, but it did earn him the Danish equivalent of an Emmy. The show's innovative approach to public diplomacy gave Danish viewers, particularly young people, and all-access pass into the life of a U.S. Ambassador and the U.S. diplomatic presence in the country. In a country of just 5 million people, 200,000 Danes tuned in each episode to watch as the Ambassador toured the country to speak at town halls, meet with migrant children, and visit Greenland to witness the effects of climate change. The series also showed the Ambassador advance core U.S. interests, such as lobbying the Danish defense minister to continue his country's steadfast support of the U.S. coalition in Iraq and NATO forces in Afghanistan. One Danish viewer said that "It is the type of show you would watch with your mother-in-law, and she would say, oh, he is a lovely man, that Rufus Gifford."

When it came to a decision of where to exchange marital vows, Rufus and Steven picked Copenhagen Town Hall, the historic venue where the first legal same-sex civil union in the world was issued in 1989. If only Rufus as a teenager in the 1980s could know the acceptance and happiness he would find in 2015 as he married the love of his life surrounded by family and friends, ambassadors, and even Crown Prince Frederick and Crown Princess Mary of Denmark, and that President Biden would later place faith in him to serve in a highly public role as the chief of protocol. What a testament to the progress we have made.

Rufus' effusive personality makes him the perfect choice for this new role. In Copenhagen, Rufus opened the ambassador's residence to thousands of visitors. As chief of protocol, he will once again play host to foreign dignitaries at the White House and Blair House. His hand will be the first outstretched to greet a prime minister, president, or monarch. The position to which Rufus is nominated is, therefore, a reflection of our country to the world, the first impression, and what a first impression it will be. To echo a Danish fan of his, "He is a lovely man, that Rufus Gifford." Congratulations on your nomination, Rufus. I look forward to what I hope will be your swift confirmation.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you, Senator Markey, for the introduction. As you know, our committee vets all nominees. A lot of times all we do is read a lot of articles. This is going to be much more enjoyable to see your video clips as we review your qualifications. At this point, I will introduce my colleague, Senator Van Hollen, for an introduction.

STATEMENT OF HON. CHRIS VAN HOLLEN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM MARYLAND

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you and Senator Hagerty, Senator Shaheen, members of the committee. I am grateful for the opportunity to introduce to the committee the President's nominee to serve as the next permanent representative to the United Nations for management and reform, Mr. Christopher Lu. Chris possesses the leadership, the experience, and the dedication and character required for this role, and I am confident that he will serve our country well if confirmed.

While Chris is now a resident of Virginia, he grew up in Senator Cardin's and my State of Maryland. He comes from Rockville, Maryland where his parents settled after arriving in this country from Taiwan. Chris cut his teeth early on the Thomas S. Wootton High School debating team and then went on to pursue his bachelor's degree at Princeton University. It was during that time there that our paths first crossed in the summer of 1986, 35 years ago. Chris was an intern in the office of Maryland senator, Mac Mathias, where I at the time was working as the legislative assistant for defense and arms control. Even back then, Chris stood out for his intellect and passion for service. We got to work together on a range of issues and became friends. From this internship in Senator Mathias' office, he went to Harvard Law School before launching his career in public service, a career that would span 2 decades in all three branches of government.

He first worked as a clerk for Judge Robert Cowan of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit and gained experience here on Capitol Hill as the deputy chief counsel of the House Oversight and Reform Committee. He later became a key aide to then Senator Barack Obama, a role that would take him from the Capitol to the White House. From 2009 to 2013, he served in the executive branch as the White House Cabinet secretary and as assistant to the President, and during the first term of the Obama administration, Mr. Lu co-chaired the White House Initiative on Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders. In 2014, Chris was unanimously confirmed by the United States Senate to be deputy secretary of the U.S. Department of Labor, a position of key responsibilities, overseeing an agency with 1,700—excuse me—17,000 employees and a $112 billion budget. He performed his duties with distinction and professionalism. He is currently the Teresa A. Sullivan practitioner senior fellow at the University of Virginia Miller Center.

Members of the committee, I have long appreciated and admired Chris' 20-year career in public service and I am thankful as a citizen for his enduring commitment to serving our country. But despite his very distinguished public service career, Chris never forgot where he started out, as an intern here on Capitol Hill. He always credited that first internship with Senator Mathias for giving him his start in public service, and he also placed special emphasis on the fact that Senator Mathias' office paid its interns even at that time. Without that stipend, without that support, Chris could not have afforded to take that summer internship, which led him on his way. A few years later, Senator Schatz, Senator Murphy, members of this committee, and others sponsored and we passed legislation to enable all congressional interns to be paid, and one of the people I was thinking about at that time was Chris Lu. And when he heard about our efforts, he reached out and we did a video supporting that legislation, which passed.

Chris' commitment to public service and his desire to open the doors of opportunity to others and future generations are what make him such an exceptional leader. And, members of the committee, he is exactly the kind of person we want representing our country in the United Nations. I am pleased to strongly support his nomination, and I urge the committee to do so as well.

Mr. Chairman if I could ask unanimous consent to also enter into the record two letters of support for Chris Lu. One is from over a dozen Asian-American and Pacific-Islander advocacy groups. The other is from former high-ranking officials in Republican administrations who worked with Chris at the University of Virginia.

Thank you, members of the committee, and I urge you to support this fine nomination.

Senator CARDIN. Senator Van Hollen, thank you very much for that introduction. I am sure that my interns who are watching this hearing appreciate the history of why they are receiving some compensation. And let me just also put it—my observations of Senator Mathias. He was an inspiration not only to you and to our nominee, but to many of us in public service in Maryland, an outstanding United States senator.

With that, let me welcome all four of our nominees again, and thank you very much for your willingness to serve during this extremely challenging period in America's history. We recognize it is not easy and it is a family commitment, so we thank you and your families for your willingness to serve our Nation. Each of the positions that you have been nominated for are critically important to United States. The chief of protocol is responsible for advising the President, the Vice President, the Secretary of State, and other high-ranking officials on matters of national and international protocol, creating an environment for successful diplomacy. We have significant challenges today to succeed in diplomacy. The Office of Assistant Secretary of State for Education and Cultural Affairs promotes personal, professional, and institutional ties between private citizens and organizations of in the United States and abroad, and presents U.S. history, society, art, and culture to foreign audiences, international exchange programs, such as the Fulbright, the Humphrey, International Visitor Leadership, and Exchange Visitor Program, provides opportunities for individuals from foreign countries to live, study, and work in the United States, and provides similar opportunities for U.S. citizens abroad.

The deputy administrator of United States Agency for International Development is one of the key leaders in our USAID family, specifically responsible to oversee policy and programming, including relief response and resilience, the Bureau of Development, Democracy, and Innovation, the Bureau for Global Health, which our committee is going to be taking up legislation later this week, and regional bureaus, among others, that are the responsibility of the deputy administrator. And the representative of the United States at the United Nations for management and reform is a critically-important position. It is one of the five positions with the rank of Ambassador at the U.S. Mission to the United Nations in New York. The Ambassador directs the Missions Management and Reform Section, which was established to ensure that a senior official at the United States U.N. focuses on issues of management and reform within U.N. system.

So, we have key positions and we have qualified nominees, and we thank you again for your willingness to serve. And with that, let me turn it over to the ranking member, Senator Hagerty.

STATEMENT OF HON. BILL HAGERTY,
U.S. SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE

Senator HAGERTY. Senator Cardin, thank you very much, and I want to thank all the nominees for appearing before this committee today. I want to thank you for your service and for your willingness to step up and serve our great Nation.

First, I would like to start with the nomination of the chief of protocol. This position has the unique responsibility of advancing American foreign policy goals by creating an environment conducive for American diplomacy. As the former U.S. Ambassador to Japan, I recognize that protocol can be incredibly challenging with its own set of complex and intricate issues. It is an essential component of a successful foreign policy, and I look forward to hearing the nominee's views on how he will perform the role of chief of protocol. Next, I would like to turn to the nomination to be the assistant secretary of state for educational and cultural affairs. As authoritarian states, such as China and Russia, look to systematically curb freedom and democracy throughout the world, it is imperative that the United States continue to bolster its people-to-people diplomacy. We should look for opportunities to spread the values and ideals of the United States by facilitating various academic, cultural, sports, and professional exchange programs. I am very interested to hear how the nominee intends to advance U.S. foreign policy objectives through educational and cultural programs.

I would like to turn to the nomination to be deputy administrator for policy and programming at USAID. We know that thoughtfully-targeted and -designed foreign assistance can help advance the national security, the economic security, and the humanitarian interests of the United States. This means that ensuring resources that are properly aligned with the broader strategic objectives the United States will be implemented properly. I look forward to hearing from the nominee on this matter. And now, I would like to turn to the nominee to be representative to the United Nations for U.N. Management and Reform. This is a position that requires keen judgment and an even temperament. As authoritarian states look for ways to increase their influence in the United Nations, the United States will need to exercise its leverage, including its administrative and budgetary leverage, to protect the integrity of the United Nations. At the same time, the United States should look for support from our allies and its partners to shoulder the financial burden of maintaining and funding the United Nations. As these discussions and negotiations over the administrative and budgetary aspects of the U.N. continue, it will be critical for the representative of the United States to maintain a strong position to ensure that the United Nations is properly and efficiently managed.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you very much, Senator Hagerty. We will now proceed to our nominees. Your entire statement will be made part of our record.

And without objection, the two letters of support mentioned by Senator Van Hollen will also be made part of our record.

[The information referred to is located at the end of this hearing transcript]

Senator CARDIN. At this time, let me recognize Ambassador Gifford, who was previously introduced by Senator Markey.

STATEMENT OF THE HON. RUFUS GIFFORD OF MASSACHUSETTS, NOMINATED TO BE CHIEF OF PROTOCOL AND TO HAVE THE RANK OF AMBASSADOR DURING HIS TENURE OF SERVICE

Ambassador GIFFORD. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, for the opportunity appear before you today, and thank you, Senator Markey, for the very kind introduction.

Eight years ago, almost to the day, I sat grateful and humbled before this distinguished committee as President Obama's nominee to be Ambassador to the Kingdom of Denmark. Today, I sit before you doubly humbled and grateful to be nominated by President Biden to once again serve the country I love. If confirmed as President Biden's nominee for chief of protocol for the United States, I am eager to showcase the best of America and all of America, while reaching out to our friends, allies, and partners throughout the world. I also wish to extend gratitude to Secretary of State Antony Blinken. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the Secretary and the over 50,000 State Department employees made up of civil and Foreign Service professionals, locally-engaged staff, eligible family members, and contractors to continue bringing America back to the table.

I am joined here today by my veterinarian husband, Dr. Stephen DeVincent, who was a fellow at the State Department when we first met and who is joining me for the second time on this great journey. And I am joined by my mom and dad, Ann and Chad Gifford. I want to thank all three of them for supporting me today.

Today, in these unprecedented times, traditional diplomacy, like so much else in our great country, has been challenged by COVID-19. However, the United States has remained strong and resilient through the pandemic and has proven that we can work in new and creative ways. In Denmark, I led our amazing team of Americans and locally-engaged staff to strengthen our bilateral relationship and modernize diplomacy while fully embracing the fact that diplomacy starts and ends with human relationships, face-to-face interactions, shaking hands, and breaking through our differences. These are the fundamental ways to carry out the art of protocol, but I also believe that we now have the ability to leverage new tools and technology to build and strengthen our relationships at home and abroad.

We also have a responsibility to model and represent America's diversity by being more inclusive and equitable at every opportunity. This can begin from the moment protocol engages with each and every visiting delegation. If confirmed, I pledge to support the administration's foreign policy goals and reach new audiences using both traditional and modern diplomatic methods of engagement. To do that, I believe I must fully invest in the people who have been at the core of the Office of Protocol for years, across administrations, empowering them and building a true team, one with clarity of mission to work together and advance American foreign policy interests.

Today, the Office of the Chief of Protocol has seven divisions which focus on elements specific to protocol diplomacy. The Blair House, the presidential guest house, has hosted official delegations since it was sold to the U.S. Government in the mid-1900s. The Blair House operates similar to a boutique hotel and can serve as a representational venue or provide contingent lodging. The Ceremonials Division executes events for both the White House and the Secretary of State involving the Diplomatic Corps and visiting high-level officials, as well as presidential inaugurations, state funerals, and other ceremonies. Ceremonials officers advise on flag etiquette, forms of address, and event logistics. Diplomatic Affairs is responsible for maintaining the Diplomatic Corps order of precedence and the publication of the Foreign Diplomatic List. It coordinates the accreditation of bilateral chiefs of mission, heads of delegation, charge d'affaires, and deputy chiefs of mission and their dependents. It directs the process for new bilateral chiefs of mission and heads of delegation, including arrivals and presentations of credentials to the President at the White House.

Diplomatic Partnership, a revived division, is responsible for outreach to the Diplomatic Corps domestically and will engage audiences, both through social media and other forum. It has several programs, including Experience America, State of the administration, issues roundtables, and the American Heritage Series. Major Events is responsible for planning and executing multilateral summits, major conferences, and other large-scale events. Most recently, Major Events Division carried out the largest virtual summit, virtual official event, with the April 2021 Leaders Summit on Climate, reaching out to 40 world leaders. The Visits Division assistant accompanies presidential delegations abroad. It works closely with other Federal agencies and takes a role in the logistical planning of bilateral meetings with the President, First Lady, Vice President, and Secretary of State, as well as officials and state visits and large-scale international meetings and summits. Finally, the Management Division keeps all the other divisions running, making sure they have all the needed resources. If confirmed as the chief of protocol, I pledge to lead the team of experienced protocol staff to showcase the very best America has to offer.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, thank you again for the—for the opportunity to appear before you today and for your consideration of my nomination. If confirmed, I look forward to serving the United States and working with Congress to help advance our foreign policy. I look forward to your questions.

[The prepared statement of Ambassador Gifford follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. RUFUS GIFFORD

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and members of the committee, for the opportunity to appear before you.

I am joined here today by my veterinarian husband Dr. Stephen DeVincent, who was a fellow at the State Department when we first met and who is joining me for the second time on this great journey. I am also joined (virtually?) by my Mom and Dad and several close friends. I want to thank them for supporting me today.

Today, in these unprecedented times, traditional diplomacy—like so much else in our great country—has been challenged by COVID-19. However, the United States has remained strong and resilient through the pandemic and has proven that we can work in new and creative ways. Major Events is responsible for planning and executing multi-lateral summits, major conferences, and other large-scale events. Most recently, the Major Events division carried out the largest virtual official event through the April 2021 Leaders Summit on Climate, reaching out to 40 world leaders.

The Visits division assists and accompanies Presidential delegations abroad. It works closely with other federal agencies and takes a lead role in the logistical planning of bilateral meetings with the President, First Lady, Vice President, and Secretary of State, as well as Official and State visits and large-scale international meetings and summits.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, thank you again for the opportunity to appear before you today and for your consideration of my nomination. If confirmed, I look forward to serving the United States and working with Congress to help advance our foreign policy.

I look forward to your questions.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you, Ambassador Gifford. We will now hear from Ms. Satterfield, who was previously introduced by Senator Graham.

STATEMENT OF LEE SATTERFIELD OF SOUTH CAROLINA, NOMINATED TO BE ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE [EDUCATIONAL AND CULTURAL AFFAIRS]

Ms. SATTERFIELD. Sorry. I would like to thank Senator Graham for his introduction. Chairman Cardin, Ranking Member Hagerty, and members of the committee, thank you for giving me the opportunity to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee to be assistant secretary of the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs. I am honored to be considered by the Senate for this important position and grateful to President Biden and Secretary Blinken for the confidence that they have placed in me. I would like to thank my family—my husband, Patrick, our sons, Jack and Connor—and all of my supportive extended family, friends, and colleagues.

I have worked in various capacities in the consequential field of international engagement for over a decade and dedicated the majority of my almost 30-year career to public service. If confirmed it would be the honor of a lifetime to lead a bureau whose mission is to increase mutual understanding between the people of the United States and people around the world through educational, professional, and cultural exchanges. My experience has prepared me to carry on the proud tradition of excellence at the Bureau. As president of Meridian International Center, I led efforts to connect leaders through cultural exchange and collaboration, driving solutions to shared global challenges and fostering international cooperation for the past 6 years.

I am a passionate champion for using U.S. policy priorities through people-to-people exchanges. Having previously served in ECA as deputy assistant secretary and acting assistant secretary, I know these programs of engagement are an integral part of our diplomacy, which President Biden has placed at the center of U.S. foreign policy. And I hold the many dedicated professionals who make these programs successful in the highest regard. Public diplomacy is a strategy, and like foreign policy professionals, public diplomacy practitioners must survey the global terrain to ascertain America's natural competitive advantages in meeting threats and challenges.

Those advantages are numerous. The United States has the highest-quality, most open and diverse system of higher education in the world. We are and must remain the destination of choice for the best and brightest students. We can welcome international students and protect our national interests. The United States economy is infused with an entrepreneurial spirit that attracts, inspires, and innovates. American culture is the most pervasive and influential culture in the world. English is the language of the world, opening doors and minds. American values are the foundation of a world that rejects violence and extremism, and that embraces liberty, individual dignity, and democracy. ECA exchanges are purposefully designed to leverage all of those inherent strengths of our country. Exchanges have an unparalleled ability to convey and share the American experience, ultimately making our country more secure and globally competitive.

As set forth in the Interim National Security Strategic Guidance, we are engaged in a global competition for influence and power with authoritarian states, such as Russia and China. To meet this current challenge, our most powerful assets remain those that have guided and strengthened our Nation since the beginning: our democratic principles. If confirmed, I will thoughtfully evaluate conditions for scaling up in-person exchanges, prioritizing health, safety, and welfare, and build on lessons learned from ECA's successful virtual programs. I will ensure ECA programs represent, promote, and support equity, diversity, and inclusion, while also advancing those principles within the workforce. I will demonstrate responsible stewardship of taxpayer dollars by measuring and evaluating program performance through a data-driven approach.

As Secretary Blinken stated, among the best investments we make are in our exchange programs. I will continue ECA activities that benefit the American people and the U.S. economy, contributing directly to local economies and fostering business and educational opportunities, and I will promote those opportunities to U.S. citizens. I will build on ECA's robust global alumni network. Successful exchange programs are not one-and-done events, but rather an initial investment in foreign audiences and a community of potential foreign policy allies. One in three current world leaders are part of the over 1.5 million alumni of ECA exchanges. If confirmed, I will aim to strengthen people-to-people ties and advance our country's foreign policy goals under the leadership of Secretary Blinken and in consultation with Congress.

Thank you, and I look forward to your questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF LEE SATTERFIELD

Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee, thank you for giving me the opportunity to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee to be Assistant Secretary of the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs. I am honored to be considered by the Senate for this important position, and grateful to President Biden and Secretary Blinken for the confidence they have placed in me.

Public diplomacy is a strategy, and like foreign policy professionals, public diplomacy practitioners must survey the global terrain to ascertain America's natural competitive advantages in meeting threats and challenges. Those advantages are numerous.

- The United States has the highest-quality, most open and diverse system of higher education in the world. We are, and must remain, the destination of choice for the best and brightest students. We can both welcome legitimate international students and protect our national interests from malign influence.

- The United States economy is infused with an entrepreneurial spirit that attracts, inspires, and innovates.
- American culture is the most pervasive and influential popular culture in the world.
- English is the language of the world, opening doors and minds.
- American values are the foundation of a world that rejects violence and extremism and that embraces liberty, individual dignity, and democracy.

ECA exchanges are purposefully designed to leverage all those inherent strengths of our country. Exchanges have an unparalleled ability to convey and share the American experience, ultimately making our country more secure and globally competitive.

As set forth in the Interim National Security Strategic Guidance, we are engaged in a global competition for influence and power with authoritarian states such as Russia and China. To meet this current challenge, our most powerful assets remain those that have guided and strengthened our nation since the beginning - our democratic principles.

If confirmed, I will:

- First, thoughtfully evaluate conditions for scaling up in-person exchanges prioritizing health, safety, and welfare and continue building on lessons learned from ECA's successful pivot to virtual and hybrid programs during the pandemic.
- I will ensure ECA programs represent promote and support equity, diversity, and inclusion while also advancing those principles within the workforce.
- I will demonstrate responsible stewardship of taxpayer dollars by measuring and evaluating program performance through a data-driven approach. As Secretary Blinken stated, "Among the best investments we make are in our exchange programs."
- I will continue ECA activities that benefit the American people and U.S. economy, contributing directly to local economies and fostering business and educational opportunities, and I will promote those opportunities to US citizens.

If confirmed, I will aim to strengthen people-to-people ties and advance our country's foreign policy goals under the leadership of Secretary Blinken and in consultation with Congress. Thank you, and I look forward to answering your questions.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you very much for your testimony. We will now hear from the nominee—President Biden's nominee for deputy administrator for policy and programming at USAID, Ambassador Isobel Coleman, who is a foreign policy and global development expert with more than 25 years of experience working in government, the private sector, and nonprofits. Most recently, she served on the Biden transition team, leading the review of the U.S. mission in the United Nations—to the United Nations. From 2014 to 2017, she was the U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations for management, reform, and special political affairs. During this time, she represented the United States in the U.N. General Assembly on budgetary matters and the U.N. Security Council on Africa and peacekeeping issues. From 2018 to 2020, she was the chief operating officer of GiveDirectly, an international nonprofit group that deals with poverty by providing unconditional cash transfers to the extreme poor.

It is a pleasure to have Ambassador Coleman before us.

STATEMENT OF THE HON. ISOBEL COLEMAN OF NEW YORK, NOMINATED TO BE A DEPUTY ADMINISTRATOR OF THE UNITED STATES AGENCY FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOP-MENT [POLICY AND PROGRAMMING]

Ambassador COLEMAN. Thank you, Chairman Cardin, and Ranking Member Hagerty, and distinguished members of the committee. I am honored to appear before you as President Biden's nominee to be deputy administrator for policy and programming at USAID. I am grateful to President Biden and Administrator Power for their trust in me at this important moment. I would also like to thank the SFRC staff who have so strongly supported the mission of USAID and have been stalwart partners to the Agency.

I would not be appearing before you today without the love and support of my family, who have encouraged me every step. My wonderful husband, Struan, who is here with us today, and my terrific children, Cullen, Struan, Julian, Josie, and Adrian; my siblings, Carolyn, Richard, and Douglas; and my loving parents, Michael and Edie; and mother-in-law, Jenny. I thank you all.

Over the past 20 years, my work as a writer, diplomat, and NGO leader has taken me to trouble spots around the world from Afghanistan and Yemen to South Sudan and Eastern Congo. I have had the privilege of visiting more than a dozen USAID missions, and I have seen up close the incredible work of USAID staff and partners, from programs training young women to provide life-saving maternal care in rural Afghan villages, to democracy programs helping young people understand their newfound political rights in Tunisia. These and other American investments not only improve the lives of millions, but also advance our own interests. We at home are more secure and more prosperous when democracy and economic opportunities expand for others around the world.

Today, the work of USAID is more important than ever. COVID-19 continues to ravage the world's most vulnerable populations. The pandemic's secondary effects, including loss of incomes, food insecurity, and widespread school closings, are exacting a steep toll in many communities. Untethered corruption is destabilizing countries around the world, and conflict is now driving more than 80 percent of humanitarian needs. My career has helped prepare me to lead the Agency to confront the challenges facing our global development efforts at this time.

I have written extensively about economic reform and democratization, and I am probably best known for my decades-long work to underscore the advantages of investing in women and girls globally. My years in the private sector have helped me to hone my management skills. My time as a diplomat at the U.N. exposed me to the benefits and challenges of multilateralism and instilled in me the imperative of leveraging our resources to marshal those of other countries. And as an NGO working across Africa, I gained firsthand appreciation for the acute challenges facing USAID partners in delivering assistance to those devastated by conflict and humanitarian disasters. If confirmed, I will bring these experiences to bear at USAID to ensure that our programming continues to be more innovative and effective, that it is aligned to administration and congressional priorities, and to mobilize other governments, international organizations, and the private sector to be force multipliers of our work.

I will also lead on ensuring a culture of diversity, equity, and inclusion across the Agency. Meeting today's demands, from helping partner countries adapt to climate change, to countering democratic backsliding, depends on finding innovative ways to do more with less. To that end, I will strive to ensure that the Agency is breaking down programmatic silos to realize the multiplier effect of our work across bureaus and sectors.

I am clear-eyed about the competitive challenges posed by China, Russia, and other authoritarian regimes, and I will make sure that USAID is deploying the best of America, including technical expertise, financing, corporate partnerships, and innovation alongside our generous grants, to provide an alternative to predatory development models that breed and exacerbate corruption. If confirmed, I pledge to work with you and your colleagues to ensure that U.S. taxpayer dollars are being deployed effectively to advance American foreign policy interests while doing the most good for the most people. I will bring to my role the same commitment to transparency, bipartisanship, and collaboration with this committee that I brought to my prior role in government.

I thank you again for this opportunity to appear before you, and I look forward to answering your questions.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you very much for your comments. We will now turn to the Honorable Christopher Lu, who was previously introduced by Senator Van Hollen.

STATEMENT OF THE HON. CHRISTOPHER LU OF VIRGINIA, NOMINATED TO BE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE UNITED NATIONS FOR U.N.
MANAGEMENT AND REFORM, WITH THE RANK OF AMBAS-SADOR, AND TO BE THE ALTERNATIVE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE SESSIONS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED NATIONS, DURING HIS TENURE OF SERVICE AS REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE UNITED NATIONS FOR U.N.
MANAGEMENT AND REFORM

Mr. LU. Chairman Cardin, Ranking Member Hagerty, and members of the committee, it is an honor to appear today. I would like to thank President Biden, Secretary Blinken, and Ambassador Thomas-Greenfield for their confidence in me. I am grateful to Senator Van Hollen for his kind words and his tireless efforts to create opportunities for future public servants. And, most importantly, I would like to thank my wife, Katie Thompson, who is here today, for her steadfast support.

I am the proud son of immigrants who came to this country more than 60 years to start a new life. Government service is literally in my blood. My father, who was a civilian employee at the Department of Defense, believed that working for the Federal Government was the best way to repay the country that had been so good to him. I have tried to follow my father's example during my 20 years of Federal service where I have focused on improving how government addresses the needs of the American people.

As deputy chief counsel of the House Oversight Committee, I conducted investigations to improve the effectiveness of Federal programs. During my time as legislative director for then Senator Obama, we worked with former senator, Tom Coburn, to pass legislation to improve the transparency of Federal spending and reduce no-bid contracts. As White House Cabinet secretary, I coordinated dozens of Federal agencies to ensure the effective delivery of services during the Great Recession. And at the Department of Labor, I was the chief operating officer of a $12 billion agency with 17,000 employees, and I oversaw the budget, personnel, procurement, and IT functions. If confirmed, I look forward to applying my experience to this critical position, representing the United States at the U.N.

Since its founding, the United Nations has been an indispensable force for advancing peace and security and improving the lives of the world's most vulnerable people. The events of the past year have highlighted how interconnected our world is and how complex problems often can only be addressed in collaboration with other countries. A well-managed U.N. is in the best interest of the United States. It is also a smart investment for the American people who are the largest funders of the U.N. budget.

Despite its many successes, the U.N. has struggled at times to live up to its founding ideals. In order to address the complex issues of the 21st century, the U.N. needs to operate more like a 21st century organization. If confirmed, I will push for greater transparency and accountability in how the U.N. spends its funds, makes its decisions, and operates its programs. Waste, fraud, and abuse should be rooted out and eliminated, anti-Israel bias must be rejected wherever it exists, sexual exploitation and abuse by U.N. peacekeepers and staff must end, and constant vigilance is needed towards countries, like China and Russia, that seek to undermine the U.N. and the rules-based international order.

I am well aware of the challenges of driving change in an organization where the United States is just one of 193 members. However, as Ambassador Thomas-Greenfield told this committee in January, we must have the courage to insist on reforms that make the U.N. efficient and effective and the persistence to see the reforms through. Since its founding, the U.N. has endured and prospered because of American leadership. If confirmed, I look forward to utilizing my 2 decades of Federal management experience to ensure that the United Nations moves closer to reaching its full potential.

Thank you for considering me for this position. I look forward to answering your questions.

[The prepared statement of Mr. Lu follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. CHRISTOPHER P. LU

Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee, it is an honor to appear today as the nominee to be the Permanent Representative to the United Nations for Management and Reform.

I would like to thank President Biden, Secretary Blinken, and Ambassador Thomas-Greenfield for their confidence in me. Most importantly, I would like to thank my family, especially my remarkable wife Katie Thomson, for their steadfast support.

I am the proud son of immigrants who came to this country more than 60 years ago to start a new life. Government service is literally in my blood. My father was a civilian employee at the Department of Defense because he believed that working for the federal government was the best way to repay the country that had been so good to him.

I have tried to follow my father's example during my 20 years of federal service, where I have focused on improving how the government addresses the needs of the American people.

As the Deputy Chief Counsel of the House Oversight and Reform Committee, I conducted investigations to improve the effectiveness of federal programs. During my tenure as the legislative director for then-Senator Obama, we worked with former Senator Tom Coburn to pass legislation to improve the transparency of federal spending and reduce no-bid contracts. As the White House Cabinet Secretary, I coordinated dozens of federal agencies to ensure the effective delivery of services during the Great Recession.

At the Department of Labor, an agency with 17,000 employees and a $12 billion budget, I was the chief operating officer and oversaw the budget, personnel, procurement, and IT functions. We utilized an extensive performance management system, incorporated best practices from outside the federal government, and focused on employee morale. In the annual survey of federal employee engagement, the Labor Department rose from 17th place before I arrived to 6th place when I left.

If confirmed for the role of Representative to the United Nations for Management and Reform, I look forward to applying my management experience to this critical position.

Since its founding, the United Nations has been an indispensable force for advancing peace and security, improving the lives of the world's most vulnerable people, and confronting global problems like economic inequality, climate change and human rights. As Secretary Blinken said to the U.N. Security Council in May: "No period in modern history has been more peaceful or prosperous than the one since the United Nations was created."

The events of the past year have highlighted how interconnected our world is and how complex problems often can only be addressed in collaboration with other countries. A well-managed United Nations is in the best interest of the United States. It is also a smart investment for the American people, who are the largest funders of the U.N. budget. Indeed, a 2018 GAO report found that it would cost the United States eight times as much money if we were to undertake unilaterally the U.N.'s peacekeeping missions.

Despite its many successes, the U.N. has struggled at times to live up to its founding ideals. In order to address the complex issues of the 21st century, the U.N. needs to operate more like a 21st century organization. In recent years, Secretary-General Guterres has implemented important operational reforms. But more can and should be done, and U.S. leadership is critical to driving U.N. reform.

If confirmed, I will push for greater transparency and accountability in how the U.N. spends its funds, makes its decisions, and operates its programs. The performance of programs should be evaluated using data. Waste, fraud and abuse should be rooted out and eliminated. Anti-Israel bias must be rejected wherever it exists.

Instances of sexual exploitation and abuse by U.N. peacekeepers and staff must end. And constant vigilance is needed of those nations, such as China and Russia, that seek to undermine the U.N. and the rules-based international order.

I am fully cognizant of the challenges of driving change in an organization where the United States is just one of 193 members. However, as Ambassador Thomas-Greenfield told this committee in January: "We must have the courage to insist on reforms that make the U.N. efficient and effective, and the persistence to see reforms through."

In the 75 years since its founding, the U.N. has endured, expanded its mission, and transformed itself because of American leadership. If confirmed, I look forward to utilizing my two decades of federal management experience to ensure that the United Nations moves closer to reaching its full potential.

Thank you for considering me for this position, and I look forward to answering your questions.

Senator CARDIN. And thank you for your testimony. The committee has four standard questions that we ask all nominees. I will go down the line, ask if you could answer "yes" or "no" to these questions for the record.

Do you agree to appear before this committee and make officials from your office available to the committee and designated staff when invited?

Ambassador GIFFORD. Yes.

Ms. SATTERFIELD. Yes, I do.

Mr. LU. Yes.

Senator CARDIN. You cannot nod. You have to respond.

Ambassador COLEMAN. Yes, I do.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you. Do you commit to keep this committee fully and currently informed about the activities under your purview?

Ambassador GIFFORD. Yes.

Ms. SATTERFIELD. Yes.

Ambassador COLEMAN. Yes, I do.

Mr. LU. Yes.

Senator CARDIN. Do you commit to engaging in meaningful consultation while policies are being developed, not just providing notification after the fact?

Ambassador GIFFORD. Yes.

Ms. SATTERFIELD. Yes.

Ambassador COLEMAN. Yes.

Mr. LU. Yes.

Senator CARDIN. Do you commit to promptly responding to requests for briefings and information requested by the committee and its designated staff?

Ambassador GIFFORD. Yes.

Ms. SATTERFIELD. Yes.

Ambassador COLEMAN. Yes.

Mr. LU. Yes.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you. Senator Shaheen?

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman, and congratulations to each of you on your nominations. I look forward to working with you, and I am sure the rest of the committee feels the same way. Ambassador Coleman, I would like to begin with you because one of the things you said in your opening statement, and you talked a little bit about this in your written testimony, is that you are going to strive to ensure the Agency is breaking down siloes to realize the multiplier effect of work across bureaus and sectors. And in your opening statement, you talked about the importance of investing in women and girls, which I am a big proponent of. Can you talk a little bit about how you could fully integrate women and girls across all aspects of USAID?

Ambassador COLEMAN. Thank you, Senator Shaheen, for that question on a topic near and dear to my heart. Investing in women and girls cannot be a side show, an afterthought. It really has to be the main event. There is so much compelling evidence today that shows that investing in women and girls creates positive cycles for countries, that it improves not only their own lives, the lives of their families, of their communities, but it leads to more prosperous countries and the world as a whole. So, when we look at efforts on food security, humanitarian assistance, global health, whatever it is that USAID is doing—climate change and resilience—women and girls have to be front and center. They are often the most vulnerable in their communities and ones we need to make sure that they are receiving attention. And we know that when efforts and programming is targeted to women and girls, the spillover effects for the whole family are tremendous.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, thank you. I assume we can feel—rest assured that you will commit to making that a priority, if confirmed.

Ambassador COLEMAN. Absolutely, it will be one of our priorities. Thank you.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you. Ms. Satterfield, I totally agree with your comment about cultural exchanges being an initial investment in our foreign allies, and it is the best way for people around the world to learn about the United States and for Americans to learn about others around the world. But one of the challenges that we have had in New Hampshire is with the J-1 Visa Program. I think it is a terrific program, and we have a lot of employers who not only appreciate the ability to learn from the foreign visitors, but who also are able to give them jobs, and that has been an important aspect of our seasonal economy in New Hampshire with tourism. So can you talk about how you would work, if confirmed, with American businesses to address issues that we have had with the J-1 Visa Program over the last year so that we are not facing a winter and a spring next year where we have these same problems where young people are not able to get to the United States because we have embassies closed down and we cannot do the work to ensure that they can arrive in the United States?

Ms. SATTERFIELD. Thank you, Senator, and I agree that the J-1 Visa Program, now called BridgeUSA, is a valuable foreign policy tool and an important public diplomacy program specifically to communities all across the country. I have seen recent reports about the shortage of international visitors in camps that are not being able to continue because of the shortage. And I feel for those parents and families and also those small businesses that affected. The BridgeUSA Program is poised to be stronger than ever. There have been significant improvements in the program over the last couple of years, and now those alumni are included as part of all of the State Department alumni and continuing engagement after they return home, so your point about a critical audience is key.

If I am confirmed, I will work very closely with Consular Affairs to prioritize the J-1 visitors and to communicate with sponsors and communities about the various ways that we can ensure that these participants are able to come to the United States as soon as possible.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, thank you. As we continue to struggle with COVID, both here in the United States and around the world, will you also commit to working with State to develop a plan for how we will address this if we continue to have embassies closed around the world?

Ms. SATTERFIELD. Yes, Senator, I will.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you, Senator Shaheen. I would just reinforce what Senator Shaheen said on the—on the J-1's. I think many parts of our country depended upon the J-1's, but also the value of the exchange as well as the need in our country was clearly missed during COVID-19. Senator Hagerty?

Senator HAGERTY. There we go. Thank you. Chairman Cardin, I just want to thank you for your remarks, and, Senator Shaheen, the J-1 issue is also a big issue in my State as well, and I echo your concern and appreciate the fact that, Ms. Satterfield, you will be willing to work with us on this, if confirmed. If I could first turn to Ambassador Gifford, chief of protocol plays a critical diplomatic role. You will be charged with advising not only national, but international diplomatic protocols. Our Nation will rely upon you. As the former United States Ambassador to Japan, I understand how difficult sometimes the nuances of diplomatic protocol can be, and it will be requiring you to have very keen judgment as you execute your duties, if you are confirmed. Also, I want to remind you that, if confirmed, you will be representing all Americans, and I hope that you will keep that in mind.

And with that in mind, I would like to understand your views, Ambassador, on the importance of bipartisanship in the execution and implementation of U.S. foreign policy, and whether you will commit to work with me and the other members of this committee to make sure that bipartisan representation is critically represented in all of our diplomatic protocol issues.

Ambassador GIFFORD. Thank you, Senator. The answer to that is absolutely, 100 percent. As someone like you, who has served overseas and has seen the real beauty, and strength, and power of American diplomacy globally, as far as I am concerned, partisan politics has absolutely no place at the State Department, that politics famously stops at the water's edge. And then, of course, when we are living and working at the State Department, that holds true as well. The way I think about this is when we—if I am confirmed and I am privileged enough to take that oath of office, I pledge to serve, protect, defend the Constitution of the United States, I do not—no President, no ideology, certainly no political party. And for me, I think I have a record to back that up because that is what I did from 2013 until I left my post in 2017. And I commit to you wholeheartedly to do that once again if I am confirmed in this position.

Senator HAGERTY. I appreciate that, Ambassador. I have been very frustrated myself seeing former diplomats come back and behave in a partisan manner, and I think that that needs to be parked. And just as you say, you will be representing all of us, and I appreciate your wholehearted focus on that. Ambassador Coleman, if I could turn to you, please. I have enjoyed our opportunity to discuss matters related to the charter that you are looking to undertake. I would like to talk to you about two areas: China and Afghanistan. USAID funds a tremendous amount of effort to help ethnic Tibetans to maintain their culture, to maintain their entrepreneurial presence. It is this type of program that I wholeheartedly support, and I would love to hear your views on how you would look at continuing USAID's support for other groups that may be, in some way, oppressed or damaged in some manner by China's malign behavior.

Ambassador COLEMAN. Thank you, Senator Hagerty, for that question, and I thank you for your time last week that we were able to spend to get to know each other a bit. It is a very important question. We have seen an increasing authoritarian turn in China and an erosion of human rights in that country. You mentioned the Tibetans, but, of course, the situation with the Uyghurs is very dire, too. USAID is doing what it can to support the Uyghur people, particularly those who are taking an activist role and those who have been oppressed by the country. Some of them have left the country, and USAID is taking efforts across China to ensure human rights programming where it can, but often outside the country.

Senator HAGERTY. I hope we can continue this conversation, particularly with the thought of how we can prevent the CCP from diverting or, in some way, frustrating those efforts. I will look forward to having those conversations with you should you be confirmed.

Ambassador COLEMAN. I look forward to it.

Senator HAGERTY. With respect to Afghanistan, I see a very challenging role there because we are making commitments to continue U.S. aid, but the Taliban has taken over half the districts there, putting our presence there under tremendous pressure. Have you had the opportunity to think about how you will deploy USAID resources under the current conditions in Afghanistan, particularly as you see them trending?

Ambassador COLEMAN. Thank you, Senator, for that question, too. I have—I have spent a bit of time in Afghanistan. I have been there maybe half a dozen times over the past 20 years and have seen some very good work that USAID has done there. And I recognize that the situation is very fragile right now and rapidly changing. I think USAID has made some strong gains in Afghanistan and will do what it can, both through our own efforts on the ground, but also working through partners there, local partners, international NGOs, and U.N. agencies, to continue some of the good work that we have done. But if confirmed, I will certainly make Afghanistan a priority and to do contingency planning as the situation evolves.

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator CARDIN. Senator Van Hollen?

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and congratulations to all of you on your nominations. Ms. Satterfield, if I could begin with you, and thank you for the work you have done at the Meridian House. Let me pick up on that work and something I heard you say, which is that you believe that educational and exchange programs do play an important role in our foreign policy. I agree with you. If you look at the previous administration even before the pandemic hit, there was a big drop off in the number of students coming to the United States. In the very first year of the previous administration, international student enrollment in U.S. universities declined by 6.6 percent in the first academic year. We don't need to go into all the reasons for that, but my question to you is, is it your goal to restore a more robust enrollment of foreign students to the United States and to reinvigorate our exchange programs?

Ms. SATTERFIELD. Thank you, Senator, for that question and bringing up this incredibly important point. The United States remains the number one destination for hosting international students, even though the numbers have dropped. Also, there is growing competition from other countries to recruit students to come there to study, and we cannot rest on laurels. It is absolutely my intent to continue to find ways to message to international students. We need strong outreach with accurate and comprehensive information. Frankly, like the statement that was put out yesterday by the State Department—a joint statement by the State Department and the Department of Education listing the ways that international students can come to the United States to U.S. universities and colleges and participate in a way, we can also network through Education USA, which is ECA's educational advising arm, and through our American Spaces, which are in over 600 places around the world. I absolutely commit, if confirmed, to making that a priority.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Well, terrific, because, as you say, we have seen a drop off in the number of enrollments even before the pandemic, and obviously we need to take into account health issues, but as you mentioned, we are seeing incredible competition around the world. Other countries see it as in their interest to attract students, and we have a whole lot to offer and also a window into, you know, some of the values that form our country in foreign policy—freedom of speech and other things. So, I really hope and am pleased that you are going to make that a priority.

I also just want to mention to you that there is a very good exchange program with young African leaders, the Young African Leaders Initiative, YALI. You are probably familiar with it. I chair the Africa Subcommittee here and Senator Rounds is the ranking member, and we intend to—shortly to introduce legislation to codify that program. Congresswoman Bass introduced and passed that in the House and look forward to working with you. I hope I will have your commitment to work with us on that.

Ms. SATTERFIELD. Absolutely. Thank you, Senator.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you. Ambassador Coleman, if I could—well, first let me start with Sudan. I had a chance to visit Sudan a little while back with Senator Coons, and, as you know, the United States through AID has committed $700 million to support the transition from dictatorship to democracy. This committee is currently reviewing some of the rough drafts of the proposal. We need to get it done quickly, in my view. Are you familiar with that proposal, and do you commit to working with this committee to make sure that we implement it fully?

Ambassador COLEMAN. Thank you, Senator, for bringing up Sudan. It is one of the few bright spots actually on the horizon as it makes its transition from military rule to civilian governance, and if confirmed, I will absolutely make Sudan one of my priorities. I am familiar with the legislation. I do not know the details of it, but I do understand that $700 million has been committed, and investments in helping the civilian government understand how to govern, and building institutional capacity, and working with civil society so that they can strengthen that democratic governance process there is critically important. Thank you.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you. And my last question relates to what Senator Hagerty brought up with respect to Afghanistan. I do know if you have seen the movie, Charlie Wilson's War, but for those of you who have not, I recommend it to you. It is a story about a House member who was successful in getting all of his colleagues to support the purchase of Stinger missiles to provide to the mujahideen, which did help drive the Soviets out of Afghanistan. But the very end of the movie is a—is a scene of him asking his colleagues to support funding for education and schools in Afghanistan, and he was unsuccessful at doing that. We know what happened after the Soviet—we pushed the Soviets out, and we sort of, you know, left the scene, and the Taliban filled the vacuum, and they gave—they, of course, gave sanctuary to al-Qaeda. So I—two questions. One is, what is AID's vision for its continued participation in Afghanistan? Number two, how are you going to navigate the security situation there?

Ambassador COLEMAN. Thank you, Senator, for the question. You know, USAID, I understand, is looking at the situation very closely in Afghanistan and, as I said earlier, doing contingency planning. It is almost impossible to know what will happen at this point and any time frame. But it has invested $22 billion in that country over the past 20 years and have some remarkable gains to show for it in terms of significant declines in maternal mortality, more girls in school than ever before in that country's history, and seeking ways to make sure that those gains are not lost, that, in fact, that they are sustained, whether it is through direct interventions or working through partners on the ground through the multilateral system and the U.N. agencies, but also recognizing the possibility for refugee flows and being ready for that.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Well, I think we all have our hands full there with respect to what will unfold, but I appreciate your determination to stay engaged, security allowing. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator CARDIN. Senator Kaine?

Senator KAINE. Madam Chair and Ranking Member Hagerty, thank you, and congratulations to the panel. This is a very highly-qualified panel. Ambassador Gifford, it is good to see you again, and I want to start with you. I would have asked exactly the question that Senator Hagerty did. Looking at the background of a Rufus Gifford that I did not know and seeing so much political activity, I would have asked, can you, you know, take an oath and be even handed in your work. I have had the virtue of working with Rufus significantly in the past, and I couldn't say this about everybody I have worked in a political capacity, but I can say it about Rufus Gifford that he is going to be very, very even handed in his approach to the job, which is what he did when he was Ambassador to Denmark. Your success there was very, very notable.

Let me ask you this, Ambassador Gifford. You talked about the many external-facing roles of the protocol chief, but there is also this internal-facing role. You talked about the Management Division within the Office. In the past, there have been some controversies about internal management issues. Tell us what you would do, should you be confirmed, to foster a very professional and inclusive and even-handed environment in the office?

Ambassador GIFFORD. Thank you, Senator, and this is a—this is an issue that is near and dear to my heart. I am certainly aware of the ongoing challenges. There are issues with morale, et cetera. And listen, I think that from a management standpoint, and I think this is—one important thing to note here is that service overseas, understanding the culture of the State Department, understand the expertise that I am walking into, if I am confirmed for this job, is where you start, I think. General respect for the civil servants who have been doing this work for years, understanding that if I am confirmed in this position, that I have a lot to learn still, that they are the career professionals, and I am coming in to lead, of course, but I still—but I need to be building that team and fostering that sense—that sense of just that word “team.”

And I have to say that over the—with the various teams that I have managed roughly the same size, diverse staffs in a variety of different ways, I like to say that I, at the beginning of any job like this, I take the bull by the horns and ensure that we change the tone and that we create an environment that is equitable, diverse, and empowering because, honestly, if we are going to accomplish the mission, that is what we have got to do. That is where were you got to start.

Senator KAINE. Excellent. Thank you for that. Ms. Satterfield, your Bureau is very important, and it is very important to Virginia because we have a significant number of people who work on programs. For example, in Fulbright, we have 53 Virginians doing Fulbrights during 2020 and 2021 Peace Corps, 114 Virginians in the 2020 Peace Corps Program. We have also hosted critical programs, including the Young African Leaders Conference that Senator Van Hollen asked you about at UVA in 2014 and at Virginia Commonwealth University in 2016. So, there is a lot I would like to ask, but I am just going to ask you about this. Talk to us about the challenges of the Fulbright Program during the time of COVID and how you intend to keep this program vibrant and active, even as the State Department is issuing new guidance and other agencies are issuing new guidance every day about travel restrictions that may need to be continued with some of the nations where we have Fulbright scholars.

Ms. SATTERFIELD. Thank you, Senator. It is important to continue to provide ways that we can connect with people around the world and Americans, particularly through Fulbright. It happens to be the 75th anniversary of that program this year, and it is a strong and vibrant way that we reach out to other communities across the world. I remember recently I was speaking with some college students and talking about the role, I am confirmed, that I will play in the United States. As soon as I mentioned “Fulbright,” their eyes lit up. It has a—it resonates, not only here in the United States, but in all places around the world.

The pandemic has created a challenge for doing in-person programming, but I think that—we hope that we will be able to continue in-person programs where possible, and continuing Fulbright and other public diplomacy programs will critical. And if I am confirmed, I will look forward to determining ways we can do that safely.

Senator KAINE. Excellent. Well, I am going to—I am going to include Ambassador Coleman and Mr. Lu in a last comment or question. So, Mr. Lu, you are a wonderful public servant. Since you are nominated for a position that Ambassador Coleman has had, I hope you guys have lunch right after this and let her give you a lot of good advice about how to do it. Ambassador Coleman, here is something I am just interested in, and I just want to put it on your radar screen. There is a program at USAID called the New Partnerships Initiative, which is designed to invest in NGOs—small NGOs and local partners in the USAID humanitarian contracting space. There was a Foreign Policy article in May, just recently, that criticized USAID for distributing the NPI awards largely through large contractors, kind of undercutting the whole goal of the program, which is to focus on small contractors and local partners. Senators Rubio and I are going to introduce a bill this week called the New Partners—New Partnerships Initiative Authorization Act to really try to make sure that we are building capacity among creative and innovative new partners, and not just legacy partners, who do great work. But we want to create more innovation and more opportunity. And I hope that will be an area that you will focus on, should you be confirmed, and we will look forward to working with you on that.

Senator CARDIN. Ambassador Coleman, if I might start with a question in regards to how you intend to set priorities within USAID. And I mention this with President Biden making it clear that our foreign policy is going to be wrapped in our values, something that, I think, every member of this committee strongly supports. He has also indicated corruption is a core national security concern. If you look at what the trends are around the world, decline of democratic states, the rise of corruption in many countries, including some of our allies where we see a rise in corruption, good governance and the role USAID plays in anti-corruption becomes critically important. Later this week, our committee will be considering legislation to expand our role and USAID's role in global health, something we desperately need to do. My question is, we have a limited amount of resources today under USAID that is devoted to good governance and anti-corruption. How do you intend to prioritize good governance and anti-corruption to protect and expand the capacity of USAID to deal with this critical issue for our country?

Ambassador COLEMAN. Thank you, Senator Cardin, for that terrific question. And also let me just start by thanking you for your leadership on this issue. Whether it is the Global Magnitsky Act or the Combatting Global Corruption Act, you have truly shown tremendous leadership on bringing corruption to the forefront of what needs to be a whole-of-government approach to combating this scourge around the world, so thank you.

If confirmed, I know that corruption—anti-corruption efforts will be very central to a whole range of efforts. Not only has President Biden made this one of his priorities, but Administrator Power also created an anti-corruption task force and is really focused on this issue because it is such a challenging topic in so many parts of the world. And, you know, if confirmed, I would really dig into the programs that exist, look at what has been effective, look at new areas that we could invest more in, but really make this something that is mainstreamed throughout all of our work that we are doing because it is so important.

Senator CARDIN. I would just underscore that one of the areas that we really need to strengthen is the capacity of our embassies to deal with understanding the problems in their country and how we can best interact to deal with anti-corruption measures. So, one of the areas that could help USAID is if there was stronger capacity within missions to be able to provide that type of knowledge and help. I would just urge you to make that part of your priority selections to strengthen the State Department's ability to deal with anti-corruption.

Ambassador COLEMAN. Thank you, Senator. If confirmed, I will absolutely work with my State Department colleagues on that.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you. Mr. Lu, I want to talk about a serious issue we have had at the United Nations. We have United Nations peacekeepers. As part of the way that the administratives are handled, there are a lot of countries that lobby to become peacekeepers, and yet we have seen sexual exploitations too often in regard to peacekeepers. So, I want to get your commitment and your response to how you will use your position at the United Nations to make sure that we protect the safety of the people on which the United Nations is operating with peacekeepers, and that safety will be the top concern, not just the politics of which countries are selected for peacekeeping.

Mr. LU. Senator, thank you for that question. The United States has a zero-tolerance policy when it comes to sexual exploitation and abuse. There have been improvements, I understand, in recent years under the Secretary-General's leadership in terms of preventing sexual exploitation and abuse, increasing transparency of allegations, suspending troops engaged in wrongdoing, often repatriating them and sometimes even withholding payments. All of that being said, far more needs to be done, and the progress that has been made in recent years, including under Ambassador Coleman's leadership, happens when the U.S. is actively engaged in the United Nations. So, you have my commitment, Senator, that if confirmed, this will be a top priority of mine, and I know it is of Ambassador Thomas-Greenfield as well.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you. Ambassador Gifford, I want to ask you about diplomatic immunity. It is something that is absolutely essential for diplomats to be able to carry out their responsibilities, but we know the pressure that develops particularly when there is a particular incident. So how do you intend to provide guidance in regards to U.S. position globally on defending diplomatic immunity?

Ambassador GIFFORD. Well, I think—thank you for the question, Senator, and it is—it is critically important. I think one of the roles of the chief of protocol here is understanding that when issues of diplomatic immunity arise, and they will inevitably arise, that we have to manage what could become the significant frictions in a bilateral relationship. And how do you do that? This is so much, for me, about communication, that we are not policymakers in the chief of protocol, if I am confirmed. So, what I think needs to be prioritized is heightened communication between whatever Bureau, understanding the issue that has come up and dealing with it collectively. And I think in an issue like these involving incredibly-sensitive issues, that has got to be prioritized above and beyond all else.

Senator CARDIN. Senator Markey?

Senator MARKEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, very much. Ms. Satterfield, your position at the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs will allow you to establish import restrictions on cultural goods from foreign countries through the authorization of memorandums of understanding. Cultural property MOUs have the power to impact the cultural heritage of ethnic and religious minority populations, which the United States should aim to protect. If confirmed, will you urge the administration to appoint an advocate for religious and ethnic minorities as a public representative to the Cultural Property Advisory Committee to ensure that minority populations are properly represented?

Ambassador COLEMAN. Thank you, Senator. ECA is very proud of the work of the Cultural Heritage Center to protect and preserve global heritage. It is critically-important work, as you said. ECA can and should play a strong role, particularly in cooperating with law enforcement to prevent the financing of transnational terrorism through looting and trafficking of antiquities. If I am confirmed, I look forward to working with Congress, other parts of the Department, and private entities, particularly through the advisory committee, to ensure a diversity of perspective when continuing the important work as it was laid out originally by Congress.

Senator MARKEY. Okay. Thank you. Ms. Coleman, the United Nations Development Program and the World Health Organization recently reported that if low-income countries had similar COVID-19 vaccination rates as high-income countries, they could have added $38 billion to their collective GDPs in 2021. Through the G7, we have announced ambitious plans to share 1 billion COVID-19 vaccine doses with low-income countries. Global vaccine inequity still remains a very serious challenge. With the rise of the Delta variant, addressing the vaccine equity issues are more urgent than ever. If confirmed, will you commit to prioritizing the push for increased vaccine manufacturing and equitable vaccine distribution in your role at USAID?

Ambassador COLEMAN. Thank you, Senator. Absolutely. There is perhaps no greater challenge today than the global pandemic and its secondary effects, and how it is ravaging countries around the world. And I would like to thank this committee and Congress for its generosity on providing the 500 million vaccines and the $4 billion to Gavi. So, it is incredibly important to get the rest of the world vaccinated, and I echo President Biden's comment to be—that the United States should be the arsenal of vaccination, and I will do everything I can to make that happen.

Senator MARKEY. Thank you. And, Mr. Lu, climate change is an existential threat that continues to harm the quality of life for people all around the world. For that reason, our efforts to combat climate change must be closely aligned with efforts playing out in multilateral institutions like the United Nations. We also have to oversee any multilateral commitments to ensure they come to actionable fruition. How can we work to reform the U.N. system to ensure that climate commitments are monitored and measured so that they don't simply remain empty statements or words?

Mr. LU. Senator, thank you for that question. I certainly share your concerns. The Biden administration believes that we can be the most effective in multilateral organizations when we actively participate in them, and we have the greatest credibility in these organizations when we pay our dues in full and on time, so being an active player gives us that leverage. Climate change, in particular, is an important policy issue, as you well know, not only to the President, but to Ambassador Thomas-Greenfield. This is an issue that she has raised in the U.N. Security Council, but it is, frankly, an issue that cuts across so many different parts of the multilateral system. So, if confirmed to this position, I will use my position in terms of managing programs to ensure that those that relate to climate change are effectively managed and well funded.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you so much. And, Mr. Gifford, in your role, you are welcoming the rest of the world to the State Department, to the White House. We have gone through a turbulent time over a 4-year period, and now we are trying to re-stabilize all of our relationships. Could you just step back for a second and just lay out why you think that is important that we respect each nation in the world and that we treat them in a way that ensures ultimately that we will be able to elicit from them the kind of response the United States is looking for on policy issues all across the spectrum?

Ambassador GIFFORD. Thank you, Senator. This is, again, something very near and dear to my heart. There are two words over—during the time that I have been preparing for this hearing and whatnot that keep coming up, and those two words are “dignity” and “respect.” And I pledge to you that when I think about this job, when I think about how we interact with world leaders and partners—partner countries around the world, I will lead with dignity and respect. And I think that the soft power of diplomacy cannot be overstated, and, as you mentioned, you are the first hand that folks shake when they are walking down from their plane at Andrews or at Dulles or whatever it may be. And I think as Senator Hagerty said in his introduction that we create the environment conducive to diplomacy. And as far as I am concerned, that is the way you create that environment in which diplomacy can thrive. You do that with dignity and respect.

Senator MARKEY. Thank you. Thank you, and thank each and every one of you for your willingness to serve. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator CARDIN. Senator Hagerty?

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you, Chairman Cardin. I wanted to just follow up with a few additional questions. You are very kind to let me do that. First, if I could turn to you, Ms. Satterfield. It is wonderful to see you here. In your opening testimony, you commented about the global competition for influence that we find ourselves in with authorization countries, such as China and Russia. I would like to compliment your Department on the wonderful work that they have done with human exchanges, particularly the Fulbright Program and other exchange programs, that I have seen firsthand have an enormous impact. I would also like to make a comment, that there is an alumni network there that I see as immensely valuable, and I would look forward to working with you to driving value from that alumni network, because I think it could make a real difference for the United States’ interests around the globe.

Another thing you mentioned, and I compliment you for your operational experience. You talked about implementing standards and metrics to basically be a good steward of U.S. taxpayer dollars. As you look at this program and take a data-driven approach to how you measure and evaluate what happens, could you talk a bit about how you might use that approach to evaluate how we are doing versus China and Russia, two authoritarian countries that are trying to exert their influence, when you look at our programs relative to what they are doing?

Ms. SATTERFIELD. Thank you, senator. As it relates to measurement and evaluation, it is a critically-important point and one that the Bureau has been working very hard to come up with a way to have parity across the various programs. They are also different, and that is a good thing. We want a variety of opportunity because what works in one community might not work in another, but that has proven to be challenging for M&E. And the Bureau has done a really wonderful job, in my opinion, based on the information that I have received in preparing for this hearing, to create a program that is a new framework that will ECA to have more data at its fingertips so that we can make good data-driven decisions. And that will be rolled out Bureau-wide at the end of next year.

Senator HAGERTY. As a businessperson, I have always focused on competition. I think we should acknowledge what our competition is and measure our performance according to that competition, so I encourage you to continue to proceed in that fashion. Thank you.

Ms. SATTERFIELD. Thank you, Senator.

Senator HAGERTY. Mr. Lu, if I could turn to you for a moment. I would like to talk with you about the Human Rights Council. The Biden administration has announced its intent to run for a seat on the Council this fall, and Secretary of State Blinken has also acknowledged that the Council is flawed, and he has promised to seek reform. In fact, in 2011, the Obama administration stated that the mandatory review of the Council failed to yield even minimally positive results. So, Mr. Lu, if you are confirmed, I would like to understand the type of reforms that you would like to seek as you look at improving the United Nations Human Rights Council.

Mr. LU. Thank you, Senator Hagerty. I agree, the United Nations Human Rights Council is a flawed organization, but we also need to recognize the important work that it has done in terms of shining a spotlight on abuses in Syria, Iran, North Korea, its promotion of women, LGBTQ individuals, but it has a persistent anti-Israel bias based on a permanent agenda item at its meetings. The Biden administration believes, as I said to Senator Markey, that the best way to reform these organizations is by engaging with them, and that is what we intend to do. It is also a flawed organization because of the membership. We have some of the most egregious human rights abusers who are members of the Human Rights Council.

When Ambassador Thomas-Greenfield has addressed this issue, she said, yes, it is uncomfortable sitting side by side with these people, but it is as uncomfortable for them to be sitting next to us and for us to be calling them out. And I understand that the record has shown that when the U.S. actively engaged in the Human Rights Council, that the number of anti-Israel resolutions decreases, but you are 100-percent right, this will be a challenge.

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank all of our nominees today for their appearance. Thank you.

Senator CARDIN. Let me again thank all of our witnesses for—nominees for your testimony today and, again, your willingness to serve.

The committee record will remain open through Thursday for questions for the record, and we would ask that you respond to those questions as promptly as possible. We know that we have a backlog in the nomination process and confirmation process, so your cooperation will be deeply appreciated.

[The information referred to follows:]

Senator CARDIN. And once again, we thank you very much for your willingness to serve.

With that, the committee will stand adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 11:25 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

SUBMITTED TO HON. RUFUS GIFFORD BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Morale in the Office of the Chief of Protocol

Question. Leadership and morale-building are important parts of any management position within the State Department. If confirmed, how would you lead the Office of the Chief of Protocol? What specific steps would you take to improve morale?

Answer. There is nothing more important to me than the well-being of my team. Morale of our employees is also directly related to recruitment and retention. Drawing upon my experiences as the former ambassador to Denmark and from the private sector, leadership must model tenets that align mission goals with integrity, professionalism, and transparency.

If confirmed, I plan to consult current leadership to understand where the Office of the Chief of Protocol has come from and where it still needs to go. I will make it clear that any type of partisan political influence or bias is unacceptable. I will assess personnel management and the current staffing situation. I will determine whether we need to address additional resource requirements. Finally, I will promote a collaborative environment where all of us can gel as a team and execute programs in a seamless fashion.

There is no doubt that improving and maintaining morale will be difficult during the pandemic. However, I will ensure that we fully engage within the Department of State's "Future of Work" policy to build a more mobile and agile workforce, and direct appropriate resources for our office space and technology needs. These tools and resilience building resources will help me lead towards great morale.

J1 Programs

Question. J1 programs are some of the most effective and cost efficient public diplomacy programs the United States has. However, as you know, the COVID-19 pandemic, which brought on severe visa processing delays and challenges has deeply negatively impacted not only U.S. public diplomacy efforts but also small businesses, schools, and families across the United States who rely on these programs.

- The backlog of Summer Work Travel visas negatively impacted many small businesses in New Jersey and other tourist destinations. How will you, alongside the Bureau of Consular Affairs, work to utilize technology and security to prevent such a backlog in the future? Do you believe there is more can we be doing? Do you have the resources you need to do so?

Answer. I recognize the important contributions that exchange visitors make to New Jersey businesses, and the positive impact they have on states and communities across the nation. The COVID-19 pandemic continues to severely affect consular operations at our embassies and consulates. I am informed that as the global situation continues to evolve, the Department is seeking ways to process visa applications efficiently around the world, consistent with both guidance from health authorities and with the U.S. travel restrictions currently in place. I understand ECA and Consular Affairs continue to work together on these issues, and I will continue that engagement and communication if confirmed.

Question. Teacher exchange programs were also severely impacted by a backlog of visa processing and other challenges. Many K-12 classrooms are reliant upon these educational exchange programs. Will you commit to working to get the program back to pre-pandemic levels and look to scaling up these programs in the future?

Answer. Yes. I recognize the important contributions the BridgeUSA Teacher program makes to K-12 classrooms. The Department is committed to ensuring as many visa applicants can be interviewed as health restrictions allow and has provided updates to sponsoring organizations to advise them on operational changes. If confirmed, I will continue to work with our consular colleagues and keep teacher category sponsors and prospective teacher participants informed.

Meridian Recusal

Question. If confirmed, do you pledge to recuse yourself from any funding or contracting decisions related to your previous employer, Meridian International Center?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, per my ethics agreement with the Department of State and the Office of Government Ethics, I would not participate in funding or contracting decisions related to Meridian International Center.

Au Pair Program

Question. Recently, several U.S. states have sought to regulate the au pair programs, despite the fact that it is a federal program. This has been accomplished in at least one state, to fairly disastrous effect for au pair families and participants there. In response, the Department of State has attempted to unify the program and clarify that federal au pair regulations preempt state and local laws. This clarifying regulation is essential to the program's continued viability. If confirmed, will you commit to supporting this clarifying regulation?

Answer. The Au Pair program has for many years been an effective public diplomacy program, fostering the mutual understanding between people of the United States and other countries through in-person exchanges.

The nature of the Au Pair program, fostering such exchange by placing young people in American homes and caring for young children, makes it unique and special. I am committed to ensuring the health, safety, and welfare of all participants.

I am aware there is an effort underway to strengthen the Au Pair program through regulations, and, if confirmed, I look forward to working through that process with stakeholders and keeping Congress informed.

Question. The issue of undue influence by foreign countries—particularly China—has become a central U.S. foreign policy issue in recent years. In addition to increased reporting by think tanks, the State Department has engaged directly with U.S. universities on these matters.

- If confirmed, do you plan to continue State Department engagement with the educational community on these issues?

Answer. Yes. A clear understanding of the organizations and entities that Beijing uses to attempt to undermine U.S. policy is important. Of particular concern are activities that lack transparency and attempt to hide or downplay their affiliations and objectives. If confirmed, I would continue to work with State Department officials promoting transparency on this topic so that the educational community can make more informed decisions. For example, I understand that ECA issued an updated public guidance directive to Exchange Visitor Program (BridgeUSA) sponsors on Confucius Institutes (CI) in November 2020. The objective of this Guidance Directive was to provide sponsors more clarity regarding the possible regulatory violations presented in some CI operations so they can make informed choices about sponsoring exchange visitors coming on programs in support of CIs. I understand that this clarity of CI operations is one of several reasons for why a growing number of universities have decided to end their Confucius Institute affiliations.

Question. The issue of undue influence by foreign countries—particularly China—has become a central U.S. foreign policy issue in recent years. In addition to increased reporting by think tanks, the State Department has engaged directly with U.S. universities on these matters.

- If confirmed, what specific steps will you take to highlight the risks of undue influence by foreign governments and other actors in U.S. universities and colleges?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to support the Department’s outreach work with interagency partners to increase transparency of foreign government actions and promote sharing of best practices so U.S. colleges and universities are well informed and can protect themselves and their students from undue foreign influence.

Question. I introduced legislation designed to enhance State Department and congressional oversight of Mutual Educational and Cultural Exchange Act (MECEA) programs with the People’s Republic of China (PRC).

- Does the Biden administration plan to reinstate these programs in the future?

Answer. If confirmed, I would support the Secretary’s re-examination of the decision to terminate approval of the MECEA Section 108a programs operated by China, with vigilance to potential counterintelligence and propaganda risks.

Question. If so, and if confirmed, do you commit to consulting with Congress in advance of making such a decision?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support the Secretary’s goal of working with this committee and Congress to ensure this administration meets the China challenge. As I committed at my nominations hearing, I will engage in meaningful consultation with Congress while policies are being developed.

Question. How should the Department exercise greater scrutiny of these programs given potential counterintelligence risks and their use as propaganda tools for the Chinese Communist Party?

Answer. If confirmed, I would support the Secretary’s re-examination of the decision to terminate approval of the MECEA Section 108a programs operated by China, with vigilance to potential counterintelligence and propaganda risks.

Question. The United States has suspended permission of any PRC national on an “F” or “J” visa to study or conduct research in the United States where the individual’s academic or research activities are likely to support a PRC entity implement or supporting the Chinese Communist Party’s (CCP) “military-civil fusion” strategy. This policy prevents U.S. research and technological innovation from falling into the hands of our most serious military competitor. Do you commit to retaining this policy?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support the Secretary’s continuous review to ensure our policies protect the integrity of U.S. research and innovation along with our academic and research institutions.

Question. What are your views on current measures in place to apply sufficient scrutiny to donations and contracts between U.S. universities and foreign entities?

Answer. I am supportive of measures to ensure that donations and contracts between U.S. universities and foreign entities benefit the United States and are not subject to undue foreign influence. If confirmed, I will encourage efforts to educate and inform educational institutions about their possible exposure to undue foreign influence through such arrangements.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO LEE SATTERFIELD BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Effect of the COVID–19 Pandemic

Question. The pandemic significantly hampered the normal operation of most ECA-administered international exchanges, with many participants returning home to the U.S. and foreign participants having to be repatriated to their home countries before their programs were complete. ECA is now conducting exchange activity online in a virtual format as it proves feasible to do so.

- What are the lessons learned from ECA’s pivot to virtual during the pandemic?

Answer. When the COVID–19 pandemic temporarily halted most USG-funded in-person exchanges, ECA’s innovation and flexible management of international exchanges powered a transition to new strategies, sustaining advancement of foreign policy objectives and achieving lasting benefits even amid the pandemic. Most ECA programs pivoted rapidly to virtual and hybrid models providing, or virtually replicating, the in-person exchange experience. This pivot was possible because ECA could leverage the relationships with stakeholders that were developed with previous in-person exchanges. ECA was also able to reach new audiences with some innovative virtual elements and will look to continue some of those elements after the pandemic recedes.

In addition, with careful management by ECA staff and the monitoring and health protocols in place at U.S. host campuses, many foreign Fulbright participants were able to remain at their U.S. host colleges and universities and new foreign Fulbrighters and other academic exchange participants were able to participate in in-person programs, thanks to the flexibility and resilience of U.S. higher education institutions. As recognized by the Inspector's General review of ECA's response to the pandemic, the experience showed the strength of ECA's program management practices, as well as the high level of commitment and capacity by U.S. higher education to safely host and educate students.

I understand ECA is evaluating how it can continue to use virtual engagement or hybrid models to expand the impact of exchange programs and help the Bureau reach new audiences. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Congress and other stakeholders to apply the lessons learned during the pandemic.

American Spaces

Question. There are more than 600 American Spaces around the world, which serve as virtual and in-person platforms to engage foreign nationals through a wide variety of U.S. State Department-sponsored programs and resources on important topics such as studying in the U.S., English language learning, and U.S. culture. This program, managed by the Office of American Spaces, moved to the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs in May of 2019.

- How have American Spaces (or the American Spaces program) furthered U.S. foreign policy goals under the ECA Bureau?

Answer. Through American Spaces, the U.S. Government is present in more than 610 programming venues worldwide, with over 14 million people participating in virtual programs in FY 2020. Since the Office of American Spaces joined the ECA bureau in 2019, the Department has been able to enhance its work in public diplomacy and integrate ECA programming in the areas of English language teaching, EducationUSA advising, alumni engagement, cultural programs, and sharing information about the United States to further U.S. foreign policy goals. As a result of American Spaces and the Regional Public Engagement Specialist (REPS) Foreign Service corps coming under ECA, the Bureau has also fostered increased cooperation between REPS and Regional English Language Officers, as well as the EducationUSA advising program, to achieve mission and Department goals.

Visa Processing

Question. One of the issues that has been taking up much of my staff's time is the delay our constituents are facing in being able to reunited with family overseas or having family members visit them. Similarly, many businesses in New Jersey rely on seasonal workers and exchange visitors from all over the world. The Alliance for International Exchange is reporting a 75% decrease overall in visa processing for education and cultural exchange programs, which of course has major economic consequences.

- Can you share how you will address these capacity limitations?

Answer. I recognize the important contributions that exchange visitors make to New Jersey businesses, and the positive impact they have on states and communities across the nation. The COVID-19 pandemic continues to severely affect consular operations at our embassies and consulates. The Department is committed to ensuring as many visa applicants can be interviewed as health restrictions allow, and has provided updates to sponsoring organizations to advise them on operational changes. I understand ECA and Consular Affairs continue to work together on these issues, and I will continue that engagement and communication if confirmed.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. ISOBEL COLEMAN BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Global Health

Question. Should the United States engage in highly risky public health research—such as gain-of-function research—in cooperation with countries that do not have adequate biosecurity standards, that have violated or failed to uphold the International Health Regulations, or where the United States cannot certify that such country is in compliance with the Biological Weapons Convention?

Answer. I understand that USAID does not fund Gain of Function Research, and that USAID does not fund work anywhere in the world that would make viruses more lethal or transmissible in humans.

Question. If confirmed, will you ensure USAID's research and development grants are fully vetted and do not flow to partners or sub-grantees engaged in such research?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to ensure that USAID funds do not support gain-of-function research, i.e. research that makes a virus more transmissible or pathogenic, through either the prime or subpartners.

Question. The budget proposes a substantial increase for Family Planning and Reproductive Health (FP/RH), through both bilateral aid programs and contributions to the U.N. Population Fund. If confirmed, how will you ensure USAID compliance with current law, which prohibits the use of U.S. foreign assistance to perform or promote abortion, support involuntary sterilizations, or lobby for or against the legalization of abortion overseas?

Answer. If confirmed, I will follow the law and ensure compliance with all applicable laws and regulations, including those related to family planning and abortion.

The administration takes seriously the legislative requirements related to voluntarism and informed choice in family planning activities and those related to abortion. I understand that the Agency has worked for decades to ensure compliance with all applicable laws, including the Helms and Siljander amendments.

It is important that USAID continue to work closely with field missions and implementing partners to ensure awareness of statutory and policy requirements applicable to their programs.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to provide to this committee a complete, detailed spend plan for the funds received through the American Rescue Plan (ARP) for the international COVID-19 response, to include all aspects of the response, from vaccine sharing to second order impacts?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will ensure compliance with Congressionally-mandated reporting on COVID funding, including obligations and disbursements by operating unit, that the State Department and USAID submit every 60 days and I commit to regular briefings and consultations with the committee on the use of funds, which I understand is guided by the U.S. COVID-19 Global Response and Recovery Plan.

Question. How would you assess the performance of COVAX to date?

Answer. COVAX has performed as well as could be expected in light of ongoing constraints to the global vaccine supply. It is my understanding that while COVAX is below its original delivery projections, as a result of shortfalls in global vaccine production and disruption to its planned supplies, actions such as the G7 vaccine commitment to finance and provide more than two billion doses from the United States and G7 partners by the end of 2022 are critical to enabling the success of COVAX. If confirmed, I will support efforts to expand the availability of safe and effective vaccines globally to bring this pandemic to an end.

Question. How can USAID ensure that COVAX is working expeditiously to get shots in arms while guarding against waste, fraud, and abuse?

Answer. I have learned that USAID's $4 billion in contributions to Gavi/COVAX in 2021 were provided in tranches, which allowed USAID to ensure Gavi/COVAX obtained the funding needed from other donors to scale up global vaccine access, while closely monitoring COVAX's performance. USAID also participates in Gavi's Audit and Finance Committee, and, as a part of that, regularly reviews the risks involved in procuring and delivering COVID-19 vaccines. It is my understanding that Gavi/COVAX has established multiple methods for receiving reports of fraud, and all allegations are handled by Gavi's SAID to strengthen and reinforce existing systems related to fraud awareness and reporting to mitigate these threats to multi-lateral and bilateral vaccine campaigns.

Question. How can USAID ensure that U.S. financial contributions to COVAX are not used to underwrite the purchase and distribution of substandard Chinese COVID-19 vaccines, particularly following the recent announcement that COVAX would, in fact, begin making major purchases of Chinese vaccines?

Answer. I understand that the generous U.S. contribution to COVAX was not used to purchase vaccines made in China, and that the full U.S.-provided $4 billion had been allocated by COVAX prior to the facility's decision to purchase Sinopharm and Sinovac. I am not aware of any additional U.S. contributions planned for COVAX at this time. If confirmed, I will join my colleagues in continuing to forcefully raise concerns about procurement of lower-efficacy vaccines, and to urge the People's Republic of China to pick up its fair share of the global burden on vaccine access.

Question. Under what circumstances would U.S. bilateral vaccine contributions be more appropriate than contributions via COVAX?

Answer. I believe that the U.S. Government (USG) is most effective when both bilateral and multilateral efforts are able to support responsible and accountable partners. Multilateral funding allows the USG to leverage the financial commitments, technical expertise, and diplomatic engagement of many other partners, often achieving economies of scale and burden-sharing with other donors. Bilateral funding enables USAID field teams and ongoing local assistance efforts to address priorities that may not be effectively or efficiently covered through multilateral channels.

Humanitarian Assistance

Question. The U.N.'s Global Humanitarian Appeal of $36.1 billion for 2021 is the largest in history. What can USAID do to enhance the efficiency and effectiveness of U.S. humanitarian assistance, so we can spread our aid dollars farther, while also leveraging other donor support to meet historic humanitarian needs?

Answer. With humanitarian needs throughout the world at an all time-high, USAID's ability to reach people in need and improve the efficiency of our programs is of utmost importance. If confirmed, I will continue to emphasize the importance of USAID to be responsible stewards of American taxpayers' dollars. That's why I believe that measuring and analyzing results—and adapting and innovating when programs fall short—is part of the day-to-day management of USAID's operations, including humanitarian assistance programs. I will also ensure, if confirmed, that USAID engages with other donors to leverage our assistance and help as many people in need.

Question. The Office of Management and Budget (OMB) has released a memo which, among other things, directs the new OMB Made in America Office to “review how best to ensure agency compliance with cargo preference requirements to maximize the utilization of U.S.-flag vessels, in excess of any applicable statutory minimum, to the greatest extent practicable.” This is likely to increase pressure upon USAID to exceed existing cargo preference requirements for food aid under the Food for Peace Act, notwithstanding the fact that the Government Accountability Office (GAO) repeatedly has found that such requirements significantly increase the cost of food aid while failing to advance the purposes of the Cargo Preference Act of 1954.

- Do you agree that U.S. cargo preference requirements for food aid have outlived their statutory purpose?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to working with Congress to make USAID's programming to combat rising food insecurity and build the resilience of vulnerable communities as effective and efficient as possible. Each of the food assistance modalities—U.S. in-kind food, locally and regionally procured food, and cash-based programming—should complement the others in addressing food insecurity efficiently and effectively. At this time of unprecedented global humanitarian need, USAID's ability to reach hungry people and improve the efficiency of our programs is of utmost importance. Cargo preference requirements increase the cost of programming U.S. in-kind commodities in humanitarian programs. If confirmed, I will look closely at every opportunity to stretch our food aid as far as possible.

Question. In your view, how would an increase of cargo preference requirements impact the ability of USAID to meet historic levels of need for food aid?

Answer. At a time of unprecedented humanitarian need globally, an increase in cargo preference would compromise USAID's ability to reach hungry people, as well as our ability to reduce logistical and cost efficiency in our programs. USAID pays almost 50 percent more per metric ton to ship commodities on U.S.-flag vessels than foreign-flag vessels. An increase in cargo preference requirements would directly result in increased transportation costs for food assistance programs, which would reduce the amount of resources USAID can dedicate to purchasing commodities and reaching beneficiaries with life-saving assistance.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to working with OMB to mitigate the deleterious impact of U.S. cargo preference requirements on food aid?

Answer. I am committed to working with Congress and the interagency, including OMB, to make USAID's food assistance programming as effective and efficient as possible. The COVID-19 pandemic and mitigation measures have compounded the effects of climate-related disasters and complex emergencies, creating unprecedented global humanitarian needs.

For example, an estimated 23 million additional people will require emergency food assistance compared to 2019. Each food assistance modality (U.S. in-kind food, locally and regionally procured food, and cash-based programming) is critical to USAID's ability to respond appropriately to each crisis.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to working with Congress to reform U.S. international food aid programs and bolster the Global Food Security Strategy in a manner that saves lives, supports early recovery, stimulates agriculture-led economic growth, and ultimately promotes self-reliance?

Answer. Yes. The pandemic has exacerbated food insecurity and malnutrition worldwide, with the most vulnerable bearing the brunt of its impact. I understand that Feed the Future is leveraging its existing global portfolio to respond to the crisis in the following ways: (1) engaging governments on trade and inclusive economic growth policies; (2) engaging government and private sector partners to safeguard and increase access to nutritious food; (3) working with small and medium sized enterprises across the food system and unlocking private sector funds to accelerate economic recovery, growth and employment; (4) transitioning households and communities off of assistance through economic inclusion models; and (5) supporting governments to create and strengthen their existing social protection systems, including shock-responsive safety nets and risk financing. It will be critical to further leverage Feed the Future as countries rebuild economically in the long wake of the pandemic, and I understand that USAID is currently looking at ways to do this.

Power Africa

Question. In the face of growing Chinese influence and investment, and in the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic, there arguably has never been a more important time to advance U.S. strategic programs to reduce energy poverty, support transformative energy development, and stimulate economic recovery in Sub-Saharan Africa. Yet, the President's FY 2022 budget request proposes to reduce by 26 percent funding for one of the most important instruments the USG has in its arsenal to accomplish these goals—Power Africa—while simultaneously imposing carbon caps and renewable energy mandates that inevitably will push developing economies in sub-Saharan Africa closer to China.

- Should reducing energy poverty in sub-Saharan Africa be a priority for USAID?

Answer. Absolutely. It is my understanding that Power Africa is well positioned to address energy poverty, bolster human development, and mitigate climate change impacts through private sector-led energy development that delivers reliable, uninterrupted energy and inclusive, catalytic and sustainable economic growth. I understand that Power Africa funds will promote mutual economic prosperity between the US and African partners, as well as promote two-way trade and investment to counter malign influences by advancing universal energy access through 30,000 milliwatts in new clean energy generation and connecting 60 million homes and businesses to electricity by 2030.

Question. If so, how can that reasonably be accomplished while the administration redirects funding for Power Africa to undefined climate change objectives and abandons the bipartisan, bicameral agreement on an "all-of-the-above" approach under the historic Electrify Africa Act?

Answer. It is my understanding that Power Africa is expected to play a leading role in the administration's climate change agenda while maintaining its focus on addressing energy poverty in Africa. If confirmed, I look forward to discussing how we can continue to advance Power Africa's goals and expand energy development in Africa.

Venezuela

Question. The authoritarian regime in Cuba reportedly has developed its own COVID-19 vaccine.

- If confirmed, will you commit to ensuring that USAID will not provide any direct or indirect support to a COVID-19 vaccination campaign in which the Cuban state-owned vaccine is used?

Answer. It is my understanding that USAID will only support procurement and delivery of vaccines that meet rigorous quality standards, are safe and efficacious, and have been approved or authorized for emergency use by a stringent regulatory authority, such as the U.S. FDA or the World Health Organization. I understand that USAID has not provided, and has no plans to provide, direct or indirect support to a COVID-19 vaccination campaign in which any Cuban vaccine is used. Cuba has not published its trial data for its vaccines, nor has the vaccine received an emergency use listing or authorization from the World Health Organization.

Question. Will you also commit to ensuring that USAID will not provide direct or indirect support to a vaccination campaign in Venezuela that is non-transparent and discriminatory?

Answer. I understand that USAID has no plans at this time to provide direct or indirect support to a COVID-19 vaccination campaign in Venezuela, where current vaccination efforts are non-transparent and discriminatory. Venezuela is a self-financing participant in COVAX, which means that it does not receive donor-supported vaccines or other assistance. USAID would only provide COVID-19 vaccination support if Venezuela established a credible, impartial, and transparent national vaccination plan, implemented in partnership with, or under the auspices of, international partners.

Question. If confirmed, how will you ensure that USAID's support for the World Food Program in Venezuela will not strengthen the ability of the Maduro regime to exert control over the Venezuelan people?

Answer. USAID support for the U.N. World Food Program (WFP) in Venezuela is intended to address the emergency food needs of vulnerable Venezuelan children impacted by the crisis. It is my understanding that WFP's programs are operationally independent from any Maduro regime programs and hence, will not strengthen the Maduro regime. I understand that WFP is maintaining its own independent supply chains and food distributions and WFP has indicated no instance of interference by the Maduro regime or attempt by the Maduro regime to gain reputational benefits during this pilot food assistance program.

Afghanistan

Question. While the Department works to inject hundreds of millions in foreign aid into Afghanistan—a reflection of its purported desire to recalibrate the bilateral relationship by investing more in development and assistance lines of effort—USAID OIG plans to scale back its presence in-country, reducing staffing and closing its sub-office in Kabul. All of this is occurring as the Taliban continues to make rapid advances on the ground. According to open source reporting, the U.S. intelligence community assesses that the Government in Kabul may fall in as little as six-to-twelve months after the U.S. and NATO military withdrawal, potentially triggering a humanitarian and security crisis.

- In light of the deteriorating security climate, how can USAID sustain the development gains made in Afghanistan over the past 20 years, particularly as pertains to the hard earned rights of women and minorities?
- As we look to recalibrate our bilateral relationship with Afghanistan, what more can be done to support health, education, empowerment of women and girls, and government transparency?
- How can USAID conduct effective oversight of U.S. foreign assistance programs in Afghanistan, given its diminished presence on the ground?

Answer. With support from the United States Government, the Government and people of Afghanistan—particularly women and girls—have made enormous gains over the last 20 years. Afghans are healthier, better educated, more prosperous, and enjoy greater freedoms than two decades ago. However, we must acknowledge that women and development gains are now under significantly increasing threats and the security environment is deteriorating. I understand that USAID's gender program in Afghanistan is robust and broad, with programming that extends across the entire country and includes education and political and economic participation. I understand that USAID intends to continue to work with women leaders, the private sector, and civil society organizations to adjust programs and approaches in order to continue supporting the rights and safety of women and girls. If confirmed, I will work with my colleagues across government to ensure that USAID is doing everything it can to protect the safety of our local partners and the brave civil society leaders who continue to strive for a better life.

I understand that USAID provides on-going and strategic program oversight despite security restrictions in Afghanistan, and that monitoring and oversight measures taken in Afghanistan include: vetting of implementing partners (IPs), multi-tiered monitoring efforts, and financial controls. I also understand that USAID will continue to use third-party monitoring to provide programmatic oversight where our partners and programs operate. These third-party monitors are local to each region and have been capable of accessing USAID programs across the country. If the security environment affects USAID partners' and programs' ability to operate, third-party monitoring efforts will correspondingly adjust.

West Bank & Gaza

Question. Since January 2021, the Biden administration has re-established relations with the Palestinian Authority (PA) and announced nearly $360 million in planned U.S. assistance. This move has occurred despite the lack of progress in PA reforms, including its toxic so-called "pay to slay program." If confirmed, will you commit to working with this committee to ensure that any U.S. assistance for "reconstruction" efforts in Gaza are allocated in a manner that is consistent with U.S. national security interests and does not in any way benefit Hamas, politically or otherwise?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will work with this committee to allocate USAID's humanitarian and development assistance in a manner that is consistent with U.S. national security interests. I understand that the Department of State and the USAID Mission in the West Bank and Gaza (WBG) have a robust, 15-year-old, partner vetting process to mitigate the risk that U.S. Government resources could inadvertently support Hamas or other terrorist groups. I also understand that USAID implementing partners in the WBG have aggressive risk-mitigation systems in place aimed at ensuring U.S. taxpayer-funded assistance is reaching those for whom it is intended and that assistance is closely coordinated with the Government of Israel, who approves all materials that enter Gaza. If confirmed, I will abide by all legislation, including the Taylor Force Act, that governs how assistance can be deployed in the WBG.

Syria

Question. There is no replacement for cross-border mechanisms to deliver humanitarian assistance in Syria, particularly as cross-line assistance is costly, ineffective, and prone to manipulation. If confirmed, how will you ensure that U.S. assistance is not routed through Damascus and is instead delivered directly to those in need?

Answer. Rising humanitarian needs and an increasingly complex operating environment continue to pose significant challenges for humanitarian actors throughout Syria who continue to reach the most vulnerable at great risk to themselves. The July 9 reauthorization of cross-border assistance through UNSC Resolution 2585 provided crucial relief for the Syrian people, but it does not completely fill the vast needs on the ground. That is why it is vital for the United States to continue to advocate for unimpeded humanitarian access through all possible means—including continued authorization and expansion of U.N. cross-border access and unhindered cross-line assistance. I understand that no U.S. assistance is routed through the Syrian Arab Republic Government. I also understand that all USAID humanitarian assistance is implemented through independent humanitarian organizations—such as U.N. agencies and NGOs—to reach those most in need in line with humanitarian principles.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. ISOBEL COLEMAN BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Policy Framework

Question. Administrator Power, in her confirmation hearing, emphasized that she would place special emphasis on four core challenges: the COVID-19 pandemic, climate change, conflict and state collapse, and democratic backsliding. The previous administrator, Mark Green, had sought to deemphasize such global priorities and focus on country-specific challenges in response to some complaints of "initiative fatigue" due to what some described as the proliferation of competing priorities and presidential initiatives during the Obama administration. The USAID Policy Framework, issued in 2019, reflects Administrator Green's country-tailored approach and focuses on the broad goal of “ending the need for foreign assistance” by promoting self-reliance among aid recipients.

- As you work to develop the next Policy Framework, what do you view as the chief cross-cutting themes that are likely to emerge? Or do you agree with Ambassador Green that a country-by-country focus makes more sense?
- How do you see Administrator Power’s four big challenges as fitting into USAID’s next Policy Framework, particularly as they relate to other priorities set by Congress in recent years, such as basic education and food security?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to consulting with the Administrator Power, interagency colleagues, Congress and external stakeholders to develop an updated Policy Framework, if required. In my view, an emphasis on global priorities that meet the needs of the moment, evidence-based development practice and attention to country needs and regional trends are important and consistent with one another.

Human Rights

Question. A key priority for me is ensuring that supporting democracy and promoting human rights is at the forefront of our foreign policy. But as a lethal pandemic, economic and physical insecurity, and violent conflict ravaged the world in 2020, democracy and human rights defenders sustained heavy losses in their struggle against authoritarian regimes, shifting the international balance in favor of tyranny.

- What more can we do to further these efforts with our European partners?
- How can we better work within the OSCE to address these issues?

Answer. I agree that a unified transatlantic alliance that acts from common principles of human rights protection and rule of law is the strongest bulwark against authoritarianism. I understand that USAID engages frequently with E.U. officials to seek to align policy and to increase burden sharing on key issues such as the COVID-19 global response, human rights, and democracy and governance. For example, I understand that two of USAID’s flagship civil society programs are now leveraging significant funding from the U.K. Foreign Commonwealth Office and the European Union Directorate-General for Neighbourhood and Enlargement Negotiations. If confirmed, I look forward to exploring new opportunities to expand upon our partnership with our European partners to support civil society and democracy across Europe and Eurasia. The E.U.’s new seven-year budget articulates a commitment to human development and rule of law. This presents an additional opportunity for greater cooperation. As we see autocratization begin to spread within Europe, USAID can support our European counterparts in identifying concrete ways to re-engage citizens who feel they have been left behind, to bolster the structure and ability to serve of democratic institutions, and to investigate and shut down opportunities for kleptocracy. As you note, foreign malign influence continues to challenge democratic progress around the world. In Brussels, Secretary Blinken and E.U. leaders recently discussed challenges that the People’s Republic of China presents to the rules-based order and agreed to resume U.S.-EU dialogue to coordinate approaches.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with Ambassador Carpenter and the U.S. delegation to the OSCE to identify new opportunities to engage with human rights defenders in increasingly restrictive countries to gather information, identify regional trends, and track unmet needs in dynamic environments.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. ISOBEL COLEMAN BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

Humanitarian Access in Ethiopia

Question. As you know, the humanitarian situation in Tigray is dire. Despite improvements in physical access, the restrictive operating space for humanitarian actors to enter the region, move freely, communicate, access fuel and banking services necessary to implement assistance, and the blockage of vital supplies are creating the conditions for a humanitarian disaster, including widespread famine.

Aid workers have been targeted and the aid operation politicized by parties to the conflict. Humanitarian experts have indicated that unless the operating environment improves in the next few weeks, it will be too late to prevent catastrophe.

Access challenges and impediments to effective principled response are not new, but humanitarian need is higher than ever, and coordinated and effective U.S. government advocacy to facilitate respect for international humanitarian law and reduce barriers that prevent U.S. assistance from getting to those who need it most is critical.

- If confirmed, how would you elevate and address the urgent challenges facing aid delivery in Tigray within the interagency and in your external engagements?
- How can the agency leverage evidence and learning from conflict contexts like Tigray to create effective policy and strategies to reduce political and operational barriers to humanitarian aid delivery in future crises?

Answer. The loss of life and mass displacement resulting from the conflict in Ethiopia's Tigray region is profoundly disturbing and unacceptable. I understand the administration, with support from Members of Congress and U.N. representatives, has undertaken numerous diplomatic efforts to end the violence and facilitate humanitarian access. If confirmed, I would ensure USAID works in close conjunction with the interagency and the international community to push for a constructive political dialogue and a negotiated ceasefire between parties. I would also work to identify strategic pressure points to ensure unhindered humanitarian access to those in need and would advocate for all parties to cease hostilities and respect international humanitarian law.

To learn from past conflict contexts, we must draw lessons from the Agency's past experiences and apply them to future work for greater impact. By capturing, organizing and disseminating evidence, and by engaging with peer interagency and other partners, we can build better humanitarian and peacebuilding programs, policies and strategies.

Protecting Women in Afghanistan

Question. This committee has been deeply concerned about the safety of women following the U.S.'s withdrawal. We are even more concerned about the safety of women that have worked on USAID cooperative grants. Currently, these partners are not eligible for the Special Immigrant Visa (SIV) program.

- What protections should be considered for them in light of the danger they may be facing for their work with the United States?

Answer. I share your concerns about the additional challenges facing Afghan women in this increased environment of insecurity within Afghanistan, and I understand that USAID is committed to working with our partners who represent the women of Afghanistan and the interagency to explore short and long-term opportunities for increased protection including through refugee programs in coordination with the Department of State. A sustained deteriorating security environment will make the Agency's ability to provide development and humanitarian assistance more difficult. If confirmed, I commit to working with the administrator and experts at the Agency to conduct robust contingency planning for different scenarios so that USAID can continue its assistance. I commit to engaging at the highest levels to explore every possible opportunity for supporting the Afghans at particular risk for their work alongside USAID and our partners.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO CHRISTOPHER LU BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. Do you believe that any country, including the United States, should pay more than 25 percent of the peacekeeping budget?

Answer. I believe all countries should pay their fair share of the peacekeeping budget. If confirmed, I will work to reach an agreement to lower the U.S. assessment rate as close to 25 percent as possible and ensure that other countries pay their fair share.

Question. Do you support going beyond the 25 percent cap as imposed by Congress and signed into U.S. law which bears the current President's name?

Answer. The President's FY 2022 budget requests a waiver of the 25 percent peacekeeping cap to allow the United States to pay our full assessment. If confirmed, I will not undertake any action that contravenes U.S. law. I welcome the opportunity to work with Congress to meet our financial obligations, including addressing the substantial level of arrears that have accumulated over the past four years, and the cap on peacekeeping funding.

Question. What is your position on repayment of current U.S. peacekeeping arrears?

Answer. The President's FY 2022 budget requests a partial repayment of U.S. peacekeeping arrears. If confirmed, I welcome the opportunity to work with Congress to meet our financial obligations, including addressing the substantial level of arrears that have accumulated over the past four years.

Question. Are there any specific steps you believe the U.N. should take to reduce the overall size of the U.N. peacekeeping budget? If so, what are they?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to reviewing and assessing all existing U.N. peacekeeping missions to ensure they are still necessary for the promotion of international peace and security. If confirmed, I will provide active U.S. engagement in Fifth Committee (Administrative and Budget) negotiations to ensure missions are appropriately resourced. For missions that we deem in the U.S. interest to maintain, I will ensure they are as effective and efficient as possible, while also providing the resources to fully implement their mandates, including well-trained and well-equipped troops and police and necessary assets.

Question. Are there any specific U.N. peacekeeping missions you would support reducing or terminating? If so, what missions do you believe should be reduced or terminated?

Answer. At this point, I do not have sufficient information to make a determination regarding the reduction or termination of any existing U.N. peacekeeping mission. If confirmed, I will work with State Department colleagues to assess the effectiveness of these missions to ensure they are still necessary for the promotion of international peace and security.

U.N. peacekeeping operations are among the most effective mechanisms of burden-sharing in addressing the global challenges to international peace and security. The Department of State and USUN regularly work within the U.N. system, through the United States' permanent seat on the Security Council, engagement with the U.N. Secretariat, and the General Assembly, to ensure that missions are addressing evolving conditions on the ground and fulfilling mandated tasks. If a new mission is proposed, the Security Council's standard practice is to review its mandate annually before determining whether to extend it. This allows the United States to regularly assess progress toward mandated tasks and performance benchmarks and to use our leverage as a permanent member to adjust mandates as necessary.

In recent years, U.N. peacekeeping missions have closed in Cote d'Ivoire, Haiti and Liberia, and the peacekeeping mission in Darfur is in the process of closing now. If confirmed, I will work to strengthen and improve the effectiveness of U.N. peacekeeping operations, while providing missions with realistic and achievable mandates, as well as the necessary resources to fully implement those mandates.

Question. The U.N. maintains several particular bodies and departments that focus on the Palestinians. These including the Division on Palestinian Rights (DPR), the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of Palestinian People (CEIRPP), and U.N. Information System on the Question of Palestine (UNISPAL).

