Answer. Each of these tenets—or “pillars,” as we often call them—represents a common interest of all NPT Parties. All states benefit from and can contribute to each. They should not be treated as competing interests. However, since some other Parties often emphasize the disarmament or peaceful uses pillars, we encourage all Parties to recognize that nonproliferation is an essential foundation for these other two. Further steps toward disarmament will be hindered if more nuclear proliferation occurs, and states are reluctant to supply nuclear wherewithal to others unless they are assured it will be used for solely peaceful purposes.

Question. How should the United States balance the goals of increasing states' access to the peaceful uses of nuclear energy with the nonproliferation goals of preventing the further spread of sensitive fuel cycle nuclear technology (enrichment and reprocessing)?

Answer. If confirmed, I would work within the context of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) to make good on its objective of expanding access to the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, while promoting the highest standards of nuclear safety, security, and nonproliferation and continuing the United States' long-standing policy of limiting the spread of enrichment and reprocessing capabilities around the world. Proliferation of such technologies is not necessary to meet the NPT States Parties' peaceful uses needs.

TO HON. ADAM SCHEINMAN BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question. The United Arab Emirates Ambassador to the United States earlier this year asked why under current U.S. policy an adversary—the regime in Iran—would be allowed to have an enrichment program while U.S. partners and allies were committed to nuclear programs without enrichment or reprocessing. How would you answer the ambassador's question?

Answer. The United States has long sought to limit the spread of uranium enrichment and spent fuel reprocessing capabilities. Under the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA), Iran committed to strict limits on both the level and scale of its enrichment program and related research and development activities, as well as limits on reprocessing. The administration believes that diplomacy and a mutual return to compliance with the JCPOA are the best path to reestablishing limits on Iran's nuclear program and ensuring Iran never acquires a nuclear weapon.

I have long applauded the constructive decision by the United Arab Emirates in 2008 to voluntarily refrain from domestic enrichment and reprocessing-related activities. If confirmed, I will continue to urge other countries to follow in a similar path and will support using all measures at our disposal to limit the spread of these sensitive technologies both in the region and globally.

Question. How should the administration address Middle Eastern states seeking enrichment and reprocessing capabilities to match Iran's if Washington re-enters the JCPOA and accepts the continued existence and future growth of Tehran's enrichment program?

Answer. The United States has a longstanding policy of limiting the further spread of enrichment and reprocessing technologies to the greatest extent possible, and we employ a range of tools to that end. The United States shares a common interest with regional partners in ensuring through diplomacy that Iran never acquires a nuclear weapon. If confirmed, I will urge regional states to rely on the existing international market for nuclear fuel and services, rather than seeking to acquire or develop such capabilities, and to apply the highest nonproliferation standards, including by bringing into force an IAEA Additional Protocol if they have not yet done so.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. ADAM SCHEINMAN BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question. What leverage do we still have with Iran to halt further development of their nuclear program and restrain their destabilizing actions in the region?

Answer. If confirmed as Special Representative, I would not have direct responsibility for these issues, but I believe the high priority Iran places on sanctions relief gives us leverage in the negotiations on a mutual return to compliance with the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA). A mutual return to compliance with the JCPOA and to build on that basis are central to the administration's efforts to restrict Iran's nuclear program, secure diplomatic support for this goal, and address Iran's destabilizing activities in the region.

Question. I am pleased that the Biden administration has extended the New Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty (new START) until 2026. However, I remain concerned about Russia's nuclear program, particularly given its continued malign actions near and far beyond its borders. What more can be done to ensure continued dialogue with Russia on this matter, and how will you, if confirmed, ensure that we are able to conduct inspections as agreed to in New START?

Answer. The Arms Control, Verification and Compliance (AVC) Bureau is the lead on bilateral nuclear arms control with Russia. If confirmed, I commit to coordinating with AVC to ensure that Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) States Parties are appropriately informed of U.S. dialogue and bilateral treaty implementation with Russia. The administration has launched a Strategic Stability Dialogue with Russia to discuss strategic stability issues, including future arms control and risk reduction. The administration is also working with Russia to determine when New START inspections can be resumed safely.

Question. How can we build on the New START extension to cover tactical (i.e. short range missiles, nuclear artillery, etc.) and emerging nuclear weapon technologies (i.e. Skyfall, nuclear warhead unmanned subsurface vehicles, etc.)?

Answer. The Arms Control, Verification and Compliance (AVC) Bureau is the lead on bilateral nuclear arms control with Russia. If confirmed, I commit to coordinating with AVC to ensure that Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) States Parties are appropriately informed of U.S. dialogue and bilateral treaty implementation with Russia. The administration will use the time provided by extension of the New START Treaty to pursue with Russia, in consultation with Congress and U.S. allies and partners, arms control that addresses all Russian nuclear weapons, including novel strategic systems and non-strategic nuclear arms.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. ADAM SCHEINMAN BY SENATOR TED CRUZ

Question. In April 2019, then-nominee to be Special Representative for Nuclear Nonproliferation Jeffrey L. Eberhardt confirmed in writing to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that “given Iran’s past noncompliance with both its safeguards agreement and its NPT obligations, its failure to fully address IAEA questions related to past activities relevant to the development of a nuclear explosive device, and the emergence of new questions surrounding Iran’s motives for retaining and concealing documents, equipment, and personnel related to its past nuclear weapons program, Iran’s standing as a non-nuclear-weapon State Party to the NPT cannot be described as ‘good.’” Do you agree with Mr. Eberhardt’s assessment? If not, why not?

Answer. The United States has, including in the 2021 Compliance Report, indicated concern with regard to Iran’s compliance with Article III of the NPT. Given Iran’s past non-compliance with its obligations under the NPT and Iran’s NPT-required safeguards agreement and its present failure to fully address the IAEA’s current questions related to implementation of that safeguards agreement, Iran’s standing as a non-nuclear-weapon State Party to the NPT cannot be described as “good.”

Question. Do you consider Iran’s past possession of the Nuclear Archive seized by Israel, including the materials in the Archive relevant to the development of nuclear weapons, to constitute non-compliance by Iran of its obligations under the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT)? If yes, please explain why. If no, please explain why

Answer. In 2005, the United States found Iran to be in non-compliance with Articles II and III of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty—as well as its comprehensive safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)—and reported these findings to Congress. These findings concerned activities related to Iran’s pre-2004 efforts to develop a nuclear weapon, records of which were retained in the Iranian “nuclear archive” acquired by Israel in 2018. The IAEA is now seeking to resolve issues involving possible undeclared nuclear material and activities in Iran, and still awaits the necessary substantive cooperation from Iran on its safeguards investigations. The IAEA Board of Governors has expressed serious concern regarding the lack of progress on these issues and has called on Iran to fully cooperate with the IAEA without further delay.

Question. Do you consider Iran’s past concealment of the Nuclear Archive seized by Israel, including the materials in the Archive relevant to the development of nuclear weapons, to constitute non-compliance by Iran of its obligations under the NPT? If yes, please explain why. If no, please explain why.

Answer. In 2005, the United States found Iran to be in non-compliance with Articles II and III of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty—as well as its comprehensive safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)—and reported these findings to Congress. These findings concerned activities related to Iran’s pre-2004 efforts to develop a nuclear weapon, records of which were retained in the Iranian “nuclear archive” acquired by Israel in 2018. The IAEA Board of Governors has expressed serious concern regarding the lack of progress on these issues and has called on Iran to fully cooperate with the IAEA without further delay.

Question. Do you believe that Iran should be entitled to the use of civilian nuclear technology even if they are not a member in good standing of the NPT? If so, why? If not, why not?

Answer. Article IV of the NPT recognizes the right of all the Parties to the Treaty, including Iran, to develop research, production and use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes without discrimination and in conformity with Articles I and II of the Treaty. Iran must, however, comply with its international obligations when undertaking nuclear activities, including its obligations under Article II of the NPT and its NPT-required safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Question. Do you consider Iran to be entitled to benefit from nuclear technology pursuant to Article IV the NPT? If yes, please explain why. If no, please explain why.

Answer. Article IV of the NPT recognizes the right of all the Parties to the Treaty, including Iran, to develop research, production and use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes without discrimination and in conformity with Articles I and II of the Treaty. Iran must, however, comply with its international obligations when undertaking nuclear activities, including its obligation under Article II of the NPT not to manufacture or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons.

Question. Do you consider Iran to be specifically entitled to benefit from nuclear technology pursuant to Article IV the NPT? If yes, please explain why. If no, please explain why.

Answer. Article IV of the NPT recognizes the right of all the Parties to the Treaty, including Iran, to develop research, production and use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes without discrimination and in conformity with Articles I and II of the Treaty. Iran must, however, comply with its international obligations when undertaking nuclear activities, including its obligation under Article II of the NPT not to manufacture or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons.

Question. Do you assess that China is in violation of its Article VI obligations?

Answer. I understand the State Department examined the issue of China's compliance with NPT Article VI in connection with the 2021 compliance report and determined it did not merit inclusion. If confirmed, I commit to follow up with the AVC bureau, which is the Department lead on compliance reporting, and to support and advocate for the administration's efforts to engage China in nuclear risk reduction talks.

Question. What leverage does the United States currently possess to dampen China's nuclear buildup?

Answer. The PRC's nuclear weapons build-up risks undermining decades of international progress toward nuclear disarmament, one of the pillars of the NPT. It is urgent for China to take on greater responsibility and demonstrate greater transparency and restraint with respect to its nuclear weapons arsenal. The United States will pursue those objectives both in bilateral engagements with China and in multilateral fora such as the NPT Review Conference.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO HON. ADAM SCHEINMAN BY SENATOR BILL HAGERTY

Question. In your view, has China exhibited good faith efforts to pursue nuclear negotiations with the United States or any other party of the NPT?

Answer. The PRC's nuclear weapons build-up risks undermining decades of international progress toward nuclear disarmament. It is urgent for China to take on greater responsibility, transparency, and restraint with respect to its nuclear weapons arsenal. If confirmed, I would work to pursue those objectives both in bilateral engagements with China and in multilateral fora such as the NPT Review Conference.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to providing regular updates to the committee on the Biden administration's effort to determine whether or not China has violated Article VI of the NPT?

Answer. The Arms Control, Verification and Compliance (AVC) Bureau has the lead on compliance reporting to Congress. If confirmed, I commit to working with them and Congress on matters related to the NPT.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO
HON. MARCIA STEPHENS BLOOM BERNICAT BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

State Department Attrition

Question. The Institute for the Study of Diplomacy recently released a report that found that almost a third of current foreign service officers are seriously considering leaving the Department. This finding reflects a broader trend of attrition within the foreign service over the past decade.

- What steps will you take, if confirmed, to improve foreign service retention and to ensure that the foreign service is motivated, engaged, and functioning to the highest degree of their professional capabilities? What steps will you take to ensure that the Department retains foreign service officers from a diversity of backgrounds?

Answer. On his first day in office, Secretary Blinken addressed the Department's workforce and underscored that our task "starts with rebuilding morale and trust" within our ranks. The Department is developing new approaches in support of the President's directive to revitalize the foreign policy and national security workforce. As part of this effort, the Secretary appointed Ambassador Gina Abercrombie-Winstanley as the Department's first Chief Diversity and Inclusion Officer and, if confirmed, I plan to work closely with her to ensure that diversity and inclusion practices are integrated strategically into personnel-related policies. I also plan to promote workplace flexibilities and to highlight for the workforce resources available to assist employees: FSI workshops and engagements; 24/7 online access to WorkLife4You to address personal issues, including mental health; and TalentCare, the single touchpoint for resources for well-being, community, safety, and workplace flexibilities.

If confirmed, I am committed to strengthening our efforts to support, retain, and develop our already top notch Foreign Service and Civil Service employees to confront the foreign policy challenges of the 21st century.

Question. What steps will you take, if confirmed, to address foreign service officers' concerns regarding assignments, promotions, bias, and family matters?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ask Department experts to examine whether there is a significantly higher rate of attrition for certain populations, and I commit to further analyzing mitigation measures to ensure the Department remains an employer of choice for all of our employees. Understanding why employees leave the Foreign Service is a crucial step in increasing retention. The Department has launched a revamped centralized exit survey to better understand the reasons employees may decide to leave, and the Department has utilized the Federal Employee Viewpoint Survey to drill down on bureau level issues that affect retention in support of the President's directive to revitalize the foreign policy and national security workforce. I am committed to examining employee concerns, including assignments, promotions, bias, family member employment, education of dependents, and any other areas, which lead to a loss of our most valuable human resources. If confirmed, I will pursue programs and solutions that remove barriers to retention of our top talent.

Diversity

Question. I remain extremely concerned that the foreign service does not sufficiently reflect the makeup of this country and lags behind most of the rest of the federal government in hiring and retaining a diverse workforce. I appreciate that Secretary Blinken has made this a priority from day one. The fact remains, however, that much work lies ahead. Our diplomats and State Department personnel represent America to much of the world. It is critical that we have foreign service and civil service professionals who represent all the richness that our nation has to offer.

- How do you intend to ensure that the foreign service recruits and retains a diverse workforce?

Answer. If confirmed, I will lead GTM in its role to recruit and retain a workforce that represents America. I will ensure that GTM continues to integrate diversity and inclusion practices strategically into personnel-related policies in alignment with the Chief Diversity and Inclusion Officer's vision and the Secretary's and administration's priorities. This includes fair and transparent interviewing and hiring, workplace flexibilities, and encouraging a culture of inclusion, including through professional development and advancement.

If confirmed, I am committed to listening to our members of the Foreign Service and ensuring we retain high performers by investing in their professional development and strengthening programs that mentor individuals for success, provide actionable feedback on performance, chart career progression, provide more inter-agency and other detail opportunities, and create more viable pathways to ensure professional growth.

Question. How do you plan to ensure that diversity is represented at all levels of the workforce, especially at senior levels? What specific steps do you plan to take with respect to mentoring young and mid-level professions, to eliminate bias in promotions, and to otherwise improve access to senior positions?

Answer. If confirmed, I will partner with the Chief Diversity and Inclusion Officer (CDIO) to ensure that the Department represents the diversity of the American people. The Department is developing new approaches in support of the President's directive to revitalize the foreign policy and national security workforce. GTM and the CDIO's office are working to track and ensure progress on performance metrics on diversity, equity, inclusion, and accessibility as outlined in the soon-to-be released Diversity and Inclusion Strategic Plan. The Department has already taken steps to widen the candidate pool of applicants for senior-level positions through mentorship programs, outreach to employee affinity groups, and the inclusion of interviewing parameters to ascertain the candidates' commitment to diversity and inclusion. In addition, the Department ensures that every promotion board panel is racially and ethnically diverse, gender balanced, and that all panel members receive unconscious bias training. If confirmed, I will continue these efforts to develop our diverse workforce, reach a wider candidate pool, and include more candidates from underrepresented backgrounds for senior positions.

Question. How will you promote diversity, equity, and inclusion in your own hiring and leadership?

Answer. If confirmed, I will lead GTM in its role to recruit and retain a workforce that represents America. I will ensure that GTM continues to integrate diversity, equity, inclusion, and accessibility practices strategically into personnel-related policies in alignment with the Secretary's and administration's priorities. This includes fair and transparent interviewing and hiring, workplace flexibilities, and encouraging a culture of inclusion through professional development and advancement for both the Foreign Service and Civil Service.

If confirmed, I will partner with Chief Diversity and Inclusion Officer (CDIO) Ambassador Abercrombie-Winstanley to ensure that the Department represents the diversity of the American people. As the Secretary has said, diversity and inclusion make us stronger, smarter, more creative, and more innovative. The CDIO and her office are building on the efforts established by the Bureau of Global Talent Management (GTM) and GTM will collaborate with the CDIO on the Department's Diversity and Inclusion Strategic Plan which will lay out the framework to implement wide-reaching diversity and inclusion initiatives along with concrete benchmarks and performance metrics.

Question. Do you commit to establish and demonstrate inclusive leadership practices and to build and maintain a safe work environment? How will you each carry that out in practice?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to establish and demonstrate inclusive leadership practices and to build and maintain a safe work environment. If confirmed, I will expect everyone in the workforce to promote a culture of inclusion where every voice is heard, respected, and valued. As a senior leader at the Department of State and two-time Ambassador, I have led numerous teams comprised of employees from a wide variety of backgrounds and worked deliberately to foster inclusive work environments.

I previously served as a Deputy Assistant Secretary in the Bureau of Human Resources, now the Bureau of Global Talent Management, where I worked directly on accountability mechanisms. If confirmed, I will use this experience to work with the Chief Diversity and Inclusion Officer and Office of Civil Rights to strengthen these accountability mechanisms, which are a key component of a culture of inclusion.

Anomalous Health Incidents

Question. I remain extremely concerned that the Department's response to attacks on personnel, so-called Anomalous Health Incidents, remains woefully inadequate and that the Department is not consistently providing prompt and equitable treatment for affected personnel and family members.

- Do you commit to making the response and treatment of personnel a top priority if confirmed?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to making the response and treatment of personnel a top priority of mine.

Question. Do you agree these incidents must be taken seriously, and pose a threat to the health of State personnel?

Answer. Yes, I agree these incidents must be taken seriously, and pose a threat to the health of State personnel.

Question. What steps, specifically, will you take to improve communication with affected personnel, ensure the workforce is sufficiently aware of the symptoms to watch for and how to report suspected incidents, and ensure all medical treatment is covered and reimbursed?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with the Care Coordination Unit and Health Incidents Response Task Force (HIRTF) team on communication with affected personnel and the workforce writ large, and ensure that employees are apprised of their benefits. The Senior Care Coordinator and her team will continue to meet regularly with the group of injured employees and will remain available for individual meetings with those employees. If confirmed, I will meet with these employees as well. I will ensure that the GTM team also works with HIRTF to establish a webpage with information for Department personnel and will help amplify the page in our DG Digest and other communications. DS and MED has and will continue to take every opportunity to remind members of the State Department family of the response protocols for all personnel under COM security responsibility.

Assignment Restrictions

Question. I remain concerned about how assignment restrictions are imposed, the limitations they impose on State Department personnel, and the ability for personnel to appeal restrictions. Such restrictions have historically had a disproportionate effect on communities of color, and can impede career advancement.

- Do you share these concerns, and how do you intend to address these concerns, if confirmed?

Answer. I share your concerns about assignment restrictions. If confirmed, I will support the Department's review of legally available options and broader policy reforms regarding this process, with the goal to better leverage the expertise and capabilities of our entire workforce as well as to increase transparency. Assignment restrictions are based on a number of factors and are intended to mitigate security concerns related to foreign preference and foreign influence, where security clearances for individuals with these circumstances would otherwise be denied, leaving them wholly unable to serve the Department. Individuals who are restricted from serving in one or more countries have capabilities and expertise that contribute to the Department's overall mission and vision. The Department is determined to leverage the diversity and skills of our workforce in ways that make our policy more robust and transparent, while ensuring our national security information remains protected and security concerns are mitigated.

Question. What steps will you take to help improve the promotion board process and ensure that promotions are based on merit and not unduly influenced by bias?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the Department's efforts to increase the accountability for diversity & inclusion in evaluations.

Global Talent Management (GTM) makes every effort to make the Department's Selection Boards as diverse as possible, in accordance with the Foreign Service Act of 1980. The Department ensures that every promotion board panel is racially and ethnically diverse, gender balanced. Diversity of experience and perspective is also valued and this coming year, GTM will recruit Foreign Service Specialists to serve on Generalist Boards. Board members are also required to take diversity awareness and unconscious bias training, prior to beginning service. GTM has revised Selection Board procedures to focus on assessing potential for success at the next level versus past performance, valuing multifunctionality, and complexity of work over geography - and ensure that each Board member receives consistent guidance and training.

Workforce Training

Question. Workforce training is a key element to professional development, especially as it relates to improving management practices.

- Do you believe the Department should provide more opportunities for professional development training, particularly for management, and if so, what steps will you take to do so?

Answer. If confirmed, I will fully support expanding professional development opportunities for our Civil and Foreign Service workforce, including for managers and supervisors, by increasing both the number of programs offered and the number of employees participating. This includes incentivizing supervisors to empower employees to take advantage of long-term training opportunities, developmental rotations, domestic and overseas TDY opportunities, and details, as well as filling gaps left behind due to staffing shortages. For example, creating "backfill positions," (which in and of themselves would also provide professional development experience) would support bureaus experiencing staffing gaps when Civil Service employees are pursuing career development opportunities.

Question. What steps will you take to ensure that diversity, equity, and inclusion are incorporated into professional development training and mentorship opportunities?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that diversity, equity, inclusion, and accessibility are incorporated into training, professional development opportunities, and mentoring programs throughout the Department in support of the Secretary's Office of Diversity and Inclusion's Diversity and Inclusion Strategic Plan (DISP). This includes continuing to train and educate supervisors about the importance of recruiting and retaining diverse teams and emphasizing that creating an environment of inclusion is essential aspect of good leadership. While training alone cannot transform the Department, I fully believe that it plays a central role in promoting culture change. If confirmed, I look forward to building a stronger, more inclusive State Department.

Mental Health

Question. As you know, the recent events in Afghanistan will likely bear heavily on many State Department personnel, whether that be because they previously served in Afghanistan or because they worked closely on the evacuation efforts.

- If confirmed, what steps will you take to ramp up mental health services and to encourage State Department employees to seek counseling and support when needed?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with our colleagues in the Bureau of Medical Services (MED) to ensure that we, as an organization, continue to hone processes to lower the barriers, perceived or otherwise, that stand in the way of our employees seeking and receiving the care they need. I will support the Department's efforts to communicate to employees that the act of seeking help from a counselor, psychotherapist, or other mental health professional to address grief, anxiety, family or marital issues, or other concerns, by itself, is not considered derogatory in a security clearance determination, and to dispel the perceived notion that seeking mental health care might adversely affect clearances and career trajectory.

Question. How will you communicate the availability of mental health resources and improve accessibility to them?

Answer. If confirmed, I will meet State Department personnel on the channels and platforms they listen to and learn from. We will use all available conduits, including staff emails, internal webpages, internal TV channels (a.k.a. BNET), newsletters, handouts, webinars, and message boards to make mental health resources and mental health care part of the ongoing, daily discussion at the Department of State. These will complement the in-person communication of available resources already happening through MED's psychologists and social workers in Employee Consultation Services (ECS) as well as psychiatrists overseas.

If confirmed, I will aim to improve accessibility and destigmatize mental health care. I will support the Department in making resources easily available where and when they are needed, meeting State Department personnel where they are overseas and at home. The Department does this now in-person whenever possible through Regional Psychiatrists posted overseas or ECS clinicians domestically. ECS has also expanded capacity recently to travel to overseas sites to work collaboratively with our psychiatrists to address crises, deteriorating morale, or burnout at posts. If confirmed, I will ensure that we are able to maintain this valuable service. I will work with MED to ensure continued availability and leverage of technologies such as WebEx, Microsoft Teams, and Zoom for the benefit of our employees and families.

Work-Life Balance

Question. The Department has made significant improvements regarding work-life balance, but many aspects, particularly related to moving and living overseas, reflect an outdated reality.

- What steps can the Department take to improve work-life balance for all employees, including those balancing family obligations? What do you intend to focus on to further improve work-life balance, if confirmed?

Answer. As our community readies for a return to on-site work, I am committed, if confirmed, to preserving the workplace flexibilities upon which employees have come to depend. This includes supporting the ongoing implementation of the Mobility Assessment Tool (MAT) to assess telework eligibility for domestic positions based on job function, training needed for a more efficient hybrid and remote workforce, and further expanding the Domestic Employee Teleworking Overseas (DETO) program, which enables domestic direct hire Department employees under certain conditions to telework from overseas in order to accompany their spouse to foreign posts of assignment. If confirmed, I will also listen to and assess workforce needs, including through Global Talent Management's (GTM) Innovation Portal.

Civil Service

Question. As you know, many have commented that a stark divide exists between the foreign service and the civil service, in part due to the opportunities that are available to foreign service officers, but not to those in the civil service.

- What is your assessment of the civil and foreign service divide? If confirmed, what steps will you take to help bridge this gap?

Answer. The strength of the Department's workforce is due in large part to the blending of unique but complementary skills and experiences among the various corps. If confirmed, I will look for opportunities to strengthen our partnership and bridge any perceived gap. If confirmed, I'm committed to listening to the entire workforce and ensuring we develop and retain high performers. I support expanding professional development opportunities and increasing not only the number of programs, but the number of employees participating.

If confirmed, I will also invest in Civil Service professional development tools and training that chart career progression, prepare employees to take on leadership roles earlier in their careers, and create pathways for those aspiring to the Senior Executive Service.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. MARCIA STEPHENS BLOOM BERNICAT BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question. If confirmed, what steps would you take to develop the State Department workforce capabilities with respect to strategic competition with China?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support the continued efforts of the Bureau of Global Talent Management, the Foreign Service Institute, and the Bureau of East Asia and Pacific Affairs to create stronger incentives for officers to increase their Chinese language skills and regional expertise. Concepts already in progress include a Trans-Pacific Fellowship program in Taipei; revamping language and hardship incentives; and revising the promotion precepts to place additional emphasis on super-hard language skills in promotion reviews. Currently, the Department has 24 additional Chinese Language designated positions worldwide that are not located in China, Taiwan, and Hong Kong. The Bureau of East Asia and Pacific Affairs has several lines of effort with the Bureau of Global Talent Management, the interagency, and the Secretary to grow and develop our pool of China experts to coordinate State's policy, outreach and engagement with partners and allies on China, to implement cutting-edge policies with rapid interagency input, and to advise Department, interagency, and like-minded government partners on effective competition with China.

In 2020, the State Department stood-up a Mandarin Language Task Force to answer the continuing critical need for regional expertise and advanced Chinese language skills. The Task Force has already delivered an Advanced Mandarin Training Program, with students starting in-country, in-depth language training in Summer 2021.

If confirmed, I will also encourage deploying our employees with China expertise to Posts throughout the world to better track China's activities globally.

Question. What is your view on the assignments restrictions process? What steps can be done to conduct such a process with greater transparency and clarity?

Answer. Though assignment restrictions presently affect a small percentage of the Department's workforce, the Department is reviewing legally available options and broader policy reforms regarding this process. The aim is to better leverage the expertise and capabilities of our entire workforce as well as to increase transparency. Assignment restrictions are based on a number of factors and are intended to mitigate security concerns related to foreign preference and foreign influence, where security clearances for individuals with these circumstances would otherwise be denied, leaving them wholly unable to serve the Department. Individuals who are restricted from serving in one or more countries have capabilities and expertise that contribute to the Department's mission and vision. The Department is determined to leverage the diversity and skills of our workforce in ways that make our policy more robust and transparent, while ensuring our national security information remains protected and security concerns are mitigated.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. MARCIA STEPHENS BLOOM BERNICAT BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Diversity

Question. The Director General of the Foreign Service has traditionally played a significant role with respect to State Department diversity and inclusion programs.

- If confirmed, what specific knowledge and experiences from your time at the State Department will you apply to your work in diversity and inclusion?

Answer. As a senior leader at the Department of State and two-time Ambassador, I have built and led numerous teams comprised of employees from a wide variety of backgrounds, and worked deliberately to foster inclusive work environments. If confirmed, I will expect everyone in the workforce to promote a culture of inclusion where every voice is heard, respected, and valued.

I previously served as a Deputy Assistant Secretary in the Bureau of Human Resources, now the Bureau of Global Talent Management, where I worked directly to strengthen accountability mechanisms. If confirmed, I will use this knowledge to work with the Chief Diversity and Inclusion Officer and Office of Civil Rights to strengthen these accountability mechanisms, which are a key component of a culture of inclusion.

Question. How will you collaborate on these matters with the State Department's Chief Diversity and Inclusion Officer, who is occupying a newly created position? Please explain the intended contours of your working relationship.

Answer. If confirmed, I will partner with Chief Diversity and Inclusion Officer (CDIO) Ambassador Abercrombie-Winstanley to ensure that the Department represents the diversity of the American people. As the Secretary has said, diversity and inclusion make us stronger, smarter, more creative, and more innovative. The CDIO and her office are building on the efforts established by the Bureau of Global Talent Management (GTM) and GTM will collaborate with the CDIO on the Department's Diversity and Inclusion Strategic Plan which will lay out the framework to implement wide-reaching diversity and inclusion initiatives along with concrete benchmarks and performance metrics.

If confirmed, I will lead GTM in its role to recruit, develop and retain a workforce that represents America in support of the President's directive to revitalize the foreign policy and national security workforce. I will ensure that GTM continues to integrate diversity and inclusion practices strategically into personnel-related policies in alignment with the CDIO's vision and the Secretary's and administration's priorities. This includes fair and transparent interviewing and hiring, workplace flexibilities, and encouraging a culture of inclusion through professional development and advancement for both the Foreign Service and Civil Service, as well as our Locally Employed Staff.

Professional Education and Training

Question. Many stakeholders, including former State Department officials, have long expressed concern that the State Department values and emphasizes the professional education and training of its personnel to a much lesser degree than not only other U.S. agencies, but also the diplomatic corps of other countries such as China. Some note that this issue partially reflects agency culture and management practices, observing that there are widely-held views in the State Department that education and training programs do not enhance one's career and may damage promotion prospects.

- Please share your views on whether the State Department's agency culture and management practices discourage personnel from pursuing training and professional development opportunities, especially in the Foreign Service. What changes, if any, should the State Department consider with respect to Foreign Service promotion criteria, time-in-class restrictions, or other policies to provide more incentives for personnel to seek out such opportunities?

Answer. The Department of State recognizes that our greatest asset is our people. Both Civil Service and Foreign Service employees are encouraged to participate in details and long-term professional development opportunities, many of which are highly sought after and prestigious. Time-in-class extensions are granted for periods of long-term training, including language training, to ensure employees will not be penalized by pursuing opportunities that enhance their skills. Foreign Service Selection Boards are instructed to place an emphasis on continued development of professional expertise and multifunctionality and to consider positively the successful acquisition and/or use of a foreign language. If confirmed, I will continue to explore incentives for Department personnel to pursue training and professional development to ensure our workforce has the skills and expertise needed to further U.S. security.

Professional Education and Training. Many stakeholders, including former State Department officials, have long expressed concern that the State Department values and emphasizes the professional education and training of its personnel to a much lesser degree than not only other U.S. agencies, but also the diplomatic corps of other countries such as China. Some note that this issue partially reflects agency culture and management practices, observing that there are widely-held views in the State Department that education and training programs do not enhance one's career and may damage promotion prospects.

Question. As Director General, what changes would you propose to training and professional development programs for Foreign Service and Civil Service staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I will fully support expanding professional opportunities for our Civil and Foreign Service workforce by increasing both the number of programs offered and the number of employees participating. The Department is developing new approaches in support of the President's directive to revitalize the foreign policy and national security workforce. This includes incentivizing supervisors to empower employees to take advantage of long-term training opportunities, developmental rotations, domestic and overseas TDY opportunities, and details, as well as filling gaps left behind due to staffing shortages. For example, full-time professional development and training/backfill positions would support bureaus experiencing staffing gaps when Civil Service employees are pursuing career development opportunities.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO
HON. MARCIA STEPHENS BLOOM BERNICAT BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question. For years now, Government Accountability Office reports have pointed out the lack of diversity in the Department of State, and in particular at higher levels of leadership. These recommendations were repeated again in the latest report last year, which Secretary Blinken acknowledged, and yet we have not seen the numbers change.

- If confirmed, what will be your first steps as Director General to truly address diversity at the State Department? Will you commit to ensuring a fair assignments process, and to making data on diversity in the various bureaus and posts widely available?

Answer. If confirmed, I will lead GTM in its role to recruit and retain a workforce that represents America in support of the President's directive to revitalize the foreign policy and national security workforce. I will ensure, if confirmed, that GTM continues to integrate diversity and inclusion practices strategically into personnel-related policies in alignment with the Chief Diversity and Inclusion Officer's vision and the Secretary's and administration's priorities. This includes fair and transparent interviewing and hiring, workplace flexibilities, and encouraging a culture of inclusion through professional development and advancement. If confirmed, I commit to ensuring the continuation of a fair assignments process, and to making data on diversity in the various bureaus widely available consistent with applicable law, including PII privacy laws, and the EEOC's regulatory requirements.

Question. Is the State Department still deploying Foreign Service Officers to posts where reports of directed energy attacks have taken place? If so, what assurances are you providing to these individuals? If confirmed, how will you prepare our Foreign Service officers accordingly?

Answer. The interagency community is actively examining a range of hypotheses but has made no determination about the cause of these incidents or whether they can be attributed to a foreign actor. All Foreign Service employees receive regular updates about anomalous health incidents (AHI) through various means of communication. AHIs have been a top priority for Secretary Blinken, who set clear goals for the Health Incident Response Task Force (HIRTF) to strengthen the Department's communication with the workforce, provide care for affected employees and family members, and better protect against these events in the future as the Department continues to work closely with the interagency to find the cause of these AHI. If confirmed, there is nothing I will take more seriously than the health and security of the workforce. HIRTF is actively working to communicate response protocols to the field, in the form of ALDACs, via Regional Executive Directors to their respective bureaus, and workforce messaging from the desk of the Secretary. Regional Security Officers cover AHIs during their newcomer and regular security briefings at overseas posts. Further, if confirmed, I will collaborate with HIRTF and the Foreign Service Institute to deploy AHI-related content into the Security Overseas Seminar (SOS). The SOS is mandatory for all direct-hire federal employees posted overseas and highly recommended for Eligible Family Members (EFMs) and Members of Household.

Question. Can I get your commitment that, if confirmed, you will ensure that it will be State Department policy for all individuals who desire it to have access to the Walter Reed medical facility?

Answer. If confirmed, I will make it a priority to ensure all our employees have access to the best medical care available. The Department has established relationships with several centers of medical excellence including Walter Reed Medical Center. I will continue to advocate for access to Walter Reed along with other health care centers recommended by the Bureau of Medical Services or preferred by the individual.

HON. MARCIA STEPHENS BLOOM BERNICAT BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

Promoting Diversity

Question. Prioritizing diversity, equity, inclusion, and accessibility at the State Department is essential. Ensuring that the Department's personnel is representative of the American people is critical to ensuring the effectiveness of our diplomacy and ensuring that the United States leads by example when championing human rights around the world. To remove barriers low-income students and students of color face to participating in internship opportunities and help foster a more diverse Foreign Service and workforce at the Department of State, I have introduced a bipartisan bill, the Department of State Student Internship Program Act, to ensure that internships at the State Department are remunerated. This is just one of many steps that can be taken to improve diversity.

- What other changes do you think could be made to help increase diversity in the State Department's recruitment?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to continuing conversations with you and others in Congress on the one-semester paid internship program in your bill and the House-passed Department of State Authorization Act of 2021.

The Department's top recruitment priority is enhancing diversity among career candidates, in support of the President's directive to revitalize the foreign policy and national security workforce. If confirmed, I will review proposals to continue the Department's efforts to build a more diverse workforce. The recruitment team created a new Volunteer Recruitment Corps which leverages the Department workforce, particularly members of the Department's employee affinity groups, to augment outreach to prospective applicants. The team added virtual private sector recruitment best practices, including candidate sourcing via national networks and databases.

The Department expanded the Pickering and Rangel Fellowships by 50 percent, starting with the 2021 program year, and recruited record numbers of outstanding, diverse candidates for both. The Department is considering new Fellowships to meet Specialist career track hiring needs and diversity and inclusion initiatives, as we have done for Information Specialists with the Foreign Affairs IT Fellowship (FAIT).

Question. My internship bill will help to address recruitment, but retention of employees of color has been another major problem at the State Department. What do you believe are the most important steps the State Department can take to increase retention?

Answer. If confirmed, I will lead GTM in its role to recruit, develop and retain a workforce that represents America. I will ensure that GTM continues to integrate diversity and inclusion practices strategically into personnel-related policies in alignment with the Chief Diversity and Inclusion Officer's vision and the Secretary's and administration's priorities. This includes fair and transparent interviewing and hiring, workplace flexibilities, and encouraging a culture of inclusion through professional development and advancement for both the Foreign Service and Civil Service.

If confirmed, I am committed to listening to the workforce and ensuring we retain high performers by investing in their professional development and strengthening programs that mentor individuals for success, provide actionable feedback on performance, chart career progression, provide more training and interagency and other detail opportunities, and create viable pathways for those in the Civil Service and Foreign Service as they aspire to advance their careers.

Question. My internship bill will require additional financial resource. What initiatives can the State Department pursue immediately to increase diversity that do not require additional resources?

Answer. Currently 16 regional Diplomats in Residence are based around the country, hosted by universities but responsible for recruitment of professionals and students in a geographic region, not just on campus. Seven are hosted by Historically Black Colleges and Universities and Hispanic Serving Institutions. The all-virtual environment enabled our Diplomats in Residence and recruiters to attend more virtual career fairs, host online information sessions, intensify activity on social media platforms to include working professionals, and reach far more people across the country in FY 2020 than in the previous years, including a 39 percent increase in participation in diversity-focused events. If confirmed, I will encourage even more digital engagement with diverse, prospective candidates with skills sets that will enhance our national security.

The State Department encourages all employees to recruit diverse talent by using their professional affiliations and networks to amplify Department career opportunities. The new Volunteer Recruiter Corps, launched in January 2021, has opened recruitment activities to more Department employees, leveraging the Department's existing talent and diversity. Half of the initial 500 participants are members of the Department's 17 Employee Affinity Groups (EAGs) and all EAGs are represented in the Volunteer Recruiter Corps. If confirmed, I will consult with the recruitment team on broadening and further engaging the Corps.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO
HON. BATHSHEBA NELL CROCKER BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees

Question. As the U.N. High Commission for Refugees (UNHCR) marks its 70th anniversary, global displacement is at an all-time high. Demands for life-saving assistance will only increase as the disaster in Afghanistan, exacerbated by a hasty U.S. withdrawal, continues to unfold, forcing hundreds of thousands of vulnerable Afghan to seek safety and shelter as refugees.

Question. If confirmed, how will you approach ameliorating conditions for the existing 2.6 million registered Afghan refugees (2.2 million of whom are registered in Iran and Pakistan, which presents extraordinary challenges), in addition to the inevitable exodus of hundreds of thousands more Afghans feeling rule by the Taliban?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage actively with the leadership of the key U.N. humanitarian agencies in Geneva as well as NGOs to ensure coordination and help monitor evolving needs inside and outside Afghanistan. The United States is currently working with these and other partners to review and strengthen humanitarian preparedness and priority interventions in the region in the event of new refugee outflows from Afghanistan, and the Geneva-based agencies will be crucial to this ongoing effort. If confirmed, I will ensure that the U.S. mission in Geneva coordinates closely across the interagency and engages regularly with the Geneva-based humanitarian agencies, including UNHCR, and with key donors and other partners to ensure the U.N. system is appropriately responding to Afghan's evolving needs, inside and outside Afghanistan.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to ensuring that U.S. assistance for Afghan refugees provided through U.N. agencies, including UNHCR, reaches its intended beneficiaries and does not materially benefit the Taliban?

Answer. The United States is the largest single donor of humanitarian assistance to Afghanistan, and we will continue our life-saving support for vulnerable populations in Afghanistan and in the region. If confirmed, I will support all efforts to ensure humanitarian assistance in Afghanistan directly benefits the people of Afghanistan. U.S. humanitarian assistance is provided on the basis of need through our international and non-governmental partners, and not through the Taliban. U.N. agencies that deliver U.S. humanitarian assistance in Afghanistan follow similar risk mitigation requirements as other implementers of U.S. assistance. These risk mitigation measures include extensive vetting to reduce the risk of the diversion of funds and other resources. Monitoring and strict notification requirements are in place to flag issues that could impact assistance delivery.

If confirmed, I will support the Department's close coordination with international partners to stress the importance of remaining united in our approach to Afghanistan and delivering humanitarian assistance with impartiality, neutrality, and independence. If confirmed, I will also support the Department's work with the international community to encourage unhindered humanitarian access, freedom of movement and employment opportunities for aid workers of all genders, and the safety and security of humanitarian staff.

At the same time, humanitarian access in places like Central African Republic, Democratic Republic of Congo, Somalia, South Sudan, Syria, and Yemen remains highly constrained. With humanitarians increasingly under attack, these areas have become the most dangerous places in the world for aid workers. To further complicate matters, some UNHCR-supported camps (most notably in the DRC following the Rwanda genocide in 1994, but also more recently in the displaced persons camps in South Sudan), have served as hotbeds for recruitment by armed actors and other abuses, including extreme violence against women and girls.

Question. What more can UNHCR do to facilitate and secure humanitarian access, prevent diversion by malign actors, protect humanitarians and beneficiaries from attack and abuse, and promote accountability?

Answer. As the world's largest single donor to global humanitarian response efforts, the United States has a longstanding commitment to ensuring appropriate access and effective delivery of assistance. By working with partner nations and through important international mechanisms, including, inter alia, the U.N. Security Council, the United States has always been a leading voice to reinforce the crucial principle of U.N. neutrality and push for all appropriate access.

If confirmed, I will work with UNHCR, other U.N. humanitarian agencies, NGOs, and other member states to identify, highlight, and address factors that hinder humanitarian access and accountability, from risks to humanitarian staff to bureaucratic obstacles imposed by governments that delay or divert assistance, as well as mechanisms, such as biometrics, that could be used to strengthen accountability around assistance. While the United States is the largest single donor to UNHCR, close coordination with other like-minded actors also supports the effective delivery of life-saving assistance to those in need with the safety and security of aid workers at front-of-mind. If confirmed, I will prioritize U.S. leadership on these issues through engagement with diplomatic counterparts, U.N. humanitarian agency leadership, public facing engagements, and through governing and other executive bodies on which the United States sits.

Question. Under what circumstances, if any, should assistance to camps for displaced persons be halted?

Answer. Considerations for halting assistance to camps is a complex process and must take into account the context of the camps and the conflict. If confirmed, I will work to ensure the U.S. continues to provide support on the basis of need, whether those in question are in camps or are integrated with host communities, and that assistance to refugee camps is delivered according to international standards. If confirmed, I will actively pursue burden-sharing with other donors, national refugee inclusion policies with refugee host countries, and work to advance relief to development coherence where possible.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to impressing upon the U.N.'s Geneva-based humanitarian assistance agencies, and UNHCR in-particular, the importance of establishing and utilizing biometrics and other verification mechanisms that will enable the agencies to track refugees and internally displaced persons throughout the life of their displacement, improve operational planning, eliminate redundancies, and enhance the efficiency and effectiveness of donor contributions?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that these methods are implemented in an effective and transparent manner that improves accountability for donor contributions and contributes to the larger goal of providing quality assistance to beneficiaries. If confirmed, I will also urge reluctant states to conduct joint biometric registrations with UNHCR, where possible, with the aim of building the capacities of host nations to eventually take over the responsibility for registering refugees on their territories. Finally, if confirmed, I will encourage other states to utilize biometric registration and identity management for refugees, particularly those unwilling or unable to do so, while attentive to the risk of such data falling into the hands of those who might misuse it.

Question. What concrete steps do you plan to take to reform the U.N. Human Rights Council in order to eliminate Agenda Item 7 and improve council membership?

Answer. The United States is committed to seeking reforms of the U.N. Human Rights Council, particularly with respect to the Council's disproportionate focus on Israel. When the U.S. has had a seat at the table, we have been able to advocate on Israel's behalf, and have seen changes, such as a reduction in the number of resolutions targeting Israel. If confirmed, I will prioritize working closely with U.S. friends and allies, as well as non-traditional partners, to address the Council's problematic anti-Israel bias and will engage regularly with the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights to make clear U.S. opposition to problematic anti-Israel mandates.

When the United States plays an active and constructive role on the Council, we have been able to engage with our allies and partners to keep off some of the countries with the worst human rights records and to encourage and support countries with better records to run for seats. More broadly, if confirmed, I will work closely with U.S. friends and allies to push back on the People's Republic of China's efforts to erode respect for human rights in favor of its authoritarian aims and will work to expand space for civil society engagement in the Council's work, something the PRC has worked to restrict in recent years.

Question. What points of leverage will you use to secure reforms at the U.N. Human Rights Council?

Answer. I am committed to seeking reforms of the U.N. Human Rights Council, if confirmed. U.S. engagement at the HRC can be a force for positive change, and we must continue to prioritize needed reforms as part of our re-engagement. If confirmed, I will ensure U.S. leadership on a robust reform agenda. Past experience has shown that when the United States is at the table, working closely with U.S. friends and allies, as well as non-traditional partners, we can make progress on addressing the Council's problematic anti-Israel bias. If confirmed, I will also press for U.N. member states to more carefully consider the human rights records of countries running for election to the Council and encourage countries with good records to run. If confirmed, I will ensure that U.S. expectations around Council reforms are prioritized in our diplomatic engagements in Geneva.

Question. What would you define as "success" for U.N. Human Rights Council?

Answer. The United States firmly believes that we advance America's national interests best when we have a seat at the table in the multilateral system, including the Human Rights Council (HRC). Through robust U.S. advocacy since our return to the Council as observers in February, we have pushed to ensure the Council has shined a powerful light on Beijing's human rights abuses in Tibet, Xinjiang, and Hong Kong; pressured regimes around the world, such as Belarus, Burma, Eritrea, Syria, and Venezuela, by sharpening investigative mechanisms into their human rights violations and abuses; and worked to advance equality for all, protecting women's human rights, advancing the human rights of LGBTQI+ individuals, and assuming a leadership role on racial justice.

If confirmed, I will work tirelessly to ensure the Council focuses on its core mission—to shine a light on the world's worst human rights abusers—and on the need to protect civilians. I will also work closely with other member states to improve the Council's record through a considered reform effort and to address the Council's credibility gap due to its anti-Israel bias and its poor membership.

Question. If the Council does not eliminate Agenda Item 7, will the United States continue to run for election at the UNHRC?

Answer. Yes. U.S. membership on the Council puts us in a much stronger position from which to continue to push against anti-Israel actions at the HRC and pursue our broader human rights agenda, including ensuring the HRC addresses other serious human rights situations around the world. If confirmed, I will prioritize continued efforts to eliminate Agenda Item 7 as well as other needed reforms of the HRC.

Question. In May, the U.N. Human Rights Council (UNHRC) created a new commission of inquiry to investigate the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. The new commission's mandate is much broader in scope chronologically, geographically, and substantively than the mandates of its predecessors.

The Biden administration has chosen to reengage with the UNHRC, with Secretary Blinken asserting that despite the Council's flawed record on Israel "the best way to improve the Council is to engage with it and its members in a principled fashion." Blinken committed that the U.S. would be at the Council "table using the full weight of our diplomatic leadership" and said we "strongly believe that when the United States engages constructively with the Council, in concert with our allies and friends, positive change is within reach." Yet the mandate and membership of the new UNHRC commission of inquiry represents a change for the worse rather than the better.

Answer. The United States strongly opposed the special session of the U.N. Human Rights Council following the conflict in Gaza in May, 2021. The session ex-emphasizes the Council's disproportionate focus on Israel. The establishment of an open-ended Commission of Inquiry distracts from the diplomatic work necessary to provide greater dignity, freedom, and prosperity for Israelis and Palestinians. If confirmed, I will work closely with Israel and likeminded partners to influence the scope and timeline of this Commission as part of broader efforts to ensure Israel is treated fairly by the Human Rights Council, in line with other U.N. member states. If confirmed, I will also engage regularly with the High Commissioner for Human Rights to make clear U.S. opposition to the Commission. The United States does not intend to cooperate with the Commission.

Question. If confirmed, will you use the full weight of our diplomatic leadership to stop the UNHRC from attacking Israel?

Answer. Yes. I am committed to working with Israel and our other allies and partners to reduce and eventually eliminate the HRC's attacks on Israel. If confirmed, I will work to ensure the United States uses the full weight of our diplomatic leadership, in Geneva and in our bilateral and multilateral missions around the world, to address the Human Rights Council's longstanding anti-Israel bias.

Question. How specifically would you plan to defend Israel?

Answer. If confirmed, I will prioritize working closely with U.S. friends and allies, as well as non-traditional partners, to address the Council's problematic anti-Israel bias and will engage regularly with the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights to make clear U.S. opposition to problematic anti-Israel mandates. If confirmed, I will work to reduce the number of Israel-related resolutions at the Council, make clear U.S. opposition to all anti-Israel mandates and aim to reduce the impact of such mandates, and bolster the number of countries aligned with U.S. views on the need to permanently tackle the Council's bias against Israel. If confirmed, I will ensure that the United States uses its voice and position in Geneva to push back on efforts to unfairly single out Israel, works to counteract existing mechanisms that are biased against Israel, and consistently makes clear U.S. opposition to anti-Israel efforts.

Question. Will you ensure that no U.S. taxpayer dollars are used to fund this UNHRC commission of inquiry?

Answer. The Commission of Inquiry, like all other HRC mandates, is funded by the U.N. regular budget. As such, there is no means to ensure that no funding for this mandate comes from the United States regular contributions to the U.N. budget. However, if confirmed, I will ensure that the United States uses its voice strongly at all opportunities to register our opposition to this commission.

Question. The People's Republic of China (PRC) Government is actively trying to reshape international institutions to advance its malign economic and governance model, including the United Nations. If confirmed, how will you work with our democratic allies and partners to build resiliency to attempts by the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) to undermine the integrity of multilateral institutions and longstanding, widely held democratic values, including with regard to the important work of the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees, the U.N. High Commissioner for Human Rights, the World Health Organization, and the World Intellectual Property Organization?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with colleagues across the Department to strengthen our alliances and partnerships as well as improve outreach to other countries based on shared multilateral priorities, both in Geneva and through bilateral channels. The United States has had success coordinating with allies and partners to advance an affirmative vision that supports and defends the rules-based international order and deters the PRC's attempts to undermine core U.N. principles. As part of this effort, if confirmed, I will ensure we make clear through our diplomatic engagements that the PRC's actions to bully and coerce undermine the U.N.'s foundational principle of sovereign equality. If confirmed, I will also prioritize working with allies and partners to support qualified and independent candidates for senior leadership positions at the Geneva-based organizations and counter the PRC's attempts to set the agenda in standard-setting bodies and to include ideological language in U.N. documents. This will enable us to better defend and improve the work of U.N. institutions in Geneva, including the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees, the U.N. High Commissioner for Human Rights, the World Health Organization, and the World Intellectual Property Organization.

Question. Do you commit to monitoring such attempts and taking appropriate actions?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, this will be one of my top priorities. The United States is best able to address these issues when we are actively engaged and leading at the U.N. and its specialized agencies and related organizations. If confirmed, I will use our re-engagement with the U.N. system to reassert U.S. leadership and work with our allies and partners to defend the foundational values of the U.N. and international rules, standards, and norms. If confirmed, I will seek to improve the U.N.'s effectiveness, transparency, and impartiality; take targeted actions to oppose harmful PRC efforts, such as its use of the U.N. and international organizations to promote the Belt and Road Initiative or incorporate its ideology into U.N. documents. If confirmed I will also support qualified and independent candidates for key positions and ensure that we advance our priorities on issues ranging from human rights to emerging technologies, including in standard-setting organizations.

Question. China has focused intensely on securing leadership roles in various U.N. agencies, particularly those overseeing technical standards that will shape the future. In many cases, these leaders have overtly advanced CCP goals, instead of acting independently to advance the global good. It is clear the United States has had mixed success with elections for heads of International Organizations in the past and is taking more robust and coordinated steps to advocate for qualified and independent candidates in U.N. bodies. If confirmed, will you prioritize robust strategies to secure the election qualified and independent candidates to lead the highly specialized U.N. agencies based in Geneva?

Answer. If confirmed, one of my top priorities will be the election and appointment of qualified, independent candidates to leadership positions in the U.N. system. Such personnel are critical to ensuring the U.N. operates effectively and in line with its foundational principles and values. They also bring strong technical and policy skills that enhance the performance and outcomes within the U.N. system, which, in turn, bolster U.S. efforts on U.N. reform and good governance. The Bureau of International Organization Affairs has established a new office focused in part on managing, supporting, and coordinating elections and appointments for qualified U.S. and like-minded candidates for leadership roles in the U.N. system. That office works closely with our multilateral missions, including Geneva, to ensure the United States identifies and advocates on behalf of interested candidates for key positions across U.N. organizations and agencies. If confirmed, I will prioritize engaging with top U.N. leadership and our partners and allies to advocate for the placement of qualified applicants and candidates, including U.S. citizens, at the U.N. and in specialized and technical agencies.

Question. How do you propose to counter China's malign influence at the WHO? Please be specific.

Answer. The United States is best able to respond to this challenge when we are engaged and leading at organizations, including the WHO. If confirmed, I will use our re-engagement with the WHO to reassert U.S. leadership and work with allies and partners to push back against the PRC's attempts to reshape international institutions, rules, standards, and values.