- Will you work to challenge the existence and funding of these departments?

Answer. The United States will continue the tradition of maintaining its role as an honest broker in the Middle East, both as a staunch supporter and defender of Israel, and as a promoter of the legitimate aspirations of the Palestinian people. The United States remains firmly and consistently committed to achieving a comprehensive and lasting peace agreement between Israelis and Palestinians based on a two-state solution. If confirmed, I will assess the mandates of these particular U.N. bodies and departments, and make recommendations on them. I will support organizations and efforts that contribute to these goals.

Question. China has focused intensely on securing leadership roles in various U.N. agencies, particularly those overseeing technical standards that will shape the future. In many cases, these leaders have overtly advanced Chinese Communist Party goals, rather than acting independently to advance the global good. It is clear the United States has had mixed success with elections for heads of International Organizations (IO) in the past and, as a result, is taking more robust and coordinated steps to advocate for qualified and independent candidates in U.N. bodies.

- If confirmed, will you prioritize robust strategies to secure qualified and independent candidates to lead U.N./IO bodies, especially highly specialized agencies?

Answer. If confirmed, I will prioritize increasing U.S. efforts to identify and support qualified and independent candidates to lead U.N./IO bodies, including specialized and technical agencies. Such organizations and agencies play an important role in standard-setting across a broad range of issues that have an impact on our national security, including civil aviation and maritime safety; nuclear safeguards, safety, and security; internet freedom; digital and emerging technologies; intellectual property; and narcotics control and criminal justice.

If confirmed, I will work with the rest of the Bureau of International Organization Affairs to identify qualified and independent candidates who are committed to advancing priorities including transparency and accountability in the U.N. system, engage with key U.N. leadership to communicate our personnel and elections priorities, coordinate with our partners to support likeminded individuals, and support efforts to strengthen the pipeline of talented American citizens interested in serving with the United Nations at all levels. I will also work with Congress, other federal agencies, the private sector, and non-governmental organizations to build support for these candidates so that the United States can compete effectively with other countries, including the People's Republic of China, to uphold the foundational values and principles of the U.N. system.

Question. Countering malign influence within the U.N. system will require a robust whole-of-government approach as well as orchestrated cooperation between the U.S. and likeminded partners.

- If confirmed, please describe how you will bolster these efforts within our Government and between governments to identify, recruit, and elect qualified, independent candidates to lead U.N. agencies?

Answer. The Department has established a new office in the Bureau of International Organization Affairs—the Office of Multilateral Strategy and Personnel (IO/MSP)—focused on supporting qualified candidates for U.N. elections, multilateral appointments, and competitive positions, as part of a broader effort to strengthen the foundational principles and values of the U.N. and multilateral system. If confirmed, I will coordinate with the rest of the U.S. Government, including Congress and other federal agencies, the private sector, non-governmental organizations, and our allies and partners, to expand our recruitment networks and attract qualified and independent U.S. citizens and likeminded candidates with broader, more diverse backgrounds and support their election efforts from New York and across the globe. These efforts will include dynamic campaign strategies that leverage the whole of the U.S. Government's resources and influence to support U.S. citizen candidates and likeminded partners.

Question. Additionally, please describe your intended efforts to bolster U.S. talent recruitment for more junior positions, such as those in the Junior Professional Officer program, in the U.N. and other International Organizations.

Answer. Successfully increasing the number of U.S. citizens employed in the U.N. system requires a multifaceted approach that will involve identifying and advocating for qualified candidates for positions at all levels, including in junior roles. The Junior Professional Officer program is one of the key opportunities offered by the U.N. to encourage young professionals interested in serving in international organizations, and it provides them with hands-on experience across various U.N. agencies. If confirmed, I will coordinate closely with my colleagues in the International Organization Affairs Bureau and other stakeholder bureaus and agencies and consult with Congress to ensure we have sufficient resources, tools, and staffing to support more positions for American citizen JPOs in the U.N. system. With these resources, we can work strategically to increase the number of JPO opportunities funded by the U.S. Government at key agencies and bodies that work on U.S. priorities, expand our recruitment and outreach activities to ensure these opportunities are widely known and available to interested U.S. citizens, and provide tools and services to strengthen our competitiveness in placing qualified American citizens into the U.N. system. If confirmed, I also look forward to using my public statements and travel to champion the need for more young American professionals to work in the U.N. system.

Question. Before fiscal year 2021, there was a 15 percent withholding requirement of U.S.-assessed contributions to the U.N. designed to enhance whistleblower protections. This is now gone.

- Do you support re-instating the 15 percent withholding until these certifications were made? If not, why not?

Answer. I am a strong believer in whistleblower protections. If confirmed, I welcome the opportunity to examine the benefits and leverage that the conditional withholding of funds provides. Experience shows that temporarily withholding funds can sometimes be of use in advancing reform, except in those cases where withholding will negatively impact an important program that the United States specifically supports.

My understanding is, because of the extraordinary nature of withholding funds, the withholding of funds from the World Intellectual Property Organization and International Civil Aviation Organization was a factor that the missions of other countries to those organizations took into account when deciding whether to support reforms that the U.S. missions to those organizations were advancing. In both instances, the support of other countries was essential to getting eventual agreement on needed reforms, especially in the areas of ethics and whistleblower protections.

Question. If confirmed, how will you work to address barriers to advance U.N. management reforms, especially those created by the different priorities among member states?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with allies and likeminded member states that strongly support U.N. management reform. Recognizing that all member states will have their priorities, if confirmed, I will work to maximize the areas of agreement to advance our highest priority reforms. If confirmed, I will work closely with reform-oriented leaders and agents of change within the U.N. system to lend our support to their efforts, particularly within the General Assembly's Fifth Committee (Administrative and Budget). I also welcome the engagement of members of Congress in advocating for U.N. management reforms.

Question. If confirmed, how will you measure success in implementing management reforms at the U.N.?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that international organizations within the U.N. system are accountable and responsible for the U.S. taxpayer resources they receive. This includes continuing the longstanding U.S. policy of promoting budget discipline and transparency, as well as continuing efforts to ensure that other countries pay their fair share. I also will work to ensure that the U.N. prioritizes program effectiveness, operational efficiency, and results-based budgeting.

Question. What policies need to be implemented to maintain fiscal responsibility and accountability within the U.N. system?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure international organizations in the U.N. system adhere to best management and oversight practices in ensuring financial and managerial transparency. This transparency is achieved, in part, through annual in-depth reviews of the 34 regular budget sections that the U.N. Secretary-General submits to the General Assembly and Fifth Committee each spring and summer, along with accompanying reports that the Advisory Body on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) provides. These reports contain hundreds of pages of financial and programmatic details on each aspect of the U.N. regular budget. The U.S. Mission similarly conducts in-depth annual reviews of proposed budgets for U.N. peacekeeping missions in the fall. Additionally, the reports of the Office of Internal Oversight Services and the reports of the U.N. Board of Auditors, which contain the audited financial statements for the U.N. regular budget and each peacekeeping mission budget, are valuable in analyzing budget requests.

The IO Bureau and U.S. Missions to U.N. System organizations in New York, Geneva, Rome, and Vienna similarly scrutinize the budgets and financial statements of the U.N. funds and programs and each of the U.N. specialized agencies. The U.S. Mission will also continue to support strong U.S. candidates for U.N. technical, budgetary, and oversight bodies. Our membership and leadership on these bodies enable us to promote fiscal discipline and accountability.

Question. While the U.N. has taken steps to improve its efficiency, operational effectiveness, and accountability, the continuing need for reform is obvious to most observers, including strong supporters of the institution. The U.N. Secretary-General has committed to an agenda of reform. The U.S. push for reform is one of the main drivers behind the progress to date.

- In your opinion, what are the top three reforms that the U.N. could undertake in the coming two years that will have the greatest impact?

Answer. During my two decades of federal service, much of my work has focused on improving the functioning of government organizations. If confirmed, I will work to advance reforms that make the U.N. more efficient and effective, including in its achievement of the goals U.N. member states have set for it, and ensure that the Secretary-General communicates the tangible benefits of implemented reforms to all stakeholders. The Biden-Harris administration will continue to hold the U.N. accountable to its mission and its member states.

In particular, I believe we must do all we can to ensure the U.N. is (1) implementing the reform program that has been set out by the Secretary General, particularly to improve the U.N.'s capacity for conflict prevention (this includes strengthening the Resident Coordinator program, which will improve U.N. operations and coordination across the entire United Nations System through efficiencies and economies among the U.N. Secretariat and the United Nations Funds and Programs); (2) enhancing accountability in the use of resources through the elimination of waste and fraud and strengthened protections for whistleblowers; and (3) enhancing the standards for peacekeeper performance and improved accountability in combatting sexual exploitation abuse accompanied by strengthening prevention measures and protection for victims.

If confirmed, my work will be guided by three principles:

- Working to ensure that all countries pay their fair share to the United Nations and that the U.N. exercises greater budget discipline. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging on the assessment negotiations which are scheduled to begin this fall.
- Supporting initiatives to transform the U.N. into an organization that can better meet the challenges of the 21st century. If confirmed, I will advocate for a greater prioritization of performance metrics that demonstrate tangible outcomes resulting from the delivery of mandated programs
- Countering the negative impact of countries like China and Russia that push ideologies that undermine the U.N.'s mission and the rules-based international order.

If confirmed, I will consult with Congress about where we see the U.N. making satisfactory progress in these areas, and where additional efforts are needed.

Question. How will you explain to the Secretary-General and the member states that continued reform is a precondition for full U.S. support of the U.N.?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that the United States asserts its leadership role across the U.N. system. This will include paying our dues in full and on time, subject to the required Congressional appropriations and authorizations, to maximize our influence, and exerting that influence to continue advancing reforms and uphold the foundational values of the international rules-based order. I also welcome the engagement of members of Congress in advocating for U.N. reform in their discussions with the Secretary-General and member states.

Question. What tactics would you use if reform efforts falter or lack urgency?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with allies and likeminded member states who strongly support U.N. management reform. Recognizing that all member states will have their priorities, if confirmed, I will work to maximize the areas of agreement to advance our highest priority reforms. I will regularly consult with other parts of the U.S. Government, including Congress, as to other possible levers for achieving reform.

Question. With an increase of the use of telework by the United Nations system, how will you work to create cost savings? In particular, will you explore closing or selling U.N. facilities which are not being used?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to achieve agreement by U.N. member states to make the most economic use of U.N. facilities, including analyzing lessons learned during the COVID-19 shutdowns that may help improve workplace flexibility and efficiency, while realizing cost savings through measures to reduce the U.N.'s footprint in headquarters locations. In New York, the U.N. has already ended two leases for office space, and measures are also being implemented in Geneva as part of the renovation project there, such as through the sale and leasing of space to other occupants.

With the greater use of technology to conduct meetings, I also believe the U.N. needs to re-examine its overall approach to staff travel, in particular for conferences.

Question. Over the years, some experts have questioned the ability of the U.N. Office of International Oversight to effectively monitor U.N. programs in part because the office is largely dependent on funding from the U.N. programs that it audits. Some governments, including the United States, maintain that this could lead to a real or perceived conflict of interest.

- What is your view on this issue?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that the Office of Internal Oversight Services continues to receive its funding from the General Assembly, and thus the U.N. member states, so that it can freely audit the U.N. Secretariat. In general, the U.N. funds and programs have their own, internal audit offices, as do the U.N. specialized agencies. These internal audit offices are generally funded through the regular (assessed) budgets of the specialized agencies and the core (unearmarked) budgets of the U.N. funds and programs. The internal audit offices are ultimately accountable to the member states, not the secretariats, of these entities.

Similarly, the U.N. Board of Auditors, which audits the financial statements and makes recommendations related to internal controls and other financial management practices of the U.N. and the U.N. funds and programs, is funded through the U.N. regular budget and reports to the U.N. General Assembly. The external auditors of the U.N. specialized agencies, which are usually the highly capable and independent national audit offices of countries such as the United Kingdom, India, and the Philippines, are also funded through the regular (assessed) budgets of the specialized agencies and report to each agency's member states.

Question. Do you think U.N. internal oversight is sufficiently independent?

Answer. I believe that any organization, including the United Nations, can do more to improve the effectiveness and independence of its internal oversight mechanism. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) maintains maximum independence from the U.N. Secretariat while ensuring accountability to the United States and other U.N. member states. The Management and Reform Section at the U.S. Mission to the United Nations has been at the forefront of pressing for maximum independence of OIOS since its creation in 1994, with the goal of having OIOS operate like an Inspector General in the U.S. Government. A key opportunity to advance the independence and effectiveness of OIOS is in the negotiations each fall on General Assembly resolutions that define OIOS's mandate and responsibilities. The most recent resolution, A/Res/75/247 adopted on December 31, 2020, contains five paragraphs on operational independence, the most prominent of which is paragraph 6:

6. Reaffirms the operational independence of the Office, stresses that its independence and objectivity are vital in ensuring that its internal oversight functions are carried out in a credible, factual and unbiased manner, and reaffirms the authority of the Office to initiate, carry out and report on any action to fulfil its responsibilities with regard to internal audit, inspection and evaluation, and investigations;

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO CHRISTOPHER LU BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question. If confirmed, will you be a strong advocate for us paying our dues to the U.N. in full and on time?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that the United States reasserts its leadership role across the U.N. system. This will include paying our dues in full and on time in order to maximize our influence and exerting that influence to advance reforms and uphold the foundational values of the international rules-based order.

Question. What is your strategy for the upcoming triennial 2022–2024 scales of assessments negotiations to ensure that all countries pay their fair share?

Answer. I understand that the administration is currently reviewing options to try to reach an agreement in the U.N. General Assembly to potentially lower future U.S. assessment rates. If confirmed, I will work to reach an agreement in the U.N. General Assembly to try to lower the U.S. assessment rates and ensure that other countries pay their fair share. I welcome the opportunity to work with Congress to take the steps necessary to allow the United States to meet our financial obligations.

LETTER FROM AAPI (ASIAN AMERICAN AND PACIFIC ISLANDER)
ORGANIZATIONS IN SUPPORT OF CHRISTOPHER LU'S NOMINATION

July 22, 2021

The Honorable Bob Menendez
The Honorable James Risch
Senate Foreign Relations Committee

Dear Chairman Menendez and Ranking Member Risch:

We are writing to provide our full support and endorsement to Chris Lu for the position of U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations for Management and Reform.

We represent a coalition of national Asian American and Pacific Islander (AAPI) organizations engaged in business, legal, civil rights, and healthcare advocacy. Our members worked closely with Chris during the Obama Administration in his roles at the White House and the Department of Labor.

Chris has devoted his career to public service and is one of the AAPI community's most important thought leaders. Through his two decades of work in the legislative and executive branches, he has worked tirelessly to ensure that the federal government better serves the American people. When Chris was the White House Cabinet Secretary, he oversaw one of the most stable and effective Cabinets in history. When he became the Deputy Secretary of Labor, he spearheaded initiatives to expand employment opportunities and protect the health, safety, and financial security of workers. As the co-chair of the White House Initiative on Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders, Chris championed governmental efforts to disaggregate data and expand the delivery of services to marginalized communities. And earlier in his career, he served as Deputy Chief Counsel of the House Oversight Committee where he spearheaded investigations to improve the functioning of government programs.

In all of his government roles, Chris Lu did his job with the highest standard of ethics and integrity. Chris has the right policy background, management experience, and diplomatic skills to represent the U.S. in the United Nations, and we respectfully request that you swiftly approve his nomination. Thank you.

LETTER FROM FORMER SENIOR MEMBERS OF REPUBLICAN ADMINISTRATIONS IN SUPPORT OF CHRISTOPHER LU'S NOMINATION

July 26, 2021

The Honorable Bob Menendez
The Honorable James Risch
Senate Foreign Relations Committee

Dear Chairman Menendez and Ranking Member Risch:

All of us have held senior-level positions in Republican administrations, and we are writing to support the nomination of Chris Lu to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations for Management and Reform.

We have worked with Chris at the University of Virginia Miller Center and have seen up-close his deep commitment to public service. Drawing on his two decades of federal experience, Chris has made significant contributions to the public's understanding of the inner workings of government, as well as current policy issues. Chris approaches his work in a balanced manner, always with great thought and integrity. Even when he disagrees with someone else's views, he does so respectfully and in a way that fosters collaboration.

We believe that Chris Lu has the right temperament, experience, and intellect to represent the United States at the United Nations, and we hope he will be promptly confirmed for this position. Thank you.

Sincerely,

John M. Bridgeland
Director
White House Domestic Policy Council (George W. Bush)

Mary Kate Cary
Speechwriter, White House (George H.W. Bush)

Eric S. Edelman

Counselor to Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice

LETTER FROM THE CONGRESSIONAL ASIAN PACIFIC AND AMERICAN CAUCUS (CAPAC) IN SUPPORT OF CHRISTOPHER LU'S NOMINATION

Congress of the United States
Washington, DC 20515

July 28, 2021

The Honorable Bob Menendez
The Honorable James Risch
US Senate Committee on Foreign Relations
423 Dirksen Senate Office Building
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Chairman Menendez and Ranking Member Risch:

As Chair of the Congressional Asian Pacific and American Caucus (CAPAC), which is comprised of 76 members of Congress, I write to express strong support for Chris Lu, who has been nominated to be the U.S. Representative to the United Nations for UN Management and Reform. His 20 years of public service at the highest levels of government make him well-qualified for this position.

During the Obama Administration, CAPAC members worked closely with Chris on issues of importance to the Asian American and Pacific Islander (AAPI) community. I have seen up-close his skill in crafting innovative policy and communications strategies, managing large organizations, and bringing diverse interests together to solve problems. Chris is also a trailblazer in the Asian American community. He was one of the highest-ranking AAPIs in the Obama Administration, and only the second Asian American in history to become a deputy secretary of a Cabinet department. His work as co-chair of the White House Initiative on AAPIs led to important policy changes regarding data disaggregation and language translation. After leaving government, Chris has used his public voice to raise awareness about the pandemic's economic impact on AAPIs and the need to address the troubling rise in anti-AAPI hate crimes.

Chris Lu is a proven, knowledgeable, and experienced leader who will deliver results for our nation at the United Nations. I am proud to support him and urge his prompt confirmation.

Sincerely,

Judy Chu
Member of Congress
CAPAC Chair

NOMINATIONS

WEDNESDAY, JULY 28, 2021

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:11 a.m. in Room SD-G50, Hon. Robert Menendez, chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Menendez [presiding], Cardin, Shaheen, Kaine, Van Hollen, Risch, Young, and Cruz.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ, U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

The CHAIRMAN. This hearing on nominations of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

We are here today to consider nominations for four very important positions. Secretary, former Senator, Ken Salazar to be Ambassador to Mexico, Ms. Jessica Lewis to be Assistant Secretary of State for Political and Military Affairs, Ambassador Donald Lu to be the Assistant Secretary of State for South and Central Asian Affairs, and Ms. Marcella Escobari to be an Assistant Administrator for the United States Agency for International Development for Latin America and the Caribbean.

Congratulations on all your nominations. I know all of you have a distinguished history of public service. We appreciate your willingness to continue to serve your country, and those members of your family.

I understand that Senator Bennet and Senator Hickenlooper, our colleagues from Colorado, will be introducing Secretary Salazar this morning. So we will go to them.

Senior Senator from Colorado, Senator Bennet?

STATEMENT OF HON. MICHAEL BENNET, U.S. SENATOR FROM COLORADO

Senator BENNET. Thank you, Chairman Menendez for having me, the Ranking Member as well, for allowing Senator Hickenlooper and me to introduce Ken Salazar, President Biden's nominee to serve as the United States Ambassador to Mexico.

Ken is no stranger to this body where he served with distinction, and Colorado is honored to call him our own. And I am grateful to call him a mentor and a brother. In my view, President Biden could not have made a better choice.

The American Southwest embodies our braided history with Mexico, and I cannot think of anyone with a deeper connection to the region than Ken.

Our history goes back over 400 years when Ken's family settled in New Mexico before America was even a country. Later, the family journeyed to Colorado, San Luis Valley, where they have farmed for five generations.

If you drive down to the Valley and visit San Luis, which is Colorado's oldest town, there is a stone marker identifying the state's first irrigation ditch, The People's Ditch, etched into the stone or the names of farmers and ranchers who were entitled to draw water from that ditch, because they were the ones who dug it, and the name Salazar is among them.

The Valley is a sparse, beautiful part of our state, but it was not an easy place to grow up. The Salazar family ranch in Los Rincones did not have electricity until 1982.

Ken and his siblings grew up reading with oil lamps. They did not have phones, or television, but they did have the example of their parents, both incredible patriots. Ken's father, Henry, served in World War II and became a staff sergeant. He was so proud of his service to America, that he asked the family to bury him in uniform, which they did.

When the war broke out, Ken's mother, Emma, also wanted to do her part. So she traveled to Washington by herself, when she was only 19, to work at the Pentagon. Neither of his parents had a college education, but they worked hard to provide their family with opportunities they never had, all eight of their children, including Ken, became first-time college graduates.

They were so proud of everything Ken went on to achieve, from working as a lawyer at top western firms, to breaking barriers as the first Hispanic-American elected to statewide office, as Colorado's Attorney General, to become the first Mexican-American elected to the U.S. Senate outside of New Mexico, to joining President Obama's historic Cabinet as Secretary of the Interior.

Ken is exactly who we need to strengthen our vitally important relationship with Mexico, which is critical to the stability and prosperity of our entire hemisphere. But as this committee appreciates, the relationship faces no shortage of challenges, from immigration, to trade, energy, resource management, public health, and the rule of law.

Ken has worked and lived virtually all of these issues. As Colorado's Attorney General, Ken negotiated several extradition arrangements with Mexico, many of which remain in place today. In the Senate he led important immigration reform with Ted Kennedy and John McCain. He shaped major provisions of the Farm Bill. He helped craft by partisan energy bills. When he left to serve in the administration, Harry Reid and Mitch McConnell praised his leadership on the floor, and the Senate confirmed his nomination unanimously.

As Interior secretary, Ken negotiated water-sharing agreements between the U.S. and Mexico, and strengthened bilateral cooperation around conservation to protect Big Bend National Park along the Rio Grande.

I could go on, Mr. Chairman, but it comes down to this, you would struggle mightily to find someone more qualified than Ken. He has the experience and substance to hit the ground running, and a life story that represents America at our best.

I urge the committee to advance his nomination with an overwhelming bipartisan vote. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. When I am up for a nomination, I want you introducing me, Senator Bennet.

Senator Hickenlooper?

Senator BENNET. I will be there.

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN HICKENLOOPER, U.S. SENATOR FROM COLORADO

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Well, good morning, Mr. Chairman, and Ranking Member, and members of the committee.

I am also equally honored to introduce Secretary Ken Salazar, President Biden's nominee to be U.S. Ambassador to the United Mexican States. I have known Ken for over 30 years, from when we first had a jazz club in the basement of my restaurant, and he was raising money for a campaign to protect open lands in Southern Colorado called La Tierra. We got John Nichols to come speak, and raised—I think we raised 16 or $1,800.

His older brother, John, who some of you remember, from serving in the House, was my Secretary of Agriculture, my first term as governor. Ken has been beside me on every campaign, and every major issue, every political battle I fought. And I have tried to be by his side as well.

As Michael said, his family story is emblematic of the relationship between the U.S. and Mexico. His family settled in Southwest, United States was then New Spain in the 16th century. His ancestors helped found the City of Santa Fe. Michael described him growing up on Los Rincones without electricity. He did not mention that Los Rincones is a scrabble of about six buildings. The big city, Manassa, which is four miles away, almost has a population of a thousand.

Again, the ranch down there is one of the most beautiful places in Colorado. My son, Teddy, learned to ride, ride a horse on this ranch when he was 11 years old. And of those eight children that Ken's parents, Emma and Henry raised, all eight graduated from college.

And I was also—well, you ought to get him to tell the story at some point, but children six, seven, and eight were all born on the same long night, which is a story only he can tell. He served Governor Romer, both as chief counsel and as secretary of Natural Resources, and both in those roles, and as a U.S. Senator, and as the secretary of Interior, he never shied away from tough issues.

He understands the importance of collaboration, and bipartisan-ship, pragmatism. He is a world-class negotiator, which I think he got from his mother, Emma. She was about 5 feet 2 inches, and yet one of the strongest, most potent political forces in Colorado. She blessed two generations of candidates, and they were not always Democrats, but she blessed to two generations, she blessed me on my reelection in 2014 when she was 91 years old.

When he came to the Senate, Ken designated and chose Senator John McCain as his mentor, as a freshman senator, and the two worked together on immigration reform, both working with Republicans and Democrats, he convened ranchers and environmentalists throughout his term as secretary—as Interior secretary, on water issues, conservation issues, et cetera.

From a ranch in Conejos County, Colorado, to the hallways of this chamber, Ken has had a package of experiences that make him uniquely qualified to be a remarkable Ambassador to Mexico. Mexico is an important ally and trading partner. Nuevo Laredo now is our largest port of entry, and in many—in so many cases, the United States and Mexico share priorities. And I think that it is a delicate point in the relationship now, a point that demands someone with the skills of Ken Salazar.

All of us in Colorado are so grateful for all of his contributions, the things that he has done. He created something called Great Outdoors Colorado that, to this day, is perhaps the greatest public-private partnership around land conservation in the history of this country. In everything that he has done, he has been able to bring people together, resolve conflict, and create progress.

And that is exactly what we need now. We are all fortunate to his, once again, answering the call to service, to take on this crucial role at this crucial time.

I wholeheartedly support his nomination, and I hope that he gets widespread support from every single person on this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, thank you, Senator Hickenlooper. I did not think there was much that could be added after Senator Bennet, but you did a fantastic job of filling out the total, the total picture. So we know that both of you have very busy agendas and you are welcome to excuse yourselves at any time.

With that, let me take a moment to introduce Ms. Jessica Lewis. It is with a mixture of deep pride and wistfulness that we are here today considering the nomination of Ms. Lewis to be the next Assistant Secretary of State for the Bureau of Political Military Affairs.

I, like many others in both the Senate and the House, have had the good fortune of working closely with Ms. Lewis and benefiting from her exceptional wisdom, drive, and judgment. Ms. Lewis is recognized across party lines as one of the most effective and respected leaders on Capitol Hill, she is a trailblazer for women in national security. Indeed, if approved by the Senate, she will be the first woman confirmed to hold this position.

You all know her as the majority staff director of this committee, and prior to that, as a senior national security and foreign policy advisor for then Majority Leader Harry Reid. What you may not know is that she came to Capitol Hill almost two decades ago to work for me as a foreign policy advisor and staff director of the Western Hemisphere Subcommittee in the House of Representatives. So we are proud of all of Jessica's accomplishments since then.

And while it would be impossible to catalogue all of these accomplishments here, I do want to highlight her leadership, her steady hand during this past year in particular, leading the staff to an incredibly productive year, while also providing invaluable advice on the committee's foreign policy priorities. I have been deeply impressed, and that is not an easy thing to do, but not at all surprised.

I would like to highlight that Ms. Lewis' tireless dedication over her entire career to mentoring young professionals as well, elevating her colleagues, and empowering those who have not been traditionally represented in the field, are exemplary. And I have no doubt she will apply herself in the same way, and with equal success at the State Department.

Secretary Salazar is a friend of mine, and of this committee, and I am deeply gratified by your nomination to be Ambassador to Mexico. It is a Testament to the Biden administration's seriousness about restoring a productive and respectful relationship with the people and Government of Mexico. One of the most important, expansive bilateral relationships we have.

The task ahead of you is great. You will need to continue engaging on the critical issues of trade and migration that have been central in our bilateral relationship, while also engaging on the, often uncomfortable, issues that face both our nations, including the trafficking of drugs, weapons, and people, environmental threats, and issues of democracy, governance, and rule of law, including with respect to human rights and labor rights.

I have no doubt that your vast experience in government, your personal ties to Mexico, and your commitment to bipartisan solutions will make you an excellent ambassador upon your confirmation.

Of the Office of Political Military Affairs, for which Ms. Lewis has been nominated, are of vital importance to U.S. foreign and national security policy, and to this committee. It is a position with immense impact for safeguarding U.S. national security and promoting and accomplishing vital U.S. foreign policy objectives.

In recent years, the Bureau's relationship and credibility with this committee has been strained, though it has been improving. I expect that with Ms. Lewis at the helm, the Bureau's level of cooperation with the oversight activities of, and consultation with this committee will improve considerably. And I will put that expectation to the test.

Ambassador Lu, I am pleased to see you back again before this committee, this time to be the next Assistant Secretary for South and Central Asian Affairs, a region of critical importance and significant challenges. Indeed, the rapidly deteriorating situation in Afghanistan will require sustained Senate oversight for how the administration plans to mitigate the effects of the withdrawal.

I, along with many members of this committee are especially concerned about the plight of women, and the minorities as the Taliban continues to gain military strength.

In addition, as the administration evacuates the first group of Afghan SIV applicants, I continue to be concerned about the thousands of remaining Afghan SIV applicants and our Afghan human rights and democracy partners whose lives remain in grave danger from the Taliban.

And as you know, any peaceful resolution to this conflict must be regional in nature, and will require the Assistant Secretary to be deeply engaged.

Our relationship with India is growing, bolstered by a vibrant Indian-American community here in the United States, I expect our diplomats to deepen this relationship while remaining true to our core values, and raising concerns as necessary.

In Bangladesh, I continue to advocate for labor rights in the establishment of unions to ensure that workers in every sector can work in safe conditions. There will be no shortage of challenges, but I am confident that your knowledge and experience in the region will serve you well as you take on this role.

Ms. Escobari, your extensive experience helping countries in our hemisphere chart a path towards prosperity, including in your previous service as USAID Assistant Administrator for Latin America and the Caribbean Bureau, which make you exceptionally qualified for this position. As you know, the challenges we face in the region are growing by the day. Democratic backsliding has accelerated in many countries aggravating by the ongoing socioeconomic impact of COVID-19.

With the recent assassination in Haiti, widespread protests and regime violence in Cuba, and authoritarian crackdown in Nicaragua, humanitarian emergency in Venezuela, and numerous challenges related to irregular migration, the Western Hemisphere today is less secure, less prosperous, and less stable than it had been in many years.

We look forward to hearing how you will work to address those challenges, if confirmed.

In closing, the four of you have immense challenges ahead, I am confident that your rich experiences will serve you well as you take on your new responsibilities upon confirmation. We look forward to your testimonies. And this is normally a little longer than we would in introducing, nominees, but you are coming into critical positions.

So let me turn to the distinguished ranking member for his opening remarks.

STATEMENT OF HON. JAMES E. RISCH,
U.S. SENATOR FROM IDAHO

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. And thanks to our witnesses for joining us today, and your willingness to serve, and of course your families who will share in that sacrifice.

I want to start with the nomination of Assistant Secretary of State for South Asian Central Affairs. Personally, my top two foreign policy priorities are China and global health. And India is a major player in both of these priorities.

So I look forward to hearing your views on how we can work with India to maintain a favorable balance of power in the Indian Ocean, and continued to partner in the fight against COVID, and other global health concerns, including vaccine development and manufacturing in India.

It is also becoming clear that a hasty U.S. withdrawal from Afghanistan threatens to squander our hard-fought gains there. Ambassador Lu, we welcome your thoughts on the way ahead.

Next, we have the nomination of Assistant Secretary of State for Political-Military Affairs. Our security partnerships are essential to protecting our vital national interests. They are also critical aspect of competition with China and Russia. We will often hear from our allies and partners over the problems and the speed of our security cooperation process. And often state is at the forefront of these problems.

I look forward to hearing how you plan to strengthen our relationships with partners, and allies, and keep the U.S., the security partner of choice around the world. I have no doubt you have great qualifications for that task in as much as your service on this committee has shown that to be such.

On the nomination of Assistant Administrator of USAID for Latin America and the Caribbean, if confirmed, you will have no shortage of challenges, especially the political and humanitarian crisis in Venezuela, the growing violence and poverty in Haiti surrounding the recent assassination of President Moyes, democracy in Cuba and Nicaragua, and holding governments in Central America accountable for addressing the drivers of irregular immigration.

And for the nomination of a U.S. Ambassador to Mexico, Senator Salazar, Secretary Salazar, it is good to see you again. As neighbors, Mexico and the United States share an enduring interest in maintaining robust security and economic cooperation. I look forward to hearing your thoughts, especially on how to address the growing role of Mexican transnational criminal organization in the production and trafficking of fentanyl into the United States.

I think all of us have been shocked by the state of politics in Mexico, with the huge number of assassinations that have taken place of people that are running for public office, and the current state of affairs there. It is staggering how many people have been killed.

Ambassador—excuse me—Senator Salazar, your ability to handle these things, I have absolutely no question about. It has been a pleasure working with you on issues that were parochial to my state while you were Secretary of the Interior. I enjoyed serving with you briefly in this chamber.

And with that I will yield back my time. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Risch.

All right, we will turn to our nominees. We will start with Secretary Salazar, and moved down the dais. We ask you to summarize your statement in about five minutes, so we can have a conversation with you. Your full statements will be included in the record without objection.

And with that, we recognize Secretary Salazar.

STATEMENT OF HON. KENNETH LEE SALAZAR, OF COLORADO, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE UNITED MEXICAN STATES

Mr. SALAZAR. Thank you, Chairman Menendez, and Ranking Member Risch, and all the members of this committee, for the time this morning. I appreciate your service and your leadership on this committee.

I also want to acknowledge and thank my good friends, Senator Michael Bennet, and Senator John Hickenlooper for their long journey with me together, working on issues that we so much care about for Colorado and the United States of America.

And I want to acknowledge my family back in Colorado, and the San Luis Valley, and in Denver. My wonderful wife, Esperanza, watching this hearing this morning with Melinda, Andrea, Mireya, and Selena, and Blake, and all of my family in the valley, thank you so much for being the wind beneath my wings for all of the journey that I have had in this wonderful life of mine.

Let me also acknowledge my guests here today. Former colleagues from the U.S. Senate, as well as friends, Stephanie Valencia, Felicia Escobar and Dan Restrepo, I thank them for their help in my own—in my journey.

So let me also say, this is a very proud moment for me, proud because President Joe Biden is a person who cares a lot about Mexico, Central America and Latin America, his many trips, even as Vice President trying to deal with these issues that have been around for—the United States for a very long time, are a testament to his attention to the North-South relationship and to the Western hemisphere.

And so I am very proud to be able to work with him, to have the opportunity, if confirmed by this committee and the Senate, to be able to work on the issues that he so much cares about.

And likewise, Vice President Kamala Harris, she and I knew each other back in her days as attorney general. And I know her interest in dealing with the issues, including the root causes in the relationship between the U.S., Mexico, Central America, and Latin America.

So I very much look forward to being a part of their team, but I can only do that work effectively if I also work closely with the members of this committee, and that includes both the majority and the minority staff, it includes a you, Senator Menendez, Senator Risch, and each of the members of this committee. We may not always agree, but what I will make sure I do is that I have the opportunity to hear your voices and to work with you, to deal with these solutions, or these challenges, and create solutions that we have all been looking for.

So let me just say a word about how I see the issues for the United States and Mexico. Our futures are inextricably bound together as two nations, as people that have a very common heritage.

We are inextricably bound together because of the demographics of our two nations. We are inextricably bound together because of the migration patterns of the history of our two nations. We are inextricably bound together with our economic and jobs, dreams, and the prosperity for both nations. And we are inextricably bound together with the dream of security, and freedom from the fear of violence that we currently see on the border, on both sides of the border, and on the southern border of Mexico, as well as in other places in Latin America. And we are bound together by our history and by our heritage.

I will not spend a long time talking about those issues, but very quickly on the demographics, we have about 170 million Mexicans and Mexican-Americans in both countries. It is interesting that of those 170 million more than one-fourth of the population resides here in the United States. And they come from families like mine that have been around, through our heritage, for 400, 700 years with our Native American, Mexican, and Spanish backgrounds, through the Mexican-American War in 1848, and then for the last 170 years as American citizens.

We are bound together because the issues of migration have brought us together historically through the push and pull of the history of migration into this country. It is an issue which still be-devils this country in terms of how we deal with a sustainable, orderly migration system, and in order to get to that point, we have to work closely with the Mexican Government to share our interest in dealing with those issues.

We are bound together because of our economy and jobs. You know, they say that the Latino population is the mainstream economy in the United States, some 60 million strong, Cuban Americans, and Puerto Ricans, and Dominicans, and 60 million strong contributing greatly to the economy United States and to the future, political, and demographics of this country. So we need to make sure that we are integrating that community.

And on security, we cannot deal with the security issues without having the Mexican Government working with us. It is incumbent upon them because it is a shared responsibility that we have to deal with the violence issues, both on that side of the border, as well as on this side of the border.

So let me just conclude by saying, Mr. Chairman, and Ranking Member Risch. This is a very proud moment for me, it is a very proud moment because of our history, but it is also a very proud moment, as I look forward to the future, yes, full of challenges, but full of opportunities. It is a proud moment for us to bring the two nations closer together and to deal with a kind of reality that creates prosperity, security, and peace for the peoples of both the United States and Mexico.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[The prepared statement of Mr. Salazar follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF THE HON. KENNETH LEE SALAZAR

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member and members of the committee, I am proud and humbled to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee to serve as United States Ambassador to Mexico.

My history is deeply rooted in Mexico and the United States. My forebearers came from Mexico and Spain in the early 1600s and settled along the banks of the Rio Grande del Norte near Santa Fe, New Mexico. Following the end of the Mexican-American War, they migrated north and established the settlement of Los Rincones in the San Luis Valley. Today, we still ranch and farm the same lands along the tributaries of the Rio Grande.

My father was a proud soldier in World War II. My mother helped open the Pentagon as a public servant. After the war, they returned home. At home, our native language was Spanish. We were poor and worked in the fields and home alongside our parents. We were taught to dream big dreams and the timeless values of faith, hard work and education. All eight of their children became first generation college graduates.

Like my parents, I am a proud American. If confirmed, I will work tirelessly to advance the interests of the United States and to strengthen the common bonds between the United States and Mexico. I recognize the difficult and enormous challenges ahead. I also am optimistic about the opportunities ahead for our two nations.

In my view, it is time to create transformative change in the United States-Mexico relationship by ushering in a new era of partnership with our southern neighbor.

That partnership must:

- address jobs and economic opportunity for the people of the United States and Mexico through trade, infrastructure, tourism, and investment;
- secure our shared borders and create an orderly, safe, and humane framework for migration;
- identify partnerships that address the scourge of violence and respects the rule of law; and
- engage in a global sustainability transformation for a viable planet while respecting the sovereignty of both nations.

If confirmed, I will seek the advice and guidance of this committee and its members in my service to the United States. I look forward to working with President Biden and Vice President Harris and the United States Congress to advance the interests of the United States in Mexico. I also look forward to working with the Mexican Government to advance our shared interests in Mexico and here in the United States.

Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Secretary Salazar.
Ms. Lewis?

STATEMENT OF MS. JESSICA LEWIS, OF OHIO, NOMINATED TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE [POLITICAL-MILITARY AFFAIRS]

Ms. LEWIS. Chairman Menendez. Thank you, first of all, for your kind words. Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, members of the committee, I am honored and humbled to be here as the Biden-Harris administration's nominee to be Assistant Secretary of State for Political-Military Affairs.

I would like to thank President Biden for nominating me, and Secretary Blinken for his support. I was lucky enough to start my career on this committee, under then Chairman Biden when Secretary Blinken was the staff director on the committee.

I would like to thank my father, Robert Lewis, for raising my sister and me; his strength and love after my mother, Molly Lewis, passed away when I was a child, made me who I am today. I am also lucky to have the love and support of my stepmother, who is truly my second mother, Patricia Lewis. And I am joined by my sister, Kaitlynn Griffith, who has been with me every step of the way.

My greatest joy in life has been as a mother, and I would like to thank my 9-year-old son, Matthew, who is wisely enjoying a day of summer camp today instead of sitting through a hearing. And to my incredible community of friends, thank you for being my second family.

I would like to personally thank Chairman Menendez, who hired me nearly 20 years ago as a staffer on the House Foreign Affairs Committee, and who trained me to be a staffer. The Chairman has the sharpest mind I have encountered, and has taught me to stand up for what I believe. I would not be here before the committee today if it were not for Senator Menendez.

I would like to thank former Senator Harry Reid, who taught me the ways of the Senate during my nine years working for him, and Senator Cardin, who brought me on as staff director of this committee.

And finally, I would like to thank the outstanding bipartisan staff of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, to my team, you are simply the best.

To my Republican colleagues, working with you has taught me when we can come together, as we recently did on the China Bill which passed this committee with overwhelming support, we are at our very best.

I have spent my entire career in public service, if confirmed I would be honored to continue that path at the State Department. I began my career teaching third grade in public schools, and believe my work as a teacher serves as the foundation for all I do today.

I then worked at the Organization of American States running education, training, and technology programs in Latin America. Since then, I have spent nearly 20 years on The Hill and have worked on some of the most critical national security legislation of our time. I staffed the Conference Committee for the legislation that implemented the 9/11 Commission recommendations in the early-2000s, and recently negotiated passage of the Countering American Adversaries Through Sanctions Act only a few years ago.

And, as Senator Reid's National Security advisor, I worked directly with the Armed Services and Intelligence Committees, the Defense Department, and our Intelligence Agency.

The Bureau of Political-Military Affairs manages our arms sales, and security assistance, negotiates international security agreements, and manages our security relationships with other countries. The Bureau is also in charge of U.S. programs to help countries cope with the after effects of war through conventional weapons destruction programs.

If confirmed, I would focus on four areas. First, as President Biden promised, a plan to enhance the consideration of human rights in our decision-making to ensure our arms sales are in our foreign policy interest, and in line with American values.

Second, I am committed to reinvigorating the Bureau's relationship with this committee and with Congress.

Third, I want to focus on strengthening the workforce at the Bureau, and specifically its efforts to improve diversity, equity, and inclusion.

Fourth, I believe the judicious provision of U.S. defense equipment can deepen our relationships with our allies and partners, and support our foreign policy and national security. I believe if government can help to keep the global playing field level, our defense companies can continue to out-compete any rival while upholding our values.

In conclusion, if confirmed, I am committed to leveraging the tools of the Political-Military Affairs Bureau in the service of U.S. foreign policy and American values.

Thank you. And I look forward to your questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF JESSICA LEWIS

Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, members of the committee, I am honored and humbled to be here as the Biden-Harris administration's nominee to be Assistant Secretary of State for Political-Military Affairs.

I would like to thank President Biden for nominating me, and Secretary Blinken for his support.

I would like to thank my father Robert Lewis for raising my sister and me. His strength and love after my mother, Molly Lewis, passed away when I was a child, made me who I am. I am also lucky to have the love and support of my step-mother—who is truly my second mother—Patricia Lewis. I am joined by my sister Kaitlynn Griffith, who has been with me every step of my life. My greatest joy in life has been as a mother, and I would like to thank my 9-year-old son Matthew, who is wisely enjoying a day of summer camp today instead of sitting through a hearing. And to my incredible community of friends—thank you for being my second family.

I would like to personally thank Chairman Menendez, who hired me nearly 20 years ago as a staffer on the House Foreign Affairs Committee and who trained me to be a staffer. The Chairman has the sharpest mind I have encountered and has taught me to stand up for what you believe in. I would not be here before the committee today if it were not for Senator Menendez.

I would like to thank former Senator Harry Reid, who taught me the ways of the Senate during my 9 years working for him, and Senator Cardin, who brought me on as staff director of this committee.

Finally, I would like to thank the outstanding bipartisan staff of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. To my team, you are simply the best. To my Republican colleagues, working with you has taught me when we can come together—as we recently did on the China bill which passed this committee with overwhelming support—we are at our best.

I have spent my entire career in public service; if confirmed, I would be honored to continue that path at the State Department. I began my career teaching third grade in public schools and believe my work as a teacher serves a foundation for all I do.

I then worked at the Organization of American States running education, training, and technology programs in Latin America.

Since then, I have spent nearly 20 years on the Hill and have worked on some of the most critical national security legislation of our time. I staffed the conference committee for the legislation that implemented the 9-11 Commission recommendations in the early 2000s and negotiated passage of the Countering Americas Adversaries Through Sanctions Act only a few years ago.

And, as Senator Reid's national security advisor, I worked directly with the Armed Services and Intelligence Committees, the Defense Department, and our Intelligence Agencies.

The Bureau of Political-Military Affairs manages our arms sales and security assistance, negotiates international security agreements, and manages our security relationships with other countries. The Bureau is also in charge of U.S. programs to help countries cope with the aftereffects of war through conventional weapons destruction programs.

The Bureau is also unique because of its dedicated workforce. They have a well-deserved reputation for professionalism, and they have performed the challenging work of the Bureau across administrations.

If confirmed, I would focus on four areas.

- First, as President Biden promised, I plan to enhance the consideration of human rights in our decision-making to ensure our arms sales are in our foreign policy interest and in line with American values.
- Second, I am committed to reinvigorating the Bureau's relationship with this committee and Congress.
- Third, I want to focus on strengthening the workforce at the Bureau, and specifically its efforts to improve diversity, equity, and inclusion.
- Fourth, I believe the judicious provision of U.S. defense equipment can deepen our relationships with our allies and partners and support our foreign policy and national security. I believe if government can help to keep the global playing field level, our defense companies can continue to outcompete any rival while upholding our values.

In conclusion, if confirmed, I am committed to leveraging the tools of the Political-Military Affairs Bureau in the service of U.S. foreign policy and American values.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. And as a good staffer, you came in under five minutes. So it is just amazing.

Ambassador Lu, please go ahead?

STATEMENT OF THE HON. DONALD LU, OF CALIFORNIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE FOR SOUTH ASIAN AFFAIRS

Ambassaador LU. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Risch, distinguished members of this committee, I am honored and humbled to be here today as President Biden's nominee to be the next Assistant Secretary of State for South and Central Asian Affairs.

I am grateful to the President and to Secretary Blinken for the confidence they have shown in me. I would not be here today without the love and support of my family. I am joined today by wife and best friend, Ariel. And we have two wonderful teenagers at home, Kip and Aliya. Unlike Security Salazar's kids, they are not watching, they are sleeping soundly at the moment.

As the son of an immigrant to the United States, I am particularly proud to have served my country in the U.S. Foreign Service in the Peace Corps. During my 30 years at the State Department, I have worked in India, Pakistan, and Central Asia, advancing our agenda on counterterrorism, democracy, and anti-corruption.

As someone who believes that the Foreign Service and the Civil Service should look like the face of America, I am committed to implementing the President's vision on diversity, equity, and inclusion.

Mr. Chairman, with the President's decision to withdraw American troops from Afghanistan by September 11, we are faced with new risks and new opportunities. And in particular, we have an historic opportunity to rebalance our relations with the countries of this region to better reflect our long-term strategic priorities.

First, it is in our national interest to continue to strengthen our fast-growing strategic, economic, and people-to-people ties with India, while also speaking forthrightly about human rights and our democratic values. As two great Indo-Pacific powers, we must strive to ensure that our Asian partners remain sovereign and free, and not dominated by a single power.

As two great democracies, we must demonstrate through our example why democracy promotes peace, stability, and personal freedoms. And as two great free-market economies, we can build a more stable and inclusive global economy.

As the producer of 60 percent of the world's vaccines, India is critical to the global fight against COVID-19, and if confirmed, I would work with India to end this devastating pandemic. And I commit to working with India and our partners to tackle the climate crisis.

Second, on Pakistan: We have for more than 20 years defined our relations with this important partner primarily through the prism of counterterrorism and security. If confirmed, I will build on our long history of friendship with Pakistan to advance human rights, religious freedom, counterterrorism cooperation, and an improved business climate for American investors.

Third, Afghanistan: I started my career working on the Afghan border in the Pakistani City of Peshawar. I saw then, first-hand, the desperate plight of Afghan refugees. I have a deep commitment to encouraging peace, security, human rights, and the rights of women and girls. If confirmed, I will work to advance our objectives in Afghanistan.

Finally, in the other countries of South and Central Asia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan, Nepal, Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Bhutan, and the Maldives, we face competition from China and Russia like never before. We must recommit ourselves to robust engagement with these countries to support their sovereignty and independence in the face of many challenges.

Critical new tools have been authorized in this effort, from the creation of the Development Finance Corporation, to this committee's important work on the Strategic Competition Act.

If confirmed, I will work to make the United States a reliable international partner for the Governments and peoples of these countries, one who is willing to call out malign influence, and stand up for human rights and democracy.

Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I will take seriously my role as a steward of the public trust. I will safeguard our precious resources, our people, our embassies, and the strong reputation of the United States.

I believe in the importance of our voice in support of human rights, religious freedom, and democracy, and if confirmed, I look forward to working with the Congress to build robust relations between the United States and the nations of South and Central Asia. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Ambassador.
Ms. Escobari?

STATEMENT OF THE HON. MARCELA ESCOBARI, OF MASSACHUSETTS, NOMINATED TO BE AN ASSISTANT ADMINISTRATOR OF THE UNITED STATES AGENCY FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT [LATIN AMERICA AND THE CARIBBEAN]

Ms. ESCOBARI. Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee, thank you for opportunity to testify before you today.

It is an honor to be nominated by President Biden to serve as Assistant Administrator for Latin America and the Caribbean at USAID.

My passion for development was sparked by growing up in Bolivia, one of the poorest countries in our hemisphere, the daughter of two pediatricians who worked in the country's public hospitals.

They brought home a passion for making a difference one child at a time, but also the frustrations of seeing kids die more from disease than poverty. They wanted to prevent disease, not just treat it. My father started the first blood bank in our city, and my mother tried to change culture, implementing practices of hand-washing in maternity wards.

My parents inspired me to tackle the root causes, not just the symptoms of poverty. So I want to thank those watching this today, my husband, Beran, our sons Nico and Lucas, and our friends and family, whose support and love are the reasons I can sit before you today.

When I had the honor to serve in this role for the last year of the Obama administration, the region faced acute threats. Venezuela's economy had contracted by 60 percent, and 300,000 people had fled the country. Hurricane Mathew had hit an already-battered Haiti, and Colombia was embarking on a fragile peace process.

Now the stakes are even higher. The pandemic has hit Latin America harder than any other region in the world. 5.6 million people have fled Venezuela, a humanitarian crisis created by an oppressive and inept regime. The people of Cuba and Nicaragua are seeing renewed crackdowns on their most fundamental rights. And one of the strongest democracies in the region, Colombia, is being shaken by economic and social unrest.

Our ability to extend a hand urgently and wholeheartedly, in partnership with our southern neighbors will largely determine the course of the region's recovery.

I believe that the stakes are profound, nothing less than the faith of the region's citizens that liberal democracy, rule of law, and market-based economies can deliver on their most pressing needs.

The inability, and in a few cases unwillingness of national governments to respond to these needs, have led to political instability that threatens the future of the region, as well as the security of the United States.

So I sit before you with a sense of urgency. If confirmed, I will focus on these pressing issues: combating COVID-19, confronting the security and migration crisis in Central America, and strengthening governance across the region.

My passion and conviction come from my parents, but my optimism that we can make a difference, is grounded in a career studying and implementing development. My early experiences in the private sector taught me the importance of creating conditions for investment and growth. In academia, I learned the value of good ideas, and while there are no silver bullets, there is a lot we know about what works and what does not.

If confirmed, I will bring a focus on data and evidence, as well as the ability to iterate quickly on lessons learned. During my time at USAID, I had the privilege to work with dedicated and knowledgeable professionals, who regularly go above and beyond the call of duty.

If confirmed, I will empower their efforts and contribute to a culture where respect, equity, diversity, and inclusion are part of our values and the way that we operate, both here and abroad.

Since leaving the Obama administration, I have worked on the barriers to inclusion and opportunities faced by workers here in the United States. We often draw lines between so-called "developed" and "developing", between Global North and Global South. But in truth, there is no bright line when it comes to the crippling effects of poverty.

The need for inclusive, sustained growth is as real in Appalachia as it is in Antigua. I hope to bring that humility to this job, the sense that every nation is a work in progress, and given the cross-border nature of our challenges, climate change, pandemics, cyber threats, our fates are linked, and our ability to work together, even more urgent.

Thank you for the opportunity to testify. And I look forward to your questions.

[The prepared statement of Ms. Escobari follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. MARCELA ESCOBARI

Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee, thank you for considering my nomination.

It is an honor to be nominated by President Biden to serve as Assistant Administrator for the Bureau for Latin America and the Caribbean at USAID.

My passion for development was sparked during my childhood in Bolivia, one of the poorest countries on the continent, as the daughter of two pediatricians who practiced in the country's public hospitals.

They brought home a passion for making a difference one child at a time, but also the frustration of seeing children die more often from poverty than disease.

They wanted to prevent disease, not just treat it. My father started the first blood bank in our city, and my mother tried to change culture—with simple things like handwashing practices, or promoting the use of breast milk.

My parents inspired me to tackle the root causes—not simply the symptoms—of poverty.

I want to thank them (who are watching this today), my husband, Beran, our sons Nico and Lucas, and our friends and family, whose support and love are the reasons I can sit before you today.

When I had the honor to serve in this role for the last year of the Obama Administration, the region faced acute threats. Venezuela's economy had contracted by 60 percent, 300,000 people had fled the country. Hurricane Mathew had hit an already battered Haiti, and Colombia was embarking on a fragile peace process.

Now the stakes are even higher. 5.6 million people have fled Venezuela—a humanitarian crisis created by an oppressive and incompetent regime. The people of Cuba and Nicaragua are seeing renewed crackdowns on their most fundamental rights. And one of the strongest democracies in the region, Colombia, is being shaken by economic and social unrest. The pandemic has struck Latin America harder than any other region in the world.

Our ability to extend a hand—urgently and wholeheartedly—in partnership with our southern neighbors will largely determine the course of the region's recovery.

I believe that the stakes are profound—nothing less than the faith of the region's citizens that liberal democracy, rule of law, and market-based economies can deliver on their most basic needs.

Inequitable, and lackluster growth have left citizens frustrated and demanding better. And the inability or, in a few cases, unwillingness, of national governments to respond adequately has led to political instability that threatens the future of the region as well as the security of the United States.

I sit before you with a sense of urgency.

If confirmed, I will focus on these pressing issues: combating COVID-19, confronting the security and migration challenges in Central America, and strengthening governance across the region.

This means empowering civil society to stand up to authoritarian regimes, while also helping democratic governments improve their capacity to deliver basic goods and services—from water to electricity to health.

My passion and conviction come from my parents, but my optimism is grounded in a career studying and implementing international development.

My early experiences in the private sector taught me the importance of creating conditions for investment and growth. In academia, I learned the value of good ideas, and while there are no silver bullets, there is a lot we know about what works and what doesn't in development. If confirmed I will bring a focus on data and evidence, as well as the ability to iterate quickly on lessons learned.

During my time at USAID, I had the privilege to work with dedicated and knowledgeable professionals, who regularly go above and beyond the call of duty. If confirmed, I will empower their efforts and contribute to a culture where respect, equity, diversity and inclusion are part of our values and the way that we operate, both here and abroad.

Since leaving the Obama administration, I've worked on the barriers to inclusion and opportunity faced by workers here in the United States.

We often draw lines between so-called developed and developing, between the Global North and Global South, but in truth, there is no bright line when it comes to the crippling effects of poverty.

The need for inclusive, sustainable growth is as real in Appalachia as it is in Antigua.

Thank you for the opportunity to testify before you today, and I look forward to your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Thank you, all. Let me start with a series of questions on behalf of the full committee. And a simple yes or no from each of you, but would suffice. I have these questions that speak to the importance of—that this committee places on responsiveness by all officials in the Executive Branch, and that we expect and will be seeking from you. So I would ask each of you to provide just a yes or no answer.

Do you agree to appear before this committee and make officials from your office available to the committee and designated staff when invited?

Mr. SALAZAR. Yes.

Ms. ESCOBARI. Yes.

Ambassaador LU. Yes.

Ms. LEWIS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you commit to keep this committee fully and currently informed about the activities under your purview?

Mr. SALAZAR. Yes.

Ms. ESCOBARI. Yes.

Ambassador Lu:

Ms. LEWIS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you commit to engaging in meaningful consultation while policies are being developed, not just providing a notification after the fact?

Ambassaador LU. Yes.

Ms. ESCOBARI. Yes.

Mr. SALAZAR. Yes:

Ms. LEWIS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And finally, do you commit to promptly responding to request for briefings and information requested by the committee and its designated staff?

Mr. SALAZAR. Yes.

Ms. ESCOBARI. Yes.

Ambassaador LU. Yes.

Ms. LEWIS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. All right, thank you. All right, let me start off then, a round of five minutes.

Secretary Salazar, in the last four years, there were serious problems in the U.S. cooperation with Mexico on migration issues, and previous administration threatened Mexico with sanctions over migration, implemented policies that forced asylum seekers to remain in dangerous Mexican border communities during their application process, and signed a series of agreements whose contents have never been provided in full to Congress.

Some of these policies, in my view, were morally reprehensible as well as potentially on lawful. And while the Biden administration has taken steps to put things on a better path, we need a holistic strategy to strengthen bilateral cooperation on migration issues, and ensure that the United States upholds its international obligations and domestic laws.

So can you take a moment? You referenced it somewhat in your own personal history, but to lay out the vision of how you view the United States and Mexico working together to have a productive and respectful manner to address the challenges related to irregular migration?

Mr. SALAZAR. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. We need to find the synergy with Mexico to deal with a shared set of challenges. For Mexico there is displacement underway with people leaving Mexico and coming into this country because of a lack of opportunity there. The Mexican Government has an interest in making sure that their people stay there. No one would want to be going away from their home to a country far away unless they were fleeing poverty, or violence, or other forms of distress.

And so what we need to do is to have a high-level dialogue with Mexico to address both the short-term issues that currently deal with issue of irregular migration, but also as the President and the Vice President have said, dealing with the longer-term issues of the root causes, and so working with my colleagues, hopefully if I get confirmed in the State Department, including the panel who is here today, so Secretary Blinken, and the President, and the Vice President, we hope to bring about that kind of dialogue that creates a holistic strategy to deal with the issues of migration.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me turn to the question of violence and crime, violence and the influence of organized crime in Mexico have reached highly concerning levels. In the lead up to the June mid-term elections, over 100 politicians were murdered, 36 of whom were running for office. These trend lines and the serious implications for our national security mandate that we find ways to strengthen U.S.-Mexico security cooperation.

There are areas for easy—there are areas for easy consensus, such as strengthening efforts to address financial crimes tied to the drug trade, and expanding bilateral efforts to combat arms trafficking from the U.S. to Mexico.

However, in other areas, we face potential obstacles to improving security cooperation, including a new Mexican law approved in December that appears to threaten bilateral cooperation and the linkages between drug traffickers and senior Mexican officials, as evidenced in the arrest of General Cienfuegos last year. I trust that upon your confirmation, you will give these issues your full attention, and keep the committee informed.

Mr. SALAZAR. Mr. Chairman, yes, I will. This is an area where the administration is already engaged in high-level dialogues with Mexico on how we deal with these shared issues. And it is something that this committee obviously will be involved in. So I very much look forward to working with the administration and you to find the solutions.

The CHAIRMAN. And finally, there is new data from the Center for Disease Control and Prevention, showing that in 2020 over 93,000 Americans died of drug overdoses in the United States, making it the most lethal year for overdoses on record, opioids, and fentanyl in particular pose highly lethal risk to our citizens, and the U.S. Government has to undertake every effort possible to address this tragedy.

We have to improve domestic to address illicit drug consumption, and we must expand efforts to combat the scourge of illicit production and trafficking of fentanyl and other opioids.

Data indicates that drug traffickers are increasingly shipping fentanyl precursors from China to Mexico, where drug trafficking organizations are producing fentanyl and trafficking it to the United States. Given the threat to U.S. citizens posed by illicit fentanyl trafficking, I also trust you will raise this issue at the highest levels with Mexican officials upon your confirmation.

Mr. SALAZAR. I will do, Mr. Chairman.

All right, Ms. Lewis, just a quick question for you, I have several, but I want to go to the ranking member. The informal review process for arm sales has existed for decades, and is a vital consultative relationship between this committee and the Bureau of Political Military Affairs to work through questions, issues, and concerns about proposed arm sales before they are formally notified to Congress.

That relationship suffered under the last administration, but it has improved dramatically under Secretary Blinken. Do I have your commitment to continue and deepen this consultation process with this committee?

Ms. LEWIS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The last administration infamously attempted to evade congressional oversight on multiple arms sales to Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates by abusing authorities intended only for emergency. There was no serious argument that these sales qualified as emergencies under the law. And this episode I would expect should never be repeated.

Do you commit to only recommend using the emergency authorities under the Arms Export Control Act in true emergency situations, and not in an effort to evade Congress?

Ms. LEWIS. Yes.

Senator Risch?

Senator RISCH. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Secretary Salazar, as you transition into this I am wondering if you are familiar with the backlog of U.S. extradition requests that the United States has out to Mexico. My state in particular has one unique case, but others also. We are struggling a bit with this, and certainly you can blame part of it on COVID, but they also seem to drag their feet.

Are you familiar with this issue? And if not, I assume you will commit to get on board with it and see if we cannot move this along a little better.

Mr. SALAZAR. Yes, Senator Risch. I am generally familiar with the issue. I will say that, as Colorado attorney general, I worked closely with your attorney general, now Attorney General Wasden, to develop among the attorneys general the—at the state level with our counterparts in Mexico, the Article 4 prosecution units, which now exist in many of the attorneys Generals' offices around the country.

And so I would look forward to bringing that experience in terms of the bilateral relationship to make sure that the extradition process as under the Constitution, actually are implemented.

Senator RISCH. I appreciate that. And certainly, that work that you did is one of the things that is driving all of this, and that is that it is streamlining the process, but it is still not moving as fast as we would like to see it. So appreciate your thoughts on that. And I hope you will move forward.

Do you have any thoughts on the—the chairman made reference to this, a number of—I understand this is an internal issue within Mexico, but I think Americans were stunned to hear that in this electoral season, which they had their elections, I believe, on June 6th, and on the run-up to that there were 88 candidates assassinated who were running. I mean this is—this is not a hallmark of a democracy by any stretch of the imagination. What are your thoughts on that?

Mr. SALAZAR. Thank you, Senator Risch. We need to make sure that we have a strong democracy here at home in the United States, and also that in Mexico, they are a sovereign, and we respect their sovereignty, but they, too, have a shared interest in making sure that the violence, including the assassinations of the last—that occurred during the last election are something that does not happen.

And so it is something that I am certain we will be able to work with the Mexican Government as we enter into the dialogues between the United States and Mexico to address the issues of violence.

Senator RISCH. Thank you.

Ambassador Lu, I want to talk for a minute about our withdrawal from Afghanistan. I noted this just within the last 24, 48 hours, the Taliban met with the Chinese, a delegation from China. And I do not know what was on the agenda. I can about assure you what was not on the agenda was human rights, or treatment of the Uyghurs. What are your thoughts as far as China is now moving into that vacuum?

Ambassaador LU. Senator Risch, first thank you for your attention and interest in this important issue. I read with concern the same press articles about the Chinese meeting with the Taliban. I know that the countries surrounding Afghanistan, including China, share many of the same concerns we have about the deteriorating situation there.

I can assure you, if confirmed, I will do everything in my power to encourage those countries to be messaging directly to the Taliban that any recognition, any assistance, any support is contingent upon the Taliban's participation in a peace process that results in a negotiated political settlement, as well as respect for the progress that has been made over the last years in respecting minority rights, the rights of women and girls, and counterterrorism.

We do face the challenge of independent countries with different views in that region. But I firmly believe we share a common goal of having stability and peace in Afghanistan.

Senator RISCH. Thank you for your thoughts on that. My personal view, I think it is going to be a heavy lift trying to convince the Taliban that they will respect the gains that have been made in that country for women's rights. But it is our duty to press on with that. And I am encouraged to hear your words in that regard. I expect that that is what you will do.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I yield back.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Kaine?

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair, Ranking Member Risch, and congratulations to the nominees. What a wonderful panel.

I am particularly happy to see my longtime friend, Senator Salazar, and also Ms. Lewis, who is just a stellar part of the Senate family, it is always nice to see you, and a member of the Senate family on the other side of the dais, being nominated for a position for which their work entitles them. So congratulations to all of you.

Senator Salazar, let me start with you, with respect to one particular challenging aspect of the U.S.-Mexico relationship right now, and that is the targeting of the press and journalists in Mexico. I place a real high emphasis on protecting freedom of the press. Senator Graham and I introduced a bill in May, the International Press Freedom Bill to help make journalists safer overseas, and even create a special visa category to enable threatened journalists to find safe Haven in the United States.

I am really concerned about attacks on journalists. And for years Mexico has been the deadliest country in the world for journalists. Eight journalists were killed in 2020. Three have been killed so far this year. I took a CODEL recently with six members, bipartisan, in Mexico at the beginning of July. And we met with civil society groups and groups of journalists, and they really laid out their concerns about this.

Often the attacks are unsolved. They do not necessarily believe the attacks are by the Government, but they are often by criminal groups who are not then investigated. And they feel like there is a sort of impunity when it comes to analyses, and investigation, and certainly prosecution of these attacks.

There is a unit within the—equivalent of the Attorney General's Office in Mexico that is supposed to focus on these attacks, but it is widely criticized for solving one or two high-profile cases, and then letting others go unaddressed.

Should you be confirmed, and I will do all I can to make sure that you are, how might you address this particular issue to try to promote more safety for those journalists in Mexico?

Mr. SALAZAR. Thank you, Senator Kaine, and thank you as well for your long-time service, and friendship, and guidance over the years on so many issues. You raise an issue that is of a very serious nature. Here in this country we all celebrate the fact that we have a First Amendment, and that we have freedom of the press. And it is something that is one of the most enshrined values of our society, and of democratic societies.

And so when those who are moving forward with the reporting of the news, the journalists that you speak about have to live under threat and are in a position where their reporting ends up getting trampled upon in some way, by whoever it does it. We have a shared interest with Mexico, and Mexico, from my point of view, does not want to tolerate what is happening now with some of the violence against journalists.

So I would commit to you, Senator Kaine, that I would work with the Mexican Government, at all levels to address this issue, and work closely with you to make sure that we are addressing this issue, not only in Mexico, but around the world.

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Senator Salazar. And here is a question for both Ms. Escobari and Senator Salazar, and maybe, Ms. Escobari, I will start with you.

The U.S. is going to host the Summit for the Americas which, it happens every three or four years, the timing is a little bit variable now as to whether it will be late '21 or early '22. The U.S. has not hosted it since 1994. I think it is a particularly important time to have the Summit for the Americas because of COVID, and vaccine diplomacy, and backsliding democracies, and street unrests in many nations, so it is a really important time.

Mr. Chair, I really look forward to taking up the Brian Nichols nomination soon. I know it was held over today at Senator Cruz's request, but for the U.S. to host the Summit for the Americas without a confirmed State Department Head over the Western Hemisphere Division would be a challenge.

But as you think about participating, either from the USAID space or from—as Ambassador of Mexico and a Summit for the Americas, what would be the kinds of things that you would like to see on the agenda in that summit?

Ms. ESCOBARI. Thank you, Senator. And for your commitment to development through many years, and there are many priorities in the region. I think just to start I would say that COVID at times feels like priority one, two, and three, just because it has ravaged the region. The reasons are structural reasons why that has been the case, high urbanization, you know, informality, poor health systems, but really it has had not only the highest rates of deaths, but also the highest contractions of GDP anywhere in the world.

So the ability together with the region, with our help, with other allies internationally, to help in the procurement of vaccines, and in the distribution of vaccines, and eventually in the manufacturing of vaccines, and their safe and equitable distribution, I think would be at the top of that list.

Senator KAINE. I will submit the second half of the question to Senator Salazar, for the record, since I am over my time. But I appreciate the opportunity to visit with you all. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Mr. SALAZAR. Mr. Chairman, might I just make a quick response to his question since I think it is relevant to most of the committee members?

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, of course.

Mr. SALAZAR. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you, Senator Kaine.

The Summit of the Americas to me represents a great opportunity for Canada, the United States and Mexico to really stand up for the North American Continent. So as I participate in that process, if I am confirmed by the Senate, expected on the agenda, we will be talking about economic issues, jobs, trade, economic opportunity, migration and how we deal with those issues, both from Canada and from Mexico, the borders.

I imagine we should be talking and we will be talking about security, given the high level dialogues that are going on. But in addition to that, the whole issue of conservation and environment. The shared borders are political borders, but the environment, and the ecology, transborder into Canada, transborder into Mexico are also very important. And so how we deal with that issue, in my view, should be a part of what we focus on, on the Summit for North America.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. I understand we have Senator Young with us, virtually.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, chairman. And welcome to our nominees.

Senator Salazar, when I served along our Southern Border as a Marine Corps officer in the mid-1990s, I saw first-hand the impact of the border crisis on our own country, and on those who were crossing our southern border.

Sadly, the scale of the crisis has become much greater today. This has indeed become what you might characterize as a 50-state border crisis. The vast majority of migrants I understand are not coming from Mexico, but from other countries further south. And that means that our neighbor, Mexico, is suffering from a migration crisis of its own, including securing its own southern border, addressing humanitarian issues, just like we are, and dealing with the economic stresses of a surging migration across their southern states.

The task is made even more challenging for that government, by the presence of predatory criminal trafficking groups in the region. How do you view Mexico's responsibility, Mr. Senator, inactions to secure its southern border? And if you can speak to the largest enforcement gaps where Mexico needs to focus to gain greater supervision over its southern border, I would really appreciate that.

Mr. SALAZAR. Thank you very much, Senator Young. And thank you as well for your service.

You start from a reality that we are facing with—facing in this country and have faced for a very long time, you described the situation at the border back in the 1990s, when you were serving around the border. And the reality of it is that these issues have been with us for a very long time. And that really underscores an important role of this committee, and a very important priority for the President and for the Vice President.

And that is, long term, looking at the root causes of what is creating this problem. We have had these challenges for a very long time. And as you say, a very much affecting Mexico in terms of the migrant trail that we now see going across Mexico. So how we work with Mexico to develop a strategy that is effective both for the short term and the long term will be one of the highest priorities that I will take on as Ambassador to Mexico.

The Mexican Government has said clearly that—and are providing significant resources into securing their own Southern border. They have said, and are working on trying to help their—the Central American countries to the south. And so we need to succeed on that mission in a collaborative way with Mexico, so that we can address the problem for the long term.

And I commit, Senator Young, to working with you and the members of this committee to make sure we get that done.

Senator YOUNG. Well, thank you for that commitment. And I am appreciative of that. I know other members of the committee are as well.

Let me dive into a couple of specifics. There are networks of spotters, guides, informants all within Mexico that are so severely degrading efforts of the U.S. Border Patrol to try and secure that border, which I think is in the interest of course just not—not just of the United States, but also of our Mexican neighbor.

So if confirmed, what will you do to improve coordination and cooperation between the U.S. and Mexican Border Patrol authorities?

Mr. SALAZAR. Senator Young, that underscores the importance of what the Biden administration is doing with Secretary Blinken and others, engaging in the high-level dialogue around security and violence issues. And we expect that we will spend a good amount of our time working on those issues. If I am fortunate enough to get confirmed by the United States Senate, I commit to you that that will be one of the highest priority issues.

Senator YOUNG. If you look at the surge that has occurred, really since earlier this year, I do understand this is an ongoing, long-standing problem, as I acknowledged from the beginning, but there has been a surge from the beginning of this year. Why does it appear that Mexico has been less willing to work with the Biden administration on this immigration, unauthorized, than the Trump administration?

Mr. SALAZAR. Senator Young, I think as Chairman Risch said a few minutes ago, we need to have a holistic approach to the issues in Mexico. It is more than just the issue of securing the border. We need to have a safe, secure, and efficient border. And Mexico shares that interest with us, we share that interest, the administration is working hard to develop a northerly and fair and humane system of migration into this country. And we need to make sure that we are working together with Mexico and with the U.S. Senate to address that challenge that has been around for a very long time.

Senator YOUNG. Okay. I thank you for your time. I thank you for your service. You did not answer my final question about why it appears that Mexico has been less willing to work with the Biden administration, apparently, on this issue than the Trump administration. So perhaps if you want to weave that into your future comments, you can. Thank you so much.

Mr. SALAZAR. I am happy to elaborate, Senator. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Senator van Hollen.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Risch; and congratulations to all of you on your nominations.

Senator Salazar, great to see you back, thanks for stepping up again. We have just five minutes. I am going to concentrate my time on situation in South and Central Asia.

Ambassador Lu, thank you for your terrific service as a member of the Foreign Service. You have made us proud.

I see that Secretary Blinken is now in India to discuss a wide range of issues that are important to the United States-Indian relationship, and to discuss our common interests in the Quad. And I support that initiative.

I would like to focus on the situation in Pakistan and Afghanistan. And I welcome your statement that our relationship with Pakistan should be beyond the one-dimensional security lens. And you indicate that, if confirmed, you will build on our long history of friendship with Pakistan to advance human rights, religious freedom, counterterrorism cooperation, and an improved business environment for American investors.

And I look forward to working with you to achieve those goals. Of course, a key issue that impacts the United States, Afghanistan, Pakistan, and the surrounding area, is the U.S. withdrawal of troops from Afghanistan. And what that means. We had Ambassador Khalilzad before this committee in late April. And I just want to see if you are on the same page with him as to the situation here. So I have a couple of very, yes/no questions.

First, do you agree that if Afghanistan descends into total chaos, even more than the conflict we see today, that that could mean an influx of thousands of refugees into Pakistan?

Ambassaador LU. Yes.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Okay. And do you agree that it is in Pakistan's interest to achieve stability and a political settlement in Afghanistan?

Ambassaador LU. Yes, absolutely.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. And do you agree with Ambassador Khalilzad that in the Doha talks, Pakistan has facilitated the discussions between the Afghan Government and the Taliban?

Ambassaador LU. Yes. The African Government and the—certainly the Taliban and the United States, and I think we would like to see Pakistan do even more to facilitate Taliban's involvement in talks with other Afghan leaders. Yeah.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. And would you agree that a political settlement is the only viable long-term path forward?

Ambassaador LU. A hundred percent, yes.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. All right. So, one of the things that some of us were proposed on a bipartisan basis, Senator Young from Indiana, Senator Cantwell, myself, and others, is the idea to give all parties some kind of hope and a better economic future. People in Afghanistan, people in those border regions of Pakistan. And the idea is to establish what we call Reconstruction Opportunity Zones.

And the idea is that textiles and certain other goods that are produced and manufactured in those areas would have duty-free access to the United States. In order to establish the potential of a peace dividend and a good future for people in the region.

Ambassador Khalilzad said he supported the concept. I know the administration has been looking at it, had interest in pursuing this with you and the administration. Have you had a chance to look at their proposal, and what you think it could mean in terms of, you know, building a better future?

Ambassaador LU. Senator Van Hollen, first let me say huge thanks on behalf of my colleagues at the State Department. It is wonderful to have such a strong supporter of our relations with South Asia sitting in the U.S. Senate.

I believe strongly that enhanced economic integration is one of the keys to a durable peace in Afghanistan and throughout the region. I support a deepening of economic ties between Afghanistan and Pakistan. And if confirmed, I will work to expand trade and investment between these two countries and the United States. I believe we should be exploring all of the options on the table.

I am personally very interested in the legislation that you and other members of the Senate have proposed. And I look forward, if confirmed, to be providing technical feedback and dialogue to you and other members of the committee, from State Department, Department of Congress, and the USTR.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you. Do we have your commitment that you and the State Department would provide our staff with technical feedback on the legislation?

Ambassaador LU. Absolutely.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you. Now, just in closing, you know, I think we have established the important role Pakistan can play in trying to facilitate some kind of negotiated settlement in Afghanistan. I think all of us hope for the best, although we all understand that there are huge risks that we are witnessing right now. But I cannot understand why, given that importance, President Biden has not yet contacted directly and called the Prime Minister Khan. Can you explain that? It is a mystery to me.

Ambassaador LU. Senator, I completely agree with you, the dialogue is essential between the United States and Pakistan at a high level. As you know, there have been several high-level administration discussions with Pakistan to include multiple engagements by Secretary Blinken with the Pakistani Foreign Minister. These talks have focused on critical issues.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Mr. Ambassador, I do not—I am aware of all that but, as you know, the President has reached out to lots of foreign leaders. Given the importance of the future developments in Afghanistan to us, given the importance of the relationship with Pakistan, it seems to me a totally unforced error that the President of the United States has not made that phone call. There is no need for you to comment. I appreciate your service.

And thank you, Mr. Chairman, and Ranking Member.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Cruz?

Senator CRUZ. Thank you, Ms. Chairman. Congratulations to each of the nominees. Senator Salazar, good to see you. I enjoyed visiting with you yesterday in my office.

As you know, I am increasingly concerned about what appears to be a deliberate and a systematic campaign by the Mexican Government to undermine American companies and especially American energy companies. Just a few weeks ago the Mexican Government gave its state oil firm, Pemex, a major-shared oil find, over a private consortium led by Houston-based, Talos Energy, which had first discovered the crude and had already invested nearly $350 million in the project.

This decision was just one of a series of moves that the Mexican Government has pursued to roll back Mexico's historic 2013 energy sector liberalization reforms, which benefited both them and us. It goes without saying that these moves are in significant tension with both the Mexican Constitution and the USMCA.

On July 29th, I joined Senator Cornyn, Senator Inhofe, and sent a letter to President Biden highlighting these concerns. The next morning President Lopez Obrador dismissed the letter saying quote, "There is really no problem, and that the concerns are insignificant".

Let me start by asking you, do you agree with the Mexican President that the concerns about Mexico's tilt away from U.S. companies towards Mexican Government control of the energy sector towards open hostility to American companies, do you agree with the Mexican President that those concerns are insignificant?

Mr. SALAZAR. Senator Cruz, the rule of law is important, obviously important to us here in the United States, and to interests here that are investing in Mexico, and my understanding is the ambassador, the U.S. Trade Representative for the United States has said that energy is covered under the United States-Canada-Mexico Agreements. So I think what we need to do is to raise these issues and make sure that we are protecting American investment in Mexico.

Senator CRUZ. So I am deeply concerned that right now the Mexican Government is feeling no meaningful pressure from the Biden administration to reverse its campaign, to undermine American energy firms, and so what I would like to ask you, is first of all, to what degree do you assess that the Mexican Government's moves in the energy sector are harmful both to them and us?

Mr. SALAZAR. Senator Cruz, I intend to work on these issues, if confirmed, and if I get your support, coming out of this committee, and on the floor of the Senate. You know, I was very involved in the negotiation of the Gulf of Mexico Transboundary Agreement with Secretary Clinton and with the support of President Obama. It was because of those Transboundary Agreements which, frankly, had resolved an issue that had been outstanding for some 50 years, that we have had the investment of the movement that we have had in the energy sector.

It is a complicated issue, but I intend to give it everything that I have to see how we can work with the Mexican Government that are sovereign, I respect their sovereignty, but we will work together to see whether we can find some solution to this challenge.

Senator CRUZ. So if you are confirmed as Ambassador, what specific steps do you expect to take to halt and reverse the Mexican Government's targeting of and discrimination against American energy firms?

Mr. SALAZAR. Yeah, we will work closely with my colleagues in the Biden administration, both in the White House, as well as within USDR, and the State Department, the Commerce Department, to see how we can address these issues.

Senator CRUZ. Do you think it is a problem?

Mr. SALAZAR. It is a problem, sir.

Senator CRUZ. Why is it that the Mexican Government seems to be moving away from American interest, and American priorities, and seems to be moving rapidly away from them in the last six months, during the Biden administration?

Mr. SALAZAR. Senator Cruz, there is a reality that I do not believe that the United States has engaged in the kind of bilateral relationship with Mexico during the last four years under the former administration, or even before that. And so what we need to do is we need to engage in the kinds of dialogues that will make sure that we are developing sustainable issues and a sustainable framework between the United States and Mexico.

We cannot afford to have our relationship with Mexico go into an abyss of dysfunction. And that is in the shared interest of both the United States and Mexico. And I commit to working not only with the President, and the Vice President, my colleagues in the State Department, Secretary Blinken, but with you, to see how we can come up with a kind of framework that will address the issues that this committee, both on the Democratic side, through Senator Menendez, and on the Republican side through Senator Risch, has an interest in dealing with, because if we do not deal with these issues in this very difficult time in the relationship between the U.S. and Mexico, we will be facing some very significant issues on down the road.

Senator CRUZ. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Shaheen.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. And congratulations to each of you on your nominations, we appreciate your willingness to continue in public service.

I am going to give Senator Salazar a little rest for a minute, and start with you, Ms. Lewis. And again, we will miss you with the committee, but are delighted that you are going to be continuing to do your good work.

I think you were with the committee when we passed the Women Peace and Security Act, which I am very proud of. It has been a bipartisan effort. We have seen it starting to be implemented in the Department of Defense, I think less so in the Department of State.

And so can you talk about how you might be able to promote WPS goals and your strategy, if confirmed, to make sure that it is incorporated into global peace operations, and into international military education, conventional weapons, and how you would work with DOD?

Ms. LEWIS. Absolutely. First of all, Senator, thank you so much for your leadership on this issue. You really have been a guiding light for all of us.

In the Bureau of Political Military Affairs, there already has been a focus on this issue. One of the changes they have implemented is to make sure that in the training that we provide that as we look at working with individual militaries, we make sure that the representation of women is equal to the representation of women in their services when we train them. And I was pleased to learn about that. That would be something I would want to continue and grow moving forward.

I also think, as you look at all of the pieces of the work that the Bureau does, other issues such as the great work that the Bureau does demining, making sure that our civilians—civilians are protected from some of these landmines also has a great impact on local communities, but also specifically on women. And I know that is something that they take into consideration.

And then finally, as I said, in my opening statement, I know that really looking at the workforce inside the Bureau would also be something that would be a priority for me. If confirmed, I believe I would be the first woman in this position, but I also am aware that the Bureau has an incredibly talented pool already. And it would be my job to look closely at the unique makeup of this Bureau, which includes civil service, foreign service, also a number of people in uniform who come over, to make sure that we are also looking at the issue of women moving forward and really using the talents of women inside the Bureau.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, thank you. I appreciate that. And look forward to working with you. And as you know, the importance of this initiative is that when women are at the table we are more successful, in conflict areas, in ensuring that success is spread to all elements of the community. So thank you.

Ms. LEWIS. Thank you.

Senator SHAHEEN. Senator Salazar, now that you have caught your breath. As you may be aware, New Hampshire has a real challenge with substance misuse. It has been an issue, not just in our state, but throughout the country. And we saw in 2020 that we had more overdose deaths, drug deaths than we have had any time in our history.

And one of the things that we know in New Hampshire is that many of the illegal substances that come into the United States come in through Mexico. And as I understand, there have been some tensions in recent years with Mexico in terms of how we can best work together to intercept and interdict those drugs. So can you talk a little bit about what your approach would be to addressing that with Mexico?

Mr. SALAZAR. Thank you very much, Senator Shaheen, for the question. The issue of drugs north is something that has been around for a very, very long time. And that issue is exacerbated in part by what China is doing in Mexico with fentanyl.

Senator SHAHEEN. Right.

Mr. SALAZAR. And all of those issues that are affecting the people of New Hampshire, and throughout the United States of America. It is a shared problem between the United States and Mexico, and I commit to working with the Mexican Government, and United States authorities to look for solutions to the problem.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, thank you. I hope you will come back to this committee and let us know what resources we can help you with in order to continue to address that in a successful way.

Mr. SALAZAR. Thank you. I will.

Senator SHAHEEN. And Ambassador Lu, I have been very concerned about what is happening in Afghanistan now, as I am sure you are, as we look at the gains made by the Taliban. And one of my biggest areas of concern is what happens to the women and girls in Afghanistan. It has been one of the greatest successes of our efforts there, not only of the United States but the international community.

So tell me what you think, what more you think we can do as the United States to raise concerns about what is happening there in the international community? How can we support ensuring that the freedoms that women and girls, and other ethnic minorities in the country enjoy now, are not totally erased as the Taliban continue to make gains?

Ambassador LU. Senator Shaheen, I was really moved by your tribute to Afghan women who were killed by the telephone in the hearing in May with Ambassador Khalilzad. I actually knew one of those young women. Fatima Khalil was a senior at the American University of Central Asia in Kyrgyzstan, the posting I just left. I spoke at her graduation, one of the brightest, most capable and self-confident people I have ever met in my life.

She had an American education, spoke fluent English, a worldview that was unlike anyone else. And she could have gone anywhere, done anything. And she decided what she really wanted to do is go back to her home country to work on human rights, and the rights of women and girls, and the Taliban killed her for that.

Senator SHAHEEN. Right.

Ambassaador LU. So it is personal for me, as I know it is for many of us who have worked in and around this region, I share your deep concern about what is happening now in Afghanistan, and the women and girls who are now at risk. I think it is critical that we continue our robust assistance to the programs that we have been running for years in Afghanistan that have promoted such progress over 20 years, training, education, legal services.

But now we have to expand that. We need to look at how we are caring for those who are at risk. And as we know, we are good at doing that all over the world, including in very difficult places, in Cuba, and Russia, and Iran, and North Korea, we need to up our game. And I know there are very smart people in the interagency right now, putting together plans about how we would use the U.S. refugee admissions process, or emergency humanitarian relief to try to mitigate some of these risks. And we look forward, if confirmed, to working with you and other members of Congress to put together that plan.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, thank you. I look forward to that. My time is up, but I just want to relay to you what I heard from some of the women leaders in Afghanistan who were urging us in the United States to have our President, our Vice President, all of our high-level officials speak out in the international community about what the Taliban are doing and raise international awareness and condemnation for what is happening there. So I hope you will agree to do that if confirmed.

Ambassaador LU. Absolutely.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Shaheen. And thank you for your leadership in this disregard. We appreciate your clarity and voice on this all the time.

Some final questions, there is a vote going on.

So, Ms. Lewis, I do not think you would get away that easy. When the Department of Defense through existing authorities, and seeking new ones, has assumed an outside role in providing security assistance to foreign countries, providing foreign assistance is, and in my view, always should be the purview of the Secretary of State and the State Department conferred by diplomats in the service of our foreign policy.

I want to ask you. Will you use all means at your disposal, if confirmed, to conduct oversight on U.S. security assistance for foreign countries, and foreign persons, regardless of which U.S. agency is providing it?

Ms. LEWIS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And if confirmed, will you work closely with the committee to prevent any further loss or duplication of state security assistance authorities?

Ms. LEWIS. Absolutely.

The CHAIRMAN. Okay. All right, one last question. You fully support the Taiwan's Relations Act, is that correct?

Ms. LEWIS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And U.S. support for Taiwan self-defense?

Ms. LEWIS. Absolutely.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you commit to treating Taiwan the same as every other state in the Arms Process Sale?

Ms. LEWIS. Yes, sir, consistent with the Taiwan Relations Act.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.

Ambassador Lu, let me ask you. At this point as the security environment grows more precarious in Afghanistan, what leverage, what efforts can we realistically take to support members of civil society? Senator Shaheen just talked about Afghan women and girls, and I echo that, but also civil society. And what measures can we take to take care of those partners who worked for the National Democratic Institute, the International Republican Institute, CIPI, Internews and IFAS, they do not qualify for special immigrant visas, but they created extraordinary service at all times?

Ambassaador LU. Absolutely. Mr. Chairman, in my first job in the State Department, I worked in the American Consulate in Peshawar, Pakistan. In one of my jobs, I was an admin officer, was to support our staff of our embassy in Kabul, our local staff. And they had long since stopped working in the embassy. The embassy had been closed for three years at that point.

But we maintained the commitment to our people. And that commitment went on for 12 years until we reopened our embassy, we paid their salaries, we took care of them. It is critical that we take care of the people who have shown loyalty, and service to us. Whether that is our own employees, people who have been interpreters and translators for the Military and the State Department, or it is folks that have worked in civil society supporting our programs. These were dangerous jobs even then, and they are even more at risk today.

I hear you on, the fact that they would not qualify for special immigrant visas. I do think there is a discussion within the inter-agency and with the Congress about how to safeguard these people at risk. It is a broad category, and we are looking at the full range of possibilities. The U.S. Refugee Admissions Process, humanitarian parole, humanitarian emergency assistance.

I welcome, if you, sir, or your staff have ideas about how we can make sure we are showing loyalty to those people, who have risked their own safety and their lives to support our common goals. I think it is not something we are going to get done alone as an administration. It will take the administration, plus Congress, and international partners to safeguard all of these people.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I appreciate that. We do, and we will share them. But, you know, these entities that are promoting the core values through the different roles they play, are important to be able to preserve, not only in this case, but send a global message that when you do this work, whatever it is in the world, however dangerous it is, that you in fact will be backed up. And I think that that is incredibly important.

One last question for you, Ambassador, I have been very involved in supporting labor rights in Bangladesh. I appreciate the efforts since the Rana Plaza disaster, but there is a lot of work that remains to make sure, that Made in Bangladesh does not mean made in the blood of Bangladeshi workers.

Do I have your commitment to press the Bangladeshi Government to allow unions to register and function without repression?

Ambassaador LU. Yes, you do, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Okay.

And then finally, Ms. Escobari, I do not want you to think nobody cares about what you are doing. We do a great deal. I think you have extraordinary experience in the development aside of the role that you are going to play and you even referenced it in your remarks. And so I will not dwell on that, but I do want to say that part of what USAID is, it has to do with, particularly in Latin America and the Caribbean, is the democracy side of it. And sometimes at AID, not under Samantha Power, but in the past I have feared that we have lost the democracy side of the USAID mission.

When I see protests in Cuba, when I see what is happening in Haiti, when I see what is happening in Nicaragua, and elsewhere, I see a tremendous backsliding on the question of democratic governance and human rights. Can you speak a little bit as to how you will see your mission at AID in that regard?

Ms. ESCOBARI. Senator, thank you for your question, and for always speaking very forcefully on behalf of democratic rights and accountability in the region.

I do see good governance as a prerequisite to progress on everything else. Corruption is corrosive for many reasons, but in particular because it undermines citizens' beliefs that governments can deliver for them. USAID's efforts have focused on the—you know, in supporting civil society, human rights defenders, free press, all of these efforts reinforce citizens' demand for democracy.

And on the supply side, as you know, there are also great efforts on just improving the rule of law and making it more available. And if confirmed, I will double down on those efforts, and also pursue other new approaches that that can address the recent backsliding. That is very particular in key—in key countries that you mentioned.

The CHAIRMAN. As I said to Administrator Power, I am keen on this issue, and I have both put in language support to help the Agency as well as in the appropriations process, so we look forward to working with you with that.

Senator Cardin?

Senator CARDIN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. And let me thank all four of our nominees for their willingness to serve and continue to serve our country. And I thank your families.

I wanted, particularly, to acknowledge and thank Jessica Lewis for her extraordinary help to me and to our committee. You have the diplomatic skills to take on this new assignment. If you can handle the egos of the members of this committee, you can handle any challenge that you might confront in the State Department. So we wish you only the best.

It is good to see my former colleague, Ken Salazar, before us. We always enjoyed his company in the Senate, and look forward to his service to our Nation in Mexico.

I am going to ask one question to Mr. Salazar and Ms. Ms. Escobari. And that is to deal with corruption.

Mexico is a great neighbor of ours. They have a serious problem on protection of human rights, particularly journalists, they have a corruption issue. Our hemisphere, unfortunately, has a systemic corruption issue in many democratic states. And I know the President has identified corruption as a national security core interest.

We have in this committee passed additional resources to deal with corruption.

I just really want to underscore the importance of this subject in your portfolios. I had a chance to talk to Mr. Salazar yesterday, or the day before, and we had a, I think, a good conversation on this subject.

So, Ms. Escobari, if you could just share with us your strategies for how you are going to deal with countries that have free elections, but have elected—have not been able to deal with systemic corruption, which has led to significant erosion of human rights and stability in these nations.

Ms. ESCOBARI. You know, as I mentioned in my last comments, I do think good governance is a prerequisite for progress on everything else. In the last quarter of the 20th century, Latin America actually saw the greatest gains in liberal democracy, but these gains were not accompanied with the investments in human capital, physical capital to really create a middle class. And now we have political and economic elites that remain entrenched, corruption permeates everyday transactions. And unequal growth has left citizens frustrated. And this has become really fertile ground for authoritarian and populous leaders.

So I think that focusing on the ability of these states to deliver the goods and services, but also to support civil society, to hold those governments accountable to deliver is the kind of ingredients that we need to strengthen rule of law at a time that all the pressures on these economies make them increasingly fragile.

Senator CARDIN. One of the areas that we really need to improve upon, is to build a capacity in our embassies, in each of these countries, to be able to identify the weaknesses of the countries in which they are representing the United States in, and to be able to work with our different agencies as to how we can work with the country to make significant progress on any corruption issues.

It seems to me that is one of the areas that should be a priority of the position you have been nominated for. And just again, we welcome your commitment to really work to make a major difference in our capacity in each of these countries.

Ms. ESCOBARI. Yes. You have my commitment. And I think it is really beneficial that USAID has a presence and has had a presence in these countries for many years, and can add that perspective to regional embassies.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Cardin.

That brings this nominations hearing to a close. The record for the hearing will remain open until the close of business on Thursday, July 29th, which is tomorrow, I would urge members to get their questions in for the record today.

I would urge the nominees, if you are in receipt of questions for the record that you answer them fully and expeditiously so that the committee can consider your nominations before a business meeting.

With the thanks of the committee, this hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 11:47 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO HON. KENNETH LEE SALAZAR BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Violence and Crime in Mexico

Question. Violence and the influence of organized crime in Mexico have reached highly concerning levels. In the lead up to the June midterm elections, over 100 politicians were murdered, 36 of whom were running for office. These trend lines and the serious implications for our national security mandate that we must find ways to strengthen U.S.-Mexico security cooperation.

- Would you please lay out your priorities for strengthening our security cooperation with Mexico?

Answer. I understand U.S.-Mexico security cooperation remains a top national security priority, and neither country can successfully confront transnational organized crime alone. It is critical that efforts to dismantle transnational criminal organizations, address illicit drug production and trafficking, reduce impunity and corruption, and strengthen the rule of law receive the full cooperation of the Mexican Government. If confirmed, I look forward to comprehensive conversations with the Mexican Government on how we can best align our security and law enforcement efforts, so this cooperation deepens and works for the benefit of both our nations. I will also not hesitate to raise any concerns that I believe to be obstacles to our bilateral cooperation.

If confirmed, I also look forward to engaging in a review with appropriate U.S. and Mexican officials to ensure specific programs are effective in addressing our shared challenges, and will look for opportunities with Mexico to make additional adjustments to our programming where necessary and appropriate to reflect changes in conditions and priorities.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. KENNETH LEE SALAZAR BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. In April, the Supreme Court of Mexico unanimously ruled in favor of the U.S. position concerning a long running trade dispute with Mexico involving fresh potato exports. If confirmed, would you make it a priority to ensure that the regulatory process in Mexico reinstates and maintain market access for U.S. fresh potato exports and U.S. potato growers in general?

Answer. If confirmed, one of my top priorities as U.S. Ambassador to Mexico will be securing and maintaining fair market access for U.S. businesses in Mexico. Agricultural trade between the United States and Mexico is an important component to our overall trade relationship, and as Ambassador, I would work with the U.S. Trade Representative and the Department of Agriculture to ensure U.S. agricultural products are not disadvantaged.

Question. American investors in Mexico are experiencing significant and growing regulatory challenges under the administration President Lopez Obrador, including increasing difficulties in getting permits for a range of activities. These actions are contrary to Mexico's obligations under the U.S.-Mexico-Canada Trade Agreement. If confirmed, would you make it a priority to ensure that Mexico abides by its obligations under the USMCA?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to working closely with the U.S. Trade Representative and other U.S. agencies to ensure Mexico fully adheres to its commitments under the USMCA. Mexico is one of the United States' most important trading partners and represents a crucial market for U.S. businesses. As Ambassador, one of my top priorities would be ensuring the full implementation of the USMCA.

Question. Mexico has a broader definition of refugee than the United States and the 1951 U.N. Refugee Convention. For example, Mexico recognizes a right to asylum based on "generalized violence; foreign aggression; internal conflicts; massive violations of human rights; and other circumstances leading to a serious disturbance of public order." As a result, many would-be asylum seekers arriving in Mexico from Central America could qualify as refugees in Mexico. If confirmed, do you commit to ensure the Government of Mexico enforces its own legal obligations towards would-be asylum seekers arriving in Mexico?