The United States is taking a leadership role in discussions on strengthening and reforming the WHO as an opportunity to push forward critical reforms that will, inter alia, focus on better pandemic preparedness and response, efficiency and effectiveness, transparency, and accountability. This includes working to improve WHO transparency and accountability through more effective implementation of the International Health Regulations and insulating the WHO Director-General from political influence and pressure. If confirmed, I will prioritize U.S. leadership on these and other reforms to improve WHO's performance and accountability and bolster global health security. U.S. leadership on these issues at the WHO is critical both to ensuring progress on strengthening global health security and rebuilding WHO credibility but also to pushing back on the PRC's efforts to undermine the organization's accountability, transparency, and governance. If confirmed, I will also ensure close engagement with like-minded partners and WHO leadership to push for Taiwan's meaningful participation at the WHO, including participation at the World Health Assembly.

Question. How will you ensure that COVAX, the vaccines pillar of the WHO-supported Access to COVID-19 Tools (ACT) Accelerator, does not become a vehicle for subsidizing and distributing substandard Chinese vaccines?

Answer. Gavi will not use funds from the generous U.S. contribution supporting COVAX to purchase vaccines produced by Chinese companies. U.S. funds have either already been spent down to purchase vaccines made by non-Chinese manufacturers or are being used to support the purchase of Pfizer vaccines or vaccine readiness efforts in recipient countries. Given the immense need for vaccines around the world to help control and end the COVID–19 pandemic, the U.S. Government is supportive of COVAX’s efforts to rapidly roll-out vaccines authorized by the World Health Organization (WHO) as safe and effective. We understand that a condition for distribution via COVAX is a WHO authorization via an emergency use listing (EUL). If confirmed, I will ensure close engagement with Gavi to understand its current and future plans for vaccine roll-out and work with the organization as it tries to identify additional sources of vaccine to address its supply challenges, with more vaccines made by non-Chinese companies expected to come online in the coming months.

Question. What are the top five reforms that you believe the United States should pursue at the WHO?

Answer. The World Health Organization is in need of reform and, if confirmed, I will support U.S. efforts to make the WHO stronger, more independent, and fit for purpose. The United States is using its leadership role on WHO strengthening and reform efforts to focus on improving WHO’s ability to prevent, detect, and respond to future pandemics by:

- Improving surveillance and alert systems, including through partnerships with Member States and nonstate actors;
- Increasing transparency and the ability of the WHO and Member States to quickly and effectively respond to outbreaks, especially through strengthened implementation of and compliance with the International Health Regulations; and
- Increasing the WHO’s cost effectiveness and sustainability.

The May 2021 World Health Assembly (WHA) established a Member State Working Group on Strengthening WHO Preparedness for and Response to Health Emergencies (WGPR) to propose actions for WHO reform based on the recommendations by three independent review panels and Member States for consideration at the next World Health Assembly. If confirmed, I am committed to energetically supporting these efforts, ensuring strong U.S. leadership to push for a set of practical and meaningful reforms that will address performance, management, and accountability issues at the organization.

Question. Do you believe the WHO should lead emergency health operations, or would it be better placed to focus on the technical and normative aspects of its mission?

Answer. The WHO engages in vital emergency health work around the world, including, for example, the work it is doing to provide critical healthcare assistance, including to combat the polio epidemic in Afghanistan. But the COVID–19 pandemic revealed troubling gaps in global public health investments, capacities, and norms. The United States reengaged in the World Health Organization in January in order to advance critically needed reforms, reassert our role as a leader in global health security, and help the world combat the COVID–19 pandemic. The United States took an active role in working with G7 and other partners to lay the groundwork to strengthen WHO’s global health emergency preparedness and response. If confirmed, I will support a more transparent, effective, and agile WHO that will be better placed to detect, report, and respond to emerging health emergencies.

Question. In preparing for the next World Health Assembly, do you agree that diplomatic engagement, including with regard to negotiating governance reforms at the WHO, would be best left to competent diplomats reporting to the Secretary of State while the technical aspects of the International Health Regulations are left to the Department of Health and Human Services? Do you see a difference?

Answer. The Department of State continues to advance WHO reforms in close collaboration with the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS). We take a whole-of-government approach that leverages all agencies’ competencies. For example, the U.S. delegation to the WHO Working Group on WHO Strengthening for Preparedness and Response to Health Emergencies includes key representatives with subject matter expertise and multilateral skills from State, HHS, USAID, and the National Security Council. The strong cooperation between State, HHS, and other relevant agencies will ensure that the United States achieves the best possible results from the WHO reform process. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that the U.S. brings to bear the full weight of its diplomatic and technical leadership to drive WHO reform efforts and the ongoing work and oversight of the organization.

Question. If confirmed, will you work to ensure that Taiwan is granted full observer status at the WHO and the World Health Assembly, regardless of Chinese obstructionism?

Answer. It is deeply unfortunate that Taiwan's expertise and experience on COVID-19 were missing from the 2021 World Health Assembly and for the previous several years. The United States has continued to express its concern to the World Health Organization leadership, and if confirmed, I will continue U.S. efforts to build support for Taiwan's participation at the World Health Assembly through diplomatic engagement with WHO member states, WHO leadership, and media and other outreach to raise public awareness.

If confirmed, I will continue U.S. policy to work closely with like-minded partners to counter the PRC's efforts to restrict Taiwan's meaningful participation at the WHO, World Health Assembly, and other U.N. bodies, as well as its efforts to shrink space for civil society's meaningful participation in U.N. fora.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO
HON. BATHSHEBA NELL CROCKER BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question. As we know, women's access to health care, including sexual and reproductive health care like modern contraceptives, plays a significant role in their empowerment. It also dramatically reduces maternal and newborn deaths. Yet the previous administration undertook a campaign against inclusive policies and language that has undermined U.S. credibility on gender equality and women's empowerment.

- Can you speak to how you will work within the U.N. system in Geneva to promote access to health care for women?

Answer. The United States is best able to promote access to health care for women when we are engaged and leading in international organizations. If confirmed, I will contribute to the administration's re-engagement across the multilateral system by working with partners and allies to improve global health capabilities and equitable access to health care for women and girls. The administration has prioritized the promotion of women's global health and equity, and that action is evident in U.S. efforts to increase access to comprehensive health care for women and girls; to restore appropriate references to gender in U.N. documents; to address health disparities; to advance sexual and reproductive health and rights; to prevent and respond to gender-based violence (GBV); and to address the gender-specific health effects of the COVID-19 pandemic.

If confirmed, I will advance these priorities across the U.N. organizations in Geneva, including through raising these priorities with leadership of key U.N. humanitarian organizations, working with likeminded partners, and ensuring the United States uses its voice in governing and executive boards to ensure continued progress and to make clear the strong U.S. support for women's health and gender equity.

Question. Will you commit to ensuring that the United States talks about gender—both by once again using the word and promoting the idea—in our engagement with the United Nations?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will promote gender equity and equality and women's empowerment across the full spectrum of Geneva-based agencies and in all the work they conduct. This will include promotion and protection of the rights of LGBTQI+ persons and the return of U.S. use of and support for the term "gender" in our statements at the U.N. and in negotiated U.N. documents.

If confirmed, I will also restore the U.S. voice in support of women's and girls' sexual and reproductive health and rights, including access to voluntary family planning, as a key element of the Biden-Harris administration's broader commitment to promoting women's health and advancing gender equity and equality in the United States and around the world.

Question. Women's access to health care, including sexual and reproductive health care like modern contraceptives, plays a significant role in their ability to advance their education, participate in the economy and support their families and communities.

- Can you speak to how you will work in this post to promote access to comprehensive health care across U.N. offices in Geneva?

Answer. The best way to promote equitable health care access, including for women, is for the United States to demonstrate leadership on these issues on the global stage, including within international organizations such as the U.N. If confirmed, I will support the Biden-Harris administration's determined reengagement and leadership by working across the U.N. agencies in Geneva and with likeminded partners to identify and pursue all appropriate means of promoting equitable and comprehensive access to health care, including sexual and reproductive health care.

This means not only strengthening actions through bodies such as the World Health Organization, but also ensuring that women's and girls' health remains a central objective for organizations such as the U.N. Refugee Agency, U.N. Women, UNICEF, the U.N. Population Fund, and others charged with supporting human health and wellbeing. If confirmed, I look forward to invigorating U.S. diplomatic engagement in Geneva to focus on these crucial needs.

Question. If confirmed, how will you approach restoring relationships with U.S. allies and U.S. leadership within the U.N. system?

Answer.

The Biden-Harris administration has charted a course to mend and, where needed, modernize America's alliances. If confirmed, I will support those efforts by strengthening U.S. leadership at the Geneva-based international organizations, rebuilding partnerships, advocating for qualified and independent U.S. and likeminded candidates for U.N. positions, and pushing for necessary reforms. I firmly support the administration's belief that the United States is most influential when it is at the table, working in partnership with allies, and when it is engaged across the multilateral system from a position of strength and leadership.

That is the intent in seeking election to the U.N. Human Rights Council, and in returning with renewed vigor to dozens of other multilateral bodies. If confirmed, I will prioritize reestablishing strong relationships with likeminded partners and allies to advance common priorities and forming relationships with non-traditional partners that can be critical to U.S. efforts to ensure the U.N. system remains grounded on its foundational principles and aims and is not co-opted by those who seek to undermine the rules-based international order.

Question. In your opinion, has the lack of U.S. leadership at the U.N. allowed for countries that seek to overturn democratic norms to push their agendas within the U.N. system? Where should we be most concerned about this, and what are the first steps to undoing these efforts?

Answer. The United States is best able to address efforts to undermine and weaken the U.N. system when we are engaged and leading at the U.N. and its specialized agencies and related organizations. If confirmed, I will use our re-engagement with the U.N. system to reassert U.S. leadership and work with our partners and allies to push back against attempts to reshape the U.N. and international rules, standards, and values. We are seeing these attempts play out in different ways across the U.N. system, including in the human rights space, in specialized and technical organizations, and in standard-setting bodies.

If confirmed, I will seek to improve the U.N.'s effectiveness, transparency, and impartiality; take targeted actions to oppose efforts by some countries to use the U.N. and international organizations to promote signature foreign policy platforms or insert national ideology and policy into U.N. documents; support qualified and independent candidates for key positions; and ensure that we advance our priorities on issues ranging from global health security to humanitarian assistance and human rights to emerging technologies, including in standard-setting bodies.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO
HON. BATHSHEBA NELL CROCKER BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. The U.N. Human Rights Council (UNHRC) has a long history of anti-Israel bias. The Council has repeatedly chastised Israel and held it to a double standard, while ignoring gross human rights abuses around the world. To this day, Israel is the only country subject to a permanent spot on the Council's agenda.

- If confirmed, how will you counter anti-Israel bias at the U.N. Human Rights Council and other U.N. agencies?

Answer. The United States is committed to seeking reforms of the U.N. Human Rights Council (HRC), particularly with respect to the HRC's disproportionate focus on Israel and the HRC's problematic membership. When we have had a seat at the table, we have been able to advocate on Israel's behalf, and we have seen changes like a reduction in the number of resolutions targeting Israel. If confirmed, I will prioritize working closely with U.S. friends and allies, as well as non-traditional partners, to address the HRC's problematic anti-Israel bias and will engage regularly with the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights to make clear U.S. opposition to problematic anti-Israel mandates. If confirmed, I will ensure that the United States uses its voice and position in Geneva to push back on efforts to unfairly single out Israel, works to counteract existing mechanisms that are biased against Israel, and consistently makes clear U.S. opposition to anti-Israel efforts.

Question. Following the launching of thousands of rockets toward Israel from Gaza this May, the Human Rights Council took the ridiculous step to establishing a permanent commission of inquiry to investigate Israel. What are your thoughts on the commission? Should the U.S. cooperate with commission?

Answer. The United States strongly opposed the special session of the U.N. Human Rights Council (HRC) following the conflict in Gaza in May 2021. The session exemplifies the HRC's disproportionate focus on Israel. The establishment of an open-ended Commission of Inquiry distracts from the diplomatic work necessary to provide greater dignity, freedom, and prosperity for Israelis and Palestinians. If confirmed, I will work to influence the scope and timeline of this Commission as part of broader efforts to ensure Israel is treated fairly by the Human Rights Council, in line with other U.N. member states. The United States does not intend to cooperate with the Commission.

Question. The Biden administration has chosen to reengage with the UNHRC in the hopes of improving the council's record. Yet this mandate and membership of the new UNHRC commission of inquiry represents a change for the worse rather than the better.

- If confirmed, will you use the full weight of American diplomatic leadership to stop the UNHRC from engaging in anti-Israel bias?

Answer. I am committed to working with Israel and our other allies and partners to reduce and eventually eliminate attacks on Israel by the Human Rights Council. If confirmed, I will work to ensure the United States uses the full weight of our diplomatic leadership, in Geneva and in our bilateral and multilateral missions around the world, to address the HRC's longstanding anti-Israel bias.

Question. The Chinese Communist Party has sought to use U.N. bodies—including the UNHRC—to aggressively promote a new definition of human rights. For instance, in 2017 and 2018, the CCP was able to offer resolutions that called for “people-centered development,” building a “community of common human destiny,” and “mutually beneficial cooperation in the field of human rights.” These resolutions—which passed—downplay an individual's inherent human dignity and gives authoritarians around the world tacit acceptance for abuse.

- If confirmed, how will you combat the CCP's sophisticated efforts to revise international human rights norms at the U.N.?

Answer. The United States will continue to be vigilant and work with others to ensure we have the broadest possible defense of the multilateral system's values and norms and are best placed to counter the PRC's efforts to erode global human rights norms and pursue its authoritarian aims. If confirmed, I will work with colleagues across the Department to strengthen current alliances and partnerships as well as improve outreach to other countries based on shared human rights priorities, both in Geneva and through bilateral channels. As part of this effort, the U.S. will also make clear that the PRC's actions to bully and coerce undermine the U.N.'s foundational principle of sovereign equality. If confirmed, pushing back on the PRC's efforts to reshape global human rights norms at the U.N. will be one of my top priorities, and I will use the full weight of U.S. diplomatic leadership toward these efforts.

Question. One of the many consequences of the Biden administration's disastrous Afghanistan decision is that the Taliban is now in a position to appoint a new envoy for Afghanistan at the U.N. If appointed, this envoy will assume Afghanistan's membership on the Commission for the Status of Women. This is ludicrous considering the Taliban has been and still is, one of the worst oppressors of women's rights.

- If confirmed, how will you encourage the U.N. to invoke Rule 29 to ensure a Taliban appointee does not become Afghanistan's envoy to the U.N.?

Answer. The United States has consistently emphasized the importance of any future government in Afghanistan to respect the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all Afghans. This includes the rights of women, children, and minority groups. The United States is closely watching the Taliban's actions across the country in this regard, and we will judge them by their actions, including with respect to their representational efforts at the U.N.

As Secretary Blinken has said, the Taliban want international legitimacy. It is vital that the international community work in unison to send a clear message that legitimacy is earned through concrete actions. If confirmed, I will work to reinforce these efforts across the Geneva-based organizations, including ensuring appropriate focus of the U.N. Human Rights Council on the human rights situation in Afghanistan.

Question. If confirmed, how will you use your position to ensure that U.N. humanitarian assistance does not benefit the Taliban?

Answer. The United States is the largest single donor of humanitarian assistance to Afghanistan, and we will continue our life-saving support for vulnerable populations in Afghanistan and in the region. If confirmed, I will support all efforts to ensure humanitarian assistance in Afghanistan directly benefits the people of Afghanistan. U.S. humanitarian assistance is provided on the basis of need through our international and non-governmental partners, and not through the Taliban. U.N. agencies that deliver U.S. humanitarian assistance in Afghanistan follow similar risk mitigation requirements as other implementers of U.S. assistance. These risk mitigation measures include extensive vetting to reduce the risk of the diversion of funds and other resources. Monitoring and strict notification requirements are in place to flag issues that could impact assistance delivery.

If confirmed, I will support the Department's close coordination with international partners to stress the importance of remaining united in our approach to Afghanistan and delivering humanitarian assistance with impartiality, neutrality, and independence. If confirmed, I will also support the Department's work with the international community to encourage unhindered humanitarian access, freedom of movement for aid workers of all genders, and the safety and security of humanitarian staff. If confirmed, I will engage regularly with U.N. humanitarian leadership in Geneva in support of these efforts, as well as with other donor countries.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO
HON. BATHSHEBA NELL CROCKER BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

Re-establishing U.S. Leadership in U.N. Bodies

Question. China has secured leadership roles in a number of U.N. bodies over the last few years, including the Food and Agriculture Organization (elected in 2019), International Telecommunication Union (re-elected in 2018), International Civil Aviation Organization (re-appointed in 2019 and leaving office in August 2021), and U.N. Industrial Development Organization (re-appointed in 2017), at the time when the prior administration withdrew the United States from a number of U.N. bodies, dealing a double blow to our influence with the U.N. system. The Biden administration has taken steps to rejoin a number of bodies.

- What further steps does the administration plan on taking to re-establish U.S. leadership with the U.N. system and to ensure that either the United States or our allies regain leadership roles in important U.N. bodies?

Answer. The election and appointment of qualified and independent candidates to positions in the U.N. system are critical to ensuring that the U.N. operates effectively and in line with its foundational principles and values. Qualified U.S. citizens and nationals from like-minded countries bring strong technical, policy, and management skills that enhance the performance and outcomes within the U.N. system, which, in turn, bolster our efforts on U.N. reform and good governance.

The Bureau of International Organization Affairs has established a new office focused in part on managing, supporting, and coordinating elections and appointments for qualified U.S. and like-minded candidates for leadership roles in the U.N. system. That office works closely with posts such as Geneva to ensure the United States is well-positioned to identify and advocate on behalf of interested candidates for key positions across multiple U.N. organizations and agencies. If confirmed, I will prioritize engaging with senior U.N. leadership as well as our allies and partners to advocate for placement and election of qualified and independent applicants and candidates, including U.S. citizens, at the U.N. and in its specialized and technical agencies. If confirmed, I will also prioritize working closely across the inter-agency, with U.S. bilateral and multilateral missions, and with Congress to ensure that we dedicate robust diplomatic efforts to leadership election and appointment campaigns.

Question. What can the State Department do to counter China's growing influence within the U.N. system?

Answer. The United States is best able to respond to this challenge when we are engaged and leading at the U.N. and its specialized agencies and related organizations. If confirmed, I will use our re-engagement with the U.N. system to reassert U.S. leadership and work with our allies and partners to push back against the PRC's attempts to reshape international institutions, rules, standards, and values. I will seek to improve the U.N.'s effectiveness, transparency, and impartiality; support qualified and independent candidates for key positions; ensure that we advance our priorities on issues ranging from human rights to emerging technologies, including in standard-setting bodies; and take targeted actions to oppose harmful PRC efforts, such as its use of the U.N. and international organizations to promote the Belt and Road Initiative or its incorporation of PRC ideology and policy into U.N. documents. If confirmed, I will also work closely with like-minded partners to counter the PRC's efforts to restrict Taiwan's meaningful participation in U.N. bodies and its efforts to shrink space for civil society's meaningful participation in U.N. fora.

Question. The African bloc within the U.N. is a large bloc of countries that tends to vote together and can be decisive with respect to votes at the United Nations. China has done a lot economically and diplomatically to successfully court this bloc, for example convincing almost all African countries to abandon Taiwan in favor of China.

- What can the State Department do to work with this bloc to better explain U.S. positions and have it vote with the United States at the U.N.?

Answer. The United States shares many priorities with countries in Africa, yet too often in multilateral fora our votes do not align. If confirmed, I will work with colleagues across the Department to improve outreach and partnerships with African and other G-77 countries on our shared multilateral priorities, both in Geneva and through our bilateral channels. As part of this effort, we will also make clear that the PRC's actions to coerce and bully countries to support its positions at the U.N. undermine the U.N.'s foundational principle of sovereign equality and work with those countries to defend our shared interests at the U.N.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO
HON. BATHSHEBA NELL CROCKER BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question. If confirmed, what specific reforms will you push for at the Human Rights Council? How will you fight anti-Israel bias at the U.N. Human Rights Council?

Answer. The United States is committed to seeking reforms of the U.N. Human Rights Council, particularly with respect to the Council's disproportionate focus on Israel and the Council's problematic membership. When we have had a seat at the table, we have been able to advocate on Israel's behalf, and we have seen changes like a reduction in the number of resolutions targeting Israel. If confirmed, I will prioritize working closely with U.S. friends and allies, as well as non-traditional partners, to address the Council's problematic anti-Israel bias and will engage regularly with the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights to make clear U.S. opposition to problematic anti-Israel mandates.

We have also seen that when the United States plays an active and constructive role on the Council, we have been able to engage with our allies and partners to keep off some of the countries with the worst human rights records and to encourage and support countries with better records to run for seats. More broadly, if confirmed, I would work closely with U.S. friends and allies to push back on the People's Republic of China's efforts to erode global human rights norms in favor of its authoritarian aims and will work to expand space for civil society engagement in the Council's work, something the PRC has worked to restrict in recent years. If confirmed, I will ensure the United States prioritizes these specific reforms.

Question. Following the launching of thousands of rockets at Israel from Gaza this May, the Human Rights Council took the step of establishing a permanent commission of inquiry to investigate Israel, the only such permanent agenda item of the council. What are your thoughts on the commission? Should the U.S. cooperate with commission?

Answer. The United States strongly opposed the special session of the U.N. Human Rights Council following the conflict in Gaza in May, 2021. The session exemplifies the Council's disproportionate focus on Israel. The establishment of an open-ended Commission of Inquiry distracts from the diplomatic work necessary to provide greater dignity, freedom, and prosperity for Israelis and Palestinians. If confirmed, I will work closely with Israel and likeminded partners to influence the scope and timeline of this Commission as part of broader efforts to ensure Israel is treated fairly by the Human Rights Council, in line with other U.N. member states. The United States does not intend to cooperate with the Commission, and if confirmed, I will make clear U.S. opposition to the Commission through regular engagements with the U.N. High Commissioner for Human Rights and diplomatic counterparts.

Question. As you know, China continues to seek leadership posts and influence inside key standards-making bodies like the International Telecommunication Union (ITU), World Intellectual Property Organization, and International Organization for Standardization. What do you believe is required to effectively push back on Chinese efforts to codify CCP-friendly international standards?

Answer. The United States has consistently participated in the activities of key standard-setting bodies to ensure U.S. interests are represented, while standing as a bulwark against PRC interests. This is achieved by ensuring that organizations are transparent and accountable to membership, focused on mandates and core competencies, and led by independent, qualified candidates.

Strong leadership and engagement in international technology standards development activities are essential to the national security and economic security of the United States. If confirmed, I will prioritize electing qualified and independent candidates to lead important standard-setting bodies, including the election of American citizen Doreen Bogdan-Martin as Secretary-General of the ITU, and robust strategies to work with our allies and partners to strengthen the international standards development process in alignment with our shared values and principles. I will also work to ensure the U.S. private sector can appropriately engage in standard-setting processes and will strengthen relationships with leadership of the Geneva-based standard-setting bodies so that the U.S. can most effectively advance our interests.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO
HON. BATHSHEBA NELL CROCKER BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question. The U.N. Human Rights Council (UNHRC) has been subject to bipartisan criticism for endemic anti-Israel bias. It has in recent years taken a leading role in promoting economic measures against Israeli Jews and in territories where Israeli Jews live. The Human Rights Council has published a blacklist of companies doing business in the West Bank and East Jerusalem—including American companies. The move puts these companies at severe reputational and potentially even legal risks, pursuant to American statutes prohibiting participation in such boycott efforts.

- What specific steps do you intend to take to ensure that the Council retracts databases and other lists seeking to pressure companies into curtailing activities with Israel?

Answer. The United States opposed the creation of the database and release of the report, as mandated by the Human Rights Council in 2016, and continues to oppose any work to update it. The United States has not provided and has no intention to provide any information to OHCHR for the database. If confirmed, I will also encourage other countries not to provide any information for the database. The United States continues to engage with the High Commissioner in Geneva to make its views and opposition clear and to push for retraction of the database. If confirmed, I will continue this effort.

Question. How long do you assess it will take you to ensure that the Council retracts all such databases and other lists?

Answer. I cannot offer a specific timeline. However, I can assure you that, if I am confirmed, the United States, and I personally, will continue to engage regularly with the High Commissioner in Geneva to urge the retraction of this database and push to ensure that the database is not further updated.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO DR. MICHAEL CARPENTER BY SENATOR ROBERT MENEDEZ

Question. What are your views on the future of the Minsk Group and how we can promote a better future in the region amid increased Azeri and Turkish aggression?

Answer. The United States takes its role as one of the three OSCE Minsk Group Co-Chairs—with France and Russia—very seriously. If confirmed, I will support the mandate of the Minsk Group Co-Chairs to help Armenia and Azerbaijan negotiate a peaceful, comprehensive settlement to the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict, and will support efforts invigorate the Minsk Group Co-Chair process to find a lasting solution that brings peace and stability to the South Caucasus region. If confirmed, I will also look for opportunities for broader OSCE engagement in the South Caucasus region to promote peace, security, and stability.

Question. So how will you use the OSCE platform to draw attention to human rights abuses and the erosion of the rule of law in Turkey?

Answer. I share your concerns about democratic backsliding and the erosion of the rule of law in Turkey. If confirmed, I will speak frankly about democracy and human rights concerns with my Turkish counterparts. I will also raise these concerns in statements at the Permanent Council and other OSCE venues to ensure that all participating States are held accountable for their OSCE commitments.

Question. What would you do as ambassador to make sure that Turkey is unable to derail the OSCE's work on these important issues?

Answer. All participating States, including Turkey, freely adopted OSCE commitments on respect for human rights, the rule of law, and democracy. If confirmed, I will use OSCE platforms to hold Turkey and other states accountable for their failures to uphold these commitments. I share your concern that countries could seek to evade criticism of their records by obstructionist tactics, as is currently the case with Russia's blocking of procedural decisions regarding the Human Dimension Implementation Meeting. If confirmed, I will continue to take the firm U.S. position that such tactics are unacceptable and work with allies and partners to uphold the principle that the human rights record of all participating States is subject to review.

Question. Given the Kremlin intransigence, what steps will you take within the OSCE to ensure that the Kremlin is held accountable for abuses against its own people?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue spotlighting Russia's failures to uphold its freely made commitments on human rights, rule of law, and democracy. I will amplify the voices of embattled civil society activists, human rights defenders, and independent journalists. I will raise the cases of political prisoners and call out abuses. I agree the Kremlin has obstructed the work of the OSCE inside Russia for many years, including in the runup to this year's parliamentary elections. After obstructing independent media coverage and genuine opposition participation, and after imposing unjustified restrictions on OSCE observation, the OSCE rightly decided not to observe this year's elections. However, that does not mean Russia will evade the spotlight or international accountability. If confirmed, I will continue the U.S. Mission to the OSCE's efforts to call out the Kremlin's failures to abide by its OSCE commitments.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DR. MICHAEL CARPENTER BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Nontransparent Behavior with Respect to Its War Games

Question. Russia's history and continued practice of under-reporting, mischaracterizing, or permanently repositioning forces under the rubric of exercises is dangerously destabilizing. Many of the confidence- and security-building measures contained in the OSCE's Vienna Document are designed to provide transparency regarding military activities, including military exercises in the field. If it chose to, Russia could demonstrate its commitment to international stability by ensuring it is transparent before, during, and after military exercises. This would give other OSCE participating States greater confidence that Russia will refrain from an unlawful threat or use of force. Unfortunately, Russia does not consistently fulfill the transparency measures it committed to in the Vienna Document. If confirmed, I will continue to call upon Russia to meet its international obligations and its commitments under the Vienna Document and will use the OSCE platform to call out its destabilizing military activities while keeping our allies and partners united.

- Is the Vienna document still relevant given how frequently Russia violates its spirit and intent? What reforms are most pressing to maintain OSCE as a relevant institution?

Answer. The Vienna Document remains a pillar of military transparency and confidence-building in Europe and Eurasia. If confirmed, I will work to build support for Vienna Document modernization so its provisions are better adapted to new military realities, including by working with allies and partners to push Russia to participate constructively in results-oriented negotiations. Russia's repeated failures over the years to fulfill certain of its Vienna Document commitments in good faith undermines other states' confidence in Russia's commitment to international stability. However, the United States and our allies are better off with these commitments in place, in part so we can hold Russia to account.

The OSCE's comprehensive security concept linking respect for human rights within states to cooperation and peace among states helps the United States advance its interests within the organization, and this concept remains highly relevant today. Useful reforms would include those mandating a timely adoption of the Unified Budget and steps to facilitate OSCE's core functions, including holding all three implementation/review meetings annually. If confirmed, I look forward to consulting with Congress on the question of reforms and will steadfastly defend the continued independence of OSCE institutions and field missions, which do invaluable work to advance our interests.

Question. If confirmed, how will you engage with OSCE to counter the growing belligerence of Russia and its encroachment into Belarus?

Answer. I am deeply troubled by Russia's malign activities in Belarus, including its insertion of Russian propagandists into Belarusian state-controlled media outlets to replace Belarusian journalists and Belarusian technical personnel, who were either fired due to their participation in the pro-democracy movement or quit in peaceful protest. Other Russian "advisors" have also been deployed to Belarus to assist the regime with consolidating power.

The United States, together with 16 other participating States, invoked the OSCE's Moscow Mechanism in September 2020 to investigate human rights abuses in Belarus. The Moscow Mechanism is a unique OSCE tool that allows for an investigation to be launched without consensus and independently of the OSCE Chairmanship. The resulting OSCE Rapporteur's report on Belarus thoroughly documented ongoing human rights abuses and made specific recommendations, such as calling for an end to torture, the release of all political prisoners, the launch of an inclusive national dialogue, and new, free and fair elections. If confirmed, I will use all applicable OSCE platforms and tools to support the human rights and democratic aspirations of the Belarusian people and the sovereignty, independence, and territorial integrity of the Republic of Belarus.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DR. MICHAEL CARPENTER BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Human Rights

Question. Over the past year, the world has suffered the crippling impact of COVID-19, which has disproportionately affected our most vulnerable citizens and allowed some governments to exploit the pandemic to limit fundamental freedoms. Corruption threatens peace, prosperity, and human rights across the region, and the Kremlin remains intransigent in its overt violence against its neighbors as well as its covert attempts to undermine democratic institutions elsewhere.

- As Ambassador, what would be your top priorities for the U.S. Mission to the OSCE?

Answer. If confirmed, I will prioritize respect for democracy and human rights and continue efforts to push back on Russian and PRC malign influence across the OSCE region, particularly Russia's aggression in Ukraine, and redouble U.S. engagement to resolve protracted conflicts in Ukraine, Georgia, Moldova and Nagorno-Karabakh. I will focus on addressing conventional military concerns and updating the Vienna Document, as well as addressing "hybrid" threats such as election interference, energy coercion, disinformation, cyber operations, and transnational repression. I will prioritize establishing stronger anti-corruption measures, and work with allies and partners to strengthen the resilience of frontline democracies. Finally, I will use OSCE platforms and institutional tools to defend human rights and human dignity, promote democratic reforms, and push back against growing restrictions on civil society, media and internet freedom, judicial independence, and the rising tide of intolerance.

Question. How can the OSCE contribute to its mission of promoting human rights and democracy in Belarus and countries undergoing similar situations?

Answer. If confirmed, I will use all available OSCE platforms and tools to shine a light on the appalling human rights situation in Belarus while affirming our support for democratic norms and institutions. While it is up to the people of Belarus to decide their political future, the OSCE must continue to hold the authorities in Belarus accountable for their actions. The successful invocation of the OSCE's Moscow Mechanism by the United States and 16 other countries in 2020 resulted in the issuance of a report documenting ongoing human rights abuses and offering policy recommendations, such as calling for an end to torture, the release of all political prisoners, the launch of an inclusive national dialogue, and new, free and fair elections. If confirmed, I will continue calling Belarus and other participating States to account when they violate their human rights obligations or disregard the OSCE commitments they freely pledged to uphold. Additionally, I will continue support for the OSCE's independent institutions, which conduct invaluable human rights programming, spotlight repressions against journalists and human rights defenders, and provide support to vulnerable populations.

Rise in Violence:

Question. Since 2015, I have served as the Special Representative on Anti-Semitism, Racism, and Intolerance for the OSCE Parliamentary Assembly. We've seen, in recent months, current events trigger latent bias in our communities. We go back to 9/11 where we saw the rise of hate against the Muslim community, which was translated into violence against Muslim Americans. We saw during COVID-19 latent bias against the Asian American community. Once again, as a result of recent violence in the Middle East, we see a rise of anti-Semitism here in the United States and around the world.

- The center's Early Warning Project provides an innovative risk assessment tool using methods to spotlight countries where mass atrocities have not begun, but where the risk of such violence is high. The warning signs are there. As Ambassador, how are you planning on addressing this issue with many OSCE participating states?

Answer. I share your alarm at the rise of anti-Semitism, anti-Muslim hatred, xenophobia, and other forms of intolerance in the OSCE region that, if left unchecked, can lead to mass atrocities. Whole-of-government approaches, such as efforts to implement the Elie Wiesel Genocide and Atrocities Prevention Act and the Global Fragility Act, provide the Department, in collaboration with other agencies, opportunities to innovate, leverage and utilize valuable tools for early warning and early action regarding mass atrocities. Various nongovernmental organizations also provide useful metrics for assessing risk of mass atrocities. At the OSCE, the Conflict Prevention Center staffs a round-the-clock Situation Room to look for early warning signs and bring them to the attention of participating States.

If confirmed, I will condemn hate in all of its forms, and use the OSCE's diplomatic, educational, and programmatic tools to build international coalitions to act swiftly whenever and wherever there is a risk of violence or mass atrocities. In this regard, preventative diplomacy is critical. If confirmed, I will also continue U.S. support for the tolerance projects of the Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights and encourage active engagement by the High Commissioner on National Minorities to address the triggers of inter-ethnic conflict and engage in conflict prevention at the earliest possible stage.

TO DR. MICHAEL CARPENTER BY SENATOR TED CRUZ

Nord Stream 2

Question. The Nord Stream 2 pipeline is opposed by OSCE countries. In 2019, the OSCE passed a resolution "expressing particular concern about the Nord Stream 2 and TurkStream pipeline projects and their potential to be used for the political or economic coercion of supply-dependent participating State."

Congress has of course mandated the use of sanctions to stop Nord Stream 2 from coming online, and on September 15 you testified "I think it's very important that the U.S. continues to be ready to use all of the authorities contained within PEESA and CAATSA which are the laws of the land when it comes to this." The statement is in tension with statements from other Biden administration officials, who have publicly said that the pipeline cannot be stopped, in part because it has been physically completed. European allies that believe the pipeline should be stopped have, in turn, emphasized that there are still several months to prevent its certification and activation.

- Please clarify your September 15 testimony by describing what authorities within PEESA and CAATSA should be used.

Answer. The Protecting European Energy Security Act (PEESA) and the Countering America's Adversaries Through Sanctions Act (CAATSA) both provide the administration with authorities to sanction foreign persons who engage in certain activity related to the Nord Stream 2 pipeline. I understand the administration remains committed to implementing CAATSA and PEESA, as amended, and that work continues to examine entities involved in potentially sanctionable activity.

Question. Please assess whether you believe the Nord Stream 2 pipeline can still be stopped from coming online.

Answer. It is my understanding that while the physical work required to construct the Nord Stream 2 pipeline is either finished or close to being finished, it could take several more months before German authorities are ready to certify the pipeline for use. If confirmed, I will continue to oppose the Nord Stream 2 pipeline and work to strengthen the energy security of our allies and partners.

If confirmed, I will use OSCE platforms and tools to push back against the Kremlin's coercive energy policies and advance a more secure and sustainable energy future for Ukraine and other frontline European countries. I would continue to support the OSCE's work to build the capacity of participating States to protect their energy networks, diversify their energy mixes, improve the investment climate in the energy sector, and reduce the environmental footprint of energy production, use, and transport.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DR. MICHAEL CARPENTER BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question. How can we apply more pressure in Belarus within the OSCE context? Can we do more to support the democratic movement led by Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya?

Answer. If confirmed, I will use all available OSCE platforms and tools to spotlight the appalling human rights situation in Belarus, urge the Lukashenka regime to engage in a facilitated dialogue with the democratic opposition and civil society, and support the Belarusian people's democratic aspirations. The OSCE must continue to hold Belarus' authorities accountable for their severe human rights abuses and allow for the voices of civil society and democratic leaders to be heard. The 2020 invocation of the OSCE's Moscow Mechanism by the United States and sixteen other countries resulted in a report documenting human rights abuses and making policy recommendations supported by the United States, such as an immediate end to violence and torture, unconditional release of all political prisoners, launch of an OSCE-facilitated national dialogue inclusive of civil society and the political opposition, and new, free and fair elections under international observation.

Question. I was able to visit Georgia earlier this summer and was initially encouraged by the progress undertaken by the April 19 agreements. However, recent events over the course of the summer indicate that there is still insufficient political will to advance the April 19 agreement.

- The next round of elections is scheduled for early October—what role will the OSCE take in observing these elections?

Answer. The OSCE's Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights (ODIHR) has deployed an election observation mission (EOM) for Georgia's October 2 local elections. The EOM will consist of 12 international experts, 30 long-term observers, and 350 short-term observers. Observers will monitor all aspects of the election, including implementation of electoral reforms, the campaign environment, media coverage, and election dispute resolution. Short-term observers will monitor the opening of polling stations, voting processes, the counting of ballots, and tabulation of results. The EOM will assess the elections for compliance with OSCE commitments and standards, and international obligations related to the holding of free and fair elections.

Question. What can be done to ensure that the elections are free and fair, and that if so, all parties accept the results to allow Georgia to move forward politically?

Answer. The Georgian Government, all political parties, all candidates, and election officials have an important role in upholding the highest standards of integrity before, during, and after Election Day. A robust OSCE election observation mission in Georgia will help establish a clear factual record of election processes and conduct, as will nonpartisan domestic election monitoring. The United States has provided substantial bilateral assistance over the years to promote professional and transparent election administration and nonpartisan domestic election monitoring. If confirmed, I will continue efforts in support of democratic reforms and encourage enhanced OSCE engagement in Georgia. Timely implementation of inclusive and transparent democratic reforms can reduce political polarization and help Georgia advance its Euro-Atlantic aspirations.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 2021

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:20 a.m. in Room SD-G50, Hon. Robert Menendez, chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Menendez [presiding], Cardin, Shaheen, Coons, Murphy, Kaine, Schatz, Van Hollen, Risch, Johnson, Young, Barrasso, Cruz, and Hagerty.

Also Present: Senators Klobuchar, Casey, Toomey, Padilla, Feingold, Heinrich, and Lujan.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ, U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

The CHAIRMAN. This hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

We are here today to consider nominations for five very important positions. On the first panel, we will hear from Mr. Thomas Nides to be the ambassador to Israel, Mr. David Cohen to be the ambassador to Canada, and Dr. Cynthia Telles to be ambassador to Costa Rica.

We are also pleased to have a number of our colleagues here to introduce some of these nominees. I will turn to them in order.

Senator Klobuchar, I understand you will be introducing Mr. Nides.

STATEMENT OF HON. AMY KLOBUCHAR, U.S. SENATOR FROM MINNESOTA

Senator KLOBUCHAR. Thank you very much, Chairman, and to Ranking Member Risch as well. The work this committee does touches the lives of people all over the world and we thank you for that.

Right now in the wake of new leadership in Israel, it is a critically important moment in our alliance with our friend and ally, and we have with us today someone with the experience, credibility, and respect to serve as our ambassador to Israel and he just happens to have been born in Minnesota, as usual.

And I am so proud to introduce my good friend, Tom Nides. With Tom today is his son Max, who will testify to the fact that his dad is wise and patient all the time, right, Max? Okay, good.

And I want to tell you a little bit about Tom. He grew up in Duluth as the youngest of eight siblings. His father, Arnold, served as the president of Temple Israel and of the Duluth Jewish Federation, and his mother, Shirley, was a teacher. His sister, Jane, told the Duluth News Tribune that their parents would be going crazy with joy if they were alive to see their son nominated to serve as ambassador to Israel.

I was amused the day that Tom was nominated to read the headline in the Duluth News, which said simply this: "Man who grew up in Duluth nominated Ambassador to Israel."

Tom was innovative from a young age. As a senior at Duluth East High School, he was tasked with finding a speaker for his high school graduation. Being the proud Minnesotan he was, he wanted Walter Mondale, who just happened to be Vice President of the United States.

He learned that the best time as a high schooler to catch the Vice President's Chief of Staff was at 5:30 in the morning. He reached out and Walter Mondale agreed to speak at his high school graduation.

A year later, Tom and I met as interns for the Vice President and I remember walking in and seeing him sitting at the desk as a 20-year-old, his legs sprawled up on the desk above him, sitting on the chair with a vice presidential pin on his lapel.

And I watched him answer the phone and say, "Tom Nides with the Vice President's office" in a tone that would convince anyone that he was no 20-year-old intern but he was, in fact, the chief of staff.

While I was assigned to do the furniture inventory and write down the serial number of every lamp and desk, Tom got to save the Lake Superior foghorn for the city of Duluth, and just like everything else, he got it done.

Since then, he continued to serve ably and, most importantly for our work here, optimistically in many leadership positions, including in the halls of Congress and in two presidential administrations.

He was a trusted adviser to Congressman Tony Coelho and to Speaker Tom Foley. He worked for Mickey Kantor in the office of the United States Trade Representative and he later served as Deputy Secretary of State for Management and Resources with Secretary Clinton under President Obama.

During that time, he distinguished himself as a key voice on Israel and an advocate for humanitarian support for our U.S. allies. For his outstanding service, he was awarded the Secretary of State's Distinguished Service Award, our country's highest diplomatic honor.

His private sector and trade background as well as his strong background in Middle Eastern policy makes him the perfect choice to serve as our ambassador to Israel, one of our strongest and most enduring allies.

Members on both sides of the aisle understand that the deep friendship between our two countries is based on shared values and that Israel's interests in the Middle East are strongly aligned with our own. Support for Israel can never ever become a partisan issue.

Now more than ever, we need an ambassador dedicated to fostering lasting peace and stability. I am confident that as ambassador Tom will further the close alliance between our two nations and our commitment to prosperity in the region for generations to come.

He will do a phenomenal job, Mr. Chair, and I strongly urge the committee to support his nomination. Thank you to the members of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.

Senator Casey, Senator Toomey, I understand you will be introducing Mr. Cohen. I will ask Senator Casey to go first and then Senator Toomey.

STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT P. CASEY JR.,
U.S. SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA

Senator CASEY. Mr. Chairman, thanks very much. I am honored to be here with you and appreciate this opportunity as well as thanking the ranking member for this opportunity to say a few words about my friend, David L. Cohen, to serve as ambassador to Canada.

I am especially grateful to be joined by Senator Toomey. We do not always appear together on big issues. But today, we are united in our recommendation and our commendation of the work of David Cohen.

I have known David for more than a quarter of a century and I have seen him in all kinds of circumstances, most of them in connection with public service.

Many of you know that in addition to being a very successful lawyer and doing the work of a lawyer and an advocate, he served as chief of staff to the mayor of Philadelphia, Ed Rendell.

To be chief of staff of a mayor of one of America's largest cities is about as difficult a job as anyone can imagine. But he did it well and he served the people of Philadelphia with distinction.

I think it also bears repeating that sometimes the most difficult jobs in public service also are the jobs that teach you a lot about what public service is. David understands the commitment you have got to make to be a public servant and I think he has demonstrated that over and over again.

In addition to his work for the city and his work as a lawyer, later, of course, he joined Comcast, and I tried to itemize or list all of the roles he played at Comcast and I will just give you just a partial list of the work that he did serving in major leadership positions at Comcast, whether it was legal work or government affairs, communications, administration, real estate, did a lot of work in diversity and inclusion to help lead a major corporation in the city of Philadelphia and, of course, charitable giving.

All of those roles he played. All of that work he did and more helped Comcast to grow and to be such an important corporate partner in Philadelphia for so many institutions in the city.

His community service, I think, is unparalleled, and whether it is at Penn Medicine, the work he did at the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, the work he has done with organizations like the Urban League and on and on. We could list many more.

I do not think I have to remind members of this committee, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, about the importance of our relationship with Canada, our second largest trading partner, ever more so important in the context of the challenges we face today, whether it is fighting COVID-19 or future viral security challenges, managing climate change, addressing the opioid crisis, trade issues, economic issues, on and on.

A lot of those issues, of course, involve many, many Pennsylvania businesses and businesses across the country that rely upon the stability and the strength of this relationship.

I would say this in conclusion, Mr. Chairman. This is my fifteenth year serving in the Senate and in those years I have seen David commit himself to excellence in every task that he was presented with.

I also got to know over those quarter century or more his wife, Rhonda, who, in her own way, has contributed so much to public service. I asked Rhonda just before this hearing—I said, Rhonda, is David ready? And she said, yes, and that is all I needed to know. He is ready to do this job in a critically important time in our nation's history.

The last thing I will say is this. There is a line in the Scriptures, "To whom much has been given, much is expected." The good Lord gave David a lot—an intellect, a strength of character, a commitment to helping people, and we have asked him to do a lot, and much is and has been expected of him and he has never failed to deliver. I have no doubt that will be the case when he serves as our ambassador to Canada.

Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.
Senator Toomey?

STATEMENT OF HON. PAT TOOMEY,
U.S. SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA

Senator TOOMEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Risch, members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Thank you for allowing me to introduce briefly my friend, David Cohen, and express my enthusiastic support for his nomination to be our next U.S. Ambassador to Canada.

And thank you, David, for your willingness to serve. I was delighted to see your wife, Rhonda, is here with you and I appreciate the sacrifices required of individuals but also their families when they choose to go into public service and I am glad to see that you are up for this challenge.

There is a passage about David in Buzz Bissinger's excellent book, "A Prayer for the City." It is a book that chronicles the administration of Philadelphia Mayor Ed Rendell, which, as Senator Casey pointed out, it is an administration in which David Cohen served as chief of staff.

I think the passage is relevant for today's hearing so I am going to read it briefly. It is about David Cohen and it says, and I quote, "It wasn't just his prodigious capacity for work that made him so good at what he did. It was his patience as a negotiator, the way in which he determined the result he wanted, and then, as Macedon put it, exhibited a willingness to stay with something forever until he got there.

In the meantime, he never got frustrated. He never personalized or railed or sought vendettas. Once again, the normal human impulse to get angry and become agitated that never even surfaced,” end quote.

Mr. Chairman, I think there is a word for this kind of quiet, thoughtful, persistent approach to getting things done. It is called diplomacy. David is a longtime resident of Pennsylvania, a very active member in the community, as Senator Casey pointed out.

I think it is important to point out that while serving as chief of staff to Mayor Ed Rendell through the '90s he played a central role in pulling the city out of really dire fiscal circumstances and placing it on a stable footing.

He led a prestigious U.S. law firm prior to joining Comcast Corporation in 2002. Senator Casey mentioned some of the many roles that David has played at Comcast.

I would just point out that in addition to helping to forge Comcast into a telecommunications powerhouse, David also helped to establish Comcast as a really exceptional corporate citizen for Philadelphia and Pennsylvania and our country including, among many other things, donating millions of dollars to myriad charitable causes across the country.

David's many career accomplishments are accompanied by an extensive record of service. As Senator Casey pointed out, he has long served on many, many boards and advisory panels supporting Philadelphia in particular in its academic, athletic, arts communities.

Just to name two, he was for over a decade the chairman of the Board of Trustees for the University of Pennsylvania, and currently he sits alongside Senator Casey and myself on the U.S. Semiquincentennial Commission.

All the members of this committee understand full well how important Canada is as one of America's allies and neighbors. We rely on Canada as a major trade, energy, and security partner.

Frankly, Pennsylvania's proximity to Canada gives us a particularly strong tie to that country and our representation of Canada is all the more important for folks in the Commonwealth.

The fact is President Biden made an outstanding choice in choosing David for this post. David Cohen's very strong business background, his deep understanding of government at all levels, and his passion for service prepared him well for this role.

Mr. Chairman, I enthusiastically support his nomination and encourage my colleagues to do likewise. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

And last but not least, our distinguished colleague from California, who is going to introduce Dr. Telles.

Senator Padilla?

STATEMENT OF HON. ALEX PADILLA,
U.S. SENATOR FROM CALIFORNIA

Senator PADILLA. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee.

It is my honor to introduce Dr. Cynthia Telles this morning from the great state of California, and President Biden's nominee to serve as ambassador to Costa Rica.

As a clinical professor in the UCLA School of Medicine's Department of Psychiatry and a widely published researcher, Dr. Telles is widely recognized for her work in health care and especially in improving the lives of those with mental illness.

For more than three decades, Dr. Telles has directed UCLA's Spanish-speaking psychosocial clinic, where she has helped train a generation of clinicians to provide culturally-competent mental health services for Latino communities.

In addition to her work in health care, Dr. Telles brings life experience from the region and from serving on a number of nonprofit organizations and government commissions.

As a longtime member of the board of directors of the Pacific Council on International Policy, she has worked closely with industry and governmental actors to promote global engagement in Los Angeles, throughout California, and beyond.

She has served as a commissioner in the city of Los Angeles, America's second largest city, for almost 20 years, as well as having served on the board of the California Community Foundation and for nearly a decade serving on the board of the California Endowment, California's largest health foundation.

Dr. Telles also continues a family legacy of public service, including deep ties to Costa Rica. Her father, Raymond Telles, was the first Latino to serve as a U.S. ambassador, appointed by President Kennedy in 1961. Dr. Telles grew up determined to fight for the world's inequities from a young age.

During her father's ambassadorship, she lived in Costa Rica, where she found her calling for both public service and public health. Dr. Telles is a uniquely well-qualified person to represent the United States and Costa Rica, an important regional partner.

She brings a wealth of experience, dedication, and compassion to her role representing the United States and Costa Rica.

I strongly support her nomination, and I urge for her swift confirmation.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Padilla.

With that background, maybe we should have Dr. Telles work with us here in Washington to solve a few things.

[Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much. Thank you to all the senators who made presentations.

Let me turn now, first, to a little bit of committee business before I get to the nominees. I want to appreciate the ranking member's willingness to move forward with nine nominees that the committee was scheduled to consider today.

We postponed the hearing this afternoon out of a deference to one of our members, but that has been rescheduled for next week.

I am also glad that you agreed to a few of the nominees that I proposed for hearings next week and that you indicated, albeit with many caveats, that you may be ready to notice more. I, certainly, hope that materializes.

I remain deeply concerned, however, by the delays and obstacles facing the bulk of nominees when it comes to securing your approval for their hearings.

It is inexplicably taking an average of six weeks, almost 40 days, from the time a nominee's file is complete to the time that the minority is willing to move forward, and that is just for a hearing.

This is almost four weeks slower than it took during a similar period in 2009.

I ask how that is possible. As you know, we have a massive backlog at the State Department, USAID, and other nominations pending before the committee. We have almost reached 80 and the number continues to grow.

The nominations pending include ambassadorships to China, Japan, and countries throughout Latin America, Africa, and Europe, places where competition with China and Russia is real, where we need ambassadors in place to project U.S. power, to assist our citizens, and to promote our companies.

I would just ask Senator Risch, I appreciate the work we have done so far. I need your full cooperation and participation to tackle this backlog.

I would just note that when faced with similar numbers in 2009, the majority and the minority worked together to move 57 nominees in just one month.

There is no reason we cannot do that if we work together. To date, I have noticed only nominees who the ranking member has agreed to. In fact, I have bent over backwards to restore the tradition of comity that was abandoned in the last Congress.

But the slow pace and many obstacles to moving nominees is unacceptable. It is dangerous. We are less safe when our national security agencies are so short staffed.

We have to fix this problem. We owe it to the Senate and we owe it to all Americans, and I look forward to working with you to try to achieve that.

Let me turn to our nominees. Welcome, and thank you and your families for your willingness to serve the country in this capacity. I will briefly address each of the positions that you have been nominated for.

Mr. Nides, welcome back to the committee. I am pleased to see such a qualified and capable nominee for one of our most vital allies. Your extensive experience in management, including as the Deputy Secretary of State, will surely serve you well in navigating the particulars of our embassy in Jerusalem.

As Israel settles into its new government, it is critical that we have an experienced diplomat in place to help pursue many of our shared U.S. and Israeli interests across national security, technology, cultural, and religious exchanges.

And while some may try to exploit any small fissures or differences in policy opinions between our two countries, this committee, the Senate, and the Congress as a whole have repeatedly confirmed our unwavering support for Israel's security, its right to defend itself in the face of neighbors who continue to threaten to wipe it off the map.

Finally, to all our friends who may or may not be watching in Israel and here, let me wish you all a Hag Sukkot Sameah, and I look forward to hearing from Mr. Nides.

I am also pleased that we are reviewing the nomination of our next ambassador to Canada. Our alliance with our northern neighbors, one of the most important partnerships that we have united by shared security interests and strengthened by expansive economic ties, our nations are linked by a common commitment to democratic principles and to tackling the most pressing challenges on the global stage.

It is with the deepest respect that we also remember that our Canadian brothers and sisters fought alongside our men and women for decades, most recently in Afghanistan.

Yet, during the last administration this most essential alliance was too often marked by tensions and tariffs, marred by insults aimed at Canadian leaders, and neglected by an absentee U.S. ambassador.