Answer. If confirmed as Ambassador to Mexico, I will work with colleagues at the State Department and international organization partners to continue to support efforts to improve access to protection, humanitarian relief, and local integration opportunities for displaced persons and vulnerable migrants in Mexico. I understand that, through its international organization (IO) partners, the Department supports humanitarian assistance for refugees, asylum seekers, and vulnerable migrants. This assistance includes support for local integration for refugees and asylum seekers, as well as helping Mexico to strengthen the capacity of its asylum system.

Question. In June 2020, the Treasury Department designated a number of Mexico-based individuals and entities that were part of a sanctions evasion network supporting the corrupt regime of Nicolas Maduro in Venezuela. Earlier this year, there were reports that at least three Cuban-flagged oil tankers designated by the Treasury Department for transporting Venezuelan oil to Cuba have been serviced in the Mexican port of Veracruz, in apparent violation of U.S. sanctions. If confirmed, do you commit to ensure robust understanding and enforcement of U.S. sanctions policy in Mexico?

Answer. Mexico can play a critical role in helping to address some of the most complex issues in the region pertaining to democracy, governance, human rights, and the rule of law. Building an effective U.S.-Mexico partnership requires ensuring Mexico has a fulsome understanding of all U.S. policies, including those related to sanctioning authorities. If confirmed, I will ensure that the Government of Mexico fully understands U.S. sanctioning authorities and policies. I will also commit to working with Mexico to advance democratic and human rights priorities throughout the region.

Question. Mexican transnational criminal organizations are producing increased quantities of fentanyl and cartels, such as the Sinaloa and the New Generation Jalisco Cartel, are the primary trafficking groups responsible for smuggling fentanyl into the U.S. from Mexico. If confirmed, do you commit to encourage Mexico take meaningful actions to tackle transnational criminal activities throughout its territory, including the production and trafficking of fentanyl and other illicit narcotics? Do you commit to periodically review International Narcotics and Law Enforcement programs in Mexico to ensure they are focusing on meaningfully reducing the flow of fentanyl and other synthetic opioids to the U.S.?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to encourage Mexico to take meaningful actions to tackle transnational criminal activities throughout its territory, including the production and trafficking of fentanyl and other illicit narcotics.

If confirmed, I also commit to periodically reviewing INL programs, and all U.S. Government interagency counterdrug efforts in Mexico, to ensure they are focused on meaningfully reducing the flow of fentanyl and other synthetic opioids to the United States.

Question. In December 2020, Mexico approved reforms to its national security law, limiting the power of foreign law enforcement agents in the country and restricting their ability to operate. If confirmed, do you commit to ensuring effective law enforcement cooperation with Mexico?

Answer. Yes. I understand U.S.-Mexico security cooperation remains a top national security priority. It is critical that efforts to dismantle transnational criminal organizations, reduce impunity and corruption, and strengthen the rule of law in Mexico receive the full cooperation of the Mexican Government. If confirmed, I look forward to comprehensive conversations with the Mexican Government to ensure our law enforcement cooperation deepens and works for the benefit of the United States and Mexico.

Question. In the State Department's 2021 Trafficking in Persons Report, Mexico was identified as Tier 2 due to its overall increasing efforts but still not fully meeting the minimal standards for eliminating trafficking. What steps would you take as Ambassador, if confirmed, to engage with the host government and civil society organizations on bolstering efforts to improve prosecution and protection efforts?

Answer. Trafficking in persons (TIP) is a heinous crime perpetuated throughout the region that must be addressed through a holistic approach. The Department of State supports various programs that help develop the capacity of investigators and prosecutors at the state and federal levels to combat this crime. The State Department also supports efforts to prevent human trafficking and assist victims through support for shelters.

If confirmed, I pledge to support the administration's policy to counter TIP in Mexico, including the implementation of the Operations Group on Human Smuggling and Human Trafficking that Vice President Harris announced during her June visit to Mexico, and the recommendations from the 2021 Trafficking in Persons Report. I will work with my staff to identify areas where we can make headway in state- and federal-level prosecutions, including prosecutions of forced labor crimes and complicit officials, and in significantly enhancing comprehensive protection services for trafficking victims. I plan to discuss bilateral cooperation on the issue in high-level discussions and under a potential Bilateral Human Rights Dialogue. I will also engage Mexico on its commitments under USMCA's labor chapters, particularly as they pertain to forced labor.

Question. In the State Department's 2020 International Religious Freedom report, Mexico was described as having instances of intolerant behavior towards religious minorities. What is your assessment of this particular issue and if confirmed, how will you work with the Office of International Religious Freedom to bolster religious freedom in-country?

Answer. I understand there were some instances of intolerance towards religious minorities highlighted in the 2020 Religious Freedom Report; however, Mexico has been a strong partner in promoting religious freedom in its own country and the region. If confirmed, I will work closely with the Office of International Religious Freedom to promote and protect religious freedom in Mexico. I pledge to work with the Mexican Government, religious leaders and communities, and civil society to ensure the country maintains momentum on assuring religious freedoms and address the instances where those freedoms may be threatened.

Question. In the State Department's 2020 Human Rights Report, Mexico was identified as having committed severe human rights abuses, including impunity for government and military employees, corruption, torture by security forces, violence against journalists and human rights defenders, and more. If confirmed, what steps will you take to address these instances with the host government?

Answer. The promotion of human rights is central to U.S. national security and prosperity. The United States uses a wide range of diplomatic tools to advance respect for human rights, including working directly with the Mexican Government and civil society. USAID and the Department of State have implemented projects to address various human rights concerns, including forced disappearances, violence against human rights defenders and journalists, and impunity, as well as public diplomacy programs to support and train human rights defenders.

The Department promotes accountability for human rights violations and abuses by implementing human rights-related sanctions and visa ineligibilities, and Leahy Law assistance restrictions. Consistent with U.S. law and Department policy, prior to furnishing assistance to security force units and individuals, all candidates are subject to Leahy vetting to assess if there is credible information of gross violations of human rights. The Department also submits reports consistent with the requirements of the relevant annual appropriations act.

If confirmed, I plan to utilize all the available tools at my disposal to promote human rights in Mexico and support all programs being implemented. I will seek to work with the Government of Mexico to ensure human rights is a central tenet in high-level security discussions, as well as look to relaunch the annual Bilateral Human Rights Dialogue, which last met in December 2017.

Question. How will you direct your embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground?

Answer. Respect for human rights is fundamental, and a free and active press is an integral part of a healthy democracy. The killing of journalists and human rights activist undermines freedoms of expression and association, as well as regional security.

I am committed to supporting efforts to promote respect for human rights and press freedom. Through USAID, the U.S. currently supports Mexico's National Protection Mechanism for Journalists and Human Rights Defenders, and works with state-level counterparts to expand the protection measures available for these groups. USAID also supports the Specialized Prosecutor's Office for Crimes Against Freedom of Expression to investigate and sanction aggressions against journalists and defenders. My understanding is that we also build and support professional networks and provide training to equip journalists to face challenges and professional risks specific to Mexico. Working with the Committee to Protect Journalists, we support training on journalist safety, investigative journalism guidelines, and best practices to increase transparency and accountability.

If confirmed, I will work to promote respect for human rights and the rule of law and reduce impunity. I will continue calls for Mexican authorities to investigate and prosecute those responsible for crimes against journalists and human rights defenders wherever they occur, and will actively engage with civil society organizations working these issues.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. KENNETH LEE SALAZAR BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question. If confirmed, how will you address human rights concerns with the López Obrador administration and ensure that U.S. funds are not supporting policies or entities that are committing abuses?

Answer. The promotion of human rights is central to U.S. national security and prosperity. The United States uses a wide range of diplomatic tools to advance respect for human rights, including working directly with the Mexican Government and civil society. USAID and the Department of State have implemented projects to address various human rights concerns, including forced disappearances, violence against human rights defenders and journalists, and impunity, as well as public diplomacy programs to support and train human rights defenders.

The Department promotes accountability for human rights violations and abuses by implementing human rights-related sanctions and visa ineligibilities, and Leahy Law assistance restrictions. It is my understanding that, prior to furnishing assistance to security force units and individuals, the Department conducts Leahy vetting to assess if there is credible information that such units committed gross violations of human rights. The Department also submits reports consistent with the requirements of the relevant annual appropriations act.

If confirmed, I plan to utilize all the available tools at my disposal to promote human rights in Mexico and support all programs being implemented. I will seek to work with the Government of Mexico to ensure human rights are a central tenet in high-level engagement, as well as look to relaunch the annual Bilateral Human Rights Dialogue, which last met in December 2017.

Question. If confirmed, how will you engage with civil society groups, independent journalists, and human rights defenders that have been targeted by the Government?

Answer. Respect for human rights is fundamental, and a free and active press is an integral part of a healthy democracy. The killing of journalists and human rights activist undermines freedoms of expression and association, as well as regional security.

The Department is committed to supporting efforts to increase respect for human rights and press freedom. Through USAID, we currently support Mexico's National Protection Mechanism for Journalists and Human Rights Defenders and work with state-level counterparts to expand the protection measures available for these groups. USAID also supports the Specialized Prosecutor's Office for Crimes Against Freedom of Expression to investigate and sanction aggressions against journalists and defenders. We also build and support professional networks and provide training to equip journalists to face challenges and professional risks specific to Mexico. Working with the Committee to Protect Journalists, we support training on journalist safety, investigative journalism guidelines, and best practices to increase transparency and accountability.

If confirmed, I will work to promote respect for human rights and the rule of law and end impunity. I will work with the Department to continue calling on Mexican authorities to investigate and prosecute those responsible for crimes against journalists and human rights defenders wherever they occur, and actively engage with civil society organizations working these issues.

Question. How can Congress help advance human rights concerns, including violence against journalists?

Answer. Respect for human rights is fundamental, and a free and active press is an integral part of a healthy democracy. Congress can help advance administration priorities on human rights in Mexico by ensuring the Department and USAID maintain appropriate resource levels for security and development assistance, which include programming on human rights, the protection of journalists, and development of Mexico's capacity to investigate and prosecute aggressions against journalists and human rights defenders.

I would also recommend Congressional members engage with Mexican authorities whenever possible to discuss human rights issues. If confirmed, I would invite Congressional delegations to come to Mexico to observe the human rights situation on the ground.

Question. Will you commit to working with me to advance the Combating Global Corruption Act and to raising the profile of efforts to fight international corruption as a U.S. national security priority, particularly in Mexico?

Answer. I understand Department of State priorities include supporting Mexico in addressing public corruption, transparency, and the rule of law. U.S. assistance programs train justice sector operators; establish, improve, and certify internal affairs departments; increase transparency and accountability through culture of lawfulness and ethics programs; and promote civil society and media participation. I understand all Mexican security officials receiving training or other assistance are subject to Leahy Law human rights vetting. I am also aware that the Department considers human rights, ties to organized crime, and corruption when implementing foreign assistance programs, as well as assesses the applicability of visa ineligibility authorities to target officials involved in significant corruption or gross violations of human rights.

If confirmed, I commit to working with Congress to assess all potential tools that can be deployed to help in the fight against international corruption, as well as discuss potential areas of cooperation on anti-corruption in high-level engagements.

Question. Do you see opportunities to work with the Organization of American States to further our anti-corruption agenda?

Answer. The OAS has a unique and vital role and mandate in the Americas: to promote a hemispheric commitment to representative democracy, human rights, and development and security organization. More than any other multilateral organization, the OAS today is the premier forum through which the member states can work together to improve the lives of our citizens and bring to life the democratic principles articulated in the OAS Charter and the landmark Inter-American Democratic Charter.

I understand the OAS's Inter-American Convention Against Corruption (IACC) adopts a comprehensive approach in which 34 member states work together to fight corruption. There are also opportunities in the OAS to work with countries to review legal frameworks and institutions through the Follow-up Mechanism for the Implementation of the IACC (MESICIC).

With the Lopez Obrador administration having made anti-corruption a central tenet of his administration, if confirmed, I will work to engage with Mexico to ensure we use every available tool at the bilateral and multilateral levels to address corruption.

Question. If confirmed, how will you address corruption concerns with the Lopez Obrador administration and ensure that U.S. funds are not ending up with corrupt entities and individuals?

Answer. The United States supports Mexico's efforts to address corruption, transparency, and the rule of law. President Lopez Obrador has made anticorruption a focal point of his presidency. If confirmed, I will work with the Mexican Government to further discussions on anticorruption efforts and will continue to support U.S. anticorruption programming that assists Mexican Government and civil society efforts to counter corruption at federal, state, and local levels. If confirmed, I, and the Department, will continue to ensure all Mexican security officials receiving training or other assistance are subject to Leahy Law human rights vetting. Furthermore, I will continue to ensure we assess and mitigate the risk of corruption before providing assistance.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. KENNETH LEE SALAZAR BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. What is your view of the current situation in Cuba?

Answer. I have been watching the historic protests in Cuba and the Cuban Government's troubling response very closely. I can assure you that Cuba is among this administration's highest priorities. If confirmed, I will carry out the administration's aims to support peaceful protesters; to denounce human rights abuses, including violence, detentions, and Internet shutdowns and censorship; and to urge countries—even those opposed to U.S. sanctions—to support the Cuban protestors' demands for human rights and fundamental freedoms enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. These are universal values every country should support.

Answer. If confirmed, will you press the Mexican Government to support the bipartisan U.S. policy on Cuba?

Answer. If confirmed, I will carry out the administration’s aims to denounce human rights abuses, including violence, detentions, and Internet shutdowns and censorship; and to urge countries—even those strongly opposed to U.S. sanctions—to support Cuban protestors’ demands for human rights and fundamental freedoms enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Question. In your opinion, how has implementation of the USCMA been affected by the COVID–19 pandemic?

Answer. While the COVID–19 pandemic limited the possibility of in-person collaboration, I commend our interagency colleagues and their counterparts in Mexico and Canada for finding ways to advance the USMCA implementation process despite the challenges. For example, Mexico took significant steps to undertake its herculean task of labor reform. While the recent report shows there is still work to be done, what was accomplished in establishing the labor courts, especially under the circumstances, is laudable. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will work with the interagency and our Mexican counterparts to continue the implementation process and address the areas where COVID–19 has complicated our joint efforts.

Question. If confirmed, what steps will you take as Ambassador to ensure that economic cooperation with Mexico under USMCA supports the growth of American businesses?

Answer. Since the USMCA entered into force July 1, 2020, I understand it has proven a valuable tool for improving trade relations between the United States, Mexico, and Canada. As Ambassador to Mexico, I will work with the State Department, the U.S. Trade Representative, and other U.S. Government agencies to continue building areas for cooperation and ensure full regulatory compliance with the agreement. I will also prioritize engagement on labor issues and support USTR’s efforts through the Rapid Response Mechanism to ensure U.S. businesses are on an equal footing.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JESSICA LEWIS BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question. How do you see the relationship between making the United States “the security partner of choice” and ensuring that U.S. security partners respect human rights and international humanitarian law, especially when using U.S.-origin defense equipment?

Answer. The President and Secretary Blinken have stated that human rights must be at the center of our foreign policy and have made it clear that the United States will cooperate with allies and partners where our priorities align and not shy away from defending U.S. interests and American values where they do not. Strong U.S. security partnerships around the world come with a multitude of benefits, including the opportunity to positively influence a country’s human rights practices. These relationships allow us to work closely with partners, set an example for human rights standards, and, when appropriate, provide training and education to enhance professionalism and adherence to human rights standards.

If confirmed, I will support assistance to help ensure our partner forces are taking steps to comply with international law and protect human rights. Additionally, I will work to ensure human rights concerns are given full weight in arms transfer decisions.

Question. If confirmed, what will you do to ensure that human rights concerns are given equal weight as other considerations when assessing potential arms sales?

Answer. I understand the Administration is working to develop a new Conventional Arms Transfer (CAT) Policy to ensure arms transfer decisions reflect the Administration’s foreign policy priorities, including the respect for human rights and the rule of law. Promoting the protection of human rights in our arms transfer process bolsters our own national security, as well as that of our partners. If confirmed, I will review the arms transfer decision-making process to ensure human rights concerns are given full weight in arms transfer decisions, in accordance with the CAT Policy. I will also seek to assist partner forces in taking steps to comply with international law, build security sector governance capacity, and protect human rights.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JESSICA LEWIS BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. Does the current global amount, allocation, and geographical distribution of State Department security assistance sufficiently account for the strategic challenges facing the United States and its allies and partners?

Answer. State ensures that its security assistance strategically advances U.S. diplomatic and defense relationships, and that investments in foreign security forces advance U.S. foreign policy and national security interests, within the parameters set by the law and Congress. If confirmed, I commit to ensuring that State's security assistance investments continue to focus on addressing strategic challenges facing the United States and its allies and partners, to ensuring our assistance and diplomatic efforts are the foreign policy tool of first resort, and to continuing to engage with Congress on this important issue.

Question. Does the Department have sufficient visibility into Department of Defense security cooperation activities so that State can guide planning for those activities, not just concur or object prior to implementation?

Answer. As I understand it, there is a coordination process that has been developed between the Departments of State and Defense, including State's participation in fora hosted by the Office of the Under Secretary of Defense for Policy and combatant commands, as well as the annual State-Defense Joint Security Sector Assistance Review. This process provides key State stakeholders the opportunity to participate in planning for security assistance activities prior to receipt of formal concurrence requests in order to ensure both departments' programs are complementary and mutually supportive. If confirmed, I commit to work to improve mechanisms that allow State to ensure that Defense's security assistance supports U.S. foreign policy goals and objectives.

Question. Do you commit to maintaining the tiered review process, and ensuring that this committee retains its role as the body in the Senate charged with reviewing the policy implications of potential arms sales?

Answer. I commit to maintaining the tiered review process, and I will work with the Committee in its role as the body in the Senate reviewing potential arms sales.

Question. Does the Department and its interagency partners sufficiently prioritize and expedite sales essential to the vital national interests of the U.S. and its most critical allies?

Answer. I understand the Department's top priority, working together with the interagency, is to advance vital national interests, including those shared by our allies, within the framework of existing laws. If confirmed, I will continue to seek efficiencies to improve the interagency process and work closely with our partners and allies to streamline vital capabilities for our critical partners that support U.S. foreign policy and security interests, and commit to continuing to engage with you and your office on this important issue.

Question. Does the Department spend sufficient time and attention in working with critical allies to develop requirements together to address those capabilities most needed for our shared interests? Does the Department have the personnel, especially at posts, to build and maintain the relationships required to jointly develop requirements?

Answer. The Department, working with colleagues at the Department of Defense, staffs embassies with Security Cooperation Officers (SCOs) who serve under Chief of Mission authority as well as their respective Combatant Command. These SCOs form the "first line" as key interlocutors with foreign Defense Ministries and services and are responsible for the development and maintenance of professional working relationships to advance U.S. strategic objectives and jointly develop requirements. If confirmed, I will work with the Department and DoD to ensure these vital positions are adequately trained and staffed to meet our foreign policy objectives.

Question. Do you support changing the arms sales process to require a resolution of approval for sales? Why or why not?

Answer. It is my sense that arms transfers are a key part of our security cooperation with allies and partners—and it is our relationship with allies and partners around the world that gives the United States a critical edge over our competitors and adversaries. If confirmed, I will examine this matter and consult with the Committee.

Question. Do you support restricting the arms sales emergency authority to those articles and services that can be delivered within 60 days?

Answer. I understand Congress's concern that the emergency authorities within the Arms Export Control Act be used to respond only to genuine emergencies. If confirmed, I would consult with subject matter experts in the Department of State and Department of Defense to identify whether there would be any negative policy or logistical implications to such limitations before giving any specific proposal my full support.

Question. Should the United States seek the return of U.S.-origin defense articles if issues emerge with end use by the foreign country or international organization customer?

Answer. I understand that there are many legal issues and other more practical matters of logistics and finance involved in such an option. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that our foreign partners only use U.S.-origin defense articles and services for the purposes for which they were provided, and that the Department considers the full range of consequences if a partner cannot or will not protect U.S.-origin defense articles; if confirmed, as well, I commit to continuing to engage with Congress on this important issue.

Question. Do you support imposing a new requirement for Leahy-like vetting for all U.S. arms sales?

Answer. The President has made it clear that respect for human rights must be at the center of U.S. foreign policy, which includes policy decisions on arms transfers.

If confirmed, I will review the arms transfer decision process to ensure it adequately considers human rights and the risk of civilian casualties when making such decisions, including preventing U.S. origin items from being transferred to foreign security force units that have committed gross violations of human rights. I will also insist on adherence to our agreements on the use of U.S.-origin defense equipment by our allies and partners, compliance with both the laws of armed conflict and respect for human rights, and will consider the full range of consequences should violations occur. If confirmed, I will continue to engage with Congress on this important question.

Question. If confirmed, how will you balance vital U.S. national interests when we have values-based disagreements or human rights concerns with partners? In your opinion, do security partnerships give us more influence when we have human rights disagreements with partners, not less?

Answer. The President and Secretary Blinken have stated that human rights must be at the center of U.S. foreign policy. If disagreements with our partners arise, I believe we must address them openly and have frank conversations when necessary. The United States will cooperate with allies and partners where our priorities align and not shy away from defending U.S. interests and American values where they do not.

Answer. Among the many benefits of U.S. security partnerships around the world is an opportunity for us to influence the training, doctrine, and professionalism of partner armed forces in ways that enhance adherence to human rights standards and build security sector governance capacity. If confirmed, I will strive to ensure we take every opportunity to leverage our security relationships to enhance human rights around the world.

Question. Should the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor (DRL) have a veto over arms sales?

Answer. DRL plays an integral role in the arms transfer decision process, and their input is essential to ensuring human rights are considered.

If confirmed, I will review the arms transfer decision process and work closely with DRL to ensure human rights concerns are given full weight in arms transfer decisions.

Question. Do you support reversing the Obama Administration's Export Control Reform initiative, and making large categories of articles FMS-only once again?

Answer. As you are aware, the export control reforms initiated under the Obama Administration were completed, and the categories of items from the munitions list moved to Department of Commerce control are now being regulated under the Export Administration Regulations. Separately, if confirmed, I will ensure the Department continues to work closely with our DoD colleagues to maintain an appropriate FMS-Only list that guarantees the successful development of partner capabilities and the protection of U.S. technology. If confirmed, I would be glad to continue to engage with Congress on this issue.

Question. Many Americans believe U.S. allies free-ride off of U.S. military commitments. If confirmed, how would you plan to ensure sufficient burden-sharing by our allies?

Answer. I support President Biden's call to reinvigorate our alliances. Security simply costs more in today's complex environment, and, if confirmed, I will work to reframe the burden sharing conversation at NATO to increase focus on capabilities, readiness, and force generation, in addition to defense spending. In that same spirit, when appropriate, I believe the United States should seek fair and equitable cost-sharing arrangements with our partners. We saw how this diplomatic approach secured quick results in the new multiyear cost sharing agreement with the Republic of Korea that was signed in April. If confirmed, the PM bureau, under my guidance, will continue to impress upon our allies that only with greater mutual investment in defense can we ensure our alliances are able to adapt quickly to a changing security landscape with the necessary capabilities and military readiness.

Question. Is being a signatory to the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons consistent with being a U.S. ally?

Answer. While the United States understands and shares the desire to advance nuclear disarmament goals, we do not support the Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons (TPNW). I believe the TPNW is incompatible with U.S. extended deterrence relationships that are still necessary for international peace and security, and it may reinforce divisions that hinder the international community's ability to work together to address pressing proliferation and security challenges. All NATO Allies share our opposition to the TPNW, and the U.S. position on this issue has spanned administrations. Seeking to ban nuclear weapons through a treaty that does not include any States Parties that possess nuclear weapons will not reduce nuclear arsenals.

Question. What is the Department doing to expedite delivery of critical capabilities to those priority allies and partners most in danger from growing threats from the People's Liberation Army?

Answer. There is no doubt that the People's Liberation Army's growing capabilities pose significant challenges to our allies and partners in the region. PM prioritizes security cooperation activities, including arms sales and security assistance to bolster our allies' and partners' capabilities to secure their land and maritime borders and increase Maritime Domain Awareness, security, the rule of law, and freedom of navigation in the South China Sea. If confirmed, I will support efforts to increase interoperability with partners, and force projection and posture in the region. Empowering our partners and allies in these ways serves to deter more aggressive PRC military behavior in the region.

Question. If confirmed, how do you plan to encourage Taiwan to invest in its own defense, and to acquire capabilities most suitable for defense against the Peoples Liberation Army?

Answer. The United States has sold nearly $30 billion worth of arms to Taiwan since 2009, but arms sales alone cannot ensure Taiwan's ability to defend itself, nor should the impact of arms sales be judged on total value alone. Taiwan should focus on an asymmetric defense concept and prioritize modern, resilient, and cost-effective approaches. As I understand it, our expanding security cooperation, which is calibrated to meet the threat from the PRC, seeks to encourage and support Taiwan in developing those capabilities. As part of that cooperation, if confirmed, I will encourage Taiwan to spend on defense an amount commensurate with the growing threat it faces and to prioritize the appropriate capabilities.

Question. How can we best capitalize on Japan's increasing focus on Taiwan, and its efforts to improve its own defensive capabilities?

Answer. If confirmed, I will commit to working closely with allies to advance our shared prosperity, security, and values in the Indo-Pacific region. I believe Japan can be a critical partner in that respect. For the first time since 1969, a U.S.-Japan Leaders' statement referenced the importance of peace and stability in the Taiwan Strait; in addition, Japan's annual defense white paper stressed this year that "stability of the situation around Taiwan is important, not only for the security of our country, but for the stability of the international community." If confirmed, I will commit to exploring opportunities to collaborate with Japan to reinforce peace and stability in the Taiwan Strait.

Question. If confirmed, will you ensure that the U.S. Department of State consults with Congress before taking action on issues that could jeopardize U.S. access to or create significant tensions in our relationships with key defense partners in the Indo-Pacific, especially those in Southeast Asia?

Answer. Advancing defense cooperation in Southeast Asia and supporting our defense partners throughout the Indo-Pacific remains critical to ensuring our national interests in safeguarding the rules-based international order and global peace and prosperity. If confirmed, and as I committed at my nominations hearing, I look forward to consulting extensively and meaningfully with Congress as we advance U.S. objectives in the Indo-Pacific.

Question. Do you consider the Philippines to be a strategically important ally of the United States? Please explain your position.

Answer. The U.S.–Philippine alliance is a relationship founded on shared strategic interests, shared history, culture, and strong connections between our nations. As Secretary Blinken has stated, the United States stands with the Philippines in the face of the PRC’s provocations, pressure and unlawful maritime claims in the South China Sea. I understand that we share the Philippines’ concerns regarding the PRC’s problematic and coercive activity in the South China Sea, and that we will continue to work with our Philippine counterparts through bilateral and multilateral cooperation to ensure a free and open Indo-Pacific. At the same time, I take seriously the matter of human rights abuses in the Philippines and, if confirmed, will work with State to consistently raise this as an issue of great concern with their government.

Question. The United States military currently cooperates with the Armed Forces of the Philippines on counterterrorism and maritime security. Multiple members of Congress have proposed limiting or cutting off U.S. security assistance to the Philippine military because of concerns over human rights abuses. Do you believe that taking such a step is in U.S. interests?

Answer. A longstanding treaty ally, the Philippines continues to be a critical partner in the Indo-Pacific on an array of issues. I take seriously the matter of human rights abuses in the Philippines, and my understanding is that we consistently raise this as an issue of great concern with their government. When violations have occurred, the United States works with the Armed Forces of the Philippines to promote accountability for violators. My understanding is that PM does not provide assistance to the Philippine National Police. If confirmed, I will ensure that any provision of security assistance is closely aligned with the Administration’s bilateral and regional foreign policy objectives, remains in compliance with the Leahy Law and maximizes human rights training in military-to-military security cooperation activities.

Question. The United States military currently cooperates with the Armed Forces of the Philippines on counterterrorism and maritime security. Multiple members of Congress have proposed limiting or cutting off U.S. security assistance to the Philippine military because of concerns over human rights abuses. Do you believe that taking such a step would improve human rights conditions in the Philippines?

Answer. I understand State consistently underscores the importance of respect for human rights and accountability for any violations to all levels of the Armed Forces of the Philippines and civilian leadership. Maintaining our security assistance relationship can be an important way the United States can continue to engage on the human rights agenda. If confirmed, I will ensure the provision of security assistance is closely aligned with the Administration’s bilateral and regional goals, remains in compliance with applicable law, including the Leahy Law, and maximizes human rights training in military-to-military security cooperation activities.

Question. Do you agree that it is in our national interest to strengthen our security cooperation with Vietnam, Malaysia, the Philippines, Indonesia, and Thailand? If so, please elaborate specifically on the U.S. interests it serves.

- If confirmed, what specific steps will you take to advance security partnerships with these nations, including your views on continuing arms sales, engaging in capacity-building, and cooperating on advanced technology with South and Southeast Asian partner countries facing China’s coercion and growing military power?

Answer. It is absolutely in the national interest of the United States to strengthen security cooperation with allies and partners to ensure a free and open Indo-Pacific region, build interoperability, bolster U.S. force projection, ensure freedom of navigation and overflight, uphold rule of law, counter transnational crime and terror organizations, respond to natural and humanitarian crises, and reassure our allies and partners of U.S. commitment to the region, empowering them against coercion and malign influence and enabling them to play an effective role in global peacekeeping. Security cooperation can provide opportunities to instill U.S. values in support of preserving the rules-based international order.

If confirmed, I will work to expand engagement with these nations at all levels, including by promoting the United States as the region's preferred security partner and helping to ensure they can protect and advance shared interests in the region. I will also seek to deepen and expand our overall defense cooperation with these nations by advancing key foundational defense agreements, which will help enable the transfer of defense articles and establish mechanisms that allow for greater overall defense cooperation.

Question. Does the TPNW present a threat to the integrity of the NATO alliance, and the security of NATO member states?

Answer. All NATO Allies share our view that the TPNW is inconsistent with the Alliance's nuclear deterrence policy, is at odds with the existing non-proliferation and disarmament architecture, risks undermining the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT), and does not take into account the current security environment. NATO has made several statements opposing the TPNW, most recently in its June 2021 Summit Communiqué. If confirmed, I will work to ensure our Allies carefully consider the impact on their security and the Alliance prior to making any decisions relating to the TPNW.

Question. If Egypt takes receipt of Russian Su-35s, what impact do you anticipate it will have on U.S. security sector assistance to Egypt?

Answer. If confirmed, I will join my colleagues at the Department in urging the Government of Egypt to refrain from new major Russian arms purchases, including Su-35 fighter aircraft, which risk triggering Countering America's Adversaries Through Sanctions Act (CAATSA) Section 231 sanctions and would damage our bilateral security sector cooperation and assistance. While it is too early to prejudice the Administration's response to the scenario you outlined, if confirmed, I will work with my State colleagues to fully implement CAATSA, and I look forward to working with you and your colleagues on this matter.

Question. Can you commit to advocating for strong U.S. support to the Multinational Forces and Observers (MFO) in Egypt's Sinai Peninsula?

Answer. As I understand it, the Multinational Forces and Observers (MFO) plays an integral role in maintaining security and provides a framework for an enduring military-to-military relationship between Egypt and Israel. So long as that is necessary and cooperation continues between the two partners, if confirmed, I will advocate for strong U.S. support for the MFO.

Question. The Global Peace Operations Initiative (GPOI) was founded in 2005 and over the last 15 fiscal years, has received almost $1.3 billion in funding. This funding has accomplished several objectives, including building self-sufficient peace operations training, supporting partner country development, enhancing partner country operational readiness, and expanded the participation, integration, and leadership women in peace operations, to name a few. GPOI has improved the capacity and operations of U.N. peacekeeping forces in Africa and globally. Please describe the efforts you will take, if confirmed, to continue to integrate women into GPOI's work in both peacekeeping troops and in leadership positions in peacekeeping missions.

- GPOI provides critical training to partner countries looking to deploy peacekeepers, which includes topics like preventing sexual exploitation and abuse (SEA), violence against women, as well as technical training. Given the high number of instances of SEA committed by peacekeeping troops globally, how would you direct GPOI to enhance trainings to counter these occurrences?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support PM's work through GPOI to increase the meaningful participation of women in peace operations by promoting efforts to: encourage partners to increase recruitment, training, and deployment of women at all levels of peace operations—including in leadership and decision-making positions; incorporate gender topics into training for all peacekeepers; and invest in gender-responsive upgrades at partner training centers.

Moreover, if confirmed, I will direct PM to pursue activities through GPOI that enhance and expand upon existing SEA prevention and accountability training incorporated into pre-deployment training, as well as National Investigation Officers training.

Question. Do you commit to ensuring the State Department advertises the GPOI programming as part of our assistance to U.N. peacekeeping efforts?

Answer. Yes, I do. In fact, I understand there will be a particularly valuable and timely opportunity to do so as we approach the U.N. Peacekeeping Ministerial in December.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JESSICA LEWIS BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question. How do you see the relationship between making the United States the security partner of choice and ensuring that U.S. security partners respect human rights and international humanitarian law, especially when using U.S.-origin defense equipment?

Answer. The President and Secretary Blinken have stated that human rights must be at the center of our foreign policy and have made it clear that the United States will cooperate with allies and partners where our priorities align and not shy away from defending U.S. interests and American values where they do not. Strong U.S. security partnerships around the world come with a multitude of benefits, including the opportunity to positively influence a country's human rights practices. These relationships allow us to work closely with partners, set an example for human rights standards, and, when appropriate, provide training and education to enhance professionalism and adherence to human rights standards.

If confirmed, I will support assistance to help ensure our partners' forces are taking steps to comply with international law and protect human rights. Additionally, I will work to ensure human rights concerns are given full weight in arms transfer decisions.

Congressional Review of Arms Sales

Question. During the previous administration, I have been concerned that congressional review periods have been bypassed for certain arms sales and the administration refused to respond to congressional inquiries regarding those sales.

- What steps will you take to address these concerns?

Answer. Given my experience on the committee, I very much understand the importance of Congressional oversight, whether in terms of the need to respond to inquiries, to respect and maintain both the formal and informal Congressional review processes, as well as the value that Congressional perspectives bring to the Executive Branch's own policy deliberations. If confirmed, I will respect the role of Congress in the arms transfer process, will adhere to all statutory requirements, and will ensure the Bureau is responsive to Congressional requests for information.

Question. In your experience working in Congress, what observations have you made about factors that may hinder Congress from effectively exercising its oversight role over the arms sales process?

Answer. In addition to the absolute prerequisite of Executive Branch cooperation with Congress on these matters, I would note that arms sales are authorized under different sections of U.S. law and may involve equities under the jurisdiction of the Senate's Foreign Relations, Armed Services, Appropriations, and even Banking Committees.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JESSICA LEWIS BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. Recent protests against the Government in Colombia have resulted in more than 40 reported deaths and thousands of injuries. In some cases, protests had turned violent and erected blockades to prevent the distribution of food and medicine to communities in need. Colombian military personnel and law enforcement had been deployed for crowd control and have broken up these blockades. The Colombian Government has been proactive in investigating instances of alleged human rights abuses committed by security personnel.

- In your opinion, to what degree will the human rights conditions on Colombia's FMF program evolve based on state security forces' response to the mass demonstrations that began in late April 2021?

Answer. I understand that Foreign Military Financing (FMF) for Colombia supports efforts to strengthen the appropriate role of the Colombian military, including to provide aviation, riverine, and maritime security, in a democratic society. All FMF for Colombia is provided consistent with the Leahy Law, and therefore human rights are taken under consideration. If confirmed, I will continually review the impact and effectiveness of our foreign assistance programs, as well as opportunities to augment and reinforce human rights-related components.

From 2008 to 2017, previous administrations had bundled Taiwan arms sales notifications together, announcing multiple notifications on a single day, which led to extended periods of time between arms sales announcements. Since September 2018, this approach changed, with the administration announcing one or two Taiwan arms sales packages at a time, with shorter gaps between notifications.

Question. Do you agree that the former approach had significant downsides, particularly with regard to strategic planning and signaling U.S. support for Taiwan?

Answer. I understand the concern with previous approaches, and commit to moving requests for transfers of defense articles upon receipt of each request. If confirmed, my overriding goal will be to make available to Taiwan the defense articles and services necessary to enable it to maintain a sufficient self-defense capability, consistent with the Taiwan Relations Act and our “one China” policy. U.S. security cooperation with Taiwan is calibrated to meet the threat from the PRC and ensure we fulfill our commitments to Taiwan, as reflected in the Taiwan Relations Act.

From 2008 to 2017, previous administrations had bundled Taiwan arms sales notifications together, announcing multiple notifications on a single day, which led to extended periods of time between arms sales announcements. Since September 2018, this approach changed, with the administration announcing one or two Taiwan arms sales packages at a time, with shorter gaps between notifications.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to further improve upon the approach developed since 2018, and ensure that the United States maintains a regularized and robust arms sales process that addresses Taiwan’s defense needs as expeditiously as possible?

Answer. I recognize the serious and growing threat that the PRC poses to Taiwan, and the urgency of Taiwan improving its self-defense capabilities. If confirmed, I will support moving requests for transfers of defense articles upon receipt of each request. This is identical to the arms sales process used for other partners.

The United States sold nearly $30 billion worth of arms to Taiwan since 2009, but arms sales alone cannot ensure Taiwan’s ability to defend itself, nor should the impact of arms sales be judged on total value alone. Taiwan should focus on an asymmetric defense concept and prioritize modern, resilient, and cost-effective approaches. Our expanding security cooperation seeks to encourage and support Taiwan in developing those capabilities.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. DONALD LU BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question. How many Afghan allies who have or are now applying for SIVs will the U.S. relocate?

Answer. The Department of State remains committed to Afghan partners who assisted the United States over the past two decades in Afghanistan. On July 29, 2021, the first relocation flight arrived in the United States with 221 Afghan special immigrant applicants, including 70 minors. A second flight arrived on August 2, 2021 with 181 SIV applicants. The Department is leading a worldwide effort to continue relocating eligible applicants and their families over the course of the next several weeks. There are approximately 20,000 Afghan principal applicants at some stage of the SIV application process, but about half of these applicants need to take action and provide legally-required documentation before the U.S. Government can begin processing their case and determine their eligibility for consideration for an SIV. It is my understanding that the U.S. Government intends to support all SIV applicants who are determined to be eligible for the program.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to press the Bangladeshi Government to allow unions to register and function without repression?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to press the Bangladeshi Government to allow unions to register and function without repression, so that they may continue their important work to try and improve working conditions in Bangladesh.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to ensure that a labor attaché is sent to our embassy in Dhaka this year?

Answer. Knowing the importance of having a labor attaché and how one can support the improvement of labor conditions in country, I commit to ensuring that a labor attaché is sent to Embassy Dhaka as soon as possible. The Department is working with the Department of Labor to establish and fill this important position.

Question. If confirmed, do I have your commitment that USG assistance for labor unions will not diminish under your leadership?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to work with interagency stakeholders to support labor unions. Their work has been vital to improvements to strengthening safety improvements in the ready-made garment sector, and we will need to continue to support their work so that labor conditions can improve in all industrial sectors in Bangladesh.

Question. What are the prospects for the Indian Government to further diminish arms sales from Russia?

Answer. In recent years, India has taken significant steps to reduce its defense cooperation with Russia and increase cooperation with other partners, especially the United States, through increasingly sophisticated joint military exercises, increasing defense purchases, and deepening implementation of interoperability agreements. If confirmed, I will urge India to continue to turn away from major defense equipment purchases from Russia, and continually convey our concerns that Russia does not share the common strategic interests and values underpinning the U.S.-India partnership.

Question. Beyond the purchase of the S400, are you concerned that the Indian Government will seek to make further significant purchases of Russian arms?

Answer. In recent years India has increasingly diversified its defense purchases away from Russia. I will continue to support and encourage U.S. defense sales with India and urge all of our allies and partners to avoid purchasing new major defense equipment from Russia.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to engage with the Indian Government on the challenges faced by the Sikh farmers community in Punjab and their ability to peacefully protest now and in the future?

Answer. The farm laws themselves are an issue for the people and Government of India. However, peaceful protests are a hallmark of any thriving democracy as the Indian Supreme Court described on a case regarding the farm protests. If confirmed, I will underscore our strong support for the right to peacefully protest with the Indian Government.

Question. If confirmed, do you have a plan to advocate for effective accountability in Sri Lanka?

Answer. Accountability and impunity for human rights abusers continues to be an issue of great concern in Sri Lanka. If confirmed, I will continue to seek a commitment from the Sri Lankan Government to credibly address longstanding human rights cases and respect civil society, members of ethnic and religious minority groups, and human rights defenders. Additionally, I will seek to utilize available tools to promote accountability, including, as applicable, Section 7031(c) visa restrictions and/or Global Magnitsky sanctions, in a targeted manner, to advance our human rights goals.

Question. Given the concerns that several Senators have raised on security cooperation with Sri Lankan officials who have been implicated in human rights abuses during the war, do you commit to consult closely with this committee and staff on any arms sale or future security cooperation effort with Sri Lanka?

Answer. The Biden administration takes very seriously the need to incorporate human rights into our engagements with Sri Lanka, including our security and law enforcement cooperation objectives. Our long-term strategic interests are best served by a stable, peaceful, and prosperous Sri Lanka. If confirmed, I commit to closely consult with the committee to ensure that in any engagement with or equipment transfer to the military, law enforcement, counterterrorism or security officials, we continue to emphasize respect for democratic governance, human rights, accountability, and rule of law.

U.S. Businesses in Uzbekistan and Kazakhstan

Question. Several U.S. businesses have expressed concerns about the rule of law their ability to operate in Uzbekistan and Kazakhstan. Do I have your commitment to work with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on these cases as they happen to ensure that U.S. businesses are not treated unfairly?

Answer. Promoting United States investment in Central Asia is a key pillar of the U.S. Central Asia Strategy, and facilitating U.S. exports and investments supports the G7 Build Back Better World initiative. If confirmed, I will work with our host government partners to improve the business and investment climate in Uzbekistan and Kazakhstan, and I will work with those in federal agencies and private industry to address issues when they arise. I will also work closely with the committee to ensure you are apprised of key developments.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. DONALD LU BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. In your view, has India taken significant steps to reduce its defense cooperation with Russia? What are some of the most notable steps? Other than the S-400 purchase, what else concerns you about the Indian-Russian relationship?

Answer. In recent years, India has taken steps to reduce its defense cooperation with Russia and increase cooperation with other partners, especially the United States, through ever more sophisticated joint military exercises, increasing U.S. defense purchases, and concluding defense enabling agreements, such as COMCASA. If confirmed, I will urge India to continue to diversify away from Russian arms and reiterate Russia does not share the common strategic interests and values underpinning the U.S.-India partnership.

Question. What specifically can we do to strengthen our security relationship with India in the short-term? What about the longer-term?

Answer. U.S.-India defense ties have expanded significantly over the past two decades, as evidenced by the conclusion of five major defense enabling agreements and over $20 billion in bilateral defense trade.

In the coming years, the United States will look to increase the interoperability of our forces through additional logistics cooperation, expanded defense information sharing, increasingly complex multi-service exercises with like-minded partners, maritime domain awareness, peacekeeping, and joint development of defense technologies in line with India's status as a Major Defense Partner of the United States. In addition, the United States will look to deepen defense cooperation in important domains such as emerging technologies, space, and cyber.

Question. What will you do to work with the Indians on boosting COVID vaccine manufacturing in the region and ensuring these vaccines are available for export to support dire global vaccine needs?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with the Indian Government to expand COVID-19 vaccine production to make vaccines globally available and affordable both through the Quad Vaccine Partnership and bilaterally. If confirmed, I will coordinate with the Indian Government to address global medical supply chain constraints that limit necessary inputs for vaccine production.

Question. What role do you see India playing in the Indo-Pacific region in light of the growing challenges from China?

Answer. The United States and India share a vision of a free, open, secure, and prosperous Indo-Pacific. The United States welcomes India's emergence as a leading global power and its role as a net security provider in the Indo-Pacific region. If confirmed, I will work with colleagues and the interagency to encourage India to continue its important contributions toward capacity building, maritime security, economic development, humanitarian assistance, and disaster relief in the Indo-Pacific.

Question. What will be your main priorities in cooperating with India through the Quad and cooperating with India in Southeast Asia?

Answer. The Quad aims to build relationships with partners that share our values, perspectives, and approaches to regional and global challenges on a range of political, economic, and security issues. If confirmed, I plan to work with my counterpart in the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs and interagency to encourage Quad partners, including India, to expand our robust cooperation on priorities including maritime security, counterterrorism, COVID-19 vaccine production, and climate change. If confirmed, I will work with the Indian Government to reaffirm our strong support for ASEAN's unity and centrality, enhance our coordination in the East Asia Summit and ASEAN Regional Forum, and look forward to exploring ways of working with India in the Mekong sub-region and across the Indo-Pacific.

Question. Do you commit to making the resolution of the Lincoln House issue a priority with India, and to directing the U.S. Ambassador to India to do the same?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will also consult closely with Members of Congress on this issue.

Question. The Indian Ministry of Defense is also involved in this issue. Do you commit to ensuring relevant U.S. Department of Defense officials are briefed on the issue, and to ensuring they raise it with their own counterparts as well?

Answer. Yes.

Question. In 2016, the Obama administration labeled India a “major defense partner,” a designation supported by Congress in the Fiscal Year 2017 National Defense Authorization Act. Some have called for an amendment to the Arms Export Control Act to facilitate more defense sales to India and help solidify it as a Major Defense Partner. Does the Biden administration support such a step?

Answer. If confirmed, I intend to consult closely with the Bureau of Political-Military Affairs, the Department of Defense, and Congress on this and other steps to advance our defense and security partnership with India.

Question. The Obama administration launched the Defense Technology and Trade Initiative with India to promote joint co-development and production of defense systems. Thus far, that objective has not been realized. To what do you attribute this?

Answer. The U.S.-India Defense Technology and Trade Initiative (DTTI) has been a valuable mechanism in building linkages between the U.S. and Indian defense establishments. While some DTTI working groups have faced challenges, many, such as the Aircraft Carrier Technologies Working Group, have resulted in productive technical exchanges. In 2019, the United States and India concluded a DTTI Industry-to-Industry Framework to promote greater collaboration with the private sector.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with the Department of Defense to advance progress under the DTTI.

Question. Will the Biden administration pursue greater cooperation under DTTI with India? If so, what will be the administration’s key priorities?

Answer. The U.S.-India Defense Technology and Trade Initiative (DTTI) has catalyzed exchanges on a range of technologies, including related to aircraft carriers and small unmanned aerial vehicles. If confirmed, I intend to work closely with my Department of Defense counterparts to further deepen cooperation with India through DTTI.

Question. Will the Biden administration advocate for India’s membership on the U.N. Security Council and in the Nuclear Suppliers Group?

Answer. If confirmed, I intend to work closely with my counterparts. The administration will review reform proposals and work closely with Allies and partners at the U.N. to ensure that UNSC reforms are undertaken in such a way as to enhance the efficiency of the Council, promote U.S. values, and leave unaltered the veto power. Moreover, I intend to work across the interagency to continue U.S. support for India’s membership in the Nuclear Suppliers Group.

Question. How will the Biden administration cooperate with India on 5G, digital security, and other emerging technology issues? Please be specific.

Answer. The Biden administration has prioritized cooperation with India on a host of emerging technologies issues, both bilaterally and through the Quad Critical and Emerging Technology Working Group. The United States and India, along with other Quad partners, intend to focus on the coordination of technology standards development and the joint efforts to maintain the integrity of standards-setting bodies, cooperation on telecommunications development, including the diversification of equipment suppliers, and convening dialogues on the security of technology supply chains, especially microelectronics and critical minerals.

Question. Pakistan played a positive role in bringing the Taliban to the table, but has publicly refused to host U.S. CT [Counter-Terrorism] assets and has been unable to force the Taliban back to the table. What is an appropriate role for Pakistan in Afghanistan? Is it time for a change in U.S.-Pakistan policy?

Answer. I believe Pakistan has an important role in Afghan peace negotiations. I understand the Department continues to make clear that progress toward a political settlement in Afghanistan, and collaboration on regional stability efforts, including against terrorist groups, are vital elements of an expanded U.S.-Pakistan relationship. If confirmed, I will also encourage Pakistan and Afghanistan to improve economic ties and expand trade, which will help build incentives to reap the dividends of peace. Further, if confirmed, I will also work to expand trade and investment between the United States and these two countries to help enhance broader regional economic integration.

Question. The Taliban continues to seize more territory and threaten population centers while our embassy footprint is increasingly confined to Kabul. How do we provide adequate oversight of taxpayer dollars in Afghanistan? Absent issuing OFAC waivers, what should the policy be about assistance to Taliban-held areas?

Answer. The Department continues to monitor U.S. Embassy Kabul's staffing to ensure the necessary flexibility and sufficient resources to advance U.S. interests, including supporting efforts to reach a political settlement and supporting Afghanistan's stability. Maintaining an appropriate diplomatic presence is essential to ensure that we can support our Afghan partners and that we have the staff to monitor our assistance and programming. Both the Department and USAID have been developing scenario-based contingency plans to adjust U.S. assistance programming as the operating environment warrants, including to ensure it continues to advance U.S. interests and is consistent with U.S. law and policy.

Question. What is the administration's strategy for processing the large volume of pending SIV applications from Afghanistan given the deteriorating situation on the ground?

Answer. The Department of State remains committed to Afghan partners who assisted the United States over the past two decades in Afghanistan. For that reason, the Department has taken steps to address the large volume of pending Special Immigrant Visa (SIV) applications from Afghanistan. The Department is currently working to relocate SIV applicants who are in the advanced stages of processing to either the United States or other third country locations while we complete their special immigrant applications. We began relocating SIVs and their families to Fort Lee in Virginia in late July and appreciate Congress' generous support in this regard. We have also increased our consular staffing levels to augment our processing capacity across all stages of the SIV application process, and we are currently examining ways to make the application process more efficient. The Department looks forward to working with Congress on this issue and appreciates your attention to this matter.

Question. Efforts to combat trafficking in persons vary country to country in the South and Central Asian region. Some made significant progress during the 2020 reporting period. How can you, if confirmed, bolster these efforts?

Answer. Trafficking in persons is a serious crime which affects all countries. If confirmed, I will press South and Central Asian states at the highest levels of government to build on foundational improvements to prevent vulnerability of populations to trafficking, including marginalized individuals; increase prosecution of traffickers; and protect victims of trafficking. I will continue to seek opportunities for collaboration between the United States and regional partners to increase government anti-trafficking capacity in the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic, which has significantly increased vulnerability to trafficking around the world. I will continue to prioritize close collaboration with other key Bureaus within the Department of State and the international and local NGO community to address this important concern.

Question. In the State Department's 2020 International Religious Freedom report and the 2021 U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom Annual Report, some countries in the South and Central Asian region were identified as intolerant of religious freedom or having a significant hand in repressing religious minorities. What is your assessment of this particular issue and if confirmed, how will you work with the Office of International Religious Freedom to bolster religious freedom regionally?

Answer. Respect for religious freedom and equal treatment under the law are fundamental principles of the United States. Intolerance of religious freedom and the repression of religious minorities anywhere is deeply concerning and counter to U.S. values, including in the South and Central Asian region. If confirmed, I will work with the Office of International Freedom and other relevant Bureaus in the Department of State and the larger interagency community to bolster religious freedom in South and Central Asia through work with the NGO community, direct engagement with governments and other avenues as appropriate.

Question. The protection of fundamental human rights remains a priority in the region. If confirmed, how will you direct the bureau to engage with civil society to bolster these rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I will press our partners at the highest levels to recognize the valuable role of civil society in building open, inclusive, and just societies by protecting fundamental freedoms. Civil society—particularly women-led civil society organizations and human rights defenders. Civil society, when respected and allowed operational space, can be a positive force in addressing many of the most pressing issues in the region, particularly those that affect vulnerable communities, and we will continue to seek opportunities through diplomatic engagement and foreign assistance to support their work, develop their capacities, and strengthen their role in their communities. We will press our partners to engage in the legal reforms needed to protect free speech, assembly, association, and religion as vital components of a free society.

Question. How will U.S. withdrawal from Afghanistan affect our interaction with Central Asia nations?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to bilaterally engage our Central Asian partners on counterterrorism and security priorities, including as related to Afghanistan, in support of their independence, sovereignty, and territorial integrity. I would also continue to utilize the C5+1 regional diplomatic platform for the United States and the Central Asian states to expand regional security cooperation and increase connectivity between Central Asia and Afghanistan.

Question. Do you believe that the nations of Central Asia will prove to be useful partners in helping to stabilize Afghanistan? If so, how would you expect to see these nations act to maintain peace and security in the region?

Answer. The nations of Central Asia have been supportive partners of the United States in reducing terrorist threats in the region and working to support stability in Afghanistan. If I am confirmed, I intend to continue working with the five Central Asian nations to improve security and stability in the region through such as efforts as improving border security, countering the flow of narcotics, sharing information across borders, as well as assisting refugee populations and increasing economic connectivity.

Question. As the U.S. leaves Afghanistan, do believe that the U.S. should begin to interact with the Central Asian nations differently? If so, how?

Answer. For 30 years, the United States and the five Central Asian nations have built shared commitments to peace, prosperity, and security in the region. I believe our consistent engagements to strengthen those commitments should continue as the United States maintains its support for the independence, sovereignty, and territorial integrity of Kazakhstan, the Kyrgyz Republic, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, and Uzbekistan.

Question. How can we counteract Chinese attempts to gain a foothold in the region's economy?

Answer. While most South and Central Asian countries seek to maintain positive relationships with the PRC and look towards Beijing for development financing and trade, they do not view their relationships as zero sum and actively seek to diversify their economic relationships to avoid becoming too dependent on Beijing. In Central Asia, for example, the C5+1 regional diplomatic platform strengthens countries' independence, sovereignty, and economic connectivity, in turn increasing their negotiating power in relations with the PRC and other regional actors. Investments in exchanges and increasing capacity in higher education are also mechanisms that allow the United States to maintain influence with South and Central Asian Governments and society, and positively shape their economic development and empower local communities. I will work intensively with U.S. Government investment institutions such as the Development Finance Corporation, our representatives to multilateral development institutions such as the World Bank, IFC and, and like-minded 3rd country bilateral partners, and U.S. private sector partners to develop creative options to enable the economies in the region to develop in a healthy, balanced manner.

Question. To what extent does the BRI lead to the expansion of China's institutions and legal norms in Central Asia? How can and should the U.S. work to counter that growth?

Answer. From its inception, the land-based "Belt" portion of BRI prioritized developing China's economic and logistical linkages to its western neighbors in Central Asia and it continues to be a region of focus for the initiative. In addition to rail infrastructure investments, BRI projects have since expanded to include energy projects, port developments along the Indian Ocean, and information communications technology (ICT). While countries in the region look to BRI to meet their development financing needs, the opaque nature of BRI financing leads to increased corruption and elite capture, creates unsustainable debt, and limits countries' flexibility in their bilateral relationship with Beijing. In cooperation with our international partners, the private sector, and the interagency, we are promoting alternatives to PRC financing and advancing regional economic development, including through the U.S. International Development Finance Corporation (DFC), and also working to improve transparency.

Question. In Central Asia, China has already begun funding and building the Digital Silk Road. Telecommunications infrastructure, surveillance networks, and other modernizing technologies are being lent and sold to Central Asian Governments. These give China a foothold in the Governments and societies which will be a platform for Beijing to spread influence. How can the United States compete and counter Chinese influence in the Central Asian tech space?

Answer. If confirmed, I will encourage our Central Asian partners to work with trustworthy vendors for their Information and Communications Technology (ICT) infrastructure and services. As part of a long-term approach that sets Central Asia on a path toward working with trusted partners, we will continue looking for opportunities to promote global and regional programs, such as the World Bank's Digital Central Asia and South Asia (CASA); ways to further bilateral cooperation in the tech space; and programs to foster greater ICT transparency. I will work with the Development Finance Corporation and other USG partners to develop creative approaches to the challenge, and collaborate closely with the Congress on the matter.

Question. To what extent do you believe that there is an emerging Russia-China axis? Some suggest that the U.S. should try to drive wedges between the two nations to destroy any emerging axis. Do you agree with that analysis? Could such a thing be accomplished in Central Asia?

Answer. We face competition from China and Russia like never before, and must recommit ourselves to robust engagement with the countries of Central Asia to support their sovereignty, independence, and territorial integrity in the face of many challenges. Over the past two decades, China has supplanted Russia as the region's largest trade and investment partner, though Russia remains an important security partner for many of the countries in the region, and there are signs that Moscow is wary of losing influence. Through our own bilateral and multilateral engagement within the region, we are working to build Central Asian countries' resilience and independence from malign influence from any and all external actors of concern.

Question. President Biden and his administration have repeatedly made commitments to upholding universal rights at home and abroad. In Turkey, authorities are abusing people's human rights and attacking peaceful dissidents at an alarming rate. Turkey's abuses have spilled into Central Asia, where the Governments have been pressured to scrutinize and close down Gulenist schools. The most recent abuse involved Turkey's kidnapping and illegal extradition of a Turkish-born Gulenist teacher in Kyrgyzstan. How can the U.S. better use its influence to prevent protect Central Asian nations from undue Turkish influence and work to protect those who may be subject to persecution once back in Turkey?

Answer. U.S. diplomacy in Central Asia, including through the C5+1 diplomatic platform, balances against regional over-reliance on foreign powers and addresses a core objective of our Central Asia strategy: protecting the sovereignty, independence, and territorial integrity of the Central Asian states. If confirmed, I will work in concert with colleagues from EUR and the rest of the Department of State to continue efforts to promote the rule of law and respect for human rights in Central Asia bilaterally, regionally through the C5+1 platform, and multilaterally through the OSCE and other fora. I will remind Central Asian partners at the highest levels that requests for extraditions or transfer of individuals across international borders must happen transparently and with respect for the legal process. I will also continue to remind Central Asian partners of their non-refoulement obligations to prevent individuals from facing the threat of torture or mistreatment abroad. The Department of State is in direct contact with the spouse of the missing Turkish schools director and is working to ascertain what happened to him.

Question. What do you believe the role of sanctions should be in the creation and execution of U.S. foreign policy?

Answer. I believe the sanctions tools provided by the various sanctions authorities are critical for the creation and execution of U.S. foreign policy. I have seen firsthand the powerful impact our sanctions have when formulating policies and diplomatic strategies. When used thoughtfully to further U.S. and like-minded countries' democratic and human rights goals, these tools can dissuade, deter or even stop the behaviors they were designed to address. Well-developed sanctions advance our bilateral relationships and help our regional partners.

Question. With respect to Russia, how do you believe the sanctions imposed on that country since 2014 have affected the Russia's economy and foreign policy decision making?

Answer. I believe the sanctions imposed on Russia since 2014 were effective in raising the economic cost for Russia to pursue aggressive and hostile activities. These sanctions also deterred many of Russia's traditional trading partners from continuing to do business as usual.

Question. What secondary impacts do you believe U.S. sanctions on Russia have had on Central Asian economies and politics?

Answer. Most countries in Central Asia have longstanding trade relationships with Russia and have faced secondary economic impacts from U.S. sanctions on Russia, including effects related to Russia's devaluation of its currency.

Question. The Jackson-Vanik Amendment was passed in 1974 and mandated sanctions on the Soviet Union until it allowed Soviet Jews the option to leave the USSR. Despite the fact that all Jews who wish have long since left the post-Soviet Central Asian nations, they all still remain cursorily sanctioned under Jackson-Vanik. Practically, what effect has the continued existence of Jackson-Vanik sanctions (waived though they may be) have on the nations who remain thus labeled?

Answer. The Jackson Vanik (JV) Amendment imposes trade penalties on non-market economies that restrict emigration. When the Soviet Union broke apart in 1991, the amendment was applied to all of the newly independent states. However, since 1998, Uzbekistan, Kazakhstan, and Tajikistan have received and maintained Presidential Waivers to the JV restrictions, based on the Department of State's semi-annual certification that they are fully compliant with the Amendment's requirements for free and open emigration; in other words, they are granted Normal Trade Relations (NTR) status, but it is not permanent (PNTR).

Given their longstanding compliance with the law, JV is no longer relevant for these countries. PNTR status would allow Uzbekistan, Kazakhstan and Tajikistan to compete fairly with the rest of the world when forming trade relationships.

Question. Do you believe that the Jackson-Vanik sanctions on the Central Asian nations should be repealed without condition? Should they only be repealed when the nations in question make further human rights concessions?

Answer. The denial of PNTR under Jackson-Vanik is an ongoing bilateral irritant, and one that limits our trade potential in the region. Trade discrimination under laws such as JV is technically prohibited under the rules of the World Trade Organization (WTO), of which both Kazakhstan and Tajikistan are members. Uzbekistan is in the process of joining the WTO in 2021. The Kyrgyz Republic was granted PNTR in 2001 when it acceded to the WTO. Restoring PNTR to Kazakhstan, Tajikistan, and Uzbekistan now would reassure them that the United States supports peace and economic development in the region. Ending the applicability of the Jackson-Vanik amendment to these countries would allow the United States to grant them PNTR and would advance our goals of promoting economic growth and regional connectivity. The Department's position is that it should be repealed based on the countries' compliance with the terms of the original legislation.

With regards to human rights concessions, the Department of State uses more effective and targeted tools—such as the Trafficking in Persons (TIP) Report, the Human Rights Report, and the Religious Freedom Report, to apply leverage and motivate reform. Withholding PNTR would not be as effective as these existing mechanisms.

Trafficking in Persons in Central Asia

Question. The State Department just released the 2021 Trafficking in Person's Report, and while some Central Asian nations showed improvement in the past year, there are still serious issues with the fight against trafficking. Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, and Uzbekistan were removed from the Tier 2 watch list, however Tajikistan and Turkmenistan remain at Tier 3.

- Please outline what steps you will take to address this issue with Tajikistan and Turkmenistan to help them make improvements.

Answer. Tajikistan demonstrated overall increasing efforts compared to the previous reporting period and was ranked Tier 2 in the 2021 Trafficking in Persons (TIP) Report, but many improvements in anti-trafficking remain to be seen. If confirmed, I will work with the Office to Combat and Monitor Trafficking in Persons to press the Government to increase efforts to combat trafficking, including by adopting and implementing standard operating procedures for identifying trafficking victims and referring them to care. I will also encourage the Government to train law enforcement to screen for signs of trafficking among vulnerable groups.

While some progress has been made, trafficking in Turkmenistan remains a serious concern. If confirmed, I will encourage the Government of Turkmenistan to implement its new National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking, as well as continue to press for further action to end government policies or actions that compel or create pressure for the mobilization of forced labor, to include eliminating the cotton and silk production quotas and mandatory participation in public works. I will work with regional partners, including international organizations, to encourage the Government of Turkmenistan to grant independent observers full access to monitor cotton cultivation and cease the harassment, detention, and abuse of individuals for documenting labor conditions.

Question. As Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, and Uzbekistan have all recently made key improvements in fighting the trafficking of persons, what steps do you believe the U.S. can and should take to help those nations maintain that success and make further improvements?

Answer. Though the tier ranking upgrades in Central Asia are promising, human trafficking must be fought tirelessly and efforts must always increase. If confirmed, I look forward to continuing the positive trajectory of efforts in the Central Asian region by increasing coordination among states on anti-trafficking efforts, including through the C5+1 platform and partnering with international and regional partners to increase government capacity to protect victims, prevent trafficking among vulnerable populations, and increase prosecution of traffickers across all states. However, many countries risk overemphasizing a multilateral approach out of a misconception that trafficking requires cross-border movement. In reality, all these countries could do more to prevent, detect, and address trafficking within their own borders. I will therefore work to ensure Central Asian countries do not pursue multilateral approaches to the exclusion of their own urgently needed policy reforms and improvements, particularly in regards to legislation, steps to eliminate state-sponsored forced labor, and the identification and protection of victims among vulnerable or marginalized groups and those subjected to forms of trafficking that do not involve cross-border movement.

Question. In Central Asia, media freedom is still severely limited due to both the active efforts of governments to silence dissent, and the lack of legal protections afforded to independent journalists. Abuse, imprisonment, torture, and killings of reporters are not uncommon. Free media is all but eliminated in some of these countries. If confirmed as Assistant Secretary, how will you address this problem in Central Asia and make clear that we will not allow the abuse and imprisonment of journalists anywhere in the world?

Answer. Central Asia must take tangible steps to enshrine fundamental freedoms, including freedom of expression and the press, into laws that enable an environment of political pluralism. If confirmed, we will encourage the region to allow space for peaceful dissent and non-violent speech, both online and offline—it is more important than ever that the press be allowed to continue to report freely on events as they develop. We will continue to support democratic principles, rule of law, and protection of human rights for all in Central Asia, as they are key elements to the development of any society, and will help unlock the full potential of the region.

Anti-Corruption / Rule of Law

Question. Several high-profile scandals have exposed the Western financial system's inability to prevent corruption. In the FY2021 NDAA, the U.S. Congress updated its anti-money laundering laws to shift the burden of disclosure from the banks to the corporations and beneficial owners. And the EU has been working on a rule-of-law mechanism to link EU funds to good governance, as well as cracking down on "golden visas." This corruption hurts both the citizens of the countries where the money was stolen and stored. Many of the high-profile cases have involved Central Asian rulers, their families, and oligarchs.

- What concrete actions will you take as Assistant Secretary for SCA to push countries to reform their systems and crack down on corruption?

Answer. As President Biden said last month in establishing the fight against corruption as a core national security interest, "corruption attacks the foundations of democratic institutions, drives and intensifies extremism, and makes it easier for authoritarian regimes to corrode democratic governance." The Department currently works to combat corruption through development and promotion of internationally recognized standards, commitments, and obligations, such as those enshrined in the U.N. Convention against Corruption. Further, the Department uses diplomacy to promote reform, foreign assistance to strengthen institutions, and visa restrictions to promote accountability for corrupt actors. If confirmed, I will work to push countries to reform their systems and crack down on corruption, including through the use of the FY 2021 NDAA anti-money laundering provisions and other tools in U.S. law. Recognizing the fight against corruption cannot be won by governments alone, I will also take steps to strengthen the ability of civil society and media to reveal corruption, foster public demand for change, and address weak governance and poor human rights conditions that cultivate corruption.

Question. How important is it that the United States and its European allies take steps to make our own systems less friendly to kleptocracy and less penetrable by dirty money?

Answer. It is key that the United States leads by example with our partners and allies to make our own systems less friendly to kleptocracy and less penetrable by dirty money, to increase coordination, and share lessons learned in the fight against corruption globally. By undertaking measures to protect our financial system from dirty money, we protect our own institutions and make it harder for authoritarians and corrupt authorities to syphon away their countries' economic resources. If confirmed, I will work closely with the U.S. Department of Justice, U.S. Treasury Department and other relevant interagency partners on this important effort.

Question. Will the administration make a concerted push on anti-corruption in the EU and its periphery with the dual purpose of benefitting European citizens and making it more difficult for malign actors like Russia and China to gain a foothold?

Answer. Yes. The administration has established countering corruption as a core U.S. national security interest. The Department will develop plans for increasing efforts to combat corruption by December 2021 under the National Security Study Memorandum process, and will continue to work closely with allies and partners to prevent and expose the PRC's and Russia's efforts to export corruption as a tool of influence, sow instability, and gain market access. We must also continue efforts to foster government transparency and, separately, protect the enabling environment for civil society and journalists as part of our efforts, given their crucial role in combatting corruption.

Question. Since the change of Government in Uzbekistan in 2016, there have been many positive changes, but they have come at a slow pace. International organizations have only slowly been allowed to register to work in the country. If confirmed, do you commit to working to help more international NGOs register in Uzbekistan?

Answer. The United States supports Uzbekistan's political and economic reforms. Civil society is a crucial component to any functioning democracy and is necessary to continue these reforms. If confirmed, I will continue our work with Uzbekistani partners to ensure local and international NGOs can easily register and operate freely to serve all persons of Uzbekistan, including those from vulnerable communities.

Question. The U.S. Peace Corps has not been able to operate in Uzbekistan since 2005. They have been working to try and restart operations in Uzbekistan, but the process has been very slow, both because of bureaucratic inertia in Uzbekistan and the problems posed by the Coronavirus pandemic. If confirmed, do you commit to working to facilitate the reentry of the U.S. Peace Corps into Uzbekistan?

Answer. I understand the Uzbekistani Government has invited the Peace Corps to return to Uzbekistan, and that the Peace Corps has begun a virtual assessment of conditions in Uzbekistan for possible re-entry. I understand that once pandemic conditions allow the Peace Corps to visit Uzbekistan, the Peace Corps will make a final determination of whether or not it can establish a program in Uzbekistan. If confirmed, I commit to supporting the Peace Corps in the re-entry process.

Question. What spheres do you consider as most ripe for future reform and positive changes in Uzbekistan? If confirmed, are there specific areas in which you will push Uzbek authorities to make progress? Please specify which.

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to lead U.S. support for Uzbekistan's political and economic reforms, including strengthening human rights and democracy, and improving healthcare, education, agriculture, and rule of law. I will also continue to work with the Government of Uzbekistan to support improvements to the business and investment climate, including privatization of state-owned enterprises, and to strengthen climate ambition. I also look forward to working with our Uzbekistani partners, including through the C5+1 diplomatic platform, to support greater regional engagement, building on Uzbekistan's initiatives to improve relations within Central Asia and foster connectivity with Afghanistan.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. DONALD LU BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Central Asia

Question. The five “Stans” are all under increasing pressure from both China and Russia—neither of which is encouraging the development of market economies or rule-of-law. As co-chair of the Helsinki Commission, I have noted that these governments, and civil society groups from them, are active participants in OSCE proceedings, including the annual Human Dimension gathering in Warsaw. They seem very interested in staying connected to Europe and North America. Based on your time in Kyrgyzstan, what are your thoughts on whether OSCE could provide a bridge to the democratic West for these five countries?

Answer. The OSCE, particularly through its field operations in each Central Asian country, plays an invaluable role by increasing cooperation between Western and Central Asian countries on key issues—including countering terrorism, promoting democratization and human rights, water and energy management, border control, and migration. It also provides a forum to raise concerns about regional security and violations of OSCE commitments, including human rights, and has been a main platform for the United States to challenge Russia directly for its actions. The OSCE Academy in Bishkek provides master's level education for students from Central Asia and Afghanistan and is a model for the region. I fully support further OSCE engagement in Central Asia.

Question. How do we ensure that human rights are more prominent in our engagement with India? What is your response to myriad assessments that see India's democracy and human rights record trending negatively?

Answer. As the Secretary mentioned during his recent visit to India, every democracy, including our own, is a work in progress. The U.S.-India relationship is underpinned by a commitment to democracy, human rights, and the rule of law. If confirmed, I will regularly raise our human rights concerns with the Indian Government in the spirit of our close strategic partnership. I will also ensure that our support for civil society and media in India is robust.

Question. No one group has made more significant strides since 2001 than Afghan women. In terms of the economy, women have come a long way since the fall of the Taliban regime. They have returned to work by the hundreds of thousands, many becoming business owners and entrepreneurs. Afghanistan has rebuilt an education system that had basically stopped functioning. In 2001, only 900,000 students were in primary school—all of them male. Today, more than 9 million students are in school, and nearly 40 percent of them are girls.

- What do you think the implications of the military withdrawal will be for Afghan women and girls?

Answer. While it is difficult to overstate the significant gains made by Afghan women and girls over the last 20 years, I recognize how much remains to be done. Rising insecurity, the COVID-19 pandemic, decades of conflict, widespread poverty, humanitarian crises, and cultural barriers continue to threaten progress made in women and girls' rights in Afghanistan. Even though U.S. military troops are withdrawing, I understand the United States will continue to support the rights of Afghan women and girls through diplomacy and by maintaining significant humanitarian and development assistance.

Question. How can the administration hold the Taliban and Afghan Government to account in preserving the rights and gains of Afghan women without the support the U.S. military provided to Afghan forces and the check it served as on the Taliban?

Answer. If confirmed, I will closely monitor the status of women and girls in Afghanistan and will consult with Afghan and international partners and civil society on how best to promote accountability. While the future of Afghanistan is for Afghans themselves to decide, the United States has made clear that future development assistance and international legitimacy depend on the actions of the Afghan Government with respect to rights and fundamental freedoms, especially those of women, children, and members of minority groups.

Question. What can we do to preserve the rights and gains of Afghan women and girls?

Answer. I believe continued high-level diplomatic engagement and programmatic support by the United States and international community is required to help maintain and build upon the gains made by Afghan women and girls in the last 20 years. I am committed to using the full force of our diplomatic, economic, and development toolkit to support the Afghan people, particularly women and girls. U.S. and international development and humanitarian assistance has been instrumental in providing Afghan women and girls with access to the resources, expertise, and tools necessary for achieving the gains of the last two decades.

Question. Pakistan has been accused of numerous reported human rights abuses, some of them even perpetrated by the Government. Watchdog groups often rank Pakistan among the world's most dangerous countries for journalists and women. How do we hold the Pakistani Government accountable for human rights abuses?

Answer. In addition to documenting human rights abuses in Pakistan through the Human Rights Report and International Religious Freedom report, the Department regularly raises concerns about issues of human rights and individual freedoms during engagements with Pakistani officials, including at the senior-most levels. Such issues include media freedom, the rights of women and girls, sexual and gender-based violence, and protection of minority groups, among others. If confirmed, I will strongly and consistently urge Pakistan to uphold the rule of law and respect human rights and freedoms in accordance with its constitution and international obligations. I will also encourage the Pakistani Government to protect press and media freedoms for all and will emphasize in engagements with Pakistani counterparts that a vibrant press and informed citizenry are key for any free nation.

Question. How do we elevate the voices of targeted communities in Pakistan, including journalists and others critical of the Government?

Answer. The U.S. Embassy and Consulates in Pakistan engage regularly to hear the concerns of civil society organizations, activists, religious leaders, journalists, and businesses, including those from underserved and at-risk communities. If confirmed, I will maintain our robust engagement with these constituencies to continue listening to their concerns and raising these issues with senior Pakistani officials. These communities are also often represented by civil society organizations that do important work to address these concerns and advocate for change with the Pakistani Government, but these organizations are often hampered by overly burdensome restrictions on their operations. If confirmed, I will continue to stress to the Pakistani Government the imperative of a vibrant civil society to any democracy, and the value of allowing civil society organizations to help deliver vital assistance to Pakistan's most vulnerable communities, including women, children, and members of religious minority groups.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON DONALD LU BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. In your opinion, how will the U.S. withdrawal of troops from Afghanistan impact future security in Central Asia?

Answer. Our Central Asian partners are deeply concerned about the deteriorating security situation in Afghanistan. Each of the Central Asian republics are taking steps to reinforce their border security. In general, they share our counterterrorism and security priorities in Afghanistan and are interested in enhancing cooperation. Per the President's instructions, we are working to maintain significant counterterrorism assets in the region. If confirmed, I will continue to engage partners, allies, and key stakeholders in Central Asia on how best to monitor and counter terrorist threats in the region.

Question. What effect might it [the U.S. withdrawal of troops from Afghanistan] have on the longstanding U.S. policy goal of fostering intraregional connectivity within Central Asia?

Answer. Connectivity remains a key element of United States policy across Central and South Asia. My vision of regional connectivity includes stable and secure infrastructure that meets the highest international standards; open markets operating on a fair and competitive playing field; and a sustainable and healthy environment. It also includes Afghanistan's greater integration with its neighbors, and realizing its potential as a regional transit, trade, and energy hub. Regional connectivity is critical to long-term peace and stability in Afghanistan and the region. Peace and regional integration are mutually reinforcing.

We will continue to foster cooperation to build Central Asian connectivity with Afghanistan through the C5+1 diplomatic platform, bilateral dialogues, trilateral discussions with Afghanistan's Central Asian neighbors, and a planned quadrilateral format including the United States, Afghanistan, Uzbekistan, and Pakistan.

Question. If confirmed, what steps would you take to encourage the Central Asian states to work with the Afghan Government?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue strategic efforts to encourage the Central Asian states to develop closer ties with the Afghan Government across energy, economic, cultural, trade, and security sectors, which directly contribute to regional stability. This effort would include utilizing the C5+1 regional diplomatic platform for the United States and the Central Asian states to expand security cooperation and increase connectivity between Central Asia and Afghanistan.

Question. The main logic behind the U.S. Government's negotiations with the Taliban is that the promise of U.S. assistance to them is enough incentive to change its policies or behavior. Do you believe this, especially given recent reports of Taliban activity that suggest otherwise?

Answer. I remain concerned about the Taliban's recent military operations in Afghanistan. The group's public position remains to find a solution to the conflict through a negotiated political settlement. I understand the Taliban and Islamic Republic negotiating teams continue to meet and discuss the parameters of a settlement, and I hope both sides can accelerate those negotiations. The Taliban also have routinely expressed their desire for diplomatic and economic relations with the rest of the world, including the United States. I am committed to using our full diplomatic, economic, and development toolkit, as well as working alongside the international community and Afghanistan's neighbors, to support efforts to establish peace and promote the future that Afghans are seeking.

Question. What can you tell me of the Taliban's views on the participation of women in the political system and the role of religion in society? Have these views really moderated since 2001?

Answer. In public statements, Taliban leaders have emphasized their commitment to upholding and guaranteeing all the rights afforded to women under Islamic law, but they have not followed through on these statements with visible reforms regarding the social and political inclusion of women in the areas they control. In a joint declaration released after the July 2019 Intra-Afghan Peace Conference in Doha, the Taliban agreed to assure "women rights in political, social, economic, educational, cultural affairs within the Islamic framework of Islamic values." Taliban leaders have also said that women can hold political office, except as head of state or chief justice. However, women do not play an active role within the Taliban's shadow administration or structures, and Taliban officials sanction repressive behavior in Taliban controlled or influenced communities. If confirmed, I will promote women's full, meaningful, and equal inclusion in Afghan society.

Question. If confirmed, what steps will you take to step up cooperation with India in the Indo-Pacific?

Answer. The United States and India share a comprehensive, global strategic partnership and a vision of a free, open, secure, and prosperous Indo-Pacific. If confirmed, I will continue to expand cooperation with the Indian Government bilaterally, regionally, and multilaterally on the global recovery from the COVID-19 pandemic, mutual prosperity, Quad engagement, climate change, defense and security issues, and shared values.

Question. If confirmed, what will you do to promote India's role in the Quadrilateral Security Dialogue, and more generally, to strengthen this important platform?

Answer. The Quad aims to build relationships with partners that share our values, perspectives, and approaches to regional and global challenges on a range of political, economic, and security issues. If confirmed, I will work with my counterparts in the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs and the interagency to encourage Quad partners to expand cooperation on maritime security, counterterrorism, COVID-19 vaccine production, democratic principles, and climate change, among other priorities.

Question. If confirmed, what needs to happen to encourage India to take a more constructive approach to its neighbors that China is actively seeking to influence?

Answer. The United States welcomes India's emergence as a leading global power and its role as a net security provider in the Indian Ocean region, underpinned by our shared commitment to the rule of law, freedom of navigation, democratic values, and regional connectivity. If confirmed, I will encourage the Indian Government to continue its important contributions toward capacity building, economic development and connectivity, humanitarian assistance, disaster relief, and numerous other areas of cooperation with its neighbors.

Question. How will you support South Asian states who have territorial disputes with Beijing, such as India and Bhutan?

Answer. The United States strongly opposes unilateral attempts to advance territorial claims by incursions or encroachments, military or civilian. Parties to territorial disputes must adhere to international law and resolve differences through dialogue. If confirmed, I will engage closely with the Indian Government to understand how the United States can best support India including through defense technologies, intelligence sharing, and diplomatic support. If confirmed, I will also work to further advance our friendship with Bhutan and reaffirm our support for its sovereignty.

Question. How do you plan to counter Chinese malign influence in smaller South Asian states, such as Sri Lanka and Nepal?

Answer. I am very concerned by the People's Republic of China's activities contrary to international norms of behavior, such as promoting disinformation or excessive debt in South Asia. If confirmed, I will seek to counter the PRC's application of economic pressure through assistance and help countries manage existing debt loads, evaluate contracts for transparency and equity, and combat corruption. Economic pressure through assistance has been a key tool of manipulation used by the PRC. We will also lead with our most powerful tool—our values—which most clearly demonstrate the value of democratic leadership in the region.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to working with New Delhi to coordinate and strengthen U.S. and Indian support of the Tibetans in exile in India?

Answer. I commend India's hosting of Tibetan refugees over many decades. India's continued support is crucial to ensuring that a large part of the Tibetan diaspora can freely practice their language, culture, and religion. If confirmed, I'll work with the Indian Government to ensure that Tibetans in exile in India, including the Dalai Lama, can continue to promote peace and understanding around the world without external influence.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. DONALD LU BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

Question. The State Department's 2020 Country Report on Human Rights and Practices for India notes, among other significant human rights issues, the Government of India places "restrictions on freedom of expression and the press, including violence, threats of violence, or unjustified arrests or prosecutions against journalists, use of criminal libel laws to prosecute social media speech, censorship, and site blocking." If confirmed, what steps do you intend to take to promote freedom of speech and freedom of expression in India?

Answer. Freedom of speech and freedom of expression are fundamental rights enshrined in the Indian constitution and as fellow democracies, the United States and India have a shared interest to engage on these issues, as the Secretary did in his recent travel to New Delhi. If confirmed, I intend to follow the Secretary's principled leadership on the matter and work closely with U.S. Mission India and colleagues across the Department to continue our robust engagement with Indian journalists and media, to raise concerns with the Indian Government, and to consult faithfully with Congress.

Question. The State Department's Ambassador-at-Large for International Religious Freedom expressed concern about the implications of the Citizenship Amendment Act (CAA) when it was passed by the Indian parliament in 2019. Also citing the CAA and other significant downward trends in religious freedom conditions, the U.S. Commission on International Freedom (USCIRF) recommended in its 2020 Annual Report that the State Department designate India as a Country of Particular Concern in its next annual report on International Religious Freedom. What is the State Department's policy regarding the CAA?

Answer. Respect for religious freedom and equal treatment under the law are fundamental principles of both the United States and India. While the Indian Government has not yet actively implemented the Citizenship Amendment Act, the Department continues to call on India to protect the rights of its religious minorities in keeping with India's constitution and history of diversity.

Question. How does the Department factor USCIRF recommendations into its own deliberations when determining whether a country is included as a Country of Particular Concern in the International Religious Freedom report?

Answer. USCIRF is an independent commission established under the 1998 International Religious Freedom (IRF) Act to provide policy recommendations to the President, Secretary of State, and Congress with respect to matters involving international religious freedom. The Secretary considers a wide variety of factors, including USCIRF findings as required by the IRF Act, when making the annual religious freedom designations.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to hold frank conversations with your counterparts in the Indian Government regarding its obligation to commit to freedom, democratic principles, equal treatment of all citizens, human rights, and the rule of law for all?

Answer. Yes.

Diplomatic Vision for Afghanistan After U.S. Troop Withdrawal

Question. U.S. policymakers and foreign policy experts had initially expected the withdrawal of U.S. military forces to be accompanied by a diplomatic surge. Yet the security situation in Afghanistan may preclude the possibility of such a surge.

- Given the security challenges in Afghanistan, what is your vision for U.S. diplomatic engagement and presence in Afghanistan after the U.S. troop withdrawal is complete?
- If the State Department is unable to lead a diplomatic surge, how can the United States best secure the gains that we have made in human rights, education and empowerment of girls, and other important issues in Afghanistan? In other words, how can the United States best help the Afghan people and promote U.S. interests in Afghanistan?

Answer. I understand all the agencies at our Embassy will continue their important work, as long as security conditions permit, consistent with the administration's commitment to stay fully engaged on behalf of U.S. interests in Afghanistan. This will include our consular support to U.S. citizens and fulfilling our commitment to Afghans who have worked alongside us through adjudication of Special Immigrant Visas. I will remain in frequent communication with our Embassy in Kabul and the interagency to continuously evaluate information pertaining to the security of U.S. citizens and U.S. Government personnel, facilities, and interests in Afghanistan in order to mitigate any emerging threats. I will also consult with stakeholders on creative approaches, such as off-shoring, that can advance U.S. interests while keeping our mission safe.

I am committed to using our full diplomatic, economic, and development toolkit to support efforts to establish peace and promote the future that Afghans are seeking. If confirmed, I will do everything I can to sustain and further advance the gains achieved by Afghan society, particularly those made by Afghan women, girls, and minorities over the last 20 years. I am committed to using our diplomatic and assistance resources to continue to advocate for women's rights, support their meaningful participation in peace negotiations, work to create quality educational opportunities, assist women to join the workforce, combat gender-based violence, and expand access to quality healthcare.

Question. In your testimony, you noted that for the past 20 years, the U.S.-Pakistan relationship has been defined by the war in Afghanistan and related U.S. counterterrorism efforts in the region. With U.S. troops leaving Afghanistan, there is an opportunity to redefine the U.S.-Pakistan relationship. Issues such as climate change, strategic competition with China, economic development, and others may be on the table.

Despite many shared interests and priorities, the U.S.-Pakistan relationship has been beset by years of distrust and unaligned policies. What will it take for the United States and Pakistan to move beyond the persistent challenges in our bilateral relationship to cooperate on our shared priorities?

Answer. The Department continues to make clear it seeks further assistance from Pakistan for progress toward a political settlement in Afghanistan and collaboration on regional stability efforts, including against terrorist groups. Such actions would contribute importantly to an expanded U.S.-Pakistan relationship. If confirmed, I will push for more bilateral cooperation based on shared priorities, including securing a responsible end to the conflict in Afghanistan, advancing regional security and fighting terrorism, expanding both bilateral and regional commercial and trade opportunities, promoting sustainable and inclusive economic development, and ad

Chinese Territorial Aggression in Bhutan

Question. China reportedly claims as many as eight areas inside Bhutan as being Chinese territory. In 2015, China announced that it had built an entirely new village called Gyalaphug inside a 232-square-mile area claimed by China since the early 1980s, but internationally understood as part of Lhuntse district in northern Bhutan.

China's efforts to fortify the Tibetan borderlands, expand its maritime control in the South China Sea, and conduct other provocative measures are nothing new. Yet building a new village inside the territory of another country is different. According to at least one report, China does not need the land it is settling in Bhutan. Its aim, rather, is to force the Bhutanese Government to cede territory that China wants elsewhere in Bhutan to give Beijing a military advantage in its struggle with New Delhi.

- What is the Department's policy on Chinese efforts to expand its borders by building towns and villages in disputed territories?
- If confirmed, what efforts will you lead to protect Bhutan's sovereignty and prevent it from becoming a pawn in China's attempts to gain an advantage over India?

Answer. The Department is very concerned with the People's Republic of China (PRC)'s construction of towns and villages in disputed territories. Parties to territorial disputes must adhere to international law and resolve differences through dialogue. If confirmed, I will work to advance our friendship with Bhutan, reaffirm our commitment to its sovereignty, and coordinate with our partners, including India, to address the PRC's buildup in the Tibetan borderlands and to support a free and open region capable of resolving differences through dialogue. I also pledge to work closely with Congress to address this concerning trend.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. DONALD LU BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question. What are the limits of cooperation that we can expect to see from India given their history of non-alignment?

Answer. Over the last two decades, the United States and India have made tremendous strides across all aspects of our strategic partnership. Our cooperation encompasses a wide range of issues, including regional cooperation in the Indo-Pacific; the Quad; trade and investment; defense and security; climate change remediation; clean energy; higher education and people-to-people; shared values, and science and space. India has a unique foreign policy outlook given its history, but given our growing strategic convergence the Indo-Pacific, I am confident U.S.-India ties will continue to mature and deepen.

Question. China is aggressively pushing on India's border and is now claiming areas in which they have never had a historic assertion. Do you believe China is trying to find an "off-ramp" for this issue or is it looking to escalate the dispute with India?

Answer. The United States is concerned by Beijing's pattern of ongoing attempts to intimidate its neighbors, including India. We're closely following updates of any troop disengagement, and we welcome ongoing efforts to de-escalate the situation. We continue to monitor closely as both sides work toward a peaceful resolution. We urge direct dialogue and a peaceful resolution to border disputes.

Question. What message is China trying to send with its actions? Do you believe it is pushing this issue specifically to discredit India with regional allies?

Answer. The United States is deeply concerned by a pattern of territorial encroachment and failure to abide by the previous status quo along China's disputed terrestrial and maritime borders. We will stand with friends, partners, and allies in the face of the PRC's most assertive policies and for the good of the region.

Question. Do you believe these escalations will push India into a more robust and long-term security agreement with the U.S.?

Answer. India will seek partnerships based on its interests, but our shared vision for the Indo-Pacific portends greater regional and bilateral cooperation.

Question. India is the biggest donor to the Afghan National Government and 5th globally. What are India's interests in Afghanistan? Or is this more just another front in the long running competition with their neighbor Pakistan?

Answer. The United States and India have a shared interest in a stable and peaceful Afghanistan. India does not wish to see Afghanistan turn into a terrorist safe haven that undermines its security. We welcome India's support for the peace process and its long-running development assistance program.

Question. What does India stand to lose if security situation in Afghanistan worsens?

Answer. India has expressed concern about potential terrorist attacks against Indian interests in Afghanistan, as well as the impact on regional stability should the security situation deteriorate further. In the immediate term, India is also concerned about the threat to India's personnel and nationals working in Afghanistan.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. MARCELA ESCOBARI BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Cuba

Question. As part of USAID's work in defense of human rights, it is my understanding that USAID carries out programming focused on addressing the forced labor practices of Cuba's foreign medical missions.

- What is your assessment of these medical missions and, if confirmed, will you continue USAID's current programs?

Answer. I believe that Cuba's foreign medical missions, as noted in the Department of State's 2021 Trafficking in Persons (TIP) Report, represent a form of labor trafficking. As noted by the TIP report, the Cuban Government "failed to inform participants of the terms of their contracts, confiscated their documents and salaries, and threatened medical professionals and their family members if participants left the program."

I understand that USAID has programs in place currently to support the human rights of Cuban workers, including medical personnel.

Support for democracy and human rights is at the core of this administration's Cuba policy. We must be vocal in our support for the journalists, human rights defenders, and democracy activists seeking to challenge the repressiveness of Cuban authorities, who maintain a tight grip on all aspects of life on the island and are ruthless in seeking to stifle dissent. If confirmed, I will continue to promote all types of programming to support human rights and fundamental freedoms for the Cuban population and look forward to consulting with you on this issue.

COVID-19 and Economic Recovery

Question. COVID-19 has had a particularly devastating impact on Latin America and the Caribbean, claiming at least 1.2 million lives. Today, only one in ten individuals in the region is fully vaccinated.

- If confirmed, what strategies will you implement to increase access to and distribution of vaccines in the region?

Answer. To date, I understand that the United States Government has delivered over 33 million doses of COVID-19 vaccines to 15 countries in Latin America and the Caribbean.

Furthermore, it is my understanding that USAID is also preparing countries to safely and effectively distribute COVID-19 vaccines. To date, I understand USAID has provided more than $75 million globally, including $13.5 million for the Latin America and Caribbean region, to assist countries to develop their national COVID-19 vaccine distribution plans, address misinformation and vaccine hesitancy to improve trust and confidence, strengthen supply chain and logistics to distribute vaccines with speed, equity, and safety, train health professionals to administer vaccines, and manage health information systems for better data tracking. If confirmed, I commit to supporting the Agency's efforts to increase access to vaccines in the region.

Question. How would you balance addressing the multiple consequences of COVID-19 on public health, economies, social development, and women and children in the region?

Answer. It is my understanding that USAID continues to monitor and address the evolving and varied second-order impacts of the pandemic on the region, and will leverage existing and new programs to address the most critical challenges. COVID-19 has hurt economies throughout the region, disproportionately impacting the poor and vulnerable. COVID-19 has also contributed to a humanitarian crisis in the region, increased gender-based violence, and lack of access to income-generating opportunities. The response today also needs to address the millions of children not receiving routine vaccinations and the millions displaced from school. To date, I understand that USAID has responded to such impacts with programming to support microcredit and job training for small businesses and entrepreneurs; the expansion of social protection, psycho-social and educational support in vulnerable communities; job opportunities for likely migrants; and the adoption of e-commerce strategies and tools to respond to COVID-19 economic restrictions. If confirmed, I will prioritize addressing the second-order impacts of the COVID-19 pandemic in the region.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. MARCELA ESCOBARI BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Central America

Question. Successive U.S. strategies have failed to make any discernable progress in achieving or advancing the goal of reducing mass illegal migration from Central America. If confirmed, what actions would you recommend taking to build and maintain political will among the political leadership in the countries of Northern Central America to tackle the push factors of illegal migration? What specific reforms should individual governments adopt to effectively reduce illegal migration from the region?

Answer. If confirmed, my priorities in Central America will include expeditiously strengthening programs that seek to improve conditions in the region and tackle the major drivers of migration. While the specific drivers of irregular migration cannot be generalized across countries or even communities, they are generally tied to insecurity, lack of economic opportunity, and the effects of poor governance and corruption, and I will work with other U.S. Government agencies to build the political will of partner nations to address these drivers. COVID-19 has exacerbated these conditions, as have major natural disasters (including hurricanes) recently hitting the region.

If confirmed, I will continue USAID's current approach of tailoring and adapting programs to the unique needs of each country and community. I will also continue the Agency's practice of using migration data to focus resources geographically in response to specific, local drivers of migration. USAID will work with a wide range of stakeholders from civil society and the private sector to increase the impact of our efforts. I will also commit to working closely with our partners in the region. I understand that USAID works closely with multiple stakeholders in the region both in the public and private sectors as well as with civil society organizations and international non-governmental organizations. And I look forward to further consultations with Congress on how to further improve the effectiveness of these programs.

Nicaragua

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to prioritize programs and activities designed to improve the capacity of the democratic forces in Nicaragua to be a credible political challenge to the Ortega regime?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to ensuring USAID supports viable, democratic processes, institutions and forces in Nicaragua. USAID is focused on the November 2021 national elections in Nicaragua and on restoring democratic processes and respect for human rights through expanding opportunities for coalition building and supporting electoral integrity and an active civil society.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to channel any humanitarian assistance that USAID may provide in Nicaragua solely through independent non-governmental organizations?

Answer. Yes, I commit to channeling any USAID-provided humanitarian assistance solely through independent NGOs and Public International Organizations (PIOs). U.S. humanitarian assistance is provided through impartial international and local organizations and U.N. agencies, who are on the ground working with vulnerable populations, for the sole purpose of helping people in need.

Cuba

Question. The Government of Cuba maintains an estimated 50,000 medical personnel in more than 60 countries under conditions that meet the definition of human trafficking. The United States, the United Nations, independent media outlets, and non-governmental organizations have all documented and called out the Cuban regime's exploitative and coercive practices toward doctors participating in its overseas medical programs. Do you agree that the Cuban regime's overseas medical missions amount to human trafficking? If confirmed, do you commit to ensure USAID Missions in U.S. Embassies in countries that accept Cuban medical missions help communicate the realities of the forced labor practices employed by the Cuban regime?

Answer. I believe that Cuba's foreign medical missions, as noted in the Department of State's 2021 Trafficking in Persons (TIP) Report, represent a form of labor trafficking. As noted by the TIP report, the Cuban Government "failed to inform participants of the terms of their contracts, confiscated their documents and salaries, and threatened medical professionals and their family members if participants left the program."

I understand that USAID has programs in place currently to support the human rights of Cuban workers, including medical personnel.

Support for democracy and human rights is at the core of this administration's Cuba policy. We must be vocal in our support for the journalists, human rights defenders, and democracy activists seeking to challenge the repressiveness of Cuban authorities. If confirmed, I will continue to promote programming to support human rights and fundamental freedoms for the Cuban population and look forward to consulting with you on this issue.

Question. Do you commit to maintain a robust USAID democracy program focused on advancing respect for basic human rights in Cuba?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue USAID's work to support democratic activists and human rights defenders in Cuba. The role of a vibrant civil society continues to be essential to Cuban democracy. I gather that USAID has a portfolio in place to continue supporting a diverse sector of independent activists in Cuba who will push for democratic freedoms, including religious freedom. The Agency will also continue providing basic needs assistance to political prisoners, persecuted activists, and their families. NGOs are poised to continue defending the human rights of those who are abused and even jailed for their political beliefs.

Haiti

Question. Haiti is facing a complex and worsening crisis of governance. If confirmed, do you commit to ensuring USAID plays an effective role in promoting economic self-reliance and meaningful dialogue among the different political forces? If confirmed, do you commit to dedicate resources to strengthening Haiti's technical capacity to hold elections?