It is imperative that we rebuild our relationship with Canada, deepen our collaboration to address the challenges posed by China and Russia, and work together to address the threats posed by climate change.

Mr. Cohen, I have no doubt you are the right person to tackle these challenges and, upon confirmation, will be a strong and effective ambassador.

I am also pleased that we are considering the nomination of our next ambassador to Costa Rica. As it celebrates its bicentennial, Costa Rica stands out for its consistency on the global stage and leadership on environmental stewardship.

Costa Rica is also an example of democratic resiliency in Central America at a time when the region is plagued by weak rule of law and leaders who have embraced authoritarian tactics.

It is also unique that we are considering a candidate whose father served as ambassador to Costa Rica under President Kennedy.

I am pleased that Dr. Telles, if confirmed, will carry forward a family commitment to strengthening our partnership and advancing U.S. interests in Costa Rica. We look forward to hearing your testimony.

Let me now turn to the distinguished ranking member, Senator Risch, for his opening remarks.

STATEMENT OF HON. JAMES E. RISCH,
U.S. SENATOR FROM IDAHO

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate your comments regarding nominations. They are always difficult, and as I have said publicly and privately to you, having been a governor I know how important nominations are and it is impossible to govern if you do not have your team in place.

I do want to review, however, the record on the numbers. First of all, I am going to compare the 116th Congress to the 117th Congress.

In the 116th Congress, the average Senate Foreign Relations Committee nominations processing time with you as the ranking member was 94 days.

On the average, Senate Foreign Relations Committee nomination processing time in the 117th Congress so far with me as the ranking member it has been 44 days, 50 days less. The average processing time, obviously and clearly, is 50 days less, and the numbers do not lie.

On some specifics, take for instance, the Assistant Secretary for Democracy, Human Rights, Labor. Under the Trump nominee, Robert Destro, was 276 days. The Biden nominee, Sarah Margon, was 76 days.

The U.S. U.N. representative, Andrew Bremberg was 245 days as the Trump nominee, and under this administration, the Biden nominee, Bathsheba Crocker, was 56 days.

The Assistant Secretary for Civilian Security, Democracy, and Human Rights at Justice—excuse me, Assistant Secretary—Civilian Secretary of Security, Democracy and Human Rights, Marshall Billingslea, was 378 days. Uzra Zeya was 34 days.

U.S. for Arms Control under President Trump, Marshall Billingslea, was 244 days. Bonnie Jenkins under this administration was 34 days.

Ambassador to Mexico, Chris Landau, was 57 days under Trump. Ken Salazar under this administration for ambassador to Mexico was 17 days.

The number of days from file complete to business meeting for U.S. management—the department Secretary of Management, Brian Bulatao, was 319 days. The Biden nominee, Brian McKeon, was 18 days.

The Assistant Secretary for Political Military Affairs, Clarke Cooper, under Trump, nominee was 260 days, whereas Jessica Lewis was 49 days as the Biden nominee.

The Assistant Secretary for Near Eastern Affairs, David Schenker, the Trump nominee, was almost one year, 358 days. Barbara Leaf was 68 days.

Other key positions held by Democrats during the Trump administration, the legal advisor to the Department of State, CJ Mahoney, was 187 days from file complete to hearing. Sarah Cleveland, the file has not been complete.

The ambassador for Pakistan, Bill Todd, the Trump nominee, was 180 days from file complete to hearing. Of course, there has been no nominee.

Mr. Chairman, I would ask unanimous consent that this matrix be entered into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection.

Senator RISCH. I commit to you to continue to work as best I can, again, realizing that there is always stress on these. We take our vetting responsibilities seriously just as you did when the President was another party.

I respect that. I appreciate it, and we are going to continue to do the best we can to vet these people and as quickly as we possibly can.

Moving to the panel that we have before us today, I want to thank the nominees and, of course, their families for the sacrifice that they will share.

On the nomination for ambassador to Israel, Israel is America's most vital ally in a very turbulent region. It faces serious threats and it is in the national security interest of the United States to ensure Israel is adequately equipped to meet these challenges.

I am deeply disappointed that the House of Representatives have attempted to pull the Iron Dome funding from the Continuing Resolution. I expect the Senate will remedy that issue very quickly.

Since the Biden administration took office, we have seen no movement to expand or strengthen the Abraham Accords. I think most everyone that moves in the area of foreign relations agrees that the Abraham Accords were tremendous steps forward in the relationship we have and others have in the Middle East.

Many of us have concerns that the administration has instead doubled down on the failed Palestinian policies of the past. I am also disappointed the administration continues to provide assistance to the Palestinians without securing any concessions on the egregious "pay to slay" program.

Instead of normalizing this appalling practice through deeper relationships with the Palestinian Authority and the Palestinian Liberation Organization, the administration should pursue changes in Palestinian policies that glorify and promote violence and terrorism.

I look forward to hearing your thoughts on these important issues.

On the nomination for the ambassador to Canada, first of all, I appreciated the opportunity to meet personally with the nominee and we discussed the importance of a couple of issues that are important to me and important to America.

One is the Columbia River Treaty. The other is the opening of the Canadian border, and I was pleased to hear his thoughts on that and appeared to be on board as far as both issues are concerned.

The Columbia River Treaty remains an important issue to the entire Northwest delegation. I expect that you will prioritize these negotiations, should you be confirmed, as we discussed.

As for the U.S.-Canadian border, I am disappointed in the administration's decision on Monday to extend restrictions on non-essential travel from Canada to the United States at land ports of entry.

These restrictions are causing significant economic and emotional distress to communities such as those in north Idaho that depend on well-regulated cross-border traffic. The administration should reconsider this decision and reopen our land border with Canada as soon as possible.

Finally, the nomination of ambassador to Costa Rica. Costa Rica is an outpost of democratic governance in Central America and a valuable trade, security, and diplomatic partner.

As many as 50,000 Americans call Costa Rica home, in large part due to its political and economic stability. Nevertheless, Costa Rica's democratic model has come under acute pressure due to instability generated by the Ortega regime in Nicaragua and the COVID-19 epidemic.

Costa Rica has also sought deeper relations with China, which comes with its own set of challenges. I hope to hear how you plan to manage those U.S. relations with this strategic partner in Central America.

Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Risch.

Just very briefly, I must say that, of course, one has to compare apples with apples and oranges with oranges in terms of dates.

The reality is, is that for the first nine months of the Trump administration it took an average of just 22 days—22 days—to get a nominee scheduled for a hearing, despite many serious and well-documented vetting issues.

It is currently taking an average of 36 days, over three weeks longer than that period of time, for the minority to clear nominees with completed files for hearings. That is a challenge, and bottom line is we have nearly 80 people.

The final thing I will say is that, unfortunately, the previous administration did not vet nominees so looking at numbers was extremely meaningless.

We had nominees that had unprecedented vetting issues, lying to this committee, lying to the IRS, indictments, racism, #MeToo issues that all came out as a result of the vetting. That is why it took time.

I do not want to belabor it. But I do want to work with the ranking member because, as I have heard him say and he said again today, that as a governor he understands the importance of having people in place in the executive branch to execute. I agree with him in this context as well, and hopefully, we can get to a point where we are promoting the number of nominees for the process.

We still have the floor issues that have been vexing us, which is maybe beyond this committee's pay grade but, nonetheless, is a critical issue where Republican members exclusively are holding up nominees on the floor to the detriment of the national security and interests of the United States.

Senator Risch?

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

First of all, I hope we do not mix the issue of what is happening on the floor versus what is happening in the committee. Like you, I am likewise frustrated with what is happening on the floor and, certainly, this is an issue that should be tackled by the senior members of leadership of both of our teams and get this removed so we can move forward on that.

I am not going to debate the quality of the appointments. Obviously, that would take many, many more days than what we have here. I will just say that I do commit that I am going to continue to work with you to move as rapidly as we can.

I have no doubt that we will wind up with similar frustrations but we will work through them as best we can.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

We ask each of you to summarize your testimony in about five minutes or so. Your full statements will be included in the record, without objection.

And we will start with Mr. Nides to make his presentation.

STATEMENT OF THE HON. THOMAS R. NIDES OF MINNESOTA, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND
PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE STATE OF ISRAEL

Mr. NIDES. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chair Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee. It is a privilege to appear today. It is an honor to be asked to serve as the ambassador to the State of Israel.

I want to thank President Biden, Secretary Blinken for the confidence in me, and I am grateful to share this day with my family.

I would like to thank Senator Klobuchar for her kind words of introductions. As the Senator mentioned, she and I have been friends for over 40 years having served as interns together for Vice President Walter Mondale. I am so, so grateful for her friendship.

As Senator Klobuchar mentioned, I grew up in Duluth, Minnesota, the youngest of seven children. My parents were leaders in a vibrant but small Jewish community. My dad was the president of our temple, our chairman of our local UJA. My mom was a leader of both Hadassah and Sisterhood, who grew up believing being Jewish was more than a religion but a way of life.

Most importantly, my parents have pressed upon my siblings and me the importance, as they say in Hebrew, tzedakah, or charity, giving to your community and caring about others.

During my first trip to Israel, I worked on a kibbutz where I discovered the importance of this very young and vulnerable nation. As Jews everywhere are celebrating the holiday of Sukkot, there is no greater honor than to be asked to strengthen the ties between the United States and the State of Israel.

My many trips to Israel, both in the Government and the private sector, have strengthened my commitment to sustain Israel as a democratic and Jewish state.

The U.S.-Israel relationship has long been based on both common values and strategic interests to remain united in our shared commitment to democracy, economic prosperity, and regional security.

Should I have the honor of being confirmed, let me just spend a moment on a few of the priorities that will guide me.

First, the United States remains unwavering in its commitment to Israel's security supported by a 10-year/$38 billion Memorandum of Understanding. Israel is one of our closest security partners in countering the broad spectrum of threats.

Chief among them is the critical threat that Iran poses. President Biden has made clear his commitment to ensure that Iran will never develop a nuclear weapon. Upholding Israel's security serves America's national security interests, ensures that we will always have a strong, reliable, and secure partner.

Second, United States remains committed to advancing the depth and breadth of our bonds between our people, including our ever-expanding economic relationship.

Israel's startup nation economy is welcoming for U.S. businesses, with U.S. companies establishing two-thirds of the more than 300 foreign investment research and development centers in Israel. And, as importantly, President Biden has announced he will work with Israel in hopes of them joining the Visa Waiver Program.

Strategic competition with the People's Republic of China is a defining feature of the 21st century, and the United States views close cooperation with Israel on foreign investment as critical to our security and intelligence partnership.

Third, the United States values working with fellow democracies to oppose international institutional biases towards Israel, and I look forward to working with Israel to protect the freedoms of expression, association, and peaceful assembly, creating an atmosphere all voices can be heard.

Equally, we must continue to oppose all efforts to isolate and delegitimize Israel. If confirmed, while respecting the rights of all Americans for free speech, I will continue the tireless work of this administration to firmly reject the BDS movement and boycott laws which unfairly single out Israel.

Fourth, the Abraham Accords. Yes, the Abraham Accords are critical to the region's stability and prosperity. I will personally support every effort to expand cooperation among Israel and the countries of the Arab and Muslim world, and I hope to strengthen the Abraham Accords and identify opportunities to expand Israel's relationship in additional countries in the Arab and Muslim world.

While we support the normalization between Israel and other countries, it is not a substitute for Israel-Palestinian peace, and we seek to harness existing and future agreements and make tangible improvement for the Palestinian people with a view of preserving the vision of a negotiated two-state solution.

I am committed to doing so my part to rebuild the partnership between the Americans and the Palestinian people.

The priorities listed above are only some of the key issues that face any diplomat serving in Israel. Frank and fruitful dialogues only strengthen our partnership and deepen the bonds between Americans and Israelis.

Before I close, I would like to say something, that if I am fortunate to get confirmed, this will be my second time working at the State Department with some of the most talented and dedicated individuals I have ever had the honor to be with.

I would be remiss in not thanking every one of them for their service. I am humbled and grateful to serve this country and to strengthen all aspects of the U.S.-Israeli partnership.

And thank you for the opportunity to testify, and I look forward to your questions.

Thank you, Senator.

[Prepared statement of Mr. Nides follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. THOMAS R. NIDES

Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee, it is a privilege to appear before you today.

It is an honor to be asked to serve as Ambassador to the State of Israel. I want to thank President Biden and Secretary Blinken for their confidence in me. I am grateful to share this day with my family.

I would like to thank Senator Klobuchar for her kind words of introduction. As the Senator mentioned, she and I have been friends for over 40 years, having served as interns together for Vice President Walter Mondale. I am grateful for her friendship.

As Senator Klobuchar mentioned, I grew up in Duluth, Minnesota the youngest of seven children. My parents were leaders in a vibrant but small Jewish community. We grew up believing being Jewish was more than a religion, but a way of life. Most importantly, my parents impressed upon my siblings and me the importance of giving back to our community and caring about others.

There is no greater honor than to be asked to strengthen the ties between the United States and the State of Israel. My many trips to Israel, both in government and the private sector, have strengthened my commitment to sustain Israel as a democratic and Jewish state at peace with its neighbors.

The U.S.-Israeli relationship has long been based on both common values and strategic interests. We remain united in our shared commitment to democracy, economic prosperity, and regional security. Should I have the honor of being confirmed, some of the priorities that will guide my efforts include:

First, the United States remains unwavering in its commitment to Israel's security, supported by our 10-year, $38 billion Memorandum of Understanding. Israel is one of our closest security partners in countering a broad spectrum of threats ranging from climate change to cyber-attacks to nuclear proliferation. Chief among these is the critical threat that Iran poses.

President Biden has made clear his commitment to ensure that Iran never develops a nuclear weapon. Upholding Israel's security serves America's national security interests and ensures that we will always have a strong, reliable, and secure partner.

Second, the United States remains committed to advancing the depth and breadth of the bonds between our people, including our ever-expanding economic relationship. Israel's start-up economy is safe and welcoming for U.S. businesses, with U.S. companies establishing two-thirds of the more than 300 foreign-invested research and development centers in Israel and President Biden announced we will work with Israel in hopes of them joining the Visa Waiver Program. Strategic competition with the People's Republic of China is a defining feature of the 21st century, and the United States views close cooperation with Israel on foreign investment risk management as a down payment on our security and intelligence partnership.

Third, the United States values working with a fellow democracy to oppose international institutional bias and promote human rights at home and abroad. I look forward to working with Israel to protect the freedoms of expression, association, and peaceful assembly, creating an atmosphere where all voices can be heard and highlighting efforts to advance the rights of members of vulnerable communities. Equally, we must continue to oppose all efforts to isolate and delegitimize Israel internationally. If confirmed, while respecting the rights of all Americans to free speech, I will continue the tireless work of this administration to firmly reject the Boycott, Divestment, and Sanctions movement and boycott laws which unfairly single out Israel.

Fourth, the Abraham Accords are critical to regional stability and prosperity. I will personally support every effort to expand cooperation among Israel and countries in the Arab and Muslim world, and I hope to strengthen the Abraham Accords and identify opportunities to expand Israel's relations with additional countries in the Arab and Muslim world.

While we work to support normalization between Israel and other countries, it is not a substitute for Israeli-Palestinian peace, and we seek to harness existing and future agreements to make tangible improvements for the Palestinian people with a view to preserving the vision of a negotiated two-state solution. I am committed to doing my part to rebuild the partnership between the American and Palestinian peoples.

The priorities listed above are only some of the key issues that face any diplomat serving in Israel. Frank and fruitful dialogues only strengthen our partnership and deepen the bonds between Americans and Israelis.

Before closing, I would like to thank the very talented, dedicated cadre of public servants who represent the United States faithfully both here in Washington and abroad. It goes without saying that, if I am confirmed, the safety and security of all Americans, and not just those in the Embassy, but all those in Israel and the West Bank and Gaza, is my top priority.

I am humbled and grateful to serve this country and to work to strengthen all aspects of the U.S.-Israeli partnership. Thank you for the opportunity to testify and I look forward to your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.
Mr. Cohen?

STATEMENT OF DAVID L. COHEN OF PENNSYLVANIA, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO CANADA

Mr. COHEN. Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch—

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Cohen, if you could put your microphone on.

Mr. COHEN [continuing]. Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee, I am proud and humbled to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee to serve as the United States Ambassador to Canada.

I want to thank the President for his nomination, Senators Casey and Toomey for their kind introductions, and this committee for its courtesy.

I also would like to acknowledge my wife, Rhonda, who has joined us here today. She has supported me—maybe it would be more accurate to say that she has put up with me—through 44 years of marriage. I deeply appreciate her remarkable partnership and commitment to my career.

Canada is one of our most important allies and a partner for our economic prosperity and our national security.

If confirmed, I pledge to devote my full efforts to strengthening our unique bilateral partnership. As President Biden and Prime Minister Trudeau stated this year in their roadmap for a renewed U.S.-Canada partnership, and I quote, "It is in the shared interest of the United States and Canada to revitalize and expand our historic alliance and steadfast friendship to overcome the daunting challenges of today and realize the full potential of the relationship into the future," unquote.

In navigating the confirmation process, including meetings with members of this committee, I have heard many recommendations for expanding and improving the already strong relationship between Canada and the United States.

Based on these discussions, if confirmed, some of my key priorities would be, first, preserving and growing the trade relationship between Canada and the United States, including as detailed in the USMCA.

At nearly $1.7 billion a day, Canada is our largest trading partner and the top export market for more than 30 of our states.

Second, easing border restrictions while protecting public health in both countries. As Canada and the United States share the world's longest land border with 120 ports of entry and a pre-pandemic daily rate of 400,000 people, crossing over a safe and vibrant border is important for bilateral relations, trade, tourism, and the personal and family relationships that form the bedrock of our cultures.

I understand that the impact of today's restrictions on the many communities along the border, but I also appreciate the health sensitivities and concerns that have led to the current regulations.

Third, Canada and the United States cooperatively manage multiple watersheds through complex arrangements, several of which would benefit from modernization.

A modernized Columbia River Treaty regime, for example, could enhance hydropower and flood risk management in both countries. I know that many members share this high priority.

Fourth, continue to respect and fortify the trusted and valuable alliance with Canada on multiple defense relationships, including NATO and NORAD.

We also must honor our commitments to make the necessary investments to meet those needs and, of course, our policy toward China is a key priority today.

Finally, continue to advance common priorities of our countries on the global stage on issues such as combating climate change, anti-corruption, and building more diverse and inclusive societies, including for women and girls.

My varied professional career has been rewarding and, ultimately, enhanced by leadership roles in multiple nonprofit organizations. One important theme running through my career has been the opportunities I have had to serve.

I am also proud of my success in tackling big complicated issues and in bringing people together to solve problems. I am excited by the possibility of extending my passion for service and applying my collaborative and solutions-based approach in the role of ambassador to Canada.

If confirmed, I look forward to consulting with the members of this committee as I represent the President, the Secretary of State, and this country in Canada.

It would be the ultimate honor to work alongside the 1,200 members of the United States mission in Canada and with the Canadian Government to advance our shared priorities.

Thank you for your time and consideration. I look forward to your questions.

[Prepared statement of Mr. Cohen follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF DAVID L. COHEN

Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee, I am proud and humbled to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee to serve as the United States Ambassador to Canada. I want to thank the President for his nomination and Senators Casey and Toomey—two extraordinary public servants who I have had the privilege of working closely with over many years—for their kind introductions of me, and I thank this committee for its courtesy.

I also would like to acknowledge my wife, Rhonda Cohen, who has joined us here today. She has supported me—maybe it would be more accurate to say that she has put up with me—through 44 years of marriage. I can say with absolute certainty that I simply would not be here today were it not for her remarkable partnership and commitment to my career.

Canada is one of our most important and committed allies and a partner for our economic prosperity and our national security. But I understand the significant challenges that lie ahead for both of our countries. If confirmed, I pledge to devote my full efforts to strengthening our unique bilateral partnership, to enable both countries to take advantage of our shared economic and political interests.

As President Biden and Prime Minister Trudeau stated in their Roadmap for a Renewed U.S. Canada Partnership in February of this year, "It is in the shared interest of the United States and Canada to revitalize and expand our historic alliance and steadfast friendship to overcome the daunting challenges of today and realize the full potential of the relationship into the future.”

In navigating the nomination and confirmation process, including meetings with members of this committee, I have heard many recommendations for expanding and improving the already strong relationship between Canada and the United States.

Based on these discussions, if confirmed, some key priorities for me are:

- Preserving and growing the trade relationship between Canada and the United States, including as detailed in the USMCA. At nearly $1.7 billion a day, Canada is our largest trading partner and the top export market for more than 30 of our states.
- Easing border restrictions while protecting public health in both countries. As Canada and the United States share the world’s longest land border, extending 5,525 miles, with 120 ports of entry, and a pre-pandemic daily rate of 400,000 people crossing over, a safe and vibrant border is important for bilateral relations, trade, tourism, and the personal and family relationships that form the bedrock of our cultures. I understand the impact of today’s restrictions on the many communities along the border, but also appreciate the health sensitivities and concerns that have led to the current regulations.
- Canada and the United States cooperatively manage multiple watersheds through complex arrangements, several of which would benefit from modernization. A modernized Columbia River Treaty regime, for example, could enhance hydropower, flood risk management, and ecosystems in the United States and Canada. I know that many Members share this high priority.
- Continue to respect and fortify the trusted and valuable alliance with Canada on multiple defense and foreign affairs relationships, including NATO and NORAD. We also must honor our commitments to make the necessary investments to meet current and future challenges to our collective security and preserve our ability to successfully promote peace and human rights globally.
- Continue to advance common priorities of Canada and the United States on the global stage on issues such as combating climate change, anti-corruption, energy independence, and building more diverse and inclusive societies, including for women and girls around the world.

My varied professional career has included the practice of law, government service, and a senior executive business role. That career has been rewarding, enriching, and ultimately enhanced by leadership roles in multiple nonprofit organizations. For me, one important theme running through my career has been the opportunities I have had to serve. I am proud of my success in tackling big, complicated issues, and in bringing people together to solve problems.

I am excited by the possibility of extending my passion for service and applying my collaborative and solutions-based approach in the role of United States Ambassador to Canada. If confirmed, I look forward to consulting with the members of this committee as I represent the President, the Secretary of State, and this country in Canada. It would be the ultimate honor to work alongside the 1,200 members of the U.S. Mission in Canada for our Government and with the Canadian Government to advance our shared priorities.

Thank you for your time and consideration. I look forward to your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.
Dr. Telles?

STATEMENT OF DR. CYNTHIA ANN TELLES OF CALIFORNIA, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND
PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF COSTA RICA

Ms. TELLES. Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, distinguished members of the committee, it is an honor for me to appear before you today as President Biden’s nominee to be the U.S. ambassador to Costa Rica.

I am grateful and humbled by the trust placed in me and, if confirmed, I really look forward to working with all of you to advance our nation’s interests in the region.

With your indulgence, I would like to introduce my husband, Joe Waz, and my son, Raymond Jimenez, who are here with me today. Their unequivocal love and support mean the world to me.

Also, I would like to thank my beloved parents, Raymond and Delfina Telles, who are with us in spirit. My father taught me by example that public service is a noble cause to which he dedicated his entire career, having served as the first Hispanic elected mayor of a major U.S. city in 1957 and also having served as the very first Hispanic U.S. ambassador when President Kennedy appointed him to serve in Costa Rica in 1961.

If confirmed, it would be my life's greatest honor to follow in his footsteps.

I spent several years of my youth in Costa Rica, which came to have a special place in my heart. I became very familiar with its people, its culture, and its challenges. I also was able to witness firsthand the formation of the Alliance for Progress with its great dreams of shared prosperity and democracy.

My father was able to organize a summit for President Kennedy and all the Central American presidents at the U.S. Embassy in Costa Rica. I am committed to using that experience to deepen the enduring bonds between Costa Rica and the United States and, thereby, to further our mutual interests.

The United States and Costa Rica have shared an exceptional partnership across decades, one that is based not only on mutual interests but on shared values of democracy, of good governance, of human rights. This strong partnership is critical now more than ever.

We face an unprecedented convergence of challenges in Central America: increased drug trafficking by transnational criminal organizations, economic downturn exacerbated by the pandemic, disruption to the region due to climate change, uptick in irregular migration, and also foreign influences that threaten to undermine democracy and our priorities in the region.

If confirmed, I will work closely with Costa Rica to promote our shared interests throughout the region. Costa Rica has been a strong ally in migration management and a regional leader in welcoming vulnerable migrants and providing international protection for refugees and asylum seekers.

If confirmed, I will, certainly, work to strengthen its asylum protection and temporary worker programs, and to expand its capacity in general to deal with migration, including border protection.

Very importantly, I will work with Costa Rica to address root causes of migration in the region.

The U.S. and Costa Rica collaborate closely to combat transnational crime organizations. Costa Rica is actually crucial to this shared mission, given its strategic location which positions it at the largest transshipment hub from South America to the U.S. for narcotics bound to our country.

The good news is that in 2020 Costa Rica interdicted a record 71 metric tons of narcotics, mostly cocaine, demonstrating not only its commitment and capacity but also, very importantly, the huge challenges it faces in the region.

If confirmed, I commit to strongly support Costa Rica's counter narcotics efforts in every way possible.

For decades, Costa Rica has been a champion of democracy and recently demonstrating this by calling out that Ortega-Murillo regime in Nicaragua and the Venezuelan Government to return to peaceful democracy, to hold free and fair elections, to release political prisoners, to hold people accountable for corruption.

Certainly, I will gladly support Costa Rica's efforts to promulgate our shared values in the region.

Although Costa Rica has enjoyed a relatively stable economy across time, there are recent troubling signs evidenced by high unemployment, by a large public debt, and by stress in the public health system due to COVID-19 and increased migration from Nicaragua.

In addition to the human toll that these pose, these vulnerabilities can be exploited by our adversaries and competitors. If confirmed, I commit to strengthening economic partnership with Costa Rica and to promote mutual prosperity. Importantly, I will support Costa Rica's efforts to combat the COVID-19 pandemic.

If confirmed, I look forward to leading the embassy team in San Jose where my highest priorities will be the protection of U.S. citizens and our interests. I will look forward also to seeking consultation from this committee.

Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I am happy to answer your questions.

[Prepared statement of Ms. Telles follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF DR. CYNTHIA ANN TELLES

Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, distinguished members of the committee, it is an honor to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to Costa Rica. I am grateful and humbled by the trust placed in me.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with you to advance our nation's interests.

I would like to introduce my husband, Joe Waz, and my son, Raymond Jimenez. Their invaluable support and love mean the world to me.

I would like to thank to my beloved parents, Raymond and Delfina Telles, who are with us in spirit. My father taught me by example that public service is a noble cause to which he dedicated his entire career. He served as the first Hispanic elected mayor of a major American city in 1957 and, subsequently, as the first Hispanic United States Ambassador when President Kennedy appointed him to serve in Costa Rica in 1961. If confirmed, I will be deeply honored to follow in his footsteps.

I spent several years of my youth in Costa Rica, which came to have a special place in my heart. I became very familiar with its people, its culture, and its challenges. I am committed to using that experience to enhance America's enduring bonds with Costa Rica and, thereby, to further our mutual interests.

The United States and Costa Rica have enjoyed an exceptional partnership across decades—one based, not only on mutual interests, but on shared values of democracy, good governance and human rights. This strong partnership is critical—now more than ever. We face an unprecedented convergence of challenges in Central America: increasing drug trafficking by transnational criminal organizations; disruption from climate change; economic downturn exacerbated by the pandemic; a related uptick in irregular migration; and foreign influence that threatens to undermine democracy and our priorities in the region.

In addressing these challenges, Costa Rica has been, not only a reliable partner, but an effective role model. If confirmed, I will work closely with Costa Rican people to promote our shared interests throughout the region.

Costa Rica has been a strong ally in migration management through participation in our Comprehensive Regional Solutions Framework. It has been a regional leader in welcoming vulnerable migrants and guest workers and providing international protection for refugees and asylum seekers, including more than 80,000 Nicaraguans and 30,000 Venezuelans in recent years. Through the U.S. funded Protection Transfer Agreement, Costa Rica hosts individuals with urgent protection needs from Guatemala, El Salvador and Honduras, while they undergo refugee processing for resettlement. If confirmed, I will work with the Government to help strengthen its asylum system, support temporary worker programs, expand its efforts to deal with migration and protection issues and, very importantly, to address the root causes of migration.

The United States and Costa Rica collaborate closely to combat transnational criminal organizations that move illicit drugs to the U.S. and engage in human trafficking. Costa Rica is critical to this shared mission, given its strategic location, which positions it as the largest transshipment hub for South American cocaine bound for the U.S. In 2020, Costa Rica interdicted a record 71 metric tons of narcotics, demonstrating, not only its capabilities, but also the enormous challenges it faces. If confirmed, I commit to strongly support Costa Rica's counter-narcotics efforts.

For decades, Costa Rica has been a strong champion of democracy. Recently, its Government demonstrated a commitment to pressure Nicaragua's Ortega-Murillo regime to hold fair and free elections and to release political prisoners. Costa Rica has repeatedly called for a peaceful return to democracy in Venezuela and accountability for corruption.

In addressing the climate crisis, the United States has no stronger ally in this hemisphere than the Costa Ricans with their longstanding commitment to protecting the environment, conserving biodiversity, and reducing carbon emissions, in fact, outlining a pathway toward net zero emissions by 2050. If confirmed, I look forward to partnering with them to advance these shared goals.

Although Costa Rica has enjoyed a relatively stable economy, there are recent signs of strain evidenced by high unemployment, untenable public debt, and stress on the public health system due to COVID-19 and increased migration from Nicaragua. In addition to the human toll, these vulnerabilities can be exploited by our competitors and adversaries. If confirmed, I commit to strengthening our economic relationship with Costa Rica to promote mutual prosperity. In the near term, I will support Costa Rica's efforts to fight the COVID-19 pandemic, which has greatly impacted the country, now in its fourth major surge. U.S. support to date has included a donation of half a million Pfizer vaccines.

If confirmed, I look forward to leading our Embassy team in San Jose and to working closely with you.

My highest priority will be to protect U.S. citizens and to champion our interests in cooperation with our strong partners in Costa Rica.

Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I'm happy to answer your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.

Before we start a round of five-minute questions with members, there are a series of questions we ask each nominee on behalf of the full committee and they, really, require a simple yes or no answer.

I would like to ask each question and get a verbal response from each of the nominees. These are questions that speak to the importance that this committee places on responsiveness by all officials in the executive branch and that we expect and will be seeking from you. I would ask each of you to provide just a yes or no answer.

Do you agree to appear before this committee and make officials from your office available to the committee and designated staff when invited?

[Witnesses answer in the affirmative.]

The CHAIRMAN. Do you commit to keep this committee fully and currently informed about the activities under your purview?

[Witnesses answer in the affirmative.]

The CHAIRMAN. Do you commit to engaging in meaningful consultation while policies are being developed, not just providing notification after the fact?

[Witnesses answer in the affirmative.]

The CHAIRMAN. And finally, do you commit to promptly responding to requests for briefings and information requested by the committee and its designated staff?

[Witnesses answer in the affirmative.]

The CHAIRMAN. All right. Thank you. All of the nominees have responded yes verbally.

I will recognize myself for a series of questions.

Mr. Nides, this is one of the most important relationships we have. It is long-standing, enduring, and incredibly bound by common values that we share with the people of Israel.

I think these are self-evident but I just want to make sure. You are committed to Israel's right to self-defense, are you not?

Mr. NIDES. Yes, I am.

The CHAIRMAN. Under U.S. law, there is a question of Israel's qualitative military edge. You are committed to continuing to pursue that under the law, right?

Mr. NIDES. Absolutely.

The CHAIRMAN. And do you support replenishment of the Iron Dome missile defense system—

Mr. NIDES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN [continuing]. Which has saved countless Israeli and Palestinian lives as well?

Mr. NIDES. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And you spoke to the Abraham Accords, which we all cherish that other countries have finally come together in recognizing Israel and we hope that that can be pursued even more significantly.

Those are all key elements and you have covered many other things in your opening statement.

Let me turn to Mr. Cohen. Since Canadian authorities detained the CFO of Huawei in December of 2019, China's Government has engaged in numerous forms of retaliation, including the imposition of tariffs and cutting imports of Canadian products.

However, the most egregious case is the PRC's arbitrary detention of two Canadian citizens, Michael Spavor and Michael Kovrig, as well as the seemingly political conviction of Mr. Kovrig last month. These tactics by China require the international community to respond with a united purpose. I have spoken about this quite a bit.

What steps will you take to deepen coordination with our Canadian allies and ensure that our two countries formulate a joint response to the challenges posed by China's coercive diplomacy?

Mr. COHEN. Mr. Chairman, I think the good news is that we start from a proposition, as you observed in your opening comments, where Canada and the United States share a commitment to democratic values and I think they share an abhorrence of much of the behavior of the People's Republic of China.

I think the United States has joined Canada in the condemnation of the treatment of the two Michaels. I think Canada almost seems to prefer working in multilateral ways in its foreign affairs, which sometimes may make it appear that they are less outspoken than you might otherwise think.

In the case of the two Michaels and arbitrary detention, they have been very outspoken and the United States has been very supportive. I think we are all waiting for Canada to release its framework for its overall China policy, and I think as ambassador, if I am confirmed, it is an appropriate role to be engaged in discussions and make sure that Canada's policies reflect its words in terms of the treatment of China, and that we do improve the collaboration and coordination between our two countries in taking on the existential threat that is China politically, economically, diplomatically, et cetera.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

The Congress, as a whole, which is a rarity these days, but in a bipartisan way put out legislation, including legislation from this committee that became part of the overarching legislation on China, recognizing China as our most significant geostrategic challenge in the world. Our allies are going to be incredibly important to this.

You and I had an opportunity to speak yesterday. I appreciate you coming by the office.

I hope also upon your confirmation you can work with our Canadian partners, who we have a great deal of respect for. We honor the service and the sacrifices that they have made alongside of us in Afghanistan and other places as a NATO ally.

But I would hope that they would be more forthcoming on democracy and human rights issues in the hemisphere. They are a key hemispheric partner. They sit in the OAS with us.

And yet, I get disappointed at times when, for example, the Canadians do not join us, for example, on human rights and democracy in Cuba. It is pretty amazing to me.

I understand Canadians have economic interests in Cuba, but those should not overcome the human rights and democracy issue. It is something I hope you will work on upon your confirmation.

Dr. Telles, you mentioned Costa Rica and some of the challenges that it has now in COVID and some of the economic impacts on it. How do you think we can work together? What would be some of your top priorities to work with Costa Rica to help it meet these present challenges so it can continue to be what it has been on both refugees, democracy, a stalwart in the hemisphere?

Ms. TELLES. Chairman, thank you for your question. Very timely and relevant at this point.

And, certainly, as you mentioned, COVID-19 has had a significant impact on the economic circumstance in Costa Rica as it has throughout the region and also globally.

One of the things that I would hope to do is to assist the Government in addressing the issues right now which are currently plaguing it, including high unemployment, also issues related to increasing public debt and also the strain that COVID-19 has placed on its health system.

And I would also suggest in dealing with these shorter-term issues that may require some financial assistance that we look to supporting Costa Rica and it's kind of a long-term economic resilience. And that would, certainly, mean to kind of strengthening our economic partnership with Costa Rica through trade and investment.

I would, certainly, reach out very proactively to American businesses to consider investing in Costa Rica, which has a very favorable business climate.

Additionally, I think that in terms of the longer-term resilience issues it will be important for Costa Rica to continue down the path it has begun already through its accession to the Organization of Economic Development and Cooperation, which has, certainly, suggested certain reforms—economic and governmental reforms—which they are embarking on.

I believe that we also need to get the assistance of multinational organizations as well as international financial institutions to assist with long-term recovery.

In terms of your question about refugees, as you know, as I mentioned, Costa Rica has been an incredible partner, a regional leader, in terms of providing protection for refugees and asylum seekers.

And just very recently it, actually, has provided a home as it welcomed refugees from Nicaragua, in the last three years probably about 100,000 and from Venezuela close to 40,000 in the last—it just varies in terms.

I believe—and even though they are very willing and welcoming, it has, certainly, strained to some extent its public health system and its infrastructure.

I think that we need to look at some additional humanitarian assistance to Costa Rica and also to figure out how we can expand its capacity to receive migrants by supporting its temporary worker programs, its asylum protection programs also.

Again, I look forward, if confirmed, to working with the Government of Costa Rica to address these issues.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Risch?

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And let me let start with Mr. Nides. First of all, thank you for your enthusiastic condemnation of the despicable and anti-Semitic Boycott, Divestment, and Sanctions movement. I really appreciate your enthusiasm for that position, which I share and many others share.

We have another member on the next panel who, I think, has less enthusiasm for that. But we are going to test that when we get there.

I also want to acknowledge your enthusiastic support for the Abraham Accords. That is the most enthusiasm I have heard from anyone from this administration regarding the Abraham Accords, even though almost everyone agrees that this was one of the most significant steps that has happened in the Middle East in decades.

I appreciate that and I also appreciate your personal commitments to expand the Abraham Accords where possible. That is a game changer in that region. Certainly, the more relations that the countries have with each other in the region is good for them and it is good for the world. Thank you for that.

The Palestinian issue that I am most concerned with is the “pay for slay” program, which I assume you are familiar with, and I would ask your thoughts on that, please.

Mr. NIDES. Senator, thank you very much, and I share your concern about this abhorrent behavior as it relates to the “pay for slay.” Obviously, legislation was passed the Taylor Force Act, which, we are quite focused on, and if I am fortunate enough to get confirmed, I have every intention of working with the Palestinians to try to get progress on this.

But I do not think there is anyone in this administration that would disagree with you about what has happened there, and we need to work to get it resolved.

Senator RISCH. I appreciate that. I was one of the primary sponsors on Taylor Force. I had hoped that it had been more successful than it has been.

But if it is followed closely, it certainly makes inroads in that and I, along with others, are criticized sometimes because we are tough on the Palestinians and particularly when you are talking about money flowing to them because of the corruption and the way that the terrorists have a way of siphoning money from our money that is going there to help people in the country.

I think this is something that really deserves our continued attention and I am, certainly, going to be tough and I think everybody is going to be tough on this “pay for slay” program, and I hope you will enthusiastically join us as we continue that battle. Thank you.

Turning to Mr. Cohen, thank you so much for taking the time to meet with me on the issues with Canada. I, certainly, wish we had the same relationship with all countries.

Like the Chairman, I am not completely satisfied with their view on everything. But that is not unusual. There is virtually no country that we are in complete concurrence with.

Two of the real important issues for me are the Columbia River Treaty. It is important to all of us on a bipartisan basis who serve from the Pacific Northwest.

Senator Cantwell and I have been the two leading people on the negotiations that are going on. She is a very good partner in that regard. We are in complete agreement on where we need to go with this.

We talked about the heavy lift that it is and I know you are ready for that challenge, and we expect to continue that as it is going and we look forward to your help in that regard.

On the second issue, and that is the opening of the northern border, we share—my state shares a border with Canada and we are very painfully and personally aware of the cost of this closing.

I appreciate your commitment to work on getting that open as quickly as we can.

For Ms. Telles, the Costa Ricans switched their diplomatic relations from Taiwan to the PRC in 2007, and ever since then we have seen the slow creep of Chinese influence in that country.

Could I have your thoughts on that?

Ms. TELLES. Absolutely. Thank you for your question, Ranking Member Risch.

It is something of great concern, quite frankly. China has sought for some years now to expand its sphere of influence, politically and economically, and it would love nothing better than to have a beachhead in Costa Rica.

And in recent years, in the last few years or so, these efforts have become much more aggressive. Whether it is through promises of investment and trade or public diplomacy, they built them some time ago, as you know, a stadium and a police academy, but there are more recent offers of a similar nature.

Additionally, they attempted vaccine diplomacy. It did not work at this point, and they are now very interested, very aggressively, actually, pushing, trying to further infiltrate the Costa Rican telecommunications system through the sale at very good terms of their equipment for cellular phones.

I would say that I think the biggest, I think, or the most important strategy here would be, really, to strengthen our economic relationship with Costa Rica in terms of trade and foreign direct investment, and as I mentioned, I really want to urge the American companies to really invest in Costa Rica.

That, I think, will be probably one of the biggest leverages that we will have over time. Right now, we are their top trading partner and the largest contributor to foreign direct investment. I would want to preserve that and expand that.

But also, very importantly, I think it would be important, certainly, to urge the Costa Ricans to be mindful of our shared values of democracy and human rights, and also to encourage them when entering into contracts and list agreements to prioritize trusted partners and entities that will not compromise their long-term security.

But I am confident that in working with Costa Rica—it has been a great partner over many years—that we can achieve these goals.

Senator RISCH. Thank you. I appreciate that clear-eyed view. Your reference to the relatively small amount of money that China spends in these countries gets them tremendous leverage at times, whether it is here, whether it is in the Small Pacific nations. We have seen that over and over again.

I appreciate your attention to that and we will all be watching it. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. I understand Senator Cardin is with us virtually.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and let me start by thanking all of our nominees for their willingness to serve our country. We thank you. We thank your families.

These are critically important positions for the United States and we thank you for being willing to step up in this responsibility.

Mr. Nides, let me start with you. Thank you for the opportunity that we had to chat. I know your record over many, many years and I know your strong support for the importance of the U.S.-Israel relations.

We have already covered the issue about Israel's right to defend itself. We have already covered the partnership with the United States under a Memorandum of Understanding and the replenishment of the Iron Dome funds, and we have covered also the dangerous efforts that are made to isolate Israel through the BDS movement.

I want to talk in a positive note. We recognize that the need for peace between the Palestinians and the Israelis, that is in the interest of both Palestinians, Israelis, and the United States and the region for security.

There have been many opportunities in the past where we came close but we were not able to complete the negotiations. It seems to me that we have two things at this moment that give signs of encouragement. We have already talked about one, the Abraham Accords, with countries normalizing their relations with Israel, and, as you point out, additional countries that are candidates for the Abraham Accords.

And we also have a broad coalition government in Israel right now that gives us maybe the political opportunity within Israel to be more aggressive on peace. We recognize the challenges among the Palestinians and their leadership.

But could you just share with us your thoughts as to whether this might be the right time to pursue peace between the Palestinians and Israelis?

Mr. NIDES. Senator Cardin, thank you for your question.

I think as President Biden said, I think, yesterday at the U.N. there is a view that a two-state solution, clearly, is a goal to try to attempt to achieve. I do not think any one of us believe that that is achievable in the next couple of weeks.

But I do believe that we need, as a government, to continue to create the pathway to achieve that and I think we are doing that through a variety of ways. One, talking about the importance of a two-state solution. Number two, adding to the assistance to the Palestinian people.

I think there is $400 million of assistance for the Palestinian people through a variety of programs to send a strong message to the Palestinian people and to encourage both the Palestinians and the Israelis not to take unilateral action that will make the path towards a two-state solution impossible.

I, obviously, believe that Prime Minister Bennett's visit here was a successful one. I think the relationship between the prime minister and the foreign minister with the Biden administration is strong.

I hope that relationship will continue to grow as we and, hopefully, when I have the opportunity potentially to be confirmed I will reach out to the Palestinian people to continue to send the message that we not only care, we believe in the importance of the same freedom and security and prosperity that the Israelis want to achieve.

Senator, I am, generally, an optimist. You would not take these jobs if you were not. I am also a realist. But I hope we are beginning the process to create the environment for that to happen.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you for that response.

Mr. Cohen, let me just ask quickly a question in regards to U.S.-Canadian relations. We know it is our closest ally from the point of view of regional. A great relationship between our two countries.

But I think we have to recognize that there is damage that has been done. The Canadian Globe and Mail reported on July 22nd that, and I quote, "The political discord in the United States remains dangerously deep."

And although Canada-U.S. relations are improving now that Donald Trump is no longer President, it will be a long time before things return to normal, if they ever do.

Now, I do not want to rehash what happened over the past four years. But I do want to just emphasize the fact, and we talk to Canadians all the time, there has been damage done in our relationship.

What is your strategy in order to strengthen the ties as far as the feelings among the people in Canada and the United States towards each other?

Mr. COHEN. Senator, I agree with the premise of your question quite strongly, and I think that it plays to one of my strengths over the course of my career.

I am going to start with the simplest thing. I am going to show up. I am going to be there. I am going to reach out.

One of the outcomes of the election on Monday is there are going to be a number of new cabinet ministers and I want to make sure that I try to create a relationship and a communication channel with the Government and make it clear that I am there to listen. I am there to, obviously, represent the United States interests, that I am there to be communicative and two ways communicative, to communicate our desires and our positions, for example, on issues like China, as the Chairman raised.

But I am also there to listen to Canadian concerns and to bring them back and to make sure that I create a reality that the United States cares about Canada as a strong ally, cares about what they think, and wants to be a true partner in trade and diplomacy, in defense, in energy and climate change, in all of the issues that we share values on and that we work closely together.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

The next available member is Senator Coons.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Chairman Menendez, and thank you to all three of our nominees today. Thank you for your willingness to continue to support our nation and to serve overseas and for your families, who are with you today.

It is my honor to work with you and to question you today, and I intend to support your confirmation before the Senate of the United States and to welcome and express my appreciation, Max, to you—Rhonda, it is great to see you again—to Joe and to Raymond.

All of us are able to sustain our careers in service because of the support of our families. Thank you for that.

If I might, Mr. Nides, I join many others in saying the Abraham Accords enjoy bipartisan support. I look forward to partnering with you and figuring out how we can more fully implement them.

As the Chairman of the State and Foreign Operations Subcommittee, I am committed to working with you on ensuring Israel's security and the continued strengthening of that long, deep, and important partnership.

I want to ask you about a specific program that was funded, the Nita Lowey Middle East Partnership for Peace Act. It has $250 million over five years to support venture capital investment in the West Bank and people-to-people programs.

Are you familiar with this? How do you think it might contribute to the very difficult work of developing an environment for partnership and for peace?

Mr. NIDES. Thank you very much, Senator, for the question.

Yes, I am quite knowledgeable about this and I congratulate the Congress for doing this program in a bipartisan way with your leadership and many of the Republicans who signed on for this legislation.

I happen to have gone out to see former Congresswoman Lowey in Westchester a few weeks ago to talk to her specifically about the program. The program, as you know, is a $250 million program over a five-year period of time that marries both the DFC and USAID to do exactly what needs to be done, which is not only people-to-people growth but, more importantly, trying to use these monies to improve both the Palestinian and Israeli relationships.

Congresswoman Lowey, someone who I have known for a long time, it was an honor for her, clearly, but shows the importance of her commitment to the U.S.-Israel-Palestinian two-state solution idea and for us to focus on that.

I am quite familiar with it. I have already had some preliminary discussions with folks as I got briefed up on it. But I think it has got an enormous amount of potential and I look forward to working with you as we implement programs if I am fortunate enough to get confirmed.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Tom.

Mr. Cohen, it is great to see you before us and to be with you again, and I think you will serve as an excellent ambassador to address some of the issues Senator Cardin just raised.

Senator Udall and I actually were part of a bipartisan delegation that went to Latvia a number of years ago where we visited with a Canadian battalion that was helping lead NATO security presence in that Baltic country. Just one of many reminders of the ways in which Canada is not just a critical trade partner, not just a critical values partner, but is a real security partner.

How will you work with Canada to advance our shared security goals through NATO, through NORAD, through their vital work in peacekeeping and other partnerships that are essential to our security?

Mr. COHEN. Again, I think I will have the advantage of starting with the foundation of a long-term friendship and partnership.

There isn't any resistance to the importance of Canada and the United States working together on defense arrangements, including the ones that you have identified.

But as the Chairman pointed out in one of his questions, there is always room for improvement. Let me put it that way. When I look at the side of our relationships about benefit sharing and about making sure that we are all investing appropriately in these defense partnerships, in NORAD, Canada has not appropriated the sum of money that is necessary to fund the modernization and improvement of NORAD that we have agreed to conceptually.

And although the percentage of the Canadian defense budget is creeping upwards, it is only at about 1½ percent and it is projected to drop to as low as 1 percent over the next decade or so.

I think that is an opportunity for dialogue. It is an opportunity for conversation. It is an opportunity to say if we really believe in the importance of NATO, if we really believe in the importance of NORAD, we have to invest appropriately to make sure that we can deliver on the defense benefits to both of our countries and to the free world.

Senator COONS. Thank you.

And if I might, Dr. Telles, just a question to follow up on your previous exchange about foreign direct investment.

I was very encouraged to see Intel's announcement in July that they will invest $600 million in a long-idled semiconductor microchip plant in Costa Rica.

How can partners like Costa Rica help partner with us to support the near shoring of critical technologies as we look to develop supply chains that are more robust and independent?

Ms. TELLES. That is an excellent question, Senator, and I do think that that Costa Rica could play a very important role in partnering with us in this respect.

As you know, they have a relatively well-educated well-trained workforce. They also offer a very positive business environment, open economy, relatively low levels of corruption and such.

And so given that they have already—as you know, one of their main exports is medical equipment, but aside from that they have a capacity to engage in broader production, and I do believe that we could certainly encourage this particular partnership even further.

Senator COONS. Thank you, and I look forward to working with you to support and strengthen the ability of the Costa Rican people to both welcome refugees and to be a wonderful development and security partner with the United States.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

I understand that Senator Young is with us virtually.

Senator YOUNG. Yes, Chairman. Thank you, sir.

Mr. Nides, Prime Minister Naftali Bennett has made it clear that his government opposes the Biden administration's efforts to revive the Iran deal, and they would ensure Israel has the ability to go it alone in securing itself from Iranian terror.

I do not necessarily doubt your commitment to the U.S.-Israel relationship, especially having visited with you, sir. But this administration seems intent on pursuing certain policies that, I believe, will only undermine it.

Mr. Nides, how can an administration that claims to be unequivocal about Israel's security continue to press for revival of a deal with Iran that Israel's own government opposes due to the security risks that it presents?

Mr. NIDES. Senator, thank you for the question, as you and I discussed in your office.

I will make two points. One is, as you know, the President has been quite clear that he is attempting to use diplomacy to resolve the Iran nuclear situation. He has also made it clear, as Secretary

Blinken has, that he will not stand by to allow the Iranians to obtain a nuclear weapon.

Obviously, I am not a party, since I have not been confirmed, to the level of negotiations, but those are the binding facts of this relationship and the position of this administration.

Senator YOUNG. If you believe the JCPOA, sir, does enhance Israel's security—let us just take that as a premise because you would almost have to in order to reconcile the commitment to U.S.-Israel relationship and their intent on making sure that Israel can defend itself with this JCPOA negotiation.

Let us just assume the JCPOA enhances Israel's security. How do you square that with Israel's opposition to the agreement and the prime minister's commitment to do whatever is necessary to secure the people of Israel?

Mr. NIDES. Again, Senator, I am not, obviously, currently involved in the discussions and negotiations, obviously, with Israel or the conversations going on in Vienna.

I will only say that I think the President has been quite clear both in his statements yesterday at the U.N. and the public statements that he and the Secretary of State have said, is obviously they want to, if possible, use diplomacy to resolve the situation.

And I think, as this process plays out, and if I am fortunate enough to be confirmed, obviously, I will be more informed about the details of that. But that is, certainly, the policy of the administration and I do believe that there are ongoing communications between the Israeli Government and the American Government as it relates to whatever discussions are going on around the diplomatic channel and non-diplomatic channel through the conversations among the parties.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, Mr. Nides.

Mr. Cohen, the United States and Canada are close trade partners, especially evident in the symbiotic relationship between my state of Indiana and the Canadians.

As a leader in the automotive industry, Indiana exports over $7 billion in motor vehicles and motor vehicle parts to Canada. Canada is also Indiana's largest export destination, followed by Mexico, according to 2019 statistics.

It is safe to say that we rely on access to partners in Canada in order to export products all across the globe and keep our industries humming, and that access was solidified by the landmark USMCA agreement.

As ambassador, Mr. Cohen, how will you work to mitigate supply chain disruptions that business continuously faces as they emerge from the pandemic, and do you see value in diverting supply chains out of China and closer to U.S. soil?

Mr. COHEN. Good morning, Senator. Good to see you.

I think the problem you have put your finger on is something I alluded to in my opening statement, which is the pandemic has, clearly, been disruptive to supply chains and the limitations on travel have complicated things.

I think, in the automotive world, by the way, we are working through the processes of USMCA to try and deal with some of the automobile industry issues that were—frankly, were one of the reasons for USMCA being passed.

If I am confirmed, though, I think this is another case where my role as ambassador is to help encourage these types of discussions and, obviously, anytime we can divert supply chains to our hemisphere as opposed to China is an economic benefit to the hemisphere and to the United States.

And to the extent that we can accomplish that, I think that is good policy for the United States and for Canada.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you. I am out of time. I appreciate your desire to serve, all of you.

Senator SCHATZ. [Presiding.] Thank you, Senator Young.

Mr. NIDES, in my view, we have a moral obligation to help the Palestinians that are suffering, and I understand that there are those who do not share that view.

But could you talk about why U.S. humanitarian assistance to the Palestinians is not just morally right but good for us and for the Israelis and serves the long-term interests of a two-state solution?