Answer. The Haitian people deserve democracy and prosperity. Haiti has been without a functioning government for too long, and in the meantime, conditions continue to deteriorate. The political parties need to come together to end the misery, corruption and insecurity wreaking havoc for the Haitian people. While Haiti is facing a complex emergency that USAID assistance alone cannot resolve, USAID does have an important role to play in helping to promote democracy, human rights, and governance. With respect to the upcoming legislative elections, I understand that USAID's current activities aim to promote credible elections, increase political party competition, and expand civic participation in electoral processes to help end the ongoing political crisis of rule by decree. If confirmed, I will advocate for a strong whole-of-government and multi-donor approach for targeted democracy, human rights, governance and humanitarian assistance to promote democratic political reform, peace and stability.

Venezuela

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to ensuring USAID-supported humanitarian efforts in Venezuela do not bring reputational benefits to the Maduro regime and individuals or entities aligned with the regime? Do you commit to ensuring USAID does not provide direct or indirect support to a COVID vaccination campaign in Venezuela that uses vaccines developed by the Cuban regime?

Answer. I understand that USAID has no plans at this time to provide direct or indirect support to a COVID-19 vaccination campaign in Venezuela, where current vaccination efforts are non-transparent and discriminatory. Venezuela is a self-financing participant in COVAX, which means that it does not receive donor-supported vaccines or other assistance. USAID would only provide COVID-19 vaccination support if Venezuela established a credible, impartial, and transparent national vaccination plan, implemented in partnership with, or under the auspices of, international partners. In addition, it is my understanding that USAID has not provided, and has no plans to provide, direct or indirect support to a COVID-19 vaccination campaign in which any Cuban vaccine is used. Cuba has not published its trial data for its vaccines, nor has the vaccine received an emergency use listing or authorization from the World Health Organization.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. MARCELA ESCOBARI BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Addressing Corruption

Question. President Biden has taken an important step toward enhancing the ability of the United States Government to combat corruption and criminal actors worldwide with the release of the National Security Study Memorandum on fighting corruption. Defining the fight against corruption as a “core U.S. national security interest” sets a standard for how our government, our partners, and others can work together to combat such illicit, corrosive activity. I’ve reintroduced the Combating Global Corruption Act which is now in front of the full Senate and has been introduced in the House. The bill obliges the Executive to identify corruption in countries and rank them in a public, tiered system with respect to levels of corruption in their governments; establishes minimum standards for combating corruption; and evaluates foreign persons engaged in grand corruption for consideration under the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Accountability Act.

- Will you commit to working with me to advance the Combating Global Corruption Act and to raising the profile of efforts to fight international corruption as a U.S. national security priority, particularly in Latin America and the Caribbean?

Answer. I agree that fighting corruption is a U.S. national security priority and I look forward to discussing the Combating Global Corruption bill with you, if confirmed. I agree that anti-corruption efforts must be a focus of our efforts in Latin America and the Caribbean. The President has articulated a comprehensive $4 billion, four-year plan to confront corruption, enhance security, and foster prosperity to address the root causes of migration from Central America. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Congress to most effectively implement President Biden’s plan in Central America, and to working with interagency colleagues to utilize all possible tools to increase pressure on those not doing enough to confront corruption and impunity across the region. I also will seek to deepen current investments in democracy, human rights, and governance, including by supporting civil society organizations and promoting independent media and protection for journalists critical to combating corruption in the region.

Question. Where do you see the biggest opportunities to make real strides in eliminating corruption in the Americas over the next two or three years?

Answer. I understand that the USAID institutes robust anti-corruption programming by helping host countries to strengthen controls and transparency in their procurement systems and enhance their capacity to prosecute and adjudicate cases through the courts system. Corruption is corrosive for many reasons, and in particular because it undermines citizen’s belief that government can deliver for them. Corruption also contributes to weak democratic institutions and widespread impunity in the Latin America and the Caribbean region. As a result, crime and violence flourish, which is linked to people’s intentions to migrate. If confirmed, among my priorities for USAID’s Latin America and Caribbean Bureau will include helping institutions deliver basic services with transparency and efficiency, and supporting civil society organizations and independent journalists carrying out oversight of government institutions. I also would seek to work with interagency colleagues to ensure that all possible tools are used to combat corruption in the region.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
 SUBMITTED TO HON. MARCELA ESCOBARI BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. As Assistant Administrator for Latin America and the Caribbean at USAID, you will oversee 17 regional missions, 900+ people and over $1 billion of development funds focused on promoting inclusive growth, human rights, democracy and governance, and citizen security. Your biography mentions that during your last tenure at USAID, you focused on the administration's priorities, including: "reinforced U.S. support for Peace Colombia, established a long-term development plan for Haiti, and prepared a proactive strategy to confront the humanitarian and political crisis in Venezuela." It says also that in response to Congress' doubling of funding to Central America, you led changes in strategy, organization and execution to combat root causes of poverty and migration in the region.

- Can you provide the committee with the major concrete steps of your strategy to confront the humanitarian and political crisis in Venezuela?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support Interim President Juan Guaidó, the democratically elected National Assembly, and the people of Venezuela to determine their own future through free and fair elections. I commit to working with non-governmental organizations and civil society groups to advance democracy and a pathway to democratic elections in Venezuela. If confirmed, I look forward to consulting with you about how we might strengthen those efforts, given the devastating costs of Maduro's repression, and that of USAID's continued work to provide life-saving humanitarian assistance to vulnerable Venezuelans in Venezuela as well as Venezuelan migrants and refugees across the region.

Question. What is your understanding of the status of current USAID programs in Haiti?

Answer. I understand that USAID is committed to working with the Haitian people in their efforts to build a healthy, prosperous, and peaceful Haiti. Given recent developments, it is a critical time to learn from the past and smartly engage foreign assistance resources in Haiti. If confirmed, I commit to supporting COVID relief, humanitarian assistance, and resilience building in Haiti. While humanitarian assistance will help alleviate some urgent humanitarian needs, it will not and cannot address the root causes of the current economic and political situation in Haiti, which will only be sustainably addressed by engaging Haitian actors with the political will to take-on much needed Haitian-driven reforms.

Question. Earlier this year, I re-introduced my bipartisan legislation, the Central American Women and Children Protection Act. This bill authorizes appropriations to provide assistance to El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras through bilateral compacts to increase protection of women and children in their homes and communities and reduce female homicides, domestic violence, and sexual assault.

- In your opinion, is this legislation something that USAID should support?

Answer. Thank you for your commitment to protecting women and children in El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras, a goal that I wholeheartedly share. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you on this legislation and will ensure that USAID continues to support gender-based violence (GBV) survivors and women at risk of GBV in El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras, and welcome continued support for programming in this area. I understand that in the Northern Triangle, USAID supports civil society and independent watchdog institutions to deter human rights abuses, respond to human rights violations, and support vulnerable populations. This includes forcibly displaced persons, women, children, and youth affected by violence and insecurity.

Question. In a recent letter to President Biden, I asked that the United States to be prepared to provide COVID-19 vaccines, and other humanitarian assistance, to the people of Cuba, but only if it is delivered to, and distributed by, trustworthy and independent international organizations. We must not allow the regime to take possession of such relief and use it as a weapon to force the people of Cuba into compliance with their demands.

- Are you being briefed on any discussions with regard to providing humanitarian assistance to Cuba?
- What do you see as the priorities in this space?

Answer. While I am not privy to any internal U.S. Government discussions, I have been following recent developments and the U.S. Government's announcements to facilitate the shipment of humanitarian assistance to Cuba. I understand that USAID has been providing assistance, including food, medicine, and hygiene products to victims of repression, including political prisoners, their family members, and other individuals who are persecuted because of their political or religious beliefs. If confirmed, I will continue to prioritize support for these populations, which remain under even greater threat following the July 11 protests. Accordingly, I will do my utmost to ensure that assistance is delivered to, and distributed by, trustworthy and independent organizations.

FOLLOW-UP TO SENATOR RUBIO'S INITIAL QUESTIONS

Question. In your response to my question for the record (“Can you provide the committee with the major concrete steps of your strategy to confront the humanitarian and political crisis in Venezuela?”) you responded with a description of the steps you would take to address the crisis, if confirmed. While we appreciate your wholehearted support for Interim President Guaidó and the democratic aspirations of the Venezuelan people, the intent of my question was to receive a summary of the concrete steps you helped to develop to confront the crisis during the Obama administration.

- Please provide a description of your strategy to confront the humanitarian and political crisis in Venezuela during your last tenure at USAID, including the outcomes of those actions.

Answer. In 2016, in my capacity as Assistant Administrator of the Bureau for Latin America and the Caribbean (LAC), I worked with the Bureau and USAID and its partners to assess the worsening humanitarian conditions in the country to understand who the crisis was affecting most severely and in which parts of the country. Our ongoing analysis led to the inclusion of Venezuela in a watchlist at Democracy, Conflict, and Humanitarian Assistance Bureau, the Bureau that was then in charge of humanitarian response, stabilization, and democracy.

The political opposition controlled the National Assembly, but the regime was blocking them from performing their democratic functions. As a result of the ongoing situation on the ground, USAID/LAC programming focused on monitoring and reporting on human rights, electoral conditions, and living conditions in the country. USAID also worked to support independent media, and I supported providing robust assistance to the National Assembly.

Under my direction, USAID/LAC assessed what possible outcomes could evolve on the ground, and what response would be adequate. This included continuing USAID programming to defend and promote democratic rights, initiating delivery of socioeconomic relief and commodities, particularly medical supplies, through local independent partners, and expanding humanitarian assistance through local independent partners to avoid politicization by the Maduro regime. We also anticipated programming that would be needed should a political transition to democracy transpire. This assessment process continued in an iterative manner through the end of the administration.

Question. If confirmed, how will your actions to address the current political and humanitarian crises in Venezuela differ from this strategy you prepared during the Obama administration?

Answer. In 2016, the opportunity to work with an interim government was not yet a possibility—this is a difference. If confirmed, I will support Interim President Juan Guaidó, the democratically elected National Assembly, and the people of Venezuela to determine their own future through free and fair elections. I commit to working with non-governmental organizations and civil society organizations to advance democracy and a pathway to democratic elections in Venezuela. This is my priority.

USAID’s engagement on health and food security also has the potential to help alleviate the humanitarian crisis and contribute to conditions for a democratic transition. With increasing access inside Venezuela by USAID’s implementing partners, I would pursue creative solutions that bring respite to the Venezuelan people outside of the Maduro regime’s control and I commit to engaging with you and your staff, if confirmed.

Question. Can you clarify your role in developing this strategy? Did you personally author this strategy?

Answer. Given the ongoing humanitarian and political situation in Venezuela, as previously stated, USAID/LAC engaged in assessing possible outcomes under my direction while Assistant Administrator for the Bureau. We analyzed the economic decline and its ramifications, summarized FEWS NET food security assessments, the worsening of the medical and security situation, and ways to circumvent the regime’s politicization of essential goods should the situation on the ground shift. This iterative process was managed, in response to my direction and under my guidance, by the Bureau for Latin America and the Caribbean's Office of South American Affairs.

Question. In your response to my question for the record ("In your opinion, is this legislation something that USAID should support?"), you responded, "Thank you for your commitment to protecting women and children in El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras, a goal that I wholeheartedly share. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you on this legislation and will ensure that USAID continues to support gender-based violence (GBV) survivors and women at risk of GBV in El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras, and welcome continued support for programming in this area. I understand that in the Northern Triangle, USAID supports civil society and independent watchdog institutions to deter human rights abuses, respond to human rights violations, and support vulnerable populations. This includes forcibly displaced persons, women, children, and youth affected by violence and insecurity."

- The intent of this legislation is to authorize the United States to enter into Women and Children Compacts with the countries of El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras, modelled off of those the United States has entered into with Ghana, The Philippines, Peru and Jamaica. Do you believe that these compacts will contribute to USAID's efforts to address support women and children at risk of GBV?

Answer. When conditions on the ground are right, I believe compacts with partner governments on important issues like countering GBV can be extremely important. I understand that the Child Protection Compact Partnerships the U.S. has developed jointly with governments, for instance with Jamaica and Peru, have aimed to build on existing efforts to prosecute and punish perpetrators of child trafficking, identify child trafficking victims, coordinate and strengthen protective services, and prevent child trafficking. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the Committee on this legislation, and with the State Department to establish such agreements, in appropriate countries.

To help create the conditions for such compacts, I will ensure that USAID continues to prioritize efforts to counter GBV. The "U.S. Strategy for Addressing the Root Causes of Migration in Central America" and the "Collaborative Migration Management Strategy," released on July 29, provide further details to guide USAID's strategic efforts for the region, including protection efforts for at-risk groups and addressing gender-based violence. Pillar V of the Root Causes Strategy focuses on "combating sexual, gender-based, and domestic violence," with objectives including: governments and civil society take steps to prevent sexual, gender-based, and domestic violence; hold perpetrators accountable; and protect and provide services for victims. I commit to working with your office to ensure that our mutual priority of protecting vulnerable populations, most specifically women and girls in Central America, is embedded in future programming.

Question. In your response to my question for the record on your awareness of the administration's discussions regarding humanitarian assistance to Cuba, you responded, "While I am not privy to any internal U.S. Government discussions, I have been following recent developments and the U.S. Government's announcements to facilitate the shipment of humanitarian assistance to Cuba. I understand that USAID has been providing assistance, including food, medicine, and hygiene products to victims of repression, including political prisoners, their family members, and other individuals who are persecuted because of their political or religious beliefs. If confirmed, I will continue to prioritize support for these populations, which remain under even greater threat following the July 11 protests. Accordingly, I will do my utmost to ensure that assistance is delivered to, and distributed by, trustworthy and independent organizations."

- If confirmed, please provide what steps and actions will you take to ensure that humanitarian assistance is delivered to, and distributed by, trustworthy independent organizations inside Cuba?

Answer. If confirmed, I will verify that existing basic needs assistance benefiting political prisoners, dissidents, and their families, is implemented by U.S.-based or internationally recognized independent NGOs. If confirmed, I will ensure that my team requires that each of these organizations provide USAID with their delivery and distribution protocols, and that they be verified and monitored frequently to ensure assistance does not benefit members of the regime.

Question. Please be specific on how will you ensure that this humanitarian assistance does not benefit members of the Castro/Diaz-Canel Regime?

Answer. As USAID designs new solicitations for additional basic needs assistance instruments, I will ensure that all necessary safeguards are in place for such work to be carried out only by independent organizations and to prevent the regime from benefiting from them in any way.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to provide regular briefings to my office, and other interested Senate offices, on USAID's provision of humanitarian assistance to the people of Cuba?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to regular briefings with your office and other interested Senate offices on USAID's provision of humanitarian assistance to the people of Cuba.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO HON. MARCELA ESCOBARI BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

China, COVID-19, and Economic Development

Question. The COVID-19 pandemic has devastated the region, and countries are struggling with record levels of debt and an anemic economic recovery. Latin America faced the sharpest economic contraction in 2020 of any region in the entire world. Unfortunately, many of these countries were struggling even before the pandemic due to weak rule of law, low investment, and poor governance.

Relatedly, I am worried by China's rising influence in the region. In 2019, Chinese companies invested $12.8 billion in Latin America, up 16.5 percent from 2018, concentrating investments on regional infrastructure such as ports, roads, dams and railways.

I'll note that China's investments are not just making a difference in infrastructure but in the past four years, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador and Panama have each switched their recognition from Taiwan to China. Clearly, China is using this investment to achieve their geopolitical goals as well.

- If confirmed, how would you work through USAID to counter what China is doing in the region to ensure that the United States remains the partner of choice for our neighbors?

Answer. I understand that the administration's approach to countering PRC's influence is to provide tangible support that promotes sustainable opportunities for economic growth coupled with democratic governance, transparency, and local ownership of development work. If confirmed, I will work with the U.S International Development Finance Corporation to provide countries with choices and opportunities, rather than debt traps, digital surveillance, and development projects that are often opaque, extractive and coercive. It is important to me to work with allies and partners in the region to better leverage resources and exert influence. I will be a visible advocate for cooperative economic development and trade, human rights, democratic governance, and environmental, social, and labor standards, if confirmed.

---

THURSDAY, AUGUST 5, 2021

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:04 a.m. in Room SH-216, Hon. Chris Van Hollen presiding.

Present: Senators Van Hollen [presiding], Kaine, Young, and Rounds.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. CHRIS VAN HOLLEN, U.S. SENATOR FROM MARYLAND

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Good morning, everybody. The nominations hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

I want to welcome all of you here and thank my colleague, Senator Rounds, who is the ranking member of the Africa Subcommittee and the Subcommittee on Global Health Policy. I look forward to continuing our work together.

I am very pleased to welcome our three nominees this morning, Ambassador Michael Raynor to be Ambassador to the Republic of Senegal and Ambassador to the Republic of Guinea-Bissau, Mr. Marc Ostfield to be Ambassador to the Republic of Paraguay, and Mr. Troy Fitrill to be Ambassador to the Republic of Guinea.

Again, welcome all of you here. Congratulations on your nominations and thank you for your ongoing service to the country as members of the Foreign Service, and I also want to thank and salute your family members who have joined with us today.

Before we hear from our nominees, I would like to outline several key topics of relevance for today's panel before turning it over to the ranking member for his opening statement.

Ambassador Raynor, I am pleased to welcome you back to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and glad that President Biden has selected you to represent the United States in two nations that hold great promise and great potential for enhancing our diplomatic presence in West Africa, Senegal and Guinea-Bissau.

As you know, Senegal has been a democratic stronghold in the region and a long-standing friend of the United States, and I hope that should you be confirmed you will work in partnership with this committee and regional stakeholders in Senegal to deepen the bonds that link our two nations.

In contrast, Guinea-Bissau has undergone significant political upheaval in recent years, and those political challenges are paired with serious development challenges.

The World Bank estimates that 70 percent of the population in Guinea-Bissau lives on $1.90 per day or less, and that hardship has only been compounded by the economic fallout from the COVID-19 pandemic.

I look forward to discussing with you your potential avenues and your ideas for engagement in Guinea-Bissau as we work to promote development, both in that country and across West Africa.

Mr. Fitrill, you have been selected by the president to serve in Guinea, another country that presents many challenges and also opportunities for engagement.

I was pleased to see the State Department's determination from last year that Guinea has, quote, "great potential," unquote, for the programs of the new International Development Finance Corporation, especially in the areas of banking, agriculture, IT, energy, and infrastructure.

In addition, the USAID Office of Transition Initiatives recently launched a $15 million regional program seeking to bolster stability in coastal West African nations, including Guinea.

At the same time, we must be clear eyed about the challenges we face in Guinea from last year's violent and controversial reelection of President Condé. Also, to look at the impact of China's deepening influence in the country.

I look forward to discussing measures the United States can take to leverage the tools at our disposal for the benefit of our interests and those of the people of Guinea.

We all recognize that Africa is not a monolith. It is essential that we work with community partners and local leaders to address specific challenges facing each of these African nations, and as we work to strengthen our bilateral relationships also to impact our broader effort to enlarge prosperity that is mutually beneficial to African nations and the United States in West Africa and throughout the continent.

That larger mission must include finding ways to broaden our development efforts through initiatives like USAID and DFC, and enhance trade by making full use of the African Growth and Opportunity Act, AGOA, and other trade tools. We look forward to discussing those ideas with you as well.

Finally, we come to Mr. Ostfield, who has been selected to serve on the other side of the Atlantic, in Paraguay, which is a long-time friend and partner to the United States, and I have been pleased to see the Biden administration make a concerted effort to strengthen our already warm relations with Paraguay.

On March 14th, Secretary Blinken spoke on the phone with President Benítez and reiterated the United States support for the Paraguayan people, and in June, Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs Victoria Nuland, traveled to Paraguay to participate in the second U.S.-Paraguay Strategic Partnership Dialogue, a forum that has been vital in advancing discussions between our countries on trade, security, democracy, and collaboration.

Mr. Ostfield, we look forward to exploring with you the current state of U.S.-Paraguay relations and looking at areas where we can further strengthen that relationship.

Let me just end where I started by congratulating all of you on your nominations. I look forward to our discussion during this hearing.

And with that, let me turn it over to my colleague, Senator Rounds.

STATEMENT OF HON. MIKE ROUNDS,
U.S. SENATOR FROM SOUTH DAKOTA

Senator ROUNDS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

First of all, let me just begin by saying that I am very pleased to see this well-qualified panel of nominees before us today with one previously confirmed twice by this committee to serve in two ambassadorial posts, as well as two other very experienced State Department personnel with great records of service. I want to thank you and your families for your service to our country.

Ambassador Raynor, your background with Africa to include two tours as an ambassador will serve you well if you are confirmed to be our next ambassador to Senegal and Guinea-Bissau.

I look forward to hearing your thoughts on how you will apply lessons learned from your most recent tour in Ethiopia, particularly regarding how the COVID-19 pandemic and recent unrest in Senegal is affecting Senegal stability and economic prospects.

I would also like to hear how you will approach our relationship with Guinea-Bissau and your views on the prospects for greater political stability under President Embal?.

Dr. Ostfield, if confirmed, your experience in global health security and managing other global issues will make you well placed to serve as our Ambassador to Paraguay.

I am interested in your thoughts on what additional assistance from the U.S. or other international partners Paraguay might need in order to overcome the health and economic effects of the pandemic.

We would also welcome your ideas on improved governance and rule of law, increasing security cooperation, and advancing U.S. business interests.

Mr. Fitrill, if you are confirmed, I would be very pleased that we would be sending a diplomat to Guinea who has held a number of senior positions in the Bureau of African Affairs, including most recently as director of the Office of West African Affairs.

Now, this oversees the U.S. engagement with Guinea. I am interested in your thoughts on how Guinea might overcome its deep political divisions and recommit to regular democratic transfers of power.

With that, Mr. Chairman, thank you, and it is back to you, sir.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, Ranking Member Rounds.

I want to recognize that we have been joined by Senator Kaine, who, among other things, oversees the Western Hemisphere.

Welcome.

And before I turn it over to all of you for your testimony, let me just expand a little bit on your backgrounds, and Senator Rounds mentioned some of your experiences.

But I do think it is worth emphasizing the deep experience that all of you have and I must say, as someone who grew up in a Foreign Service family, I am grateful for your service and it always serves our country's interests well when we nominate and send people who have deep knowledge of the issue areas they are jumping into.

Ambassador Michael Raynor, known affectionately by friends and colleagues here and abroad as Ambassador Mike, is a long-term member of the Foreign Service. Over the course of his extensive career, Ambassador Raynor has worked in all African sub-regions.

He most recently served as the U.S. Ambassador to Ethiopia and was previously our Ambassador to Benin. Earlier in his career, Ambassador Raynor was director of the Office of Career Development and Assignments in the State Department's Bureau of Human Resources where he oversaw career development for over 14,000 members of the Foreign Service.

He has also served as the Africa Bureau's Executive Director where he led management and crisis support efforts for the Bureau's 53 U.S. embassies and consulates.

In addition, his previous service includes tours as management officer at U.S. Embassies in Zimbabwe, Namibia, Guinea, and Djibouti. He earned an MA in international affairs from Columbia University and a BA from Lafayette College.

He is the recipient of numerous State Department awards, including the Leamon R. Hunt Award for management excellence. He is fluent in French and, as an extra bonus, at least for me, he is a resident of the state of Maryland. Welcome.

Mr. Marc Ostfield is a career member of the Senior Executive Service with over 40 years of experience in international affairs and national security.

He is the current ombudsman of the United States State Department, and also has served the department as Acting Director of the Foreign Service Institute, Director of the Office of Policy and Global Issues in the Bureau of European and Eurasian Affairs, Senior Foreign Affairs officer at the Office of Science and Technology Cooperation, and Senior Advisor for Bioterrorism, Biodefense, and Health Security in the Office of International Health and Biodefense.

Mr. Ostfield earned his BA, MS, and Ph.D. from the University of Pennsylvania. He is the recipient of a Presidential Rank Award, numerous Senior State Department awards, and a range of other honors including a prestigious diplomacy fellowship from the American Association for the Advancement of Science. He speaks Spanish, Portuguese, French, and Arabic. Welcome to you.

Mr. Troy Damian Fitrill is a career member of the Senior Foreign Service and current Director of the Office of West African Affairs at the State Department.

He has previously served as deputy chief of mission at U.S. Embassies in Ethiopia and Mauritius, and as Deputy Director of the Department's Office of Southern African Affairs.

In addition, he served as Senior Advisor to the United States Special Envoy for the Great Lakes of Africa. Mr. Fitrill has also spent time on Capitol Hill as a Pearson Fellow.

We will not hold it against you, you worked on the House side instead of the Senate side. But you worked on the House Foreign Affairs Committee where your portfolio included a suite of issues relevant to Asia, the Pacific, and Africa.

I am also proud to know that Mr. Fitrill earned his BA in my home state at the University of Maryland and an MS at the National War College. He speaks French, Spanish, Portuguese, Swedish, and Danish, and let me just welcome you as well.

So it is wonderful to have a group of three very qualified nominees to be ambassadors to these important posts.

Now, let me turn it over to each of you for your opening statements.

Let us begin with Ambassador Raynor.

STATEMENT OF THE HON. MICHAEL RAYNOR OF MARYLAND, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF SENEGAL, AND TO SERVE CONCURRENTLY AND WITHOUT ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION AS AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF GUINEA-BISSAU

Ambassador RAYNOR. Thank you very much.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Rounds, and members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee to serve as Ambassador to the Republic of Senegal and to the Republic of Guinea-Bissau.

I am grateful to the president and Secretary Blinken for their trust and confidence in me, and I am deeply indebted to my wife, Kate, my son, Bradley, and my daughter, Emma, for their sacrifices and support throughout my Foreign Service career.

During more than 31 years as a Foreign Service officer, I have developed substantial policy and managerial experience and a record of inclusive leadership fostering interagency collaboration, strong performance by diverse teams, and high morale in challenging environments.

As Ambassador to Ethiopia, I advanced our bilateral priorities at the time, which included supporting the country's transition toward democratic governance and free market economics, launching new programs to bolster human rights and counter ethnic strife, strengthening peacekeeping and counterterrorism efforts, and facilitating major growth in U.S. commercial investments. I am devastated by the current situation there.

As Ambassador to Benin, I elicited strong security cooperation, helped improve the country's business climate and U.S. commercial prospects, and strengthened the country's democratic trajectory.

As Assistant Chief of Mission in Afghanistan, I led some of the United States' largest foreign assistance and justice sector programs, as well as the embassy's large and complex management, consular, and security operations, while regularly engaging Afghan leaders on governance and security concerns.

As Executive Director of the Bureau of African Affairs, I led the State Department's management and crisis support for more than 50 posts in Africa.

If confirmed as the next U.S. Ambassador to Senegal and to Guinea-Bissau, my highest priority will be the welfare interests and security of American citizens, whether ensuring responsive consular services, advocating for U.S. businesses, or strengthening partnerships to confront regional instability.

This priority will guide every embassy objective and activity. If confirmed, I will also do everything I can to ensure that the dedicated women and men serving at the U.S. embassy are secure, healthy, and provided every opportunity for success.

Our close partnership with Senegal spans more than 60 years and is rooted in our shared values of democracy and human rights, peace and security, economic opportunity, and prosperity.

Senegal's long democratic tradition of peaceful transitions of power, free and fair elections, a robust private press, and a strong civil society is unique in West Africa and serves as a model for the region.

Senegal's dynamic economy has achieved impressive growth while creating new opportunities for U.S. investment. While the pandemic has hampered this progress and worsened the economic strains felt by Senegal's large youth population, U.S. public and private investments can play a key role in reigniting the country's growth.

Embassy Dakar and Washington counterparts are pursuing a number of possibilities for U.S. investment to strengthen Senegal's economy and its long-term security and democratic governance.

Senegal is a key security partner in West Africa and a critical ally in the United States' efforts to promote stability and counter violent extremism. It is a major contributor to peacekeeping missions across Africa and regularly hosts regional military exercises in partnership with the United States and France.

If confirmed, I will work to strengthen the United States' essential democratic, commercial development, and security partnerships with Senegal.

In Guinea-Bissau, the United States has sustained its programs in partnership despite pandemic-related challenges, and there is scope to expand the bilateral relationship further in the days ahead.

If confirmed, I will seek to advance our two countries' shared interests in bolstering democracy and human rights, promoting stable and responsive civilian governance, advancing development and economic opportunity, and countering drug trafficking.

Senegal and Guinea-Bissau are dynamic nations with extraordinary histories and extraordinary potential. I am honored by your consideration of me to serve in such an important posting.

If confirmed, I will welcome advice and input from you and your staff on any aspect of the United States' multifaceted relationships with Senegal and Guinea-Bissau.

I will also be pleased, if confirmed, to welcome you and your staff in Senegal and Guinea-Bissau, and to keep you up to date on the activities of the U.S. embassy in Dakar.

Thank you for the opportunity to address you today. I look forward to answering any questions you may have.

Mr. Ostfield?

STATEMENT OF MARC OSTFIELD OF PENNSYLVANIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR EXECUTIVE SERVICE, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF PARAGUAY

Mr. OSTFIELD. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and members of the committee, it is an honor to appear before you today as the president's nominee to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Paraguay.

I am grateful for the trust and confidence President Biden and Secretary Blinken have placed in me. I appear today with the support of my husband of 32 years, Michael, who has encouraged me throughout my career of public service.

Over the course of the past 35 years, my work has always been about making the world a healthier, safer, more just, and more equitable place.

Whether on the frontlines of AIDS prevention, developing global health campaigns in Latin America and worldwide, or in the Department of State shaping policy on issues ranging from bioterrorism to human rights to human trafficking to anti-corruption, my professional experience has demonstrated the power of diverse teams that reflect the country we serve and the ability to build coalitions in challenging environments.

My experience as a volunteer firefighter has reinforced the importance of mutual aid and decision making in high-pressure situations. If confirmed, I will draw upon this experience to advance U.S. goals in Paraguay by working to strengthen governance, increase security, and promote U.S. business interests.

Mr. Chairman, Paraguay has proven to be a reliable partner and ardent defender of democracy in the region, calling for an end to undemocratic practices in Venezuela and Nicaragua, and supporting Cubans' right to peaceful protest.

Paraguay's steadfast support for Taiwan is another indicator of its commitment to democracy. Like all democracies, Paraguay has its challenges, particularly the need for stronger rule of law and democratic governance.

Transparency International's 2020 Corruption Perceptions Index ranks Paraguay 137 out of 180 countries, near the bottom for Latin America.

In order to deliver prosperity for all its citizens and foster greater economic opportunities with the U.S., Paraguay must continue its efforts to root out corruption and impunity, increase transparency, and repair judicial integrity.

If confirmed, I will prioritize anti-corruption and leverage tools such as Section 7031(c) of the 2019 Appropriations Act, which Secretaries Blinken and Pompeo have used to designate corrupt Paraguayan officials.

The global pandemic created outsized risks for Paraguay, with the world's highest daily per capita death rate in June of this year. The U.S. proudly donated 2 million vaccine doses to Paraguay in July, which promptly began its mass vaccination campaign.

Additional U.S. support this year will bring U.S. funding for vaccine assistance to over $9 million since the start of the pandemic.

Paraguay's long-standing bond with like-minded democratic partner Taiwan has made it a target of pressure tactics by the People's Republic of China to push Paraguay into switching diplomatic relations to Beijing.

If confirmed, I will work to support Paraguay's economic and political sovereignty and its commitment to Taiwan.

U.S. security goals center on helping Paraguay counter illicit networks, which threaten the safety of U.S. citizens and the region through money laundering, counterfeiting, drug trafficking, trafficking in persons, and links to terrorist organizations.

If confirmed, I will prioritize helping Paraguayan regional partners strengthen border security and address transnational crime.

The United States is Paraguay's number-one investor and U.S. exports to Paraguay support an estimated 7,000 American jobs. To protect and expand U.S. business opportunities, I will engage Paraguayan authorities on investment disputes, procurement tenders, and intellectual property rights.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and members of the committee, if confirmed, I will consult with this committee as we work for the safety, freedom, and prosperity of the U.S. and Paraguayan people.

Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today and I look forward to your questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF MARC OSTFIELD

It is an honor to appear before you today as the President's nominee to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Paraguay. I am grateful for the trust and confidence President Biden and Secretary Blinken have placed in me.

I appear before you today with the support of my husband of 32 years, Michael, who has encouraged me throughout my career of public service.

Over the course of a career spanning 35 years, my work has always been about making the world a healthier, safer, more just, and more equitable place. I spent 15 years on the front lines of HIV/AIDS prevention, developing global health campaigns in Latin America and worldwide. For the past almost 20 years, I've been honored to serve in the Department of State—creating initiatives to combat bioterrorism; shaping policy on issues ranging from human rights to human trafficking to anti-corruption and the environment; leading the Foreign Service Institute in delivering essential training for the U.S. diplomatic workforce; and supporting that workforce to address conflict as Ombudsman. My experience as a professional has demonstrated the power of diverse teams that reflect the country we serve, and the ability to build coalitions in the most challenging environments. My experience as a volunteer firefighter has reinforced the importance of mutual aid, and the ability to make decisions in high pressure situations. If confirmed, I will draw upon this experience to advance U.S. foreign policy goals in Paraguay by working to strengthen governance, increase security, and promote U.S. business interests.

Mr. Chairman, Paraguay has proven to be a reliable partner and ardent defender of democracy in the Western Hemisphere, voting consistently in multilateral fora to call for an end to undemocratic practices in Venezuela and Nicaragua, and supporting Cuban citizens' right to freedom of expression and peaceful protest. Paraguay's steadfast support for Taiwan is another indicator of its commitment to democracy.

Like all democracies, Paraguay's has its challenges—particularly the need for stronger rule of law and democratic governance. Transparency International's 2020 Corruption Perceptions Index ranks Paraguay 137 out of 180 countries, near the bottom for Latin America. In order to deliver prosperity for all its citizens and foster greater economic opportunities with the United States, Paraguay must continue its efforts to root out corruption and impunity, increase transparency, and repair judicial integrity. The United States is supporting these goals with $44 million in USAID funding over five years. If confirmed, I will prioritize anti-corruption and leverage tools such as Section 7031(c) of the 2019 Appropriations Act, which Secretaries Blinken and Pompeo have used to designate corrupt Paraguayan officials.

The global pandemic created outsized risks for Paraguay which has endured one of the world's deadliest – surges, with the world's highest daily, per-capita death rate in June 2021. The United States proudly donated two million vaccine doses to Paraguay, which promptly began an effective mass vaccination campaign. Additional U.S. support this year will bring U.S. funding for non-vaccine assistance—including technical assistance, medicines, respirators, oxygen, and field hospitals—to over $9 million since the start of the pandemic.

Paraguay's long-standing bond with like-minded democratic partner Taiwan has made it a target of pressure tactics by the People's Republic of China to push Paraguay into switching diplomatic relations to Beijing, including through quid pro quo vaccine diplomacy. If confirmed, I will work to support Paraguay's economic and political sovereignty and its commitment to Taiwan. U.S. security goals center on helping Paraguay counter illicit networks, which threaten the safety of U.S. citizens and the region. Paraguay's Tri-Border Area (TBA) with Argentina and Brazil is one of the principal routes for multi-billion-dollar money laundering, counterfeiting, drug trafficking, trafficking in persons, and other smuggling operations. Some TBA criminal organizations have known or suspected links to terrorist organizations. To address these threats, U.S. programs build Paraguayan capacity to combat money laundering, financing of terrorism, and criminal gangs—along with programs to strengthen judicial and prosecutorial capacity. U.S. military assistance to Paraguay correspondingly strengthens cooperative crisis response capabilities. If confirmed, I will prioritize helping the TBA countries reinvigorate the Regional Security Mechanism, which coordinates efforts to enhance border security, dismantle transnational criminal organizations, and prevent money laundering and the financing of terrorism. The United States is Paraguay's number one investor, and the Department of Commerce reports that U.S. exports to Paraguay support an estimated 7,000 American jobs. To protect and expand U.S. business opportunities in Paraguay, I will continue to ensure our Embassy engages Paraguayan authorities on investment disputes, procurement tenders, and Intellectual Property Rights.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and members of the committee, if confirmed, I will consult with this committee as we work for the safety, freedom, and prosperity of the U.S. and Paraguayan people. Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I look forward to your questions.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, Mr. Ostfield.
Now we will turn to Mr. Fitrill.

STATEMENT OF TROY DAMIAN FITRILL OF VIRGINIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF GUINEA

Mr. FITRILL. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and members of the committee, I am deeply honored to appear before you today and grateful to President Biden and Secretary Blinken for the confidence they have placed in me as their nominee for Ambassador to the Republic of Guinea.

I am proud to have my family here today, my wife, Kathryn, a fellow Foreign Service officer, and my children, Madeleine and Sam, who have spent their lives immersed in the Foreign Service themselves.

Although my career has taken us all to several continents, we are drawn to and always thrilled to be in sub-Saharan Africa, where we have spent the majority of our assignments.

My last assignment as Director for West African Affairs was, like everyone's, shaken up by the pandemic. But the one and only trip I was able to take before the pandemic struck began in Guinea, where I had the pleasure of traveling up country with my friend and colleague, Ambassador Simon Henshaw, whose passing was a shock to all who knew him. It would be a signal honor, if confirmed, to try to build upon his work.

The relationship between the United States and Guinea has passed through various stages during Guinea's 63 years of independence.

But we have always extended our hand in partnership through support for nascent democratic institutions, productive economic initiatives, and supporting the Guinean people directly through effective education and health programs, including in response to the Ebola epidemic in 2014.

Indeed, in this current pandemic, American investments in health systems paid off as Guinea sought to mitigate the ravages of COVID-19.

In the midst of this crisis, however, Ebola raised its ugly head again earlier this year, and those American-supported institutions reacted swiftly and effectively, halting it this time in a matter of months and with minimal loss of life.

Economically, Guinea is growing faster than anticipated, sustained mostly by strong mining activity, construction, and agriculture. U.S. companies have been in Guinea since the days of independence and more are joining them every year.

Recent investments in energy infrastructure, mining, and banking show that when given a fair chance, the United States is the preferred partner.

I do not minimize the challenges. There are opportunities in infrastructure precisely because so little infrastructure exists. The challenges to doing business in Guinea are well documented, and recent political tensions only increase the level of difficulty.

As we partner with the Guinean people, we advocate for fundamental freedoms, we advocate for open political participation, and we advocate for justice and dignity.

Guinea was born a nation of peace and leadership, and the citizens of that country, the region, and the world need a Guinea that builds upon that history.

Right now, Guineans rightfully express concern about peace and security both at home and in the region. If confirmed, I will encourage dialogue among the parties to strengthen political pluralism. Such dialogue can only succeed if all sides feel confident that there can be a positive outcome.

We support efforts to reform Guinea's security institutions with capacity-building efforts to bolster civilian protection, rule of law, and accountability. Guinea's troops have performed well in Mali, the most dangerous peacekeeping mission on Earth, and we recognize Guinea for that contribution.

If confirmed as the twenty-third U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Guinea, I will support and encourage the ongoing democratic process, I will promote economic development, including advocacy for U.S. exports, support for U.S. investment and helping diversify Guinea's economy, and I will work to improve public health institutions, enhance Guinea's efforts against trafficking in persons, and strengthen our security partnership.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and members of the committee for the opportunity to address you today. My wife and I are both former Hill staffers, and so I would also like to thank your staffs for all they do to support you and your constituents every day.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with you in representing the interests of the American people in Guinea, and I hope very much to welcome you there on a visit one day soon.

And with that, I am happy to answer any questions you may have.

Thank you.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, Mr. Fitrill, and I thank all of you again, and welcome to all the family members who are with us, and I want to reinforce your statement of appreciation for all our staffs as well.

Ambassador Raynor, if you were to pick the top challenge that you will face in each of the two countries that you would go to, if confirmed, can you just identify those very quickly?

Ambassador RAYNOR. Thank you, Senator. Absolutely.

In Guinea-Bissau, the top challenge is to create a sense of partnership that reflects shared values of democracy and governance, and creates opportunity to bring U.S. influence to bear on the development of that country, the economic opportunities of that country, and the political opportunities for the people of that country so that it can build its governance, it can reinforce its stability, and it can become more integrated into regional and international community of nations.

Senegal, if I may, I will give a one-part question, a three-part answer. Politically, it is a, as we both have noted, sir, a very long-standing democracy.

But all democracies incur strains, and paying attention to maintaining political space to respecting citizens' rights and opportunities of expression and participation remains important for all of our democracies, and I would very much want to reinforce our partnership with Senegal in that regard.

Senegal plays an enormously important security role, both as a bulwark against terrorism in the Sahel and its peacekeeping mission.

I would very much want to reinforce its capacity to play both of those roles while also continuing to support its efforts to inculcate its security and military institutions with a high respect for democratic norms.

Economically, enormous potential for U.S. firms. I would very much want to support and broaden those opportunities and bring deals to fruition while also, through private sector and public engagement, building up Senegal's economy, its capacity to create jobs for its large youth population both to create economic opportunity for all of us but also to contribute to Senegal's ongoing stability and democracy as well.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, Mr. Ambassador.

And just staying with West Africa for now, Mr. Fitrill, we talked about the relative democratic stability in Senegal. We have a different situation, of course, in Guinea.

How concerned are you about political space and democracy in Guinea, and what can the United States do to strengthen democratic norms there?

Mr. FITRILL. I am, indeed, concerned about these issues. Right now, the levels of political tension in the aftermath of the violence and conflict of last year's election season still echoes.

The number of detainees currently held in custody in Guinea are worrying. Our focus is on the process. If there is wrongdoing, they should be charged.

If they have been charged, they should have a fair trial, and while detained, they should be given humane treatment. That is on the immediate sense of some of the issues in the country.

But, more broadly, the ability for people to exercise those fundamental rights of freedom of expression, freedom of assembly, these are under some threat in Guinea.

I think the United States can keep its efforts on overarching democratic processes in the country and we could use our messaging both, public and private, to be able to encourage a greater advance towards political dialogue in that country.

At the moment, the tensions are such that there is very little dialogue occurring. People are talking past one another. And I believe the United States, we can use our good offices of the embassy and of officials in Washington to help encourage a greater dynamic of political dialogue in the country in order to achieve a future in which more regular democratic transitions can take place.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, and in my remaining 50 seconds, if you could assess China's influence in Guinea, because we know that Guinea has been a major recipient of Belt and Road support.

China, of course, does not adhere to the same standards with respect to rule of law and democratic norms that we aspire to.

Can you talk a little bit about the influence of China in Guinea and how that impacts U.S.-Guinea relations?

Mr. FITRILL. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

They are the largest trading partner that Guinea has. That is a challenge for Guinea and for the rest of the world.

The emphasis is on a level playing field, and we know that that is not always the case with China. But our focus on the broader macroeconomic policies of the country have led to real competition and that is why U.S. investors have been successful in the country as well as investors from other parts of the world.

But keeping that attention on transparency, on the applicability of the rule of law, these are the areas in which we need to remain focused so that we can have full, even, and fair competition.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you.

Senator Rounds?

Senator ROUNDS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and let me begin just simply, once again, by thanking all of you and your families for your service to our country.

Ambassador Raynor, in your previous assignment in Ethiopia, you engaged with the Ethiopian Government on several complex issues for the United States, including the war in Tigray and the historic transition under Prime Minister Abiy.

Senator Inhofe, Senator Bozeman, and I were there earlier this spring and we had the opportunity to visit with President Abiy at that time, and seemed to me that there were some real challenges there that we tried to work through with the Prime Minister.

You, clearly, have some insights with regard to what had occurred in Ethiopia. Now, as you move forward with coming to Senegal, you find yourself in a unique situation once again.

If confirmed, what lessons would you draw from your time in Ethiopia and how would you apply them in Senegal?

Ambassador RAYNOR. Thank you, Senator.

I guess I would note at the outset that the while there would, certainly, be much commonality in my engagement in Senegal, if confirmed, as there was in Ethiopia, the starting point is pretty different.

Ethiopia was just launching during my time there a very new and ambitious effort to create a democracy and a free market economy, preceded by, frankly, millennia of repression and closed ways of doing business. Senegal, of course, has a long and strong democratic tradition.

But I think one of the lessons I learned from Ethiopia is that democracy can never be taken for granted, that you have to deal forthrightly with your counterparts in the country, make sure they are aware of what you can do to support our shared interests but also make sure they are aware when you have concerns about what they are doing that you feel is getting in the way of those shared interests.

That is something I have done throughout my career and throughout my two ambassadorships and we, certainly, anticipate doing in Senegal as well.

Senator ROUNDS. Thank you, sir. I am going to stick with Africa on my discussions.

And Dr. Ostfield, I see that Senator Kaine is here, and I am sure that he is going to provide ample opportunity for discussions with regard to Paraguay.

So if I could, I would like to turn to Mr. Fitrill, and just curious, as the former Director of the Office of West African Affairs you have had a unique perspective on developments in the West Africa region.

How would you assess the democratic, economic, and security landscape in the region, and how does Guinea fit into these regional trends?

Mr. FITRILL. Thank you. It has been a challenging two years, no question. I would say that all of those aspects that you mentioned are linked.

One of the problems is the advancement of violent extremist organizations has not occurred in a vacuum. It did not occur just because the organizations chose to enter the space.

They have achieved the success that they have had because they found a ground that was available for that kind of activity.

The local grievances, the backsliding of democracy, widespread corruption have all been problematic in the region, and the current attention needs to focus on all the drivers of extremism and not just the extremists themselves.

Our efforts to address the extremists themselves has to be done in a way in which it is not actually counterproductive.

All of these issues, frankly, pay no attention to national borders, and I know that the Government of Guinea itself is deeply concerned about its eastern and northeastern borders and considers these issues to be existential for their country.

And so the attempt to address those drivers of extremism across the Sahel, across West Africa, are absolutely critical for any way of addressing sustainably the concerns that these governments have right now.

Senator ROUNDS. If you could provide advice to us today with regard to Chinese influence and how to offset it; if there were, perhaps, one or two specific areas where we could be more precise, more exacting, more on target with the type of programs that we should support, what would you recommend to us in terms of the right tools for use?

Mr. FITRILL. Bingo, Senator. You put it right in your own words. The programs that you gave us with the International Development Finance Corporation is probably the biggest step forward for us to be able to compete on a level playing field.

We can keep shining a light on the playing field. We can keep lobbying and persuading to make sure that international norms are respected.

But if we do not have the financing behind our expeditionary commercial efforts, then we are always going to be fighting for second place, and we have already seen tremendous successes with OPIC and with its successor organization, the DFC.

We are looking forward to some tremendous successes in the region. But having that finance behind was probably the biggest step forward.

Senator ROUNDS. Very good. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, Senator Rounds.

Senator KAINE?

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Chairman, and Senator Rounds is right. I am really here to really focus on Paraguay. So Mr. Ostfield, welcome.

Just a quick story and then a question, and it is about U.S. vaccines in Paraguay and, really, throughout the region.

Just returned from a CODEL, six of us, three Democrats and three Republicans. We went to Mexico, Guatemala, Ecuador, and Colombia, and there were many issues. But what we heard again and again was just this deep appreciation for the U.S. donation of vaccines.

And if I had read a memo about it, I would have sort of understood it, but I really had to go and hear it because the story we heard again and again is the U.S. is donating vaccines to us. China and Russia are willing to sell us vaccines.

We really feel good about the quality of the U.S. vaccines. We are not 100 percent sure about the quality of the China and Russia vaccines, and when we make a contract with China and Russia to get vaccines, they may or may not come through.

Paraguay has had a very difficult time during COVID. It has one of the lowest vaccination rates in the Americas. It has got a population of 7 million.

They did a contract with China to sell them a million vaccines through Sinopharm and China just unilaterally cancelled the contract because Paraguay is one of the 15 countries in the world that recognizes Taiwan.

This is a huge political issue in Paraguay. President Benítez's handling of the pandemic and the challenges they have had led the congress there to consider impeaching him just a couple of months ago. They averted that, but China likely saw that as an opportunity and so just last month canceled the vaccines.

On the other hand, the United States has delivered a million vaccines, donated a million vaccines to Paraguay, and with the announcement of President Biden the other day, there is a chance that we may donate more.

Other nations in the Americas—El Salvador, the Dominican Republic—as soon as they stopped recognizing Taiwan, China gave them vaccines.

Often, in the last few years what we have heard from leaders in the region is that the U.S.—we would much rather deal with the U.S. than China, much rather—we are culturally so connected. But you are not around and China is, and if China is around we are going to deal with them.

The vaccine delivery and donations by the United States gives us such a massive opportunity to rebuild goodwill and, really, kind of accelerate our goodwill ahead of China's in the region if we do it right.

So I will ask you, Mr. Ostfield, should you be confirmed, how might you use the fact that the U.S. is being a great global donor, including to countries in the Americas, including Paraguay, to build our standing and deepen the relationship between the United States and Paraguay?

Mr. OSTFIELD. Thank you, Senator Kaine. It is great to hear about your experience on the recent CODEL to the region.

If confirmed, I would look forward to building on the recent U.S. donation of 2 million doses of vaccine. The first tranche of a million arrived July 9th. The last tranche, I believe, arrived last week.

If you ever look at any press reports, they arrived on planes with Star Wars logos. So quite a media story, in addition to the vaccine itself arriving in Paraguay.

By all reports, Paraguay has already implemented a fairly effective mass vaccination campaign. Reports I saw just this week there is now people receiving their second dose. So they have been that efficient, that effective, at getting vaccines out there.

And it is true that the China-Taiwan relationship or the China-Taiwan issue complicates things for Paraguay. They do not have access to the Chinese resources.

If confirmed, I would look forward to working with the Government of Paraguay to strengthen Paraguay's commitment to Taiwan. It was encouraging to note that during Under Secretary for Political Affairs Nuland's recent trip to Paraguay the President of Paraguay made a statement affirming Paraguay's long-standing connection to Taiwan. They are like-minded democratic partners.

The U.S. Embassy in Asunción in May of this year hosted the first virtual forum for U.S. and Taiwanese entrepreneurs, looking at investment opportunities in Paraguay specific to things like renewable energy and electric vehicle manufacturing.

If confirmed, one of the calls I look forward to making in Asunción is to the Taiwanese Ambassador there to identify ways that the U.S. and Taiwan can partner.

The U.S.-Taiwan connection is good for the United States, it is good for Taiwan, and it is good for Paraguay. And so ways that we can work together to help them are in our interests and I look forward to furthering those, if confirmed.

Senator KAINE. Well, just to kind of underline and exclamation point something, so the U.S. has donated 2 million vaccines in a country of 7 million.

I mean, that is a big deal in terms of the percentage of the population that U.S. donations are now able to cover.

We visited Ecuador. Just for my colleagues, Ecuador has had a tradition of an anti-U.S. Government for about 30 years.

They had an election in the spring and they not only elected a pro-American president, but they also elected a parliament where 80 percent of the members are brand new, and one of the reasons they did that is because the 30-year closer and closer to China, what has it gotten them?

It has got them oil drilling in the Amazon by Chinese companies that are causing huge environmental challenges, slipshod infrastructure projects, including dams that are causing waterfalls and rivers to dry up, Chinese fishing fleets vacuuming up fish around the Galapagos, which is part of Ecuador.

And many people view the election in Ecuador and this very dramatic turn toward a pro-U.S. posture as a revulsion at what happens when you get too close to China and the debt that comes along with that, and the slipshod quality of some of the work caused the public to want to do something else.

We have a real opportunity and the innovation of American firms, Operation Warp Speed, the Biden administration's decision to deploy in a very generous way, is something that in Africa, in the Americas, all around the world, it is a great opportunity for us to deepen ties.

Mr. Ostfield, I look forward to working with you, should be confirmed, and I think this is going to give you a really good ability to do good work there.

Thank you.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, Senator Kaine, and I think Paraguay is a really good example, as you said, of where the U.S. donation of 2 million vaccines has had a huge impact. Hopefully, it will be a model for how we approach others in the region and around the world.

Senator Young, I am told, may be joining us now via WebEx.

Okay. He is no longer available.

So I just have one last question because I did not have a chance to ask you one, Mr. Ostfield, and it relates to the environmental situation in Paraguay, and my colleagues will have another round, of course, for other members who are interested in asking additional question.

So, you know, last October, Paraguay endured one of its worst wildfire seasons and it is currently suffering from a drought that has depleted the Paraguay River, which is the country's main waterway and trade corridor that has gone to record lows.

This has led to environmental degradation and worsened economic hardship during the pandemic. It has also led Paraguay to ask Brazil, which is suffering from its own severe drought, to release water from the low-capacity Itaipu Dam.

So what is your assessment of the environmental and economic impact of the drought and how has this impacted Paraguay's relationship with neighboring Brazil?

Mr. OSTFIELD. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

If confirmed, I would look forward to working with the Government of Paraguay on strengthening their ability to respond to the kind of environmental threats you described.

Paraguay has taken some meaningful actions in this step, already participated in the Ministerial Roundtable in April with Special Envoy for Climate Change Kerry, committed to achieving zero net emissions by the year 2050, and with USAID support has been working on improving sustainable livestock processes and forest fire management, recognizing the great threat they have experienced and that they face.

At the same time, the threats that Paraguay faces that are environmental in nature are linked to some of the issues that I described in my opening statement, particularly, rule of law, corruption, and impunity in the country. For Paraguay to effectively address these environmental challenges, which it needs to do, it is going to need to ensure that it has a system where there is an ability to enforce laws that are passed to achieve compliance with standards that the Government may assess and that U.S. assistance in these areas in investigation, prosecution, and so forth will actually be an asset for Paraguay in addressing the environmental challenges that it and its neighbors in the region are facing.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you. I will turn it over to the ranking member.

Senator ROUNDS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I have one question but I would direct it to both Ambassador Raynor and to Dr. Ostfield, and it follows along the same line as I had earlier for Mr. Fitrill.

And that is with regard to the programs that we have available to us to provide and to promote goodwill and to improve our economic activity between the different countries, I also serve on the Armed Services Committee and in there we talk about ways in which we can promote with our allies and our friends the ability to coordinate activities and to have them learn our way of military activity.

But time and again, as we speak with these military officers, they talk about the need for the engagement by the Department of State and the different programs that can be very, very helpful and very efficient in maintaining good relationships with these countries and can be done at a very low cost, really, for the amount of impact that we provide.

I would ask, beginning with Ambassador Raynor, if there were particular programs that you have found to be beneficial, could you share that with us?

And then, Dr. Ostfield, if you could as well give us your thoughts.

Ambassador RAYNOR. Thank you, Senator.

I think I would mention three things in response to that.

First, I would note that our traditional development work is important. It meets human needs. It shows that we are in partnership with the country where we are engaged and not there to pursue our own narrow interests, and elevating the visibility of that impact is something that I have always sought to do at the embassies I have served at.

I think that is an important piece of it because we need to persuade not only the governments but the people of these countries where their true friends and partners are.

Secondly, I would note that leadership development programs in the United States, our programs—you mentioned the military ones, the War College, that sort of thing—world class. No one comes close to the quality.

But what we lack is scale. China does not do it as well as we do but they do it for hundreds of thousands of times more people than we do.

So if there were a way that we could increase the scale of some of these programs—bring them to the United States. It is not the same to do the work in the country because when they come to the United States they understand America in a way that they will never understand if they are not physically there, absorbing everything that we are.

The third thing I would mention is, as important as I think training and development programs are, I think the way that the United States, ultimately, will be transformational is through the private sector through high-quality private sector engagement with countries.

We have enormous interest in Senegal and in every country I have served at in the quality of U.S. private sector engagement, sharing information, high-quality labor standards, and environmental standards. We do it right. However, where we suffer is on the competitive cost side of that.

So you mentioned DFC, and I got to say that is a very exciting reinvention of that program from where I sit based on what we did before. The scale of it is more in keeping with what we need to be doing. Its construct can and should make it more nimble, because what we do is run out of time. We have processes, and China and others come with financing built in.

So we need to streamline and make more scaled and impactful the financing piece of the support we provide to our own private sector engagement.

Senator ROUNDS. Thank you.

Dr. Ostfield?

Mr. OSTFIELD. Thank you, Senator Rounds.

I would focus on three areas in terms of where the U.S. can better help Paraguay develop and become more of an even stronger and more viable partner for us and for the region it works in.

The first of those is addressing governance and rule of law and U.S. training and technical support and financial support to help Paraguay root out corruption.

To strengthen the integrity of their judicial system, which has a reputation of being weak and corrupt, is an essential element of ensuring that Paraguay has the kind of thriving democracy that the Paraguayan people deserve and that we also want to see for Paraguay.

Secondly, U.S. assistance in improving security in the region. That includes things like money laundering, links to terrorism financing, narcotics trafficking, and counterfeiting. U.S. assistance has helped in areas related to asset forfeiture, improved investigatory techniques, and better case building mechanisms strengthened prosecution across the board.

Not only do we do that on the civilian side, U.S. military has been assisting the Paraguayan military in things like crisis response to help address the security situation in the tri-border area, which is the area where Paraguay borders Brazil and Argentina, but also more broadly.

And then finally, if Paraguay wants to, indeed, be an attractive destination for U.S. businesses, for U.S. businesses to further investment there, Paraguay is going to have to address these issues.

U.S. assistance is already working with Paraguay, for example, on improving the transparency of its solicitations and its procurement tenders, which have a tendency to be opaque, to help the Government of Paraguay better understand the risks with untrusted vendors, and to dissuade Paraguay's business community from the investment disputes and frivolous lawsuits in violation of intellectual property rights, which, ultimately, act as a deterrent for many U.S. businesses to invest in Paraguay.

Senator ROUNDS. Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, Senator Rounds.

And I do not know if you have any closing remarks.

Senator ROUNDS. I would just simply say thank you to our panelists before us today, our nominees. Clearly, as I said earlier, you are a qualified group of individuals, and I thank you and your families for your service.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Let me second that and just say I think this is a very important moment for American diplomacy around the world, and in my judgment, all of you will help our country meet that moment in the countries you have been nominated to be our ambassador in, and I look forward to supporting your nominations.

For any members wishing to submit questions for the record, the hearing record will remain open until the close of business tomorrow, Friday, August 6th.

And with that, this hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 10:55 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. MICHAEL RAYNOR BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question. What is the risk of terrorist activity in Senegal? From where do the threats emanate? On what areas will you focus U.S. efforts to support Senegal's counterterrorism efforts if confirmed?

Answer. Senegal's internal security situation is stable and generally peaceful, and its professional and capable police and gendarmerie forces operate throughout the country. I am concerned, however, by increasing instability and violence in the region. Our military and civilian security cooperation is focused on preparing Senegalese military and civilian forces to address terrorist and other threats. The United States is a key security partner to Senegal, and Senegal regularly hosts large scale AFRICOM military exercises in the region. Pre-COVID, the United States planned 45 joint defense engagements with Senegal. I understand most of our planned defense cooperation events were cancelled in 2020, but that the United States has since rescheduled several of our mission-critical bilateral engagements.

Senegal is a recipient of U.S. security assistance under the Trans-Sahara Counterterrorism Partnership (TSCTP). Through the TSCTP, the United States works to increase Senegal's immediate and long-term capabilities to address terrorist threats and prevent the spread of violent extremism. Senegal maintains a strong will to counter violent extremism and seeks to deepen our already close counterterrorism partnership to further develop its capacity in this regard. If confirmed, security cooperation will remain a key priority of mine.

Question. Senegal remained on the Trafficking in Persons Tier 2 Watch List for the second consecutive year. According to the report, the Government “did not investigate or prosecute traffickers exploiting children in forced begging consistent with the 2005 anti-trafficking law and did not take action against officials who refused to investigate such cases. . . . Officials did not consistently use the 2005 anti-trafficking law to prosecute alleged traffickers and continued to apply penalties inconsistent with the law.” If confirmed, how will you encourage accountability for officials who refuse to investigate forced begging? What steps will you take to encourage the Government to apply penalties for trafficking consistent with the law?

Answer. Per the 2021 TIP Report, the Government of Senegal does not fully meet the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking but is making significant efforts to do so. I understand that cooperation on anti-trafficking efforts with the Senegalese Government remains a top priority for Mission Dakar. Senegalese Government efforts this past year included implementing the third phase of its program to remove vulnerable children, including trafficking victims, from the streets; increasing investigations, prosecutions, and convictions; and adopting a new national action plan. The Government identified and referred to services 6,187 vulnerable children, including potential child trafficking victims, during the reporting period, a significant increase compared to the 1,358 children identified during the previous reporting period.

If confirmed, I will work to expand on this progress and to address with the Senegalese Government the prioritized recommendations in the 2021 TIP Report. These include increasing efforts to actively investigate and criminally prosecute trafficking offenses, punishing convicted traffickers with significant prison terms consistent with the 2005 anti-trafficking law, and establishing a system to automatically trigger investigations of alleged traffickers when potential trafficking victims are identified, including potential child forced begging victims. I will also continue to support the Department's project to combat sex trafficking under the Program to End Modern Slavery.

Question. Two prominent would-be candidates in the 2019 Presidential elections—Karim Wade, son of the former president, and Khalifa Sall, the former mayor of Dakar—were barred from running due to corruption convictions which some critics viewed as politically selective, particularly in the case of Khalifa Sall whom President Sall pardoned months after the vote. Local activist groups also came under increased state regulatory pressure during the electoral period. And Ousmane Sonko, an anticorruption activist who challenged President Macky Sall in the 2019 elections was arrested on charges of rape and disturbing public order in March 2021, prompting protests in Dakar and elsewhere. What accounts for the legal troubles of opposition figures? Are the charges politically motivated? What is the trajectory of democracy in Senegal—is space expanding or shrinking? What will you do if confirmed to help preserve political space in Senegal?

Answer. Although the official investigation into sexual assault charges against opposition leader Ousmane Sonko is ongoing, he and his supporters claim the accusations are a political conspiracy by President Sall to sabotage Sonko's 2024 presidential aspirations, comparing the charges to previous criminal cases orchestrated against Khalifa Sall and Karim Wade to disqualify them from the 2019 presidential election. Sonko's subsequent arrest in early March triggered several days of intense political protests that spiraled into widespread riots and looting, the worst Senegal had seen in decades. The unrest resulted in at least fourteen deaths, hundreds of injuries, and significant damage to private businesses across the country. It has also shifted the country's political landscape in ways that remain to be seen fully, including exerting additional pressure on President Sall to clarify his position on whether he will seek a third term in 2024. If confirmed, I will continue to call on the Government of Senegal, both publicly and privately, to respect democratic norms and constitutional requirements, including term limits and regular democratic transitions of power. I will also engage like-minded missions, civil society, and other relevant stakeholders to speak in a unified voice on issues of democracy and preserving political space in Senegal.

Question. A regional court with jurisdiction in Senegal determined that a controversial election law enacted in 2018 which requires citizen endorsements for presidential candidates violated civil liberties and directed Senegal's Government to annul it. Has the law been annulled? If not, why not, and is failure to annul it an indicator of a deterioration of the rule of law in your view?

Answer. The Government of Senegal annulled this law on July 8, 2021.

Question. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As Ambassador to Ethiopia, I launched major new programs to support democratization, human rights, opposition political parties, independent media, civil society, and relevant national institutions, including the creation of a credible human rights commission and electoral board. I led the design and implementation of new USAID programs in economic empowerment, political participation, education, and health to promote greater participation by women in political and economic life.

As Ambassador to Benin, I worked closely with the then-president and other elements of the Beninese Government to ensure respect for constitutional term limits, resulting in a democratic and peaceful transition of presidential power. I established new programs to counter corruption and boost government accountability and transparency, as well as significant new initiatives to foster interreligious tolerance and cooperation. As Acting Chief of Mission in Afghanistan, I led major development and justice sector programs to promote the well-being, human rights, education, rule of law, security, and economic prospects of Afghans and, in particular, Afghan women.

Question. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Senegal? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. Senegal has long served as a democratic model in the region with a strong history of democratic values and peaceful transitions of power, respect for the rule of law, tolerance, and respect for human rights, values which the United States shares. I was deeply concerned, however, by the March unrest, which led to the tragic loss of life of fourteen individuals who were killed during the protests. A significant contributing factor to the unrest was political dissatisfaction related to perceived government oppression of critics, as well as concerns over youth unemployment and economic anxiety exacerbated by government-mandated Covid-19 restrictions. The Government took other deeply concerning actions during the unrest, such as suspending transmission of two opposition-friendly television channels broadcasting news and commentary on the protests. While Senegalese media have traditionally operated freely, and many international press outlets have offices in Senegal, press freedom is an area of increasing concern as government pressure on opposition voices has increased in the past year.

If confirmed, I will use my unique platform and voice as the U.S. Ambassador, both publicly in my interactions with the Senegalese people and privately with Senegalese officials, to elevate issues of democracy, democratic norms and constitutional requirements, press freedom, respect for human rights, and the need for citizen-responsive governance. I will continue to urge all parties to exercise restraint, to avoid future violence and destruction of property, and to work toward peaceful and inclusive dialogue to resolve complicated problems, which will require cooperation by all Senegalese to make meaningful progress.

Question. What steps will you take - if confirmed - to support democracy in Senegal? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. Senegal has long served as a democratic model in the region with a strong history of democratic values and peaceful transitions of power, respect for the rule of law, tolerance, and respect for human rights -- values which the United States shares. The Senegalese people understand how important democracy is, and they overwhelmingly support having a say in how they are governed and by whom, as evidenced by the March protests over concerns about the economic situation and youth unemployment, as well as political dissatisfaction related to perceived government oppression of critics. If confirmed, I will ensure that in our diplomatic engagements with the Senegalese Government we pay close attention to access to justice, respect for democratic norms and constitutional requirements, free and fair elections, media freedom, the health of civil society, and government transparency and accountability. I will continue to advance opportunities to strengthen the capacity of civil society organizations and amplify their voices, encourage the Government to collaborate with these organizations for the betterment of the Senegalese people, and ensure coordination of effort with like-minded missions and other key stakeholders.

Question. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. Supporting democracy and good governance are key U.S. priorities in Senegal. I understand that U.S. public diplomacy and outreach in Senegal support Mission and Department goals on promotion of democracy and good governance through press outreach, small grants, American Center-based programs, digital video conferences, visiting speakers, exchange programs, and social media engagement. For example, USAID provides support to the Government of Senegal to meet its own governance targets to decentralize management and fiscal authority by delegating decision-making to regional and local governments, improve transparency and accountability at the national level, and consolidate and improve the quality of democracy in Senegal. USAID's work seeks to increase citizen engagement in government processes, strengthen effective local governance, improve transparency and accountability, and promote peacebuilding efforts in Casamance. If confirmed, I will prioritize these key efforts as Ambassador.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Senegal? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to meeting with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S., and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Senegal. Organizations promoting human rights, civil society, and good governance are critical to any functioning democracy. If confirmed, I will continue and strengthen the relationships built by Mission Dakar and the Department of State more broadly with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the United States, and Senegalese human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Senegal. I will continue to advance opportunities to strengthen the capacity of civil society organizations and amplify their voices, encourage the Government to collaborate with these organizations for the betterment of Senegal, and ensure that we coordinate our efforts with like-minded missions and other key stakeholders to address our concerns with a unified voice.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to continue strengthening the relationships Mission Dakar has built across the political spectrum, including by engaging with both ruling and opposition parties and leaders. I will work with both the Government and opposition parties to develop a more inclusive political environment and will urge the Government to ensure the freedoms of association and peaceful assembly for all political actors, even those who do not agree with the Government. Through public statements, development projects, small grants, and direct engagements, I will advocate for a political environment that is inclusive of Senegalese women, youth, and minorities.

Question. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Senegal on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Senegal?

Answer. If confirmed, I will actively engage with Senegal on press freedom issues. Senegalese media has traditionally operated freely, and many international press outlets have offices in Senegal. Press freedom is an area of increasing concern, however, as government pressure on opposition voices has increased in the past year. During the March 2021 unrest, the Government suspended transmission by two opposition-friendly television channels broadcasting news and commentary on the protests. I will also call on the Government to prevent and stop the harassment of journalists and media outlets whose reporting is critical of the Senegalese Government's policies. Such actions have a negative impact on press freedom and underscore the need for the Government to be transparent, as doing so would make independent media outlets better positioned to share accurate information with ordinary Senegalese. We will continue to prioritize providing training and other capacity building opportunities for journalists. If confirmed, I will commit to meet regularly with independent, local press in Senegal.

Question. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue and, as appropriate, expand upon the Embassy's ongoing engagements with civil society and government counterparts to promote the importance of countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in Senegal.

Question. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Senegal on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. If confirmed, I will actively engage with Senegal on the right of workers and labor groups to organize, including to form independent trade unions, and I will call out incidents when this right to associate is restricted.

Question. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Senegal, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity?

Answer. Promoting respect for human rights and democracy is a priority for our mission in Senegal. If confirmed, I will use all diplomatic tools at my disposal to defend the human rights and dignity of all individuals in Senegal, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity.

Question. What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and queer (LGBTQ) people face in Senegal?

Answer. In a country that otherwise largely respects human rights, the struggle for LGBTQ+ individuals in Senegal is ongoing. The situation of Senegal's LGBTQ+ community remains dire, and members of the community continue to be subject to arbitrary arrests and to convictions for consensual same-sex activity. Incidents include the arrest and beatings of suspected LGBTQ+ individuals by religious police in Touba and arrests of LGBTQ+ individuals in Dakar for holding a birthday party. The Covid-19 pandemic has created additional difficulties for LGBTQ+ organizations and their mission to serve their communities. In February, following President Biden's message to the African Union, comments from Senegalese citizens overall were positive and generally appreciative of U.S. re-engagement in Africa, but 10% of the comments criticized its references to LGBTQ+ inclusion. Several warned against warming up to the United States too quickly and advised caution regarding mentions of the LGBTQ+ community. Likewise, Senegalese are widely critical of calls to respect the human rights of LGBTQ+ persons.

Question. What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTQ people in Senegal?

Answer. Promoting the human rights of LGBTQ+ people is a challenging endeavor in a society as conservative as Senegal. It is also a priority of the Biden administration around the world, and, if confirmed, I commit to carrying out the President's mandate. It is critically important, in doing so, to consult with LGBTQ+ individuals and organizations in Senegal to take account of the local context and ensure we do not exacerbate the problem. For instance, it may not always be appropriate to issue public statements in response to specific anti-LGBTQ+ incidents, but to engage in quiet, closed-door diplomacy that minimizes additional risks to LGBTQ+ people. Embassy Dakar has relaunched an interagency Human Rights Working Group to identify ways to assist human rights defenders, including LGBTQ+ activists, in addressing harassment and violence. Discretion and strategic engagement with the international community are the only avenues for LGBTQ+ activists to operate within the current social environment. LGBTQ+ activists and individuals will continue to face a difficult road as long as Senegal remains intolerant of LGBTQ+ persons. In gauging how, when, and whether to engage on this topic, it is invaluable to understand the sense of the local LGBTQ+ community, and I commit that, if confirmed, the Embassy team and I will continue engaging with the LGBTQ+ Senegalese and their allies.

Question. Will you commit, if confirmed, to ensuring that you fully brief Members of Congress and/or their staff each time you are in Washington for visits or consultations during your tenure as Ambassador to Senegal?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit, in coordination with the State Department's Bureau of Legislative Affairs, to accommodate promptly all appropriate requests for briefings. As someone whose professional career began as a staff member of a Senate Select Committee, I have a strong appreciation and respect for Congress' key oversight role and will fully cooperate in accommodating that role.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO TROY DAMIAN FITRILL BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question. How much democracy and governance related assistance has the United States provided for programs and activities in Guinea over the last four fiscal years and in what areas? If confirmed, in what areas would you recommend assistance be channeled?

Answer. From FY 2017 to FY 2020, the State Department and USAID allocated $12 million in bilateral foreign assistance to Guinea to support good governance; political competition and consensus building; and independent media and free flow of information.

If confirmed, I would recommend that we continue these programs, and also that we prioritize additional democracy and governance areas including rule of law, strengthening political parties, and transparency in elections.

Question. There were multiple reports that security forces killed civilians related to the March 2020 referendum and legislative elections, and the October 2020 Presidential elections. What is the status of the investigations into elections related violence in Guinea? If confirmed, how will you support accountability related to electoral violence?

Answer. I understand that there has been no progress on investigations into violence surrounding the 2020 elections and referendum. If confirmed, I will press the Government of Guinea to investigate thoroughly and transparently, and to hold accountable those responsible for human rights violations and abuses, including those associated with the alleged unlawful killings in 2019-2020 in the lead up to and aftermath of the legislative elections, constitutional referendum, and presidential election.

Question. Human rights organizations claim that 300 to 400 people were arrested in the wake of the October elections. Opposition figures were targeted for arrest the following month. Were these arrests politically motivated? What is the status of those detained? What specific actions will you take, if confirmed, to address politically motivated detention, harassment and intimidation of opposition and civil society?

Answer. Authorities reportedly arrested an estimated 400 people during the March 2020 legislative and October 2020 presidential election periods. Arrested individuals include opposition leaders, civil society members, and journalists. Many of these arrests appear to be politically motivated. The Government of Guinea has released an unknown number of detainees since November 2020 and recently released eight high-profile opposition leaders, but arrests continue. At least two detainees have died in detention, while others continue to suffer from lack of access to adequate health care, prison overcrowding, and life-threatening prison conditions.

If confirmed, I will press the Government of Guinea to ensure that detained members of the political opposition receive all applicable procedural protections and fair trial guarantees for those who have been charged, and that those detained are treated humanely to help Guinea establish a more representative, democratic, and transparent government. I will press for the release of those who have been unjustly detained, who have not been charged, and whose detention appears politically driven.

Question. Are media freedoms respected in Guinea? Are journalists free to be critical of the Government without fear of reprisal? A recent legislative change calls for the High Authority of Communication to be appointed by presidential decree as opposed to being elected by a group of peer commissioners. How will that impact media freedoms? What steps will you take if confirmed to support free media?

Answer. I understand that press freedom in Guinea is significantly constrained due to government action. Journalists have been subjected to harassment and intimidation after publishing reports critical of the Government. Guinean journalists have been detained by security forces, and foreign journalists have been forced to leave the country. Government officials attempt to censor the media on spurious legal and administrative grounds. The July 2020 law allowing the president to appoint the chair of the High Authority of Communication and raising the number of presidentially chosen members is just another example of the Government's efforts to constrain press freedom.

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to engaging across the spectrum on the importance of press freedom and to meeting regularly with press outlets. I will call on the Government of Guinea to respect press freedom and to prevent harassment of journalists critical of the Government. If confirmed, I will seek to continue support for the development of free press and journalists through training and capacity building programs for journalists.

Question. According to the State Department Country Report on human rights, Guinean law "criminalizes rape and domestic violence, but both occurred frequently, and authorities rarely prosecuted perpetrators." What assistance is the U.S. providing to law enforcement to address rape and sexual violence in Guinea?

Answer. The State Department, through the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs (INL), has provided $400,000 for FY20. U.S. Government support provides mentoring and training to Guinean law enforcement officers to improve their understanding and support of internationally recognized human rights, fight trafficking in persons, and address sexual and gender-based violence. I understand that this training also strengthens Guinean law enforcement's capacity to identify and investigate rape and domestic violence cases.

Question. Guinea is on the Tier 2 Watch List for the second year in a row, according to the 2021 Trafficking in Persons Report. The report indicates that the Government does not "provide sufficient funding to the Office for the Protection of Gender, Children, and Morals." What efforts will you undertake, if confirmed, to encourage the Government to dedicate resources to that office? What other efforts will you engage in if confirmed to ensure the Government adequately addresses trafficking in persons?

Answer. I understand that Guinea remains on the Tier 2 Watch List in the 2021 Trafficking in Persons Report because the Government did not demonstrate overall increasing efforts to address trafficking in persons compared to the previous reporting period, even considering the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on its anti-trafficking capacity.

If confirmed, I will work to raise awareness and enlist the support of communities and local government to address the human trafficking issue. I will press the Government to fully fund and support government officials and entities that work to support and protect trafficking victims. We will continue to work together with the Government of Guinea to strengthen Guinean capacity to improve its trafficking in persons record, and with NGOs and the international community to provide assistance and training to Guinean law enforcement and the judicial system to ensure that traffickers face justice. I will also continue to support the Department's project to combat child trafficking under the Program to End Modern Slavery, as well as the Department's bilateral project to identify and provide services to victims of trafficking.

Question. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Almost every position in my career has had a focus on promoting respect for human rights. As Labor Attaché in Guatemala, I counseled nascent factory unions in achieving formal recognition and lobbied government officials to allow unions to make use of arbitration proceedings. The former increased the number of recognized unions and the latter increased access to legal redress in the face of labor rights abuses. As Chargé d'Affaires in Mauritius, I led my Embassy team to organize and execute a three-day skills camp to train women to run for elected office. After Constitutional changes took place, the number of women in elected positions increased four-fold. If confirmed, I commit to keeping respect for human rights at the forefront of U.S. engagement in Guinea.

Question. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Guinea? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. I am deeply concerned by the number of members of the political opposition in Guinea who remain imprisoned and the limiting of political space for opposition parties and groups by the Guinean Government. All Guineans must be free to express opposing views. Abuses by law enforcement and security forces must be investigated and those responsible must face justice. The press must be free to report critically. If confirmed, I will call upon the Government of Guinea to resolve the detainee issue and make other positive overtures to the opposition to ease political tension. I will press for an investigation into violence and killings around the 2020 elections. I will push for greater freedom of the press and greater protections for journalists.

Question. What steps will you take - if confirmed - to support democracy in Guinea? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to raise concerns publicly and privately about lack of accountability for alleged human rights violations and abuses by security forces and the continued pretrial detention of opposition supporters, civil society members, and journalists. Potential impediments include the lack of transparency and accountability within the justice system, slow bureaucratic processes, and a lack of resources.

Question. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. The United States Government implements projects in Guinea supporting local governance, civil society, and media to consolidate good governance across the country. If confirmed, I will prioritize implementation of security sector reform projects and training to help prevent future human rights violations and abuses and instruct on the role of security services in sustaining and supporting democratic processes and institutions. We will work to build capacity of civil society organizations to promote respect for democracy and human rights and accountability in the democratic process.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Guinea? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Promotion of respect for human rights in Guinea is one of the most important priorities for the United States. If confirmed, I commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Guinea. I will ensure our Embassy continues to build and strengthen its relationships with a broad spectrum of civil society both in the United States and in Guinea. I will work with our diplomatic and international partners to encourage the Government to cooperate with civil society to create a safer, freer, and more democratic Guinea.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to strengthen our existing relationships and build new ones across the political spectrum and will engage with democratically oriented political figures and parties. I will work with both the Government and opposition parties to develop a more inclusive political environment which respects human rights and democratic norms. Through engagement, programs, and grants I will advocate for greater participation by women, minorities, and youth in politics.

Question. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Guinea on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Guinea?

Answer. A free press is vital in any democracy to hold leaders to account, as well as exposing and fighting corruption. If confirmed, I commit to engaging across the spectrum on the importance of press freedom and to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Guinea. I will call on the Government of Guinea publicly to respect press freedom and to prevent harassment of journalists critical of the Government. If confirmed, I will seek to continue support for the development of free press and journalists through training and capacity building programs for journalists.

Question. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. The corrosive effects of disinformation and propaganda on democracy are particularly troubling in countries still working toward enshrining democratic principles and respect for fundamental freedoms in their political cultures. If confirmed, I will continue current engagement and promote new engagement with government, the press, and civil society organizations to counter disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in Guinea, including through the Embassy social media platforms.

Question. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Guinea on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. My tour as Labor Attaché in Guatemala taught me the importance of engaging with labor groups, including unions, to protect and promote the welfare of workers. If confirmed, my team and I will actively engage with the Government of Guinea on the right for workers, labor groups, and independent trade unions to form and join organizations of their own choice, and I will publicly call out abuses or restrictions of this right of freedom of association.

Question. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Guinea, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity?

Answer. Promotion of human rights in Guinea will be one of my top priorities if I am confirmed. I commit to using all the tools at my disposal to promote and defend the human rights and dignity of all Guineans, regardless of their sexual orientation or gender identity.

Question. What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer (LGBTQ) people face in Guinea?

Answer. The confluence of traditional local cultures with Islamic tenants has created an environment in Guinea where consensual same-sex sexual conduct and recognition of the LGBTQI+ community is a strict taboo. The legal environment does not allow same-sex relationships or marriages, and Guinean law does not consider LGBTQI+ individuals a protected class. Anti-discrimination laws to protect LGBTQI+ persons do not exist. I am unaware of any prominent individuals that champion the cause of equal societal treatment for the LGBTQI+ community. In addition, the traditional nature and outlook of the majority of Guineans would be a natural obstacle to holding a frank public discussion about LGBTQI+ issues.

Question. What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTQ people in Guinea?

Answer. If confirmed, I will use my office to highlight the strengths of diversity and acceptance of all people for who they are. The United States is rightfully proud of the strides we have made, and continue to make, in living up to our founding principle that everyone is equal under the eyes of the law. I believe that if confirmed, I can use the persuasive power of the Embassy to help Guineans begin to address this important issue.

Question. Will you commit, if confirmed, to ensuring that you fully brief members of congress and/or their staff each time you are in Washington for visits or consultations during your tenure as Ambassador to Guinea?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work together with the State Department's Bureau of Legislative Affairs to respond promptly to all appropriate requests for information and briefings for members of Congress and their staff, and to offer such briefings whenever I am in Washington.

NOMINATIONS

---

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 2021 (a.m.)

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:36 a.m. in Room SD-G50, Hon. Robert Menendez, chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Menendez [presiding], Cardin, Shaheen, Coons, Murphy, Kaine, Van Hollen, Risch, Young, and Cruz.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ, U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

The CHAIRMAN. This hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

We appreciate the patience of both members and the nominees of conferring with the ranking member on the question of nomination.

We are here today to consider nominations for four very important positions: Ambassador Julieta Valls Noyes to be Assistant Secretary of State for the Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration, Ambassador Barbara Leaf to be the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern Affairs, Ms. Julianne Smith to be Ambassador to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, NATO, and Ambassador Denise Bauer to be the Ambassador to France and Monaco.

Congratulations on all your nominations. The four of you have a distinguished history of public service. We appreciate your willingness to continue to serve our country.

We also appreciate your families because it is a sacrifice to families as well who are engaged in the service by their support and sometimes travel abroad. We thank them.

Before I continue, I understand that the distinguished Senator from Virginia is privileged to make three introductions. I do not get three introductions from New Jersey and I am the chairman.

In any event, Senator Kaine we'll recognize you now.

STATEMENT OF HON. TIM KAINE, U.S. SENATOR FROM VIRGINIA

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair and Ranking Member Risch, for scheduling this hearing for such wonderfully qualified nominees.

It is my pleasure to introduce three of the nominees, two from Virginia, one from California, who is a very close friend: Denise

Campbell Bauer, to be ambassador to France and Monaco, Julieta Noyes to be Assistant Secretary of State for Population, Refugees, and Migration, and Barbara Leaf to be Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern Affairs.

I previously introduced Ambassador Bauer to this committee in 2013 when she was nominated to be ambassador to Belgium. I have had a chance to know Denise and her family now for about 15 years.

She had a distinguished career in journalism, nonprofits, and domestic and international politics. But in particular, in her service in Belgium, she served at a most challenging time.

In March of 2016, Belgium was subject to coordinated terrorist attacks at the same time as France also underwent those attacks. And at that point, Ambassador Bauer, she will describe, worked very hard to keep Americans safe, to work with our ally, Belgium, and even coordinate some activities between Belgium and France.

As Ambassador to Belgium, she was unanimously confirmed by the Senate. She worked very, very hard on that transatlantic relationship and to advance U.S. policy goals in Europe.

And as you know, the U.S. presence in Belgium also includes the NATO and EU missions, and so the Belgian Ambassador has a lot of important work in those multilateral efforts.

Her on-the-ground experience in the region leading the implementation of U.S. foreign policy at a challenging time has demonstrated her ability and would make her very, very fit to serve as our Ambassador in France and Monaco.

Ambassador Noyes exemplifies the dedication of career Foreign Service officers and their families, many of whom call Virginia home when they are not serving overseas.

I have had a chance to see Ambassador Noyes' work up close and personal. I met her in several occasions when she was Deputy Assistant Secretary for Western Europe from 2013 to 2015 and, again, in Spain when I had the honor, as did the chair of this committee, to serve as honorary chair of the U.S. Spain Council.

Ambassador Noyes has served the country with great skill while raising three children together with her husband, who is also a Foreign Service alum, now a retired officer with 29 years of service.

Two of her children, wisely, attended Virginia universities, University of Virginia and Christopher Newport University.

And I would note in particular, Mr. Chair, that in this position, working on important issues of population, refugees, and migration, Julieta has a powerful family experience. She is the daughter of Cuban refugees and would bring that personal passion to the important work of State in this area.

Finally, I want to introduce Ambassador Barbara Leaf, another Virginian. I noticed that she is a proud alumni of William and Mary and the University of Virginia, but she is wearing only a William and Mary brooch today and not the UVA brooch. She probably had hoped I would not point that out.

But she is a very well qualified nominee for the position of Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern Affairs. She comes to the committee with a deep background in Near Eastern Middle East politics.

She was a fellow at the Washington Institute for Near East Policy and previously served as our ambassador to the UAE and Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for the Arabian Peninsula in the Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs.

This struck me. All of these State Department career folks are wonderful in foreign language proficiencies but listen to this.

Ambassador Leaf speaks Arabic, French, Italian, and Serbo-Croatian. She will lead the bureau with integrity and enthusiasm, and I am proud to introduce this great Virginian to the committee.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Kaine, for that introduction of all of our distinguished nominees.

I know that Senator Shaheen is very happy to see four incredibly talented women before the committee. Let me continue now.

Briefly, I had a conversation with the ranking member, and I appreciate his attention to the seriousness of the situation we have on nominees in the committee.

We have over 70 nominees pending before the committee and we have over 50 completed files. I look forward to working with the ranking member so that we can continue to expedite those nominees in the days ahead.

Okay. I am now being told that Senator Shaheen has also got an introduction to make.

Senator Shaheen?

STATEMENT OF HON. JEANNE SHAHEEN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW HAMPSHIRE

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman and Ranking Member Risch.

I am very honored to be able to join Senator Kaine in doing introductions this morning, particularly to be able to introduce Julie Smith, President Biden's nominee to be Ambassador to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

As chair of the Subcommittee on Europe and Regional Security Cooperation and co-chair of the Senate NATO Observer Group, like other members of this committee, I understand very clearly the importance of Ms. Smith's experience and expertise in what she will bring to this role.

Julie's resume and background is a testament to her commitment to the transatlantic alliance. Her career has spanned 25 years crossing the Pond to work on transatlantic security issues both in and out of government.

She has worked at both the Pentagon and the White House and has worked at some of America's most esteemed think tanks, including the Center for Strategic and International Studies, the German Marshall Fund, and the Center for a New American Security.

And Julie, of course, is no stranger to this committee. She testified in 2017 here on the U.S.-Russia bilateral relationship, and her expertise drawn from many years researching transatlantic relations has benefited those in and out of government.

She has spent the last three years researching and writing on Europe's evolving attitudes and vulnerabilities as they relate to China, a subject that we all know very well on this committee.

Julie has also worked to bring foreign policy to audiences outside the Beltway, most recently launching a program called “Across the Pond, In the Field” to bring Europeans to 12 U.S. cities to talk to Americans about foreign policy.

Her accolades and accomplishments alone make her worthy of confirmation, but I also want to highlight Julie’s leadership as a mentor to women in the national security space.

And yes, Mr. Chairman, I was very excited to see four women on the dais this morning who have been nominated to be ambassadors, and Julie has been involved for a long time in mentoring women.

She co-founded the Leadership Council for Women in National Security to provide a support network for women in a predominantly male space. And because of her leadership, there are a number of women in Washington who proudly call themselves mentees of Julie.

And I am also pleased to recognize Julie’s husband, David, who is here with her this morning and I think it is her older son, Liam, who is also here.

As a mother, her family has kept her on her toes, and I can appreciate that because I know that as a working mom you have to juggle a lot of things, which is really important to the world of diplomacy.

For all of these reasons, I am very happy to have Julie’s nomination before this committee. I am sure that my colleagues will appreciate her responses and I hope, Mr. Chairman, that we do have an agreement to move forward these nominees.

It is critical to ensure that American foreign policy can continue. Thank you very much.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Shaheen.

Let me just briefly reference the positions that these nominees are being nominated for.

Ambassador Valls Noyes, congratulations on your nomination. You bring a distinguished record of diplomatic and management experience to the role, including your most recent assignments leading the Foreign Service Institute and serving as U.S. Ambassador to Croatia.

As you know, the Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration is responsible for addressing some of the most pressing global challenges we have today.

According to the United Nations, at the beginning of the year there will be more than 82 million forcibly-displaced people in the world, of whom 26.4 million are refugees. No doubt that number has only grown and will continue to grow.

From the global forced migration crisis to the humanitarian emergencies in Venezuela, Ethiopia, Syria, and Afghanistan, the United States must lead in addressing the acute needs that exist today and the long-term drivers of these crises.

The task before you is immense, and I recommend if you are confirmed that you develop strong consultative relationships with the many refugee and resettlement organizations that have deep expertise in this area, and I am confident they would welcome your engagement.

Let me say a few words specifically about Afghanistan and the dire humanitarian crisis there. Nearly half of the entire population, more than 18 million people, need humanitarian assistance right now.

More than 4 million Afghans are internally displaced and the outgoing instability and violence may very well produce large flows of refugees into neighboring countries in the coming months, which would create a great deal of instability.

The PRM bureau will be at the helm of the U.S. response to this crisis and your leadership will be essential to ensuring that our response meets the moment.

Ambassador Leaf, welcome back to the committee. I am pleased that you stopped by our office to get a little bit of a tour of the region. I am hopeful that we can get you quickly in place so the bureau and the whole department can benefit from your decades of experience.

Despite repeated efforts from multiple administrations to pivot to great power competition, the Middle East and North Africa remain central focal points of challenges and, I believe, some opportunities for the United States.

As you know, Iran has continued to advance its nuclear program, and I believe the United States must pursue all options to find a negotiated deal that addresses not just Iran's nuclear program but also its support for terrorism and its ballistic missile activity.

Lebanon is on the brink of collapse. Tunisia, once a bastion of hope for people all over the region, is experiencing a troubling back slide on the democratic reforms, and I have yet to understand exactly what the administration's plan is with Syria.

As Iraq heads towards elections, we have an opportunity to engage with leadership and Iraqis who want a brighter future, and I am hopeful that more countries across the region will build on the historic diplomatic relations between Israel, the United Arab Emirates, and Bahrain in the Abraham Accords.

Overall, I believe we need to reinvigorate our diplomatic presence and outreach in the region in which our policy has slowly become more and more militarized, and I trust that you are up to that task.

Ms. Smith, we welcome your nomination. Glad that the president selected you for this critical post. During his administration, President Trump repeatedly attacked NATO and our allies. This, unfortunately, drew criticism from both sides of the aisle in the Senate, evidence that bipartisan support for the Alliance is strong.

President Biden's visit to NATO earlier this year helped to repair ties. But work remains to be done to ensure that our allies understand that the United States is steadfast in its support for the Alliance.

You have an exemplary background, experience, intellect, and judgment to represent the United States at NATO, and I hope that we can get you out there as soon as possible.

There are many important conversations happening in Brussels right now about the future of NATO, what its mission will be in the new world in which we live, and we need an ambassador there as soon as possible.

Ambassador Bauer, I am pleased to see you again before the committee. I appreciated your leadership of the embassy team in Belgium, especially during the 2016 Brussels terrorist attack in which Americans were killed and injured.

It is critical that the United States has an experienced ambassador in Paris where we have so many issues to advance with their government, from counterterrorism in the Sahel to support for allied democracies in the eastern Mediterranean.

France is also critical to our policy objectives in Iran and Russia, and I have appreciated the French foreign minister and ambassadors engaging with the Senate on these issues. We look forward to hearing your goals of how we can deepen our oldest diplomatic relationship even further.

Let me close with saying that the four of you have immense challenges ahead. I am confident that your experience can serve our country well as you take on new responsibilities, if confirmed, and we look forward to each of your testimonies.

Let me turn to the distinguished ranking member, Senator Risch, for his opening remarks.

STATEMENT OF HON. JAMES E. RISCH,
U.S. SENATOR FROM IDAHO

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

First of all, regarding the nominees, I appreciate the conversation. We will continue that. I committed to you and I continue to commit to you that I will work in good faith to get these people in place.

I was a governor. I understand that you cannot operate unless you have your team in place. You and I have worked hard to get them to the floor and, as we both know, that that is a special problem that neither you nor I have control over. I get a lot of complaints that you and I cannot deal with because it is a floor problem.

But I will continue to work in good faith and see if we cannot move these forward.

I thank all of you for taking the opportunity and undertaking the privilege of serving the United States in these important positions, and your families. As the chairman mentioned, this is a sacrifice that is borne equally by the families.

I want to talk briefly about each of these.

First of all, for the Assistant Secretary of State for the Near Eastern Affairs, the Middle East region remains shaped by seemingly intractable problems, including Arab-Israeli tensions, continued export of Iranian terrorism, the humanitarian crisis in Syria and Yemen, and growing Chinese and Russian encroachment.

I am concerned that the current administration's approach to these dilemmas appears to not strike the appropriate balance and runs the risk of ceding the region to other malevolent powers, and I think everyone knows of what I speak there.

The administration's precipitous withdrawal from Afghanistan has been a strategic unforced error, as both the chairman and I focused on yesterday.

Additionally, its diplomatic embrace of the Iranian regime is hard to understand. The lack of focus on the Abraham Accords is befuddling, to say the least.

Increased barriers to conventional arms transfers and the chilling of relations with our traditional Middle Eastern partners will send a message of American disengagement, which I do not believe that we want to do.

The Abraham Accords especially need to be embraced. They need to be enhanced. They need to be further moved forward.

And I know that as I watch the administration, I think there is a lot of reluctance simply because it was an action by the previous administration. But that was a tremendous success and we should celebrate it and exploit it as best we can.

Like the chairman, I do not understand what Syria policy is today. We need to understand that. I hear rumors and they are, hopefully, not true about the administration's thoughts regarding Assad and his rehabilitation or remaining in place. That is a wrongheaded approach. But in any event, we do need an approach that everyone understands.

Now is the time for the United States to reinforce that we stand with our partners and are up to the challenge. I expect to hear how you plan to improve our engagement in the region and address the serious risks ahead of us.

Next, we have the nominee for Assistant Secretary of State for Population, Refugees, and Migration. The administration's botched evacuation from Afghanistan has resulted in thousands of refugees and internally-displaced people inside the country.

Taken with the ongoing refugee crisis endured by Syrians, Venezuelans, and the Rohingya, we now face the world's largest refugee and migration numbers ever.

Through the Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration, the U.S. Government provides significant assistance to humanitarian partners, including the United Nations.

It is crucial that we ensure all of this assistance meets U.S. national security needs and receives proper oversight.

I look forward to hearing your thoughts on these issues. I also remain deeply concerned with the Biden administration's decision to restart funding to UNRWA. This organization has a history of using textbooks which incite violence against Israelis as well as has employees with ties to Hamas. We should secure true reforms before giving another dime to this organization.

Moving on to the nominee for U.S. ambassador to NATO, NATO is the world's most successful political and military alliance in the history of the planet. But it is 72 years old and must be flexible to meet new challenges.

NATO will need to continue to deal with Russia and aggression on its southern border. It must also be aware of China's growing direct threat of alliance. The balance of power in the world today is incredibly different than it was 72 years ago.

Last year's NATO 2030 report attempted to address some of these emerging issues and recommended that NATO's Strategic Concept be updated to address China-related issues as well as ways that allies can improve political coordination. I hope to see these recommendations followed.

NATO is also a nuclear alliance. Membership in the Nuclear Ban Treaty is incompatible with being a U.S. ally and NATO member. We must push back strongly on any efforts by NATO members to lend credibility to that treaty or to weaken our nuclear-sharing arrangements.

Lastly, I am worried by the disregard we showed our NATO allies in our hasty withdrawal from Afghanistan. This administration has repeatedly emphasized the importance of our allies. Yet, the way we went about this evacuation has sent our partners the exact opposite message.

Our allies deserve better, especially after invoking Article 5 following the 9/11 attacks and fighting alongside our troops for more than 20 years. They are livid. I think everyone in this room knows that and it will be our job, your job, to fix that.

Finally, we have a nominee for ambassador to France and Monaco. The United States has long enjoyed close relations with France and it remains one of our closest allies.

In Africa, I look forward to continued engagement with our French partners on important challenges, including in the Sahel, Cameroon, the DRC, and the Central African Republic to ensure we pursue mutually beneficial approaches.

France's ambassador here in the United States is an excellent friend and ally, and I have seen and experienced France's desire for a stronger alliance firsthand.

Now is a critical time for us to make real progress in the relationship. I look forward to hearing your thoughts on this.

With that, thank you, Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Risch.

We will turn to our nominees now. I ask that you summarize your statement in about five minutes or so because the committee will want to ask you questions. Your full statements will be included in the record, without objection.

And if you have family members who could be with you today, please do not hesitate to introduce them.

And with that, we will start with Ambassador Noyes and then work our way down the aisle.

STATEMENT OF HON. JULIETA VALLS NOYES OF VIRGINIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF CAREER MINISTER, NOMINATED TO BE ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE (POPULATION, REFUGEES, AND MIGRATION)

Ambassador NOYES. Thank you, Chairman Menendez and Ranking Member Risch. It is an honor to appear before you as President Biden's nominee as Assistant Secretary of State for Population, Refugees, and Migration. I am grateful to him and to Secretary Blinken for their confidence in me.

I am the first person ever nominated for this position from a refugee background. My parents and members of my extended family entered the United States as refugees from Cuba 61 years ago and later became proud American citizens.

Our family is profoundly aware of the debt we owe to this great nation and, indeed, I joined the State Department in part to repay that debt.

When given an opportunity, refugees and vulnerable migrants can become valued contributors to the countries that receive them. My hard-working family members happily give back to this country as taxpayers and engaged citizens.

I am honored to introduce you to one of them today, my mother, Julieta Valls. In addition to raising a family, my mom worked in international development for years, presenting the best of America to people in other nations.

And, Senators, I want to thank you for scheduling this hearing today so I can wish her a happy birthday on the Congressional Record.

I am also joined by my wonderful husband, Nick, a retired Foreign Service officer whose mother also immigrated to America. Our children, Alexandra, Nicholas, and Matthew, are watching online. My family support has enabled me to serve our country I love, and I thank them.

In over 35 years as an American diplomat, I have worked to advance human rights, refugee, and migration issues in multiple positions outside of PRM.

As ambassador to Croatia, I presided over the final stages of a U.S.-funded refugee resettlement program and hosted a regional conference on refugees.

My mission also ran regional training programs for police, prosecutors, and justice officials on topics that included supporting the rights of migrants.

As a Deputy Assistant Secretary in the European Bureau, I managed relations with 11 Western European countries and the European Union, some of our key partners, in supporting at-risk populations around the world.

As Deputy Chief of Mission at our Embassy to the Vatican, I worked with church leaders, religious communities, and Catholic aid organizations on issues like combating human trafficking.

While director for multilateral and global affairs in the Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor Bureau, I oversaw international negotiations on human rights resolutions at the United Nations and conducted human rights consultations with multiple partners.

I was a member of the high-level delegations that reported to the U.N. on U.S. compliance with two major international treaties, the Convention against Torture and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

Earlier in my career, I worked on democracy, human rights, and foreign aid issues in the Western Hemisphere. I would bring these experiences to bear as PRM assistant secretary and, if confirmed, would seek to strengthen America's leadership on global, humanitarian, and migration issues.

One of my most urgent priorities would be to help the vulnerable people of Afghanistan wherever they may be. Sadly, there are also millions of other vulnerable populations worldwide.

Working with partners like USAID, I would prioritize life-saving humanitarian assistance and protections for people from Syria, Burma, South Sudan, Venezuela, and beyond.

I also would advance support for maternal health in humanitarian crises and respond to gender-based violence, upholding the administration's commitment to women's health.

If confirmed, I would ramp up engagement with other countries to pursue durable solutions to the problems that lead people to flee their countries, including in our own hemisphere.

Another key PRM priority is to rebuild the U.S. Refugee Admissions Program as directed by the president. If confirmed, I would collaborate with the Departments of Homeland Security and Health and Human Services, and work with Congress to ensure the program's success.

It is a testament to the generosity of Americans that the United States is the largest humanitarian aid donor in the world, but we cannot meet all global needs alone. If confirmed, I would carefully manage the U.S. taxpayer funds that enable PRM's work and urge other nations to share this responsibility more equitably.

I am eager to work with PRM's exceptional partners in international and nongovernmental organizations, Senate willing, to carry out PRM's mission, and if confirmed, it would above all be a privilege to learn from and lead the hard-working passionate employees of PRM. Their dedication is inspirational.

Senator Menendez, Senator Risch, members of this committee, my nomination as PRM Assistant Secretary is the greatest professional honor of my life.

If confirmed, I would give my all to lead PRM in supporting persecuted and vulnerable people around the world in keeping with our nation's centuries-long history of compassion and generosity.

As the daughter of refugees, I understand that history and that responsibility acutely. Thank you.

Ambassador Bauer?

STATEMENT OF HON. DENISE CAMPBELL BAUER OF CALIFORNIA, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE FRENCH REPUBLIC, AND TO SERVE CONCURRENTLY AND WITHOUT ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION AS AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE PRINCIPALITY OF MONACO

Ambassador BAUER. Thank you, Senator Kaine, for that very kind introduction.

Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to testify today.

It is my great honor to be President Biden's nominee to be United States Ambassador to France and Monaco. I am deeply grateful to President Biden and Secretary Blinken for the confidence they have placed in me, and, of course, I am thankful for my husband of nearly 30 years, Steven, our wonderful daughters, Katherine and Natalie, my extended family, and everyone who has supported me over the years.

If confirmed, I will work closely with this committee and the Congress as I dedicate myself to protecting and advancing U.S. interests in Monaco and France.

I would be proud to join the talented dedicated State Department and interagency teams hard at work pursuing those goals. I saw firsthand the superb commitment our embassy teams provide U.S. citizens and businesses when I served as U.S. ambassador to Belgium from 2013 to 2017.

On March 22nd of 2016, my daughter, Natalie, was already on the bus on her way to school when Brussels was attacked by terrorists. I raced into the office as our team rallied to coordinate with and support our Belgian colleagues, to help victims, and guard against follow-on attacks.

This challenging time left no doubt why American embassies matter. Our team worked hand in glove with the Belgians, and they were there for our fellow Americans so that they were not alone far from home during perhaps the worst time in their lives.

It would be my great honor to again serve the American people, now as ambassador to France. I would like to highlight a few of the pillars of our partnership that I would bolster as ambassador.

France, as you have noted, is among our most capable and reliable military allies. As NATO allies, France and the United States have built and sustained the post-war global order, promoting freedom and prosperity.

France is the second largest global footprint after the United States and is the second largest troop contributor to the D-ISIS coalition. France has reached its NATO goal of 2 percent of GDP on defense spending and contributes to NATO missions and exercises.

The United States and France exchange information and share best practices on countering violent extremist threats, and France leads on countering terrorism in the Sahel where it has eliminated leaders of ISIS, al-Qaeda, and their affiliates.

If confirmed, I will not only ensure our cooperation continues but will look for ways to strengthen that important partnership.

France welcomes the United States return to the Paris Agreement and is eager to engage in close cooperation and strategic alignment on climate issues, particularly climate finance, clean energy, green recovery, and using trade and financial flows to further Paris Agreement objectives.

The United States and France share a deep economic relationship. France and the United States traded $99 billion of goods and services in 2020, making France one of our largest trading partners in the EU.

France works on coordination with the United States and other partners to hold Russia and China accountable for their destabilizing activities, human rights abuses, and violations of international norms.

France has played a significant role in shaping EU policy towards the PRC and supports the U.S.-EU dialogue on China where we seek a values-driven approach.

If confirmed, I will advocate strongly with the French Government that we must hold Russia accountable for its actions and maintain pressure on the Kremlin to adhere to its international commitments and obligations, including the Minsk agreements.

And finally, the United States shares many of the same goals with France when it comes to Lebanon, Syria, Iran, Iraq, Afghanistan, and Libya. On all the challenges facing those countries, France seeks deeper cooperation with the United States.

If confirmed, I also look forward to fostering our relationship with the Principality of Monaco and working together with his Serene Highness, Prince Albert II, and his Government to further our joint goals.

Of course, if confirmed, I will consider it my primary responsibility to ensure the safety and security of the embassy community and all Americans in France and Monaco.

Thank you again for the opportunity to testify. I look forward to answering your questions.

Ms. Smith?

STATEMENT OF JULIANNE SMITH OF MICHIGAN, NOMINATED TO BE UNITED STATES PERMANENT REPRESENTATIVE TO THE COUNCIL OF THE NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANI-ZATION, WITH THE RANK AND STATUS OF AMBASSADOR EX-TRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY

Ms. SMITH. Good morning, Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee.

Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. It is an honor to be nominated to be the Permanent Representative of the United States to NATO.

I want to extend my thanks to President Biden and Secretary Blinken for placing their trust in me for this critical position.

If confirmed, I look forward to supporting the president's pledge to revitalize and strengthen America's alliances. I also want to thank Senator Shaheen for her kind words and leadership in the NATO Observers Group.

Let me start today by thanking my family, my husband, David, and our two sons, Liam and Dylan, for their love and support. David and Liam are with us here today. My son, Dylan, is tucked away in second grade at school.

I am proud to be a woman working in the field of national security. But my greatest joy comes from my family.

I also want to thank my parents, who are watching in my home state of Michigan, and my sister for their guidance and encouragement.

I have worked on a wide range of national security challenges over the years but Europe has always been my passion. Ever since I received a scholarship to spend a year at the Sorbonne as an undergraduate, I have been fascinated by America's long-standing relationship with our closest allies across the Atlantic.

From my first job at a small think tank here in Washington, D.C., to my positions in the Pentagon, at the White House, and now the State Department, I have worked to strengthen our relationship with Europe, navigate our differences, and identify innovative ways to address our shared challenges.

No institution has played a bigger role in the history of the transatlantic relationship than the NATO Alliance. Since its creation in 1949, it has served as the bedrock of transatlantic security, protecting our shared values, and safeguarding each of its members against outside aggression.

NATO's story is a remarkable one of unity and solidarity. After the end of the Cold War, NATO's story became one of adaptation. Over the last 30 years, NATO has added 14 new members, developed new partnerships in the Middle East and Asia, agreed to operate a new warfighting domain such as cyber, and acquired new capabilities to respond to an array of emerging challenges, from terrorism to disruptive technologies to climate change.

Since Russia's invasion of Ukraine in 2014, the Alliance has bolstered its deterrence and defense posture, including through the deployment of multinational battle groups on its eastern flank.

Despite the fact that it makes decisions by consensus, NATO has repeatedly showcased its ability to take action quickly when it counts. It swiftly invoked Article 5 in the wake of the 9/11 attacks, for which the United States will always remain deeply grateful.

While NATO is rightly heralded as the most successful military alliance in history, the Alliance, now almost 75 years old, does have its share of challenges. Some allies are still struggling to meet their commitments to increase defense spending.

Decision-making remains slow, and the weakening of democratic values in some member states is tearing at Alliance cohesion. Allies are also making slow progress in the hard work of improving their military capabilities, especially in new domains like cyber and space.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with our NATO allies and partners to address such shortfalls and prepare the Alliance to face future challenges.

I will also look forward to working with allies on the important task of drafting a new Strategic Concept, which was last updated 10 long years ago.

That document must reflect the changing security environment of today, especially Russian aggression, threats we face in cyberspace, and the People's Republic of China's malign activities across the Euro-Atlantic region.

I will work to ensure that none of those new challenges detract from the Alliance's core task of ensuring a strong deterrence and defense for all its members.

I believe that part of NATO's success rests with the strong bipartisan support one finds both here in Congress and among the American public.

I was heartened to see the enthusiastic welcome that the Secretary General, Jens Stoltenberg, received when he addressed Congress in 2019.

If confirmed, I will ensure that bipartisan support continues and would look forward to welcoming congressional delegations to Brussels. It would be my great honor to represent the United States at NATO.

I believe in this alliance, I believe in the important role it plays in America's own defense, and I believe in our critical leadership role inside it.

I look forward to your questions and thank you for your consideration.

While NATO is rightly heralded as the most successful military alliance in history, the Alliance, now almost 75 years old, does have its share of challenges. Some Allies are still struggling to meet their commitments to increase defense spending, which they made after Russia invaded Ukraine in 2014. If confirmed, I look forward to working with our NATO Allies and partners to address such shortfalls and prepare the Alliance to face future challenges. It would be my great honor to represent the United States at NATO. I believe in this Alliance, the important role it plays in America's own defense, and in our critical leadership role in NATO.

I look forward to your questions and thank you for your consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.
Ambassador Leaf?

STATEMENT OF HON. BARBARA A. LEAF OF VIRGINIA, NOMINATED TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE (NEAR EASTERN AFFAIRS)

Ambassador LEAF. Thank you, Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and distinguished members of this committee. It is an honor to be here as President Biden's nominee for Assistant Secretary of State for the Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs.

If confirmed, this would be the culmination of a lifetime of work on behalf of the U.S. in the Middle East and North Africa.

My story is like that of many Americans called to public service, inspired by multiple generations of family members who served. My family has had someone serving in the U.S. military continuously for almost 80 years.

Much of my wider family were also called upon to support those who served, making their own sacrifices. My mother managed to raise six children on a tobacco farm in southern Maryland during the years my father, an Air Force pilot, served in far-off places.

I remember on an early assignment in the Foreign Service I met up with my oldest brother, Tim Leaf, here behind me who is representing the whole Leaf clan. I met up with him as a deployed Marine officer in the streets of newly-liberated Kuwait. My youngest brother deployed repeatedly to Iraq and Afghanistan, with great costs borne by his young family.

My younger sister is a Foreign Service officer, now serving in southern Africa, far from family and friends.

My husband, Chris Querin, had a distinguished career in the Marine Corps, taking him to Jerusalem, where we met early in my career. He and our two daughters, Maro and Asja, provided the unstinting loving support that enabled me to shoulder what was asked of me, even when that meant being apart from them when I served a year in Iraq.

Service is a theme in my family and service has more relevance today for Americans than ever before. In the Middle East, President Biden's strategic vision provides a roadmap and a set of principles for our engagements based on rebuilding long-term relationships in the region.

If confirmed, I will work to reinforce those partnerships around an affirmative agenda, focused on building shared prosperity but also confronting shared problems: fighting COVID-19, developing an international health infrastructure to prevent future pandemics, building a new energy economy around renewables to arrest the drivers of climate change, addressing desertification and growing water shortages, combating transnational repression while promoting respect for fundamental freedoms and open societies, and sustaining the core institutions of the international order that have provided security and stability for over 70 years.

If confirmed, I pledge to represent the best of American values and will make it clear that relationships with the U.S. are stronger when human rights principles are respected.

The region has been convulsed by conflict and instability for over the past two decades, but many of our partners have turned towards deescalation and to working with the U.S. to quell the region's conflicts.

Iran, of course, has been the outlier to this trend. Tehran continues to pursue destabilizing policies, including through its support for terrorism, its ballistic missile program, its support for violent groups, and its abhorrent human rights record and long-standing practice of using wrongfully detained U.S. citizens as political tools. An Iran with a nuclear weapon would pose an even greater threat.

As part of the administration's renewed multilateral engagement, if confirmed, I will work in tandem with regional partners and allies to advance U.N. peace processes in Libya, Syria, and Yemen.

The president's vision for a collaborative relationship with the countries of the Middle East comes in the wider context of a growing global challenge to our values of open societies and open economies.

This challenge comes primarily from the People's Republic of China and Russia. Both pursue influence in the region in a zero-sum fashion. If confirmed, I expect to have frank conversations with our partners about the challenges posed by certain Russian and Chinese actions.

And if confirmed, I will not be able to accomplish this ambitious agenda without the outstanding Foreign Service officers, civil servants, contractors, and family members employed here and in the region.

I am committed to promoting the safety and security of our people overseas as a paramount priority, supporting the professional development of our employees and the principles of diversity, equity, inclusion, and accessibility in the bureau and our posts around the region.

If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with you as we reshape, rebuild, and reenergize the U.S. Government's engagement with the Middle East, building a better future for the American people and the people of the region.

Thank you, and I look forward to your questions.

[The prepared statement of Ambassador Leaf follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF AMBASSADOR BARBARA A. LEAF

Thank you, Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and distinguished members of this committee. It is an honor to be here as President Biden's nominee for Assistant Secretary of State for the Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs. If confirmed, this would be the culmination of a lifetime of work on behalf of the United States in the Middle East and North Africa. I cannot express how much this opportunity to serve my country and the American people means to me.

My story is like that of many Americans called to public service, inspired by multiple generations of family members who served in one capacity or another. My family has had someone serving in the military, continuously, for the past 80 years. So much of my wider family were also called upon to support those who served, making their own sacrifices along the way. My ever-entrepreneurial mother managed to raise six children on a tobacco farm during years my father, an air force pilot, served in far-off places. On an early assignment in the Foreign Service, I met up with my oldest brother, a deployed Marine officer, in the streets of newly-liberated Kuwait. My little brother deployed repeatedly during America's two longest wars, to Iraq and Afghanistan, with great costs borne by his young family. My younger sister is a Foreign Service officer, now serving in southern Africa, far from family and friends. My husband had a distinguished career in the Marine Corps, taking him to Jerusalem, where we met early in my career. He, like our two daughters, provided the unstinting loving support that helped me shoulder what was asked of me, even when that meant being apart for a year while I served in Iraq.

Service is a theme in my family, and it has more relevance today for Americans than ever before, given the multiplying challenges abroad and at home that require re-investment in ourselves, re-commitment to partnerships, and U.S. leadership globally.

In the Middle East, President Biden's strategic vision provides a roadmap and a set of principles for our engagement, based on re-building long-term relationships in the region to meet the manifold, emerging new challenges. But the President's vision demands the evolution of our partnerships beyond the conventional security realm that has defined our approach to the region for well over 30 years. If confirmed, I would work to reinforce those partnerships around an affirmative agenda focused on building shared prosperity and confronting shared problems: fighting COVID-19 and developing an international health infrastructure to prevent future pandemics; building a new energy economy around renewables to arrest the drivers of climate change; addressing desertification and growing water shortages; combating transnational repression, while promoting respect for fundamental freedoms and open societies; and sustaining the core institutions of the international order that have provided security and stability for over 70 years.

If confirmed, I pledge to represent the best of American values, and will make it clear that relationships with the United States are stronger when human rights principles are respected.

The region has been convulsed by conflict and instability for the past two decades, but many of our partners have turned in recent months towards de-escalation and to working with the United States to quell the region's conflicts. Iran, of course, has been the outlier to this trend. Tehran continues to pursue destabilizing policies, including through its support for terrorism, its ballistic missile program, its subversive support for violent groups, and its abhorrent human rights record and long-standing practice of using wrongfully detained U.S. citizens as political tools. An Iran with a nuclear weapon would pose an even greater threat.

As part of the administration's renewed multilateral engagement, if confirmed I will work in tandem with partners and allies to advance U.N. peace processes in Libya, Syria, and Yemen.

The President's vision for a collaborative partnership with the countries of the Middle East comes in the wider context of a growing global challenge to our values of open societies and open economies, values that have underpinned the institutions of the international order. This challenge comes primarily from the People's Republic of China (PRC) and Russia; both pursue influence in the region in a zero-sum fashion. If confirmed, I expect to have frank conversations with our partners about the challenges posed by certain Russian and PRC actions.

If confirmed, I will not be able to accomplish this ambitious agenda without the outstanding Foreign Service Officers, Civil Servants, Contractors, and family members employed here and in the region. I am committed to promoting the safety and security of our people overseas, the professional development of our employees, and the principles of Diversity, Equity, Inclusion, and Accessibility in the Bureau and our posts around the region.

If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with you as we reshape, rebuild, and reenergize the U.S. Government's engagement with the Middle East, building a better future for the American people and the people of the region. Thank you, and I look forward to your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you all very much.

Before I start my questions, let me start a series of questions that we ask every nominee that comes before the committee, and they are on behalf of the full committee and I just simply ask you for a verbal yes or no answer.

These are questions that speak to the importance that the committee places on responsiveness by all officials in the executive branch and we expect and would be seeking from you.

I will ask each of you to provide just a yes or no answer to the following.

Do you agree to appear before this committee and make officials from your office available to the committee and designated staff when invited?

[Witnesses answer in the affirmative.]

The CHAIRMAN. Do you commit to keep this committee fully and currently informed about the activities under your purview?

[Witnesses answer in the affirmative.]

The CHAIRMAN. Did I get four yeses there?

Ambassador LEAF. Yes.

Ms. SMITH. Yes.

[Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Okay. Do you commit to engaging in a meaningful consultation while policies are being developed, not just providing notification after the fact?

[Witnesses answer in the affirmative.]

The CHAIRMAN. And do you commit to promptly responding to requests for briefings and information requested by the committee and its designated staff?

[Witnesses answer in the affirmative.]

The CHAIRMAN. All right. Thank you all for that. For the record, all four nominees answered yes to all the questions.

Let me start a series of five-minute rounds.

Ambassador Noyes, how can the department and the PRM in particular help ensure that thousands of Afghans allies who were left behind when the last U.S. military plane departed on August 30th have equal access to evacuations?

This will be one of the most critical immediate challenges that you will have. Give me a sense of how you envision your department's participation in that.

Ambassador NOYES. Senator, thank you for the question.

I think I speak for all of my colleagues at the State Department to say how proud we were to see how many people we were able to get out of Afghanistan and how heartbroken we were to see that we could not get out everyone that we wanted to.

The president, the Secretary, have made clear their intention to uphold the commitment that we had to the people who worked for us, to the people who qualify for Special Immigrant Visas, and we will continue to work to process their cases and get them out.

We have also made available consideration for referral under refugee programs, the P-2 refugee referrals, and other ways of getting access to resettlement in the United States.

We also would commit to working with international organizations like the High Commissioner for Refugees to seek resettlement for people at risk in other countries, not just in the United States.

Our commitment to uphold the human rights and to protect the vulnerable people of Afghanistan through resettlement, if that is what is needed, is a firm one, and if confirmed as Assistant Secretary, I would work with colleagues throughout the department and other agencies to uphold that commitment.

The CHAIRMAN. Today is the beginning of Hispanic Heritage Month, and many of us held a call with national leadership, and one of the questions that came up is that it seems that we treat refugees from the southern border below differently than we treat refugees from other people in the world.

Seems to me that a refugee, if they meet the definition under the law, is a refugee, regardless of where they come from. Do you share that view?

Ambassador NOYES. Yes, Senator. Anyone who qualifies as a refugee should be given the same treatment and the same consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Ambassador Leaf, I could spend the whole hearing with you, but I will not because we had a good session yesterday. But I will put some questions for the record just so that we can have the record sustained. But I do want to broach one or two of them with you.

Over the weekend, Iran and the IAEA reached what seems to be a subpar last-minute agreement to prevent the IAEA from formally censuring Iran.

I remain deeply concerned about the details of this agreement, specifically because my understanding is that while the IAEA will have access to the information it needs, it will not be able to see that access. It will not be able to see the actual information in real time.

It will not be able to see the information that was taken out or that will be taken out from the storage chips of what was going on since Iran broke off inspections, and it will not be able to see the new information that will be placed in the new storage chips to do the video recording of what is going on.

Therefore, while there will be, quote/unquote, "monitoring" taking place, there will be no review of the monitoring. Therefore, we will have no information about the status of Iran's program. If there is something called a Pyrrhic victory, that is the ultimate definition of it.

Secretary Blinken has responded to that report by warning that Iran is running out of time to reap any benefits of a compliance agreement with the JCPOA.

I, honestly, believe that returning to the JCPOA just as it was does not realize the tremendous change in circumstances we have today as well as the fact that Iran's nefarious activities in ballistic missiles, destabilization of the region, arms trafficking, and a whole host of other things are equally or as important.

Let me ask you, how much time and diplomatic space do you think is left to get to a longer and stronger nuclear deal that also addresses these regional transgressions and attacks by proxies against not only U.S. partners and allies but also U.S. personnel and facilities in the region?

Ambassador LEAF. Thank you, Senator, for those questions and those comments.

I would not want to get into in a hypothetical answer to the question of how much time. Secretary Blinken laid down a warning marker with that remark and it is a valid one.

We have been waiting now, for two months to go back into a set of discussions, which are quite urgent, and as you said, the discussion on the JCPOA, a mutual compliance-for-compliance return to that agreement is only a starting point.

What I would say to your concerns about these other issues, including a supplemental agreement, longer, stronger, but also the ongoing nefarious activities, those are my concerns, too. The administration, in fact, does not view this as a sequential matter in terms of addressing those regional activities.

There are ongoing discussions with our most important ally in the region, Israel, as well as other concerned parties, and we work to synchronize and use a set of tools—economic sanctions, pressure, occasionally military and other diplomatic tools with them—to confront and constrain Iran in these activities.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it fair to say that we really do not know where Iran is at in its nuclear program right now?

Ambassador LEAF. I am not sure I would want to characterize it that way, Senator, and, obviously, there are intelligence estimates to that effect.

The CHAIRMAN. I get real concerned when I see Mr. Albright suggest that we are one month away. He is a pretty independent verifier. I get concerned when we are heralding the IAEA agreement that, basically, says, well, we will keep the monitoring but we cannot see anything that is happening and we do not know what has happened in between.

That is not creating a safeguard for anybody. We need to be a lot more robust with the IAEA. This committee will be seeking the IAEA's briefing, which it has not given to date, because we got to know what we are seeing and what we are not seeing and be honest with ourselves at the end of the day.

I have many other questions for some of the other nominees. But, in fairness, to our colleagues, Senator Risch?

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Obviously, I share a lot of those concerns also.

And Ambassador Leaf, I can tell you, I told Secretary Blinken this when we met, and you can take it for what it is worth, but having been through this thing with Iran for so long, this business of saying now that you are going to try to get back into the old JCPOA and then there will be add-on negotiations and agreements in the future, with all due respect, I think that thinking is just delusional.

There is no way that Iran is going to continue to negotiate and do an add-on agreement if, indeed, they are able to get the JCPOA back where it was and get our sanctions off.

That is my two cents' worth, and I understand we have a basic disagreement in that regard. But nonetheless, I will be shocked if you can get that done.

Secondly, you heard the discussion from both myself and from the chairman regarding a Syria policy, and we need that.

I am not expecting you to opine on that today because I think you have got your work ahead of you before you can get there. But we need something that we can articulate and move forward on, and we do not have that on Syria.

Ms. Noyes, I want to talk about UNRWA for just a minute. I introduced the UNRWA Accountability and Transparency Act with 11 of my Senate colleagues, and we share real concerns on UNRWA.

What are your thoughts on UNRWA?

Ambassador NOYES. Senator, I share the concerns that you expressed in that legislation about the efficiency, the effectiveness, and the neutrality of UNRWA. The administration agrees, with the premise behind the legislation.

That said, it is my understanding that UNRWA is a force for stability in the region by providing vital services to Palestinians in need—education for school children, health care for people, and the only viable alternative to UNRWA in those areas would be Hamas.

Therefore, while we, certainly, would agree with the intent of the legislation and the framework agreement that the PRM bureau entered into with UNRWA accounts for the need to make changes and to redouble efforts to ensure the efficiency, the effectiveness, and the neutrality of UNRWA.

Senator RISCH. I appreciate your thoughts. I do not think simply because there is an alternative that is worse we should take this—in my judgment, a very bad agency and try to make that work.

I think we should try to make that work. But I think that if it does not work, we should not say, well, the only other alternative is Hamas. I do not subscribe to that theory.

But in any event, I think most everyone who has dealt with UNRWA and seen, for instance, the textbooks they print for use in their schools is just disgusted that U.S. taxpayer money is going down the drain in that regard.

I hope you will focus on that. I hope you can get them in a better direction, and it is going to take a considerable change in direction for me to embrace what they are doing.

Thank you for your efforts in that regard.

And thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

My understanding is Senator Cardin is with us virtually.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I do want to thank all of our nominees for their willingness to serve our nation during these extremely challenging times. We thank you. We thank your families.

Ambassador Leaf, I want to follow up on some of the comments that have already been made. We see some positive developments in the Middle East with the Abraham Accords, and Congress has passed that and the Senate Finance Committee has passed S. 1601, which would build on that to have the United States active in trying to get more of the countries in the Middle East to sign on to the Abraham Accords.

On the other side of the ledger, we see activities in the United Nations General Assembly that is very much trying to compromise Israel's sovereignty.

Just share with me your strategies in dealing with the countries in the region to get more to move towards the Abraham Accord approach with Israel rather than trying to isolate Israel in the United Nations.

Ambassador LEAF. Thank you, Senator, for that set of questions and comments, and I could not agree more on both counts.

First, with respect to the Abraham Accords, it is a truly exciting set of developments in a region that for so long has really not had a lot of good news, and I, if confirmed, very much look forward to seizing the opportunities opened with those nascent relationships and deepening, expanding them while really expanding the circle beyond the four countries.

I think there is a lot of opportunity. I would say the UAE and Bahrain and Morocco probably represented the sort of most forward leaning of the countries in that regard.

But, nonetheless, and this has been a subject of discussion with the Israeli Government, there are other opportunities out there, and I think it self-evidently should be a priority for my work, if confirmed, and it would thread into the work of every U.S. ambassador in the region so that it was a very concerted and coordinated effort.

I also agree with you in terms of the anti-Israel bias that we see repeatedly come up, whether in the UNGA or in U.N. bodies, and, if confirmed, I would absolutely work in lockstep with other members of the administration, with our mission to the U.N., and others to push back on that vigorously.

Senator CARDIN. I would just point out I think the Abraham Accords is a positive incentive for countries to normalize their relationship with Israel. The actions in the United Nations and its bodies require us to make it clear that there is a price to pay when we see this type of activity take place that is very much against the sovereignty of our closest ally in the Middle East.

I would hope you would also be aggressive in activities to make it clear that the United States will act on behalf of Israel in regards to the United Nations.

Ambassador Noyes, I want to ask you a question on immigration. I agree with Chairman Menendez's point in regards to Afghanistan, and that is going to, certainly, be a major focus of all of our work in the next several months in order to relocate those at risk.

But I want to get closer to our own hemisphere, and Senator Menendez raised these issues. We show international leadership by our actions here in America. Yes, we will show it in regards to the Afghan refugees.

But in regards to refugees coming out of our own hemisphere, we, certainly, have a lot of individuals who have left Venezuela. We have the Central American migration that we know about.

Can you just share with me the strategy of exercising leadership in our own hemisphere to show that we have the right global policies in regards to migration that can help us not only in dealing with the challenges we have in the Western Hemisphere but also our leadership globally?

Ambassador NOYES. Thank you for that question, Senator Cardin.

Certainly, this hemisphere is not alone in having issues with refugees and migration. One of the administration's major efforts with regard to how to deal with these issues is for Central America. There is a root cause's strategy to get to the causes that lead people to leave their nations.

But insofar as PRM is concerned, the administration has also put forward a comprehensive migration management strategy, which is an effort, a whole-of-government effort, to work with U.S. Government agencies but also with the governments of the region in trying to address the issues that lead to migration and to come up with collaborative approaches for dealing with those issues, whether it is providing access to temporary work permits, providing protection, humanitarian assistance in countries where they are needed, dealing with issues of corruption, rule of law.

And that is a model, Senator, that I believe could be very useful and very effective in dealing with migration questions and refugee challenges elsewhere in the world.

If confirmed, I really would like to do more in the area of humanitarian diplomacy, working closely with our partners and with other governments around the world to address these issues before they become so severe that they lead people to leave their countries, and also to address issues that have led people to leave their countries such that they can find ways to return safely, humanely, and voluntarily to their home countries.

I think there is a lot to be done in the area of humanitarian diplomacy. I think the approach the United States is taking in Central America and in Mexico with this holistic whole-of-government and collaborative approach with regional governments is, again, a model for these issues around the world.

Thank you.

Senator CARDIN. We will be judged by our actions.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Cardin.

My understanding is that there are presently no Republican colleagues seeking recognition so I will move to Senator Kaine.

Senator KAINE. Mr. Chair, thank you. And again, congratulations to the nominees.

Ambassador Bauer, one of the wonderful opportunities in the U.S. relationship with France is that France has significant equities all over the globe in areas where the U.S. shares interest, and we work in tandem in Southeast Asia. We work in tandem in the Sahel. I want to ask a question about one of the countries you mentioned, Lebanon.

The U.S.-Lebanese relationship, especially with the Lebanese military, has been a strong one. Lebanon is very strategically important.

But right now in Lebanon there has just been a set of catastrophes, one after the next, and the current political situation in Lebanon poses grave risk both to the health and satisfaction and quality of life of everyday Lebanese but also the surrounding communities.

The French Government under President Macron has been very involved in trying to promote a better chapter for Lebanon. Should you be confirmed, what might we be able to do, the United States and France together, to figure out ways to help Lebanon to a better place?

Ambassador BAUER. Thank you for the question, Senator Kaine.

Yes, indeed, it is a very challenging situation, and it is my understanding that we are working closely with the French and that the French take it very seriously and will be good allies, going forward.

It is certainly something I would engage on right away should I be confirmed, and would also welcome the opportunity to consult with you and other members of this committee to develop a best plan for going forward.

Senator KAINE. Excellent. I almost asked that question as a proxy for Senator Murphy, who is the chair of the Subcommittee of Foreign Relations that oversees that relationship, and he just was in Lebanon with other members of the committee.

I think it is an increasingly destabilized Lebanon is a real problem for a lot of nations, including the United States, and we can work together with France on that.

Ambassador Leaf, I am concerned about a number of things in the relationship between the United States and Egypt. There are some positive developments. President el-Sisi met with Prime Minister Bennett in Sharm El Sheikh recently, which was the first meeting between leaders of Egypt and Israel in a decade. That is positive.

But I am really worried about human rights issues in Egypt and they affect a lot of Virginians. There was reporting in the last few months about the involvement of Egyptian intelligence in the murder of Virginia resident Washington Post journalist Jamal Khashoggi.

I wrote a letter to the Secretary of State last month asking the Department of State to dig into these allegations and then render some judgment on the potential applicability of 7013(c) visa restrictions.

You are not yet at State. That letter had not come to you. But these are very serious allegations of the involvement of the Egypt secret police and intel officials in the murder of a Virginian, a journalist.

Now, I will say the Egyptian Government has denied these allegations. We spoke directly about it with the head of Egyptian intelligence on the committee. But there is an answer to the question of whether or not they are involved, and if they were there has got to be some consequences.

Should you be confirmed, will you take this kind of a request of the Department of State to make an assessment about what occurred and then whether there should be accountability? Will you take this matter with the utmost seriousness?

Ambassador LEAF. Thank you, Senator, for that question, and it is an extraordinarily serious issue that you have raised.

Within the context more broadly, and I will say straight up, of course, I will take my responsibilities absolutely seriously, if confirmed, under both U.S. law and U.S. policy on human rights.

I would just offer another couple of comments on this broader issue that you raised, how human rights feature in the relationship with Egypt, and you will have seen this week that Secretary Blinken decided on the issue of $300 million of the $1.3 billion of foreign military financing for Egypt.

It was a very methodical and carefully thought through set of decisions to signal, to reaffirm, really, that as with countries around the world, human rights do feature at the center point of relations with Egypt.

Now, we have long-standing national security interests in that relationship. Egypt has been a strategic partner of enormous importance for the U.S. but also for the region and for Israel, in particular.

And as you said, this was a remarkable thing. For the first time in a decade you had the two leaders meet publicly. The fact that leaders have met before, but they could not do it publicly in front of their publics speaks to how unsteady that relationship was.

I will just pledge to you that, if confirmed, I will absolutely keep my focus on these human rights issues and the case that you cite, in particular.

Senator KAINE. Thank you very much. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Cruz?

Senator CRUZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ms. Leaf, if confirmed, you are going to inherit a region that has been transformed in remarkable ways in recent years, most significantly by the Abraham Accords.

The Abraham Accords were historic peace agreements, the first in decades achieved in the region. They were achieved, I believe, because the prior administration abandoned the long-standing U.S. policy of deliberate ambiguity between Israel and the Palestinians and, rather, pursued a policy that America unequivocally stands with our friend and ally, the nation of Israel.

That clarity produced the Abraham Accords, I believe. That clarity was manifested in multiple ways, including moving our embassy in Israel to Jerusalem, including withdrawing from the disastrous Obama Iran nuclear deal.

The Biden administration seems bound and determined to unwind all of the positive progress made in the Middle East, to run away from the peace deal, to embrace the strategic ambiguity that for decades failed, and the Biden administration seems to want to go back to that failure.

When it comes to the Abraham Accords, the Biden administration, frankly, has been almost comical, going so far as quite literally putting out a guidance at the U.S. State Department not to utter the words Abraham Accords, in writing officials in the Biden State Department saying, "We do not use those words here." Instead, they are to be referred to as normalization agreements.

And I will say that was not simply a written guidance but, sadly, it is a guidance that seems to be followed. Just yesterday, the U.S. ambassador of the United Nations, Linda Thomas-Greenfield, gave a speech on the anniversary of the Abraham Accords in which she refused to utter the words Abraham Accords. The entire thing seems like a Monty Python skit.

I understand that the Biden administration is not a fan of Donald Trump. But throwing away historic Middle East peace agreements because the administration does not like their predecessor is extraordinarily foolish, it is harmful to the United States, and it is harmful to our friends and allies.

Can you tell this committee, in your judgment, what is the importance of the Abraham Accords and should they be maintained and strengthened or should they be undermined and weakened?

Ambassador LEAF. Senator, I agree with you, those are historic Accords. The Abraham Accords changed and brought a new dynamic to a region that has really had very little in the way of good news in recent years.

There is no question in my mind that they have already contributed and will contribute still more to peaceful coexistence and to economic integration, and that last piece has been very much missing across this region.

I can assure you that, if confirmed, I will make it a top priority not just to help foster the deepening of the roots of those relationships, and each of them has different dynamics according to their own societies and cultures, but I will work with those governments and with the Israeli Government to strengthen and deepen those Accords and then widen the circle, absolutely.

There are more opportunities out there. They are not quite as in a state of readiness, perhaps, as the UAE was. But there are prospects there.

They start with some very significant moves on people-to-people contacts and that is one of the things that really, I think, was most striking in the case of the UAE and Bahrain.

Those governments had begun a very subtle process of beginning to warm their public up to the idea, and that is the sort of thing that, frankly, the U.S. has to push on with other governments and I am ready to do it.

Senator CRUZ. Thank you.

Ms. Smith, as you know, I am deeply concerned about the Nord Stream 2 pipeline. I think that President Biden made an enormous and, indeed, a generational geopolitical mistake by effectively giving that pipeline to Vladimir Putin.

In your judgment, what will be the national security harms, the economic harms, to Europe and to the United States if and when that pipeline goes online and is operational?

Ms. SMITH. Thank you, Senator, for that question.

I agree with the president. I agree with you that the pipeline is a bad deal. It is a geopolitical project, as you yourself have noted many times.

It is a project that undermines the safety and security of our friends in Europe, particularly in Ukraine. I do not feel that this deal, this pipeline, in particular, will be something that will bring added security to Europe. Quite the contrary.

I look forward, though, if confirmed, to working with our allies, our partners, on the repercussions of this pipeline as I get to Brussels.

Senator CRUZ. I feel obliged to note the president does not believe that, because the only reason the pipeline is being completed is because Joe Biden waived the sanctions that were passed by an overwhelming bipartisan majority of Congress.

We had stopped the pipeline for over a year, and the Biden administration decided, because they wanted to make nice with Germany, they would give Putin a generational multi-billion-dollar gift and they turned an incredible foreign policy victory into a foreign policy failure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the senator has expired.

I would just note for the record an hour ago the State Department spokesman, Ned Price, was heralding the Abraham Accords and called it as such, and the United Arab Emirates promoted it as part of their Foreign Service movement.

The administration has used and I am sure will continue to use the term Abraham Accords.

Senator Coons?

Senator COONS. Thank you, Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch.

And, Chairman Menendez, thank you for setting the record straight about both the bipartisan support for the Abraham Accords here and the ways in which the State Department continues to advocate for their full implementation.

To the nominees before us, thank you for your willingness to serve. Let me thank your families and those who have helped support you in your careers and service so far and will support you should you be confirmed.

Let me just ask a few quick questions. I have less than five minutes but I am delighted to have a chance to ask each of you a question or two.

Ms. Bauer, if I might, what lessons did you learn from your time as Ambassador to Belgium about working with the Foreign Service? And you have said to me when we had a chance to talk before this hearing that one of the most important jobs an ambassador faces is protecting State Department employees and other American citizens abroad.

How do you intend to help contribute to that sacred challenge, that obligation, that opportunity, that our diplomats have abroad?

Ambassador BAUER. Thank you, Senator Coons.

Indeed, working with the team at the State Department and the interagency team in Brussels was an incredible privilege. It is a skilled and dedicated group of people and it is part of what made me so excited about the opportunity to potentially serve again was to think of working with the same extraordinary team.

On the security front, I think it is a matter of having really close communication, no silos, working as a team, making sure everyone trusts each other and we are having really regular communications not only within the team in France, should I be confirmed, but throughout Europe and, of course, consulting with the Senate and other important partners.

Senator COONS. Thank you. I did not mean to skip over Ms. Noyes.

If I might, your role is going to be absolutely critical, and as the daughter of Cuban refugees, I think you bring an important and unique perspective to this vital role.

If you would just share with me, briefly, what lessons from your service as ambassador to Croatia would you bring to PRM, and how should the State Department address the visa backlog and how will you work to increase international cooperation on difficult and urgent issues like resettlement of refugees and humanitarian assistance?

Ambassador NOYES. Senator, thank you for that question.

I think I have learned lessons from throughout my career in a variety of different positions, not just as ambassador but even as the Acting Director of FSI, lessons about management, about teamwork, about how I would pick up part of Denise's answer about working with the team and making sure that everyone makes a contribution.

One of my biggest priorities, if confirmed, would be to help rebuild the Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration, which is badly understaffed at this point at a time when it is really being stretched to carry out a lot of functions.

A big priority would be rebuilding that bureau, and in rebuilding that bureau working to rebuild the U.S. Refugee Admissions Program, which is critical for America's humanitarian leadership around the world, and working with partners in the State Department and in the interagency on helping to resettle the Afghan refugees.

In so far as the visa backlog question, Senator, the Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration does not play a specific role on that issue. But I know that my colleagues at the Department of State are working very, very hard to process the remaining Special Immigrant Visas for Afghans and to do whatever is possible to help people at risk in Afghanistan.

Thank you.

Senator COONS. I think that is urgent work and I look forward to working with the chairman to ensure that the resources for that are available.

Might I ask two more quick questions or are we—

The CHAIRMAN. Since the senator is the chairman of the Foreign Ops Subcommittee and Appropriations, definitely go ahead.

Senator COONS. Thank you.

If I might, Ms. Smith, NATO has just concluded one of its most important longest missions and it is now, I think, facing a different range of threats, challenges, and adversaries.

China has expanded its influence not just in the Indo-Pacific but in Europe, investing in infrastructure, heightening its emphasis on the Arctic, targeting countries in Eastern, Central, and Western Europe with disinformation campaigns.

And in June, the NATO heads of state issued a statement that Beijing presents systemic challenges. What risk do you think China currently poses to the NATO Alliance and European stability, and how would you, if confirmed, work with NATO to counter China's malign influence?

Ms. SMITH. Thank you, Senator, for that question.

I do worry about the dangers posed by China in the Euro-Atlantic area. I think about the investments that China is making in critical infrastructure across the continent.

I think about their own investments in disruptive technology, the lessons they are learning from Russia on utilizing disinformation, their evolving maritime presence, what they are doing in the Arctic. I really could go on.

The good news, as you noted yourself, Senator, is that the Alliance now has conducted its first China review in 2019. The Alliance just recently stated at its summit this past June that it is a systemic challenge to the liberal world order.

Going forward, if confirmed, I would look forward to working with the allies as we draft the next Strategic Concept to make sure that the challenges posed by China to the wider Euro-Atlantic region are featured prominently in the Strategic Concept.

I would also look forward to working with them on acquiring better tools to counter some of the malign activities that China is pursuing.

Senator COONS. Thank you. Thank you to all of you. And thank you for your indulgence, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Murphy?

Senator MURPHY. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you all for being here today. This is an important hearing. I hope that you move quickly to the floor.

But then you are destined to sit in limbo because we have two members of the Senate, a list that is growing, that have decided to hold up all national security nominees.

This is a growing danger to the national security of this country and I would hope that my Republican colleagues on this committee would help us address this very quickly, because every single day that we do not have ambassadors, every single day that we do not have assistant secretaries, is a day that America is not representing its interests around the world.

A few questions for the panel, and thank you all for your tremendous service to the country. We are so grateful for your willingness to continue it.

Ambassador Leaf, I admit to getting a little confused when I hear the administration talk about the strategy, moving forward, on the JCPOA. Obviously, Senator Menendez and I have slightly different views on this issue.

But what I understand to be the administration's policy is that while we absolutely believe that at the same time we can work on addressing Iran's nuclear program and its support for terrorist groups and its other malevolent behaviors in the region, our belief continues to be that a compliance-for-compliance deal on the JCPOA is meritorious on its own and that if we can get back into the JCPOA then that makes it a lot easier to confront many of their other behaviors around the region.

I just want to confirm that that continues to be the position of the administration, that understanding how difficult it is to figure out how to get back into the agreement that we still believe that it is a priority to get back into the agreement and we are not conditioning the restart of the JCPOA on an additional set of agreements on a whole host of nonnuclear behaviors by the Iranian regime.

Ambassador LEAF. Senator, the only word I would disagree with in that set of statements and that question was whether it would be easier following reentry into JCPOA to deal with all those other problems.

But no, to be serious, the administration is committed to a methodical diplomatic effort to rejoin the JCPOA based on mutual compliance. That is an overriding national security imperative because, at this point, Iran's nuclear program is untrammelled.

The priority is getting it back into a box. But notwithstanding those diplomatic efforts in Vienna, the administration continues in parallel, in tandem, to, on a constant basis, address the regional dimension of Iran's destabilizing behavior.

There is an objective on the part of the administration to then build upon in nuclear terms a longer stronger deal. But the ongoing work is ongoing. It will continue apart.

Senator MURPHY. I am going to submit a question to the record on Lebanon. I will not ask a question to you now.

But Hezbollah is spinning up a very effective narrative there right now about the United States blockade of energy resources into the country and they are offering ships of their own through Iran.

We have got to solve for this very quickly. The narrative is pervasive, and there are ways in which we can creatively try to address the fuel shortage, the crisis in Lebanon right now. But we have to do it very, very quickly.

And so I will submit a question to the record because I wanted to ask one final question here to you, Ms. Smith. I think one of the biggest scams going is the way that we assess NATO contributions to the Alliance.

Despite the fact that the adversaries to the United States and our NATO partners are using all sorts of means other than conventional military pressure to try to undermine the democracies of NATO, we continue to assess whether or not you are a full member in good standing by the amount of your defense spending, even though Russia is delighting in asymmetric warfare that is defended in ways other than aircraft carriers and ships and brigades.

Is there a better way, moving forward, that we can assess whether members of the NATO Alliance are in good standing other than the simple amount of their GDP that they are spending on hard traditional conventional defense spending?

Ms. SMITH. Senator, thank you for that question.

Traditionally, NATO's deterrence and defense posture has been based on three legs of a stool, so conventional capabilities, nuclear capabilities, and missile defense capabilities. And so we always measured allies' contributions in a very conventional framing.

But in recent years, as you noted, increasingly, the NATO Alliance is defining its posture, deterrence, and defense posture in other ways. It is looking at cybersecurity, increasingly working that into operational planning. It is looking at those gray zone threats, the hybrid threats: disinformation, coercion, and other forms of gray zone tactics.

And so, going forward, on this question of burden sharing, there is a lot to do. First and foremost, we have to keep a laser like focus on 2 percent. Allies all made that commitment to get to 2 percent in 2014. Many have gotten there or will get there by 2024. But we have to continue to apply pressure on those that will not yet meet that target by 2024.

Increasingly, I think we have to have conversations with our allies about other aspects: readiness, force generation, capability gaps, broadly defined.

And so, if confirmed, I would look forward to working with our allies on this broader definition of NATO's deterrence and defense posture and the question of burden sharing.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. I understand Senator Van Hollen is with us virtually.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Let me join my colleagues in congratulating all of you on your nominations, and I am impressed with the great depth and breadth of foreign policy experience represented on this panel.

I also want to associate myself with the comments of both the chairman and Senator Murphy that the ever longer line of nominations being held up on the Senate floor hurts our national security and undermines our capacities.

Ambassador Noyes, you have got a huge amount of challenges in the portfolio you have been nominated to oversee, including recent developments in Afghanistan, and I am going to be submitting some questions to the record for you.

Ambassador Leaf, I just returned from a trip to Lebanon, Israel, and the West Bank with Senator Murphy and others, and I have a couple questions related to that trip, starting with Lebanon.

We were pleased to see that after over a year of no government, last Friday we finally have a government in Lebanon. As you know, that is just the first step. They have got to address the economic crisis, bring more accountability and transparency to a system that is rife with political corruption, and keep elections on track for next year.

But the one institution in the country that is almost universally respected is the nonsectarian Lebanese Armed Forces. And my question to you, and it is a simple question, is do you agree it is in our national interests to continue to support that effort?

And I will add one of the things that was highlighted during our visit was that because of the economic crisis, pay for members of the Lebanese Armed Forces has just collapsed.

In fact, there is a story today the Lebanese Armed Forces is providing helicopter rides for tourists in order to raise money, and the pay of the Lebanese Armed Forces is now way below what Hezbollah pays its militias.

A question. So you agree that continued U.S. support for the Lebanese Armed Forces is in our interest of providing some measure of stability respect to interfaith communities, inter-communal stability, and national stability? Just yes or no.

Ambassador LEAF. Yes, absolutely. If you would like, I can offer a few other thoughts on this.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. I appreciate that. Let me get on the other questions. If I have time in the end—

Ambassador LEAF. Please.

Senator Van Hollen:—I will circle back.

We also, as I said, went to Israel and the West Bank. In Israel, we affirmed our support for the replenishment of the Iron Dome and our support for the Abraham Accords.

We also discussed both in Israel and the West Bank President Biden's plan to reopen the consulate in Jerusalem that had been in existence for over a hundred years before the previous administration terminated it.

My question is does the president plan to continue with that commitment to open the consulate and what would be the timetable?

Ambassador LEAF. Yes, Senator, that is the President's commitment, and he believes, and Secretary Blinken spoke to this issue over the last couple months that reopening the consulate provides a critical platform for diplomatic engagement with both the Palestinian leadership and the Palestinian people.

I am not privy to the plans in the State Department in terms of timing of that. But, if confirmed, of course, I will work to execute the President's commitment.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you. In my remaining time, let me now circle back to Lebanon, and in addition to elaborating on the Lebanese Armed Forces just follow up with the issue that Senator Murphy raised, which is, as you know, Iran right now is sending tankers with fuel to Hezbollah via a port in Syria to be transported over land.

Our really great ambassador there, Ambassador Shea, has expressed her strong opposition to that but also proposed an alternative, a much more sustainable plan, a real plan that involves bringing electricity from Egypt through Jordan to Lebanon but would have to transit Syria.

There are issues of whether or not that is compliant with the Caesar Act or whether a waiver would be required. Can you just offer your thoughts on that, in addition to the Lebanese Armed Forces?

Ambassador LEAF. Thank you, Senator, and thank you for calling out Ambassador Shea for her great efforts there on the ground with her team.

Yeah, it is interesting, the issue of this acute energy crisis. It is side by side with the general disintegration of the economy, which is, as you and Senator Murphy saw, is having a terrible deleterious effect across society and is crumbling the foundations of the LAF itself. I mean, the currency has lost 90 percent of its value in the last two years. Imagine what a soldier makes.

On this issue of an energy solution, side by side with this, frankly, PR stunt by Hezbollah, this is a regionally produced solution or proposed solution, which, as you say, it is our partners, Egypt and Jordan, who have teamed together to look at the issue of excess electricity and natural gas to get it across Syria into Lebanon.

This is a project that, as I understand it, is endorsed by the World Bank. So, the State Department is looking at it carefully within the framework of U.S. law and sanctions policy.

But it shows some promise on the face of it and, of course, the Department will consult thoroughly with Treasury on the way forward. But it, certainly, offers the prospect of a cheaper, cleaner, and defensible solution, a short-term fix to what is a larger terrible problem in Lebanon.

And the first step, of course, is that they have finally, after 13 months, put together a government, which is only the first step. Important economic reforms must follow after.

And I will just say, finally, on the LAF, support for the LAF as the true cross confessional institution of public trust and capability in the country will remain a priority for this administration.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Let me follow up on one point that Senator Van Hollen made.

And I look forward to hearing back from the department. I helped write the Caesar Act and I do not want to give relief to the Assad regime.

However, in this particular case for these particular circumstances, if the department makes the determination that that is the only impediment towards an agreement for energy flow into Lebanon, I have asked them to come to me because I think it is important enough to find a way forward.

Let me also follow on. A question, Ambassador Leaf, that was promoted to you by Senator Murphy—and he and I do have a respectful disagreement about the JCPOA—I understood your answer to say that if we can get a compliance-for-compliance deal we will do that, and then the stronger longer comes later. Is that it?

Ambassador LEAF. Senator, what I meant by that was follow-on negotiations would necessarily look at building out on the JCPOA.

The CHAIRMAN. Right, but they would come later?

Ambassador LEAF. Following it. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Yeah. That is the problem. The conversations that I have had with the administration is that returning to the JCPOA with a commitment from the Iranians for a negotiation on what is longer and stronger, that is something I could support.

But if it is just compliance-for-compliance and then we wait to see whether the Iranians are actually serious about longer and stronger, that is a problem because they will have received what they wanted.

And let us remember that our circumstances today are different than when we entered the JCPOA. Number one, time has elapsed. The sunset clauses are closer. Some of them have already elapsed on some critical issues.

And Iran has moved forward on its abilities and knowledge in terms of enrichment. We are not in the same place. Even with compliance-for-compliance, we are not in the same place.

I do not hold you responsible for this because even though you work at the NSC it is, I am sure, above your pay grade. But I just want to make it clear that from the chairman's point of view this is a problem.

And so I have given the administration a lot of room under the basis that they are looking for an agreement that goes back to compliance but is also a pathway to longer and stronger, and just that it will happen later on in the hopes that the Iranians will be good actors is not something that I can be supportive of.

I just want to raise that question. I think this question is rather self-obvious, but I just want to do it for the record.

Do you commit to fully supporting Israel's right to self-defense and its qualitative military edge, including through U.S. military assistance?

Ambassador LEAF. Yes, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Okay. I want to go to Lebanon as well. This economic crisis has pushed the middle class into poverty, but the country's political elite still have shown no appetite for needed reforms.

This new government, it is my hope that Hezbollah will allow this government to operate.

How do we balance the need to help alleviate suffering in Lebanon while directly contributing to security and stability—which directly contributes to security and stability not only in Lebanon but Israel and throughout the region, but ensure that our assistance is being used to incentivize reforms?

Ambassador LEAF. Thank you, Senator. You have put your finger on the crux of the issue.

There is a situation that in real terms is quite terrifying that confronts Lebanon and I wish the Lebanese political class and its leaders and those who formed the caretaker government have felt the same sense of urgency about the situation that outsiders like the U.S. Government, the French Government, and others have felt about the situation.

There is at play here, a need for pressure and inducements but, really, not inducements in an immediate sense. It is, rather, that this government, having been formed, it is only the first minimal step on what has to be a long road of structural economic reform, which will then unlock, be it international financing, loans, and other forms of foreign assistance.

The Biden administration has been working this set of issues closely with France and several other regional partners to provide that constant pressure on individuals as well as the Government to make it clear that there is no rescue coming from outside.

The solution to Lebanon lies in Lebanese hands. But it is going to be a long slow road ahead.

The CHAIRMAN. I hope we will do what is necessary to try to get them to be part of the decision-making necessary so they can get IMF funding and reforms and move on, and I think there is a great will in the Congress to help Lebanon but Lebanon must help itself in that regard.

And I think if the message is there that we are standing willing to help, then the onus is upon its own leaders to create that opportunity.

Ambassador LEAF. Absolutely.

The CHAIRMAN. Okay. I just want to touch on Egypt with you and then I will move on.

Egypt is both an incredibly important security partner to us, to the region, to Israel. I was in Greece this summer. I spoke to the foreign minister. He made a very big point about Egypt's stability in the region.

They are a member of the East Med Gas Forum along with Greece, Cyprus, Israel, and Jordan. They worked to deescalate the conflict between Israel and Hamas in the past conflicts. They, obviously, are playing a significant role in that regard.

They have issues as well. They have issues with the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam, or what we call the GERD. And when I speak to them, I believe that they are serious about their red lines on the GERD. And, though, while they do not seek it, I, certainly, think the last thing we can avoid is a conflict there, at the end of the day. I hope that you will join whoever is in the administration focused on this to try to find a resolution.

Then, of course, we have our continuing challenges on human rights. I know that the Egyptians argue that, look at what we are doing for the quality of life for the Egyptian people. That should be considered human rights, too.

But imprisonment and unlawful detention is also not acceptable on these set of circumstances. We have to press them on all these different fronts, and I will assume that that is something that you will do, if confirmed.

Ambassador LEAF. If confirmed, I will absolutely do that. And you have sketched out exactly the color, the texture, the complexity of that relationship. But it is quite strategic.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.

Ms. Smith, I have some real concerns about NATO in terms of where we are headed, and your time there will be very important. They fall in two buckets. One is NATO, of course, was created as a security architecture, which has been exceptionally successful.

But it was also founded on a set of principles, of values, that were joined by the member nations. And, of course, the provision of the NATO treaty that says an attack on one is an attack on all is a critical nature of that. We have reaffirmed that.

But what happens in the eventuality that an attack by one NATO member against another NATO member takes place? It is a serious issue, and while we never envisioned that, I am deeply concerned about Turkey's actions in the eastern Mediterranean against another NATO ally, Greece, where we have Souda Bay, where we are deepening our relationship. We are on the verge of signing a new defense cooperation agreement, a Memorandum of Understanding, hopefully, in October.

I think that is a discussion that NATO is going to have to have. I would like to get your impressions on that.

Ms. SMITH. Thank you, Senator.

NATO, as you know, recently spent some time drafting this 2030 report thinking about where the allies want to take the Alliance towards 2030 and what capabilities it would need, what new mechanisms it might need, what measures it could undertake to address some new challenges.

But, really, at the heart of that report sits the importance of Alliance cohesion and unity, and that is a theme that runs throughout the report.

And as I noted in my opening remarks, I am concerned about some of the actions we are seeing in some NATO member states that bring into question whether or not each member state is upholding our shared values of democracy, individual liberty, and rule of law.

If confirmed, I would work to ensure that we can return our focus back to Alliance unity, solidarity, and resolve.

On your question about Turkey more specifically, this is an ally inside the NATO Alliance that has played a key role in some of its cooperation with both the United States and other NATO allies in the counterterrorism realm.

But we have also had some really hard questions with Turkey and some tough discussions, particularly about their decision to purchase the S-400s, which all of us have made clear are not compatible with the Alliance, not interoperable, and I think, rightly, past U.S. administrations, other allies, have warned the Turks that these types of purchases cannot be made operational. They cannot be maintained. They should not have been purchased in the first place.

And so we have to continue to drive the message home to our friends in Ankara that it is important that we focus on that Alliance cohesion.

Yes, we can have some tough conversations with our friends in Ankara, difficult discussions about human rights as well, but also acknowledge that Turkey is an ally and that all of us want Turkey to remain facing westward.

The CHAIRMAN. We want them facing westward as long as they are also sharing westward values. When you purchase the S-400, which is in violation of CAATSA, that I helped write—when you—totally not interoperable with the NATO Alliance—when you commit actions that instigate against another NATO ally in Greece—you overfly their airspace, you invade their territorial waters, you threaten their exclusive economic zone—when we say that there are more lawyers and journalists in prison in Turkey than in any other part of the world, and there are some bad parts of the world, that speaks volumes about not sharing on values.

What they did in Azerbaijan in the Nagorno-Karabakh region, the list is replete. I just hope that you will be going clear eyed with an understanding of this challenge.

Yes, we want them to be everything we aspired of them—the bridge between East and West, the secular, more democratic country, a strong NATO ally, respecting the rule of law.

But under President Erdoğan that is not the reality, and as it is in life, we have to deal with that which is the reality, not that which we aspire to.

I hope you will be thinking about that because we have to answer the question, God forbid, that one NATO ally attacks another what is the answer of the Alliance then.

Secondly, I hope you will pay attention to what is the new hybrid warfare that, particularly, Russia has done.

We need to be able to think about how we respond in that regard when Russia uses forces that are irregular—but they are Russian forces for all intents and purposes, whether they are the Wagner Group or others—and at the end of the day, threatens stability in the region, as well as the new cyber challenges that we have, which are a new form of warfare.

Are those items that you will be paying attention to, if confirmed?

Ms. SMITH. Absolutely. Russia remains the biggest geopolitical threat to the Euro-Atlantic region, certainly, will be the biggest military threat to the NATO Alliance for the foreseeable future, certainly, over the next decade.

NATO has done a lot to enhance its deterrence and defense posture since Russia went into Ukraine in 2014. But as you note, Senator, there is more work to be done. Russia's aggression continues.

We have to hold Russia accountable for their actions across the full spectrum of instruments whether we are talking about conventional capabilities, flying into NATO airspace, acts of intimidation, or cyber attacks.

NATO has done a lot to take on the cyber challenge, particularly in 2016, acknowledging that this is a new domain for the Alliance. But we do have more work to do in that regard.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. We look forward to you getting there soon because I think these issues are really percolating as we speak.

Finally, Ambassador Bauer, I do not want you to think you are not the object of my affection in terms of any questions.

Let me ask you, President Macron has sought to advance a concept of strategic autonomy, to use his words, which some have interpreted as France distancing itself from the United States and creating tensions within NATO.

What are your views on this question of strategic autonomy and what would you be saying, upon confirmation, to President Macron about it?

Ambassador BAUER. Thank you for the question.

As Ms. Smith was noting, NATO is the premier transatlantic forum for national security. That is, for us, our top priority is our NATO Alliance.

And France is, indeed, a very good partner on that, and I greatly appreciate their interest in strengthening security in Europe, and I would ask them, perhaps, as their first step to help us in encouraging those who are not meeting their commitments to the 2 percent in NATO and to other capabilities within NATO to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. I get the sense of being stronger. I just hope that it is stronger in complete alignment with NATO. We are all for being stronger. But the last thing we need is a separate parallel effort with NATO when NATO can use all the strengthening it can get. I think that will be one of your important jobs.

And the last thing I would just say, commend to you, that the French care a great deal about Lebanon and we have heard that there has been some engagement. I hope you will deepen that and play with Ambassador Leaf and others a role to bring this whole combination of governments together.

I think the stability in Lebanon is incredibly important. I have had many discussions with the French ambassador here as well as the French foreign minister and some of their negotiators on the Iran portfolio.

We have talked to them about what the administration now describes as stronger and longer, that there has to be more than just a return to the JCPOA.

They seem to suggest that, yes, we recognize that, and I hope that you will be able to deepen that approach if you are confirmed to your position.

Ambassador BAUER. Thank you. That would certainly be a priority for me.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

All right. I have no other members virtually or otherwise. We thank you all for your testimony.

The record for the hearing will remain open until the close of business on Thursday, September 16, 2021. Please ensure that questions for the record are submitted no later than Thursday.

We would say to our nominees that there will inevitably be questions for the record for you. We would ask you to answer them fully, and I say that because we very often get answers that are very superficial, which then causes members to hold up a nominee's business meeting and we have to go back to the department to say this answer is not sufficiently answered.

To the extent that you get a question, please answer them expeditiously, answer them fully, so we can have your nominations be brought up at a business meeting.

With the thanks of the committee, to all of you for your willingness to serve, this hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 12:30 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

LETTER SUBMITTED BY ADMIRAL JAMES STAVRIDIS, USN (RET.), FORMER SUPREME ALLIED COMMANDER AT NATO, SUPPORTING THE NOMINATION OF JULIANNE SMITH TO BE U.S. PERMANENT REPRESENTATIVE TO THE COUNCIL OF THE NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

September 15, 2021

Dear Chairman Menendez and Ranking Member Risch,

I write today to strongly and personally recommend Julie Smith to be the US Ambassador to NATO. I have known and worked closely with Julie for well over a decade, going back to my service as a 3-star Admiral in the Pentagon, most notably during my tour as Supreme Allied Commander of NATO, and through the present day in her various defense policy roles in Washington. A few of the key points to be made concerning her career and service include:

- 25 years experience working on transatlantic security issues in government (Pentagon and White House); out of government (CNAS, CSIS, GMF); and overseas (have worked in both France and Germany and speak both languages). She is a committed Atlanticist.
- vast network of contacts in Europe, including at the minister and head of state level, which will help her do her job at NATO.
- deep knowledge of NATO issues, having worked and written about them for the past two decades.
- conceptualized, wrote, and ran CNAS's first two war games with Jerry Hendrix: "Assured Resolve" (which focused on hybrid threats to the Baltic States) and "Forgotten Waters" (which addressed the GIUK Gap and NATO's lack of situational awareness in that region).
- strong record of innovatively working across the aisle. Launched a program after Trump won to bring Europeans to 12 cities around the US to talk to Americans outside of Washington about U.S. foreign policy.
- served as both acting national security advisor and deputy national security advisor to Joe Biden as VP. Will have his ear in Brussels.
- spent the last three years researching and writing on Europe's evolving attitudes and vulnerabilities as they relate to China (with pieces in both the NYT and Foreign Affairs on this subject).

But beyond her deeply impressive biography, what I'd like to convey in this brief letter are her character, determination, and leadership. Again and again, I watched her deal with complicated international issues at the very heart of the NATO Alliance with creativity, energy, and collegiality. Often as Senior Military Assistant to SECDEF as a 3-star and later as SACEUR, I would look to Julie for advice on issues back in Washington and over in Brussels as well. She is uniformly kind, humble, and thoughtful, whether she is dealing with the most junior member of her staff or the Supreme Allied Commander at NATO. In Navy terms, she is a perfect "shipmate."

As SACEUR, I was in constant contact with the US Ambassador to NATO, and have watched that office serve as the fulcrum of US policy within the Alliance. It requires the nicest diplomatic touch alongside a rock-solid knowledge of both Europe and NATO itself: Ambassador Julie Smith would bring both qualities to the halls of this venerable and still vital Alliance. Please approve her nomination! All the best and very respectfully,

Admiral James Stavridis, USN (R)
Vice Chairman, Global Affairs, The Carlyle Group
Chair of the Board of Trustees, the Rockefeller Foundation
16th Supreme Allied Commander at NATO

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO HON. JULIETA VALLS NOYES BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question. How many individuals are in the current P-2 referral queue?

Answer. To date, I understand over 20,000 cases consisting of around 55,000 individuals have been referred to the Afghan P-2 refugee resettlement program.

Question. How will PRM work with individual Afghans who have submitted applications through the P-2 referral process?

Answer. On August 2, 2021, the Department of State announced a new Priority 2 (P-2) designation granting U.S. Refugee Admissions Program (USRAP) access for certain Afghan nationals and their eligible family members. (See <https://www.state.gov/u-s-refugee-admissions-program-priority-2-designation-for-afghan-nationals/>.) The Department of State has designated certain categories of Afghan nationals as having access to the USRAP by virtue of their circumstances and apparent need for resettlement. This priority group includes Afghans who are or were employed in Afghanistan by a U.S.-based media organization or nongovernmental organization (NGO). It expands the opportunity to permanently resettle in the United States to many Afghans and their immediate family members who may be at risk due to their U.S. affiliation but are not eligible for a Special Immigrant Visa because they did not have qualifying employment or because they have not met the time-in-service requirement to become eligible for an SIV.

In addition to the P-2 designation noted above, Afghans may also gain access to the USRAP through Priority 1 referrals by a specific entity (U.S. embassy, United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, or a designated NGO), or Priority 3, reunification of family members of refugees already resettled in the United States.

The Department of State has issued instructions regarding how U.S.-based media and NGOs can submit referrals for P-2 designation for Afghan nationals. (See <https://www.wrapsnet.org/siv-iraqi-syrian-afghan-p2/>.) Organizations can use these instructions to refer to the USRAP any Afghan national staff (plus their spouse and children) who might be in danger now or in the foreseeable future.

The U.S. Refugee Admissions Program Priority 2 designation expands the opportunity to permanently resettle in the United States to many thousands of Afghans and their immediate family members who may be at risk due to their U.S. affiliation. As President Biden has made clear, assisting these Afghan allies is a top priority for the administration.

I understand that PRM is still receiving P2 referrals from U.S. employers, service members, and qualifying media and non-governmental organizations. The U.S. Government cannot currently process refugee referrals inside Afghanistan, so Afghan nationals who are referred for resettlement will be processed upon leaving the country. I am not aware of a timeline for that process nor a specific number of Afghan P-2 referrals that PRM expects to process in the next year. The administration recognizes the role this new designation and the refugee resettlement program in general will play in the lives of those that risked their safety to assist the United States. As President Biden has made clear, helping these Afghans is an ongoing commitment of the United States.

Question. How long should it take PRM to process P-2 applications during the pre-screening phase?

Answer. It is my understanding that the amount of time it will take for the relevant PRM-funded Resettlement Support Center to pre-screen cases will vary according to region. In general, it takes approximately 12 to 18 months to process a refugee resettlement case from start to finish including pre-screening, the U.S. Citizen and Immigration Services interview, and required security vetting.

Question. Do you support expanding the P-2 eligibility to include sub-grantees and sub-contractors of U.S.-funded projects, given that the risks these staff face are no less grave than those of primary recipients? If not, why not?

Answer. I understand the Department's policy is that Afghans who worked for sub-grantees or sub-contractors of U.S.-funded projects may be referred to the U.S. Refugee Admissions Program through an Embassy P-1 referral if the individual is well-known to a U.S. Government official and has imminent or compelling protection concerns. Alternatively, such individuals who register with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) in a third country may be referred for resettlement in the United States by UNHCR. I understand that sub-grantees and sub-contractors of U.S.-funded projects do not formally qualify for the P-2 program.

Question. Once eligible organizations have submitted referrals, how will employers, organizations, and referred individuals receive information about the status of their applications?

Answer. After the U.S. Refugee Admissions Program has received a referral from a U.S. Government agency, a U.S.-based non-governmental organization, or a U.S.-based media organization, and the individual has relocated to a country where refugee processing can occur, I understand the referred individual will need to contact PRM to begin processing their case. Individuals should follow the guidelines on wrapsnet.org to contact PRM. At that point, PRM will assign the case to a PRM-funded overseas Resettlement Support Center for processing.

Question. What are the administration's plans to process Afghans in third countries?

Answer. Once an individual referred to the U.S. Refugee Admissions Program (USRAP) arrives in a country where processing is feasible and reaches out to PRM, following the guidelines found on wrapsnet.org, I understand that PRM will create and assign a refugee case to the appropriate PRM-funded Resettlement Support Center (RSC) to begin processing the case where the refugee is located. I understand that RSCs will collect data and pre-screen Afghan USRAP applicants, and all individuals will need to complete a refugee interview with a U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) officer.

Question. What role and presence, if any, will U.S. agencies have in third countries? What role, if any, will UN agencies and international NGOs play there?

Answer. It is my understanding that there are regional PRM-funded Resettlement Support Centers that process U.S. Refugee Admissions Program (USRAP) cases for individuals once they reach a third country. I also understand that individuals with urgent protection needs may register and seek assistance from the Government of the country they are in or from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

Question. How will PRM specifically ensure that they have access to basic services while awaiting U.S. Government P-2 processing?

Answer. It is my understanding that individuals with urgent needs should follow procedures to register for international protection and assistance with the government of the country where they are located. They may also register and seek assistance from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. If confirmed, I would work with international humanitarian partners and other governments to address their needs for basic services.

Question. What will be the contingency plan should at-risk Afghans' applications for P-1, P-2, and SIV be rejected while they are in a third country?

Answer. Individuals with urgent protection needs should follow procedures to register for international protection and assistance with the government of the country where they are located. They may also register and seek assistance from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. If confirmed, I would work with international humanitarian partners and other governments to address their protection concerns and needs for support. The United States appreciates that other countries have agreed to host and resettle at-risk Afghans, and if confirmed, I would pursue durable solutions for these individuals.

Question. What steps, if any, is PRM taking to provide similar protections or pathways for Afghans employed by international organizations?

Answer. I understand that Afghans employed by international organizations may be referred to the U.S. Refugee Admissions Program through an Embassy P-1 referral, if well-known to a U.S. Government official, or through a United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees referral to the United States or another resettlement country.

Question. What will be the process for P-2 eligible Afghans who were paroled into the U.S.?

Answer. It is my understanding that Afghan individuals at risk who are paroled into the United States as a result of the U.S. airlift are transferred temporarily to a U.S. military installation. Following medical and U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Service processing on the military base, these Afghan parolees can access the Afghan Placement & Assistance (APA) Program once they arrive at their final destination in the United States. The purpose of the APA Program is to provide paroled Afghans with initial relocation services for 30 to 90 days after arrival as they begin to rebuild their lives in the United States. These services are provided through local refugee resettlement agencies and community partners.

Question. Will the administration modify the P-2 program to allow for processing while in the U.S.?

Answer. It is my understanding that the U.S. Government is currently exploring options under the P-2 program for processing Afghans who have been paroled into the United States.

Question. How is PRM working with other federal agencies and the White House to conduct an assessment of security vetting processes, particularly in light of EO 14013?

Answer. It is my understanding that the Department of Homeland Security is the lead agency for vetting of all travelers applying for admission to the United States, including refugees. I understand PRM is working closely with the DHS' Citizenship and Immigration Service and other U.S. Refugee Admissions Program (USRAP) vetting partners to conduct needed reviews and implement technical improvements to USRAP security vetting. I also understand that includes the goal of incorporating refugee vetting into the National Vetting Center to enhance the efficiency and reduce redundancies in vetting, without compromising the security of the American people.

Question. What steps do you think PRM should be taking with DHS to improve refugee vetting and security checks?

Answer. It is my understanding that the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) is the lead agency for vetting of all travelers applying for admission to the United States, including refugees. As noted previously, I understand PRM is working closely with the DHS' U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Service and other USRAP vetting partners to conduct the needed reviews and implement technical improvements to U.S. Refugee Admissions Program security vetting. I also understand that includes the goal of incorporating refugee vetting into the National Vetting Center to speed the process and reduce redundancies, without compromising the security of the American people.

Question. Would you commit to reviewing and implementing the reports required by EO 14013 on vetting and SAO checks?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to reviewing and implementing fully and completely all of the reports and measures in E.O. 14013 that the President directs, including those focused on the Security Advisory Opinion (SAO) process and security vetting for refugee applicants to the U.S. Refugee Admissions Program. I believe the security of the American people remains paramount in all Department of State programs and initiatives and will work in keeping with that belief if confirmed.

Question. How is the Department engaging with allies around the world to meet the UN appeals for urgent humanitarian funding to support the needs of Afghans inside Afghanistan, including millions of IDPs?

Answer. I understand that the State Department continues to support the needs of vulnerable Afghans through urgent humanitarian funding, highlighted by the recent announcement of $64 million in new humanitarian assistance to people affected by the ongoing crisis, bringing the total on behalf of the United States to $330 million this fiscal year. This new support to United Nations agencies, including the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and World Health Organization, and to international non-governmental organizations, is part of the nearly $1.2 billion in humanitarian funding to Afghanistan pledged by nations around the world. My understanding is that the Department continues to engage partners at the highest levels to encourage full funding of urgent appeals and a continued commitment to Afghans in need. If confirmed, I would call for international responsibility sharing to meet humanitarian needs there and around the world.

Question. Should the United States and the international community demand certain commitments from the Taliban before providing development aid? Should we insist that we will only provide support if they uphold the humanitarian principles of neutrality, impartiality, and independence?

Answer. My understanding is that the State Department and USAID are reviewing all types of U.S. foreign assistance to Afghanistan. In my view, that review should include discussion of our posture and expectations vis-à-vis the Taliban. I would refer you to my colleagues at USAID and in the South Central Asia bureau at the State Department on the USG's plans to provide development aid to Afghanistan. Insofar as humanitarian aid, I understand that U.S. humanitarian assistance is provided on the basis of need through international and non-governmental organization partners, not directly to governments. In Afghanistan, more than 18 million people are in need of humanitarian assistance in the face of food insecurity, protection risks, health crises, climate change, and conflict instability. The United States Government's humanitarian partners have reiterated their commitment to stay and to deliver lifesaving assistance directly to the people of Afghanistan with impartiality, neutrality, and independence; this commitment is based on the needs of the Afghan people, regardless of Taliban undertakings.

Question. What efforts will PRM be making and supporting to bring refugee labor mobility to the United States and expand efforts internationally to scale this additional solution for refugees and other displaced people?

Answer. I understand that the administration's Collaborative Migration Management Strategy (CMMS) includes a specific line of effort to enhance regional labor migration pathways, under which PRM, the U.S. interagency, international organization partners, and partner governments in North and Central America will expand existing and create new temporary work visa programs in the region. This is an important initiative, and if confirmed, I would seek to expand interim solutions, including further resettlement and labor mobility opportunities for refugees and other forcibly displaced people in other parts of the world.

Question. Migration is one of the greatest global challenges we face. Creating safe, legal pathways for migration should be a key component of our response. What is PRM doing to encourage development of refugee labor mobility pathways internationally and to make skilled labor visas accessible to refugee populations into the United States?

Answer. I agree on the critical importance of creating legal migration pathways, particularly in this hemisphere. If confirmed, I will implement the administration's Collaborative Migration Management Strategy (CMMS), which includes a specific line of effort to enhance regional labor mobility pathways. I understand PRM is working with the U.S. interagency, international organization partners, and partner governments in North and Central America to expand existing and create new temporary work visa programs in the region to provide pathways for safe, lawful employment to people likely to migrate seeking economic opportunity.

I respectfully refer you to the Refugee Career Pathways program in the Department of Health and Human Services' Office of Refugee Resettlement for information about employment for refugees who have been resettled to the United States.

Question. What is PRM doing to encourage and ensure that those who come with skills, training, education and English language capability are matched to private sector employment opportunities commensurate with their abilities, so that they can contribute and provide for themselves and their families from the outset of their entry into the United States?

Answer. I understand the Reception & Placement Program, funded by PRM, lays the foundation for refugees to transition successfully to life in the United States. I also understand that a critical component of that success is the ability of refugees to achieve early self-sufficiency through employment. Resettlement agencies carefully consider the availability of appropriate employment opportunities as one of the key factors when determining where to resettle individuals, drawing on information from a network of over 200 local resettlement agency affiliate offices in approximately 150 communities around the country. For more information on refugee employment programming and outcomes, I would refer you to the Office of Refugee Resettlement in the Department of Health and Human Services.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. JULIETA VALLS NOYES BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. What would be your goals and priorities as Assistant Secretary of State for the bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration (PRM)?

Answer. If confirmed, I would have three overarching goals as PRM Assistant Secretary.

The first goal would be to represent American values and American leadership in the world. To this end, I would lead PRM in promoting protection, providing lifesaving humanitarian aid, and seeking durable solutions through humanitarian diplomacy for over 80 million people in populations of concern. I would promote policies for safe, orderly and humane migration as well as population policies that enhance maternal and child health. To these ends, I would be a responsible steward of the taxpayer dollars that make PRM's work possible, emphasizing risk mitigation approaches to ensure aid reaches its intended recipients. I would emphasize greater international burden sharing to meet global humanitarian needs as well as needed reforms in international organizations to make them more efficient, effective, and accountable.

My second goal would be to rebuild the U.S. Refugee Admissions Program, as directed by the President. I would collaborate closely with partners at the Departments of Homeland Security and Health and Human Services and in close consultation with the Congress on this objective, and with PRM's excellent international organization and non-government organization partners, seeking innovations such as private-public partnerships to make the program more effective.

Last but not least, I would seek to rebuild the PRM bureau. PRM's response to recent events in Afghanistan impressed me deeply—people working 14 to 16-hour days, seven days a week, deploying to other locations around the world at short notice, to help people at risk. I would seek to fill the many staff vacancies in the bureau as quickly as possible, both to increase PRM's long-term capabilities and to provide relief for the existing team, and work with the administration to ensure the bureau has the adequate resources needed to accomplish its work. I would hold staff members accountable for their performance and conduct; reward strong performance; increase professional development opportunities for PRM's staff; and emphasize the need for diversity, equity, and inclusion as hallmarks of a strong team.

Question. Please comment on the U.S. Government's international emergency response capacity and contingency planning. How might PRM improve its capacity to protect lives and provide life-sustaining assistance?

Answer. The United States maintains a robust capacity to respond to humanitarian crises which exceed the ability and resources of an affected country to respond. The United States also engages in contingency planning within our own government and with international, local, and multilateral partners to coordinate humanitarian responses, which is particularly important as the scale and scope of disasters increases. I understand PRM is augmenting its own capacity as well as the capacity of its partners to respond to increasing humanitarian requirements and more complex operating environments, and if confirmed, I would continue to support these efforts.

Question. How will you work with USAID's Bureau for Humanitarian Assistance to ensure greater alignment, eliminate duplication and waste, expand humanitarian access, mitigate the risk of diversion by armed actors and terrorist groups, and ensure U.S. humanitarian assistance is effectively targeted toward those in greatest need? How will you work with our U.N. partners to do the same?

Answer. I understand that PRM and USAID/BHA are in regular communication from the working level up to leadership on the full range of programmatic and policy issues and have robust coordination mechanisms. One of my top priorities is to ensure that U.S. taxpayer dollars are used in the most efficient and effective manner possible to reach intended beneficiaries. One element of that is ensuring appropriate coordination with USAID/BHA, leveraging each entity's respective strengths to achieve U.S. humanitarian objectives. Regular engagement with United Nations (UN) partners at the field and headquarters levels also ensures appropriate use of U.S. funding and focuses assistance on those most in need. If confirmed, I will continue this close collaboration between PRM and USAID/BHA and close partnership with U.N. entities.

Question. What is your assessment of the budget allocated to PRM in recent years?

Answer. The number of people in need of humanitarian assistance continues to grow year after year, and needs far outpace global resources to respond. Congress has been responsive to this growth in needs, as well as new and evolving requirements such as those related to the COVID-19 pandemic and, more recently, Afghanistan. The level of funding appropriated for humanitarian assistance reflects the strong bipartisan commitment to assisting the world's most vulnerable persons and to leading with our values and has accordingly supported PRM in providing a robust and agile response. In FY 2022, I expect PRM will continue to require sustained support to respond to existing crises and any new needs as they emerge. If confirmed, I would also make it a priority to seek increased contributions from other nations and organizations and to foster public-private partnerships to respond to these growing crises, in the interest of international responsibility sharing.

Question. To what extent does the current level of staffing of the PRM bureau address its three fundamental areas of responsibility: population, refugees, and migration?

Answer. PRM has an existing cadre of well qualified, dedicated staff. I understand that Department leadership recently approved 68 new permanent positions in PRM to advance humanitarian diplomacy in critical regions, better implement humanitarian goals and objectives, provide oversight for program integrity, and more efficiently program, manage, and monitor billions of dollars of foreign assistance to international and non-governmental organizations. Once these new positions and other vacancies in the bureau are filled, PRM will be well positioned to address all three fundamental areas of responsibility. If confirmed, I will seek to fill these positions as quickly as possible.

Question. What is your assessment of PRM's level of accountability and effective planning, as well as its ability to conduct program oversight?

Answer. I understand that PRM has a robust planning and programming process to align its allocations of funds with strategic priorities. PRM also regularly monitors its financial awards to non-governmental and international organizations at the field, regional, and headquarters levels to safeguard U.S. taxpayer dollars, as evidenced by excellent, publicly available audit reports. As humanitarian needs have grown around the world, I understand that PRM has sought to increase its staffing and oversight capabilities. If confirmed, I am committed to ensuring PRM's programs are effective and accountable both to the beneficiaries and the American public.

Question. What are the key protection and assistance needs of today's refugees, IDPs, and migrants? If confirmed, how would you recommend that PRM marshal its resources to address these challenges? What countries or regions should PRM prioritize?

Answer. Protection and humanitarian assistance needs are immense as numbers of people displaced by conflict and crises globally have reached record levels in recent years. Among the most pressing needs are access—both access for humanitarian aid providers to reach people in need, and access to protection for people fleeing persecution and violence, prevention of and response to gender-based violence, and protection of children and others in particularly vulnerable situations. These urgent needs cut across all countries and regions. If confirmed, I would ramp up bilateral and multilateral U.S. humanitarian diplomacy to advocate for the protection of populations of concern, and leverage U.S. influence to prioritize protection efforts by international organizations and NGO partners.

Question. How has COVID-19 impacted the work of PRM's implementing partners? What do you anticipate will be the priorities for addressing the immediate needs and secondary impacts of the virus on vulnerable and displaced populations worldwide?

Answer. The COVID-19 pandemic has affected PRM's implementing partners' programming and ability to provide assistance in a timely manner due to increased operational costs, ongoing travel and access constraints, and other movement restrictions. It has also directly affected the health and welfare of marginalized populations around the world and exacerbated pre-existing gaps in health, protection, assistance, education, and livelihoods. I understand PRM's partners emphasize meeting international standards for assistance and protection for the most vulnerable while at the same time advocating for the inclusion of marginalized, displaced, and hard-to-reach populations such as refugees in national plans for vaccine delivery, relief, and recovery.

Question. Please discuss U.S. global humanitarian budget priorities for this fiscal year and next, with particular reference to humanitarian crises, the impact of COVID-19, and the potential consequences for humanitarian portfolios. What changes, if any, would you prioritize in PRM's funding approach to humanitarian response and/or its work with implementing partners, including U.N. agencies and NGOs?

Answer. Total humanitarian needs far outpace global resources to respond, and the COVID-19 pandemic has compounded existing vulnerabilities. I understand PRM's FY 2021 budget priorities will continue to FY 2022 and include response to the global pandemic; urgent humanitarian assistance to support those affected by crises in Afghanistan, Ethiopia, and Syria, among others; and rebuilding the U.S. Refugee Admissions Program.

PRM's approach reflects strong bipartisan commitment, demonstrated through successive administrations, to assisting the world's most vulnerable people and to leading with our values. If confirmed, I am committed to maintaining U.S. humanitarian leadership and working with Congress to respond to existing as well as emerging humanitarian needs.

Question. How does the U.S. Government coordinate its responses to migration crises, such as those in Venezuela or Central America?

Answer. Interagency coordination between the State Department, USAID, and other agencies such as the Department of Homeland Security is critical in responding to migration crises. My understanding is that the National Security Council leads broad coordination through interagency meetings. Outside of that formal process, working level counterparts exchange information through standing meetings, ad hoc huddles, and technical advice on program and policy implementation and evaluation. At diplomatic posts overseas, PRM's Refugee Coordinators facilitate in-country coordination. If confirmed, I will continue this close collaboration between PRM and counterparts in the Department and the interagency.

Question. When and where does PRM take the lead and what, if any, are the differences in its approach as compared to that of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID)?

Answer. My understanding is that PRM and USAID play separate but complementary roles in responding to humanitarian crises. PRM takes the lead in providing urgent humanitarian aid and protection to refugees, asylum seekers, stateless persons, and vulnerable migrants, working through international organizations and non-governmental organizations. USAID takes the lead in response to natural and man-made disasters, disaster preparedness, and support for internally displaced populations; USAID also provides food aid to refugees. USAID also funds development programs. In situations where PRM and USAID responsibilities converge, I understand they have robust coordination mechanisms in the field and in Washington to ensure the overall efficiency and effectiveness of U.S. assistance. If confirmed, I will continue this close collaboration between PRM and USAID.

Question. What is your assessment of the scope of risks to women and girls, particularly during the COVID-19 pandemic? What are ways that PRM programs specifically address these protection needs?

Answer. In times of crisis, women and girls are at enormous risk of gender-based violence (GBV)—from armed groups, strangers, neighbors, and family members. These risks in humanitarian settings were exacerbated by COVID-19 and corresponding mitigation measures, resulting in a “shadow” pandemic of GBV and worldwide spikes in GBV risks and reports. In response, the U.S. humanitarian response to COVID-19 prioritized protection activities, including programs to help prevent GBV and provide psychosocial services to GBV victims, along with healthcare, water, sanitation, and hygiene assistance in the COVID-19 humanitarian response.

UNRWA

Question. What accountability mechanisms are in place to ensure that the administration's resumption of funding for UNRWA does not benefit Hamas and its affiliates?

Answer. If confirmed, I am firmly committed to ensuring that U.S. Government funding does not end up in the hand of terrorists, including Hamas. The administration provides assistance to international organizations and non-governmental organizations in a manner consistent with U.S. law and does not provide assistance to Hamas. PRM takes seriously its oversight of assistance provided to U.N. operations, including UNRWA, to ensure U.S. taxpayer-funded assistance is reaching the intended recipients, and if confirmed I would maintain this focus. I understand UNRWA employs safeguards to prevent support from reaching terrorist organizations, including vetting of staff, contractors, and beneficiaries; robust monitoring of its programs; thorough investigations of any allegations of abuses; and accountability for those who violate its policies.

Question. What accountability mechanisms are in place to ensure that the administration's resumption of funding for UNRWA does not include textbooks that include anti-Semitic material?

Answer. I condemn incitement of violence and anti-Semitism in any form. U.N. agencies, including UNRWA, do not develop their own curricula, but use the curricula of host governments. When concepts contrary to U.N. principles are identified in host governments' educational materials, UNRWA provides instructions and supplementary materials for its staff to address the issue. If confirmed, I will emphasize the importance of adhering to humanitarian principles, including neutrality, in discussions with UNRWA.

Question. To what extent has the administration considered phasing out its support for UNRWA and transitioning it to other international relief agencies, such as the U.N. High Commission for Refugees (UNHCR)?

Answer. My understanding is that UNHCR does not have a mandate to provide support for Palestinian refugees in the areas where UNRWA works. Only UNRWA has the mandate, set by the U.N. General Assembly, to provide essential services directly to Palestinian refugees in the five regions it covers. In order to fulfill its mandate, UNRWA employs teachers and health care workers who provide services directly to beneficiaries. The UNHCR mandate also includes a focus on seeking durable solutions such as resettlement, repatriation, and local integration for refugees, while UNRWA does not have that mandate. Decisions on resettlement, repatriation, and local integration of Palestinian refugees must be negotiated directly between Israel and the Palestinians as final status issues.

IRAQ P-2

Question. The State Department notified Congress in April 2021 that it had indefinitely suspended the P-2 program for U.S.-affiliated Iraqis. This notification followed a January 2021 State Department statement that the Department of Justice was “prosecuting individuals for stealing U.S. Government records to take advantage of this program,” which triggered a 90-day suspension. With the special immigrant visa program for Iraqis who were employed by or on behalf of the U.S. Government no longer accepting new applications, this P-2 program has been seen as a key avenue for Iraqis who assisted the United States to gain U.S. admission.

- What is the status of the review of the P-2 program for U.S.-affiliated Iraqis? What changes are under consideration for better securing this and perhaps other P-2 programs? When do you expect a revised P-2 program for U.S.-affiliated Iraqis to be reinstated?

Answer. I understand PRM has been working closely with the Bureau of Diplomatic Security at the State Department and with the Department of Homeland Security to support the investigation into the P-2 program for U.S. affiliated Iraqis and to ensure no individuals identified by the investigation travel to the United States. I also understand PRM has contracted a specialist team to analyze current Iraqi P-2 program operating procedures, develop recommendations to mitigate fraud vulnerabilities once the program reopens, and re-verify the qualifications of cases in the existing Iraqi P-2 pipeline. Once the overall framework for re-vetting cases has been established, it is my understanding that individual screenings and admission of those who pass this enhanced screening will begin.

Question. What was the involvement of former U.S. Embassy Moscow local employee Olesya Leonidovna Krasilova in the Iraqi P-2 fraud scheme?

Answer. I understand that the Department cannot comment on an ongoing criminal investigation. I respectfully refer you to the U.S. Attorney’s Office for the District of Columbia for additional information.

Question. Does the U.S. Government suspect her involvement in any other criminal activity, espionage, or improper/inappropriate conduct with coworkers or contacts during her time as an employee of the United States Government?

Answer. As this is an ongoing criminal investigation, I understand that the Department cannot comment on the findings.

Question. In a press briefing on March 6, 2020 (<https://www.mid.ru/en/foreign-policy/news/-/asset-publisher/ckNonkJE02Bw/content/id/4078184>), Russian Foreign Ministry spokesperson Maria Zakharova claimed Krasilova was employed by a “Russian Government-funded agency,” when she was arrested by Spanish authorities pursuant to a U.S. extradition request. Which Russian agency did she work for? How soon after her employment at U.S. Embassy Moscow was terminated did Krasilova begin working for a Russian Government-funded agency?

Answer. I understand that the Department cannot comment on the findings as there is an ongoing criminal investigation. The U.S. Attorney’s Office for the District of Columbia may be able to provide additional information.

P-2 PROGRAMS

Question. Bills have been introduced in the current Congress that would establish new P-2 groups for certain residents of Hong Kong and certain residents of the Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region. If you are familiar with these proposals, can you offer any feedback on them? Do you have any general suggestions for congressional offices in drafting bills to establish new P-2 groups?

Answer. I am aware of the bills that would establish new P-2 groups for certain residents both of Hong Kong and the Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region. If confirmed, I can assure you that I am committed to working within the Department, with Congress, international partners, and advocacy groups to ensure that all vulnerable individuals, including residents of Hong Kong and Uyghurs, have equal access to protection, including refugee resettlement in the United States and other countries.

Lautenberg Amendment

Question. What is the status of the Lautenberg program? Are there still Lautenberg applicants in Austria? How many Lautenberg applicants are in pipeline?

Answer. I understand refugees suffering religious persecution continue to be resettled under the Lautenberg program, and that the Department expects approximately 1,000 refugees from the Eurasia region to be resettled in the U.S. in FY 2021.

The Lautenberg Iranian program was suspended by the Government of Austria in early 2017, leaving over 800 Iranian applicants in Vienna. It is my understanding that most of those 800 Lautenberg Iranian applicants have since been resettled to the United States, however, approximately 78 Iranian applicants who were denied resettlement in the United States remained in Austria and are believed to have received asylum. I understand PRM and Embassy Vienna are negotiating with the Government of Austria on a potential restart of the Iranian Lautenberg program.

I understand that following a longstanding policy that protects refugee data, locations, and security check statuses, PRM does not disclose USRAP pipeline numbers.

UNFPA

Question. Does UNFPA engage with entities in the People's Republic of China which fund forced sterilization or abortion?

Answer. The United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) does not condone or support China's coercive population policies. My understanding is that UNFPA's activities in China to advance voluntary family planning that respects human rights, have been credited with positively influencing the partial liberalization of China's one-child policy. UNFPA lists the Republic of China's National Health Commission (NHC) as one of many partners in the current country program document, consistent with the United Nations Sustainable Development Cooperation Framework. UNFPA does not provide funding to the NHC, however, and the NHC does not implement any UNFPA activities.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to upholding all provisions of law prohibiting the use of U.S. foreign assistance resources to perform or promote abortion as a method of family planning, to support programs of coercive abortion or forced sterilization, or to lobby for or against the legalization of abortion, including the Kemp-Kasten amendment as it relates to UNFPA?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to upholding all provisions of law related to U.S. foreign assistance including those related to prohibiting the performance or promotion of abortion as a method of family planning, coercive abortion, or forced sterilization.

Afghanistan

Question. Despite the large need of resettlement, will you pledge that if confirmed, the U.S. will continue to use vigorous vetting procedures for all refugee admissions, including those from Afghanistan? My staff asked the Department about vetting protocols, including potential timelines, two weeks ago. If confirmed, would you engage right away on ensuring this information is shared?

Answer. The Department of Homeland Security has the lead on the screening and vetting requirements for all applicants for admission to the United States. If confirmed, I commit to working with you and all Members of Congress to achieve timely responses to your inquiries and requests on matters involving PRM, including what role the State Department has in vetting processes. I also commit to working closely with DHS and other vetting agencies to use vigorous vetting procedures for all refugee admissions to uphold the safety and security of the American people.

Question. How will you work with neighboring countries to assist with the large outflows of refugees from Afghanistan?

Answer. The United States is working with its partners to review and strengthen humanitarian preparedness and priority interventions in the region in the event of new refugee outflows from Afghanistan. If confirmed, I will encourage continued coordination between host governments and humanitarian organizations to monitor and respond to the protection and assistance needs of displaced Afghans in the region. I will also urge states to uphold their respective obligations to not return Afghan refugees or asylum seekers to persecution or torture, and to respect the principle of non-refoulement.

Question. In August 2021, DHS announced a new P-2 designation for certain Afghan nationals. The announcement indicated that PRM had created an “Afghan Referrals Workgroup comprised of federal agencies to refer individuals directly” for U.S. refugee resettlement consideration. Please explain the eligibility requirements for this P-2 program, and how the referral system works. How many Afghan nationals does PRM expect to admit as refugees under this program, and when are these admissions expected to occur?