Mr. NIDES. Senator, thank you very much, and I wholeheartedly agree with that.

The moneys going to the Palestinians are going to the Palestinian people, and making life better for the Palestinian people has been a bipartisan issue. It has not just been a Democratic issue.

For many years, this committee and the appropriators have appropriated money for the Palestinian people from everything from water to education to health care.

I think it makes our national security interests because that is who we are as a country. I think it helps the Israelis by keeping things calm not only in the West Bank, which I think is important for the security, and I think it is important for us if we believe, ultimately, that the solution is a two-state solution it provides them an opportunity and a guide path for that.

I am in complete concurrence and I think it is important with all the caveats that we all understand and all the rules which are in place, but giving assistance to the Palestinian people—not to the Palestinian Authority, but to the Palestinian people—is in our national security best interests, and I think and I believe that also in Israel's national security interest as well.

Senator SCHATZ. Can you flesh out that last part for us? Can you talk about the work that the U.S. Government and the NGO community does to make sure that our assistance goes to support the needs of the Palestinian people and what guard rails we will have in place to ensure that the U.S. funding does not get diverted from a humanitarian mission?

Mr. NIDES. Sir, I think we are using our trusted partners. The auditing that goes on through USAID and our other development partners is focused on that.

We are very aware and very focused on the Taylor Force Act. Those monies will be to the Palestinian people. These are programs that help healthcare, education, water purification, a variety of programs, and I believe, if I am fortunate enough to get confirmed to speak for USAID, but I know they are very much focused on how those monies are being spent and all the guard rails that are put up in conjunction with the laws and regulations that are in place.

Senator SCHATZ. I will submit this question for the record because I want to get to Mr. Cohen.

But I do want to ask you about the potential for clean energy partnerships between the United States and Israel.

Mr. Cohen, the Canadian Government passed a law this summer ratifying its commitment to clean energy by the year 2050. It still has a lot of work to do. Everybody has a lot of work to do to flesh out its plan and put funding behind it.

But we do need this kind of ambition and commitment from our allies if we are going to combat the climate crisis. Can you talk about how we can make climate action more of a main part of our bilateral relationship with Canada?

Mr. COHEN. Good morning, Senator. Good to see you.

And I think the premise of your question provides some of the answer. When we deal with Canada, we are dealing with a friend that shares our values and that includes around climate issues.

You have the legislation. You also have Prime Minister Trudeau's federal carbon pricing, which was layered on top of that legislation and which was just upheld by the Canadian Supreme Court. You have got real action being taken by Canada.

I think the best ways to align is better coordination and continued communication. We have got two current examples of that. One is the roadmap that I referenced in my opening statement, which identifies climate and fighting climate change as one of the priorities of Canada and the United States working together. That is a statement from the highest levels of both governments, the president and the prime minister.

And the second thing I would point to is the recent convening that Climate Secretary Kerry had with Canada and promised a periodic high-level convening around climate change-related issues to keep the two countries aligned and to keep this issue front of mind.

I mean, I think that both are consistent with my sense that we need coordination, communication, at the highest levels of our governments.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you very much, and thanks to all of you for your willingness to serve.

Senator Barrasso?

Senator BARRASSO. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Nides, congratulations on your nomination. I just had a chance to talk with Senator Klobuchar, who gave you such a nice introduction, and congratulations.

I want to talk about Iron Dome. The U.S.-Israel relationship has long been the cornerstone of America's strategy in the Middle East. Israel constantly faces terrorist attacks. We have seen it again recently, threats including the rocket attacks by Hamas in Gaza, attacks from Iranian-backed groups in Lebanon and Syria.

Iron Dome is the first line of defense for Israel. In May, Israel faced over 4,000 rockets and attacks by the Iranian-backed terrorist group Hamas. The Iron Dome system intercepted more than 90 percent in terms of being effective in intercepting the rockets threatening civilians and critical infrastructure. It saved lives.

Yet, what we just saw is the House Democrats removed funding for the Iron Dome that had been included in their Continuing Resolution funding bill. This just happened within the last day.

Do you support funding to replenish the Iron Dome defense system?

Mr. NIDES. Absolutely.

Senator BARRASSO. And how important is continued U.S.-Israel cooperation on the Iron Dome and other cooperative defense programs?

Mr. NIDES. Very.

Senator BARRASSO. In terms of Jerusalem, is Jerusalem the capital of Israel?

Mr. NIDES. Yes.

Senator BARRASSO. Do you believe it should be the permanent place of the U.S. Embassy in Israel?

Mr. NIDES. Yes.

Senator BARRASSO. In 2019, the United States formally recognized Israel's sovereignty over the Golan Heights. Do you view the Golan Heights as part of Israel?

Mr. NIDES. We support the current position vis-a-vis the threats that we have in Syria with Assad and it is a strategically very important strategic position for the Israelis.

Senator BARRASSO. In 2018, Congress passed into law the Taylor Force Act. It prohibits U.S. economic assistance that directly benefits the Palestinian Authority as long as the Palestinian Authority continues to pay financial rewards for terrorism.

I know Senator Risch talked about the importance of this issue a little earlier in this hearing. Does the Palestinian Authority continue to subsidize and pay financial reward to terrorists?

Mr. NIDES. I believe they have not stopped these payments.

Senator BARRASSO. If confirmed, are you fully committed to stopping the terror incentive payments by the Palestinian Authority?

Mr. NIDES. If I am confirmed, absolutely will work to achieve that goal.

Senator BARRASSO. There is a new Palestinian Authority law that, effectively, nationalized all what were once independent civil society groups. These groups need to now submit plans and budgets to the Palestinian Authority to review their conformity with the, quote, "work plan of the relevant ministry."

The law also gives the Palestinian Authority power to dissolve any organization and then seize or transfer its assets to a similar Palestinian association or institution.

You look at that, the way that they are going to do this, looking at this and saying would you support the United States providing taxpayer resources to these organizations if they can be seized by the resources can be seized by the Palestinian Authority, which the United States is legally prohibited from funding directly?

Mr. NIDES. Senator, I am not totally aware of exactly the program you are speaking of but, clearly, the Taylor Force Act is the law of the land and, obviously, we will abide by any laws, obviously, on the books.

On that particular one, I am not particularly aware of that piece of—or that Palestinian legislation or whatever law that may be in place. But I will, certainly, look into it.

Senator BARRASSO. I appreciate your willingness to look into it. Israel continues to face direct threats from Iran and its terrorist proxies. The administration's budget request includes $3.8 billion in U.S. security assistance to Israel.

President Biden has clearly stated, "I am not going to place conditions for the security assistance given the serious threats that Israel is facing, and this would be, I think, irresponsible."

Do you oppose placing conditions on U.S. security assistance to Israel?

Mr. NIDES. Yes, sir.

Senator BARRASSO. And how would reducing or conditioning security assistance to Israel hurt Israel's ability to defend itself from threats?

Mr. NIDES. The reality is the administration does not support conditionality on the assistance and, as you know, we are at a $38 billion tenure MOU, and the position of the administration is we do not support conditionality.

Senator BARRASSO. Last week marked the one-year anniversary of the Abraham Accords, the historic diplomatic U.S.-brokered agreements between Israel and several of the Arab neighbors.

The Trump administration helped negotiate several historic developments between Israel, its regional Arab neighbors—the UAE, Bahrain, Morocco, and Sudan. They joined Egypt and Jordan in establishing relationships diplomatically with Israel.

These agreements have created a path to peace through recognition and engagement rather than isolation and boycotts of Israel.

Israel's foreign minister recently said the Abraham Accords club is open to new members as well. Secretary Blinken pledged the administration will continue to build on the successful efforts of the last administration to keep normalization marching forward.

As the ambassador, what role would you play in fostering peace with Israel in the Arab world?

Mr. NIDES. Senator, as I said in my opening statement, I am quite focused on the Abraham Accords. I think they are good for Israel. If my North Star is a democratic Jewish state, I think this makes it stronger.

Obviously, my hope is that as we operationalize the current Abraham Accords countries and then expand it, it will also benefit the Palestinians as well. I think, obviously, it is something that is good for Israel. It is, certainly, good for the United States' national security interests, and we would love to, at the time, make sure it is also good for the Palestinians as well.

But I will work closely with the implementation, work to strive to get the new additional countries into the Abraham Accords, and I look forward to working with you on that.

Senator BARRASSO. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator SCHATZ. Senator Kaine?

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair, and congratulations to the witnesses. What a great panel.

I am fortunate to have two friends on this panel, Tom Nides and David Cohen, and Dr. Telles, while we do not know each other enough for me to call you a friend, your husband, Joe, is a friend.

I am an admirer of yours, but a friend of your husband. What a good panel. I am really excited to be with you.

I have two questions. Sometimes I ask questions to make a point, but these are questions because they are things I am puzzled about. One is for you, Mr. Nides, and one is for you, Dr. Telles.

Mr. Nides, your opening testimony talks about long-time U.S. policy dating back to President Truman supporting two-state, a peaceful Israel, peaceful Palestine living side by side, and that has always been my thought about the best outcome there.

But I will say, I have been to Israel and Palestine now probably more than any other country in the world—I do not consider myself an expert but I have been a lot—I look for evidence that Israeli or Palestinian leadership want a two-state solution and I am not sure I see it.

I do not necessarily see it in the current government of Israel that they really want a two-state solution. And when I am talking to Palestinian leadership, they sort of suggest that they want it but I do not see a capacity to carry it out.

And when I talk to just everyday people, I often hear two-state, one-state, that is for politicians. On the Palestinian side, what I often hear is, we just want equal rights to water and to voting—equal rights.

I detect a troubling lack of interest in the two-state solution in Israel and Palestine, and it makes me wonder whether the U.S. can have a policy for a nation that it does not necessarily have for itself.

My question to you is what evidence is there right now that Israeli or Palestinian leadership want a two-state solution?

Mr. NIDES. Sir, it is a great question, obviously. We can only control what we can control and, in our view—this is the United States' position and this administration's position—is to set the table, keeping the parties not doing unilateral action that makes that impossible to achieve and we do that by a variety of things: assistance to the Palestinians, clear support to Israel for their own defense, the MOU, providing opportunities on the Abraham Accords, making sure that we articulate to the Palestinians that we care about their freedom and their prosperity and their security.

We, as the United States, can only set the table, potentially giving us the opportunity to achieve it at some point, as the President has articulated.

I cannot, obviously, speak for the Israelis or, obviously, the Palestinians. But, hopefully, if I am confirmed, I can speak for the United States and we will at least not to exasperate and divide but encourage the parties coming together.

Senator Kaine. I think that is about as good an answer as anyone could give, because I am just not sure there is a lot of evidence out there right now.

We should do what we can to, hopefully, create opportunities for progress. But it really troubles me, and we are in the midst of a painful analysis right now of the last chapter of U.S. military involvement in Afghanistan, and one of the questions we are having to ask ourselves is did we want something, a set of things, for Afghanistan that the Afghan leaders did not want for themselves, and we have to be humble in asking that question and getting to the bottom of it.

Dr. Telles, here is my question for you. I lived in Honduras for a while, and when I lived in Honduras in 1980 and '81, Costa Rica was sort of a real island of stability and a very tough Honduras was a military dictatorship. There was a Contra war going on against the Government of Nicaragua, Guatemala and El Salvador in the midst of brutal civil wars.

Why has not Costa Rica's success had a little positive infection throughout the Americas? It has always puzzled me that they have been able, and thank God, they have been able to be—they have got challenges, too—but an island of stability.

But that was 40 years ago that I was in Central America. Honduras is not a military dictatorship now but it is equally troubled, maybe more violent and killing of journalists and activists.

What is it about Costa Rica that enables it to be successful? Why has not that model been attractive to its neighbors?

Ms. TELLES. Thank you for your question, Senator, and also I appreciate your interest in Central America, knowing that you lived there for a bit and were involved in humanitarian efforts.

It is a very good question. It is a fact that Costa Rica has really enjoyed a stable democracy and a relatively prosperous economy over the years, and it could be a part of its roots go back to 1949 when, after almost a year of civil strife a constitution was adopted that really emphasized democracy but also, importantly, I think, took certain actions to invest in the people of Costa Rica.

They eliminated their army and they put most of their resources into public health and into education, and I think that that went a long way, I think, towards helping to create a middle class, helping to stabilize its long-term interests.

Why has that not been exported successfully to other countries? That is a very good question. If you look at some of the history of Central America, some instability has been related to military actions which have engaged in coups and also repression of the people. And so that is just one simple answer.

But I do hope that Costa Rica can increasingly through its leadership in the Central American region and its recent presidency, actually, of the Central American Integration System will continue to promulgate our shared values of democracy and human rights, which are very necessary right now in Central America.

Senator KAINE. I am well over my time, but I really appreciate both of you for offering good insights into two very tough questions.

Thank you, Mr. Chair. I yield back.

Senator SCHATZ. Senator Hagerty?

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And to each of you, I want to congratulate you on your nominations. It is a tremendous honor to be nominated to represent your nation in this way and I wish you the best as you move through the hearings process.

I would like to start with an area that is of particular strategic concern, although all of your countries are terribly important—the countries that you are hoping to represent the United States to—but that is Israel.

And Mr. Nides, I wanted to reach out to you. Earlier this year on a 97 to 3 vote, an amendment that I co-authored with Senator Jim Inhofe was passed to ensure that Jerusalem continues to be recognized by the United States as the capital of Israel.

That is pursuant to the Jerusalem Embassy Act of 1995. The Jerusalem Embassy Act of 1995 codified U.S. policy, first, ensuring that Jerusalem would be the capital of Israel and that Jerusalem should remain an undivided city.

Mr. Nides, as nominee to be our ambassador to Israel, do you support the Jerusalem Act of 1995 and, in particular, do you agree that Jerusalem should continue to be recognized as the capital of the State of Israel by the United States, that Jerusalem should remain an undivided city, and that the United States should maintain its embassy to Israel in Jerusalem?

Mr. NIDES. Senator, thank you for your question, and the answer is yes. The capital of Israel is Jerusalem. The embassy is in Jerusalem. If I am confirmed, I will be living in Jerusalem. Obviously, that is something that I will be looking forward to.

Obviously, at a certain point, if there is a negotiation between the Palestinians and the Israelis as it relates to a final status, long from now, that will be up to the parties. But from the United States' perspective, Jerusalem is the capital of Israel.

Senator HAGERTY. With respect to the Palestinian negotiations, I would like to probe further on that.

Mr. NIDES. Please.

Senator HAGERTY. Prime Minister Naftali Bennett recently visited here, met with our president.

President Biden told him, told Prime Minister Bennett that he intends to open a U.S. consulate for Palestine in Jerusalem. Prime Minister Bennett's response was not positive to that. In fact, he indicated publicly his opposition to President Biden's proposal.

Foreign Minister Lapid called Biden's proposal a bad idea. Indeed, the U.S. embassy currently has a Palestinian affairs unit at Agron. I visited that facility in June of this year.

If the U.S. Government were to open and maintain an embassy, a consulate, a legation, some type of function like that, some type of diplomatic facility in Jerusalem besides the one that exists inside the U.S. embassy to the State of Israel, do you think that that course of action is consistent with the Jerusalem Embassy Act of 1995?

Do you think that that supports the philosophy of that law that Jerusalem is the undivided capital of the State of Israel?

Mr. NIDES. Senator, yes, I do. I, fundamentally, believe that Jerusalem is the capital of Israel. The embassy will be in Jerusalem. As you know, the issue around the consulate, that consulate has existed in one form or another for almost 130 years in one form or another.

Obviously, the opening of the consulate if it occurs—and as you know, the President has indicated, as well as the Secretary, that we would like to open the consulate—it will have no impact upon the capital of Israel being Jerusalem.

This is something, obviously, if I am fortunate enough to be confirmed I will be, obviously, addressing but, obviously, taking my direction from the President and the Secretary of State.

Senator HAGERTY. I appreciate the position you are in. I just hope that we take into account the position of our ally, Israel, our strongest ally in the Middle East, and their concerns, I think, are very relevant and pertinent to this discussion.

I would like to turn to another point, very quickly, and that is yesterday the House decided to remove funding to resupply and replenish the Iron Dome rocket defense system.

I was very disappointed to see it. I am also happy that Leader McConnell and Appropriations Committee Vice Chairman Shelby are proposing a Continuing Resolution that will include a billion dollars to replenish the Iron Dome.

In fact, earlier this year, I introduced the Emergency Resupply for the Iron Dome Act of 2021 to immediately resupply the Iron Dome. I did that along with our colleagues, Senator Cruz and Rubio, here.

I also visited Israel with Senator Cruz immediately after the 11-day war. I saw the benefit of having a technology like that that saved both Israeli and Palestinian lives.

And I want to ask you if you agree that that defensive capability that we provided through the Iron Dome is actually a benefit to our relationship with Israel and to their position there?

Mr. NIDES. Absolutely. Senator, I will make just one quick point.

Number one, the President has been very clear that he supports the replenishment of the Iron Dome.

Number two, obviously, it is in our national security interest to support a very, very important ally in the region, and this is a defensive mechanism. It is to stop rockets from raining in on Israel.

We are supportive of the replenishment and it is in our national security interest, and it is our desire and hope that those funds will be provided to replenish the Iron Dome.

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you. I am very pleased to hear that position. Thanks very much.

Senator SCHATZ. Senator Murphy?

Senator MURPHY. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Just a few quick comments and then a couple of questions.

Senator Van Hollen and I just returned from a trip to Israel to meet with the new Government. Incredibly impressive, this coalition that has come together, an unlikely one.

The United States is at our best when we are a helpful and active broker for peace, when we are a friend of Israel but when we are also acting to try to bring the Palestinians to the negotiating table. We abdicated that responsibility for the last four years.

And as you mentioned, Mr. Nides, there was a consulate in Jerusalem for 150 years. This was a effective nonissue prior to the closure of that consulate during the Trump administration.

It is an easy thing to do to just go back to the status quo of a century-plus. But it is important to the Palestinians because they see it as a way for this administration to signal that we care about the plight of Palestinians just like we care about the security of Israel.

Similarly, I support Iron Dome funding. I think we should telegraph right now that we are going to continue to be a full partner with Israel in making sure that they can defend themselves.

But I also think we need to send a message that we are going to restart our partnership with the Palestinians to try to address their legitimate humanitarian needs. This committee has at times not been helpful in allowing the administration to get money to the Palestinian Authority. There are desperate reconstruction needs in Gaza right now.

And so my suggestion is that we should move ahead with Iron Dome funding, but we should partner it with some significant humanitarian relief to the Palestinian people. I think that is just the right thing to do.

Mr. Nides, I wanted to ask you a specific question about the Palestinian elections that have been postponed now. I think it is really important for there to be elections in the PA, in particular, because we need a shot at new leadership. We need the ability of some new voices to be able to break through.

They were postponed, and the reason given was that there was not a commitment by the Israeli Government to allow for elections to happen inside Jerusalem.

I do not know if that is the real reason or not, but I, certainly, know it would be a lot better if the Israelis made that commitment. And while we were there, the prime minister and the PA made a commitment that if the Israelis allowed for elections to go forward amongst Palestinians in Jerusalem, they would schedule them within six months.

How important do you think it is that these elections take place and what role can you, as an ambassador, play in trying to make sure that they occur?

Mr. NIDES. Senator, first of all, thank you for your question and your statement, and I wholeheartedly agree with you.

As I said to Senator Kaine a few minutes ago, we, as Americans, need to set the table for the potential of a two-state solution through assistance and through strong support for Israel and the MOU so we can actually walk and chew gum at the same time as it relates to doing both at the same time.

As it relates to the elections, I agree with you elections would be good for the Palestinians. If I am fortunate enough to be confirmed, I will work with the Israeli Government to assure that that issue is not an obstacle to achieve elections.

And as you and I both know, we are not sure how much of that was the reason. But I would, certainly, work to make sure that is taken off the table as an issue or an obstacle for elections in the— with the Palestinians.

Senator MURPHY. Yeah, I think that is the right approach. Let us eliminate all of the excuses to not go forward with this election.

I understand the danger of this election. Hamas is, obviously, now in the wake of the latest conflict more politically potent in the West Bank than ever before. But that in and of itself is not a reason to try to give a new generation of leaders the chance to step up.

Mr. Cohen, just very quickly, sanctions coordination between the United States and Canada. We are best when we do things together. We worked together, for instance, on sanctions on Belarus.

What is your analysis of the willingness of the Canadian Government to be able to continue to work with us on sanctions? How important do you think that will be in your new role?

It seems like an area where we can do more, where we can communicate earlier. We are stronger when the United States and Canada speak together on issues of pro-democracy and pro-human rights sanctions policy.

Mr. COHEN. Senator, good to see you. Good afternoon.

I think your question is absolutely correct and whenever Canada and the United States can work together we are more powerful. We speak with a greater voice.

The issue of sanctions coordination and sanctions policy is an issue that this committee has dealt with and there is legislation now for a sanctions coordinator position within the State Department, and I think the work was started on creating that. The plug was pulled during the Trump administration.

It is my understanding that work is being done to identify a candidate to be nominated for that position, which would report to the Secretary of State, and I think that is an important tool to improve the coordination of sanctions, which will improve the effectiveness of sanctions and will be another example of Canada and the United States being able to work together to advance our mutual goals.

Senator MURPHY. Great. Thank you very much. I look forward to working with you on that.

The CHAIRMAN. [Presiding.] Thank you.

I understand Senator Van Hollen is with us virtually.

Senator Van Hollen: Yes. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, thank you.

To all of our nominees, congratulations on your nominations.

Mr. Cohen, great to see a fellow Swarthmore alum nominated to be our ambassador to Canada. I do have some serious concerns with the current disconnect in our policy with respect to Canada and travel to the United States.

If you are vaccinated as a Canadian you can fly to the United States but cannot cross the border by car, and this is despite the fact that Canada has a higher vaccination rate than the United States.

If I have time at the end of my question, I may circle back with you on that issue.

Mr. Nides, congratulations on your nomination. Great to see you. I agree with the points that you made in your opening statement.

I recently traveled to Israel and the West Bank with Senator Murphy and two of our colleagues, and you have heard some of the report just now from Senator Murphy. We had positive visits in both stops. We very much and warmly welcomed many of the new steps being taken by the Government in Israel.

We discussed the importance of our relationship, including the continuation of the MOU, which you reference in your opening remarks. And I fully support replenishment of the Iron Dome, which helped save lives in the recent conflict between Israel and Hamas.

You say in your statement that we need to work to preserve the vision of a two-state solution. I agree with you. As you know, the President agrees with you.

If you could just say in your own words why you think that that is important for the future, both for Israel and for the Palestinians, and what you will do as ambassador to preserve that option, as you say, in your statement.

Mr. NIDES. Senator, thank you for the question.

If my North Star is a democratic Jewish state, I believe to preserve that—to preserve that, having a two-state solution preserves that. I think it creates the environment for the Palestinians to live with the same freedom and security and prosperity that the Israelis have.

I believe that us providing the assistance for the Palestinian people is critically important. It is not just the right thing to do. It is the smart thing to do for our own security.

I think providing security assistance is the right thing to do for not only Israel and the Palestinians but for the Americans as well.

Israel is our most, if not one of the most, important allies that we have in the region and in the world and keeping that safe is relatively and exceptionally important for their security and for our national security.

I just think if you fundamentally believe, as I do, that a two-state solution provides that security for the long haul, I think it is the right thing to do. It is the smart thing to do, and if I am fortunate enough to get confirmed, I will work towards that goal.

Senator Van Hollen: And what specific measures would you take as ambassador to preserve that option? Because as you know, the door is rapidly closing through changes on the ground with respect to a two-state solution. What measures do you think need to be taken to keep that option open?

Mr. NIDES. If I am fortunate enough to get confirmed, the most important thing is for neither parties, the Israelis or the Palestinians, to take unilateral action that prevents that from happening.

And so if I am fortunate enough to get confirmed, I will work with the parties to avoid that, and we all know those issues that create the environment that allows for conflicts to occur.

I think the goal of the ambassador is to articulate the vision of the President and the Secretary of State, but to try to keep the parties not creating an atmosphere that we cannot move forward on a vision of a two-state solution.

Senator Van Hollen: Thank you.

We also, as Senator Murphy said, met with Prime Minister Shtayyeh in the West Bank, who said and acknowledged the importance of opening up the Palestinian Authority to elections.

As you probably saw, they just announced municipal elections this December. But there is the issue of the Legislative Assembly elections. I am pleased to hear your response to Senator Murphy with respect to working with our Israeli partners to make sure that Palestinians in East Jerusalem can vote and make sure that that is not an excuse for not going forward with the legislative elections.

Finally, as you know, the President has said that he wants to reverse the decision by the Trump administration that shut down our consulate in Jerusalem.

Do you support reopening that consulate as the President has committed to do and what do you think the timetable for that will be?

Mr. NIDES. I, certainly, support that, as the President has indicated and the Secretary of State has announced.

Until I am confirmed I am not privy to the conversations that are happening between the State Department or the administration with the Israelis. But, obviously, that is something that, once I am fortunate enough to get confirmed, will work on and be able to report back to you on a timing.

Senator Van Hollen: Thank you.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot see the clock. Has my time run out?

The CHAIRMAN. It ran down a while ago.

[Laughter.]

Senator Van Hollen: All right. Thank you all very much.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.

This particular part of the hearing is now over. This record is going to remain open to the close of business tomorrow for questions to the record.

I would urge the nominees if they get a question to respond to it expeditiously and fully so that we can consider your nominations for a business meeting.

And with the thanks of the committee, we will now move to our second panel.

[Pause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Let me introduce our second panel as they get themselves adjusted to their positions.

[Pause.]

The CHAIRMAN. We have two nominations on the second panel: our former colleague Senator Tom Udall to be an ambassador to New Zealand and Samoa, and Ms. Sarah Margon to be the Assistant Secretary of State for the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor.

[Pause.]

The CHAIRMAN. I would ask our other nominees to please take your conversations outside of the chamber so we can move on.

I know that Senators Heinrich and Lujan have expressed their interest in introducing Senator Udall but they have not yet arrived. We will wait for them in the moment.

I also understand that our former colleague and member of this committee, Senator Feingold, is going to introduce Ms. Margon virtually today.

Is Senator Feingold with us?

Senator Feingold, welcome back to the committee even if it is virtually. We will recognize you to give an introduction of Ms. Margon.

STATEMENT OF HON. RUSSELL FEINGOLD, FORMER U.S. SENATOR FROM WISCONSIN

Senator FEINGOLD. Thank you so much, Mr. Chairman and Ranking Member Risch and members of the committee.

Thank you for this opportunity to speak with you today to introduce Sarah Margon, a nominee for Assistant Secretary of State for Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor, which is known as DRL.