Answer. On August 2, 2021, the Department of State announced a new Priority 2 (P-2) designation granting U.S. Refugee Admissions Program (USRAP) access for certain Afghan nationals and their eligible family members. (See <https://www.state.gov/u-s-refugee-admissions-program-priority-2-designation-for-afghan-nationals/>.) The Department of State has designated certain categories of Afghan nationals as having access to the USRAP by virtue of their circumstances and apparent need for resettlement. This priority group includes Afghans who are or were employed in Afghanistan by a U.S.-based media organization or nongovernmental organization (NGO). It expands the opportunity to permanently resettle in the United States to many Afghans and their immediate family members who may be at risk due to their U.S. affiliation but are not eligible for a Special Immigrant Visa because they did not have qualifying employment or because they have not met the time-in-service requirement to become eligible for an SIV.

In addition to the P-2 designation noted above, Afghans may also gain access to the USRAP through Priority 1 referrals by a specific entity (U.S. embassy, United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, or a designated NGO), or Priority 3, reunification of family members of refugees already resettled in the United States.

The Department of State has issued instructions regarding how U.S.-based media and NGOs can submit referrals for P-2 designation for Afghan nationals. (See <https://www.wrapsnet.org/siv-iraqi-syrian-afghan-p2/>.) Organizations can use these instructions to refer to the USRAP any Afghan national staff (plus their spouse and children) who might be in danger now or in the foreseeable future.

The U.S. Refugee Admissions Program Priority 2 designation expands the opportunity to permanently resettle in the United States to many thousands of Afghans and their immediate family members who may be at risk due to their U.S. affiliation. As President Biden has made clear, assisting these Afghan allies is a top priority for the administration.

I understand that PRM is still receiving P2 referrals from U.S. employers, service members, and qualifying media and non-governmental organizations. The U.S. Government cannot currently process refugee referrals inside Afghanistan, so Afghan nationals who are referred for resettlement will be processed upon leaving the country. I am not aware of a timeline for that process nor a specific number of Afghan P-2 referrals that PRM expects to process in the next year. The administration recognizes the vital role this new designation and the program in general will play in the lives of those that risked their safety to assist the United States. As President Biden has made clear, helping these Afghans is an ongoing commitment of the United States.

Question. How many U.S. citizens are currently in Afghanistan? Please address the total number of U.S. citizens in Afghanistan, independent of how many may have indicated, at some point, an interest in staying in Afghanistan.

Answer. U.S. citizens are not required to register with the Department of State or an embassy when they arrive in or depart from a country. Based on the requests received, the Department believes that most American citizens who wished to leave have departed. The number of remaining U.S. citizens in Afghanistan who have expressed a desire to leave remains fluid, and the Department remains committed to assisting them.

Question. How many U.S. legal permanent residents are currently in Afghanistan? Please address the total number of U.S. legal permanent residents in Afghanistan, independent of how many may have indicated, at some point, an interest in staying in Afghanistan.

Answer. Like U.S. citizens, Legal Permanent Residents (LPRs) are not required to register with the Department of State or an embassy when they arrive in or depart from a country. The U.S. Government was able to evacuate or facilitate the relocation or evacuation of more than 124,000 individuals, including U.S. citizens, legal permanent residents, and foreign and Afghan allies, from August 14 to August 31.

Question. How many Special Immigrant Visa applicants are currently in Afghanistan?

Answer. As Secretary Blinken explained during his September 13 testimony, the State Department is working on getting numbers right now. The State Department still continues to receive communications from Special Immigrant Visa applicants in Afghanistan and the commitment to those applicants is ongoing.

Question. How many Special Immigrant Visa applicants' dependents are currently in Afghanistan?

Answer. As Secretary Blinken explained during his September 13 testimony, the State Department is working on numbers right now. The State Department still continues to receive communications from Special Immigrant Visa applicants and their dependents in Afghanistan and the commitment to them is ongoing.

Question. How many Afghans who were identified as at-risk but did not fit into the U.S. citizen, LPR, or SIV categories are currently in Afghanistan?

Answer. It is my understanding that at this time the number of Afghan citizens "at risk" as a result of their affiliation with the United States, or by virtue of their profiles, that have been referred to the U.S. Refugee Admissions Program (USRAP) under either a Priority 1 (P-1) or Priority 2 (P-2) referral, exceeds 20,000. I understand PRM intends to fund U.S. Refugee Admissions Program (USRAP) domestic and overseas implementing partners at an initial operating level to support 65,000 arrivals at the beginning of FY 2022. PRM will be prepared to increase funding as needed if arrivals surpass this initial operating level, though at this time there is not a precise estimate of the number of anticipated arrivals. While many P-2 submissions to the USRAP program do not meet the program's criteria relating to employment or U.S. affiliation, the volume of submissions continues to rise. Afghan nationals who feel they are at risk cannot self-refer to the USRAP. A P-1 or P-2 referral of an at-risk individual to USRAP for potential resettlement does not convey immigration status and does not confer evacuation assistance. I understand the United States will continue to support the Afghan people through humanitarian aid, diplomacy, and international cooperation.

Question. If the Taliban requires visas for persons to exit Afghanistan, and the U.S. no longer has a diplomatic presence inside Afghanistan, how will the U.S. get visas to those trying to exit the country?

Answer. The Bureau of Consular Affairs is responsible for the processing and issuance of U.S. visas abroad. My understanding is that the State Department is developing visa processing alternatives so that it can continue to deliver these important consular services for the people of Afghanistan, and respectfully refer you to the Bureau of Consular Affairs for more specific information.

Question. Has the U.S. requested another country to facilitate the distribution of U.S. visas?

Answer. While the subject-matter of your question is not under the purview of PRM, my understanding is that the State Department is developing alternatives so that it can continue to process visas and provide other important consular services for the people of Afghanistan. I refer you to the Bureau of Consular Affairs for more specific information.

Question. How will the State Department facilitate the evacuation of eligible Afghans of any category whose passports or travel documents were destroyed by the U.S. during the withdrawal?

Answer. It is my understanding that, as is standard operating procedure in case of an emergency evacuation from post, Embassy Kabul personnel were forced to destroy sensitive paper record holdings as part of the evacuation, including paper visa records. This was done to minimize the U.S. footprint and reduce the sensitive material remaining for security reasons, and in this case also to protect the identity of our Afghan allies. I understand the Department has been able to recover many of these records and share them with the Department of Homeland Security; for more specifics, I respectfully refer you to the Bureau of Consular Affairs. I further understand the State Department is developing alternatives to deliver consular services to facilitate the safe and orderly travel of U.S. citizens, Legal Permanent Residents, and Afghans to whom the United States has special commitments, including those whose documents may have been destroyed in the evacuation of the Embassy.

Question. Do you have records of whose passports or travel documents were destroyed?

Answer. While the subject-matter of your question does not fall within the purview of PRM, it is my understanding this is standard operating procedure during an emergency evacuation to minimize the U.S. footprint and reduce the amount of sensitive material remaining. The drawdown and closure of the Consular Section of Embassy Kabul was conducted in accordance with this standard operating procedure. I understand the State Department will review its records for any case where travel documents may have been destroyed per emergency protocol and explore all options to assist affected persons with onward travel. I would refer you to the Bureau of Consular Affairs for more specific information.

Question. How many U.S. citizens did the USG evacuate from Afghanistan to the United States?

Answer. I understand that approximately 6,000 U.S. citizens were evacuated from August 14—31. From August 31 through September 15, approximately 60 more U.S. citizens and 25 Legal Permanent Residents departed Afghanistan with U.S. assistance utilizing charter flights and overland crossings. The U.S. Government continues to make good on its pledge to U.S. citizens, Legal Permanent Residents, and Afghans to whom we have a special commitment and has committed to helping them depart Afghanistan, if and when they choose to do so. These figures continue to change as other U.S. citizens are able to depart from Afghanistan through a variety of means. I refer you to the Bureau of Consular Affairs for more information on U.S. citizens abroad, and the Department of Homeland Security, who will have more detailed information about the arrival of U.S. citizens to the United States.

Question. How many U.S. Legal Permanent Residents did the USG evacuate from Afghanistan to the United States?

Answer. The State Department has assisted Legal Permanent Residents (LPRs) wishing to depart Afghanistan throughout this effort. The decision on admission category—U.S. Citizen, LPR, Special Immigrant Visa, or other category—for any individuals arriving to the United States, including Afghans who were evacuated from overseas as a part of Operation Allies Welcome, resides with the Department of Homeland Security's Customs and Border Protection, which will be in the best position to provide the most accurate breakdown of the various categories of Afghans evacuated as a part of Operation Allies Welcome.

Question. How many SIV principal applicants did the USG evacuate from Afghanistan to the United States?

Answer. The United States Government is working on getting numbers right now. The decision on admission category—U.S. Citizen, Legal Permanent Resident, Special Immigrant Visa, or other category—for any individuals arriving to the United States, including Afghans who were evacuated from overseas as a part of Operation Allies Welcome (OAW), resides with the Department of Homeland Security's Customs and Border Protection, which will be in the best position to provide the most accurate breakdown of the various categories of Afghans evacuated as a part of OAW.

Question. How many SIV applicants dependents did the USG evacuate from Afghanistan to the United States?

Answer. The United States Government is working on getting numbers right now. The decision on admission category—U.S. Citizen, Legal Permanent Resident, Special Immigrant Visa, or other category—for any individuals arriving to the United States, including Afghans who were evacuated from overseas as a part of Operation Allies Welcome (OAW), resides with the Department of Homeland Security's Customs and Border Protection, which will be in the best position to provide the most accurate breakdown of the various categories of Afghans evacuated as a part of OAW.

Question. How many Afghans did the USG evacuate to the United States who did not fit into the U.S. citizen, LPR or SIV categories?

Answer. The United States Government is working on getting numbers right now. The decision on admission category for any individuals arriving to the United States, including Afghans who were evacuated from overseas as a part of Operation Allies Welcome (OAW), resides with the Department of Homeland Security's Customs and Border Protection, which will be in the best position to provide the most accurate breakdown of the various categories of Afghans evacuated as a part of OAW.

toms and Border Protection, which will be in the best position to provide the most accurate breakdown of the various categories of Afghans evacuated as a part of OAW.

Special Benefit Humanitarian Parole

Question. How many Afghans have received special benefit humanitarian parole?

Answer. The Department of Homeland Security is responsible for granting parole and tracking those numbers, and I respectfully defer to them to respond to this query.

Question. What benefits are Afghans who have been paroled into the country receiving?

Answer. I understand that Afghans granted parole as a result of the U.S. airlift will have access to the Afghan Placement and Assistance (APA) Program, funded by PRM. The purpose of this program is to provide these Afghans with initial relocation services for 30 to 90 days after arrival as they begin to rebuild their lives in the United States. These services are provided through local refugee resettlement agencies and community partners, which receive a one-time per capita amount of $2,275 of which $1,225 is used to fund assistance needs such as housing and basic necessities, including food, clothing, and furnishings. The remainder of this funding supports services including cultural orientation, enrollment in English language instruction, school enrollment, immigration assistance, and referral to other social, medical, and employment services. At this time, I understand these Afghan parolees are not eligible for the same benefits as refugees and Special Immigrant Visa holders such as refugee-specific cash and medical assistance, or mainstream benefits including Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP), Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF), and Medicaid, except parolees are eligible for SNAP benefits if there is a child under 18 in the family.

Question. What are the conditions of their parole?

Answer. I understand that Customs and Border Protection has granted two-year parole status for many Afghan individuals at risk who arrived under the airlift. Consistent with 8 U.S.C. § 1305 and as a condition of their parole, it is my understanding that parolees must provide their address to U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) www.uscis.gov/addresschange and must notify USCIS of every change of address no later than 10 days after each move; and must comply with all public health directives, requests for additional information from the Department of Homeland Security and federal law enforcement; and follow local, state and federal laws and ordinances.

For full information on the parole conditions, I respectfully refer you to the Customs and Border Protection service.

Question. What vetting is occurring at U.S. reception centers, such as the Dulles Expo?

Answer. The Department of Homeland Security (DHS) has the lead on the screening and vetting requirements for all applicants prior to their application for admission to the United States. U.S. Customs and Border Protection, a component of DHS, is responsible for screening applicants upon entry and granting or denying admission to every individual who arrives to the United States and I respectfully refer you to them for information on this issue.

Question. Who is responsible for vetting upon arrival?

Answer. The Department of Homeland Security has the lead on the screening and vetting requirements for all applicants for admission to the United States. I refer you to my answer to your question No. 47. PRM was not involved in screening individuals evacuated as part of the U.S. military airlift August 14-31.

Question. Are you collecting biometric data for all Afghans admitted or paroled into the United States?

Answer. The Department of Homeland Security has the lead on the screening and vetting requirements for all applicants for admission to the United States and I respectfully refer you to them, though I understand that the screening and vetting process involves biometric and biographic screenings.

Question. Do you have copies of all the flight manifests?

Answer. I understand that U.S. Transportation Command maintains a database of flight manifests of both military and Department of State-chartered flights from overseas sites into the continental United States. I also understand that a number of flights submitted manifests directly to Customs and Border Patrol (CBP) via the Advance Passenger Information System. The State Department is coordinating with CBP to obtain those manifests missing from the consolidated database, though that work does not fall under the purview of PRM.

Question. Do you provide identity documents for Afghans who do not have any?

Answer. My understanding is that the State Department is not providing identity documents to Afghan nationals. I respectfully refer you to the Department of Homeland Security, which is coordinating Operation Allies Welcome, for further questions.

Question. If so, by what means do you verify identity?

Answer. I understand the State Department is not providing identity documents to Afghan nationals.

Question. What happens to Afghans who fail vetting, for any reason?

Answer. The Department of Homeland Security (DHS) has the lead on the screening and vetting requirements for all applicants for admission to the United States. I would refer you to DHS for more information.

Afghans Evacuated to U.S. Bases

Question. How many U.S. citizens did the USG evacuate from Afghanistan to U.S. bases overseas?

Answer. From August 14 to August 31, I understand that approximately 6,000 U.S. citizens were safely evacuated along with eligible family members on USG flights. Since the suspension of embassy operations on August 31 through September 15, an additional approximately 60 U.S. citizens and 25 Legal Permanent Residents have departed Afghanistan with U.S. assistance utilizing charter flights and overland crossings. Most of these citizens and residents were evacuated to or through U.S. military bases overseas. I respectfully refer you to the Bureau of Consular Affairs to answer questions about its assistance to U.S. citizens overseas, including on U.S. bases.

Question. How many U.S. Legal Permanent Residents did the USG evacuate from Afghanistan to U.S. bases overseas?

Answer. I understand that the State Department has assisted Legal Permanent Residents (LPRs) wishing to depart Afghanistan throughout this effort. The decision on admission category—U.S. Citizen, LPR, Special Immigrant Visa, or other category—for any individuals ultimately arriving to the United States, including Afghans who were evacuated from overseas as a part of Operation Allies Welcome (OAW), resides with the Department of Homeland Security's Customs and Border Protection, which will be in the best position to provide the most accurate breakdown of the various categories of Afghans evacuated as a part of OAW.

Question. How many SIV principal applicants did the USG evacuate from Afghanistan to U.S. bases overseas?

Answer. The United States Government is working on getting numbers right now. Thousands of evacuees were in different stages of the SIV process—many had only just inquired about their eligibility at the beginning of operations. The U.S. Government focused on evacuating American citizens, Legal Permanent Residents, and Afghan allies out as fast as possible while the airport was functioning. The decision on admission category—U.S. Citizen, Legal Permanent Resident, Special Immigrant Visa, or other category—for any individuals arriving to the United States, including Afghans who were evacuated from overseas as a part of Operation Allies Welcome (OAW), resides with the Department of Homeland Security's Customs and Border Protection, which will be in the best position to provide the most accurate breakdown of the various categories of Afghans evacuated as a part of OAW.

Question. How many SIV applicants' dependents did the USG evacuate Afghanistan to U.S. bases overseas?

Answer. The United States Government is working on getting numbers right now. Persons relocated were in different stages of the SIV process—many had only just inquired about their eligibility at the beginning of the operation. The decision on admission category for any individuals arriving to the United States, including Afghans who were evacuated from overseas as a part of Operation Allies Welcome (OAW), resides with the Department of Homeland Security's Customs and Border Protection, which will be in the best position to provide the most accurate breakdown of the various categories of Afghans evacuated as a part of OAW.

Question. How many Afghans did the USG evacuate to U.S. bases who did not fit into the U.S. citizen, LPR or SIV categories?

Answer. The decision on admission category—U.S. Citizen, Legal Permanent Resident, Special Immigrant Visa, or other category—for any individuals arriving to the United States, including Afghans who were evacuated from overseas as a part of OAW, resides with the Department of Homeland Security's Customs and Border Protection. The Department of Homeland Security, as the lead agency for Operation Allies Welcome (OAW), ultimately will be in the best position to provide the most accurate breakdown of the various categories of Afghans evacuated as a part of OAW.

Question. What vetting is occurring on the bases?

Answer. The Department of Homeland Security has the lead on the screening and vetting requirements for all applicants for admission to the United States, and I respectfully refer you to them for a response.

Question. Who is responsible for vetting upon arrival?

Answer. The Department of Homeland Security (DHS) has the lead on the screening and vetting requirements for all applicants for admission to the United States, and U.S. Customs and Border Protection, a component of DHS, is responsible for screening upon entry and granting or denying admission to every individual who arrives to the United States.

Question. Are you collecting biometric data for all Afghans admitted or paroled into the United States?

Answer. The Department of Homeland Security has the lead on the screening and vetting requirements for all applicants for admission to the United States. I understand that the screening and vetting process involves biometric and biographic screenings. The U.S. Government has worked urgently and carefully to facilitate screening and vetting operations without compromising national security.

Question. Do you have copies of all the flight manifests?

Answer. I understand that U.S. Transportation Command maintains a database of flight manifests of both military and Department of State-chartered flights from overseas sites into the continental United States. I also understand that a number of flights submitted manifests directly to Customs and Border Patrol (CBP) via the Advance Passenger Information System. The State Department is coordinating with CBP to obtain from CBP about those manifests.

Question. Do you provide identity documents for Afghans who do not have any?

Answer. My understanding is that the State Department is not providing identity documents to Afghan nationals. I respectfully refer you to the Department of Homeland Security, which is coordinating Operation Allies Welcome, for further questions.

Question. If so, by what means do you verify identity?

Answer. I understand the State Department is not providing identity documents to Afghan nationals.

Question. What happens to Afghans who fail vetting, for any reason?

Answer. The Department of Homeland Security (DHS) has the lead on the screening and vetting requirements for all applicants for admission to the United States. I would refer you to DHS for more information.

Question. How many U.S. citizens left Afghanistan but have not made it the U.S. are residing in third countries?

Answer. I understand that U.S. citizens are not required to register their presence in a country with the Department of State, and the State Department does not track their whereabouts. The State Department cannot ascertain how many U.S. citizens who left Afghanistan are now residing in third countries. I respectfully refer you to the Bureau of Consular Affairs for answers about their assistance to U.S. citizens still in Afghanistan and abroad after leaving Afghanistan.

Question. How many U.S. legal permanent residents left Afghanistan but have not made it the U.S. are residing in third countries?

Answer. The State Department does not have an exact number of Legal Permanent Residents (LPRs) and their immediate family members who have departed Afghanistan. LPRs are not required to register their presence in a country with the Department of State, nor does the State Department track their whereabouts. The State Department cannot ascertain how many are now residing in third countries.

Question. How many SIV applicants left Afghanistan but have not made it to the U.S. are residing in third countries?

Answer. The State Department is working to ascertain those numbers now. I refer you to the Bureau of Consular Affairs for more information.

Question. How many SIV applicants left Afghanistan but have not made it the U.S. are residing in third countries?

Answer. The State Department is working to ascertain those numbers now. I refer you to the Bureau of Consular Affairs for more information. Thousands of Afghans are in different stages of the SIV process—many had only just inquired about their eligibility at the beginning of August.

Question. How many applications have you received from P-1 or P-2 refugee status from Afghans?

Answer. I understand over 20,000 cases relating to approximately 55,000 individuals have been referred to the Afghan P-1 and P-2 refugee resettlement program to date.

Question. What, if any, agreements have you made with foreign governments to host Afghan populations?

Answer. My understanding is that the United States strongly encourages foreign governments to allow entry for Afghans and to coordinate with humanitarian international organizations to provide humanitarian assistance to Afghans in need. The United States also urges states to uphold their respective obligations to not return Afghan refugees or asylum seekers to persecution or torture, and to respect the principle of non-refoulement. The State Department will also continue its existing support of Afghan refugee populations in neighboring countries. This includes supporting third-country resettlement efforts led by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), and funding appeals from UNHCR and the International Organization for Migration to provide lifesaving protection, emergency food aid, shelter, and livelihood support to Afghan refugees outside Afghanistan.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. JULIETA VALLS NOYES BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question. How has COVID-19 impacted the work of PRM's implementing partners? What do you anticipate will be the priorities for addressing the immediate needs and secondary impacts of the virus on vulnerable and displaced populations worldwide?

Answer. The COVID-19 pandemic has impacted PRM's implementing partners' programming and ability to provide assistance in a timely manner due to increased operational costs, ongoing travel and access constraints, and other movement restrictions. It has also directly affected the health and welfare of marginalized populations around the world and exacerbated pre-existing gaps in health, protection, assistance, education, and livelihoods. I understand PRM's partners emphasize meeting international standards for assistance and protection for the most vulnerable while at the same time advocating for the inclusion of marginalized, displaced, and hard-to-reach populations in national plans for vaccine delivery, relief, and recovery.

Question. How does the U.S. Government coordinate its responses to migration crises, such as those in Venezuela or Central America? When and where does PRM take the lead and what, if any, are the differences in its approach compared to that of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID)?

Answer. Interagency coordination between the State Department, USAID, and other agencies such as the Department of Homeland Security is critical in responding to migration crises. My understanding is that PRM and USAID play separate but complementary roles. PRM takes the lead in providing urgent humanitarian aid and protection to refugees, asylum seekers, stateless persons, and vulnerable migrants, working through international organizations and non-governmental organizations. PRM also supports efforts to help governments build capacity to protect vulnerable populations and humanely manage migration. USAID takes the lead in response to natural and man-made disasters, disaster preparedness, and support for internally displaced populations; USAID also provides food aid to refugees. USAID also funds development programs in select contexts, such as in Central America, to address root causes of irregular migration and reintegration of returned migrants. In situations where PRM and USAID responsibilities converge, I understand they have robust coordination mechanisms in the field and in Washington to ensure the overall efficiency and effectiveness of U.S. assistance. If confirmed, I will continue this close collaboration between PRM and USAID.

Question. What is your assessment of the scope of risks to women and girls, particularly during the COVID-19 pandemic? What are ways that PRM programs specifically address these protection needs?

Answer. In times of crisis, women and girls are at enormous risk of gender-based violence (GBV)—from armed groups, strangers, neighbors, and family members. These risks in humanitarian settings were exacerbated by COVID-19 and corresponding mitigation measures, resulting in a “shadow” pandemic of GBV and worldwide spikes in GBV risks and reports. In response, the U.S. humanitarian response to COVID-19 prioritized protection, including programs to help prevent GBV and provide psychosocial services to GBV victims, along with healthcare, water, sanitation, and hygiene assistance in the COVID-19 humanitarian response.

Question. President Biden indicated that he plans to set the FY 2022 refugee ceiling at 125,000 in his May 2021 statement on refugee admissions. Do you consider the admission of 125,000 refugees in FY 2022 to be achievable? What, if any, changes to the refugee program have been implemented or are under consideration to facilitate increased refugee admissions in FY 2022?

Answer. I expect the U.S. Government will make every effort to reach the target established by the President following consultations with Congress. In the immediate term, I understand PRM intends to fund U.S. Refugee Admissions Program (USRAP) domestic and overseas implementing partners at an initial operating level to support 65,000 arrivals at the beginning of FY 2022 and will be prepared to increase funding as needed if arrivals surpass the initial operating level.

I understand the President’s Executive Order 14013 on Rebuilding and Enhancing Programs to Resettle Refugees and Planning for the Impact of Climate Change on Migration directs review of a series of bold reforms and initiatives for the USRAP, to support increased refugee admissions in FY 2022 and beyond. My understanding is that U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) aims to increase staffing significantly, upscale in-person “circuit rides” by USCIS employees to interview refugee candidates in person, increase refugee video interviews, identify current bottlenecks, and implement process improvements to its adjudicatory processes. I expect that the USRAP will leverage technological solutions to strengthen data-driven decision-making and streamline refugee processing with the deployment of START and Global, the Department of State’s and USCIS’s respective new refugee applicant case management systems, while enhancing the security of all of refugee processing systems.

Question. In August 2021, DHS announced a new P-2 designation for certain Afghan nationals. The announcement indicated that PRM had created an “Afghan Referrals Workgroup comprised of federal agencies to refer individuals directly” for U.S. refugee resettlement consideration. I am very concerned about the plight of Afghan nationals who have been designated as P-2 refugees. How many Afghan nationals does PRM expect to admit as refugees under this program, and what is the status of current refugees? When are these admissions expected to occur?

Answer. As you note, on August 2, 2021, the Department of State announced a new Priority 2 (P-2) designation granting U.S. Refugee Admissions Program (USRAP) access for certain Afghan nationals and their eligible family members. (See <https://www.state.gov/u-s-refugee-admissions-program-priority-2-designation-for-afghan-nationals/>.) The Department of State has designated certain categories of Afghan nationals as having access to the USRAP by virtue of their circumstances and apparent need for resettlement. This priority group includes Afghans who are or were employed in Afghanistan by a U.S.-based media organization or nongovernmental organization (NGO). It expands the opportunity to permanently resettle in the United States to many Afghans and their immediate family members who may be at risk due to their U.S. affiliation but are not eligible for a Special Immigrant Visa because they did not have qualifying employment or because they have not met the time-in-service requirement to become eligible for an SIV.

In addition to the P-2 designation noted above, Afghans may also gain access to the USRAP through Priority 1 referrals by a specific entity (U.S. embassy, United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, or a designated NGO), or Priority 3, reunification of family members of refugees already resettled in the United States.

The Department of State has issued instructions regarding how U.S.-based media and NGOs can submit referrals for P-2 designation for Afghan nationals. (See <https://www.wrapsnet.org/siv-iraqi-syrian-afghan-p2/>.) Organizations can use these instructions to refer to the USRAP any Afghan national staff (plus their spouse and minor children) who might be in danger now or in the foreseeable future.

The U.S. Refugee Admissions Program Priority 2 designation expands the opportunity to permanently resettle in the United States to many thousands of Afghans and their immediate family members who may be at risk due to their U.S. affiliation. As President Biden has made clear, assisting these Afghan allies is a top priority for the administration.

I understand that PRM is still receiving P2 referrals from U.S. employers, service members, and qualifying media and non-governmental organizations. The U.S. Government cannot currently process refugee referrals inside Afghanistan, so Afghan nationals who are referred for resettlement will be processed upon leaving the country. I am not aware of a timeline for that process nor a specific number of Afghan P-2 referrals that PRM expects to process in the next year. The administration recognizes the role this new designation and the refugee resettlement program in general will play in the lives of those that risked their safety to assist the United States. As President Biden has made clear, helping these Afghans is an ongoing commitment of the United States.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. JULIETA VALLS NOYES BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. Do you agree that UNRWA is a deeply problematic organization?

Answer. This administration supports the work of UNRWA, which provides critical services to vulnerable Palestinian refugees. UNRWA is a lifeline for thousands of Palestinian refugees in the region, as seen in May during the violence in Gaza. That said, I agree that UNRWA must undertake reforms to improve its efficiency, effectiveness and neutrality, and that UNRWA Commissioner General Lazzarini is leading efforts to this end. It is my understanding that the framework under which the United States resumed funding for UNRWA includes provisions for regular reporting, consultations, and monitoring of U.S.-funded aid. If confirmed, I will focus on management and other reform issues at UNRWA to ensure it is upholding its commitments to neutrality and is as effective and efficient as possible.

Question. As the largest individual donor to UNRWA, do you believe the U.S. should leverage our assistance to seek transparency and reforms from the agency?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will seek reforms related to neutrality, transparency, and management at UNRWA.

Question. The director of UNRWA recently acknowledged that the group's educational materials included inappropriate material. This is an ongoing problem that UNRWA pledges to fix, but never seems to adequately address. If confirmed, will you make it a priority to demand the removal of the incitement of violence and anti-Semitism in UNRWA materials?

Answer. I condemn incitement of violence and anti-Semitism in any form. I understand that UNRWA staff found the unacceptable content in supplemental educational material prepared in response to the pandemic, and UNRWA acted promptly to remove it. UNRWA's Commissioner General has committed to notifying the Agency's Advisory Commission immediately of any violations of its zero-tolerance policy and to collaborating with Commission members on educational issues. If confirmed, I will emphasize the importance of humanitarian principles, including neutrality, in discussions with UNRWA.

Question. I remain deeply concerned about the ongoing humanitarian crises in Latin America, which is in part caused by the Maduro regime refusing to respond to the needs and priorities of the Venezuelan people. There are millions of Venezuelan refugees and migrants seeking asylum in the United States and other countries in the region, who are undoubtedly placing significant strain on those countries' refugee and governance systems. If confirmed, what is your long-term strategy to coordinate the bureau's efforts with these countries' efforts to accept Venezuelan refugees and migrants?

Answer. I share your concerns. The situation in Venezuela is a tragedy. Since FY 2017, the United States has provided over $1.4 billion in humanitarian assistance, including over $597 million in PRM programming, to international organizations and non-governmental partners to protect and assist vulnerable Venezuelans in seventeen host countries in the region. My understanding is that PRM assistance includes funding for temporary shelter and access to food, water, and sanitation facilities; legal support for asylum-seekers; capacity-building for regional asylum authorities; and livelihoods opportunities. If confirmed, I would continue to support the Department's engagement in international fora, including the Quito Process to enhance coordination among host countries and advocate for a regional solution to the Venezuela crisis.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO HON. JULIETA VALLS NOYES BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question. The Biden administration's unprecedented evacuation of more than 120,000 people from Afghanistan brought many Americans home but it also delivered many Afghans out of harm's way. Those Afghans are now spread out around the world, including in the 13 partner countries that are serving as way points for refugees before they come to the United States. How we take care of these individuals over the coming days, months and years will determine our true commitment to American values. What should the U.S. be doing right now to best serve these Afghans and the communities that are welcoming them?

Answer. It is my understanding that there is ongoing and robust interagency engagement with the partner countries who generously agreed to host Afghans. Secretary Blinken recently traveled to Qatar and Germany to highlight U.S. appreciation for all that those countries and others have done to support the airlift and relocation efforts. Once they arrive in the United States, the recent evacuees are receiving orientation services, health care, and resettlement support from a broad range of U.S. agencies and humanitarian partners, as Secretary Blinken described in his September 14 appearance before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

I also understand that the State Department has continued to support the needs of vulnerable Afghans remaining in Afghanistan or who are refugees in other countries through urgent humanitarian funding direct to international and non-governmental organizations and has been clear in its commitment to continuing to work with the international community to make sure these needs are addressed. If confirmed, I would continue this important engagement and support to respond to the needs of at-risk Afghans and the countries that host them.

Question. If confirmed, how will you work with our allies to ensure the protection of Afghan refugees around the world?

Answer. I understand that the United States is working with its partners to strengthen humanitarian preparedness and priority interventions in the event of new refugee outflows from Afghanistan and will continue urging states to uphold their respective obligations to not return Afghan refugees to persecution or torture and to respect the principle of non-refoulement. If confirmed, I will encourage continued coordination between host governments and humanitarian organizations to respond to the protection and assistance needs of Afghan refugees, including supporting efforts led by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and funding humanitarian partners to provide lifesaving protection, emergency food aid, shelter, and livelihood support to Afghan refugees outside Afghanistan.

Question. If confirmed, how will you work with our NGO partners who are crucial to the refugee effort in the United States?

Answer. My understanding is that PRM is working with nine resettlement partners and affiliates across the country to welcome Afghans into American communities. Placement of individuals and families prioritizes reunification with U.S.-based family and friends and also considers the needs and characteristics of each individual and family. With U.S. Government support, the agencies will provide initial relocation support to Afghans to assist with critical needs such as housing, enrolling children in school, and basic necessities such as food, clothing, and furnishings. Additional support from the private sector will be critical to meeting the needs of this population, and I was happy to note the recent announcement of welcome.us and related initiatives to facilitate this important private sector support for our non-governmental organization partners. If confirmed, I would continue to liaise closely with PRM's resettlement partners and private sector supporters on this important work.

Question. My office has sent the names of more than 3,000 vulnerable Afghans to the State Department over the last several weeks. I am very concerned about those who remain behind, especially women and girls whose lives are at risk because of their existence. If confirmed, what will you do to ensure that as many Afghans as possible who qualify for a Priority 2 designation are able to be processed and travel to the United States as expeditiously as possible?

Answer. I understand that, to date, over 20,000 cases consisting of around 55,000 individuals have been referred to the Afghan P-2 refugee resettlement program. PRM and its partners are working as quickly as possible to process these cases and have surged staffing as part of this unprecedented effort. The United States Government does not have the ability to process these cases inside Afghanistan at this time, so I understand case processing for these referrals to the U.S. Refugee Admissions Program cannot begin until the individual relocates to a country where processing is feasible. Once in such a country, they will need to inform PRM of their current location and provide contact information. PRM will create a case and assign it to the appropriate U.S.-funded Resettlement Support Center for processing.

Question. In your opinion, are there any actions Congress needs to take to support the maximum use of the Priority 2 designation, including ensuring all arrivals receive resettlement benefits? If confirmed and once you are in place, will you commit to working with Congress to ensure the efficiency of the refugee system?

Answer. I am aware of the bill currently in Congress that would provide parolees with access to refugee benefits on arrival in American communities, and understand the administration strongly supports that bill. My understanding is that the Department is surging resources to review the large number of Priority 1 and Priority 2 (P-2) refugee referrals received in recent weeks. If confirmed, I am committed to working within the Department, with Congress, with international partners, with advocacy groups, and with private sector supporters to ensure that the P-2 designation is used appropriately and fully where applicable, and that all Afghans so designated have access to the resources needed to start anew in America. More broadly, I also am firmly committed to working with Congress to rebuild the entire U.S. Refugee Admissions Program and ensure its efficiency for all resettled refugees.

Question. As you know, several countries have offered to host many of the Afghans in transit as they await vetting and processing before entering the United States. For some of those countries, this could pose a tremendous strain on their own resources. What resources do you think will be needed to help house those Afghans destined for the United States, and are there any additional resources we could direct to these countries?

Answer. It is my understanding that interagency teams overseas are closely coordinating the operational and logistical support required to process Afghans destined for the United States and ensure such processing can continue. In the interim, as host governments identify requirements, these interagency teams are working to respond, including via international organizations and other partners. If confirmed, I would continue our engagement with host governments and humanitarian partners managing these operations and would lead PRM's effort to review funding appeals from those partners who request additional resources to host Afghans.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. JULIETA VALLS NOYES BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question. If confirmed, would you commit to PRM reviewing the vetting process for incoming refugees from Afghanistan to ensure that there are no gaps in the process as a result of the hasty withdrawal process?

Answer. The Department of Homeland Security has the lead on the screening and vetting requirements for all applicants for admission to the United States.

If confirmed, it is my intent to review fully and completely the Department of Homeland Security's screening and vetting conducted for Afghans (and other citizens of other nations) applying to come to the United States under the U.S. Refugee Admissions Program. I commit to working closely with all of PRM's partner agencies to conduct such vetting.

Question. We understand the Embassy destroyed many passports and visas in Kabul. How does PRM vet refugee candidates in the cases where needed national IDs have been destroyed or not available?

Answer. The Department of Homeland Security has the lead on the screening and vetting requirements for all applicants for admission to the United States.

With regard to applicants to the U.S. Refugee Admissions Program (USRAP), which is separate from the U.S. entry of Afghans under Operation Allies Welcome, it is my understanding that PRM and its interagency partners have steadily strengthened security vetting since 9/11. USRAP applicants are subject to more vetting than any other type of traveler to the United States. I am also aware that the USRAP has the capacity to process refugee applicants who do not possess a national ID or passport.

Question. Of the refugees to be admitted this fiscal year, how many does PRM expect to be from Afghanistan? How does the Afghan refugee program impact refugee applications from other regions, including along the southern border?

Answer. As of September 15, 2021, 729 Afghan nationals have arrived under the U.S. Refugee Admissions Program (USRAP) in FY 2021. These Afghans were not relocated as part of the August 14-31 U.S. military airlift and underwent stringent USRAP processing overseas before admission. Neither the Afghans arriving via this airlift who were granted parole into the United States by the Department of Homeland Security, nor the Afghans admitted as refugees via the USRAP, have any impact on refugee applications from other regions.

Question. What steps are the Biden administration taking to support refugee admissions from threatened populations in China?

Answer. The United States is committed to placing human rights at the center of our foreign policy. Refugee resettlement is one of several ways the U.S. supports refugees globally and demonstrates its humanitarian leadership.

I understand that eligible Hong Kong residents and Turkic Muslim Chinese citizens who fear persecution from the Government of the People's Republic of China may access the U.S. Refugee Admissions Program in any appropriate category—including via referrals from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. As with most refugees from other nations, they must be outside of their country of nationality in order to qualify for refugee status. If approved, they may be resettled in the United States within the regional allocations for resettlement for the fiscal year in which they are admitted.

Question. If confirmed, how would you prioritize supporting threatened populations in China?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration is committed to putting democratic values at the center of U.S. foreign policy and to standing up for democracy, human rights, and human dignity. I am horrified by the crimes against humanity and genocide in Xinjiang, and the human rights abuses occurring across China. If confirmed, I commit to working closely with colleagues across the interagency and with allies, partners, and humanitarian organizations to advocate for Uyghurs, Hong Kong residents, and Tibetans, among others. I will also work to assist those fleeing persecution and other abuses in the People's Republic of China to find safe haven.

Question. Please discuss PRM's specific priorities to address humanitarian needs along the southern border.

Answer. I understand that in line with President Biden's Collaborative Migration Management Strategy, PRM priorities in Mexico include improving access to protection against human trafficking, exploitation, and other dangers to vulnerable migrants, such as those fleeing violence or torture. For example, I understand PRM supports gender-based violence prevention and response as well as child protection programs for migrants across Mexico. PRM also prioritizes urgent humanitarian assistance to meet the needs of refugees, asylum seekers, and vulnerable migrants. Key PRM efforts include supporting shelter capacity and COVID-19 mitigation measures, access to legal assistance, healthcare, and psycho-social support.

Question. How will PRM coordinate with other agencies in dealing with the southern border crisis?

Answer. If confirmed, I will coordinate within the Department of State and with the Department of Homeland Security, U.S. Agency for International, and other interagency partners in implementing the administration's Collaborative Migration Management Strategy (CMMS) and parallel Root Causes Strategy (RCS) to address conditions in Central America that compel people to flee their homes and seek safety and opportunity abroad. These strategies increase humanitarian assistance and protection programs within the region, expand legal immigration pathways including through the U.S. Refugee Admission Program, and enhance border protection to reduce irregular migration to the southern border. Irregular migration is a deeply rooted challenge requiring short-, medium- and long-term solutions, such as those included in the CMMS and RCS.

Question. Do you expect a change in PRM's role in the interagency process particularly in light of USAID's relatively new Bureau of Humanitarian Assistance?

Answer. I do not expect a change in PRM's role in the interagency process. PRM and USAID/BHA each have important, distinct roles to play in responding to humanitarian crises, and it is imperative they respond in a coordinated manner as one U.S. Government with a common mission. If confirmed, I intend to maintain close coordination between PRM and USAID/BHA to ensure their efforts complement each other and build on their respective strengths.

Question. Looking ahead, what do you anticipate will be the U.S. contribution level to the U.N. Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA)? What reforms do you believe are necessary with UNRWA?

Answer. President Biden pledged to restore U.S. economic and humanitarian aid to the Palestinians, and the United States resumed for UNRWA this fiscal year. As with other humanitarian partners around the world, continued financial support will depend on funding availability, global needs, performance, and adherence to commitments to the United States. If confirmed, I would focus on management and other reform issues at UNRWA, including neutrality and financial sustainability.

Question. If confirmed, will you ensure all legal conditions are met prior to the disbursement of assistance to UNRWA?

Answer. If confirmed, yes, I will ensure all legal conditions are met prior to the disbursement of assistance to UNRWA.

Question. The director of UNRWA recently acknowledged that the group's educational materials included inappropriate material. This is an ongoing problem that UNRWA pledges to fix, but never seems to adequately address. If confirmed, will you make it a priority to demand the removal of the incitement of violence and anti-Semitism in UNRWA materials?

Answer. Yes. I condemn incitement of violence and anti-Semitism in any form. I understand UNRWA staff found the unacceptable content in supplemental educational material prepared in response to the pandemic, and UNRWA acted promptly to remove it. UNRWA's Commissioner General has committed to notifying its Advisory Commission immediately of any violations of its zero-tolerance policy and to collaborating with Commission members on educational issues. If confirmed, I will prioritize adherence to humanitarian principles, including neutrality, in discussions with UNRWA.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO HON. JULIETA VALLS NOYES BY SENATOR CHRIS VAN HOLLEN

Question. Is there anything the U.S. should be doing to help Afghans who qualify for P-2 status to leave Afghanistan?

Answer. This administration has been clear about its enduring commitment to supporting our Afghan allies, including those that remain in country as well as those that seek to leave. My understanding is that at this time the U.S. government has no ability to do in-country processing or facilitate evacuation/relocation support for individuals referred to the Priority 1 or Priority 2 program who remain in Afghanistan. However, the administration is urging Afghanistan's neighbors to allow entry for Afghans and coordinating with humanitarian international organizations to provide assistance to Afghans in need. The United States is also reminding countries to respect the principle of non-refoulement. I understand the Taliban has provided assurances that Afghans with travel documents who wish to leave the country will be able to do so, and if confirmed, I would work with colleagues in the Department to ensure those assurances are upheld.

Question. If confirmed, how will you address the issue of Afghans who have left Afghanistan, apply for P-2 status while located in a third country, but are denied?

Answer. Individuals with urgent protection needs should register for international protection and assistance with the government of the country where they are located. They may also register and seek assistance from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). If confirmed, I would work with international humanitarian partners and other governments to provide the support needed by those with protection concerns.

Question. Do you believe the Department has sufficiently staffed the job of processing P-2s or do additional staff need to be surged to meet demand?

Answer. My understanding is that the Department is surging resources to review the large number of Priority 1 and Priority 2 refugee referrals received in recent weeks. This includes recruiting volunteers from other bureaus to support the work of the Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration (PRM). If confirmed, I will make filling vacancies in the Bureau, including to address needs such as processing P-2s, one of my first priorities.

Question. To your knowledge, how many P-2 applications have been granted, and in which third countries were successful P-2 applicants located when they applied for and were granted P-2 status?

Answer. Resettlement in the United States under the U.S. Refugee Admissions Program (USRAP) is a 12-18 month process, so my understanding is that no Afghans who were referred to the program and recently fled Afghanistan have had their cases approved yet. As of September 15, I understand the Department has received P-2 refugee referrals for approximately 20,000 cases involving 55,000 individuals.

Question. Will you commit, if confirmed, to providing this information to Congress on an ongoing basis?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to providing this information to Congress on an ongoing basis.

---

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO HON. JULIETA VALLS NOYES BY SENATOR TED CRUZ

Question. UNRWA committed to provide a semi-annual report to PRM on activities to inform evaluation of conformance with conditions on U.S. contributions to UNRWA. Have they provided that report? If not, when do you anticipate they will? Can you commit to transmitting that report to Congress?

Answer. My understanding is that UNRWA has not yet provided this report to PRM, but that it intends to do so in the near term. This will be an internal report provided by UNRWA to the State Department. If confirmed, I will, subject to the rules on the handling and protection of sensitive information, work with Congress to accommodate its oversight interests, which I recognize and take seriously.

Question. UNRWA committed to preventing the use of local textbooks that include content contrary to UN principles in education materials. The commitment is a reference to concerns—which now go back more than a decade—that UNRWA was facilitating the use of textbooks promoting genocidal anti-Semitism. This year UNRWA officials acknowledged that, indeed, educational materials facilitated by UNRWA include inappropriate material, amid reports that its textbooks included calls for “jihad” against Israeli Jews and accusations that Israeli Jews were spreading diseases to Palestinians. How long do you assess it will take UNRWA to cease the use of textbooks that promote anti-Semitism?

Answer. I condemn incitement of violence and anti-Semitism in any form. Textbooks that promote anti-Semitism or other types of hatred are unacceptable. I understand that UNRWA staff themselves found the unacceptable content you reference in supplemental educational material, and UNRWA acted promptly to remove it. I understand that U.N. agencies including UNRWA do not develop their own curricula but use the curricula of host governments. When UNRWA or others identify concepts contrary to U.N. principles in host governments’ educational materials, UNRWA provides instructions and supplementary materials for its staff to address the issue and the unacceptable materials are not taught. If confirmed, I will emphasize the importance of adherence with humanitarian principles, including neutrality, in discussions with UNRWA.

Question. What is the estimate in the report produced pursuant to Senate Report 113-81 accompanying PL 113-76?

Answer. I have been informed that this report is classified in order to protect Foreign Government Information. In keeping with Department policy, I have not been given access to classified information related to the position for which I have been nominated. If confirmed, I will seek a briefing on this report. It is my understanding that a copy of this report was transmitted to the Congressional committees with jurisdiction in 2015.

Question. What is the State Department’s assessment of the current number of Arab refugees who were displaced in 1948 from territories controlled by Israel?

Answer. The State Department does not have its own assessment of this number. I understand there are 5.7 million registered Palestinian refugees who are potentially eligible for United Nations Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA) services, but far fewer avail themselves of UNRWA services. Descendants of eligible male “Palestine refugees” are eligible for registration with UNRWA for the purpose of accessing services. As a result, individuals of Palestinian descent born after the initial displacement have registered. This approach to including descendants is similar to the one used by U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees in other protracted refugee situations, such as Afghanistan and Somalia.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. DENISE CAMPBELL BAUER TO BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Eastern Mediterranean

Question. I have been impressed with the French Government’s support for democracies in the Eastern Mediterranean like Greece, Cyprus and Israel. Turkey continues to violate international norms and I have appreciated the French Government’s willingness to stand up to Ankara’s aggression. This includes in the Caucasus where the French were critical of Turkish support for Azerbaijan in last year’s war. How will you work with France to advance these shared concerns?

Answer. As a permanent member of the U.N. Security Council, France is a key partner in promoting peace in the Middle East and the Mediterranean. French President Macron called for EU solidarity following disputes between Turkey and Greece and Turkey and the Republic of Cyprus over national gas reserves and what France sees as an increasingly “aggressive” Turkey. If confirmed, I will seek cooperation with the French on common interests in the Eastern Mediterranean and to maintain dialogue with Turkey to resolve disputes.

On Israel, France supports a two-state solution. If confirmed, I will work closely with French partners to align our perspectives on Israeli-Palestinian peace.

Strategic Autonomy

Question. President Macron has sought to advance a concept of Strategic Autonomy, which some have interpreted as distancing France from the United States and creating tensions within NATO. What are your views on Strategic Autonomy and are you concerned that it could serve to diminish support for NATO within Europe?

Answer. The Biden administration is committed to re-engaging European allies and revitalizing our alliances. If confirmed, I would welcome European efforts to spend more on defense, which responds to a long-standing U.S. call for more burden-sharing, and help fulfilling Allies’ commitment to NATO to spend two percent of GDP on defense. However, the notion of European strategic autonomy risks undermining the primacy of NATO in ensuring Europe’s defense, duplicating effort between the EU and NATO, and weakening Transatlantic relations. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging with Allies and collaborating with this committee to reinforce to all Allies the importance of European defense efforts being complementary with NATO.

Anomalous Health Incidents

Question. I am very concerned about attacks on U.S. Government personnel (so-called Anomalous Health Incidents). Ensuring the safety and security of our personnel abroad falls largely on individual Chiefs of Mission and the response of officers at post. It is imperative that any individual who reports a suspected incident be responded to promptly, equitably, and compassionately. Do you agree these incidents must be taken seriously, and pose a threat to the health of State personnel?

Answer. This is a sensitive ongoing investigation and is a top priority for Secretary of State Antony Blinken. I understand a major interagency effort is investigating what is causing the incidents and how the Embassy community can be protected. If confirmed, I will do my utmost to ensure anyone who reports unexplained health incidents receives immediate and appropriate attention and care, and I will consider it my primary responsibility to ensure the safety and security of the Embassy community.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to ensuring that any reported incident is treated seriously and reported quickly through the appropriate channels, and that any affected individuals receive prompt access to medical care?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that any employees or their family members who report a possible health incident will receive immediate and appropriate attention and care. If confirmed, I will communicate with our workforce to provide care for affected employees and their family members and work together with partners in Washington and the interagency to do what we can to protect against these incidents and, of course, to find the cause of what has been afflicting these members of our Embassy teams. I will also consider it my primary responsibility to ensure the safety and security of the Embassy community.

Question. Do you commit to meeting with medical staff and the RSO at post to discuss any past reported incidents and ensure that all protocols are being followed?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will consider it my primary responsibility to ensure the safety and security of the Embassy community.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. DENISE CAMPBELL BAUER BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. In what areas do you feel we can collaborate more effectively with the French in Africa? How will you as U.S. Ambassador to France, if confirmed, support that?

Answer. France has significant ties in the Sahel and West and Central Africa and is a steadfast partner in the fight against terrorism. Our shared priorities include security, governance, economic development, and recovery from the COVID-19 pandemic. If confirmed, I will work strategically with the French to ensure that our efforts are mutually supportive and reinforcing. I will encourage the French to use their strong political, economic, security, and cultural influence to promote the reforms that are the best path to long-term stability in these regions, and work with our interagency to support French objectives when aligned with ours.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. DENISE CAMPBELL BAUER BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question. We are aware—as I’m sure you are—of President Macron’s calls for Europe to take greater charge of its own security by developing the “strategic autonomy” of the European Union. The United States has long supported the security of Europe, in particular our Allies in NATO.

- What are the implications of a stronger, more independent European defense strategy for the United States, and for NATO? Can Macron’s vision and NATO 2030 coexist?

Answer. NATO, of which France is a founding Ally and one of its most militarily capable, is the primary security organization for defense of the Euro-Atlantic and its members. Efforts to strengthen deterrence and defense in Europe must be complimentary to and not duplicate NATO efforts, enhance NATO-EU cooperation, and strengthen Transatlantic relations. If confirmed, I will reinforce to all Allies and partners that NATO is the essential forum for consultation and action on Transatlantic security and defense issues while promoting greater cooperation with the EU.

Question. We have heard the current U.S. travel ban restricting entry of Europeans for more than a year now is harming relations. I know this is an area of deep frustration for the French, and I have received a letter from a French counterpart relaying their concern.

- What should be done to address these restrictions? How can we establish parameters for safe travel?

Answer. The Biden administration has prioritized protecting American citizens during this extraordinary pandemic, and the National Interest Exception policy is one way to ensure we facilitate critical travel while also being mindful of ongoing concerns about the spread of COVID-19, including the Delta variant. The administration is constantly reviewing the situation and the scientific data and adjusts policy accordingly. If I am confirmed, I will ensure we continue to implement the administration’s policy as efficiently as possible, and that we are communicating the policy clearly to the French public. If confirmed, I will also be sure to quickly share any additional information regarding shifts in the travel restriction policy.

---

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO HON. DENISE CAMPBELL BAUER BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. If confirmed, how will you cooperate with the French Government on addressing the global terrorist threat?

Answer. The United States and France exchange information and share best practices on countering violent extremist threats, and France leads on countering terrorism in the Sahel, where it has eliminated leaders of ISIS, Al-Qa'ida, and their affiliates. If confirmed, I will not only ensure our cooperation continues, but will look for ways to reinforce that partnership. Of course, if confirmed, I will consider it my primary responsibility to ensure the safety and security of the Embassy community and all Americans in France and Monaco.

Question. In your opinion, how might our existing cooperation with France be enhanced?

Answer. France is the United States' oldest Ally and is among our most capable and reliable military Allies. Our relationship is built on shared values of freedom, democracy, human rights, and the rule of law. There are also extensive cultural and economic ties between our nations. If confirmed, I will work with French leaders to promote close transatlantic coordination on the development of a policy agenda based on our shared values.

Question. Do you agree with President Macron's assessment of cooperation with China?

Answer. Along with the European Union (EU), France publicly characterizes the People's Republic of China (PRC) as a partner, competitor, and systemic rival, an understanding the United States shares. France agrees on the need for joint U.S.-European Union efforts to address the PRC's human rights abuses, coercive trade practices, and aggressive foreign policy. France seeks to cooperate with China when possible in multilateral fora, like the UN Security Council. In addition, France identifies China as a key partner for combatting climate change and addressing global public health concerns. If confirmed, I will work with French leaders to promote close transatlantic coordination on the development of a policy agenda based on our shared values.

Question. If confirmed, how would you use your position to encourage France to increase its vigilance over Chinese attempts to influence its political and economic systems, such as the EU's Comprehensive Agreement on Investment?

Answer. France and the United States are fundamentally aligned in ways that the PRC and France are not. France recognizes that aspects of PRC governance and economic philosophy are fundamentally at odds with international norms. At the same time, France and China have significant economic ties. French Officials have repeatedly called China a "partner, competitor, and systemic rival." If confirmed, I will work closely with France to address the significant challenges the PRC poses.

---

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO HON. DENISE CAMPBELL BAUER BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question. If confirmed, would you support greater U.S.-French military collaboration to support greater capacity development for a key NATO ally?

Answer. France is among our most capable and reliable military allies and I look forward to working together to strengthen our cooperation through NATO. Our bilateral relationship is important for our larger goal of increasing cooperation and raising the level of ambition of our relationship with all of our NATO Allies. France contributes to NATO activities, such as air policing and the enhanced Forward Presence to ensure deterrence and defense on the Alliance's eastern flank. The U.S. and France exchange information and share best practices on countering violent extremist threats, and France leads on countering terrorism in the Sahel. If confirmed, I will not only ensure our cooperation continues, but will look for ways to strengthen our partnership, and will be forthright when we do not see eye-to-eye.

Question. What is the Biden administration doing to encourage France and our NATO allies to maintain and strengthen defense capabilities in the face of continued aggression by Russia in Eastern Europe?

Answer. The Biden administration works in coordination with France and other NATO allies and partners to hold Russia accountable for their destabilizing activities, human rights abuses, and violations of international norms. France contributes to NATO's enhanced Forward Presence on the Alliance's eastern flank. France is an active member of both the G7 Rapid Response Mechanism and the EU's Rapid Alert System efforts to counter Russian disinformation and malign influence.

If confirmed, I will work closely with the French Government so that the NATO Alliance continues to improve its deterrence and defense posture. I will also work closely to ensure continued close cooperation with France as part of our broader effort with other Allies and partners to hold Russia accountable for its actions, and maintain pressure on the Kremlin to adhere to its international commitments and obligations.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JULIANNE SMITH BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question. NATO is going through a planning process to identify strategic priorities for the coming years. What are your views on this process and how it can be used to advance U.S. interests?

Answer. The process of drafting and adopting a new Strategic Concept is critical to the future of NATO. It provides a clear roadmap for the work Allies must take to ensure our collective security. If confirmed, I will work hard with Allies in Brussels to make sure the Strategic Concept reflects the changing security environment of today, especially Russian aggression, threats we face in cyberspace, and the People's Republic of China's malign activities. I will also work to ensure that actions we take to address new challenges do not detract from the Alliance's core task of ensuring a strong deterrence and defense for all Allies.

Question. How do you think the Alliance can best and appropriately respond to the challenge posed by China?

Answer. In recent years, Allies have devoted substantial effort to better understanding and addressing PRC policies and activities that affect Allied security since 2019, culminating in the thorough treatment of PRC issues in the 2021 Summit Communiqué. Allies agreed in 2021 that PRC policies and actions pose a systemic challenge to the international rules-based order and identified, inter alia, the PRC's nuclear and conventional military expansion, non-transparency, and influence over Allied critical infrastructure as key areas of concern. If confirmed, I will consult closely with Allies to build consensus on effective approaches to the PRC through the work of the North Atlantic Council and its committees, and in policy documents, including the Strategic Concept.?

Question. Are you at all concerned that this could divert attention from the threat posed by Russia to NATO members or the threat posed by terrorism to those countries in southern Europe?

Answer. Russia is the pre-eminent nuclear and conventional military threat to the Alliance, just as terrorism is one of the greatest asymmetric challenges to Alliance security. Without losing sight of these threats, NATO must be alert and responsive to the problems posed by the PRC. Fortunately, the Alliance has a strong history of addressing multiple threats simultaneously through its "360-degree approach" to security. Although the PRC is not presently an imminent military threat to Europe in the way Russia is, if confirmed, I would strongly support efforts to ensure NATO addresses the challenges PRC's international behavior and military expansion pose to Transatlantic security. If confirmed, I will continue our close collaboration with Allies to address these challenges realistically, strategically, and systematically.

Question. Beyond the commitment by all NATO members to spend 2 percent of GDP on defense, how should we assess the other contributions that NATO members can make?

Answer. Allies have committed, as recently as the June 2021 NATO Summit, to continue to share the responsibility of our collective security against new and existing threats, both conventional and non-conventional. If confirmed, I will urge those Allies that are not on track to meet the Wales Pledge by 2024 to continue making progress toward that shared and important goal. In addition, I will urge allies to focus on other important aspects of their national defense, including readiness, force generation, and capability gaps. I will also work with Allies, and with Congress, if confirmed, on a shared understanding of NATO burden sharing that captures the wide range of tasks—including cyber security—that the Alliance is now undertaking. We must ensure the Alliance has the sufficient, capable, and ready integrated defense posture required to maintain a credible defense and deterrence in the 21st century threat environment.

---

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JULIANNE SMITH BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. Should expansion of NATO be a priority of the alliance going forward?

Answer. Article 10 of the North Atlantic Treaty states Allies “may, by unanimous agreement, invite any other European State in a position to further the principles of this Treaty and to contribute to the security of the North Atlantic area to accede.” Membership decisions are based on shared values, capacity to contribute to Euro-Atlantic security, and Allied consensus to invite them to join. NATO’s newest member, North Macedonia, joined in 2020 and has already proven itself a valuable Ally, including by contributing to NATO operations in Afghanistan and Kosovo. If confirmed, I will consider any possible enlargement from the perspective of U.S. interests and the good of the Alliance as a whole.

Question. Do you believe NATO allies are apprehensive of further NATO expansion due to the emerging shortcomings of some members, or because of other concerns?

Answer. Allied perspectives vary regarding NATO enlargement. Membership decisions are based on shared values, capacity to contribute to Euro-Atlantic security, and Allied consensus to invite them to join. This is described in Article 10 of the North Atlantic Treaty, to which all Allies have agreed. If confirmed, my approach to issues of NATO enlargement will be based on these criteria, U.S. interests, and the good of the Alliance. I look forward to dialogue with this committee on these issues.

Question. What do you see as the greatest current threat to NATO unity and cohesion?

Answer. For over 70 years, Allies have maintained cohesion to provide collective defense and prosperity to member nations. NATO has adapted to new threats and challenges during past inflection points such as 1989, 2001, and 2014. Today, NATO is again adapting to new and emerging threats and challenges. The key to NATO’s success is its ability to maintain unity, and the NATO 2030 agenda adopted at the June 2021 Summit affirmed the importance of consultation to the Alliance’s success. If confirmed, I look forward to increasing our engagement with Allies, including having difficult but necessary conversations. I will also work to maintain bipartisan support for NATO and look forward to consulting with Congress and welcoming congressional delegations to Brussels.

Question. What are the advantages of Strategic Autonomy for European nations themselves? What are the disadvantages?

Answer. The Biden administration is committed to re-engaging European allies and revitalizing our alliances. If confirmed, I would welcome European efforts to spend more on defense and build capacity, which responds to a long-standing U.S. call for more burden-sharing. However, we must ensure that those efforts to not risk undermining the primacy of NATO in ensuring Europe’s defense by avoiding unnecessary duplication and waste. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging with Allies and collaborating with this committee to reinforce to all Allies the importance of European defense efforts being complementary with NATO.

Question. What are the advantages of Strategic Autonomy for United States security interests? What are the disadvantages?

Answer. The Biden administration is committed to re-engaging European allies and revitalizing our alliances. If confirmed, I would welcome European efforts to spend more on defense and build capacity, which responds to a long-standing U.S. call for more burden-sharing. However, we must ensure that those efforts to not risk undermining the primacy of NATO in ensuring Europe’s defense by avoid unnecessary duplication and waste. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging with Allies and collaborating with this committee to reinforce to all Allies the importance of European defense efforts being complementary with NATO.

Question. What are the advantages of Strategic Autonomy for security interests across the NATO alliance as a whole? What are the disadvantages?

Answer. The Biden administration is committed to re-engaging European allies and revitalizing our alliances. If confirmed, I would welcome European efforts to spend more on defense and build capacity, which responds to a long-standing U.S. call for more burden-sharing. However, we must ensure that those efforts do not risk undermining the primacy of NATO in ensuring Europe's defense by avoid unnecessary duplication and waste. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging with Allies and collaborating with this committee to reinforce to all Allies the importance of European defense efforts being complementary with NATO.

Question. Do you believe that the U.S.' execution of the withdrawal and evacuation mission from Afghanistan makes a continental separation of European defense from NATO more likely?

Answer. NATO is the foundation of Euro-Atlantic collective defense. It guarantees the security, freedom, and values of one billion citizens in North America and Europe. The Alliance has experienced and overcome divisive issues in the past because of the strength of our approach based on consultation and consensus. As the Secretary General has said, the United States consulted with the Allies throughout the process of ending NATO's military presence in Afghanistan and this was a decision taken together by all Allies. NATO benefits from European Allies developing greater defense capabilities. If confirmed, I will continue this tradition of close consultation that prevents any issue from detracting from NATO accomplishing its core tasks.

Question. Do you believe that the recent defense agreement between the U.S., U.K., and Australia, which has greatly angered France, and irked the European Union, makes a continental separation of European defense from NATO more likely?

Answer. A stronger, more capable Europe is in our shared interest, and our long-standing ties with NATO Allies and the EU are essential to deal effectively with 21st century challenges, as are complementary EU and NATO capabilities. Ensuring a free and open Indo-Pacific is a shared interest between the United States and Europe, and if confirmed, I will continue to work to deepen transatlantic cooperation regarding the Indo-Pacific and around the world. We will not succeed without enhanced NATO-EU cooperation, something I will strongly support, if confirmed. Such cooperation should uphold NATO's role as the premier Transatlantic security and defense forum, and EU defense efforts must not detract from or duplicate NATO efforts.

Question. What is your understanding of the reason that Turkey decided to purchase S-400s from Russia instead of Patriot Missiles from the United States?

Answer. Turkey had the opportunity to purchase Patriot surface-to-air missile systems, and other NATO-interoperable air defense systems, but chose to purchase the Russian S-400. Ankara's acquisition and testing of an S-400 surface-to-air missile system from Russia undermine Allied interoperability and threaten Alliance systems. If confirmed, I will continue to urge Turkey not to retain the S-400 system and to refrain from purchasing any additional Russian military equipment. As the Biden administration has made clear to Turkey, any major new Russian arms purchases would risk triggering CAATSA Section 231 sanctions separate from and in addition to those already imposed.

Question. The U.S. has removed Turkey from the F-35 program and sanctioned it for its purchase of the S-400. What further actions, if any, do you believe the U.S. should take to urge Turkey to divest the S-400s?

Answer. Turkey knows what it needs to do to secure relief from existing CAATSA Section 231 sanctions. Ankara's acquisition and testing of an S-400 surface-to-air missile system from Russia undermine Allied interoperability and threaten Alliance systems. The United States continues to urge Turkey at every level not to retain the S-400 system and to refrain from purchasing any additional Russian materiel. As the Biden administration has made clear to Turkey, any major new Russian arms purchases would risk triggering CAATSA sanctions separate from and in addition to those imposed in December 2020.

Question. How would you work with NATO partners to discourage Turkey from moving forward with its S-400 Air Defense integration?

Answer. The Biden administration has clearly expressed that Russian S-400s are incompatible with NATO equipment and its NATO commitments. If confirmed, I will join administration colleagues in continuing to urge Turkey not to retain S-400 and not to purchase additional Russian materiel. As the Biden administration has made clear to Turkey, any new purchase of Russian military equipment would risk triggering CAATSA sanctions separate from and in addition to those imposed in Deember 2020. Our Allies, including Turkey share interests in countering terrorism, ending the conflict in Syria, and ensuring regional stability. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Congress and our Allies to convince Turkey to change course.

Question. NATO's last strategic concept was written in 2010. In that time, new threats have emerged: Russia's expansionism in Crimea, eastern Ukraine, and Syria, China's emergence as a military and strategic power, democratic backsliding within NATO countries, the advent of new technologies and threats like cyberwarfare. Which elements do you believe that any new Strategic Concept should focus on the most?

Answer. The process of drafting and adopting a new Strategic Concept is critical to the future of NATO. It provides a clear roadmap for the work Allies must take to ensure our collective security. If confirmed, I will work hard with Allies in Brussels to make sure the Strategic Concept reflects the changing security environment of today, especially Russian aggression, threats we face in cyberspace, and the People's Republic of China's malign activities. I will also work to ensure that actions we take to address these new challenges do not detract from the Alliance's core task of ensuring a strong deterrence and defense for all Allies. I look forward to dialogue with this committee on the Strategic Concept.

Question. NATO's Black Sea littoral allies are increasingly vocal about their concerns of growing Russian threats in the region. What more do you believe NATO should do to help deter further Russian aggression in the Black Sea and help augment the military capabilities of the littoral nations?

Answer. The Biden administration has expressed clear support for our Black Sea Allies, and through cooperation with NATO Allies and partners is bolstering collective security in the Black Sea region. As the Biden administration has made clear to Russia, further aggression is unacceptable in the territory and territorial waters of its sovereign neighbors. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Congress and our Allies to develop and implement a Black Sea security strategy that bolsters cooperation among our littoral state Allies and partners.

Question. What do you see as the largest obstacles to NATO's military mobility throughout the European continent?

Answer. NATO must be able to flow combat power across the Euro-Atlantic area to be effective, not only from the United States to Europe but in Europe, across borders, and utilizing Allies' infrastructure. The current level of investment into capabilities varies across the spectrum of different Allies. If confirmed, I would work with our NATO Allies on the way ahead to ensure infrastructure and other mobility challenges are never limiting factors for deterrence and defense.

Question. If Russia were to put military presence in Belarus, how do you think the U.S. should respond? How should NATO respond?

Answer. Respectfully, I'm unable to provide a complete answer to a hypothetical. If confirmed, I would work with Congress as well as the Departments of State and Defense to maximize benefit to Alliance strength and security.

Question. In such a scenario, would putting more troops in Poland and the Baltics be a useful response or a harmful one?

Answer. Respectfully, I'm unable to provide a complete answer to a hypothetical. If confirmed, I would work with Congress as well as the Departments of State and Defense to maximize benefit to Alliance strength and security.

Question. Do you believe that nuclear weapons are inherent to NATO's strength in deterring and defending against enemies of the alliance?

Answer. NATO utilizes an appropriate mix of nuclear, conventional, and missile defense capabilities for its deterrence and defense. As Allies reiterated in their June 2021 Brussels Summit Communique, "as long as nuclear weapons exist, NATO will remain a nuclear Alliance." If confirmed, I commit to work with Allies to provide for our collective security, including maintaining a safe, effective, and credible nuclear deterrence.

Question. Do you commit to maintaining NATO's nuclear arsenal?

Answer. As Allies reiterated in the June 2021 Brussels Summit Communique, "as long as nuclear weapons exist, NATO will remain a nuclear Alliance." If confirmed, I will coordinate with Allies to support NATO's deterrence and defense posture, including NATO's nuclear deterrence posture, which relies on U.S. nuclear weapons forward-deployed in Europe and the capabilities and infrastructure provided by Allies concerned.

Question. What role do U.S. military exercises with NATO Allies play in strengthening U.S. and Allied warfighting capabilities, building interoperability between NATO members, and signaling resolve both to other Allies and adversaries like Russia?

Answer. NATO conducts a variety of posture management activities, which are critical to maintaining NATO's deterrence and defense posture. NATO's exercises credibly demonstrate its ability to deliver warfighting capabilities where and when needed. United States military exercises with Allies test and improve interoperability and are a concrete manifestation of NATO's resolve. If confirmed, I commit to work with Congress, the Department of Defense, and our Allies and partners to continue to build capabilities, increase readiness, and signal resolve to our adversaries.

Question. Do you believe the current scope, scale, and frequency of U.S. military exercises in Europe is sufficient to fulfill these objectives? If confirmed, do you commit to working with Allies to expand-or at least maintain-the current scope, scale, and frequency of U.S. military exercises in Europe?

Answer. NATO is the most successful Alliance in history, preventing the outbreak of war between major powers in Europe for over 70 years. U.S. and NATO's exercises are essential to maintain deterrence, readiness, and interoperability and reassure our Allies. If confirmed, I will work with our Allies to strengthen NATO's credible deterrence and defense posture, including through exercises.

Question. Do you believe U.S./NATO military exercises are provocative to Russia? If confirmed, how will you reconcile Russian concerns with the need to enhance NATO's warfighting capabilities and strengthen Allies?

Answer. Russian accusations that the United States and NATO demonstrate hostile intent through exercises are disingenuous. NATO's activities are predictable, transparent, defensive, and designed to improve readiness and demonstrate the Alliance's capability and resolve to repulse armed attack. U.S. and NATO's exercises are essential to maintain deterrence, readiness, and interoperability and reassure our Allies. If confirmed, I will work with our Allies to strengthen NATO's credible deterrence and defense posture, including through exercises.

Question. Do you believe it is accurate or fair to equate U.S. multinational exercises like Defender with large-scale Russian exercises like Zapad?

Answer. The United States is transparent about its activities; Russia is not. We are transparent about our exercises, conduct them safely, and notify Russia appropriately. U.S. and NATO exercises help reassure our Allies, and transparency as undertaken by the United States and NATO contribute to stability and predictability with Russia. Russia misuses the Vienna Document notification system to thwart transparency of its exercises and conducts large-scale snap exercises, such as its buildup along the border with Ukraine in spring 2021. If confirmed, I pledge to work with Allies to ensure that false Russian narratives about U.S. and NATO posture management activities do not undermine Allies' determination to signal Allied resolve and build readiness and interoperability through planned, challenging exercises.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JULIANNE SMITH BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question. What do you view as the key challenges to alliance cohesion within NATO? What role do you see for the U.S. administration and the U.S. Congress in addressing these challenges?

Answer. For over 70 years, Allies have maintained cohesion to provide collective security and prosperity to member nations. Today, however, the weakening of democratic values in some member states is tearing at Alliance cohesion. As the recent NATO 2030 report stressed, the key to NATO's success is its ability to maintain unity and resolve. If confirmed, I look forward to increasing our engagement with Allies, including having sometimes difficult but necessary conversations about both our shared values and our shared challenges. I will also work to maintain bipartisan support for NATO and look forward to consulting with Congress and welcoming congressional delegations to Brussels.

Question. How should NATO respond to political developments in NATO member states, such as Turkey, that run counter to the democratic principles on which the alliance was founded?

Answer. NATO is a defensive Alliance. Simultaneously, NATO is an Alliance of values, founded on the principles of democracy, individual liberty, and the rule of law. NATO takes decisions on the basis of consensus, and Allies must find ways forward on common priorities. Allies must also be ready to voice—either privately or publicly—concern about actions inconsistent with Allies’ commitments, including concerns about democratic backsliding in Allied member states. If confirmed I look forward to working with Congress to foster a constructive dialogue in the Alliance about these issues.

Question. Should NATO consider monitoring or sanctioning member states that violate NATO’s foundational principles?

Answer. The North Atlantic Treaty states in Article 2 that “all Parties will contribute toward the further development of peaceful and friendly international relations by strengthening their free institutions, by bringing about a better understanding of the principles upon which these institutions are founded, and by promoting conditions of stability and well-being.” For over 70 years, Allies have maintained cohesion to provide collective security and prosperity to member nations. The key to NATO’s success is its ability to maintain unity and resolve, and, if confirmed, I will ensure we hold Allies accountable to the same set of values.

Question. Will you, as Ambassador, continue to press for increased allied defense spending?

Answer. Allies have committed, as recently as the June 2021 NATO Summit, to continue to share the responsibility of our collective security against new and existing threats, both conventional and non-conventional. If confirmed, I will urge those Allies that are not on track to meet the Wales Pledge by 2024 to continue making progress toward that shared and important goal. In addition, I will urge allies to focus on other important aspects of their national defense, including readiness, force generation, and capability gaps. I will also work with Allies, and with Congress, if confirmed, on a shared understanding of NATO burden sharing that captures the wide range of tasks—including cyber security—that the Alliance is now undertaking. We must ensure the Alliance has the sufficient, capable, and ready integrated defense posture required to maintain a credible defense and deterrence in the 21st century threat environment.

Question. How do you view the potential for burden-sharing that looks beyond national defense budgets to include available military capabilities, contributions to allied missions, and efforts to counter hybrid threats?

Answer. Allies have committed, as recently as the June 2021 NATO Summit, to continue to share the responsibility of our collective security against new and existing threats, both conventional and non-conventional. If confirmed, I will urge those Allies that are not on track to meet the Wales Pledge by 2024 to continue making progress toward that shared and important goal. In addition, I will urge allies to focus on other important aspects of their national defense, including readiness, force generation, and capability gaps. I will also work with Allies, and with Congress, if confirmed, on a shared understanding of NATO burden sharing that captures the wide range of tasks—including cyber security—that the Alliance is now undertaking. We must ensure the Alliance has the sufficient, capable, and ready integrated defense posture required to maintain a credible defense and deterrence in the 21st century threat environment.

Question. How adequately is NATO addressing the defense and security implications of increased Chinese investment and political influence in Europe?

Answer. This administration is deeply concerned about the dangers posed to Transatlantic security by the PRC’s investments in critical infrastructure, advanced technologies, and modern military capabilities, including missiles that can target all NATO Allied countries. At the June 2021 NATO Summit, NATO Heads of State and Government declared that the PRC’s “stated ambitions and assertive behavior present systemic challenges to the rules-based international order and to areas relevant to Alliance security.” If confirmed, I will continue our close collaboration with Allies to address the challenge from Beijing realistically, strategically, and systematically.

Question. To what extent is there consensus within the alliance on how best to respond to security challenges from the Chinese Government?

Answer. Decision-making by consensus is never easy, especially with 30 Allies with individual opinions and threat perceptions. However, Allies have come together and found common ground to chart a path to the future throughout the past 70 years, on many global challenges. Today is no different. If confirmed, I commit to consult closely with Allies to build consensus on approaches that advance U.S. policy objectives on the PRC. Allies showed the ability to find common ground on complicated policy issues like how to address the PRC in the recent NATO Summit Communiqué, and I am confident we can find a way to address the security environment in the next Strategic Concept as well as other venues.

Question. How effective are current U.S. and NATO efforts to deter Russian aggression in Europe, and what more can be done?

Answer. The United States has worked with Allies at NATO to maintain a firm message to Russia that there can be no return to “business as usual” until there is a clear, constructive change in Russia’s behavior. The NATO Alliance pursues a dual track approach to Russia, balancing openness to political discussion—on the basis of reciprocity—with strong and credible deterrence and defense, including on NATO’s eastern flank. If confirmed, I look forward to working with our Allies to ensure NATO continues to bolster its deterrence and defense posture, increases focus on capabilities, readiness, and force generation, and maintains unity in the face of Russian aggression.

Question. To what extent do you expect sustained political support in Europe for NATO’s firm stance on Russia?

Answer. Allies agree Russia is the primary geopolitical threat in the Euro-Atlantic area. At the June 2021 NATO Summit, Allies publicly affirmed that NATO has suspended all practical civilian and military cooperation with Russia, while remaining open to political dialogue. Until Russia makes clear and constructive changes to its behavior, there can be no return to “business as usual”. Allies also affirmed that NATO will respond to the deteriorating security environment by enhancing its deterrence and defense posture, including by a forward presence in the eastern part of the Alliance. If confirmed, I will work to maintain Allied unity in the face of Russian aggression.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JULIANNE SMITH BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question. What are the implications for the security of NATO’s Baltic members from Belarus’ planned installation of Russia’s S-400 Air Defense systems?

Answer. Since Russia’s 2014 invasion of Ukraine, NATO has implemented the most significant reinforcement of its eastern flank in the post-Cold War era, including the Baltic Air Policing mission. President Lukashenka’s comments that Belarus may procure new systems from Russia, including the S-400, is of concern. NATO is committed to the security of the entire Alliance, including Baltic Allies, and will respond appropriately to the deployment of additional Russian military capability in the region. If confirmed, I look forward to consulting with the Departments of State and Defense, Congress, and NATO Allies on appropriate measures of support for Baltic Allies and NATO’s regional partners.

Question. How will you engage with NATO to counter the growing belligerence of Russia and its encroachment into Belarus?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with Allies at NATO to maintain a firm message to Russia that there can be no return to “business as usual” until there is a clear, constructive change in Russia’s behavior. I will also ensure NATO continues to bolster its deterrence and defense posture. The Alliance has taken several steps to express deep concern over the situation in Belarus, from restricting Belarusian access to NATO HQ to condemning Lukashenka’s actions in the June 2021 Summit Communiqué. If confirmed I will seek ways to continue to hold both Russia and Belarus accountable for destabilizing activity.

Question. How does the situation in Afghanistan affect our relationship with NATO allies?

Answer. U.S. standing within NATO remains strong. After twenty years, Allies agreed to end our military engagement in Afghanistan. This reflects our success delivering justice to those who attacked us on September 11th and disrupting terrorists seeking to use Afghanistan as a safe haven to attack us. Allies decided to reassess where it made the most sense to position our militaries based on the global threat picture as it exists today, not two decades ago. The United States worked side by side with Allies and partners in Afghanistan, strengthening the ability of our military and civilian personnel to work effectively together. If confirmed, I will continue the close consultations with Allies, as we have done since before the withdrawal, when all Allies decided to leave with us. I will also look forward to consulting with the Allies on the “lessons learned” process they are currently conducting on the broader mission in Afghanistan.

Question. Message to NATO allies about the U.S. commitment to coordinated operations in defense of the alliance?

Answer. NATO remains history’s strongest military alliance, and the United States will continue our leadership role within it. The U.S. commitment to the Alliance and to Article 5 is ironclad. If confirmed, I will ensure that we continue to support NATO defensive operations, as well as operations that enhance regional security in other ways. For example, NATO Mission Iraq is expanding to broaden the capacity of the Iraqi Government’s security institutions. Kosovo Force (KFOR) has bolstered the regional security environment in the Balkans for twenty years.

Question. How would you work with NATO partners to discourage Turkey from moving forward with its S-400 Air Defense integration?

Answer. The Biden administration has clearly expressed that Russian S-400s are incompatible with NATO equipment and Turkey’s NATO commitments. It is a policy priority for the United States to prevail on Turkey not to retain S-400 and not to purchase additional Russian materiel. As the Biden administration has made clear to Turkey, any new purchase of Russian military equipment would risk triggering CAATSA sanctions separate from and in addition to those imposed in December 2020. At the same time, Turkey is our Ally, and the United States and Turkey share interests in countering terrorism, ending the conflict in Syria, and ensuring regional stability. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Congress and engaging Turkey.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JULIANNE SMITH BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question. I recently had a call with 26 Ambassadors from NATO-allied countries, and all were unanimous in their calls for NATO coordination on Afghanistan. Many of our allies in NATO and others in Europe have also publicly expressed their frustrations regarding how the United States handled the withdrawal and the lack of coordination with them. I am concerned with how this may affect the strength of the Alliance in the immediate future.

- How do you see the current state of relations with our NATO allies following our withdrawal from Afghanistan? What will you do to reassure our allies of our commitment to coordination through NATO, if confirmed?

Answer. Since Allies invoked Article 5 and went into Afghanistan after al-Qaeda, we have adhered to the “in together, consult together, leave together” approach. Indeed, as the Secretary General confirmed in recent days, the United States consulted with the Allies throughout the process of ending NATO’s military presence in Afghanistan. NATO is the foundation of Euro-Atlantic collective defense. The Alliance has experienced and overcome divisive issues in the past because of the strength of our approach based on consultation and consensus. If confirmed, I will continue this tradition of close consultation that prevents any issue from detracting from NATO accomplishing its core tasks.

Question. How do you think the United States should respond to the calls for greater European security independent of NATO and the United States?

Answer. The Biden administration is committed to re-engaging European allies and revitalizing our alliances. If confirmed, I would welcome European efforts to strengthen European defense including by spending more on defense, insofar as this contributes to Allies’ fulfillment of their Wales Pledge commitments. However, the notion of European strategic autonomy risks undermining the primacy of NATO in ensuring Europe’s defense, duplicating effort between the EU and NATO, and weakening Transatlantic relations. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging with Allies and partners to reinforce to all Allies the unparalleled value of the Transatlantic Alliance, rooted in the sacrosanct Article 5 commitment.

Question. The Taliban has tried to tell the world that it is different than it was in 1996. But their approach and perspective on women has clearly not evolved and as such, we must continue to hold the Taliban to account, in partnership with our allies.

- If confirmed, how will you work through NATO to find ways to support the rights of Afghan women and girls under Taliban rule? What specific actions should NATO take as a bloc?

Answer. NATO has been clear that it will continue to hold the Taliban to its commitments, especially on counterterrorism and with respect to the rights of all Afghans. The Taliban has said many things, but we have told them in no uncertain terms we are watching their actions to assess our possible future direction with them. The United States and NATO Allies are considering how to use our full diplomatic, economic, and assistance toolkits to support the peaceful, stable future the Afghan people deserve. If confirmed, I look forward to consulting with you on ensuring the rights of women and girls in Afghanistan, in particular, remain in the Alliance's focus.

Question. If confirmed, what will you do to reassure our allies in NATO of the strong U.S. commitment? What specific steps will you take to strengthen coordination with and within the Alliance?

Answer. If confirmed, I will reassure Allies our commitment to collective defense under Article 5 of the Washington Treaty is ironclad. For over 70 years, Allies have maintained cohesion to provide collective security and prosperity to member nations. The key to NATO's success is its ability to maintain unity, and the NATO 2030 agenda affirmed the importance of consultation to the Alliance's success. If confirmed, I look forward to increasing our engagement with Allies, including having difficult but necessary conversations. I will also work to maintain bipartisan support for NATO and look forward to consulting with Congress and welcoming congressional delegations to Brussels.

Question. I am concerned by the actions of an emboldened Russia in the Black Sea region, following several recent aggressive incidents by the Russians.

- What more can be done to support freedom of navigation in the Black Sea?

Answer. The Biden administration attaches high importance to security and stability in the Black Sea littoral. Through cooperation with NATO Allies and partners, including presence and exercises, the United States is bolstering collective security in the Black Sea region. As the Biden administration has made clear to Russia, aggression is unacceptable in the territory and territorial waters of its sovereign neighbors, as well as in international waters and airspace. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Congress and our Allies to develop and implement a Black Sea security strategy that bolsters cooperation among our littoral state Allies and partners.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JULIANNE SMITH BY SENATOR TED CRUZ

Nord Stream 2

Question. If Nord Stream 2 is brought online it will provide Russia with energy hegemony over our NATO allies. Those allies have conveyed in public that they will be significantly more vulnerable not just to energy coercion but to military aggression, across NATO's Eastern flank.

- Please assess the security risks to NATO, and especially NATO's eastern flank, that would be created if Nord Stream 2 was completed.

Answer. The Nord Stream 2 pipeline is a Russian geopolitical project that undercuts the energy security of a significant part of the Euro-Atlantic community. U.S. opposition to Nord Stream 2 centers around the Kremlin's malign activities, including its aggression against Ukraine and past use of energy as a weapon through gas supply cut-offs and disruptions. The administration continues to work with Germany, Ukraine, and other Allies and partners to reduce the risks of an operational Nord Stream 2 pipeline, including through the package of measures detailed in the July 21, 2021 U.S.-Germany Joint Statement on support for Ukraine, European Energy Security, and our Climate Goals. If confirmed, I will work with our NATO Allies and partners to both address the repercussions of the Nord Stream 2 pipeline and strengthen European energy security.

Question. If Nord Stream 2 is brought online it will provide Russia with energy hegemony over our NATO allies. Those allies have conveyed in public that they will be significantly more vulnerable not just to energy coercion but to military aggression, across NATO's Eastern flank.

- In your understanding, what can the United States still do to stop Nord Stream 2 from being completed, in order to avert these risks?

Answer. The Biden administration opposes Nord Stream 2 and believes that this Russian geopolitical project is a bad deal for both Ukraine and Europe. That said, the pipeline was over 90 percent complete when this administration came into office, and sanctions could not stop its construction. Gazprom announced on September 10, 2021 that construction on the pipeline was complete. Throughout the process of testing, inspecting, and certifying, and otherwise operationalizing the pipeline, the United States will continue to oppose Nord Stream 2 and work with Allies and partners to reduce the risks of an operational Nord Stream 2 pipeline, including through the package of measures detailed in the July 21, 2021 U.S.-Germany Joint Statement on Support for Ukraine, European Energy Security, and our Climate Goals. The administration remains committed to implementing PEESA, as amended; it has sanctioned seven persons related to Nord Stream 2 and identified 16 of the vessels as blocked property and continues to examine entities involved in potentially sanctionable activity.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. BARBARA A. LEAF BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Israel

Question. This week marks the one year anniversary of the historic Abraham Accords, normalizing relations between Israel, the UAE, and Bahrain, which have the potential to increase security and prosperity for Israel and other countries in the Middle East.

- Will you commit to fully supporting Israel's right to self-defense and Qualitative Military Edge, including through U.S. military assistance?

Answer. Yes. The United States has a long-standing, unshakable commitment to Israel's security, one important component of which is substantial security assistance to preserve Israel's Qualitative Military Edge over potential regional threats. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Congress to continue this legacy.

Iraq

Question. The U.S. remains committed to a sovereign, stable and democratic Iraq. The recent agreement on July 26 between President Biden and Prime Minister Kadhimi to end U.S. combat operations signals a hopeful new phase in the U.S.-Iraqi partnership. However, Iran continues to exercise malign influence in the country and its militias continue to target U.S. facilities while extorting and murdering ordinary Iraqis.

- What should the U.S.'s assistance priorities be in Iraq? What further steps can the U.S. take to boost Iraq's ties with its Arab neighbors and make the country less dependent on Iranian energy?

Answer. U.S. assistance in Iraq should focus on democratic and economic reforms to reduce corruption, facilitate investment, develop a domestic private sector that can generate badly-needed employment for Iraq's youthful population, and improve the lives of the Iraqi people.

The United States continues to press Iraq to do more in terms of generating and delivering electricity for the public, reducing its reliance on Iranian electricity and gas. This requires Iraq to capture flared gas, employ grid modernization to reduce transmission losses, develop renewable energy potential, and to import power from other neighbors. The United States is ready to help develop Iraq's renewable energy sector.

With regard to electricity grid interconnections, the United States has championed the work to connect Iraq's grid to that of the GCC Interconnection Authority. This interconnection would allow Gulf countries to sell 500 megawatts of power to Iraq. The United States also supports an interconnection between the Iraqi and Jordanian grids. While Iraq is contracting out its portion of the transmission lines, USAID is supporting the Jordanian side. Iraq has moved slowly on implementing its side.

Question. What is your assessment of the current U.S. diplomatic footprint in Iraq? Should the U.S. boost that footprint to better counter Iranian influence? What resources would be required to do that safely and do you commit to working to swiftly restore consular operations at Embassy Baghdad?

Answer. U.S. policies. In Summer 2021, the Embassy conducted a fresh staffing review given changing circumstances, and Department leadership is currently considering the results. If confirmed, I am committed to ensuring all of our posts, including Baghdad, are secure and appropriately staffed for their mission.

If confirmed, I commit to working to restore consular operations at Embassy Baghdad. Several Compound Access Control (CAC) points sustained damage in the December 2019/January 2020 attack, leading to a suspension of consular operations. The Bureau of Overseas Buildings Operations (OBO) worked with Diplomatic Security to establish an interim consular screening facility for use by U.S. citizens. OBO is currently in the process of awarding a design and construction contract for the repair of the Main CAC to allow full consular services to be restarted.

Question. How important is it to reopen the U.S. Consulate in Basra? If confirmed, what conditions will you need to see before moving to reopen it?

Answer. I view it as vitally important that the United States engage with all segments of Iraqi society, including Basrawis and others in southern Iraq. Basrah remains one of the key economic engines of Iraq given its vast oil and gas resources, but also remains one of the poorest provinces and suffers from climate change and a lack of potable water. If confirmed, I will work with my colleagues at the State Department and throughout the administration to expand our diplomatic outreach across Iraq. There are many issues that would have to be taken into consideration before resuming operations at the consulate in Basrah, such as the necessary security measures, as well as congressional and legal requirements.

Lebanon

Question. Lebanon's economic crisis has pushed middle class Lebanese into poverty but the country's political elite still show no appetite for needed reforms and still seem to expect a no strings attached bailout if the suffering in Lebanon gets bad enough.

- How does the US balance the need to help alleviate suffering in Lebanon which directly contributes to security and stability not only in Lebanon but in Israel and the region more broadly but also ensure our assistance is being used to incentivize reforms?

Answer. Current U.S. assistance programs in Lebanon are designed to directly support the Lebanese people as they weather the current economic and humanitarian crisis, as well as support key partners and institutions, such as the Lebanese Armed Forces and Internal Security Forces, which are critical to stability in Lebanon and the region. If confirmed, I will reinforce to the Lebanese Government that concrete actions remain crucial—indeed, a condition—to unlocking longer-term structural support to Lebanon.

Question. What is your assessment of the new Lebanese Government? Is it capable of delivering for the Lebanese people and being a capable partner for the United States?

Answer. The United States welcomed the announcement that Lebanon's leaders agreed to form a new government under the leadership of Prime Minister Najib Mikati. The formation of a government is just the first step to halting Lebanon's terrible downward spiral; the follow-on steps must include enacting reforms to address the economic crisis, bring more accountability and transparency to a system that is rife with political corruption, and keep elections on track for next year. The solution to Lebanon's dire problems lie in Lebanese hands. If confirmed, I stand ready to support the new government as well as hold its members accountable for the hard work ahead.

Lebanon and Syrian Sanctions Liability

Question. I recognize the need to import energy from Egypt and Jordan to ease the suffering of hard-hit Lebanese and to prevent Iran and Hezbollah from capitalizing on a crisis that they are in large part created. I am also aware that the infrastructure for such a project already exists and I appreciate the willingness of Jordan and Egypt to help the people of Lebanon. However, I am also concerned about such a project running afoul of U.S. sanctions on Syria the risk that such imports could normalize the Assad regime's brutality.

- What sanctions liability do you see in such an import project and how do we balance these competing needs by getting the Lebanese people the relief they need without rewarding the Assad regime for more than ten years of atrocities against its own people?

Answer. Lebanon is currently experiencing an acute energy crisis that is having a tremendous impact on critical infrastructure such as hospitals and the water supply. U.S. assistance programs are designed to directly support the Lebanese people; Egypt and Jordan have recently offered a set of potential bilateral and multilateral agreements that could help Lebanon begin to address its power crisis in a sustainable and transparent manner. U.S. sanctions on the Assad regime remain an important tool to press for accountability, to include for its atrocious record of human rights abuse. If confirmed, I will work with the Department of the Treasury and our partners to ensure that any potential deal our partners reach is consistent with U.S. law, our broader policy priorities to mitigate any benefits to the Assad regime, and all relevant U.S. sanctions, and look forward to continuing to consult with Congress on this important issue.

Syria

Question. I am concerned that the Assad regime's apparent success in reestablishing full control of Daraa, despite prior diplomatic agreements that ensured a measure of local autonomy, will pave the way for an increased presence of Iranian backed militias, including Hezbollah, where they can continue to brutalize or displace the local population while menacing Israel and Jordan.

Question. Do you share these concerns and if so, what diplomatic measures can the administration take, both bilaterally and at the United Nations, to prevent additional civilian displacements and ensure Iranian militia activity does not further threaten Israel and Jordan?

Answer. The United States continues to engage with partners and allies as well as the U.N. to encourage all parties to adhere to ceasefires in Syria. The United States is also strongly committed to countering Iran and the militia groups it supports in Syria and will work with allies and partners to push back against Iran's destabilizing activities. The Biden-Harris administration is concerned by the grave conditions in Dara'a that resulted in the displacement of civilians and the blockage of humanitarian aid and has raised these concerns at the U.N. and with key Security Council members. If confirmed, I will continue our support for humanitarian organizations that are trying to deliver aid and will continue to push for increased access.

Syria-U.N.-led Political Process for Syria

Question. It is broadly acknowledged that the U.N.-led political process for Syria under UNSCR 2254 is broken due to Russian-enabled Assad regime intransigence. There is further a push by both Russia and the Assad regime to normalize ties with other Arab states like Jordan the UAE and Bahrain.

- What alternatives does the administration have to advancing the goal of an end to Syria's civil war in light of the gridlock in the U.N. process?

Answer. There is little question that unstinting Russian and Iranian military and other support have enabled the Assad regime to deflect international demands for accountability and political change for over a decade. The United States is engaged with U.N. Special Envoy Geir Pedersen, our allies, and other international partners in order to explore options and encourage all possible efforts to advance a political resolution to the conflict. The Biden-Harris administration supports the U.N.-facilitated, Syrian-led process laid out within the parameters of UNSCR 2254, including a nationwide ceasefire, the release of arbitrarily detained Syrians, and free and fair elections monitored by the U.N. If confirmed, I will continue to engage diplomatically to press for an end to the Syrian people's suffering.

Question. What do you see driving our Arab partners' increasing engagement with Damascus and how can U.S. diplomacy halt this creeping normalization?

Answer. There appears to be a belief among some countries in the region that engagement with Assad will lead to a reduction of the latter's relationship with Iran. I am skeptical on that score. The United States will not itself reestablish or upgrade diplomatic relations with the Assad regime. If confirmed, I will urge states in the region to consider carefully what they might require of the regime on behalf of the Syrian people—whether accountability for the missing or detained, or access to humanitarian aid and security, which the regime currently denies much of the country. The United States will remain engaged with the U.N., our allies, and other international partners on the best way forward in Syria.

Question. Do you think we can be doing more to ensure accountability and good governance in the Autonomous Administered Areas of North East Syria?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration understands political and economic stability are key to the ability of our local partners in Syria to focus on fighting ISIS. In one of its first acts, the administration lifted the U.S. freeze on stabilization assistance for Syria and announced in March almost $50 million for U.S. stabilization efforts in northeast Syria and will continue these efforts with FY 21 resources; the administration's FY 22 request for Syria reflects further robust support. U.S. assistance in northeast Syria prioritizes stabilization activities that contribute to the restoration of daily life by closing gaps in local authority capacities; supporting transitional justice, justice and accountability, and civil society programs; and addressing vulnerabilities previously exploited by ISIS.

Egypt

Question. What do you see as the largest priorities for security assistance to Egypt? How can U.S. engagement promote further energy development and security cooperation between Egypt and its neighbors, especially in the realm of clean and renewable energy?

Answer. I see the highest priority security challenges for Egypt as being the threat stemming from extremist groups in Libya and the Sahel, border security and maritime security. U.S. security assistance is appropriately focused on helping Egypt develop and maintain the capacity to address those priorities while emphasizing professionalization of its forces and support for human rights and international humanitarian law. Egypt has enormous solar and wind potential, and has made significant investments in the past decade to increase the share of renewables in its energy production. I am eager to work with Egypt to fulfill its aspirations to export clean energy to its neighbors, which will require significant investments in upgrading regional energy connectivity.

Question. Egypt faces the very real prospect of reduced flow from the Nile River. What more can the US do to help Egypt cope with such a future?

Answer. I well appreciate the singular importance of the Nile flow to Egypt's economy, especially its agriculture. I am pleased to see that Egypt is taking steps to modernize its agricultural systems and increase efficiencies in water use to better manage the growing demands for this critical resource in the future. U.S. assistance has brought improved education, clean water, better health, economic growth, and other benefits to the Egyptian people. The Department is working with Egypt to promote economic growth that underpins stability, and to advance our commercial and environmental goals.

Question. If confirmed, what message will you send to Egypt regarding its purchase of Russian Su-35's?

Answer. Dissuading Egypt from acquiring Su-35 fighter aircraft or any other major new military equipment from Russia is a key priority for the United States. The U.S. Government has consistently warned Egypt at the highest levels that accepting delivery of Su-35s or any new major military acquisitions from Russia risks triggering mandatory CAATSA Section 231 sanctions and negatively affecting our defense relationship and security cooperation. If confirmed, I will reinforce this message to the Government of Egypt.

Question. If confirmed, what message will you send to Egypt regarding ongoing human rights abuses, including the harassment and detention of the family members of U.S.-based activists? What leverage does the U.S. retain in this regard?

Answer. I share your concerns about the human rights situation in Egypt. If confirmed, I will communicate U.S. expectations to the Government of Egypt of tangible and sustained progress on improving its human rights record. The Biden-Harris administration supports greater space for Egyptian civil society and human rights organizations, as well as respect for freedom of expression. Secretary Blinken's recent decision on Foreign Military Financing showed that the Biden-Harris administration considers human rights to be a national security interest. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the Government of Egypt to address these human rights concerns. Promoting a stable, prosperous Egypt, where the Government protects the human rights of all individuals and fulfills the aspirations of the Egyptian people, is a core objective of U.S. policy.

Peace Agreement in Libya

Question. The peace agreement in Libya and the national unity government that it brought about present an important opportunity for Libyans and their neighbors in Africa and around the Mediterranean to turn the page on ten years of violence and chaos. However, challenges remain, most notably the continuing presence of Russian and Turkish-backed mercenaries, which represent, in my mind, the biggest threat to stability in Libya and the elections scheduled there for December.

- What steps can be taken, with the Libyan Government, along with the international community to get foreign fighters out of Libya?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration is in discussions with European and regional allies and partners, the interim Libyan Government, and others on how progress can be made towards the full withdrawal of all foreign military forces, foreign fighters, and mercenaries consistent with the October 23, 2020 Libyan ceasefire agreement. To that end, if confirmed, I am committed to charting a path forward toward national elections with the interim Libyan Government, regional partners, and the U.N. Those elections will themselves be a critical point along the way of getting foreign forces out of Libya. If confirmed, I am also committed to supporting the October 23, 2020, Libyan ceasefire agreement and its full implementation as called for in UNSCR 2570.

Question. What further steps should the US take to ensure that presidential and parliamentary elections are held on schedule in Libya?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration is in discussions with Libyan political leaders on the urgent need for them to agree on a constitutional and legal framework for elections. The Biden-Harris administration is also coordinating with European and regional allies and partners to ensure a united position from the international community on the importance of holding on-time elections. USAID has helped the Libyan High National Election Commission advance technical preparations for the elections so that they are prepared to hold the elections quickly once a legal basis is agreed. Ultimately, it will be up to Libyan political officials to forge compromises to ensure elections take place on December 24, and the administration has vigorously pressed the parties to do so.

Turkey and Libya's Maritime Border Agreement

Question. I have been vocal in my criticism of the maritime border agreement between Turkey and Libya's previous Government of National Accord, which I believe was based on a flawed understanding of international maritime law and a complete disregard for the legitimate claims of neighboring Mediterranean countries, including Greece and the Republic of Cyprus.

- What steps can the U.S. take to ensure that any such agreement is coordinated with Libya and Turkey's Mediterranean neighbors and takes into account their legitimate claims in the Mediterranean?

Answer. The Memorandum of Understanding on maritime boundaries between Turkey and Libya's former Government of National Accord has raised tensions in the region and has been unhelpful to efforts to negotiate a solution to the conflict. The United States has called on all parties to refrain from actions that risk heightening tensions in the Eastern Mediterranean. As a longstanding policy, the United States encourages states to resolve their disputes peacefully in accordance with international law.

U.S. Influence in Libya

Question. If confirmed, what facts would you need to see on the ground to move forward with a permanent U.S. diplomatic presence inside Libya? What further resources would you need?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration's intent is to resume regular diplomatic activities in Libya when the security situation permits and the necessary security measures are in place. The process for resumption of diplomatic operations entails a thorough Department analysis and review, careful logistical and security planning, interagency coordination to meet security, policy, and legal requirements, and congressional notification procedures. The administration will keep Congress informed with regard to any resources it would need.

Question. In the meantime, what further steps can be taken to maintain U.S. influence in the country?

Answer. Since the U.S. Embassy in Tripoli suspended operations in July 2014, officers with the Libya External Office in Tunis have conducted periodic day-trips into Libya for diplomatic engagement and frequently engaged with Libyan interlocutors in third-country locations. The administration, including Special Envoy Ambassador Richard Norland, also coordinates closely with European allies, countries in the region, and the United Nations. The United States co-chairs the Berlin Process Eco-conomic Working Group through which international partners help Libya make crucial economic reforms. Foreign assistance also boosts U.S. influence in the areas of the economy, access to water, and combatting climate change.

Tunisia

Question. How can U.S. engagement most effectively help Tunisia reach a sound economic footing?

Answer. The United States shares the Tunisian people's goal of a democratic government that can address the immediate economic and health crises facing the country. In that connection, our assistance promotes sustainable, inclusive economic growth and mitigates the effects of COVID-19. If confirmed, I will urge President Saied to designate a Prime Minister without further delay and enable formation of a government so that the United States and our partners can more effectively assist Tunisia in economic growth and development, particularly via the IMF.

Question. What more can the U.S. do to bolster both Tunisian civil society and the successful and productive security relationship between our two countries?

Answer. U.S. assistance, consistent messaging, and diplomatic engagement will continue to support civil society and civic engagement, which will be key to the success of any political and economic reforms. If confirmed, I am committed to strengthening our bilateral security relationship, through which the U.S. Government has provided over $928 million since 2011. This aid has improved the ability of the Tunisian military and civilian law enforcement agencies to conduct counter terrorism operations, secure the country's borders, provide citizen-oriented policing, and protect human rights while operating within the rule of law.

Yemen

Question. The administration's renewal of assistance to northern Yemen and insistence that the Houthis allow further humanitarian access there has helped to hold off a drastic worsening of an already terrible humanitarian crisis. However, the Houthis ongoing advance on Marib threatens to displace hundreds of thousands of already desperate Yemenis and shows a lack of interest by the Houthis in a peaceful end to the fighting, especially when coupled with their ongoing attacks against Saudi Arabia using Iranian missiles and drones.

- What is behind the Houthis determination to press on with a costly and destructive offensive? What steps can the U.S. take to bring them back to the negotiating table?

Answer. The Houthis remain intransigent and focused on their military offensive against Marib, which is the single biggest impediment to a national ceasefire and follow-on political negotiations. Apparently determined to take the oil-rich province, the Houthis are demonstrating wholesale indifference to the humanitarian cost. The offensive is exacerbating Yemen's humanitarian crisis, puts at immediate risk some one million IDPs and other civilians and is triggering broader instability. There is an international consensus on the urgency of resolving this conflict; if confirmed, I will work with U.S. Special Envoy Tim Lenderking and our international partners to push the Houthis to engage with the new U.N. Special Envoy for Yemen Hans Grundberg in good faith and without preconditions. The United States continues to work with our international partners to apply pressure on the Houthis, to include via domestic and U.N. sanctions, and, if confirmed, I will continue that critical work.

Question. The lack of fuel imports remains a major humanitarian concern. What more can the U.S. do to push Saudi Arabia and the Yemeni Government to allow more fuel imports to be allowed into Yemen?

Answer. The United States remains committed to addressing the humanitarian situation in Yemen. We closely monitor and consistently raise the need for unrestricted fuel imports at Hudaydah with the highest levels of the Yemeni and Saudi Governments. In response to continued U.S. advocacy, the Republic of Yemen Government has cleared 17 fuel ships to enter the port of Hudaydah since March 2021. Food and other commodities for commercial and humanitarian purposes continue to flow through Hudaydah at normal rates, according to the U.N. Verification and Inspection Mechanism for Yemen (UNVIM). Fuel imports through other Yemeni ports have increased, such that nationwide fuel imports are actually higher than average. That said, it is time for a different approach by the Hadi Government and the Saudi Government.

Jordan

Question. As you know, the current assistance Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) between the U.S. and Jordan is set to expire next year.

- What should be the U.S.'s priorities for the next MOU?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure U.S. assistance to Jordan through the next MOU is targeted to bolster the economic stability of this critical ally. A stable and secure Jordan allows us to jointly pursue shared regional security and economic goals. Economic Support Funds should foster self-reliance and capacity development of government and private sector counterparts towards implementing critical economic reform. To the degree the U.S. Government can incentivize needed structural reforms, Jordan can more rapidly open new pathways to economic growth. Foreign Military Financing should help ensure Jordan can continue to act as a close partner on a variety of shared security goals, including as a contributing member in the Coalition to Defeat ISIS.

Question. What further political and economic reforms do you think are needed to help Jordan get on to a more secure and sustainable footing?

Answer. If confirmed, I will promote private-sector-led and inclusive economic growth in Jordan. The country requires reforms to enable the private sector to grow more rapidly, to attract foreign investment, increase the capacity of firms to compete on the global market, and significantly expand current employment levels. Other important reforms include improving public sector effectiveness; improving the business climate; deepening electricity and water sector sustainability; and including more women and youth in the formal economy.

Question. What further ways can the U.S. support sustainable water sources in Jordan?

Answer. If confirmed, I will encourage Jordan to complete its national water desalination project, the Aqaba-Amman-Conveyance Project, in a timely and effective manner so that it addresses Jordan's water needs.

On July 8, Jordan and Israel announced an agreement to allow Jordan to purchase an additional and much needed 50 million cubic meters of water this year. If confirmed, I will encourage Jordan and Israel to finalize the agreement and continue to look for additional ways to increase water cooperation in the coming years. Expanding cooperation on the water issue will present additional opportunities to foster a healthier political relationship between the two countries.

Question. What is the potential for further cooperation between Israel and Jordan on the Red Sea-Dead Sea water project?

Answer. Both Israel and Jordan have indicated they no longer plan to pursue the Red Sea-Dead Sea water project. If confirmed, I will encourage Jordan to move out expeditiously on its national water desalination project, the Aqaba-Amman Conveyance Project, in a timely and effective manner so that it addresses Jordan's water needs.

Gulf

Question. Saudi Arabia's direct diplomatic engagement with Iran, facilitated by Baghdad, has been widely reported and is broadly considered an indicator that the Gulf states are not comfortable relying on JCPOA negotiations as a guarantor of their security against Iran's regional meddling. As a former US Ambassador to the UAE, I am confident you are very familiar with these sentiments.

- How do you perceive the utility of these ongoing talks and if confirmed, how will you work to ensure our regional partners, including the Gulf States as well as Israel, are integrated into Iran's nuclear talks?

Answer. I am aware of reports of multiple rounds of Saudi-Iranian talks facilitated by Iraq. Direct contacts and discussions between countries in the Gulf and Iran can be constructive in reducing tensions in the region; for the Gulf countries, these channels are also useful for making clear their requirements of Iran, including non-interference in their affairs. The UAE started such discussions in the summer of 2019, at a time of severely heightened tensions in the Gulf, and those exchanges continue today. Diplomacy is not a reward in this sense, but a vital means for securing their interests. Our Gulf partners and Israel have valid security concerns over Iran's destabilizing activity in the region. If confirmed, I will work with the Special Envoy for Iran, Rob Malley, to ensure our partners are consulted in the course of the JCPOA negotiations, as well as coordinate on U.S. efforts to deal with Iran's regional activities and to help our partners do the same.

Red Sea / Horn of Africa

Question. From the GERD dispute between Egypt and Ethiopia, to competition between Gulf States in the Horn of Africa, to maritime security along both sides of the Red Sea, there is significant overlap between NEA and the Africa Bureau, especially along the Red Sea and the Horn of Africa.

- What aspects of cooperation between the two bureaus do you think are going well? What areas need improvement?

Answer. Bureaus in the department, including Near Eastern Affairs (NEA) and African Affairs (AF), must work closely together to ensure full coordination and cooperation on the full range of shared and overlapping issues, and across the geographical/bureaucratic seam. Sustained communication at the leadership level in Washington and in the field ensures that both Bureaus can overcome these seams, and if confirmed I will promote mechanisms to encourage such communication. If confirmed, I will provide the leadership and model the kind of close cooperation with AF that is critical for the success of our respective work. I will also work closely with the Department's Special Envoy for the Horn of Africa, Jeffery Feltman, and ensure that NEA missions work collaboratively with AFRICOM.

If confirmed, I will also ensure that Red Sea and African issues are part of our regular conversations with key NEA Governments.

Question. If confirmed, what steps will you take to improve cooperation with the Africa Bureau on issues that span this divide and to ensure that such issues facing sub-Saharan Africa are raised with governments in the Middle East?

Answer. If confirmed, I will lead by example, and ensure that NEA staff coordinate closely with colleagues in the AF Bureau and with the Special Envoy for the Horn of Africa Jeffery Feltman, as well as with AFRICOM. If confirmed, I will ensure that Red Sea and African issues are part of our regular conversation with key NEA Governments. If confirmed, I will also continue to ensure diplomacy, defense and development tools are brought together to address cross-cutting issues through the Trans-Sahara Counterterrorism Partnership.

Eastern Mediterranean Energy and Security

Question. Egypt, Jordan and the Palestinian Authority have all joined the EastMed Gas Forum alongside Greece, Cyprus and Israel, greatly increasing the potential for cooperation among the countries of the Eastern Mediterranean on energy development and security, especially for clean and renewable energy sources.

- If confirmed, what steps will you take to coordinate with both the European Affairs Bureau and the Bureau of Energy Resources to promote increased cooperation in the Eastern Mediterranean?

Answer. If confirmed, I will lead by example, and ensure that NEA staff coordinate closely with colleagues in the European Affairs and AF Bureaus and with the Special Envoy for the Horn of Africa Jeffery Feltman, as well as with AFRICOM. If confirmed, I will ensure that Red Sea and African issues are part of our regular conversation with key NEA Governments. If confirmed, I will also continue to ensure diplomacy, defense and development tools are brought together to address cross-cutting issues through the Trans-Sahara Counterterrorism Partnership.

Great Power Competition in the Middle East

Question. The administration has repeatedly insisted that it is pivoting away from the Middle East to focus on great power competition with Russia and China.

- How do you see your job unfolding within this new paradigm?

Answer. Global power competition happens around the globe, including in the Middle East. The Biden-Harris administration is committed to rebuilding and restoring U.S. partnerships across the region. If confirmed, I will energetically promote the value of a sustained and strategic partnership with the United States, a partnership that stands in stark contrast to the transactional relationships offered by the People's Republic of China and Russia. If confirmed, I will work closely with colleagues in the Bureaus of European Affairs (EUR) and East Asian and Pacific Affairs (EAP) to ensure that strategic priorities with respect to Russia and the People's Republic of China are regular agenda items in discussions with regional partners.

Question. If confirmed, what steps will you take as Assistance Secretary to counter Russian and Chinese influence in the Middle East and North Africa?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work closely with colleagues in the Bureau of European Affairs (EUR) and the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs (EAP) to ensure that strategic priorities with respect to Russia and the People's Republic of China (PRC) are regular agenda items in discussions with regional partners. This will include empowering the three Regional China Officers deployed at embassies across the region to increase reporting, analysis, and engagement on PRC-related issues. If confirmed, I will also work with our Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor, as well as our Bureau of Political Military Affairs, to ensure an approach that maintains our position as the premier partner in the region while elevating our values, including respect for human rights.

The administration's commitment to reducing regional tensions, banking the fires of conflict, building deep partnerships based on an affirmative agenda, and demonstrating the value of a sustained partnership with the United States remains the best approach to countering Russian and PRC influence across the region.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. BARBARA A. LEAF BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. Great power competition often occurs outside of the Pacific. How do you plan to compete with Russia and China given the administration's apparent retreat from the Middle East?

Answer. The President's vision for a collaborative partnership with the countries of the Middle East comes in the wider context of a growing global challenge to our values of open societies and open economies. This challenge comes primarily from the People's Republic of China (PRC) and Russia. Our strength as a nation resides in the very commitment the U.S. Government has demonstrated over decades to our partners, and to the values the United States brings to those relationships.

The administration seeks to deepen diplomatic, security, cultural, and economic engagements through an affirmative agenda grounded in our democratic values. If confirmed, I will work to demonstrate that partnership with the United States remains our best strategy for addressing global competition in the Middle East, now and into the future.

Question. The Iranian regime received an approximately $4-5 billion windfall in sanctions relief as a result of the JCPOA. In 2017, Sec. Blinken indicated that the "few billion dollars that have wound up in Iran's coffers that had huge debts to pay and the money that was freed up as a result of the deal has mostly gone to pay those debts and to bolster the economy." However, a vast body of follow-on reporting indicates that a majority of sanctions relief was instead funneled to the regime's proxies in Syria, Lebanon, Iraq and Yemen. As the Biden administration pursues sanctions relief as a part of its return to the JCPOA, what tools and safeguards exist that would prevent Iran from directing future sanctions relief to malign activities?

Answer. As the U.S. Government acknowledged at the time, although Iran devoted most of the resources it obtained through sanctions relief under the JCPOA toward bolstering its economy, it did use some of it for its military and its regional activities. Iran and its proxies and partners engaged in these activities prior to the JCPOA, after the conclusion of the JCPOA, and with increased aggressiveness after the U.S. exit from the JCPOA in 2018. An Iran with a nuclear weapon would present a threat of a far greater magnitude. The U.S. Government maintains a range of tools to combat terrorist financing and will continue to use these to counter Iran's destabilizing activities and support for terrorism. The administration will continue to use its considerable leverage—including sanctions that would remain in place in the event of a U.S. return to the JCPOA, the threat of sanctions re-imposition, and other joint action with our allies and partners—to protect U.S. interests.

Question. Both the Israelis and our partners in the Gulf Cooperation Council, who sit much closer to the Iranian threat, bemoaned a lack of consultations prior to the U.S. entry into the JCPOA. Further, many have characterized Special Envoy Malley's consultations as "one-way" and not responsive to their concerns. Do you commit to extensive consultations with Israel and our regional partners prior to making concessions to Iran? Will you seek Israel's concurrence before finalizing any proposed agreement or arrangement related to Iran's nuclear program?

Answer. Department officials, and in particular Special Envoy for Iran Robert Malley, have been in close contact with partners in Israel and among the Gulf Arab states and will continue consulting closely with these key partners as this process proceeds. Every one of us shares a common interest: seeing to it that Iran never acquires a nuclear weapon.

Question. How do you address criticisms that the Biden administration re-engagement with Iran has only served to isolate Israel and our Gulf partners?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration has an ironclad commitment to Israel's security. Alongside that commitment, the administration is focused on de-escalating tensions, banking the fires of conflict in Yemen, Libya and Syria, and enhancing stability throughout the Middle East. The Department has updated Israeli and Gulf counterparts regularly before and after negotiation rounds and is regularly engaged in discussions on our work to constrain and contain Iran's destabilizing regional activities. All of the Gulf countries have opened diplomatic channels with Tehran and are using them energetically for de-escalation; most of the channels pre-date the Biden-Harris administration.

Question. The JCPOA confronted the international community with several problematic sunset provisions on Iran's ability to receive and transfer conventional weapons (expired in 2020) and nuclear-related ballistic missile activity (expires in 2023). How will the Biden administration address re-imposing these restrictions in a more lasting manner—particularly given Russian and Chinese objections?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration remains concerned about Iran's nuclear capabilities as well as its ability to receive and transfer conventional weapons. The Department is working with its partners to address these, and the many other issues of concern with Iran. The administration believes that diplomacy is the best path forward on the nuclear challenge at this time, but is prepared to leverage all applicable authorities, including sanctions, against Iran for its provocative and destabilizing activities, including its ballistic missile development and provision of weapons to armed groups and other violent partners and proxies.

Question. Explain your strategic approach to promote sovereignty, diminish Iranian influence, and separate Iranian-backed proxies from legitimate security guarantors in Iraq and Lebanon.

Answer. I am committed to working closely with regional and European allies to diminish Iran's destabilizing activities across the region, including in Iraq and Lebanon.

The administration will continue to use its considerable leverage—including sanctions that would remain in place, the threat of sanctions re-imposition, and other joint action with our allies and partners—to protect U.S. interests and to promote wider security and stability in the region. If confirmed, I will deepen the good work led by our missions in the field, supporting and empowering moderates—whether in government or civil society—who support rule of law and the sovereignty of the state.

Question. How does the October 2020 expiration of the conventional weapons embargo affect Iran's ability to exert influence in the region?

Answer. The expiration of the U.N. conventional weapons arms embargo has not resulted in any discernable change in Iran's ability to exert influence in the region. For decades, Iran has taken actions that destabilize the region, including support for terrorism, developing its ballistic missile program, and providing weapons and materiel to proxy groups. The Biden-Harris administration will continue to use domestic authorities to dissuade countries from providing arms to Iran or buying them from Iran.

Question. In recent years, China has become Iran's preeminent oil and trading partner, providing Iran with crucial technological support to help develop its energy resources and other forms of infrastructure. In June 2020, China and Iran allegedly entered into a 'Comprehensive Strategic Partnership', which includes a maximum investment of $400 billion to improve Iran's oil, gas, and transportation infrastructure. What impact does Chinese economic investment have on the efficacy of the international sanction regimes against Iran? What gains does China receive from such investment? How would the Chinese Government, or Chinese-based companies, benefit from the lifting of U.S. sanctions against Iran?

Answer. In March 2021, the PRC and Iran signed a 25-year strategic cooperation agreement, building on a bilateral Comprehensive Strategic Partnership signed in 2016. Such PRC partnerships are not unique. The PRC has Comprehensive Strategic Partnerships with a number of other countries in the region, which often include investment proposals that never materialize. The PRC's recently concluded agreement with Iran also likely includes such proposals.

Nevertheless, the Department is watching Iran's economic activities closely, including its economic engagement with China. The administration's current Iran-related sanctions remain in effect unless and until they are lifted, and the U.S. Government will of course continue to address efforts at sanctions evasion.

Question. How does the United States drive a wedge between or shape CCP-Iranian relations?

Answer. While competition defines the U.S. relationship with the People's Republic of China, there are other areas of cooperation; one of those is the effort to constrain Iran's nuclear program. Beijing has no interest in seeing Iran develop a nuclear weapon, given the profoundly destabilizing impact that would have in a region upon which China depends for its oil and other energy imports.

The Department will continue to engage with the PRC on this common interest and discourage Beijing from taking steps vis-à-vis Iran that threaten our interests.

Question. Please provide your view of the Abraham Accords and their impacts for regional security, economic cooperation, and prosperity in the region.

Answer. The Abraham Accords of 2020 between Israel and the UAE, Bahrain, Morocco and Sudan represent an important new dynamic and a key opportunity to enhance peaceful co-existence and economic integration. The Accords have already proven to be a vehicle for economic growth, having spurred new trade and investment deals that previously would have been unthinkable. Over time, these unfolding relationships and the new economic partnerships they are fostering will create opportunities for the young and marginalized communities across the region.

Question. How do plan to expand on the Abraham Accords to broker additional normalization agreements and ensure that existing agreements reap tangible economic and security benefits?

Answer. I very much welcome the Abraham Accords. If confirmed, I am committed to working with countries across the region to deepen both the new relationships as well the historical relationships with Egypt and Jordan, and foster new ones. I will do this by engaging our missions throughout the region, highlighting the economic and security benefits of relations with Israel and leveraging the wide range of diplomatic tools at our disposal. If confirmed, I also look forward to learning from Israel's new partners in the region to better understand how we can work together to advance new normalization agreements and strengthen the existing ones.

Question. In 2016 John Kerry argued that there would be no "separate peace" between Israel and Arabs without first solving the issue of Palestinian statehood. What are your views on Palestinian statehood and its ties to additional normalization agreements? Doesn't re-inserting Palestinian statehood back into the peace process hinder prospects of further normalizations with Israel?

Answer. I believe that a two-state solution is the best way to ensure equal measures of freedom, security and prosperity for Israelis and Palestinians. By making Israel more secure and opening new channels for constructive dialogue and diplomacy between Israel and the Arab world, normalization agreements also bring with them the potential to create new opportunities to advance a negotiated peace between Israelis and Palestinians. Similarly, making progress towards a two-state solution may hasten new normalization agreements. If confirmed, I will work to capitalize on all opportunities to advance peaceful co-existence between Israel and its Arab neighbors, as well as help create the conditions for direct negotiations of a two-state solution between Israelis and Palestinians.

Question. What is your assessment of Palestinian leadership and its ability to reach consensus between Gaza and the West Bank on issues of statehood and support for terrorism?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with Israel and the Palestinian Authority to restore calm in the West Bank and Gaza and keep flash point issues from flaring into violence. There are issues of good governance and accountability that affect the standing of the Palestinian Authority in the eyes of the Palestinian public, and that lie within the PA's hands to advance; there are at the same time steps that the Israeli Government can consider for enhancing the role of the PA in delivering services and economic opportunities. It is incumbent upon both sides to adopt an affirmative and practical approach to the conflict that encourages constructive, positive steps for providing the Palestinian people—whether in Gaza or the West Bank—greater economic opportunities while restoring the conditions that will make possible eventual direct negotiations of a two-state solution.

Question. In your view, how do Israeli-Arab normalization agreements affect the prospects for Israel-Palestinian peace negotiations?

Answer. All such agreements—whether the Abraham Accords, the historical peace agreements between Jordan and Egypt and Israel, or additional normalization agreements—contribute to diminishing the deep antipathy that has characterized Arab-Israeli perspectives for decades. In opening new channels for constructive dialogue and diplomacy, and for unprecedented people-to-people engagement between Israel and the Arab world, these normalization agreements have the potential to create new opportunities to advance a negotiated peace between Israelis and Palestinians. Similarly, progress towards a negotiated two-state solution may encourage other states in the region to take steps towards normalization. If confirmed, I will work to capitalize on all opportunities to advance normalization between Israel and its Arab neighbors, as well as advance the conditions for direct negotiation of a two-state solution between Israelis and Palestinians.

Question. Provide your views on the relocation of the U.S. embassy to Jerusalem, recognition of Jerusalem as the capital of Israel, and United States recognition of Israel's sovereignty over the Golan Heights. What is your view on the reversibility of these U.S. policies?

Answer. This administration recognizes that Jerusalem is central to the national visions of both Israelis and Palestinians. The administration also recognizes Jerusalem as the capital of Israel; the U.S. Embassy will remain in Jerusalem. Jerusalem itself is a final status issue to be resolved through direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians. In considering the U.S. position on the Golan Heights, the administration above all gives great weight to Israel's security. As long as Bashar al-Assad is in control of Syria and Iran remains active in Syria, it would be irresponsible to urge Israel to part with the Golan Heights. Control of the strategic Golan Heights provides Israel an added measure of security from the turmoil next door.

This administration has not reversed U.S. policy on these important issues. If confirmed, I look forward to ensuring that all issues related to Jerusalem and Israel's security are handled with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

Question. Despite opening the aperture of ESF and INCLE to the Palestinians, the State Department has achieved no progress on the pay-to-slay policy. Please provide your roadmap for addressing this egregious practice.

Answer. I believe the Palestinian practice of prisoner and martyr payments is abhorrent. I, and this administration, are absolutely committed to working to end the practice of Palestinian prisoner and "martyr" payments in a manner that addresses longstanding U.S. and international concerns. If confirmed, I would build on the work thus far, through sustained diplomatic engagement and pressure, underscoring that part of resetting the U.S.-Palestinian relationship is seeing reform on this heinous practice.

Question. At great cost, the United States has worked to support a sovereign independent Iraq, reframe the U.S.-Iraq bilateral relationship, and foster regional stability. How do you plan to continue to further U.S. interests in Iraq? What are your priority lines of effort linked to U.S. national security interests? What role will institutional reform and anti-corruption efforts play in this strategy? What role will countering Iranian influence play in this strategy?

Answer. A sovereign, stable, democratic, and prosperous Iraq is in the national interest of the United States as well as our partners in the Middle East. U.S. policies and programs are focused on that strategic objective. With Iraq's parliamentary elections scheduled for October 10, the Department's efforts are focused on increasing political participation by increasing trust in the elections' credibility, including by leading international efforts to fund the U.N. Assistance Mission to Iraq's electoral monitoring and technical assistance programs. U.S. assistance and engagements in support of institutional reform and anti-corruption efforts also contribute to more responsive, transparent, and inclusive democratic governance and institutions.

Since 2014, the United States has led international efforts to enable the return of displaced people to their homes and consolidate the Iraqi Government's control over areas liberated from ISIS. These initiatives and others are hampered by Iran's malign influence, including its support for militias operating outside state control, and their repeated efforts to target civil society activists and protestors for assassination. Iran-backed militias are a continuing threat to the Iraqi state. To effectively counter this, it is essential that the United States continue its efforts to build the capacity of the Iraqi Government and its democratic institutions.

Question. How do you plan to address the presence of Iranian-backed militias?

Answer. The administration shares your concern about Iran's destabilizing activities, including its support for proxies and militias. Iran's unacceptable support for terrorism threatens our forces, diplomatic personnel, and partners in the region. The President is committed to countering any Iranian threat to our personnel and our vital interests and has and will continue to respond to any such threats using all appropriate means. If confirmed I will work within the Department and inter-agency, using the full spectrum of tools available, to address the threat Iranian-backed militia groups pose to United States personnel, interests, and partners.

Question. Critics point to President Obama's withdrawal from Iraq in 2011 as one of the biggest errors of his presidency. The Obama administration departed without securing a Status of Forces Agreement, allowed the Iraqi Security Forces to atrophy, did not adequately address the abuses of the Maliki Government, and failed to address Sunni disenfranchisement that ultimately set conditions for the Islamic State's unchecked movement across the Iraqi border in 2014. Please provide your perspectives on the root causes of the rise of the Islamic State in Iraq as they related to U.S. policies, views on current troop levels as they relate to State Department objectives, and recommendations on key State Department initiatives for preventing an Islamic State resurgence.

Answer. There were many factors that contributed to ISIS' rise. The Syrian civil war opened a battleground that attracted terrorists from across the world to Iraq's doorstep. ISIS has roots in Iraq, but in Syria it became a conventional force, asserting control over territory and capable of attacking a sovereign state. At the same time, Iraq's Government ruled in a sectarian manner and failed to adequately address the needs of minority communities, creating a permissive environment for a brutal offensive that captured significant Iraqi territory in 2014-2015. The United States then led a Coalition to assist the Iraqi Security Forces, including the Kurdish Peshmerga, in taking back their territory. At the U.S.-Iraq Strategic Dialogue held in July, the two delegations decided that the U.S. military presence would remain in Iraq, transitioning fully to advising and assisting the Iraqi forces. U.S. troop levels reflect the current stage of the Defeat-ISIS mission and the increased capacity of the Iraqi Security Forces.

Question. How important is continued U.S. troop presence to Iraq's stability?

Answer. U.S. forces are in Iraq at the request of and in coordination with the Government of Iraq. The Biden-Harris administration supports maintaining a small number of military service members to coordinate intelligence-sharing and to advise and assist Iraqi counterterrorism forces as they lead the ground fight against the continuing threat of ISIS, so it cannot re-emerge to again threaten Iraq, the American people, or our partners.

Question. How appropriate are current bilateral diplomatic agreements (exchange of notes) for a sustained diplomatic and security cooperation mission?

Answer. The administration assesses that we have sufficient arrangements with the Government of Iraq to continue the fight against ISIS and to develop the long-term capacity of the Iraqi Security Forces.

Question. Iraq's security apparatus remains dependent on DoD-administered Counter-ISIS Train and Equip Fund (CTEF) and congressionally-appropriated foreign military financing (FMF). Additionally, nearly 50% of Iraq's FMF expenditures are consumed with maintaining existing contracts. Please provide your thoughts on transitioning Iraq from CTEF to more traditional forms of Title 22 security cooperation, and 'right sizing' the Iraqi Security Forces in a manner that the Government of Iraq can sustain given current budget shortfalls.

Answer. Iraqi officials tell us at every opportunity that U.S. and Coalition support are necessary to maintain our military gains, as ISIS remains a threat in Iraq. While anticipating that Iraq will continue to receive substantial assistance from DoD in the short term via the Counter-ISIS Train and Equip Fund (CTEF), DoD's future spending in Iraq is still to be determined. The Biden-Harris administration is focusing FMF on long-term security priorities in Iraq. The Office of Security Cooperation—Iraq (OSC-I) continues to pursue opportunities that will make Iraq more self-sufficient, especially in terms of maintenance. The U.S. Government wants to be Iraq's partner of choice and will work to wean Iraq off expensive contract maintenance as part of the maturation of the Iraqi Security Forces. The Department's efforts are focused on leveraging FMF as a vital instrument for developing Iraq's long-term capability and capacity to defeat threats to Iraq's sovereignty and territorial integrity.

Question. Lack of United States engagement and enforcement of chemical weapons 'redlines' during the Obama administration opened the door to increased Russian involvement and allowed the civil war and abuses against the Syrian people to continue unabated. Current progress towards a political reconciliation under UNSCR 2254 have similarly stalled. Please provide your views on the United States' role in Syria and accelerating progress on UNSCR 2254.

Answer. The United States is engaged with the U.N., including Special Envoy Geir Pedersen, our allies, and other international partners, in order to explore options and encourage all possible efforts to advance a political resolution to the conflict. While this has been the least kinetic year in a decade of conflict in Syria, it has proven to be the most disastrous one in economic terms, with 90 percent of the Syrian people falling below the poverty line. The immediate focus of the administration has thus been: ensuring the robust provision of humanitarian assistance to the Syrian people; sustaining ceasefire lines to prevent further violence; and providing the necessary resources to support and demonstrate our continued commitment to the enduring defeat of ISIS. If confirmed, I commit to working to advance efforts to promote progress toward a political resolution within the parameters of UNSCR 2254.

Question. U.S. Syria policy is broadly governed by UNSCR 2254 and associated sanctions regimes. Does Bashar al Assad's expanded military control and the de facto ceasefire change alter the prospects of a political settlement under UNSCR 2254? Do we need a new construct apart from UNSCR 2254 for Syria policy?

Answer. The Assad regime controls some 70 percent of Syrian territory, but that increased exercise of control has not provided the regime any greater legitimacy, given the terrible record of the past decade. The United States remains focused on three priorities: ensuring the robust provision of humanitarian assistance to the Syrian people; sustaining ceasefire lines to prevent further violence; and providing the necessary resources to support and demonstrate our continued commitment to the enduring defeat of ISIS (); these priorities fall within the larger framework of advancing a political settlement to secure the future stability of the Syrian people, however remote that settlement appears at this time. If confirmed, I will continue to engage diplomatically to mitigate the Syrian people's suffering and press for accountability for the crimes against humanity committed by the regime. The United States will remain engaged with the U.N., our allies, and other international partners to encourage all efforts to advance the political track. To this end, the United States has been working with our partners and allies to support U.N. Special Envoy Geir Pedersen's efforts to advance the political process in Geneva.

Question. What is the linkage between U.S. troop levels in Syria, countering the Islamic State, blunting Iranian designs, influencing Turk and Russian Syria calculus, and associated impacts on political UNSCR 2254 discussions?

Answer. The U.S. military mission in Syria is there for one mission: preventing an ISIS resurgence. The mission requires demonstrated U.S. commitment and continued U.S. stabilization assistance to our partners. The Syrian Democratic Forces cannot continue to take on ISIS without U.S. support. The administration will continue to work with Turkey on our shared objectives in Syria, while addressing areas of disagreement. The United States has always been open to dialogue with Russia on Syria as long as the dialogue contributes to protecting civilians and to credibly advancing a political resolution to the conflict, as laid out in UNSCR 2254. If confirmed, I will use all diplomatic tools available to ensure that the political process moves forward.

Question. What relative effect would a U.S. troop withdrawal have on U.S. influence over future negotiations?

Answer. The United States continues to retain a limited military presence in NE Syria for the campaign against ISIS in partnership with the Syrian Democratic Forces (SDF) and is deeply committed to this partnership. The SDF cannot continue to root out ISIS terrorists on its own or guard the tens of thousands of ISIS detainees who are still in their custody, without U.S. support. Furthermore, preventing a resurgence of ISIS in Iraq and Syria, as well as its branches and networks beyond the Middle East, demands revitalized U.S. engagement, along with our 82 partners and allies within the Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS.

Question. The Caesar Syria Civilian Protection Act is intended to prevent rehabilitation of the Assad regime, seek accountability for the regime's atrocities, and advance a political solution to the conflict. Please provide your views on the role of Caesar legislation in furthering U.S. objectives in Syria.

Answer. The State Department is committed to advancing accountability for atrocities committed by the Assad regime, as well as for abuses by terrorist organizations and other parties in Syria. The Caesar Act, and our other Syria and Syria-related or applicable sanctions authorities, are important tools to press for accountability and limit the ability of the Assad regime and others to fuel or profit from the ongoing conflict. Members of Congress spoke clearly on this issue when they voted for the Caesar Act. On July 28, the Biden-Harris administration imposed sanctions in the spirit of the Caesar Act on Assad regime institutions and officials implicated in human rights abuses, illustrating the administration's push for accountability and justice for victims. If confirmed, I will continue to use all available tools and authorities to target persons perpetrating human rights abuses in Syria on behalf of the Assad regime.

Question. Turkey's objectives in northeast Syria run counter to U.S. interests while we tacitly support their activities in the northwest. How do we reconcile and balance Syria and Turkey policy? Can you balance Syria-Turkey policy without finding a Kurdish solution?

Answer. Turkey is a member of the Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS, and we share an interest in sustainably ending the conflict in Syria. The United States will continue to work together with Turkey toward our shared objectives in Syria and to address areas of disagreement. Turkey has remained an important partner in ensuring Syrians have access to life-saving assistance, as demonstrated by Ankara's advocacy for the adoption of U.N. Security Council Resolution 2585 to reauthorize the provision of cross-border humanitarian assistance through Turkey into northwest Syria. The United States will work together with Turkey and our local Syrian partners for the safety and security of U.S. forces, partner forces, and civilians.

Question. The U.N. experts report on Libya accused the warring parties and their international backers—the United Arab Emirates, Russia, and Egypt on one side and Turkey and Qatar on the other—of violating the arms embargo with total impunity. Similarly, the issue of foreign mercenaries has plagued the run-up to Libya's December elections. How do you plan to address reported violations of the U.N. arms embargo? How do you impose costs on arms embargo violators without harming U.S. objectives in other areas? How do you impose costs on mercenaries and their sponsors?

Answer. Ensuring the rights of all Libyans to choose their leaders is critical as Libyans seek to regain their sovereignty after years of destructive foreign interventions. The October 23, 2020, ceasefire agreement calls for respecting the U.N. arms embargo and for the removal of all foreign forces and mercenaries from Libya. For the first time in many years, there is a broad international consensus on both the ceasefire agreement and the Libyan Political Dialogue Forum's roadmap for presidential and parliamentary elections in December. This consensus includes some, if not all, of those who previously engaged in supporting Libyan factions against each other. I am committed to working with the interim Libyan Government, regional partners, and the U.N. to support the ceasefire agreement and its full implementation as called for in UNSCR 2570, including the immediate withdrawal of all foreign military forces, foreign fighters, proxy groups, and mercenaries. Holding the December elections is a U.S. priority, as a new national government will be able to make informed, sovereign decisions, including on defense issues.

Question. While current policy has been to publicize Russian adventurism in Libya, how does the United States impose real costs for Russia's use of private military contractors, i.e. Wagner, in Libya?

Answer. Russia has increased its use of private military companies like the Wagner Group in disparate parts of the globe, to destructive and destabilizing effect; their use represents an attempt to increase Russian influence while providing the Kremlin with a thin veil of deniability. The United States has sanctioned PMC Wagner and its personnel, including its president, Yevgeniy Prigozhin, and has publicized Wagner activities in Libya and sub-Saharan Africa. The U.S. Government also supports the work of the U.N. Panel of Experts to identify violations of the arms embargo. The U.S. Government continues to support the Libyan-defined path towards elections, which could pave the way for a new Government to establish control over its territory, an essential step for removing foreign forces.

Question. Egypt is located at a strategic crossroads between the Mediterranean, Middle East, and Africa, remains an important U.S. partner in the region, and is important to Israel's security. However, in light of Egypt's growing cooperation with Russia and reports of potential Su-35 sales, is Egypt pivoting irrevocably towards Russia?

Answer. Egypt is a strategic partner for the United States and the bilateral defense relationship—more than four decades old—advances important U.S. national interests. Egypt's recent decision to apply a billion dollars of its own national funds towards refurbishment of its Apache helicopters, the largest ever nationally funded procurement of U.S. defense articles, underlines that Egypt, too, recognizes the strategic nature of the bilateral relationship. Cairo still views the United States as its security partner of choice, but we unquestionably face intensified competition in the defense procurement arena. Over the last decade, Egypt has been diversifying its arms purchases, including with French, German, and Italian procurements. The administration continues to reinforce the advantages of purchasing U.S. systems, including in terms of quality and interoperability with U.S. and regional partners. In the case of the potential acquisition of Su-35 fighter aircraft or other major new military equipment from Russia, the administration has emphasized the serious risk of triggering mandatory sanctions under CAATSA Section 231. We have by no means lost the battle for influence and primacy of position. That said, the U.S. Government must continue to focus energy on dissuading Egypt from potential significant Russian arms purchases.

Question. The Egyptians cite holds under the Obama administration for their outreach to Russia. Similarly, the Biden administration recently held $170M in FMF conditioned on political prisoners. Please provide details of the cases associated with the administration's FMF hold and the implications of holding FMF over non-American imprisonments.

Answer. Secretary Blinken recently decided to condition the use of $130 million in FMF on the Government of Egypt fulfilling specific human rights-related requests, which have been the subject of a private dialogue. The Biden-Harris administration has engaged with the Government of Egypt privately to communicate these requests, and believes this approach affords the best prospects for making serious progress on this important set of issues.

Question. Would you characterize a potential Egyptian purchase of Su-35s from Russia as a significant transaction as described under the Countering America's Adversaries Through Sanctions Act (CAATSA)?

Answer. If confirmed, I would work with the relevant State Department offices and U.S. Government agencies to closely review any delivery of Su-35 aircraft from Russia as potentially a significant transaction under Section 231 of the Countering America's Adversaries through Sanctions Act.

Question. Have the Abraham Accords set conditions for a renewed Middle East Strategic Alliance (MESA) or a derivative? What multilateral structures you suggest to maintain stability in the Middle East while simultaneously reducing U.S. commitment?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration is committed to helping Israel build partnerships that further integrate it into the region. Any sustainable regional economic and security dialogue will need to include Israel, and normalization efforts have opened that door. If confirmed, I will use diplomacy to press for a structured regional dialogue—with support from other members of the United Nations Security Council—that explores ways to reduce tensions, create pathways to de-escalation, and manage mistrust, particularly between Saudi Arabia and Iran.

Question. Would these multilateral structures force the United States to rely on imperfect partners with imperfect human rights records? How does the United States strike the appropriate balance between U.S. presence and reliance on imperfect partners to maintain security and accomplish U.S. national security interests?

Answer. The President has made clear that the administration will not give our partners in the Middle East a blank check to pursue policies at odds with American interests and values. If confirmed, I will have frank conversations with our partners about our elevation of human rights as a foreign policy priority. The deep and strategic relationships between the United States and our closest regional partners allows us to advance regional security and engage in a constructive dialogue on human rights that will make our relationships stronger and more sustainable. If confirmed, I will pursue both while supporting our closest partners in the face of threats to their security.

Question. During a November 2019 primary debate, then President-elect Biden said he would limit arms sales to Saudi Arabia and make them the "pariah that they are." President Biden has since suspended offensive arms sales to the kingdom and ceased offensive support to the Kingdom's operations in Yemen (although this was largely symbolic). Isolating Saudi Arabia would likely have negative consequences for U.S.-Saudi counterterrorism cooperation, would diminish U.S. efforts to improve Saudi Arabia's human rights record, and would eliminate Saudi Arabia's potentially helpful role in a broader Middle Eastern multilateral security construct.

- How do you frame the U.S. Saudi relationship in a manner that best promotes U.S. national security interests and doesn't push Saudi Arabia to [the People's Republic of] China ?

Answer. Saudi Arabia remains a key Middle East partner of the United States and can play a constructive role in resolving regional disputes and conflicts, as well as contribute to solutions to global challenges such as climate change. U.S.-Saudi counterterrorism cooperation over many decades has saved countless lives, and directly contributed to the fight to defeat ISIS. The U.S. commitment to support Saudi Arabia in defending its territory, home to more than 70,000 U.S. citizens, is a cornerstone of our strategic partnership and is unmatched by any potential rival to U.S. interests in the region. The United States also needs this partnership to reflect our values. If confirmed, I will support the administration's recalibration of the U.S.-Saudi relationship to bring greater transparency and accountability to it, while anchoring human rights on the bilateral agenda and preserving our underlying strategic partnership in everything from counterterrorism, to pushing back against Iranian malign activities, to higher education and climate change. This is a multifaceted and deep-rooted partnership that must address areas of concern and advance areas of shared opportunity.

United Arab Emirates Policy

UAE's Role in the Middle East

Question. UAE has served as an important U.S. partner in the Middle East and Afghanistan. UAE led efforts to normalize diplomatic ties with Israel under the Abraham Accords, and has a deep economic relationship with the United States. What is the UAE's role in the broader Middle East vis-à-vis U.S. national interests?

Answer. The UAE has been one of our closest economic, diplomatic, and security partners in the Middle East. It has built some of the most effective institutions and companies in the region and demonstrated that it can play a constructive role in resolving or de-escalating regional conflicts. The UAE Government provided tremendous support to Operation Allies Refuge, housing, feeding and caring for thousands of Americans and Afghans whom the U.S. Government removed from harm's way, as they made their way to the United States. The UAE has shown, in its historic agreement to establish relations with Israel, as well as its productive recent diplomatic efforts with Ethiopia, Sudan and Egypt, that it can contribute meaningfully to a more peaceful Middle East and broader region. That is not to say that the U.S.-UAE relationship has not faced challenges. The 2017 Gulf rift divided U.S. partners in the region; the UAE's and Qatar's animosity exacerbated conflicts in Libya and the Horn of Africa. Doha and Abu Dhabi have made significant progress in reconciling these differences since the Al Ula Declaration of January 2021, which formally brought the Gulf rift to an end. If confirmed, I will encourage continued work to repair relations between these two important U.S. partners, and will look to the UAE to continue its close and multifaceted partnership with the United States.

Question. How does the United States moderate UAE's often expeditionary Muslim Brotherhood-oriented foreign policy and encourage it to take a more productive role?

Answer. The UAE has been a capable, productive diplomatic and security partner for the United States for decades. That is the case today as well, on issues such as Libya and in the UAE's helpful efforts on the fraught issue of the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam, an issue that has threatened to bring Egypt and Sudan into outright conflict with Ethiopia. While we do not always agree with the UAE on its course of action, our history of collaborative work—including on multiple security operations, from Afghanistan to the campaign to defeat ISIS—provides the U.S. Government with ample influence. Experience in Yemen and Libya has also taught the UAE important lessons about the ease of getting into conflicts and the difficulty of exiting from them. From defense cooperation to bilateral trade to diplomatic work to deepen the regional benefits of the Abraham Accords, I see significant benefits that can be achieved via collaborative work with Abu Dhabi.

UAE, Russia and China

Question. Despite being a key U.S. partner in the region, and central to normalization efforts with Israel, UAE also has a history of deepening cooperation with Russia and the People's Republic of China (PRC) that runs counter to U.S. interests. How does the department plan to address the UAE's partnership with Russia and [the People's Republic of] China?

Answer. Several U.S. partners in the Middle East have deepened cooperation with Russia and the PRC in recent years. The administration has been clear that the United States has no issue with normal economic relations. Some areas of cooperation with these two countries, however, run up against U.S. interests, where they pose a threat to the security of sensitive weapons systems, U.S. defense and commercial technology, and information technology. If confirmed, I plan to address these issues forthrightly with the United Arab Emirates and other partners to convey U.S. red lines. We will not compromise on these issues.

Question. Please provide an update on UAE's relationship with the PRC as it relates to the F-35 sale.

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration has signaled its intent to move forward with these proposed defense sales to the UAE, even as the two governments continue discussions to ensure there are unmistakably clear mutual understandings with respect to Emirati obligations and actions before, during, and after delivery. Congress and the administration are focused on the same important issues about this sale, and if confirmed I will ensure they continue to be addressed. Projected delivery dates on these sales, if implemented, would be several years in the future. Thus, the administration anticipates a robust and sustained dialogue with the UAE to ensure that any defense transfers meet mutual strategic objectives to build a stronger, interoperable, and more capable security partnership and are employed in a manner consistent with international human rights law and the law of armed conflict.

The UAE continues to be a key regional partner for the U.S. Government, and its defense procurements help regional security. If confirmed, I will work to ensure a continued constructive U.S.-UAE relationship while ensuring the UAE understands and respects the administration's concern about the PRC's efforts to increase its strategic cooperation with the UAE.

UAE and Libya

Question. In your assessment, how closely are the Emiratis coordinating with the Russian state, as well as its subsidiaries like Wagner, in Libya? What forms does this coordination take? Are there instances in which it has escalated into concrete and tangible support, whether that be to the Russian state or Russian-aligned operators?

Answer. The United States has called on all external parties, including the UAE, to respect Libyan sovereignty and the October 23, 2020 ceasefire agreement, which called on all foreign forces and mercenaries to depart the country. The UAE has supported forces aligned with General Haftar in recent years. The Defense Department's Office of the Inspector General reported in 2020 that the UAE may have supported the Wagner Group in Libya, as well. Recently, the administration has urged the UAE, in alignment with the international community's consensus, to use its influence with any Libyan political figures to help resolve the current impasse over the electoral framework, so that presidential and parliamentary elections may be held on time in December 2021.

UAE and Syria

Question. There is growing concern over the prospect of the UAE normalizing ties with Bashar al-Assad. Do you share this concern? Are there tools the U.S. can employ to prevent the UAE from normalizing relations with the Assad regime, including through the provision of reconstruction funds to Syria?

Answer. I am concerned that any government would consider normalizing ties with the Assad regime in Damascus without any measure of progress on the myriad requirements laid out in UNSCR 2254. The United States will not reestablish or upgrade our diplomatic relations with the Assad regime, and will continue to consult closely with our partners and allies in the region on the best way to achieve progress in Syria. If confirmed, I will continue to encourage the UAE and other regional partners to consider what they might require of the Assad regime—on behalf of the Syrian people—before any potential engagement with Damascus. Syrians consistently say that the issue of first priority for them is gaining an accounting for missing and detained family members, for example.

Question. In your assessment, is there more the U.S. can do diplomatically to end the war in Yemen? If so, what?

Answer. The United States welcomes the appointment of the new U.N. Special Envoy for Yemen Hans Grundberg; his appointment, and his announced intention to focus on bottom-up political work in Yemen presents additional opportunities to muster the requisite pressure on the Houthis to agree to a national ceasefire. The U.S. Government remains committed to supporting a U.N.-led peace process to achieve a durable resolution to the conflict, but a ceasefire is a necessary starting point. Sustained engagement by U.S. Special Envoy Lenderking has helped create unprecedented international consensus on ending this war through inclusive political talks. If confirmed, I will work with him and the U.N. Special Envoy to urge all parties to engage with the U.N., with each other, and with civil society, without pre-conditions. I believe there is an opportunity to achieve peace in Yemen and we must seize it.

Question. Do you believe UNSCR 2216 properly reflects the current context in Yemen? Will the new administration seek to modify this UNSCR?

Answer. The administration is committed to exploring all possible options, taking into consideration the timing, sequencing, and ramifications of any new resolution. The United States continues to work with partners in the region, U.N. Security Council members, and the U.N. Special Envoy to advance the peace process. Revitalized diplomatic engagement in support of the U.N.-led peace effort is crucial for ending the war. A new resolution may be appropriate after further progress has been made in inclusive political negotiations, which remains a key objective of the administration. If confirmed, I will continue to strongly support the targeted arms embargo and sanctions designations of UNSCR 2216 as key elements of the UNSCR 2140 Yemen sanctions regime.

Question. Despite the August 4 explosions and unrest that followed, Lebanon's political elites have continued to cling to power. Current policy has been to withhold broader financial assistance absent reforms targeting corruption and transparency. Please describe your policy objectives in Lebanon and how they differ from previous approaches.

Answer. Lebanon is facing accelerating political, economic, security, and public health crises, made worse by the failure of Lebanese political elites to form a government and institute critical economic reforms. The United States, in coordination with like-minded partners, has been pressing Lebanese leaders for the past 13 months to form a government; those efforts appear to have paid off. The formation of a government under PM-designate Najib Mikati is only the first step; the Government must take on structural reforms, and work to end endemic corruption. That is the focus of U.S. diplomatic efforts, in tandem with other like-minded regional and European partners. Given the dire humanitarian situation, the United States also continues to provide support directly to those in most need and is working to bolster key legitimate institutions that can strengthen Lebanese sovereignty in the face of the malign influence of Hizballah. If confirmed, I will continue to encourage key partners in Europe and the Gulf to assist the Lebanese people and keep up their political engagement in a united effort to push Lebanese leaders to make long-overdue reforms.

Question. What conditions would Lebanon need to meet in order to qualify for U.S. financial support? If confirmed, will you continue sanctions against corrupt and Lebanese Hezbollah (LH) linked officials to advance these reforms?

Answer. The formation of a government was just the first step in Lebanon's long road to arrest the spiraling economic crisis; the next steps will necessarily include enacting reforms to address the economic crisis, bring more accountability and transparency to a system that is rife with corruption, and keep elections on track for next year. The Mikati Government must act, and act swiftly. If confirmed, I stand ready to support the new government with the hard work ahead. If confirmed, I will also support efforts to use economic tools, such as targeted sanctions, to pursue Hizballah's financial networks and hold accountable those individuals who impede a reform agenda. I will also urge other countries to take national-level action to designate, ban, or otherwise restrict the group.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to working to ensure the $11B in CEDRE, IMF, World Bank funding earmarked for Lebanon remains contingent on key reforms, including reforms to the electricity/natural gas sector, increased transparency, and an audit of the central bank?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with the international community to ensure that Lebanese leaders understand that meaningful reforms remain crucial to unlocking long-term structural support to Lebanon.

Question. Many in Congress see the Lebanese Armed Forces as a vital counterweight to the influence of LH and Lebanon's legitimate security guarantor. What role do you see for the LAF in Lebanon?

Answer. The Lebanese Armed Forces (LAF) are the sole legitimate defender of Lebanon, are reliable U.S. partners, and are an important counterweight to Hizballah's malign influence. The LAF also remain the only cross-confessional institution with broad support from all elements of Lebanese society, transcending sectarian and party affiliations. A strong, stable LAF undermines Hizballah's assertion that its arms are necessary to defend Lebanon from external aggression. If confirmed, I will ensure the LAF remain critical partners for the United States.

Question. Do you commit to continued FMF assistance to the LAF, barring information that indicates otherwise?

Answer. The LAF is one of our primary partners in achieving U.S. objectives in Lebanon. FMF assistance has become especially critical as the LAF has assumed responsibilities beyond its normal remit in response to the compounding crises facing the country. If confirmed, I commit to using FMF assistance to further the strong partnership between the United States and the LAF in support of our security objectives.

Question. Will you commit to consult with Congress before modifications to LAF assistance?

Answer. U.S. foreign policy is optimized when there is constant communication and collaboration between the executive and legislative branches of government. If confirmed, I pledge to continue our cooperation on these issues, and I will work through the interagency and with Congress to ensure the delivery of appropriated funds to Lebanon.

Question. Despite efforts to the pivot to the Pacific, competition with China must also occur outside the IndoPacific region and on a global scale. China's Belt and Road initiatives are prospering in Africa, South Asia, and are making lasting inroads in the Middle East. Given a diminished U.S. commitment to the Middle East under the Biden administration in favor of the IndoPacific, how do you plan to contend with the growth of Chinese strategic expansion?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration is committed to rebuilding and restoring U.S. partnerships across the globe, including in the Middle East. This is not a diminishment of the U.S. commitment. If confirmed, I will continue to demonstrate to our partners the value of a sustained and strategic partnership with the United States through diplomacy, economic engagement, and cultural and people-to-people exchanges. This stands in contrast to the transactional nature of investments by the People's Republic of China (PRC).

The United States distinguishes itself from Beijing's state-led approach by promoting private-sector driven alternatives. The United States focuses on partnerships and on strengthening local capacity to promote development, innovation, and prosperity. The United States will continue to promote entrepreneurship, transparency, good governance, fair practices, and internationally recognized environmental, social, and labor standards.

Question. How does the United States remain the partner of choice in the Middle East given CCP encroachment and lack of Chinese focus on human rights issues?

Answer. U.S. values—our support for essential freedoms of expression and worship, as well as our emphasis on respect for universal human rights—offer a potent counterpoint to PRC-style autocracy. U.S. higher education and entrepreneurship, and American culture are also powerful draws for the societies of the Middle East, and if confirmed, I will continue to promote them through energetic advocacy and programming. U.S. leadership in addressing global challenges like the pandemic and climate change is also a key source of our strength as a country.

The Biden-Harris administration is leading as well on efforts to encourage de-escalation in the region, and with increasing success. The Gulf rift of 2017 is largely mended, there are encouraging signs of outreach between previously adversarial countries like Egypt and Turkey, and a re-alignment of regional countries around a common effort to resolve conflicts in Yemen and Libya. The U.S. effort resonates with countries across the region, demonstrating the value of a long-term strategic partnership with the United States.

Question. The U.S. has growing concerns with China's economic relationship with Israel. Given the relative weakness on Israel's committee on foreign investment and issues highlighted by the CCP's involvement in Haifa port, how do you effectively decouple the CCP from Israel?

Answer. The administration remains deeply concerned by attempts by the People's Republic of China (PRC) to extend influence and acquire critical and dual-use technology through acquisitions and investment in Israel. The administration welcomes efforts by all countries to enhance investment in quality infrastructure development. I believe that such an investment must be within the confines of strong regulatory structures that ensure all companies investing in Israel do so in a responsible manner, consistent with international practices, that benefits the people of Israel, and does not undermine Israeli national security. While Israel's establishment of a new investment advisory committee is a step in the right direction, I understand there are concerns as to its effectiveness, given the voluntary nature of its coverage and its lack of coverage for the high-tech sector. If confirmed, I will work with the Government of Israel to strengthen its foreign investment advisory committee to minimize exposure to national security risks, including the acquisitions of critical technologies, sensitive data, and critical infrastructure.

Question. The Department of Defense recently disbanded the Defeat ISIS Task Force and dismissed the Task Force Director. Similarly, State Department eliminated the Special Envoy to Counter ISIS (SECI) as an independent entity and placed the office under the CT Bureau. What are your views on the threat posed by ISIS?

Answer. ISIS in Syria and Iraq remains a serious threat and ensuring its enduring defeat remains a central priority of the Biden-Harris administration. The dual-hatting of the CT Coordinator and Special Envoy does not reflect a diminution of the position of the Special Envoy for the Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS. It instead reflects the evolving nature of the ISIS threat to encompass areas outside Iraq and Syria, and a desire to situate the enduring Defeat-ISIS mission within the established CT Bureau architecture. Doing so enables the Defeat-ISIS campaign to more effectively leverage CT Bureau civilian counterterrorism capacity-building assets to counter ISIS branches and networks globally.

Question. Thousands of foreign terrorist fighters and their families remain in Syrian Democratic Forces prisons or makeshift camps in Syria. Repatriation efforts to return these fighters and families to their countries of origin have been wildly unsuccessful. These fighters and their families represent a strategic vulnerability to the region. How will you address repatriation, de-radicalization, and demobilization efforts?

Answer. The best long-term solution for foreign terrorist fighters and their family members is repatriation, followed by prosecution, rehabilitation, and/or reintegration, as appropriate. If confirmed, I intend to deepen our diplomatic outreach to press countries of origin to repatriate their citizens from northeast Syria. I will collaborate with the U.S. interagency in their work to support countries' efforts to repatriate their nationals, including through U.S. Government assistance with logistics and planning of repatriations, such as use of U.S. Government assets to transport foreign fighters and associated family members out of the region, and assistance in building partners' counterterrorism capacities for investigations, prosecutions, and rehabilitation.

Question. What civilian security, democracy, and human rights programs would you highlight or pursue to address the seeds of conflict that led to the Islamic State's rise and allure and have not been effectively addressed?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration understands stability and its drivers are key to enabling our local partners in Syria to focus on fighting ISIS and ensuring its enduring defeat. In one of its first acts, the administration lifted the U.S. freeze on stabilization assistance for Syria. In March, the administration announced almost $50 million for U.S. stabilization efforts in northeast Syria and will continue these efforts with FY 2021 resources. U.S. assistance in northeast Syria prioritizes stabilization activities that contribute to the restoration of daily life by closing gaps in local authority capacities; supporting transitional justice, justice and accountability, and civil society programs; and addressing vulnerabilities previously exploited by ISIS.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO
HON. BARBARA A. LEAF BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question. The Israel-Gaza conflict continues to flare up, according to recent news reports that Israel's military bombed Palestinian militant weapons sites in the Gaza Strip early Sunday, August 22 in response to a violent demonstration on Saturday August 21 at the perimeter fence that left an Israeli police officer critically injured. As Assistant Secretary for NEA, what recommendations would you make to President Biden regarding next steps to help manage the tensions there?

Answer. The May 21 Gaza ceasefire has mostly held, but we are engaging multiple partners who have a role to play in calming the situation. The August 21 protests ended with the death of one Israeli police officer, as well as the death and injuries of a number of Palestinians. There have been Israeli airstrikes in response to incendiary balloons and rocket attacks from Gaza. The situation remains tense because many of the factors that contributed to the May violence remain unresolved. If confirmed, I will work closely with Israel and the Palestinian Authority, as well as international partners, in maintaining calm in the West Bank and Gaza and keeping flashpoint issues in Jerusalem from reigniting the situation. President Biden has been clear in his conviction that a negotiated two-state solution would best secure the future of a democratic, Jewish Israel, and provide equal measures of freedom, security and prosperity to both Israelis and Palestinians. I would recommend an affirmative and practical approach that encourages constructive, positive and tangible steps by both Israeli and Palestinian authorities to keep the possibility of a negotiated two-state solution alive.

Question. As Assistant Secretary for NEA, how are you planning on addressing the dismal human rights situation in Egypt even after the administration decided against appropriately responding to the Congressional provision?

Answer. I share your concerns about the human rights situation in Egypt. The Biden administration has made clear its intention to elevate the role of human rights in our foreign policy, and that includes in the U.S.-Egyptian relationship. The Secretary's decision on FMF—the first time a Secretary of State has not waived the Congressionally-mandated human rights certification requirement—is only one facet of the Department's engagement on human rights. The Department supports greater space for civil society and human rights defenders, and freedom of expression. The administration's human rights dialogue with the Egyptian Government is focused on seeing steady, enduring progress on such fundamental rights.

Question. As Assistant Secretary for NEA, how will you address these troubling reports out of Tunisia and continue to stand on the side of Tunisia's democracy?

Answer. The United States shares the Tunisian people's goal of a democratic government that is responsive to the country's needs. If confirmed, I will urge President Saied to appoint a new head of government to address Tunisia's immediate economic and health crises, announce concrete plans for a return to the democratic path, and pursue reforms through an inclusive process that recognizes the Tunisian people's demand for reforms that improve the functioning of their democracy. These steps must include diverse political actors and civil society as well as respect for the rule of law and fundamental freedoms.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. BARBARA A. LEAF BY TODD YOUNG

Question. What is your view of the U.S.-Israel relationship? If confirmed, what will you do to maintain and strengthen this relationship?

Answer. Israel is a critical partner to the United States and the two are united by shared values and strategic interests; those include a commitment to democracy, economic prosperity, and regional security. Israel is a stable country in an unstable region, and the U.S. Government's closest security partner in countering a broad spectrum of threats, ranging from cyber-attacks to Iran's destabilizing proliferation of advanced weaponry to its network of proxies. With an open and free society that is largely accepting of LGBTQ+ individuals, Israel has been dedicated to the cause of women's empowerment and gender equality since the founding of the state. If confirmed, I will commit to maintaining and strengthening all aspects of this relationship.

Question. Israel constantly faces terrorist attacks and threats—including rocket attacks by Hamas in Gaza and attacks from Iranian-backed groups in Lebanon and Syria. Do you fully support Israel's right to defend itself from terrorist attacks?

Answer. Yes, I fully support Israel's right to defend itself from terrorist attacks and strongly condemn these attacks, no matter where they come from.

Question. What is the status of the recently notified U.S. direct commercial sale of $735 million in U.S.-origin precision-guided munitions to Israel?

Answer. I understand the notification was approved and authorizes the export of precision-guided munitions, including any technical data and defense services, to Israel to support weapons integration, flight tests, and hardware delivery of Joint Direct Attack Munition variants and Small Diameter Bomb Increment I variants.

Question. Do you support maintaining the Palestine Affairs Unit at the Embassy in Jerusalem? How would opening a separate consulate in Jerusalem serve U.S. interests?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to ensuring that the U.S. presence in Jerusalem enables our government to carry out a full range of diplomatic activities, including engagement with the local communities and government leadership. The U.S. Government has been clear that our Embassy will remain in Jerusalem. Currently, the Palestinian Affairs Unit within the embassy is the primary point of contact with the Palestinian people. In May, Secretary Blinken stated “the United States will be moving forward with the process to reopen our consulate in Jerusalem. That’s an important way for our country to engage with and provide support for the Palestinian people,” I understand that this is part of the administration’s renewed engagement with the Palestinian people and leadership.

Question. What would be your strategy for strengthening the Abraham Accords while persuading more countries to normalize relations with Israel? How would you build on the success of the Abraham Accords?

Answer. As President Biden and Secretary Blinken have said, this administration welcomes and strongly supports the Abraham Accords and normalization agreements between Israel and countries in the Arab and Muslim world. The Department is leading the U.S. Government’s efforts, working with the National Security Council and U.S. Government interagency, to deepen existing agreements and urge other countries to normalize relations with Israel.

If confirmed, I am committed to working with countries across the region to build on existing relationships and develop new ones, including by highlighting the tangible benefits of relations with Israel and leveraging the wide range of diplomatic tools at our disposal. I also look forward to engaging with Israel’s new partners in the region to find ways to improve the lives of Israelis and Palestinians alike to help create the conditions for a durable two-state solution.

Question. What do you believe are the most pressing security challenges Israel faces, and what role do those threats play in convincing regional partners that Israel is the not the cause of instability in the region?

Answer. Israel believes Iran is the greatest threat to its security. As Secretary Blinken and other senior U.S. officials have said, the United States is committed to ensuring Iran never acquires a nuclear weapon, and believes diplomacy, in coordination with our allies and regional partners, is the best path to achieve that goal. An Iran with a nuclear weapon is likely to act even more provocatively when it comes to these issues. The administration has fundamental problems with Iran’s actions across a series of issues—including its support for terrorism, its ballistic missile program, and its destabilizing actions in the region. Our partners in the region share a similar concern.

Question. If confirmed, how would you seek to use your connection and experience in the region to garner more regional support for the vital humanitarian needs of the Yemeni people?

Answer. I am proud that the United States continues to lead the humanitarian response to this crisis, with over $4 billion worth of assistance provided to the Yemeni people since 2014. If confirmed, I will work closely with key countries in the region and around the world, as well as the United Nations, to ensure pledges are disbursed, humanitarian organizations are adequately funded, and the needs of the most vulnerable Yemenis are addressed in a coordinated and effective manner. I will also work with the U.N. and other partners to promote unfettered access for humanitarian assistance throughout Yemen to ensure aid reaches those in need.

Question. What would be your approach, alongside Tim Lenderking, in breaking the diplomatic stalemate that exists in Yemen?

Answer. The U.S. Government has welcomed the appointment of Hans Grundberg, the new U.N. Special Envoy for Yemen, and remains committed to supporting a U.N.-led peace process to achieve a durable resolution to the conflict. Sustained engagement by U.S. Special Envoy Lenderking has helped create unprecedented international consensus on ending this war through inclusive political talks. If confirmed, I will urge all parties to engage with the Special Envoy, the U.N., with each other, and with civil society, without pre-conditions. I will also ensure the governments of Saudi Arabia and the Republic of Yemen are taking the steps necessary to advance peace, and will work with key international and regional partners to press the Houthis to cooperate with the U.N.-led process. We have an opportunity to achieve peace in Yemen, and we must seize it.

Question. Do you believe that the Iranian-backed Houthis desire a political settlement? Or does Iran desire to maintain a footprint and instability from which to target Saudi Arabia? Do you believe that the Houthis have the autonomy to decide this for themselves?

Answer. The Houthis remain singularly focused on their military offensive against Marib, the greatest impediment to U.N. and U.S. peace efforts. The offensive is also exacerbating Yemen's humanitarian crisis, threatening directly some one million IDPs and other civilians in harm's way. The Houthi leadership must show they are committed to a political settlement by engaging with the new U.N. Special Envoy in good faith. In addition to continuing to prosecute the war inside Yemen, the Houthis, with Iranian support, have also launched more than 240 cross-border air attacks on Saudi Arabia this year alone, endangering the Saudi people and more than 70,000 U.S. citizens residing in the Kingdom. If Iran wants to show it can be a responsible actor in the region, Yemen is a good place to start, by ending lethal aid and training to the Houthis.

Question. Denying the Houthis access to key weapons and technology from Iran is critical to both reducing the threat the group poses to our regional partners and pressuring the group to cease attacks and negotiate in good faith. Do you agree? If so, how should the U.S. expand cooperation with partners and allies to expose and interdict the flow of key Iranian weapons, materiel, and equipment to the Houthis?

Answer. I agree. The Houthis rely on Iranian weapons, intelligence, training, and support to conduct horrific attacks impacting civilian targets as well as infrastructure in Yemen and Saudi Arabia. Denying the Houthis access to this lethal support from Iran is a critical part of the Department's regional strategy. If confirmed, I will continue with this comprehensive approach using a variety of tools—from sanctions to interdiction to support for Saudi Arabia's legitimate self-defense needs—to counter Iran's lethal aid to the Houthis and other armed groups, as well as it destabilizing behavior more broadly in the region. The Department will also continue to prioritize the implementation and enforcement of U.N. Security Council resolutions barring the unauthorized transfer of weapons to the Houthis.

Question. What are the biggest dangers Iran poses to the international community and how would you rank them in order of urgency?

Answer. The most serious threat that Iran poses globally is its untrammelled nuclear program. That is why the Biden administration prioritizes constraining Iran's program through measured, determined diplomacy. Iran poses additional threats through a spectrum of regional and global activities, including but not limited to its plots to kidnap our citizens, its abhorrent practice of using wrongfully detained Americans and foreign nationals as political tools, its support for terrorism, its lethal support to armed groups, proliferation of advanced weaponry to these groups, and its ballistic missile program. An Iran with a nuclear weapon would pose an even greater threat when it comes to these issues.

Question. Secretary Blinken has said that any replacement of JCPOA needs to be "longer and stronger." How would you define longer and stronger? What are the minimum requirements for a "longer and stronger" deal?

Answer. Iran's unchecked, unconstrained nuclear program poses a threat to global security. Constraining it is therefore the overriding priority for the United States and its P5+1 partners. To achieve that immediate objective, the administration is pursuing a mutual return to compliance with the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action. If the Department is successful in doing so, the intent is to build on that as part of a comprehensive approach using a variety of policy tools to strengthen the constraints on Iran's nuclear program and address other issues of concern.

Question. Do you believe the United States should learn any lessons from Hamas's heinous rocket campaign it unleashed on Israel in May, especially concerning Iran's destabilizing proxy campaign it is waging throughout the region?

Answer. Hamas's heinous rocket attacks on Israel in May only reinforced the Biden-Harris administration's ironclad resolve on Israel's security, including through deterring and countering Iran's destabilizing regional activities. This includes the need to work with Israel and other allies and partners to counter the flow of materiel and financial support to Hamas and other Gaza-based militant groups.

Question. Can you explain why it would be a prudent policy to pursue a nuclear agreement with Iran without doing anything to stop Iran's other destabilizing activities?

Answer. Even as the administration pursues a diplomatic effort to constrain Iran's nuclear program, it continues to address Iran's destabilizing regional activities. The Biden administration is committed to continuing to counter the threats posed by Iran using the various tools at its disposal, including sanctions, and working in close coordination with allies and partners.

Question. How can we look our partners in the face and tell them convincingly that we are committed to their security when we permit Iran to keep funding terrorist proxies, to keep launching attacks on international shipping and energy infrastructure, to keep testing ballistic missiles?

Answer. Iran's destabilizing regional activities are nothing new. Tehran has posed such threats for decades, across multiple administrations. The Biden administration is unwavering in its commitment to its allies and partners and continues to engage closely with them as part of a comprehensive approach that includes sanctions, interdiction, defense and intelligence cooperation, and support for Israel's freedom of action to counter Iran's destabilizing activities. In fact, the administration's sustained diplomatic engagement with allies and partners has ensured a more united, better coordinated, and more consistent approach in countering the Iranian threat and advancing our shared goals in the region.

Question. In your view, are the LAF a viable counterweight to Hezbollah's influence within Lebanon?

Answer. The Lebanese Armed Forces (LAF) is the sole legitimate defender of Lebanon, a reliable U.S. partner, and an important counterweight to Hezbollah's malign influence in the country. A strong, stable LAF undermines Hezbollah's assertion that its arms are necessary to defend Lebanon from external aggression. The LAF remains the only cross-confessional institution with broad support from all aspects of Lebanese society, transcending sectarian and party alliances.

Question. Since the U.S. began funding the Lebanese Armed Forces, have they taken any meaningful steps to confront Hezbollah?

Answer. According to a December 2019 GAO Report, the LAF's border security and counterterrorism capabilities notably improved from 2013 to 2018. With the support of U.S. training and equipment, the LAF has defeated ISIS in Lebanon, reasserted control over territory along its border with Syria, and increased its presence in southern Lebanon in support of UNIFIL. These improvements undercut Hezbollah's unfounded argument that its weapons are necessary to protect Lebanon's sovereignty. If confirmed, I will continue to use all the tools at our disposal to push back on Hezbollah's terrorist activities and destabilizing influence in Lebanon and across the region.

Question. Given the deterioration of the Lebanese state, can you assure the committee that U.S. equipment provided to the LAF will not fall into the hands of Hezbollah?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure we continue to undertake rigorous measures to minimize the likelihood that Hezbollah or any other terrorist organization will benefit from our assistance, including thorough oversight, vetting, and robust risk mitigation practices carried out by the U.S. Government and implementing partners. The LAF is a strong U.S. partner with an exemplary end-use monitoring record. The Department continues to hold the LAF accountable for its use of U.S. assistance funds and have no reason to believe that any U.S. equipment has fallen into the hands of Hezbollah.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. BARBARA A. LEAF BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question. Just last week Lebanon announced a new government formation under Prime Minister Mikati. While this is a positive step in the formation of a government, I remain concerned about the deep economic crisis in the country.

- What are U.S. priorities in engaging with the new Government? How can the U.S. help as the country's economy continues to collapse further?

Answer. Lebanon must implement significant reforms to address the spiraling economic crisis it faces, on an urgent basis and in a sustainable way. If confirmed, I will build on the work by the Department and our embassy, and in concert with key partners, to keep up the pressure on PM Mikati's new government to implement long-overdue economic and governance reforms; these reforms are demanded by the Lebanese people, and should be done ideally in partnership with the IMF, Lebanese civil society, and other key actors. The Mikati Government should also prepare the country to hold parliamentary elections in May 2022 as scheduled. The United States and our international partners have been clear that Lebanon's leaders must act in order to unlock potential financing programs and structural support, but the hard work must start immediately. The United States stands with the Lebanese people, and will continue to support it and key institutions, to help the most vulnerable weather the crisis.

Question. How can we work with civil society, as well as the Lebanese Government, to support transparent and efficient parliamentary elections next spring?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue our efforts to hold PM Mikati's new Government accountable for ensuring transparent parliamentary elections are held next spring. I will also support our existing programs aimed at assisting reform-minded actors to respond to the needs of citizens through transparent and democratic processes. If confirmed, I will ensure my team works closely with Lebanese civil society, which deserves our continued support as it both holds the new Government accountable and assists it in implementing needed reforms, as well as election monitoring initiatives. I will also work with the international community to press for a transparent electoral process to obtain credible elections that represent the will of the people, untainted by foreign malign influence.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. BARBARA A. LEAF BY SENATOR TED CRUZ

Question. Please transmit copies of those emails. The Washington Free Beacon reviewed at least two of them.

Answer. As a nominee I am not in a position to act on behalf of the State Department with regard to its records. I take my responsibilities with respect to Congressional oversight seriously and if confirmed, I look forward to working with you to respond to your concerns.

Question. Please transmit any other internal guidance - emails, memos, cables, notes, decision memos, briefing papers, instructions, etc. - that instructed staffers not to use the phrase "Abraham Accords."

Answer. As a nominee I am not in a position to act on behalf of the State Department with regard to its records. I take my responsibilities with respect to Congressional oversight seriously and if confirmed I look forward to working with you to respond to your concerns.

Question. In your testimony on September 15 you indicated that you are supportive of the Abraham Accords. Can you commit to ensuring that any guidelines or policies prohibiting using the phrase "Abraham Accords" are revised and reversed?

Answer. My understanding is that the Biden-Harris administration refers to the agreements known as the Abraham Accords as such. I certainly do. If confirmed, I will continue to use that moniker.

Question. Do you believe that Israel has sovereignty over the Golan Heights?

Answer. In considering the U.S. position on the Golan Heights, the administration gives great weight to Israel's security. As long as Bashar al-Assad is in control of Syria and Iran is present in Syria, it would be greatly irresponsible to urge Israel to part with the Golan Heights. Control of the strategic Golan Heights provides Israel an added measure of security from the turmoil next door. This administration has not changed U.S. policy on this important issue.

Question. Do you believe that Israel has sovereignty over Jerusalem, including the Old City of Jerusalem?

Answer. This administration has not altered U.S. policy on this important issue. Jerusalem is the capital of Israel. Jerusalem itself is a final status issue to be resolved through direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians. Jerusalem is central to the national visions of both Israelis and Palestinians. If confirmed, I will handle all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

Question. Do you believe that Israel is in illegal occupation of any part of Jerusalem?

Answer. Jerusalem is central to the national visions of both Israelis and Palestinians. Jerusalem is the capital of Israel. Jerusalem itself is a final status issue to be resolved through direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians. If confirmed, I will handle all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

Question. Do you believe that Israel is in illegal occupation of the Old City of Jerusalem?

Answer. Jerusalem is central to the national visions of both Israelis and Palestinians. Jerusalem is the capital of Israel. Jerusalem itself is a final status issue to be resolved through direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians. If confirmed, I will handle all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

Question. What are the regional security opportunities for the U.S. now that Israel is part of CENTCOM?

Answer. Now that Israel is part of the U.S. Central Command's area of responsibility, regional security opportunities for the United States range from enhanced communication between our two countries to expanded opportunities for regional multilateral engagements, such as exercises and planning conferences.

Question. How do you plan to maximize Israel's integration into our regional security architecture?

Answer. If confirmed, I would promote Israel's integration into our regional security architecture in close coordination with my colleagues at the Department of Defense, including CENTCOM.

Question. Please describe any new significant sanctions that have been imposed on Iran since the inauguration of President Biden.

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration has imposed the following Iran-related sanctions since it took office:

- On September 17, the Treasury Department sanctioned international financial networks supporting terrorism, including providing support to Lebanese Hizballah and Iran's Qods Force;
- On September 3, Treasury sanctioned an Iranian intelligence network targeting an Iranian-American activist in the United States;
- On August 13, Treasury sanctioned an oil broker network supporting the Qods Force;
- On June 10, Treasury sanctioned an international network enriching the Houthis and Qods Force in Yemen; and
- On March 9, the State Department designated Iranian officials pursuant to Section 7031(c) of the FY2021 Department of State, Foreign Operations, and Related Programs Appropriation Act due to involvement in gross violations of human rights.

Question. Please describe the details of any arrangements, deals, or agreements that are being contemplated by the Biden administration to reduce pressure on Iran other than reentry into the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA).

Answer. There have been no such arrangements, deals, or agreements contemplated to reduce pressure on Iran.

Question. What measures has the Biden administration taken to insulate our diplomats from engaging with Iranian officials connected to international terrorism or who have been sanctioned?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration is committed to ensuring Iran never acquires a nuclear weapon, and diplomacy, in coordination with our allies and regional partners, is the best path to achieve that goal. However, the U.S. Government has yet to engage in any direct discussions with the Iranian Government or its officials as their Government currently bars such interactions. Additionally, State Department policy generally limits USG personnel from interacting with Iranian officials, and specifically restricts interactions with officials known or suspected to be members of terrorist organizations or subject to sanctions designations.

Question. To what degree was the State Department aware of Ghani's departure beforehand?

Answer. I am currently not a State Department employee and am not privy to Department knowledge on this issue.

Question. Did you or any State Department officials, to your knowledge, engage in conversations with any governments under NEA's purview to request that they provide Ghani with safe haven, including the governments of Qatar or the United Arab Emirates?

Answer. After President Ghani departed Kabul for Uzbekistan and the Government of Uzbekistan informed the U.S. of his presence on Uzbek soil and that he wished to travel onward to the UAE, the administration conveyed to both Governments of Uzbekistan and the United Arab Emirates that such arrangements would be a bilateral one between those governments and Ghani himself.

Question. Do you believe that it would be in America's national security interest for resources to go to the Government of Lebanon even if that government was controlled or unduly influenced by Hezbollah?

Answer. Hizballah is a terrorist organization, and the United States undertakes rigorous measures to safeguard U.S. assistance from conferring benefits to Hizballah or any other terrorist group, including thorough oversight, vetting, and robust risk mitigation practices. As part of its security assistance, the U.S. Government conducts End-Use Monitoring (EUM) to mitigate the risk of unauthorized transfer or use of U.S. technology and equipment. The Lebanese Armed Forces continues to comply fully with all EUM reporting and security requirements.

Question. On August 19, U.S. Ambassador to Lebanon Shea said that the Biden administration intends to waive sanctions on the Assad regime in order to provide energy to Lebanon: "There is a will to make this happen. There will be some logistical things that need to happen too, but I think that it will all fall into place fairly easily." The waiver will facilitate the transfer of gas and resources through Assad-controlled Syria and to Lebanon and its Government. Do you support waiving such sanctions?

Answer. Lebanon is currently experiencing an acute energy crisis that is having a terrible impact on critical lifesaving infrastructure such as hospitals and the water supply; the crisis needs a long-term solution, but shorter-term measures are also urgently needed, given the deleterious effect on the public. These potential bilateral and multilateral agreements proffered by regional states, which have been endorsed by the World Bank, could help Lebanon begin to address its power crisis in a sustainable and transparent manner. I understand that the Department of State is currently conferring with those partners to gain further detail on the proposals and is conferring with the Department of Treasury as well. U.S. sanctions remain an important tool to press for accountability for the Assad regime, to include on its atrocious record of human rights abuses. If confirmed, I will work with the Department of the Treasury and our partners to ensure that any potential deal our partners reach is consistent with our broader policy priorities and all relevant U.S. sanctions. I look forward to continuing to consult with Congress on this important issue.

Question. On September 15 you testified that the Lebanese Armed Forces (LAF) are an important partner in the Middle East and serve as a check against Hezbollah. Do you support calibrating support for the LAF on the degree to which it fulfills those functions? Under what conditions would you support restricting assistance to the LAF?

Answer. The Lebanese Armed Forces (LAF) is the sole legitimate defender of Lebanon, a reliable U.S. partner, and an important counterweight to Hizballah's malign influence in the country. The LAF is also a cross-confessional institution with broad support from all aspects of Lebanese society, transcending sectarian and party alliances. A strong, stable LAF undermines Hizballah's assertion that its arms are necessary to defend Lebanon from external aggression. If confirmed, I will continue to build the LAF's capacity to serve as a counterweight to Hizballah and act in the interests of the Lebanese people.

Question. What percent of U.S. assistance to Lebanon was used for activities or operations aimed at disarming Hezbollah in 2019 and 2020? A rough estimate or a range will be sufficient.

Answer. U.S. military assistance to the Lebanese Armed Forces (LAF) is focused on developing the LAF's capabilities and professionalism, as well as developing it as an institution that acts as a counterweight to Hizballah's influence. Since 2006, the United States has provided more than $2.5 billion in security assistance to the LAF. This assistance has helped increase its capacity to serve as the exclusive legitimate defender of Lebanon's sovereignty and violent extremist organizations, including ISIS.

Question. What percent of U.S. assistance to Lebanon was used for activities or operations aimed at disrupting Hezbollah activities short of disarming them in 2019 and 2020, e.g. through roadblocks? A rough estimate or a range will be sufficient.

Answer. U.S. assistance to Lebanon is one of the many tools the Department uses to support the Lebanese people, civil society, and institutions critical to building a sovereign state responsive to its people's legitimate needs. U.S. security assistance also supports partners, such as the Lebanese Armed Forces and Internal Security Forces, that are critical to stability and security. A government that reflects the will and is able to meet the needs of all Lebanese, and security institutions that can defend Lebanese sovereignty, undermine Hizballah's illegitimate and illegal actions, as well as its malign influence in Lebanon and the region.

Question. Please describe the degree to which, in your assessment, Hezbollah continues to influence or control over the Beirut-Rafic Hariri International Airport or facilities located within the airport.

Answer. The U.S. Government remains concerned about Hizballah's influence at ports of entry into Lebanon, including at the airport. In PM Mikati's new cabinet, a Hizballah minister was appointed Minister of Public Works and Transport.

Question. Please describe the degree to which, in your assessment, Hezbollah continues to influence or control over the Port of Beirut or facilities located within the port?

Answer. The influence Hizballah exerts over ports of entry remains of considerable concern and also denies the Lebanese people the benefit of customs revenue, which is significant given the large budget deficits Lebanon continues to face. In PM Mikati's new cabinet, a Hizballah minister was appointed as Minister of Public Works and Transport. The Department will continue to evaluate the impact of this appointment and report on the situation. To combat Hizballah's influence, the U.S. Department of the Treasury's Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC) designated under Executive Order 13224 Hizballah security official Wafiq Safa for acting for or on behalf of Hizballah. As head of Hizballah's security apparatus, Safa exploited Lebanon's ports and border crossings to smuggle contraband, enable Hizballah travel, and facilitate the passage of illegal drugs and weapons into the seaport of Beirut, routing certain shipments to avoid scrutiny.

Question. Is the administration withholding $130 million in aid from Egypt on the basis of the conditions described in the Washington Post report? If the report is inaccurate, what parts are inaccurate?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration's goal with regard to this decision is to seek progress on human rights. The administration supports further strengthening the bilateral security and defense relationship with Egypt, while also seeking sustainable improvements in the Egyptian Government's approach to human rights. The Department has focused on specific human rights issues of concern, including cases of political detention and restrictions on civil society.

As noted in Congressional Notification 20-271 (September 14), the Secretary could not certify that Egypt is taking sustained and effective steps related to the human rights-related conditions in section 7043(a)(3)(A) of the FY 2020 SFOAA. The Department will make available $300,000,000 in FY 2020 FMF for Egypt for counterterrorism, border security, and nonproliferation programs, consistent with the exception to the certification requirement under section 7041(a)(3)(A) of the FY 2020 SFOAA. However, because serious human rights concerns remain, the Department will not move forward with the application of $130,000,000 of these funds to Foreign Military Sales cases for Egypt unless the Government of Egypt affirmatively addresses specific human rights-related conditions. The $130,000,000 will not be deposited into Egypt's interest-bearing Federal Reserve Bank account and may be reprogrammed if Egypt fails to meet the conditions within the prescribed timeframe. It is the administration's goal to continue to work with Egypt as a strategic partner to encourage progress on improving respect for human rights. To this end, the Department expects that the Government of Egypt can and will meet the conditions presented to them.

While I cannot speak to the accuracy of press reports, I take seriously the authority of Congress to conduct oversight, and if confirmed I look forward to working with you on these and other important issues.

Question. Please provide a list of any individuals, including if relevant, the 16 referred to in the Washington Post story, who are the subject of conditions imposed on aid to Egypt. For each individual on the list, please list the following:

- Their names;
- Their organizational affiliations;
- The specific charges that the Egyptian Government has brought against them, which the U.S. is asking the Egyptians to dismiss; and

- Whether the individual is a U.S. citizen, or if not, whether the individual holds a Legal Permanent Resident Card, or if not, if the individual has applied for immigration or visa status and what that status is.

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration's goal with regard to this decision on FMF is to seek progress on human rights. The administration supports further strengthening the bilateral security and defense relationship with Egypt, while also seeking sustainable improvements in the Egyptian Government's approach to human rights. The Department has focused on specific human rights issues of concern, including cases of political detention and restrictions on civil society.

As noted in Congressional Notification 20-271 (September 14), the Secretary could not certify that Egypt is taking sustained and effective steps related to the human rights-related conditions in section 7043(a)(3)(A) of the FY 2020 SFOAA. It is the administration's goal to continue to work with Egypt as a strategic partner to encourage progress on improving respect for human rights. To this end, the Department expects that the Government of Egypt can and will meet the conditions presented to them.

President Biden and President al-Sisi in May agreed on the importance of a constructive dialogue on human rights. Since then, the administration has pressed the Government of Egypt on multiple levels to address specific human rights concerns, including during Secretary Blinken's discussion with President al-Sisi in Cairo in May. Although the Department has and will continue to publicly raise concerns about Egypt's human rights record, administration officials have also conveyed these specific requests privately, in an effort to avoid Egyptian Government sensitivities about responding to foreign pressure. The Department anticipates hosting a ministerial Strategic Dialogue session with Egypt later this year to advance the U.S. - Egypt partnership and secure positive steps on human rights.

While I cannot speak to the accuracy of press reports, I take seriously the authority of Congress to conduct oversight, and if confirmed I look forward to working with you on these and other important matters.

Question. Additionally, for any individual on the list described above who is not a U.S. citizen, please also describe:

- The process through which the State Department or as relevant the broader interagency reviewed the cases and came to the determination that their cases should be used as conditions for aid.
- Whether they are affiliated with groups that promote Islamist ideologies, distribute anti-Semitic materials, or distribute political disinformation.
- Whether the Biden administration intends to grant U.S. visas to them should the Egyptian Government release them.

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration supports further strengthening bilateral security and defense relationship with Egypt, while seeking and sustainable improvements in the Egyptian Government's approach to human rights. The Department has focused on specific human rights issues of concern, including cases of political detention and restrictions on civil society.

As noted in Congressional Notification 20-271 (September 14), the Secretary could not certify that Egypt is taking sustained and effective steps related to the human rights-related conditions in section 7043(a)(3)(A) of the FY 2020 SFOAA. partment expect that the Government of Egypt can and will meet the conditions presented to them.

Question. Please describe the role played by Iran and the Houthis in deepening the humanitarian catastrophe in Yemen.

Answer. The Houthis, with continued Iranian support, remain intransigent and focused on their military offensive against the city of Marib. That offensive is the single biggest impediment to a national ceasefire and follow-on peace talks; it is exacerbating an already-dire humanitarian crisis, placing at risk a million internally displaced persons who found refuge in Marib after escaping fighting in other parts of the country. The Houthis also exacerbate the humanitarian consequences of the fuel situation at Hudaydah port by stockpiling fuel and manipulating fuel prices, driving up costs far beyond the reach of most Yemenis. In addition, the Houthis continue to interfere in the delivery of humanitarian aid.

Question. Please assess the degree to which the Biden administration's decision to lift terrorism sanctions against the Houthis and their leaders has enhanced the ability to provide humanitarian relief to Yemeni civilians in general.

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration revoked the terrorism designations of Ansarallah, sometimes referred to as the Houthis, in recognition of the dire humanitarian situation in Yemen and the adverse impact the designation immediately had on NGOs and private commercial importers of food and other basic goods. Shortly after the FTO designation announcement, the administration began to hear of de-risking—by banks, insurance firms, and transport companies—putting at risk near-term food imports. The administration listened to concerns voiced by the United Nations, humanitarian groups, and bipartisan members of Congress, among others, regarding potential impacts of the designation on Yemenis' access to basic commodities. The short time that passed between the designations and the revocations limited the impact the designations could have had on humanitarian assistance and commercial imports. According to U.N. data, food and other humanitarian assistance items are now moving through Yemeni ports at normal rates except in some areas under Houthi control.

Question. Please assess the degree to which the Biden administration's decision to lift terrorism sanctions against the Houthis and their leaders has enhanced the ability to provide humanitarian relief to Yemeni civilians in Marib.

Answer. The short time that passed between the designations and the revocations limited the adverse impact that designations could have had on humanitarian assistance and commercial imports. In Marib, the escalation of hostilities by the Houthis has caused additional needs and secondary displacement. The lifting of sanctions, however, has helped ensure the safe delivery of life-saving food, emergency shelter, water, and sanitation and hygiene supplies, as well as essential non-food items, such as blankets and water containers.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 2021 (p.m.)

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 2:30 p.m., via video-conference, Senator Coons, presiding.

Present: Senators Coons [presiding], Cardin, Kaine, Booker, Schatz, Van Hollen, Young, and Hagerty.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. CHRISTOPHER A. COONS, U.S. SENATOR FROM DELAWARE

Senator COONS. Good afternoon. It is my honor to call this hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to order.

I welcome the chance to serve as chair of this hearing and appreciate Chairman Menendez asking me to take this on as we consider five highly qualified nominees, and I welcome, as ranking member for this hearing, Senator Hagerty and the five nominees who are before us.

Let me briefly introduce them, and I will make a very brief statement and then invite Senator Hagerty to make whatever opening statement he may care to.

Our five nominees for this afternoon's hearing are Dr. C.S. Eliot Kang, to be Assistant Secretary of State for International Security and Nonproliferation; Adam Scheinman, to be Special Representative of the President for Nuclear Nonproliferation; Marcia Stephens Bloom Bernicat, to be Director General of the Foreign Service; Bathsheba Nell Crocker, to be U.S. Representative to the Office of the United Nations and other International Organizations in Geneva; and Dr. Michael Carpenter, to be U.S. Representative to the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe.

Let me begin by thanking all five of you, thanking you for your willingness to continue your service to this Nation. And let me extend my thanks to your families, who normally, if we were in person, would, many of them, be physically with us, and so I would have a chance to greet them. I do not know if any of them are hovering just off the screen, but please convey to them my gratitude for their support for your career and service.

Before we proceed into the substance of your opening statements, our colleague from New Jersey Senator Booker will introduce Ambassador Bernicat. Let me also, before we proceed to that, do two more things. I am going to ask all of our nominees today to please keep your statements to roughly 5 minutes in length. The committee will accept your written testimonies in full and submit them for the record.

And I also want to note for all members and staff who may be listening that questions for the record for this confirmation hearing will be due by the close of business this Thursday, September 16th.

With that, let me invite Senator Hagerty to make any opening comment he would like to. Then we will proceed to an introduction by Senator Booker.

Senator Hagerty?

STATEMENT OF HON. BILL HAGERTY,
U.S. SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE

Senator HAGERTY. Chairman Coons, thank you very much. And I want to thank Senator Risch for inviting me to serve as the ranking member today. And I also want to thank the nominees for appearing before our committee today. I appreciate your willingness to serve our great Nation. I am looking forward to hearing from each of you.

I would like to start with the nomination to the Director General of the Foreign Service. This position has the unique responsibility of recruiting, retaining, and sustaining the Foreign Service and the civil service workforce of the State Department.

As a former U.S. Ambassador to Japan, I recognize that the people of the State Department are critical to the success of American diplomacy. For the United States to tackle the growing number of complex global challenges, we should seek to build the finest diplomatic corps in the world. I look forward to hearing from the nominee about how we will achieve this goal.

Next I would like to turn to the nomination to be Assistant Secretary of State for International Security and Nonproliferation. As strategic adversaries such as China, Russia, Iran, and North Korea continue to expand their arsenal of weapons of mass destruction, the world is becoming more dangerous each day.

The United States should look for opportunities to expand counterproliferation efforts in ways to stop the spread of weapons of mass destruction. I am particularly interested to hear from the nominee about his views on the increasing WMD threats from China, Russia, Iran, and North Korea and what the United States should be doing.

I would like to turn next to the nominee to be the Special Representative of the President for Nuclear Nonproliferation. There are a growing number of countries, such as China and Iran, that pose significant challenges with respect to nuclear energy and nonproliferation norms. I look forward to hearing from the nominee about ways to update the NPT for the 21st century.

Now I would like to turn to the nominee to be the U.S. Representative to the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe. I just returned from NATO, and it is clear that following the withdrawal from Afghanistan, we are at a critical juncture with many of our European allies and partners, and they need to know that the United States can and will be a reliable partner. This is even more important, considering Russia's efforts to spread malign influence throughout Europe. I look forward to hearing from the nominee about these issues.

And now I want to turn my attention to the nominee to be the Representative of the United States to the United Nations and Other International Organizations in Geneva. As the lead U.S. official representing over 100 U.N. bodies in Geneva, you will be responsible for advancing U.S. interests in many multilateral organizations. As we all know, China and other strategic adversaries are looking to expand their influence by remaking global institutions in their image. I look forward to hearing from the nominee about what steps she intends to take to fight for America.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back my time. Thank you.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Senator Hagerty.

Let me now invite Senator Booker of New Jersey to offer an introduction of Ambassador Bernicat.

STATEMENT OF HON. CORY A. BOOKER,
U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

Senator BOOKER. Well, this is an extraordinary honor, Senator Coons. Thank you very much.

I am really elated, frankly, to be able to introduce President Biden's nominee to serve as Director General of the Foreign Service, Ambassador Marcia Bernicat. We are currently, as you know, facing tremendous challenges all across the globe that will not only define the history of the world but will most certainly define the history of our Nation. Challenges like the global crisis of climate change to taking on the COVID-19 pandemic, which continues to cause such tragedy around the world.

And we know this, for all of us Senators who have been traveling, America's diplomatic leadership is now needed more than ever. And that is why we need this great Jersian Ambassador Bernicat leading the diplomatic corps responsible for representing the United States of America and advancing our interests around the world.

I can think of no one more qualified for this extraordinarily important position. She has served as a Foreign Service officer for three decades starting, I think, when she was 2 or 3 years old. Ambassador Bernicat has had a career that is not just impressive, but impactful.

She most recently served as senior official for economic growth, energy, and the environment at the State Department and prior to that served as the Ambassador to Bangladesh and previously concurrently as the Ambassador to Senegal and Guinea-Bissau.

Over the course of her diplomatic career, she has received extraordinary honors and respect from those who she served with. She is somebody that is both well respected and looked up to, but also someone in which folks have great confidence in.

She has served in Barbados, Malawi, Morocco, India, Nepal, France, and Mali. All across the world she has made an impact and left a lasting legacy. She represents the best of the United States of America, and I would say, coming from the great State of New Jersey, she represents the best of New Jersians. Born in the wonderful Red Bank, New Jersey.

Ambassador Bernicat probably has many, many accolades, but perhaps her two best living legacy examples of her success is her two sons, who she has raised while serving in the Foreign Service.

As we Senators in a bipartisan effort work to reinvest in the diplomatic efforts to keep America safe, rebuild our alliances and partnerships, and live up to our collective values here at home and abroad, Ambassador Bernicat is exactly the kind of leader that we need.

I urge my colleagues not because of fealty to New Jersey, I urge my colleagues because of fealty to the United States of America to support her nomination.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Senator Booker. I appreciate that introduction.

We are now going to proceed to hear opening statements from each of our five nominees in the order in which they were noticed for this hearing by the committee.

So no disrespect, Senator Booker, we are going to begin with Dr. C.S. Eliot Kang, and then we will proceed through the five nominees in the order that they were noticed.

Senator BOOKER. No disrespect taken, but go ahead.

Senator COONS. It is just part of the traditions of this committee. So, if I might, Dr. Kang, your opening statement.

STATEMENT OF DR. C.S. ELIOT KANG OF NEW JERSEY, NOMINATED TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE (INTERNATIONAL SECURITY AND NONPROLIFERATION)

Dr. KANG. Yes, sir. Thank you very much.

Senator Booker, I am also from New Jersey. Ocean County, Lakewood, New Jersey.

Senator BOOKER. Yes.

[Laughter.]

Dr. KANG. Yes. Chairman Coons, Ranking Member Hagerty, and distinguished members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today.

I am grateful to President Biden for nominating me to be the Assistant Secretary of State for International Security and Nonproliferation.

I am also grateful to Secretary Blinken for his trust and faith in supporting my nomination.

Crossing the Pacific as a 9-year-old immigrant almost half a century ago, my only ambition was to taste a real hamburger. No doubt my mother and father, who made the fateful decision for my family to start a new life in the United States, had more lofty hopes for me and my sister, Myung. However, I am sure they never imagined the honor of me appearing before this august body to be examined for my worthiness to serve this great Nation as an Assistant Secretary of State.

If confirmed, I pledge to continue working tirelessly for the American people. Indeed, public service is in my DNA. I have been following the footsteps of my late father, a decorated combat pilot and a Government official. And my mother, a lifelong educator and recipient of New Jersey Governor's award for outstanding teaching.

I started my career in my mother's profession, but the events of September 11, 2001, led me to my father's path of Government service. It has not been an easy path to tread, but unwavering support from my wife, Michelle, and the understanding of my two sons, Gregory and Wesley, have strengthened my steps and resolve.

In 2003, I first joined the State Department's Bureau of Political and Military Affairs and then Bureau of Arms Control as a William C. Foster Fellow, which was a congressionally established program for bringing academics into the Government's—into the Department's arms control and nonproliferation work.

I became a career civil servant in 2005, and since 2006, I have held various leadership positions in the Bureau of International Security and Nonproliferation, working to protect the American people from dangers posed by the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and their delivery systems.

As a career officer, I have endeavored across four presidential administrations to minimize the threat of nuclear, chemical, biological, and advanced conventional weapons and the destabilization these weapons can cause.

However, despite tremendous bipartisan efforts and the steadfast leadership of this committee to stem the tide of the most destructive and horrible weapons, the challenges only appears to be growing. Indeed, the explosion of technology seems to create as many problems for our security as it solves for our society.

In the late hours of the evening, I reflect upon the increasing challenges we face, and I arrive to work every morning resolved and determined to do something about them. In this commitment, I am not alone.

I am privileged to serve the American people alongside a remarkable group of colleagues who share my dedication, the men and women serving in the Bureau of International Security and Nonproliferation who frustrate our adversaries and are respected by allies and friends throughout the world. I am inspired by these public servants who gladly accept personal sacrifices to serve our Nation.

The President's confidence in me, a career officer, is an honor for me and my family, but it is also a testament to the expertise and ability of the remarkable professionals in the Bureau. Indeed, the Bureau is an extraordinary collection of civil servants, Foreign Service officers, and contractors with expertise in the physical sciences, engineering, intelligence, military sciences, communications, and program administration. Many are leading subject matter experts with international reputations. I am in awe of the tremendous skill and knowledge and dedication they bring to tackle some of the most pressing security problems facing the world and the Nation.

If confirmed, I will work even harder to empower my colleagues to tackle the challenges this committee expects us to meet.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, the ranking member, and the members of the committee for your time and attention today and for your consideration of my nomination. I look forward to your questions.

[The prepared statement of Dr. Kang follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF DR. C.S. ELIOT KANG

Chairman Coons, Ranking Member, and distinguished members of the committee; thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today.

I am grateful to President Biden for nominating me to be the Assistant Secretary of State for International Security and Nonproliferation. I am also grateful to Secretary Blinken for his trust and faith in supporting my nomination.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, the Ranking Member, and members of the committee for your time and attention today and for your consideration of my nomination. I look forward to answering your questions.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Dr. Kang.
Mr. Scheinman?

STATEMENT OF HON. ADAM SCHEINMAN OF VIRGINIA, NOMINATED TO BE SPECIAL REPRESENTATIVE OF THE PRESIDENT FOR NUCLEAR NONPROLIFERATION, WITH THE RANK OF AMBASSADOR

Ambassador SCHEINMAN. Thank you, Chairman Coons, Ranking Member Hagerty, and all other members of the committee present today. It is really an honor to appear today as President Biden's nominee for Special Representative of the President for Nuclear Nonproliferation.

I am grateful to the President and Secretary Blinken for the confidence placed in me, and I am very pleased to be here today with my old friend Eliot Kang and all other nominees here today.

Mr. Chairman, this is my second time nominated to serve in this position. The first followed more than two decades in the Federal civil service working on issues related to nuclear weapons proliferation and related nuclear risks. And for the last 4 years, I served on the faculty of the National War College which, among other benefits, was a welcome opportunity to step back and view nuclear matters through a wider lens.

At the War College, we teach that major U.S. national security challenges are best met using all instruments of power—diplomatic, military, economic, and informational. And in partnership with friends and allies and, on occasion, our competitors. A perfect illustration is nuclear proliferation. It is a challenge to our vital interests and one for which there are no purely military or political solutions.

There is no doubt that the international system is in transition. It is increasingly competitive. It is less predictable, and in a time of turbulence, some would ask whether the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty, or the NPT—an agreement conceived in the Cold War period—was still fit for purpose. To my mind, the answer is a resounding “yes.” There is no nuclear weapons challenge facing the United States for which the NPT limits our strategic options or for which better options would be available in the treaty’s absence.

On the contrary, the NPT is a force multiplier and extends the range and reach of our nuclear diplomacy and global confidence in nonproliferation norms and all the supporting institutions. This, I think, explains the continuity of U.S. bipartisan support for the NPT, support that spans 12 presidencies—6 Democratic and 6 Republican administrations from President Kennedy to President Biden.

As in prior decades, it certainly remains true that nuclear proliferation dangers are best tackled not alone, but through collective action, and the NPT anchors that action. It is the basis for assembling diplomatic coalitions to confront countries like Iran and North Korea. Its wide, robust international safeguards came into being, and we continue to strengthen them. And it provides a framework for peaceful nuclear cooperation and restraint on transfers of the most sensitive nuclear technologies.

It also permeates U.S. alliances that are themselves potent instruments of nonproliferation policy. Same time we have to acknowledge that the NPT is not immune from pressures that could erode its appeal. Regional grievances, rising frustration of parties over the slow pace on nuclear disarmament actions are really serious problems for the NPT’s political process. And no one here needs any imagination to guess at the consequences for the treaty and for international security if Iran were to take the path of North Korea and withdraw from the treaty to develop nuclear weapons.

If confirmed, I look forward to doing my part to advance a broad U.S. strategy to strengthen the NPT in all aspects. There is much work to do, from strengthening the institutional machinery for nonproliferation to reassuring allies that they can depend on the United States for defense and deterrence and providing the arms control enterprise that President Biden has started with the agreement with Russia on a 5-year extension of the New START Treaty.

These are important steps, and I hope they lay the groundwork for additional measures.

Most significantly, our NPT agenda requires steady U.S. leadership. We were present at the creation of the nonproliferation regime. No other state has our reach or our influence to sustain it. And if confirmed, I pledge to do my part to carry forward the legacy of U.S. leadership, working closely with Congress, with my interagency colleagues and our foreign partners to preserve and strengthen this vital instrument.

So, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I welcome any questions you or members of the committee may have.

[The prepared statement of Ambassador Scheinman follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. ADAM M. SCHEINMAN

Thank you Mr. Chairman and members of the committee.

It is an honor to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee for Special Representative of the President for Nuclear Nonproliferation. I am grateful to the President and Secretary Blinken for the confidence they have placed in me. I am also very pleased to be here today with my fellow nominees.

Mr. Chairman, this is my second time being nominated for this position. The first time capped more than two decades in the federal civil service dedicated to preventing nuclear weapons proliferation and related nuclear risks. More recently, I served on the faculty of the National War College, which was a welcome break from the day-to-day rhythms of government work but also an opportunity to step back and view nuclear matters through a wider lens.

At the war college, we teach that major U.S. national security challenges are best met using all instruments of power—diplomatic, military, economic and informational—and in partnership with friends, allies, and on occasion our competitors. A perfect illustration is nuclear proliferation, a challenge to our vital interests and for which there are no purely military or political solutions.

There can be no doubt that the international system is in transition, increasingly competitive and less predictable. In a time of such turbulence, some ask whether the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty—or NPT, an agreement conceived in the Cold War era—is “fit for purpose.”

To my mind, this question answers itself resoundingly in the affirmative. There is no realistic nuclear weapons challenge facing the United States for which the NPT limits our strategic options or for which better options would be available in the treaty's absence. To the contrary, the NPT is a force multiplier, extending the range and reach of U.S. nuclear diplomacy and global confidence in nonproliferation norms, rules and supporting institutions. This explains the continuity of U.S. bipartisan support for this treaty, support that spans twelve presidencies, from President Kennedy to President Biden—that's six Democratic and six Republican administrations.

As in prior decades, we recognize today that nuclear proliferation dangers are best tackled not alone but through collective action. The NPT anchors such action. It is the basis for assembling diplomatic coalitions to confront Iran and North Korea. It is why robust international nuclear safeguards came into being and continue to strengthen. It provides a framework for peaceful nuclear cooperation and restraint on transfers of sensitive nuclear technologies. And it permeates U.S. alliances that are themselves potent instruments of nonproliferation policy.

At the same time, it must be acknowledged that the NPT is not immune to pressures that over time may erode its appeal. Regional grievances and rising frustration of many parties over the slow pace of nuclear disarmament actions are serious problems that roil the NPT's political process. And one needs little imagination to guess at the consequences for the treaty and international security if Iran were to take the path of North Korea by seeking to withdraw from the treaty to develop nuclear weapons.

If confirmed, I look forward to doing my part to advance a broad U.S. strategy to strengthen the NPT in all its aspects. There is much work to do, from strengthening international safeguards, to expanding peaceful nuclear cooperation without adding to proliferation dangers, to enhancing the security incentives of states to support the NPT. Reassuring allies that rely on the United States for defense and deterrence is one such measure. Another is reviving the nuclear arms control enterprise, as the Biden administration has advanced by reaching agreement with Russia on a five-year extension of the New START Treaty. The agreement to resume a high-level dialogue on strategic stability is another welcome development, one that can lay the groundwork for additional measures.

Most significantly, our NPT agenda requires steady U.S. leadership. We were present at the creation of the nonproliferation regime and no other state has our reach or influence to sustain it. If confirmed, I pledge to do my part to carry forward the legacy of U.S. leadership, working closely with Congress, my interagency colleagues, and our foreign partners to preserve and strengthen a treaty system that contributes so much to the nation's security.

Thank you again, Mr. Chairman. I welcome any questions you or other members of the committee may have.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Mr. Scheinman.

We will now turn to Ambassador Bernicat.

STATEMENT OF HON. MARCIA STEPHENS BLOOM BERNICAT OF NEW JERSEY, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF THE MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE DIRECTOR GENERAL OF THE FOREIGN SERVICE

Ambassador BERNICAT. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Senator Coons, Ranking Member Senator Hagerty, distinguished members of the committee. I am honored to appear before you today.

I sincerely thank President Biden and Secretary Blinken for the confidence they have placed in me as their nominee for Director General of the Foreign Service and to serve as Director of Global Talent Management. If confirmed, I will work with the members of this committee to build a workforce better able to confront the breadth and depth of challenges we face in the 21st century.

Supporting the more than 76,000 women and men who make up our diverse global team would be the highest privilege of my four-decade career. I am inspired by my colleagues who so dutifully serve our Nation, too often in harm's way. They deserve our full support, and their welfare will be my north star.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to acknowledge my aunt and uncle, Blanche and Robert Stephens; my sister and brother-in-law, Kathryn and Luther White; and brother and sister-in-law, Rodney and Cindy Bloom. I would also like to thank my sons, Sumit Nicolaus and Sunil Christopher, and their father, Olivier, who hold a special place in my heart in no small part for having shared this Foreign Service journey with me across the globe.

As Secretary Blinken noted when he came before this committee, when America does not lead on the global stage, others who do not necessarily have our best interests at heart and mind fill the void, or the challenges simply go unaddressed. In order to lead with diplomacy, we need a strong State Department.

Our team has been tested in unprecedented ways over the last 20 months. Most recently mobilizing to evacuate more than 123,000 people, including 6,000 U.S. citizens, 2,800 locally employed staff from Afghanistan, one of the largest noncombatant evacuations in U.S. history. And this effort was preceded in the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic by our coordinating the repatriation of over 100,000 Americans from 136 different countries and territories in less than 6 months.

A 21st century workforce must reflect our diverse Nation. If confirmed, I will prioritize diversity, equity, inclusion, and accessibility so the Department is fully representative of the American people and is a workplace where every employee is treated with dignity and respect and has an equal opportunity for professional development and promotion. I will work with Ambassador Winstanley, the Department's first Chief Diversity and Inclusion Officer, to ensure the initiatives she leads are embedded at every level of our organization.

Mr. Chairman, over the past 20 months we have adapted to unprecedented circumstances. At State, we are building on that experience to invest in a workforce that is more mobile, agile, and expeditionary, especially one that gets outside capitals more often to directly engage local communities.

The virtual world provides new tools and expanded outreach, for example [inaudible]. If confirmed, I will work to ensure we are prepared to return to the workplace while taking full advantage of a more hybrid workforce and environment.

We will also need to build a broader knowledge set to meet the challenges our Nation faces—from preventing the next pandemic, harnessing the full potential of emerging technologies, and addressing climate change, to strengthening our alliances and countering our adversaries.

Our diversity as a nation gives us strategic advantage. By seeking the best talent, most creative minds, and our fellow citizens' varied experiences and backgrounds, State is better equipped to advance America's security, its other interests, our values, and commitment to democracy. In our diversity, we embody the values to which our Nation aspires, and we also inspire Americans to pursue a life of service and give young people across the globe hope for a better future.

Finally, if confirmed, I will work to strengthen accountability, empowering our employees to take risks, learn from their mistakes, and assume greater responsibility for their decisions. And I will endeavor to make healing central to all my efforts—from a pandemic that robbed us of too many colleagues and family members, from the withdrawal from Afghanistan where so many of our employees served over the past two decades, and from the racial and social strife that has rocked our country and our workforce.

Thank you for the opportunity to be here with you today. I look forward to answering your questions.

If confirmed, I will work closely with the Office of Management and Budget and the Office of Personnel Management to ensure we are prepared to return to the workplace while taking full advantage of a more hybrid workforce and environment.

We will also need to build a broader knowledge set to meet the challenges and benefits from the opportunities our nation faces—from preventing the next pandemic, harnessing the full potential of emerging technologies and addressing climate change, to strengthening our alliances and countering our adversaries. Senator COONS. Thank you, Ambassador.

Next we will turn to Ms. Crocker.

STATEMENT OF HON. BATHSHEBA NELL CROCKER OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, NOMINATED TO BE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE OFFICE OF THE UNITED NATIONS AND OTHER INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS IN GENEVA, WITH THE RANK OF AMBASSADOR

Ms. CROCKER. Thank you, Senator Coons, Ranking Member Hagerty, and distinguished members of this committee.

I am honored to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee to be the Representative of the United States to the United Nations and Other International Organizations in Geneva.

I am grateful to President Biden and Secretary of State Blinken for this opportunity to again serve my country.

I am so grateful for the love and support of my husband, Milan Vaishnav, our daughters, Asha and Farrin, and for their sacrifice, should I be confirmed to take on this important role. I am also thankful for the support of my father, Chester Crocker, and my sisters and their families, and I am thinking today of my mom, who would have so proud to witness me appearing before this committee again.

My parents instilled in me a deep commitment to public service. I have had no greater honor than serving my country, side by side with our career diplomatic corps. And I am especially proud that my father and I are the only father-daughter Assistant Secretaries of State in State Department history.

My previous roles as Assistant Secretary of State for International Organization Affairs at the United Nations and overseeing CARE USA's humanitarian work have shown me that the United Nations works most effectively when the United States leads and leverages all of the tools at our disposal to advance U.S. national security interests across and through the United Nations system.

My previous experiences position me well to represent the United States across the many different organizations in Geneva and ensure sound oversight of the U.S. contributions to those organizations. I am committed to advancing reforms to make those organizations more efficient and effective and to ensuring the United States is best positioned to lead, to collaborate, and, where necessary, to outcompete, so that the United Nations system remains grounded on its foundational values of advancing human rights, democracy, economic opportunity, and international peace and security.

China, Russia, Cuba, and others are threatening those values, seeking to co-opt multilateral institutions, including Geneva-based organizations, to impose their national agendas and reshape the rules-based international organizations. For example, at the International Telecommunications Union, the People's Republic of China and Russia aimed to undercut U.S. efforts to protect the open Internet. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that the United States and our like-minded partners can drive the discussion and the rules of the road, at the ITU and other standard-setting bodies, and support strong candidates for leadership in the Geneva-based organizations.

The Biden-Harris administration decided that the United States should run for re-election to the U.N. Human Rights Council to ensure that body focuses on the world's worst human rights violators. The Geneva-based organizations are critical to U.S. efforts to address the COVID-19 pandemic, strengthen global health security, and support effective and efficient provision of humanitarian assistance in crisis and conflict situations around the world. The World Health Organization is a central pillar of the global house security architecture.

If confirmed, I will prioritize U.S. leadership in the efforts to strengthen the WHO through reforms that promote transparency, accountability, cost effectiveness, sustainability, and equity across the agency and its programs. I am committed to ensuring that the organization can more effectively and transparently tackle COVID-19 and future emerging global health threats in collaboration with other U.N. and international partners.

During my time at CARE USA, I saw firsthand the key role, the vital role that the United States plays in leading and supporting humanitarian efforts around the globe. In Geneva, the Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Organization on Migration, the Office of the Coordinator for Humanitarian Affairs, and the International Committee of the Red Cross and Red Crescent are key partners in those efforts. And if confirmed, I will ensure robust U.S. leadership and oversight at those agencies and look to leverage U.S. contributions to drive needed reforms and ensure other countries step up.

At their best, Geneva-based organizations are valuable partners across an array of U.S. priorities, including global health security, human rights, humanitarian assistance, technology, and other standard-setting efforts, climate change, intellectual property, trade disarmament, and more.

If confirmed, I will aim to reestablish U.S. relationships and leadership so that we can effectively leverage the unique multilateral platform Geneva offers to work with allies and partners, the private sector, and civil society to advance U.S. goals and push back on PRC and others' efforts to undermine those organizations.

Thank you for the opportunity to appear before this committee today. I look forward to your questions and, if confirmed, to working with this committee to ensure that USUN Geneva effectively meets the challenges of today's strategic landscape.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Ms. Crocker.

Dr. Carpenter, you are our last of our five nominees today. We look forward to your opening statement.

STATEMENT OF DR. MICHAEL CARPENTER OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, NOMINATED TO BE U.S. REPRESENTATIVE TO THE ORGANIZATION FOR SECURITY AND COOPERATION IN EUROPE, WITH THE RANK OF AMBASSADOR

Dr. CARPENTER. Thank you, Chairman Coons, Ranking Member Hagerty, and members of the committee for this opportunity to appear before you today as the President's nominee for Permanent Representative to the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe.

It is a tremendous honor to be nominated for this position, and I am grateful to President Biden and Secretary Blinken for the confidence they have placed in me.

I would also like to thank my parents, my spouse, and our two children for their endless love and support.

My mother immigrated to this country from Poland. She was born during World War II while my grandparents, both physicians, were fighting the Nazi occupation as clandestine officers in the underground Home Army. After the war, the Communist dictatorship rewarded their heroism by confiscating their property and torturing my grandfather to divulge the names of his fellow officers. He refused, even when it cost him his job at the local hospital. Over four decades later, though, he lived to see the Solidarity movement sweep aside the oppressive Communist regime.

My family's struggles against totalitarianism instilled in me an appreciation for the democratic freedoms we enjoy as Americans and a conviction that they must never be taken for granted. I graduated from high school in 1989, the very year that communism was defeated in Central Europe. After earning a doctorate studying democratic movements, I joined the Foreign Service.

I was working on the South Caucasus when Russia invaded Georgia in 2008, and I was serving as NSC Director for Russia when it invaded Ukraine in 2014. Later, at the Pentagon, I led efforts to strengthen and support the sovereignty and territorial integrity and Euro-Atlantic aspirations of the countries between NATO and Russia.

Today, the optimism of 1989 seems distant. Democratic institutions are under assault, and increasingly aggressive authoritarian regimes seem to weaken and divide democratic states against one another. A Communist dictatorship in China is trampling human rights and using economic coercion against other states.

A revanchist Russia is repressing civil society and using active measures to disrupt and weaken democratic rivals. In many countries within the OSCE space, anti-Semitism, racism, and intolerance are gaining ground. Judicial independence is eroding. Journalists are harassed. And ruling parties with no interest in fair electoral competition are capturing state institutions.

Recognizing the enormous challenges that lie ahead, I would highlight the following three vital areas, where, if confirmed, I would seek to partner with the members of this committee as well as with the Helsinki Commission.

First, to promote comprehensive security across all three OSCE dimensions—politico-military, economic and environmental, and human rights. Participating states must address not just conventional military threats, but also hybrid threats, such as election interference, energy coercion, disinformation, dark money, cyber operations, and transnational repression. We need to find ways not only to shine a light on these malign activities, but also to defend ourselves and our democratic partners against them.

Second, to promote prosperity and rule of law, participating states must establish stronger anti-corruption measures, both east and west of Vienna. Corruption erodes economic growth, it undermines security, and it enables state capture. Like-minded states must work together to fight kleptocracy, using tools like criminal statutes against bribery, Global Magnitsky-style sanctions, and collective action against offshore secrecy.

Third, our allies and partners must work together to strength the resilience of frontline democracies. In Ukraine, Georgia, Moldova, Armenia, and many Balkan countries, OSCE institutions offer a range of tools for strengthening democratic resilience. Supporting religious freedom, media pluralism, electoral reform, and judicial independence all fall into this basket, as do efforts to bridge societal divides and resolve longstanding conflicts.

Lastly, I want to acknowledge the instrumental role that Congress plays in achieving these goals. Whenever Members of this body observe an election, condemn human rights abuses, or demand push back against foreign coercion, you serve as a force multiplier. If confirmed, it will be an honor to work the members of this committee, the Helsinki commissioners, and other Members of Congress to advance our shared interest in democracy, transparency, prosperity, and security for the American people.

Thank you, and I look forward to your questions.

My family's struggles against totalitarianism instilled in me an appreciation for the democratic freedoms we enjoy as Americans and a conviction that they must never be taken for granted. I graduated from high school in 1989, the very year Communism was defeated in Central Europe. After earning a doctorate studying democratic movements, I joined the Foreign Service. I was working on the South Caucasus region when Russia invaded Georgia in 2008 and was serving as NSC Director for Russia when it invaded Ukraine in 2014. Later, at the Pentagon, I led efforts to strengthen and support the sovereignty, territorial integrity, and Euro-Atlantic aspirations of the countries between NATO and Russia.

Today, the optimism of 1989 admittedly seems distant. Democratic institutions are under assault and increasingly aggressive authoritarian regimes seek to weaken and divide democratic states against one other. A Communist dictatorship in China is trampling human rights and using economic coercion against other states. A revanchist Russia is repressing civil society and using "active measures" to disrupt and weaken democratic rivals. In many countries within the OSCE space, anti-Semitism, racism, and intolerance are gaining ground. Judicial independence is eroding, journalists are harassed, and ruling parties with no interest in fair electoral competition are capturing state institutions.

Fortunately, the OSCE is uniquely suited to addressing these challenges. The Helsinki Final Act's linkages between security, economic relations, and human rights and its insistence that the latter are not an internal matter but a legitimate concern for all members of the international community have been transformational. Today, all participating States are held to account for their adherence to OSCE principles and commitments. If confirmed, I will continue speaking up for human dignity, freedom, and justice wherever they are challenged in the OSCE region. There are also bright spots and positive changes occurring. Though often less visible, OSCE field missions in Central Asia, the Western Balkans and Eastern Europe do highly impactful work to promote security, human rights, and rule of law at the local level.

Recognizing the enormous challenges that lie ahead, I would highlight the following three vital areas where, if confirmed, I would seek to partner with the members of this committee as well as the Helsinki Commission:

First, to promote comprehensive security across all three OSCE dimensions—political-military, economic and environmental, and human rights—participating States must address not just conventional military threats but also "hybrid" threats such as election interference, energy coercion, disinformation, dark money, cyber operations, and transnational repression. We need to find ways not only to shine a light on these malign activities but also to defend ourselves and our democratic partners against them.

Corruption erodes economic growth, undermines security, and enables state capture. Like-minded states must work together to fight kleptocracy, using tools like criminal statutes against bribery, Global Magnitsky-style sanctions, and collective action against off-shore secrecy.

Third, our allies and partners must work together to strengthen the resilience of frontline democracies. In Ukraine, Georgia, Moldova, Armenia, and many Balkan countries, OSCE institutions offer a range of tools for strengthening democratic resilience. Supporting religious freedom, media pluralism, electoral reform, and judicial independence all fall into this basket, as do efforts to bridge societal divides and resolve longstanding conflicts.

Lastly, I want to acknowledge the instrumental role that Congress plays in achieving these goals. Whenever members of this body observe an election, condemn human rights abuses, or demand pushback against foreign coercion, you serve as a force multiplier. If confirmed, it will be an honor to work with the members of this committee, the Helsinki Commissioners, and other members of Congress to advance our shared interest in democracy, transparency, prosperity, and security for the American people.

Thank you, and I look forward to your questions.

Senator COONS. Thank you.

And now I am going to begin an initial round of 5 minutes. We have a robust participation in this virtual hearing, and I will ask just a few brief questions. I will try to direct one to each of the nominees, and then we will proceed to a first round. And if members are interested in a second round, if you please convey that to my team while we are doing these questions, that would be quite helpful.

Dr. Kang, if you would just briefly describe to me what would the ISN Bureau's highest priorities be under your leadership?

Dr. KANG. Thank you for that question, Senator Coons.

I have—my career has been focused on nuclear matters, whether it be related to nuclear security, nuclear safeguards, even nuclear safety. But my biggest fear has always been a biological weapon that is unleashed on the world. And the COVID-19 pandemic right now is a wake-up call, and this is an area I have been very concerned about for many, many years.

Four years ago, when I was Acting Assistant Secretary during the transition between President Obama and President Trump, I tried very much to increase our capability in this area in the Bureau. We have a very small staff even now, less than a half a dozen. Most of them, fellows, are from elsewhere. But when I consider that I had led diplomacy and engagement with our foreign partners and elsewhere to make everyone cognizant of a danger a radiological device could create, the mayhem that it could create and wreak on our economy and the casualties it could cause, just imagine what if COVID-19 was a purposely designed biological weapon.

Now, state parties would be hesitant to use such a weapon. But I could clearly see a nihilistic group of terrorists and the threshold for creating something like this is not as high as creating a nuclear weapon without apparatus of a state with its engineering and manufacturing capabilities.

So that is my greatest fear. Yet at the same time, the international instrument that at least my Bureau is responsible for, the Biological Weapons Convention, is the least institutionalized, least developed, and in many ways least significant of the many non-proliferation regime out there. So, sir, this is one area where I will be focused like a laser beam and trying to make some advances.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Dr. Kang. I will ask one more question, and then I will be asking in a second round.

Mr. Scheinman, if I could? The NPT tries to balance peaceful use of nuclear energy with the goals of preventing the proliferation of sensitive fuel cycle nuclear technologies in enrichment and reprocessing and reducing the risk of the proliferation of nuclear weapons technology. How should the United States balance those two goals, and what would you do to help improve the effectiveness of the NPT?

Ambassador SCHEINMAN. Thank you very much for the question, Senator Coons. It is really a critical issue for the long-term success of the nonproliferation system because if we do not adequate controls over peaceful use of nuclear technology, we are very likely to see additional proliferation down the road.

There are two areas where I think we need to spend a lot of time and energy. One is ensuring that the IAEA, the International Atomic Energy Agency's verification system is as strong and robust as possible, that we have agreements among states to make it as strong and robust as possible, so that we have a very clear firebreak between a country's peaceful nuclear program and any potential that that program might be put to weapons.

The system has worked pretty well, but it could certainly be improved. And one area in particular that we hope to see improvement on is gaining global support for the additional protocol to the IAEA safeguards agreement, which is essential if we are going to ferret out undeclared nuclear programs. Absolutely essential.

The other area is perhaps a bit outside of the NPT, but it deals with supplier policies. I worry about the spread of the most sensitive nuclear fuel production technologies, enrichment and reprocessing, because if that spreads to additional countries, it would be very, very challenging to prevent countries from not using that for military purposes down the road. So we have to work with the export control supply regime, the nuclear suppliers group to encourage the highest level of restraint in those transfers.

We need to work with other nuclear suppliers so that we have understandings that when we sign contracts, it is not going to include enrichment and reprocessing technology. And we should acknowledge in the NPT itself that certain technologies are more dangerous than others, and we ought to erect the highest possible barriers. So that is some of the ways I think we can look at that.

Senator COONS. Okay, thank you, Mr. Scheinman. I look forward to a next round where I will try to question our three other nominees.

Senator Hagerty? Senator Hagerty, you are muted.

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ambassador Bernicat, I would like to start with you. I would like to begin with a quote from Ambassadors Bill Burns and Linda Thomas-Greenfield, and this is the quote. "The personnel evaluation process consumes 3 months of an officer's time, with no commensurate accountability for, let alone improvement in, individual or collective performance."

As U.S. Ambassador to Japan, I worked with some very talented colleagues in the State Department, but I can certainly sympathize with that statement, given the amount of time that people spent on performance evaluations. And I recall a saying that if one wants to offer criticism at the Department of State that one does it by damning someone by faint praise, as they say. I cannot tell you how many 5s I saw on personnel evaluation forms. And I strongly advocate for having a more rigorous evaluation process to ensure that accountability is at the center of the State Department's personnel process.

So my first question is do you agree with the characterization of the State Department's personnel evaluation process as described by Ambassadors Burns and Thomas-Greenfield?

Ambassador BERNICAT. Senator, thank you very much for that question, and you know from your own experience how time-consuming our performance evaluation process is.

I have to say, having served with Linda Thomas-Greenfield when she was Director General and being a colleague of Bill Burns over the years, I know that Linda in particular worked very hard to reform the EER process, which we did. I can tell you, if confirmed, I will rededicate my efforts to further reforms, which I understand are already being considered.

The evaluation process is the sole means by which we promote people, but it is really the penultimate activity in what should be a year's worth of performance evaluation. And as a supervisor, I have always—and a leader, I have always encouraged my team, if you are a supervisor, to provide honesty feedback throughout the year and with the notion of improving performance because no one is perfect. And then as to my employees to seek that kind of critical feedback because it is very hard to see our blind spots, and our performance in those blind spots change from time to time. So I assure you that we have improvements we can make, and we should make them.

Senator HAGERTY. I am glad to hear it and look forward to working with you to talk through metrics. And again, I do not mean critical in a bad sense, but as I said, the performance evaluations seem so inflated to me as a business person that it is hard, it is hard for a person to see how they might improve when anyone—when everybody gets such high scores in the system.

One more place I want to turn is the issue of promotion in the State Department, Ambassador. Again, I am going to come back to Bill Burns and Linda Thomas-Greenfield. They also said this, that opportunities for mid-career graduate or professional education are scarce—and here is what gets me—and they carry little weight with promotion panels.

The effect is often to penalize employees who receive extra training or undertake assignments to other agencies, or they work in Congress because they have gone outside of the State Department system and spent time there. And if what they say is true, it really seems counterproductive to me to building a diplomatic corps, that we want to have the type of breadth of experience and preparation for the 21st century. And if confirmed, I would love to hear how you would ensure that professional education, experiences like working on the Hill, are something that actually inures to the credit of our State Department employees.

Ambassador BERNICAT. Yes, well, thank you. I would say three things on this issue.

One is that expanding your skill set as a Foreign Service officer at whatever point in your career is considered a valuable and credible reason to promote someone. In and of itself, the training is not a promotable function, if you will, but have you applied the skills that you learned in that additional training or time off?

Secondly, the promotion boards. Again, my experience as an employee and as a supervisor, promotion boards have been instructed to in recent years to give added weight to those experiences.

And thirdly, and this is a real key, Senator, we have had a rollercoaster experience with hiring, both in terms of budget and in terms of hiring freezes over the course of my career. It is really difficult to allow people the time that they need to take to get training when we are short on personnel. And so, I know that our budget requests are looking to once again build in the kind of cushion where we can let people take time off without harming the core mission.

And Senator, if I can just add parenthetically, I had a year of university training at Berkeley before going to India, and I believe it directly helped lead to my promotion after that. So I would say when we use those training opportunities, build in those exchange opportunities, then they strengthen a person's promotability.

Senator HAGERTY. I am glad to hear you say that, and that is your perspective. I know talking with my employees at the Embassy in Japan, there was a perception that it may—you know, it may actually be a disadvantage to take that time off, and I understand the resource constraints that make it difficult and challenging. But I look forward to working with you because I do think those sort of broadening experiences make a real difference.

Mr. Chairman, I will yield my time back. Look forward to a second round.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Senator.

Senator Cardin?

Senator CARDIN. Well, Mr. Chairman, thank you very much. And first, let me thank all of our nominees for their willingness to continue to serve our country. We thank you. We thank your families.

Dr. Carpenter, I first want to appreciate the meeting that we had and your statements today about working with the members of the Senate and the Helsinki Commission members and the Helsinki Commission itself. I think we share the same objectives. I was very pleased to hear your three priorities.

In regards to the hybrid threat, you are exactly right. I call your attention to a report I authored when I was ranking on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee about Mr. Putin's use of an asymmetric arsenal to bring down democratic states. I think you will find a lot of the issues you talk about. We document Russia's specific use of these tools to compromise democracies.

And that is why resiliency of frontline democracies so much needs to be a priority. We have seen a decline of democracies globally, and certainly within the OSCE region, there has been a significant decline of democratic states.

And then, lastly, the corruption issue. You and I have talked about this. The corruption is the fuel that allows the autocratic regimes to stay in power. So I am going to ask your help in three bills that are moving through the Congress because sometimes we do not get the full cooperation of the executive branch and the missions within the State Department.

One would set up a tier rating system for how well every state in country—every country in the world is dealing with corruption. The other makes the Global Magnitsky statute permanent and strengthens some of the provisions within it. And the third establishes a fund that we can use when an opportunity presents itself to deal with—dealing with corruption in countries.

All three are bipartisan, and all three are very strongly supported. There has been positive action in our committee. But I would ask your support for these initiatives because I think it very much will help you in regards to your mission.

So I look forward to working with you, and I will be glad to hear a response.

Dr. CARPENTER. Thank you, Senator Cardin, for your incredible leadership on these issues. And it has been so heartening to see the Helsinki Commission, and you in particular, leading the effort on anti-kleptocracy. And I would note that the anti-kleptocracy act now has, I believe, seven different bills attached to it, all of which strike at key elements of global corruption.

This is a problem, as you just noted, Senator, that is inextricably linked to the growth of authoritarianism around the world. Often we see regimes that consolidate political power that start out by using corrupt means, whether it is doling out procurement contracts or using other forms of graft and bribery, to be able to accumulate economic power.

So those two things, sort of the oligarchization of politics around the world and the growing authoritarianism of politics around the world, go together. And of course, some of our biggest competitors, both Russian and China, are experts at weaponizing corruption against democratic states.

So I value these efforts, the incredible number of ideas and bills that have come out of the Helsinki Commission, many of which you have cosponsored, and look forward to advancing this agenda, if confirmed.

Senator CARDIN. I look forward to working with you.

Dr. Kang and Ambassador Scheinman, I would like to ask you about probably the greatest the threat we have on nuclear proliferation, and that is Iran. We are in a somewhat difficult decision right now not to be part of the JCPOA. Which we have seen Iran violate the JCPOA, and yet we are, it looks like, supporting a path that will not allow for international sanctions. I want to know your strategies for how you will advise President Biden and the administration on what can work in making sure Iran does not have nuclear weapons.

Dr. KANG. Perhaps I should start, sir? Absolutely Iran should never obtain a nuclear weapon. The President is absolutely committed to that, and that is consistent passed over a number of administrations. But return to the JCPOA advances our national security interest. And it is the intention of the President to build a longer and stronger deal, which encompasses regional destabilization that Iran is responsible for, but also the ballistic missile development they have, which could threaten certainly the regional neighbors but perhaps, over time, ultimately the United States.

So, yes, there has been a break in conversations and negotiations between our lead negotiator, Rob Malley, who is in charge of this, since June, but there also has been an election in Tehran. Now the Supreme Leader makes the ultimate call, but nonetheless, it is left to the presidential administration to implement and negotiate their position with us. So we are still waiting for a positive response from Iran, but nonetheless as, Senator Cardin, you point out, the Iranians are creating plants underground, which has nothing to do with peaceful uses of nuclear energy.

Enrichment up to 60 percent for uranium, also producing uranium metal of 20 percent, these are dangerous moves. So while we have not imposed a deadline for these negotiations, I think Secretary Blinken made it clear and stated that we are very conscious that as time proceeds, Iran's nuclear advances will have a bearing in its view, our view of returning to the JCPOA. And President also said the process will not be open indefinitely.

And sir, as someone who had pioneered in many ways and also been at the front edge of many nonproliferation and counterproliferation sanctions targeting, whether it be DPRK, Syria, or Iran, all those machineries and authorities—and thanks for tools that Congress has armed us with—we are ready to make sure that Iran makes the right decision not just for, well, for itself, for the sake for the Iranian people.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator COONS. We are next going to hear from Senator Young.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, Chairman. I will stick with the topic of Iran for starters here. Since both Dr. Kang and Mr. Scheinman are up for related and somewhat overlapping positions, I would like you each to speak to your views on the following questions.

Just to lay the foundation here, at the last moment, the IAEA struck a deal with Iranian officials on September 12th to continue nuclear monitoring. However, in that deal, the storage cards for the monitoring cameras are sealed and cannot be viewed until the United States and Iran resume JCPOA talks. But this, of course, is a critical time when Iran is actively moving towards having enough material for a bomb.

I would like to know what each of you believes is a realistic time-frame before Iran has enough fissile material for a nuclear weapon. How much time are we dealing with here?

Dr. KANG. Ambassador Scheinman, are you comfortable dealing with it? Perhaps as a sitting official—

Senator YOUNG. Dr. Kang, go ahead, please.

Dr. KANG. Yes, perhaps I am in a better position because I do not believe Mr. Scheinman is privy to some of the latest information and assessment.

Senator YOUNG. Yes, go ahead, sir.

Dr. KANG. Yes, sir. So the platform, of course, this particular platform is not ideal for transmitting the most accurate and precise information to you, sir. So, if confirmed, I certainly will be happy to brief you on this matter.

Senator YOUNG. Okay, okay.

Dr. KANG. But it is true, I mean, they have, as when they were complying with JCPOA, they were about a year away from producing enough fissile material for a viable weapon.

Senator YOUNG. Sure. Well, there has been—

Dr. KANG. Now they are months away. Yes?

Senator YOUNG. I understand, if you are read into this, you, of course, would not want to provide any classified estimates, which is good. You passed that test. But open source, you know, materials indicate that a couple of months is some of the latest estimates that may or may not be accurate.

I will ask each of you to answer the following. What alternatives is the Biden administration considering if the resumption of talks fails? Dr. Kang?

Dr. KANG. Yes, sir. So, ultimately, that would be up to the President and the Secretary and others at a much higher pay scale than myself. But it is clear that what my mission would be, and our Bureau is very well equipped to apply those necessary sanctions, interdiction, and other measures to make sure that there is sufficient incentive for Iran to reconsider its position.

Senator YOUNG. Okay, so your job would not be to offer counsel on such matters?

Dr. KANG. Well, I would definitely voice my opinion, sir, and I will be part of the interagency process. But I have been dealing with proliferators all my career here at State Department.

Senator YOUNG. Yeah.

Dr. KANG. DPRK, Syria.

Senator YOUNG. You mention sanctions, Dr. Kang. We had sanctions before this administration came in. So what other options might you recommend?

Dr. KANG. Well, certainly there are other things that once again I cannot fully discuss with you in this platform. But as a general matter, interdiction is something we are very good at. There are varied export control measures that we lead, and we will turn those on, right back on.

Senator YOUNG. Yes, sir.

Mr. Scheinman, will you be involved consultatively with the administration in your role on such matters?

Ambassador SCHEINMAN. Yes.

Senator YOUNG. And if so, if you would kindly indicate what alternatives the administration should consider if these talks fail.

Ambassador SCHEINMAN. Thank you, Senator. I would note that my responsibilities will not include our direct negotiations with Iran. That is handled by others in the administration. I will probably look at the issue through the lens of the Nonproliferation Treaty and what do we do if Iran were to break out of the Nonproliferation Treaty.

Senator YOUNG. Okay. Well, my time is winding down. I would just note I also had question for Ms. Crocker pertaining to an unrelated matter. It relates to the Human Rights Council and—

Senator COONS. Just be briefly, if you might, Senator Young.

Senator YOUNG. Yes, I will, indeed. The step they took of establishing a permanent commission of inquiry to investigate Israel, the only such permanent agenda item on the council. We will ask you about that in writing. Perhaps you could offer your views on the propriety of that matter.

Thank you.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Senator Young.
Senator Schatz?

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ambassador Bernicat, to all of you, thank you for your willingness to serve. I understand that Special Envoy Kerry and his team are doing a lot of work in terms of how to make sure taking action on climate is a routine part of how our Foreign Service thinks about their mission on a day-to-day basis. Can you talk a little bit about where you see the opportunities to make climate action part of recruitment, training, and promoting Foreign Service officers so that it becomes a permanent part of the Foreign Service and the State Department and does not swing wildly depending on who the Secretary is and who the President is?

Ambassador BERNICAT. Thank you so much, Senator Schatz, for that question that has been teasing all of us and especially in my current role as Acting Assistant Secretary for Oceans, Environment, and Scientific Affairs. Our goal is to increase the literacy Department wide on [inaudible] environment—

Senator COONS. Ms. Ambassador Bernicat, in a demonstration of the need for greater investment in State Department IT, your signal is cutting out very, very badly.

[Crosstalk.]

Ambassador Bernicat:—and health issues, it begins with recruiting. But of course, the bulk of our corps is generalist, and so—I did improve the audio. Is that working?

Senator COONS. Sure. Why do we not try and continue now?

Ambassador BERNICAT. Can you hear me?

Senator SCHATZ. The audio seems to be working. Go ahead.

Ambassador BERNICAT. Okay. I have also changed location. So tell me if that helps.

[Inaudible.] Thank you, Senator Hagerty.

Recruiting more people with the STH skills as well as promoting stem education are part of the plan, but I can assure you, sir, if confirmed, that we will also look for ways to improve training for all officers and staff as well as to bring more people into the various bureaus who have specific responsibility for these issues. In no small part because they are tied not just to environment, but to energy, to increasing jobs, and to everything related to the environment, including health.

Senator SCHATZ. You know, I think that is a good start, but I want to be really crisp with what I am asking. I am looking for the kinds of changes that are institutionally difficult to reverse and do not depend on who the President is. And just an emphasis on who you hire is not an unreasonable start, but I am looking for processes, training manuals, curricula, and all of that to change because climate is not going to go away as a threat multiplier and as a diplomatic challenge. So I look forward to working with you on that.

Ambassador, as you know, we pass a defense authorization every year, and we sometimes pass a Coast Guard authorization every year, and I am wondering if you can talk about in your mind's eye what it would be like if the Congress passed an annual State Department reauthorization, as we do for the Department of Defense, and how that might help to address the challenges that you see with the Foreign Service.

Ambassador BERNICAT. Well, sir, thank you for that question, and let me just say, thank you, I look forward to working with this committee and with Congress on a whole host of issues related to the health and function of our staffs and the State Department in general.

I would say that, you know, in general, our greatest resource is our people. And so, the ability—as you say, recruiting is a good start, but we also need to make sure that we are retaining and developing that talent pool all along the way in their career, and to be able to do that in a steady funding, to be able to plan workforces out over a period of time is really important.

We are, parenthetically, right now the youngest Foreign—excuse me, State Department in terms of seniority that we have been years, and that has a lot to do with the hiring surges that took place under Secretary Powell and Secretary Clinton, as well as a good number of retirements, especially in our civil service corps.

In terms of processes related to the environment, there are a whole host of things from legislation that requires specific actions. We are—we are leading again from the front on environmental issues, and we are committing ourselves to a number of actions that have multiple-year execution in order to make them happen. And so we are looking to build in ways to make sure that we are supporting not only our commitments, but the countries that we are asking to make those commitments.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you.

Mr. Chairman, can I have another minute?

Senator COONS. One question, if you would, Senator Schatz.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you.

Just, Dr. Kang, the Biden administration is continuing the previous administration's proposals to expand U.S. nuclear capabilities, including a new low-yield nuclear sea-launched cruise missile that many of us believe is dangerous and unnecessary. I understand that some of the true bad actors are not persuaded by anything or by much, and that sort of calls of hypocrisy are not particularly compelling. But I am also wondering about the rational countries that we are trying to persuade not to pursue their own nuclear ambitions and how we square our pursuing of these low-yield nuclear sea-launched cruise missiles with our desire to stop proliferation among some of our allies and adversaries who are considering whether they want to go down the wrong path.

Dr. KANG. Thank you for that question, Senator.

I will try my best to answer that question because that would not be in the area of responsibility for the Bureau of ISN. It will be for the companion bureau, AVC, Arms Control and Verification and, of course, Under Secretary Bonnie Jenkins, who has the Department lead on this. But having said that—

Senator SCHATZ. In the interest of time, in the interest of time and clarity, do you see that as a challenge for the United States?

Dr. KANG. Oh, yes, sir. I mean, there is intimate link between arms control and nonproliferation. Those who have—possess nuclear weapons in the context of the NPT, a nuclear weapons state, they have an obligation to reduce and ultimately seek disarmament. So it would set a bad example. For example, China massively expanding its nuclear strategic capability is counter-productive, and it runs counter to nonproliferation.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you very much.

Senator COONS. Senator Van Hollen?

Senator Van Hollen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman and Ranking Member Hagerty, and congratulations to all of you on your nominations. It is great to see a panel of such experience.

And Ambassador Bernicat, congratulations on the nomination to be the Director General of the Foreign Service. I am thrilled with the appointment. As you may know, I come from a Foreign Service family and very interested and focused on ensuring the strong morale and support for the Foreign Service.

And Senator Dan Sullivan, Republican from Alaska, and myself formed the Foreign Service Caucus a number of years ago, when we introduced legislation called the Foreign Service Families Act. And that act would extend different benefits to Foreign Service families to try to bring them up on a par with the benefits that are extended to military families serving overseas. And I know that the most recent Quadrennial Diplomacy and Development Review found, and I am quoting, "Ensuring opportunities for spousal employment should be an integral part of plans to retain and motivate staff."

Do you agree with that?

Ambassador BERNICAT. Oh, my goodness, Senator Van Hollen, I have to just express enormous gratitude for the work that you, Senator Sullivan, and others have done particularly on behalf of our families. We have almost 2,000 family members now working overseas. They bring—and back here in Washington. They bring amazing talents to augment our often barebones operations. And so, looking for ways to ensure that we can take advantage, but also that makes it easier to serve as families.

You know, Senator, I cannot help but—I cannot resist when you mention Foreign Service families, I do not think Bathsheba knows this, but I studied under her father at Georgetown University. And so in the spirit of being mentored, I do not think I would be here today if it were not in part for Chet Crocker. So, Bathsheba, I am also part of the family.

Senator Van Hollen: Well, thank you, Madam Ambassador, for mentioning that as well about Chet Crocker, and it is great to see Bathsheba here and others. Let me—and just on the Foreign Service Families Act, we have asked the chairman of the full committee to put it on the next markup calendar, and we are waiting for a green light from the ranking member of the full committee, and I see no reason for opposition, but we are continuing to push.

So, Dr. Kang, thank you for your current service in the acting position, and I look forward to supporting you in this confirmation process.

On the issue of nuclear nonproliferation, Saudi Arabia, as you know, has been engaged with successive administrations with nuclear cooperation talks but continues to have in place—Saudi Arabia, that is—the lowest standard of safeguards with the IAEA. And again, they say they want at least two nuclear power plants as part of a program going forward, and they seem intent on mastering the front end of a nuclear fuel cycle and developing enrichment capabilities.

So my question to you is, has the administration, has the Biden administration made any attempt in either bilateral or multilateral settings to push Saudi Arabia to sign and implement the additional protocol with the IAEA?

Dr. KANG. Senator, thank you for that question.

We have been in negotiation with Saudi Arabia since 2012. I think that says something. And of course, President Biden has made it clear that he will recalibrate our relationship with Saudi Arabia in human rights and other matters that complicate the relationship.

Now in terms of having the lowest standard, well, Saudi Arabia is party to the NPT, and it has in force a comprehensive safeguard agreement. And that in terms of their ambitions are very high, and certainly, they have the financial resources to make it happen, just as we have seen what UAE has done. But having said that, they have not made significant moves in actually gaining capability.

The United States has supported the universalization of additional protocol, and that is policy. And also we discourage enrichment and reprocessing where these capabilities do not already exist.

And so, we are pursuing a 123 agreement with Saudi Arabia because precisely because 123 agreement is a nonproliferation tool. So we are, of course, briefing members, as well as staff, as if there are any movement on this, and of course, it will always be a pleasure to brief you on this matter.

Senator Van Hollen: Well, I appreciate that. I see the time is expired, but we will follow up with you on that, and I will be submitting a question for the record on the administration's full compliance with the BRINK Act, which was to ensure we plug a lot of the loopholes in the sanction regime against North Korea. We saw the recent reports about their firing missiles, and so I will put that in the record. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Senator Van Hollen.

And I do not believe Senator Kaine is still with us. Is that correct? So I believe every member who is participating has had a chance at a first round. Senator Hagerty, I know you have got additional questions you would like to ask, and I have a few more I will ask, but let me defer to you to begin the second round, Senator Hagerty.

Senator HAGERTY. That is very kind of you, Chairman Coons. I appreciate it.

I would first like to turn to Dr. Carpenter, talk about Nord Stream 2.

Dr. Carpenter, you previously said, and I want to quote this, "To make sanctions against Russia work, the United States and its allies need to dispense with symbolic gestures and impose stronger sanctions that will have an immediate economic impact." Dr. Carpenter, I just want to say that I wholeheartedly agree with that statement.

And in 2019, you stated the following. “The European Union has, unfortunately, lacked the political will to implement its own anti-monopoly rules and stop Nord Stream 2 from coming to fruition, which means the U.S. Congress is now the only body that can prevent the pipeline from being built.”

Dr. Carpenter, I wholeheartedly agree with that statement, too. Yet, in May, the Biden administration waived U.S. sanctions against Nord Stream 2 AG and sanctions against its chief executive. And last week, Gazprom announced that it has now completed the pipeline.

So, Dr. Carpenter, my question is this. With the pipeline now complete, what do you feel will be the impact on energy security in Europe?

Dr. CARPENTER. Well, thank you for the question, Senator. I am very concerned by the geopolitical consequences of the Nord Stream 2 pipeline. This is a project by the Kremlin that brings no new gas molecules from Russia to Europe but merely bypasses Ukraine and the Central European countries and delivers that very same gas directly to Germany, thereby giving the Kremlin enormous leverage over Ukraine, Poland, Slovakia, and other countries in Central Europe.

Going forward, if I am confirmed, I will work to reinvigorate the second dimension of the OSCE, the economic and environmental dimension that deals with energy security, and I will seek to work very closely with my friend Amos Hochstein, who is the senior adviser to the Secretary on Energy Security, to build resilience for our partners, and particularly Ukraine, in terms of energy supply, so that Russia cannot continue to use energy supplies as a form of political weaponization of energy and energy coercion.

And last thing I will say on this, Senator, I think it is very important that the United States continue to have a—continue to be ready to use all of the authorities contained within PEESA and CAATSA, which are the laws of the land when it comes to this.

Senator HAGERTY. Well, I know the OSCE will have many divergent opinion in terms of Nord Stream 2, and I wish you the best with that, Dr. Carpenter.

Dr. Kang, can I turn with you now to focus on North Korea. You know, we worked enormously hard with Japan, with the U.N. Security Council, to impose three different, three successively more abiding sets of economic sanctions on North Korea. They had an immediate and very, very important effect on North Korea’s economy. Yet China has continued to undercut our position there.

And at the same time, North Korea has persisted in working in secret on their nuclear program, and there is an example I would like to highlight. And that is according to nongovernmental experts, North Korea is producing uranium at a covert facility, covert uranium enrichment facility, known by the U.S. intelligence community as the Kangson enrichment site.

It is not surprising that North Korea would build secret facilities to produce fissile material, but it poses significant proliferation challenges, especially considering Pyongyang’s previous efforts to provide Syria with a nuclear reactor. If confirmed, you are going to be responsible for spearheading the State Department’s efforts to reduce WMD-related threats by promoting bilateral and multi-lateral initiatives to prevent proliferation.

So, my question is, Dr. Kang, if confirmed, will you commit to providing regular updates to the committee about the administration's efforts to address North Korea's declared and undeclared nuclear and missile facilities and programs?

Dr. KANG. Absolutely, Senator. I have a long relationship with our lead on re-engagement with North Korea, Ambassador Sung Kim. I have extensive relationship in the Government talking with Korea, as well as Japan. This will be a top priority.

As you know, North Korea is an awfully hardened state, and as you rightly point out, there is always this escape valve of China. China made a decision some time ago that it is tolerable for North Korea to have nuclear weapons as long as it is a buffer state. So it is difficult proposition, but I believe the President is on a right path. We have got to calibrate a practical approach, and this is something Ambassador Sung Kim and myself during the Bush administration have some practical experience in.

Senator HAGERTY. I have had the privilege of working with Ambassador Sung Kim as well, and I look forward to continue to working with both of you as we address this challenge.

Mr. Chairman, if you would permit me, I have just a follow-on question, if I might, for Assistant Secretary Crocker?

Senator COONS. Of course. Please.

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you so much.

Assistant Secretary Crocker, I want to focus on China's growing influence among international organizations. You mentioned this in your opening remarks. And while you served as the Assistant Secretary for International Organizations during the Obama administration, China took over leadership of multiple international organizations and staffed them with Chinese nationals.

But in 2017, our posture towards China's malign behavior changed. And if confirmed, I hope that you will continue that posture developed during the previous administration to continue to counter China's influence in global institutions. And further, I fully expect you to fight for American influence by supporting qualified candidates in leadership positions and look to increase positions for Americans, such as greater positions in the Junior Professional Officers Program at the U.N. and, as you mentioned, representation like at the ITU. But I hope to see much more participation there.

And so, my question is, if confirmed, what actions will you take to make certain that qualified United States candidates are in leadership positions at U.N. bodies in Geneva?

Ms. CROCKER. Thank you for that question, Senator, and I think, as you noted, this is a strategic priority for China, and it needs to be a strategic priority for the United States. And indeed, the State Department and the administration are making a concerted effort working with like-minded partners and allies to ensure that we are able to both identify and then robustly support qualified, viable, independent candidates for leadership positions in international organizations, be they American candidates or other like-minded candidates.

And if confirmed, this will be a top priority for me. It is an effort that I fully support, and I would look to use my role and the role and the resources of the U.S. mission in Geneva, working closely with the State Department and across the interagency, to ensure that we are best positioned diplomatically and—and in terms of resources to support the candidacies.

You mentioned the ITU, where, of course, there is an American candidate up for Secretary General, for an election that will take place in September of 2022. And if confirmed, I would consider this to be one of my highest priorities on getting out to Geneva to support that candidacy and ensure that the mission is doing everything it can to support the candidacy.

And I think, again, looking at both election for leadership positions but also, as you mentioned, making sure that we are strategically focused on ensuring that we are looking also at staffing up and down the system. The Chinese are doing that, as you note, from the junior political officer level all the way up, and we need to do that. And if confirmed, I would look forward to working with Congress to make sure—and this committee to make sure—that we have appropriate resources to do that.

Senator HAGERTY. Well, I am very pleased to hear that, Assistant Secretary Crocker. Thank you.

And I will be submitting a question for the record for Mr. Scheinman about China and the NPT. I am very concerned their obligations as signatory to that treaty and the fact that they are not living up to those obligations. That will be in the QFRs coming forward, Mr. Scheinman.

And thank you, Mr. Chairman, for indulging me with some extra time.

Senator COONS. Of course. Thank you, Senator Hagerty, and thank you for a series of, I think, reasonable and balanced questions. Ironically, the last question you asked of Assistant Secretary Crocker was the question I was going to ask.

Senator HAGERTY. I am sorry.

Senator COONS. And I will add—no, no, I think it is well worth focusing on for a moment. One of the things that I was most enthusiastic about in terms of actions of a member of the previous administration, there was a heated contest for leadership of the World Intellectual Property Organization. And Andrei Iancu, the former PTO Director, successfully mobilized an effort amongst all of our allies to ensure that the successful nominee was from a country and a person with experience that would suggest a commitment to protecting IP rather than someone who might be more questionable in terms of their commitment to IP.

There are so many organizations that you will have some role in that I just want to emphasize, and I agree with Senator Hagerty that it is important that we, the United States and our partners, pay attention to the ways in which China is expanding its influence throughout the U.N. system.

Let me ask one last question then, if I might, Ms. Crocker. There is a number of entities of the United Nations, the Human Rights Council, for example—UNESCO is another—where we have withdrawn, either because of previous conduct, I think it was Senator Van Hollen who referenced the sort of permanent agenda item on the Human Rights Council questioning Israel that we had found objectionable, or whether it is some of the ways in which UNESCO, by admitting Palestine, has run afoul of our priorities and views. We are now in significant arrearages both with the U.N. as a whole and with some of the specialized agencies or entities.

In your view, just speaking broadly, are we better off being at the table and current in our payments and pushing back on adversaries who have competing perspectives on entities, whether it is the WHO or the ITU or otherwise, or are there certain circumstances where we need to withdraw from U.N. entities because of the ways in which they have conducted themselves?

Ms. CROCKER. Thank you for that question, Chairman Coons.

It is my view, and agree very much with the position and approach of the Biden-Harris administration on this, that we are far better served to be at the table and in good standing in terms of our financial payments to the organization in order to be able to effectively drive the kinds of reforms that we want to see across the system around accountability, efficiency, effectiveness. And also dealing with some of the credibility issues that, frankly, exist in different parts of the system, whether that is the anti-Israel bias at the Human Rights Council that you and Senator Young also raised earlier or some of the issues—or some of the issues at UNESCO.

So I think for sure it is better for us to be in good standing from a financial perspective. But also I think it is just important to recognize, and this gets also to Senator Hagerty's questions earlier, that it is important for us to be able to be at the table with the full weight of United States from a diplomatic perspective backing us.

And I certainly saw firsthand when I was Assistant Secretary for International Organization Affairs, the important role that our bilateral and multilateral missions faced—they play and the importance of making sure that they are well resourced. And that we have strong people across the board able to raise these issues and raise them at the right levels in countries around the world because when we are operating at full strength diplomatically as the United States, there is no one that can really go to bat with us.

So if we want to go whether it is toe to toe with the Chinese or with the full strength that we need to be at to push the reforms we want to see across the system, I fully agree that we need to both be in good financial standing and also in our strongest position possible from a diplomatic perspective.

Senator COONS. Well, thank you. Thank you both for that answer and to all five of our nominees today for your willingness to continue your service to the United States and for your dedication to taking on these important posts and positions.

As I referenced at the beginning of this hearing, questions for the record are due by the close of business this Thursday the 16th. A number of members who have participated today have indicated they intend to submit QFRs. So please do so respond promptly so that we can conclude the hearing process and hopefully move forward with your confirmation votes.

Thank you, Senator Hagerty, for serving as the ranking member of this confirmation hearing.

And to the five of you, congratulations, good luck. I personally look forward to supporting your nominations and hope to stay in regular touch with you as we go forth to serve the people of the United States, depending on the action of the Senate in the coming weeks and months.

So, with that, this hearing is concluded. Thank you all very much.

[Whereupon, at 3:57 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO DR. C.S. ELIOT KANG BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. As you noted during your hearing and in your meeting with SFRC minority staff, the Biological Weapons Convention (BWC) is the least developed of the nonproliferation regimes. What practical steps must we take to strengthen the BWC?

Answer. There are a range of practical steps that can be taken to strengthen implementation, increase transparency, and promote the safe and secure use of the life sciences for peaceful purposes - but only if its members can find the political will. If confirmed, I will work to break the longstanding political deadlock in the BWC and advance such practical steps.

Question. Given the limitations of the BWC, what new actions must the U.S. take outside the convention to address biological threats?

Answer. The BWC reflects the global norm against biological weapons and provides international legal underpinning for measures taken by responsible countries to prohibit and prevent BW, but complementary U.S. efforts are essential. New efforts to raise the bar for international biosafety and biosecurity are needed. International capabilities to detect, respond to, and attribute BW use need to be strengthened as well - and because such use could mimic a natural outbreak, this means that the links between international public health and international security institutions must be reinforced.

Question. According to 1 FAM 457.3, the Biological Policy Staff is charged with “developing and promoting measures to prevent misuse of advances in the life sciences, to include participation in U.S. Government and international groups on health security issues; outreach to the scientific community and private industry; and promoting international standards and norms.” During your tenures in ISN, what specific initiatives or steps have you spearheaded or participated in to fulfill that mandate? Please provide examples. What would you like to do more of to meet this challenge?

Answer. Although the Biological Policy Staff is constrained by its small size, it has taken a number of steps in this area, including briefing on U.S. experiences and advocating that other countries develop oversight mechanisms for potentially high-risk research; organizing and participating in workshops to assess, test, and refine qualitative frameworks for assessing risks and benefits; establishing ties between the U.S. National Science Advisory Board for Biosecurity and its French equivalent; and a G7 Experts’ Meeting on Strengthening Laboratory Biorisk Management last year. More work in all these areas is needed.

Question. According to the Department of State website, the Biological Policy Staff works with foreign partners on the oversight of emerging technologies such as synthetic biology. What specific initiatives and steps have you spearheaded or participated in to address the challenges posed by synthetic biology?

Answer. A number of offices in ISN work to address issues posed by synthetic biology and other emerging technologies. This has included promotion of voluntary screening guidelines for providers of synthetic DNA; collaboration with iGEM international on outreach regarding dual-use awareness and risk assessment; work in the BWC and elsewhere to evaluate and promote risk assessment frameworks, including the approach set out by the National Academies recently in Biodefense in the Age of Synthetic Biology; and promoting new export controls on desktop DNA synthesizers and related technology.

Question. Does ISN have the authorities, personnel, and resources it needs to address the proliferation of biological weapons?

Answer. ISN has significant authorities to address BW proliferation, highly qualified and motivated personnel, and an important suite of threat reduction programs. However, biological weapons proliferation is an enormous challenge both politically and technically. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Congress to identify and address specific needs and opportunities to ensure our effectiveness in this important mission.

Question. Does ISN play any role in approving or disapproving life sciences or biological research collaboration with other countries that could pose dual-use concerns, including research on pathogens, viruses, and toxins, even if such collaboration is funded by another federal agency? If so, please describe ISN's involvement.

Answer. ISN does not fund nor directly approve any life sciences research. The United States has policies pertaining to Federally funded research on high consequence pathogens and dual-use research of concern, which are applicable regardless of where the research is conducted. These policies establish a high bar for funding based on a careful assessment of risks and benefits and require steps to mitigate any risks. ISN ensures that Federal policy development takes into account our international obligations and urges other countries to adopt similar policies that minimize the potential misuse of life sciences research.

Question. Do you agree that ISN must have a stronger role in decisions to share weaponizable biotechnology with China and other countries that may not be in compliance with BWC obligations?

Answer. ISN is the focal point within the State Department for policies to prevent the misuse of life sciences, and we participate in the interagency processes that establish the oversight policies for sharing research [and technology] that might pose concern. Our role ensures that the policy development considers both our international obligations from the BWC and the international implications of our policies. We believe this requires careful consideration of risks and benefits, and where appropriate, measures to mitigate the risks, including for sharing technology with those we have concerns regarding their compliance with the BWC.

Question. What is the U.S. doing to address Russia's offensive biological weapons program?

Answer. As the lead bureau on the BWC, ISN works closely with the Bureau of Arms Control, Verification, and Compliance, as well as others within the Department and the interagency to address this and other threats. To counter Russia's offensive biological weapons program, the United States has engaged with allies and partners and imposed export restrictions on certain Russian organizations associated with Russia's BW program. If confirmed, I will continue these efforts through direct bilateral information exchanges with key allies and partners and consider a variety of export-control and sanctions related actions against Russia.

Question. Does the loss of Afghanistan to the Taliban increase the likelihood of terrorist bioweapons labs on Afghan territory? What must the U.S. do to address any such threats, or other terrorist BW capabilities?

Answer. The accessibility of weaponizable biological materials is of great concern to me. If confirmed, I will increase assistance to countries in South and Central Asia to reduce threats emanating both out of and into Afghanistan.

Question. China is growing its nuclear arsenal at an alarming rate. What impact will this have on the NPT? How should the U.S. address it, in the context of the NPT?

Answer. The PRC's nuclear weapons build-up risks undermining decades of international progress toward nuclear disarmament, one of the pillars of the NPT. It is urgent for China to take on greater responsibility, transparency, and restraint with respect to its nuclear weapons arsenal. The United States will pursue those objectives both in bilateral engagements with China and in multilateral fora such as the NPT Review Conference.

Question. Should the IAEA be subject to political considerations of any particular government and its negotiations on other matters, or should the IAEA only consider strict compliance issues?

Answer. The United States strongly supports the professional, technical, and independent work of the IAEA to verify States' compliance with their NPT-required safeguards agreements and to undertake additional monitoring and verification activities as requested by the IAEA Board of Governors. A strong, credible international safeguards regime is a core United States national security interest.

Question. At what point do the advances of the Iranian nuclear program make any return to the nuclear deal irrelevant?

Answer. I am carefully evaluating Iran's expansion of nuclear activities, as reported by the International Atomic Energy Agency. As Secretary Blinken has made clear, continued Iranian nuclear advances bring us closer to the point where a mutual return to compliance with the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action would fail to reproduce the nonproliferation benefits the deal originally delivered. The administration remains committed to pursuing a diplomatic solution to Iran's nuclear program. If confirmed, I will make clear the window of opportunity will not remain open indefinitely.

Question. Iran has successfully stymied the IAEA's investigation of Iran's past nuclear activities. How can the IAEA restart this investigation and keep it going effectively?

Answer. I am deeply concerned that Iran has yet to provide the IAEA with the information it needs to resolve questions regarding potential undeclared nuclear material. Iran must cooperate fully and substantively with the Agency without further delay in a way that leads to resolution of these issues. The U.S. is working with Allies and partners to reinforce support for the IAEA and the Director General (DG) as they pursue these serious issues. If confirmed, I will be watching closely whether Iran provides the necessary level of cooperation, starting with the DG's meetings with senior Iranian officials in Vienna this week and in Tehran in the near future.

Question. Considering the Iran nuclear archive and the findings in the 2021 Arms Control report, can the U.S. confirm today that Iran has solely peaceful intentions for its nuclear program?

Answer. I would refer you to the Intelligence Community regarding Iran's intentions. The Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action provided the strongest verification and monitoring measures ever negotiated to help ensure Iran's nuclear activities are exclusively peaceful. Resumption of mutual compliance with the deal would ensure the renewed implementation of these important measures, as well as restrictions on the size and scope of Iran's nuclear activities.

Question. Do you believe that Iran engages in nuclear hedging? Why or why not? In that context, is it advisable in your view to lift nuclear and terrorism sanctions on Iran?

Answer. The administration is committed to ensuring that Iran does not obtain a nuclear weapon and to addressing the many other issues of concern related to Iran. If confirmed, I would remain committed to engaging in meaningful diplomacy to achieve a return to mutual compliance with JCPOA commitments, and would recommend against providing the sanctions relief described in the JCPOA unless there is a return to mutual compliance. Regardless of the status of the JCPOA, the administration will continue to utilize sanctions to respond to Iranian policies that are contrary to U.S. national security interests.

Question. If confirmed, how would you plan to work within the administration to encourage the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) to investigate Iran's potentially ongoing nuclear weaponization work, which the nuclear archive indicates Tehran hid and dispersed at research institutes, universities, and military sites after 2003?

Answer. Iran's history of deception regarding its past nuclear weapons program is not new. Verifiably ensuring Iran never resumes such activities, despite Iran's past denials, is a core purpose of the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action, which provides for the most intrusive verification and monitoring procedures ever negotiated. The administration will continue to seek a mutual return to compliance with JCPOA commitments, which would ensure that its critical verification and monitoring measures are restored.

Question. If confirmed, how can you assure Congress that political considerations or multilateral issues are not used to avoid holding Iran accountable for its non-compliance with safeguard agreements?

Answer. The United States has made clear our serious concerns regarding potential undeclared nuclear material and activities in Iran, as reported by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). It is essential that Iran fully comply with its legally binding obligations under the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty and its comprehensive safeguards agreement with the IAEA to resolve these important matters without further delay. The stability of any diplomatic outcome regarding Iran's nuclear program relies on the credible resolution of these serious issues and Iran's full compliance with its safeguards obligations.

Question. Do you support the Countering America's Adversaries Through Sanctions Act (CAATSA)? If confirmed, will you fully implement it?

Answer. Yes, I support and, should I be confirmed, am fully committed to implementing CAATSA, especially Section 231, for which the Bureau of International Security and Nonproliferation leads U.S. implementation. If confirmed, I will urge all our partners and allies to refrain from major new purchases of Russian military equipment that could risk mandatory sanctions under CAATSA Section 231.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DR. C.S. ELIOT KANG BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question. How do you envision the United States' role in bolstering the international nuclear nonproliferation regime?

Answer. The Interim National Security Strategic Guidance—issued less than two months after the President took office—noted that the threats posed by WMD proliferation, “cannot be effectively addressed by one nation acting alone. And none can be effectively addressed with the United States on the sidelines.” The United States led in the creation of the international nuclear nonproliferation regime, such as the establishment of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty and the International Atomic Energy Agency, and it is vital that we continue to lead efforts to prevent the further spread of nuclear weapons.

Question. Should the United States continue to work to prevent new states from possessing their own nuclear weapons?

Answer. Yes. The President's Interim National Security Guidance states that “as we re-engage the international system, we will address the existential threat posed by nuclear weapons.” The Guidance also states that nuclear proliferation poses an existential danger. Addressing these threats requires that we minimize the number of states possessing nuclear weapons, and the administration places a high priority on using the tools of national security to achieve this objective. Renewed American nonproliferation leadership will be essential to reducing the dangers posed by nuclear weapons.

Question. Which new or expiring agreements require the bureau's near-term focus? How should the United States balance the goals of increasing states' access to the peaceful uses of nuclear energy with the nonproliferation goals of preventing the further spread of sensitive fuel cycle nuclear technology?

Answer. The United States is in negotiations for peaceful nuclear cooperation agreements with Jordan, Saudi Arabia, South Africa, and Thailand. If confirmed, I would support the negotiation of additional peaceful nuclear cooperation agreements, which are needed for significant exports of U.S. nuclear material and equipment, to increase access to the peaceful uses of nuclear energy under the highest standards of nuclear security and nonproliferation and continue the United States' longstanding policy of limiting the spread of enrichment and reprocessing capabilities around the world.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DR. C.S. ELIOT KANG BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. What are your views on the threats posed by biological dual-use research of concern?

Answer. I take threats posed by dual-use research of concern (DURC) seriously. In fact, one of ISN's missions is to prevent the life sciences from being misused for biological weapons development. Dual-use research of concern warrants careful oversight and risk/benefit analysis. The ISN Bureau has advocated for thoughtful national oversight of such research in international forums, such as the Biological Weapons Convention, for almost a decade and, if confirmed, I will continue to do so.

Question. Would Chinese interest in dual-use research of concern be consistent with your understanding of the Chinese national strategy of military-civil fusion?

Answer. Military-Civil fusion seeks to develop a singular ecosystem within which all dual-use technology is simultaneously advancing military and civilian programs. Key to this is the removal of the traditional barriers between the national defense and national economic systems. Whether specific types of dual-use research of concern might be exploited in this way would likely depend on the extent to which the research was specifically relevant to People's Republic of China military applications and objectives.

Question. Should the United States be involved in, or support, potential dual-use research of concern conducted in China?

Answer. The United States has federal funding and oversight policies for research that might pose particular concerns, including dual-use. These policies require careful consideration of risks and benefits, and where appropriate, measures to mitigate those risks. Policy development is led by the National Security Council and by the White House Office of Science and Technology Policy and decisions about the funding of specific research proposals are made by the responsible funding agency. The ISN Bureau ensures that policy development considers both our international obligations and the international implications of policy choices.

Question. Can you explain the ISN Bureau's international outreach related to dual-use research of concern in their role as ex-officio member of the Nation Science Advisory Board for Biosecurity (NSABB)?

Answer. The ISN Bureau's international outreach on dual-use research of concern has consisted of a variety of advocacy and awareness-raising efforts, including participating in or organizing workshops and briefings and working to develop common understandings internationally. With the exception of efforts to facilitate collaboration between the NSABB and its French counterpart, this outreach is unrelated to the ex-officio role.

Question. Did the ISN Bureau, in their role on the NSABB, support lifting the moratorium on gain of function research with viruses in the United States in 2017?

Answer. The Department of State's role on the NSABB is a non-voting ex officio position. ISN neither advocated for lifting of the moratorium nor participated directly in the decision taken by the NSABB.

Question. Would Chinese military research into weaponizing pathogens such as coronaviruses be a concern under the Biological Weapons Convention (BWC)?

Answer. Research into the weaponization of any pathogen by any BWC State Party would be a matter of concern. If confirmed, I will work with my colleagues in the Bureau of Arms Control, Verification and Compliance to address any concerns regarding compliance with the Convention.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to undertake a full-scale investigation into the transfer of dual-use technology, know how, and money by the U.S. Government to Chinese research institutions engaged in synthetic biology and engineering chimeric pathogens through gain of function experiments?

Answer. A number of mechanisms exist to guard against the risk that transfers of U.S. technology will be misused. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that these mechanisms are effective and are fully utilized, taking into account lessons learned.

Question. At any time, were you instructed to shudder or stop the Bureau of Arms Control, Verification, and Compliance (AVC) investigation into the potential Chinese BWC concerns by Biden State Department appointees or other administrative staff?

Answer. No. As I understand it, the AVC Bureau, under the previous administration, commissioned an internal inquiry into COVID origins. This ad hoc inquiry was conducted as part of a larger contract. I defer to the AVC Bureau about details of this contract. I understand the group briefed State Department staff during both the Trump and Biden administrations.

Question. What was your role as acting T Assistant Secretary in supporting the AVC Bureau's research into potential Biological Warfare links to the PLA's Academy of Military Medical Science, (AAMS) which was referenced in the January 15 Fact Sheet?

Answer. I had no role in relation to this research, nor in the development of the January 15 Fact Sheet.

Question. I understand the ISN and AVC office directors responsible for Biological Warfare warned of a potential "can of worms" that would be opened if AVC investigated Chinese BW programs and potential ties to research being done at the WIV. What, specifically, was the concern with regard to a "can of worms?"

Answer. ISN personnel at no point objected to such an investigation by AVC or warned against such investigation. Assertions to the contrary are incorrect.

Question. Why would the State Department Weapons of Mass Destruction programs, who are responsible for holding the PRC accountable to their international obligations, not opt to investigate every potential lead? If confirmed, will you allow the State Department investigation to continue into potential military links to the research at the WIV?

Answer. The Bureau of Arms Control, Verification, and Compliance has primary responsibility for issues related to assessing compliance with arms control agreements, and continues to monitor and assess information related to countries' compliance with the BWC, working closely with IC colleagues and others in the inter-agency. If confirmed, I will work closely with AVC and other partners to address such concerns.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DR. C.S. ELIOT KANG BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question. What can the United States do to reinforce the norms of the Chemical Weapons Convention?

Answer. The Arms Control, Verification and Compliance (AVC) Bureau is the lead on the Chemical Weapons Convention. However, if confirmed, I commit to implementing Chemical and Biological Weapons Control and Warfare Elimination Act while also coordinating with AVC to limit the proliferation of chemical weapons.

Question. Is the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW) up to the task? What reforms would you recommend to make it more effective?

Answer. The Arms Control, Verification and Compliance (AVC) Bureau is the lead on the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW). If confirmed, I commit to coordinating with AVC to limit the proliferation of chemical weapons.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DR. C.S. ELIOT KANG BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question. If confirmed, are you committed to fully enforcing INKSNA and other U.S. non-proliferation sanctions?

Answer. Yes. Sanctions are a critical tool that contribute to nonproliferation goals. If confirmed, I would join the Department's commitment to implementing its sanctions authorities, including the requirements of the Iran, North Korea, and Syria Nonproliferation Act (INKSNA). The Department recently transmitted five INKSNA reports to Congress—in Feb 2020, Sept 2020, Nov 2020, Jan 2021, and July 2021—clearing a backlog of previously delayed reports. This has led to sanctions against 46 foreign entities/individuals for proliferation activities, including against 18 entities for supporting Iran's missile program.

Question. What is your assessment of the effectiveness of sanctions measures in supporting nuclear non-proliferation?

Answer. Sanctions are an effective tool in impeding, rolling back, and countering proliferation and changing the behavior of those who provide aid or support to proliferators. Sanctions are one of a number of important tools in the counterproliferation toolkit, and they can be deployed in a targeted and strategic manner.

If confirmed, I will work closely with other agencies, particularly with the Department of the Treasury, to fully implement all U.S. nonproliferation sanctions, and to work with allies and partners to ensure U.N. sanctions are also implemented and enforced.

Question. Is Iran in compliance with the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty? If so, how could Iran be compliant with the NPT when it has not answered the IAEA's questions on undeclared nuclear material and activities?

Answer. Iran is obligated under its NPT-required safeguards agreement to declare to the IAEA all peaceful nuclear material and related activities in Iran. Iran's failure to provide substantive or technically credible responses to the IAEA's questions related to possible undeclared nuclear materials and activities in Iran is cause for serious concern and raises serious questions regarding Iran's compliance with its NPT and IAEA safeguards obligations. These concerns are under active discussion in the IAEA Board of Governors. If confirmed, I will strongly support the IAEA's ongoing investigation in Iran into indications of possible undeclared nuclear material and activities, as well as continued IAEA Board action as necessary to ensure Iran complies with its NPT-related obligations.

Question. Do you think the Biden administration should commit to not lifting or waiving sanctions on Iran until it, at a minimum, complies with the IAEA's requests on undeclared nuclear material and activities?

Answer. The long-term stability of any diplomatic solution to the Iran nuclear challenge relies on the credible resolution of these serious safeguards concerns. The administration strongly supports the IAEA's ongoing investigations regarding possible undeclared nuclear material in Iran. Iran must provide the IAEA full cooperation without further delay. The foundation for any long-term solution is strong and credible verification; credible resolution of the serious safeguards concerns reported by the IAEA Director General must be a brick in that foundation. In addition to the assurances that would be provided if it does so, a mutual return to compliance with JCPOA commitments, which include the strongest verification and monitoring measures ever negotiated, would ensure that these critical measures are restored.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO DR. C.S. ELIOT KANG BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question. The four Nuclear Security Summits successfully led to elimination or downblending of global civilian stocks of weapons usable fissile material. If confirmed, what diplomatic efforts will you take to encourage countries to reduce stocks of fissile material in their military programs and other non-military stocks that are not subject to IAEA safeguards?

Answer. The United States will continue to lead by example in eliminating surplus plutonium and downblending highly enriched uranium that are no longer needed for defense purposes. The United States has called on states to declare moratoria on production of fissile material for weapons, and if confirmed I will continue those efforts. In addition, I will support U.S. and international efforts and diplomacy related to placing fissile material no longer required for military purposes under IAEA safeguards and arranging for its appropriate disposition.

Question. Extension of the State Department travel ban to North Korea and the need to obtain a specific license from the Treasury Department have made it more difficult for generous Americans and others to provide life-saving assistance to North Koreans—assistance that is explicitly exempted under U.S. law. If confirmed, will you work with your State and Treasury Department colleagues to issue new guidance that clearly defines what additional goods related to food and medicine to be exempted from U.S. sanctions?

Answer. The U.S. Government actively seeks to facilitate the provision of humanitarian assistance in the DPRK as a matter of U.S. policy, and maintains a number of sanctions exemptions and authorizations related to humanitarian aid. It has also led efforts to streamline the process for humanitarian exemptions in the U.N. Security Council DPRK sanctions committee. The DPRK itself has created the most significant barriers to the delivery of aid by closing its borders and limiting access for the personnel responsible for implementing such projects. If confirmed, I will work to support efforts aimed at helping humanitarian aid reach vulnerable people in the DPRK.

Question. In 2019, President Trump unsigned the Arms Trade Treaty (ATT)—a global treaty that regulates the conventional arms trade—despite the fact that the treaty simply requires other countries to uphold the same domestic legal standard we have: to not transfer arms to countries if it is believed they will be used to violate international humanitarian law. Will the United States rescind the Trump administration's letter to the United Nations stating that the United States did not intend to ratify nor fulfill the obligations of this treaty?

Answer. If confirmed, I support reviewing the implications of decisions taken to date on the Arms Trade Treaty (ATT), both in the United States and in the ATT Conferences of States Parties, to determine the proper relationship of the United States to the Treaty. I believe this review should be situated within the larger context of U.S. policy on conventional arms transfers. The United States is the largest arms exporter in the world, and it is imperative that U.S. transfers of conventional arms are consistent with our laws, values, and interests.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
 SUBMITTED TO DR. C.S. ELIOT KANG BY SENATOR TED CRUZ

Question. In April 2019, then-nominee to be Special Representative for Nuclear Nonproliferation Jeffrey L. Eberhardt confirmed in writing to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that “given Iran’s past noncompliance with both its safeguards agreement and its NPT obligations, its failure to fully address IAEA questions related to past activities relevant to the development of a nuclear explosive device, and the emergence of new questions surrounding Iran’s motives for retaining and concealing documents, equipment, and personnel related to its past nuclear weapons program, Iran’s standing as a non-nuclear-weapon State Party to the NPT cannot be described as ‘good.’” Do you agree with Mr. Eberhardt’s assessment? If not, why not?

Answer. If being in “good standing” means being in compliance with the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT), then the United States has, including in the 2021 Compliance Report, indicated concern with regard to Iran’s compliance with Article III of the NPT. Given Iran’s past non-compliance with its obligations under the NPT and Iran’s NPT-required safeguards agreement and its present failure to fully address the IAEA’s current questions related to implementation of that safeguards agreement, Iran’s standing as a non-nuclear-weapon State Party to the NPT cannot be described as “good.”

Question. Do you consider Iran’s past possession of the Nuclear Archive seized by Israel, including the materials in the Archive relevant to the development of nuclear weapons, to constitute non-compliance by Iran of its obligations under the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT)? If yes, please explain why. If no, please explain why

Answer. In 2005, the United States found Iran to be in non-compliance with Articles II and III of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty—as well as its comprehensive safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)—and reported these findings to Congress. These findings concerned activities related to Iran’s pre-2004 efforts to develop a nuclear weapon, records of which were retained in the Iranian “nuclear archive” acquired by Israel in 2018. The IAEA is now seeking to resolve issues involving possible undeclared nuclear material and activities in Iran, and still awaits the necessary substantive cooperation from Iran on its safeguards investigations. The IAEA Board of Governors has expressed serious concern regarding the lack of progress on these issues and has called on Iran to fully cooperate with the IAEA without further delay.

Question. Do you consider Iran’s past concealment of the Nuclear Archive seized by Israel, including the materials in the Archive relevant to the development of nuclear weapons, to constitute non-compliance by Iran of its obligations under the NPT? If yes, please explain why. If no, please explain why.

Answer. In 2005, the United States found Iran to be in non-compliance with Articles II and III of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty—as well as its comprehensive safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)—and reported these findings to Congress. These findings concerned activities related to Iran’s pre-2004 efforts to develop a nuclear weapon, records of which were retained in the Iranian “nuclear archive” acquired by Israel in 2018. The IAEA is now seeking to resolve issues involving possible undeclared nuclear material and activities in Iran, and still awaits the necessary substantive cooperation from Iran on its safeguards investigations. The IAEA Board of Governors has expressed serious concern regarding the lack of progress on these issues and has called on Iran to fully cooperate with the IAEA without further delay.

Question. Do you believe that Iran should be entitled to the use of civilian nuclear technology even if they are not a member in good standing of the NPT? If so, why? If not, why not?

Answer. Article IV of the NPT recognizes the right of all the Parties to the Treaty, including Iran, to develop research, production and use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes without discrimination and in conformity with Articles I and II of the Treaty. Iran must, however, comply with its international obligations when undertaking nuclear activities, including its obligations under Article II of the NPT and its NPT-required safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Question. Do you consider Iran to be entitled to benefit from nuclear technology pursuant to Article IV the NPT? If yes, please explain why. If no, please explain why.

Answer. Article IV of the NPT recognizes the right of all the Parties to the Treaty, including Iran, to develop research, production and use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes without discrimination and in conformity with Articles I and II of the Treaty. Iran must, however, comply with its international obligations when undertaking nuclear activities, including its obligation under Article II of the NPT not to manufacture or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons.

Question. Do you consider Iran to be specifically entitled to benefit from nuclear technology pursuant to Article IV the NPT? If yes, please explain why. If no, please explain why.

Answer. Article IV of the NPT recognizes the right of all the Parties to the Treaty, including Iran, to develop research, production and use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes without discrimination and in conformity with Articles I and II of the Treaty. Iran must, however, comply with its international obligations when undertaking nuclear activities, including its obligation under Article II of the NPT not to manufacture or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons.

Question. Paragraphs 10-15 of United Nations Security Council Resolution (UNSCR) 2231 describe a so-called ‘snapback mechanism’ which reverses the termination of sanctions on Iran described in paragraph 7(a) of that resolution. The resolution requires a “JCPOA participant state” to notify the U.N. Security Council of an issue it believes constitutes “significant non-performance” of commitments under the JCPOA. By no later than December 2019, the State Department had conducted a legal analysis which concluded that “there is a legally available argument we can assert that the United States can initiate the snapback process under UNSCR 2231 by submitting a notification to the Security Council of an issue that the United States believes constitutes significant non-performance.” Do you agree with that conclusion, i.e. that there is a legally available argument for the United States to initiate the snapback process? If not, why not?

Answer. The U.S. initiation of the “snapback” of previous U.N. sanctions on Iran in 2020 resulted in an impasse at the U.N. Security Council that, as a practical matter, undermined its ability to address Iran’s destabilizing activities. The United States will continue to use domestic authorities to address Iran’s proliferation activities—including Executive Order 13949, which authorizes blocking sanctions related to the supply, sale, or transfer of arms or related materiel to or from Iran.

Question. Do you believe that Russia would be in violation of INKSNA if Russia sold advanced weapons to Iran, including missile technology?

Answer. The Iran, North Korea, and Syria Nonproliferation Act (INKSNA) requires reports to Congress identifying, and the discretion to impose sanctions against, foreign persons that transfer or receive items controlled by the four multilateral export control regimes, (the Australia Group, the Missile Technology Control Regime, the Nuclear Suppliers Group, and the Wassenaar Arrangement), as well as other sensitive items, involving the subject countries. I understand that the Department is committed to implementing sanctions under INKSNA. For example, in July 2021, sanctions were imposed against three Russian entities, Asia-Invest LLC, Charter Green Light Moscow (CGLM), and NPP Pulsar LLC (Russia), for transferring sensitive items to Iran’s missile program.

Question. Do you believe that China would be in violation of and INKSNA if China sold advanced weapons to Iran, including missile technology?

Answer. The Iran, North Korea, and Syria Nonproliferation Act (INKSNA) requires reports to Congress identifying, and the discretion to impose sanctions against, foreign persons that transfer or receive items controlled by the four multilateral export control regimes, (the Australia Group, the Missile Technology Control Regime, the Nuclear Suppliers Group, and the Wassenaar Arrangement), as well as other sensitive items, involving the subject countries. I understand that the Department is committed to implementing sanctions authorities under INKSNA, and that, for example, in November 2020, sanctions were imposed against two PRC entities, Chengdu Best New Materials Co Ltd and Zibo Elim Trade Company, Ltd. for transferring sensitive items and technology to Iran’s missile program.

Question. Do you assess that China is in violation of its Article VI obligations?

Answer. The State Department’s most recent Compliance Reports does not find China to be in violation of its obligations under Article VI of the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty’s. The AVC Bureau has the lead on compliance reporting to Congress.

Question. What leverage does the United States currently possess to dampen China’s nuclear buildup?

Answer. The answer to this question involves a range of national security instruments, but given the responsibilities of the position for which I have been nominated, I will respond from the perspective of nonproliferation. The PRC's nuclear weapons build-up risks undermining decades of international progress toward nuclear disarmament, one of the pillars of the NPT. It is urgent for China to take on greater responsibility and demonstrate greater transparency and restraint with respect to its nuclear weapons arsenal. The United States will pursue those objectives both in bilateral engagements with China and in multilateral fora such as the NPT Review Conference.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO DR. C.S. ELIOT KANG BY SENATOR CHRIS VAN HOLLEN

Question. Do you agree that greater enforcement of international sanctions against North Korea would strengthen U.S. leverage in nuclear talks with Pyongyang?

Answer. Yes. The DPRK's unlawful weapons of mass destruction (WMD) and ballistic missile programs constitute serious threats to international peace and security and the global nonproliferation regime. A series of United Nations Security Council resolutions have put in place sanctions to address the threat posed by the DPRK Government's weapons programs and proliferation activities and to deny it the means to advance its WMD and ballistic missile programs. If confirmed, I will continue to promote their full global implementation and look forward to supporting the administration's efforts to pursue calibrated and practical diplomacy with the DPRK.

Question. What steps would you recommend the administration take to pressure other countries, in particular China, to enforce international sanctions against North Korea?

Answer. DPRK-related sanctions implementation by other countries, including the PRC and Russia, has been uneven. I am clear-eyed that while our interests on the Korean Peninsula overlap at times, our priorities often differ significantly. If confirmed, I will continue to engage the PRC and Russia on DPRK issues and encourage both to play a positive role. I will continue to work with other U.N. Member States to promote full global sanctions implementation and enhance their capacity to fulfill their U.N. obligations.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to fully comply with the Otto Warmbier North Korea Nuclear Sanctions and Enforcement Act of 2019 (title LXXI of Public Law 116-92; 133 Stat. 2244)?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support the Department's compliance with the North Korea Sanctions and Policy Enhancement Act, including as amended by the Otto Warmbier North Korea Nuclear Sanctions and Enforcement Act of 2019.

Question. In your view, does cooperation on naval nuclear propulsion constitute an allowable peaceful use under the U.S.-Australian civilian nuclear cooperation agreement, submitted to Congress pursuant to section 123 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended [P.L. 83-703; 42 U.S.C. §2153 et seq? If not, would such cooperation require congressional approval?

Answer. The 2010 U.S.-Australia Agreement Concerning Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy would not apply to cooperation on naval nuclear propulsion. Any cooperation will be undertaken consistent with requirements of the Atomic Energy Act, including with respect to any necessary agreements and requisite Congressional review in accordance with its provisions.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. ADAM SCHEINMAN BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. China is growing its nuclear arsenal at an alarming rate. What impact will this have on the NPT? How should the U.S. address it, in the context of the NPT?

Answer. The PRC's nuclear weapons build-up risks undermining decades of international progress toward nuclear disarmament, one of the pillars of the NPT. It is urgent for China to take on greater responsibility, transparency, and restraint with respect to its nuclear weapons arsenal. The United States will pursue those objectives both in bilateral engagements with China and in multilateral fora such as the NPT Review Conference.

Question. How will you evaluate if the NPT Revcon is a success? If confirmed, what will you do to make it a success?

Answer. NPT Review Conferences are held every five years to review the operation of the Treaty. There are no fixed standards for success, and past RevCons have reached consensus on various forms of final outcome documents. At a minimum, I expect that NPT Parties will recognize the continuing importance of the Treaty and reaffirm their commitment to the Treaty. If confirmed, I will work to build the broadest possible consensus on principles, goals, and specific actions to strengthen the NPT regime.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. ADAM SCHEINMAN BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question. Are the provisions of the NPT still relevant over fifty years later? How do you assess the effectiveness of the treaty for U.S. nonproliferation policy?

Answer. I believe that the provisions of the Treaty are still highly relevant and vital to the preservation of U.S., as well as international, security. The NPT is the international legal foundation for efforts to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons, one of the greatest threats to our national security. Almost all countries have joined the Treaty, which has helped forestall the widespread proliferation of nuclear weapons predicted in the 1960s. The Treaty is among the most effective international regimes, contributing to the norm against nuclear proliferation as well as robust international nuclear safeguards, common nuclear supplier policies, and action on nuclear arms control.

Question. How do you view the NPT's three tenets, nonproliferation, disarmament and the peaceful use of nuclear energy? Should one be prioritized over the others?