I worked closely with DRL during my tenure at the State Department when I was the Special Envoy to the Great Lakes region of Africa. I would argue the DRL's work has never been more important than it is right now, with democracy going head to head with the growing threats of kleptocracy and authoritarianism around the globe.

Right now, democracy is losing some ground in several countries with devastating consequences for human rights, the rule of law, independent judiciaries, and other democratic principles.

President Biden has stressed repeatedly that human rights must be at the center of our foreign policy, and I could not agree more. Democracy and human rights go hand in hand, and DRL is at the forefront of implementing President Biden's commitment to human rights and to crafting and implementing policy aimed at strengthening and preserving the democratic values and principles that we so staunchly believe in and cherish.

Sarah is an exceptional candidate to lead DRL at this time and to help inform and guide human rights and democracy-focused U.S. foreign policy. It is a true honor for me to introduce her.

She came to work for me many years ago when I was a member of this committee. At the time, she was coming not just from Oxfam America but she came into the office almost literally right from a trip she had taken to Eastern Chad.

I mention this because it is indicative of Sarah's lifetime commitment to an approach to addressing conflict and crises across the globe. Her policy perspectives are continuously informed and driven by her experiences traveling to these countries and working directly with affected communities and through that and her experience and commitment would help develop meaningful legislation and policy change as it has throughout her career and will in her new role as Assistant Secretary of State, if she is confirmed.

I will just highlight a couple of things that make her unique. She has a strong commitment to bipartisan foreign policy. I saw this firsthand when she worked in my office and worked closely with senators on both sides of the aisle to advance meaningful foreign policy.

This included working with Senator Isakson on many democracy issues, Senators Inhofe and Brownback to pass legislation to help protect civilians in northern Uganda, and Senators McCain and Graham on issues relating to Egypt's growing repression and election concerns in 2010, of course, just before the Tahrir Square protests in 2011.

She takes the time to listen to all sides and stakeholders, including those whom she disagrees with, so she can ensure that she is fully informed. She regularly made time to speak to my constituents in Wisconsin and hear their concerns about everything from Indonesia and East Timor and Sri Lanka. She believed they had important contributions to make to our policy work.

If she is confirmed, I know that Sarah will be committed to engaging the American public beyond the Beltway on America's role in the world, and she will never lose sight that her principal job is to serve the American public.

Sarah believes fiercely in the important role of Congress when it comes to foreign policy. I will state this is particularly important to me and one of the reasons that I hired Sarah.

She firmly believes that Congress must play an active and assertive role in foreign policy, both in terms of helping to build and support an agenda that represents all of America and in terms of oversight of the executive.

She understands the experience and tools to make good policy. Her rich experience makes her an expert on the full toolkit deployed by our State Department, from punitive measures like economic sanctions to incentivizing and relationship building.

She understands that meaningful and impactful policy cannot be made in a vacuum, and I saw her demonstrate this as we traveled all the way from Eastern Congo to Djibouti and even Peshawar, Pakistan, where we were working on these issues.

Sarah is driven by a deep belief and a commitment to ensuring that the United States is a force for good in the world. This translates to a fierce commitment to diplomacy and the necessary work to build and maintain positive constructive relationships across borders.

I want to close by underscoring Sarah's values, which drive her work every day. She brings sincere integrity to her work. She is solution oriented, which is exactly what we need at this time when democracy is on the back foot around the world and when basic fundamental liberties are under attack.

I think it would be a little hard to find someone who is more genuinely devoted to advancing human rights and democracy, and doing so in an informed, transparent, and collaborative manner than Sarah.

If confirmed, she will be an open honest broker for improving human rights and democracy around the world. I recommend Sarah Margon as Assistant Secretary of State for Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor, and I thank you so much for the pleasure of testifying before you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Feingold. It is good to see you, and we appreciate your glowing recommendation of Ms. Margon.

We have now been joined by two of our colleagues, Senator Heinrich and Senator Lujan, who will join in introducing Senator Udall. Senator Heinrich?

STATEMENT OF HON. MARTIN HEINRICH,
U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW MEXICO

Senator HEINRICH. Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and all the distinguished members of this committee, it is really my honor today, my distinct honor, to introduce President Biden's nominee to serve as the next U.S. ambassador to New Zealand and Samoa, and, obviously, our former colleague, Senator Tom Udall.

As a long-serving member of this committee, I know Tom is no stranger to any of you. But I wanted to make sure to echo what I am sure anyone who has worked with Tom Udall over the years would say about his incredible character and the deep commitment that he has to public service.

Tom has devoted his entire life to my state, to serving the people of New Mexico and to serving this great nation, first, as our state's attorney general, then for 10 years in the U.S. House of Representatives, followed by two terms in this body, in the United States Senate.

And during the time that the both of us served here together in the Senate, Tom Udall proved to be a constant friend and close mentor to me. He also set a true example of what it means to be a public servant.

Over his two terms in the Senate, Tom showed all of us how to act with decency and integrity, how to stay true to your principles but also how to find common ground, and these are all qualities that I am very confident will serve him well in this new diplomatic role representing our nation's interests abroad.

With all of his experience on climate issues and his work with indigenous communities, he is uniquely qualified to build upon our nation's cooperation and shared interests with our allies in New Zealand and Samoa, and I can truly think of no one better suited to represent our country and face international challenges than Tom Udall.

On behalf of Julie and myself, I want to congratulate both Tom and his wife, Jill, on this new opportunity to continue their lifelong service to our country, and I sincerely hope that each and every one of you on this committee will join me in supporting this incredibly qualified nominee.

Thank you, Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Lujan?

STATEMENT OF HON. BEN RAY LUJAN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW MEXICO

Senator LUJAN. Thank you, Chairman. It is an honor to be here this morning before the committee alongside Senators Udall and Heinrich.

Senator Udall has spent his career, his life, serving fellow New Mexicans and our brothers and sisters across America. Both he and Jill Udall have made a tremendous difference in the lives of so many.

As our state attorney general, U.S. Representative, and United States Senator, Tom was deeply and continues to be committed to fighting for everyone to get a fair shake.

You know Tom and Tom knows you. Yesterday at the United Nations, President Biden pledged a new era of relentless American diplomacy, and today's consideration of Senator Udall to serve as U.S. Ambassador to New Zealand and Samoa is proof of the President's commitment to restore American leadership around the globe.

New Mexicans know Tom as a true statesman and as a leader, as a friend, and as a mentor who takes the climate crisis seriously. He cares about others, he leads by example, and treats people with respect and dignity.

This ambassadorship matters. New Zealand and Samoa are leading on many important issues and are important partners in the fight against the climate crisis.

As ambassador, I am confident that Senator Udall will make New Mexico and our country proud. He will bring the same energy and commitment and, hopefully, a few bolo ties to the world stage.

[Laughter.]

Senator LUJAN. This is an exciting day for Tom and Jill, and for countless New Mexicans back home. Tom is a highly-qualified nominee and it is my honor to stand with him and Jill today.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Lujan, for the glowing recommendation of our colleague. We appreciate it. We know you have other issues to attend to. Do not hesitate to leave when you think it is appropriate.

And I will just note as well that Congressman Malinowski from my home state of New Jersey is here with us. He had the former position that Ms. Margon is being nominated for as the Assistant Secretary of State for the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor. We welcome him to the committee.

And since you are here, Congressman, we need to talk about the CASE Act and updating it so that we can actually get some information in real time these days. I look forward to working with you on that.

Let me briefly speak to these two nominees.

Senator Udall, welcome back to the committee. You now know what it feels to be on the other side of this questioning. But we know you are going to do great. Congratulations on your nomination, to Jill as well.

I am glad that President Biden selected you for this important post. I am confident that, upon confirmation, you will represent the United States well in New Zealand and in the Independent State of Samoa.

As you know, New Zealand is one of our closest partners, a partnership that is critical in this new era of strategic competition. Now more than ever, the United States has to pursue intense diplomatic outreach in order to support our common goals for addressing climate change, expanding economic and trade opportunities, and building security partnerships.

Climate change is one of the most pressing national security challenges of our time and it poses a significant threat to Pacific Island nations. Overall, I believe we need to reinvigorate our diplomatic presence and outreach to New Zealand and Samoa, and I am confident that you will be very well up to that task.

We look forward to hearing your goals for how we can deepen one of the closest diplomatic relationships we have even further.

Ms. Margon, congratulations on your nomination to DRL. You have extensive experience working to advance human rights and democratic values as well as support a bipartisan group of national security leaders, human rights, and civil society organizations, including prominent Jewish organizations who believe in the importance of the U.S.-Israel partnership and the importance of a two-state solution for ensuring Israel's future as a Jewish and democratic state.

But I also know there have been questions about some of the nuances here and I will trust you will be able to answer those questions.

The need for strong effective leadership at the helm of DRL has never been more necessary. In every region of the world today authoritarian governments are seizing more and more power, dismanting core democratic institutions, and closing in on journalists and civil society.

Today, Beijing, Moscow, and their kleptocratic partners are driving global authoritarian expansion. They do this through increasingly sophisticated digital authoritarian surveillance and control tools that we put out a very significant report from this committee, and through old-fashioned arrests of peaceful protests and shutting down independent media.

To that end, we witnessed this summer the Cuban regime unleash a brutal wave of repression in response to unprecedented protests by the Cuban people. While the Trump administration took a wrecking ball to our reputation, the Biden administration is doing vital work to reassert the U.S. role in championing democracy and human rights around the globe.

That effort, however, was badly damaged this summer by the flawed withdrawal from Afghanistan and the unfolding human rights catastrophe.

From Burma to Ethiopia, the amount of human rights concerns around the world is vast. We understand that, at times, the United States faces hard choices where foreign policy and national security interests do not align neatly with the values we strive to reflect as a nation.

Upon occasion that is unavoidable. But we also know that the organizational structure at the State Department has allowed a culture to flourish in which human rights concerns gets less traction because the powerful regional bureaus frequently sideline DRL.

I look forward to hearing from you about how, if confirmed, you will work to recenter our foreign policy around the core American values of democracy, human rights, and the rule of law that advance our U.S. national interests and the cause of freedom and human dignity that rightly belong to people everywhere.

And I will just close by saying today we had a breakfast meeting with the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, Boris Johnson, and in that conversation one of the things that he said that I thought was so poignant for our other colleagues to hear was how important it was for the United States to raise the principles of democracy and human rights, and what it means to the rest of the world to do so.

This is an incredibly important position.

I know that the ranking member has as well opening remarks as it relates to these nominees, and when he returns I will recognize him. As such, he is voting right now. But in the interests of expediting this process, let me turn to Senator Udall first for his opening statement.

I ask you both to try to summarize your statements in about five minutes. Your full statements will be included in the record, without objection.

And with that, Senator Udall, the floor is yours.

STATEMENT OF FORMER SENATOR HON. TOM UDALL OF NEW MEXICO, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO NEW ZEALAND AND WITHOUT ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION TO THE STATE OF SAMOA

Senator UDALL. Thank you, Chairman Menendez, and I want to thank so much Senator Heinrich and Senator Lujan for coming and introducing me.

Ranking Member Risch and members of the committee, it is an honor and pleasure to meet with all of you again. As a former member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, I have great respect for the important work you are doing to consider the diplomatic nominations before you.

Today, I have exchanged my seat on the dais to sit as President Biden's nominee to serve as the United States Ambassador to New Zealand and to the Independent State of Samoa.

After a career of public service in the state of New Mexico, including two terms as New Mexico Attorney General, five terms as United States Representative, and two terms as United States Senator, I am grateful for the trust of the President and Secretary Blinken that they have placed in me to represent the United States overseas.

The advice and consent role of the United States Senate, Mr. Chairman, as you know well, is one of the most important roles granted to Congress by the Constitution, and I am honored by this committee's consideration of my nomination.

Mr. Chairman, with your permission, I would like to take a moment to introduce my wife, Jill Cooper. She has been my partner and chief adviser during my 30 years of public service. She is an accomplished lawyer in her own right and a strong advocate for the arts, having served as a member of the President's Committee on the Arts and Humanities.

And while they are not here with me today in these chambers, I would like to recognize my daughter, Amanda, and my son-in-law, Judge Jim Noel.

In January, I marked the conclusion of serving New Mexico in the United States Senate. New Mexico is a mountainous and rural state strong in its multiculturalism, including a vibrant indigenous culture.

New Mexico is also rich in natural resources and growing tech and space and cinematic sectors, complete with a vital national security sector. In all these respects, New Mexico is very much like New Zealand.

Both are aiming for the stars. Both continue to invest in new space sectors advancing science, human progress, and cinematic storytelling set in their unique geographies.

While there are numerous positive comparisons, it is no secret that New Zealand and Samoa, like New Mexico, face enormous threats from climate change.

As a senator, I made protection of the environment a priority, from championing the 30 By 30 proposal to conserve 30 percent of our lands and waters by 2030, to passing the landmark bipartisan Frank Lautenberg Chemical Safety Act.

The president has made it clear that climate consideration shall be an essential element of United States foreign policy and national security.

As ambassador, I look forward to working with New Zealand, a country that shares my passion for the protection of our natural environment.

I also look forward to maintaining the strong political, military, and intelligence relationship we share with New Zealand from World War Two when tens of thousands of Americans were stationed in New Zealand, through the post-war Five Eyes intelligence alliance formed by the United States, Great Britain, Canada, Australia, and New Zealand, and from support for our forces in Afghanistan in 2001 as well as other peacekeeping missions to formalize our strengthening defense cooperation in the 2012 Washington Declaration.

Just last week, Prime Minister Jacinda Ardern affirmed that recent developments in the Indo-Pacific do not change the security intelligence ties of New Zealand to the Five Eyes alliance.

Members of this committee have been clear that the United States cannot challenge all the threats in the region alone. We need allies like New Zealand and we need to help them thrive despite these regional challenges. We should not allow outside influences to drive a wedge in that relationship.

As ambassador, I will work to protect and grow mutual goodwill between our nations. Countering and competing with the People's Republic of China requires strong partnerships with countries throughout the region. Beijing continues to pressure countries that stand up to its human rights violations, to threaten freedom of navigation, and to violate international rules and norms.

Like you say, I would just ask that the rest of my statement be put in the record and it will be a real honor, if confirmed, to go off as an ambassador to New Zealand and Samoa.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you for the courtesies. And Ranking Member Risch, I mentioned you. It is wonderful to see you here in person. Thank you.

[Prepared statement of Senator Udall follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. TOM UDALL

Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee. It is an honor and a pleasure to meet with all of you again. As a former member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, I have great respect for the important work you are doing to consider the diplomatic nominations before you.

While they are not here with me today in these chambers, I'd also like to recognize my daughter Amanda and son-in-law Judge Jim Noel.

In January I marked the conclusion of serving New Mexico in the U.S. Senate. New Mexico is a mountainous and rural state strong in its multiculturalism—including a vibrant indigenous culture. New Mexico is also rich in natural resources, and growing tech, space, and cinematic sectors, complete with a vital national security sector. While there are numerous positive comparisons, it is no secret that New Zealand and Samoa, like New Mexico, face enormous threats from climate change.

As a Senator I made protection of the environment a priority, from championing the Thirty-by-Thirty proposal to conserve 30 percent of our lands and waters by 2030, to passing the landmark bipartisan Frank Lautenberg Chemical Safety Act. The President has made it clear “that climate considerations shall be an essential element of United States foreign policy and national security.” As Ambassador, I look forward to working with New Zealand, a country that shares my passion for the protection of our natural environment.

I also look forward to maintaining the strong political, military, and intelligence relationship we share with New Zealand: from World War II when tens of thousands of Americans were stationed in New Zealand, through the post-war Five Eyes intelligence alliance formed by the United States, Great Britain, Canada, Australia, and New Zealand; and from support for our forces in Afghanistan in 2001 as well as other peace-keeping missions, to formalizing our strengthened defense cooperation in the 2012 Washington Declaration.

Just last week, Prime Minister Jacinda Ardern affirmed that recent developments in the Indo-Pacific do not change the security and intelligence ties of New Zealand to the Five Eyes alliance.

Members of this committee have been clear that the United States cannot challenge all the threats in the region alone. We need allies like New Zealand and we need to help them thrive despite those regional challenges.

We should not allow outside influences to drive a wedge in that relationship. As Ambassador, I will work to protect and grow the mutual goodwill between our nations.

Countering and competing with the People's Republic of China (PRC) requires strong partnerships with countries throughout the region. Beijing continues to pressure countries that stand up to its human rights violations, to threaten freedom of navigation, and to violate international rules and norms.

To ensure stability and prosperity in the Indo-Pacific region as a whole, it is important to note that our relations do not begin and end with security. As an island nation, New Zealand is not unique in its dependence on international trade.

It is also one of many countries that has felt the pressure of Beijing's attempts to coerce through punitive trade decisions.

The United States is one of New Zealand's top trading partners. And I know from experience that during Senate visits overseas many of us looked for ways to increase trade ties between many nations and our respective states. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that our trade relations continue to grow and that you or the companies you represent are welcome in New Zealand.

As Pacific nations with advanced economies, the United States and New Zealand have both an opportunity and responsibility to support the island nations in the Pacific. All of them are increasingly threatened by the immediate threat of COVID-19, but also the growing influence of the PRC, and the threats from climate change. The Independent State of Samoa, a small island country rich in Polynesian culture is not immune to these challenges. We need to continue to reinforce Samoa's independence with our Peace Corps and Fulbright initiatives.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee, it was one of my great honors to serve on this committee and to serve the nation and the people of New Mexico. After a career in public service, I am honored by the President's nomination to represent the United States in New Zealand and Samoa.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak with you today. I am happy to answer any of your questions during this hearing or for the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Udall.

As I announced, I would recognize the ranking member at this time.

Senator RISCH. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to speak briefly on both nominees and then, of course, questions.

First of all, it will come probably as no surprise to many that the nominee for Assistant Secretary of State for Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor, the nominee is going to be a very difficult and a heavy lift for me to support.

The nominee has made some deeply troubling public statements related to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict including on the Boycott, Divestment, and Sanctions movement—BDS movement—against Israel, and funding to the biased organizations in Gaza, which I am going to ask some questions on.

The nominee also told my staff, surprisingly, that she feels both the current and prior administrations—both the current Biden administration and the Trump administration’s—airstrikes against Iranian proxy targets were illegal.

This view is against those of the Department of State, the Department of Defense, and legal advice spanning both administrations. If this is the kind of advice that she is going to give to the Secretary, it is going to be very difficult to support her.

Further, the nominee publicly congratulated a private company for participating in the BDS movement against Israel and urged other companies to do likewise. She also tweeted in support of a July 20 New York Times op-ed entitled, “I no longer believe in a Jewish state.” We will talk about that when we get to questions.

On the nomination for the ambassador to New Zealand and Samoa, it is good to see you, Senator Udall, and your lovely wife. I talked to Senator Brown this morning and he feels that you have won the lottery and have been sentenced to paradise. He is high on this.

If confirmed, you would be charged with stewardship of our relationships with these two nations where we have seen malign influence from the People’s Republic of China and where there is room for our partnerships to grow. I look forward to hearing your priorities on these issues.

China recently submitted information to New Zealand to join the comprehensive progressive Trans-Pacific Partnership trade agreement.

Yet, we have seen the PRC use its economic might to coerce and bully its neighbors in the region. I am, therefore, skeptical of PRC’s ability to be a good trade partner.

This development also reminds us of the importance of a strong U.S. economic and trade agenda in the Indo-Pacific region, a key element of the Strategic Competition Act passed by the Senate earlier this year. I will be interested in hearing your thoughts on that.

Again, good to see you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Risch.

With that, I will turn to Ms. Margon now.

STATEMENT OF SARAH MARGON OF NEW YORK, NOMINATED TO BE ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE FOR DEMOCRACY, HUMAN RIGHTS, AND LABOR

Ms. MARGON. Thank you, Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and distinguished members of the committee.

I am honored to be here today as the nominee for Assistant Secretary of State for Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor, and deeply grateful to the President and Secretary Blinken for the trust they have placed in me.

It is an honor to have Senator Feingold introduce me. Working for him was a master class in principled integrity. As a result of his leadership, I saw how standing up for what is right can be central to effective policymaking and that reaching across the aisle usually makes for better and stronger policy.

Indeed, America in the world should represent all Americans. I come from a long line of New Yorkers, many of whom rarely left the state but all of whom believed in the promise of a better life through hard work and a little bit of luck.

It is that gritty mindset that enabled my grandfathers, Albert Simon, born Abraham Simonofsky, and Solomon Mogiliwsky, changed to Margon, to flourish. One owned a pharmacy In Queens. The other became a dentist in Brooklyn.

That same grit could be found in their wives as well. Gertrude Simon labored at her family's light and lampshade business in Brooklyn's Pitkin Avenue and raised two girls, while Florence Margon became a secretary, carrying her family through the Depression and, in later years, raising my father, all at the same time.

I am deeply grateful for the support of my parents, Arthur and Marilyn Margon, my brother, Andrew Margon, and sister-in-law, Zoe Stopak-Behr, my husband, Sam Chaltain, who is here, whose big dreams and generosity are all the cushion one could need, and my two sons, who are also here, 8-year-old Izzy and 12-year-old Leo, both of whom give me hope for the curiosity, decency, and empathy of future generations.

I am also indebted to the women of national security and their guidance, wisdom, and community.

Today's chaotic and complicated world requires us to be more firmly tethered to core democratic principles. Rising repression and autocracy require us to be bold in adhering to these values, which, as the President has said, are inseparable from our national interests and are the foundation of our diplomatic strength.

The global assault on basic freedoms also requires us to be intentional about who we support and why we fight for rights and dignity. This means considering not just policy choices but also how we engage in countries where those in power are using state institutions, the media, elections, corrupt individuals and entities, and even the pandemic to centralize power undemocratically and to repress their people.

If confirmed, I will apply these insights to focus on three priorities.

First, I will ensure DRL carries forward an agenda that affirms the United States as a leader and a partner in the struggle for democracy, pluralism, and rights.

Our priority must be protecting these foundational values and making sure governments like China, Russia, and Cuba do not succeed in their efforts to undermine international human rights norms and the rules-based order.

I will pay special attention to China, whose pernicious attacks on dissent and the rule of law are both on the rise domestically and fast becoming a common export.

Second, I believe we must focus on countering technological and digital threats as a human rights issue. For example, as we have seen too often, the promotion of disinformation from Russia, to China, to Ethiopia can have life and death implications.

Without U.S. leadership and push back, malign actors will continue abusing technology to enable mass atrocities, undermine democracy and human rights, and harm U.S. interests.

Congress has been on the front lines of this fight and, if confirmed, I look forward to navigating the path together.

Third, I will focus on ensuring human rights as considered as part of U.S. arms sales and security assistance. Advancing democracy and protecting human rights are national security interests, as the President has made clear.

If confirmed, I will make sure DRL provides strong analysis to help ensure our decisions on these issues align with our democratic values and our commitments on human rights.

If confirmed, I look forward to a strong working partnership with Congress so that together we can promote and protect our shared American values and interests around the world.

I will endeavor to make good use of the bipartisan tools you have already developed, from the Global Magnitsky sanctions to the Uighur Human Rights Policy Act to the Corporate Transparency Act, and I will engage allies, the private sector, and civil society to help realize the Biden-Harris administration's goal of centering human rights within U.S. foreign policy.

Thank you for your consideration of my nomination. I look forward to your questions.

[Prepared statement of Ms. Margon follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF SARAH MARGON

Thank you, Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and distinguished members of this committee. I am honored to be here today as the nominee for Assistant Secretary of State for Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor—and deeply grateful to the President and Secretary Blinken for the trust they've placed in me.

First, I will ensure DRL carries forward an agenda that affirms the United States as a leader and a partner in the struggle for democracy, pluralism, and human rights. And I will engage allies, the private sector, and civil society to help realize the Biden-Harris administration's goal of centering human rights within U.S. foreign policy.

Thank you for the consideration of my nomination. I look forward to your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.

Before I turn to Senator Risch, I have some questions that are for the committee as a whole and they require a simple yes or no answer.

These questions speak to the importance that the committee places on responsiveness by all officials in the executive branch and that we expect and will be seeking from you. I would ask each of you to provide verbally a yes or no answer.

Do you agree to appear before this committee and make officials from your office available to the committee and designated staff when invited?

Ms. MARGON. Yes.

Senator UDALL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you commit to keep the committee fully and currently informed about the activities under your purview?

Ms. MARGON. Yes.

Senator UDALL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you commit to engaging in meaningful consultation while policies are being developed, not just simply providing notification after the fact?

Ms. MARGON. Yes.

Senator UDALL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And finally, do you commit to promptly responding to questions for briefings and information requested by this committee and its designated staff?

Ms. MARGON. Yes.

Senator UDALL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Both witnesses said yes to all questions. The chair will reserve his time and I will turn to the ranking member for his questions.

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ms. Margon, were you here when Mr. Nides testified?

Ms. MARGON. I was in the anteroom, Senator. Yes.

Senator RISCH. Did you hear his testimony and questions?

Ms. MARGON. I did.

Senator RISCH. I assume you do not share his enthusiasm for the despicable anti-Semitic movement called BDS—Boycott, Divestment, and Sanctions?

Ms. MARGON. Senator, I firmly oppose the BDS movement.

Senator RISCH. I am looking here at a tweet that you wrote on November 19th, 2018. It says, “Airbnb to remove listings in the Israeli settlements of occupied West Bank. Thanks, Airbnb, for showing some good leadership here. Other companies should follow suit.”

Did you write that?

Ms. MARGON. Yes, Senator.

Senator RISCH. And you do not consider that part of the BDS movement?

Ms. MARGON. Senator, I firmly oppose the BDS movement. I do believe that the private sector has an important role to play in not pursuing discriminatory practices.

Senator RISCH. I do not understand that.

Ms. MARGON. Senator, I am not and have never been a supporter of the BDS movement. I oppose it.

Senator RISCH. How do you square that statement with the text that you put out November 19th, 2018?

Ms. MARGON. That tweet was in response to a Human Rights Watch report. And again, just to be very clear, I believe the private sector across the board has an important role to play in not promoting or pursuing discriminatory policies.

Senator RISCH. You support any company that would participate in the BDS movement?

Ms. MARGON. Senator, I firmly oppose the BDS movement, and if I am confirmed to be Assistant Secretary of DRL, I will continue to do so just as the Biden administration does.

Senator RISCH. That does not square with what you said here on November. You can say it over and over and over again. It just does not make it true and it does not square with what you said in 2018. Have you changed your mind since 2018?

Ms. MARGON. Senator, that tweet was related to a very specific report.

Senator RISCH. It was in respect to a very specific action by Airbnb supporting the BDS movement.

Ms. MARGON. That was actually a report relating to their renting apartments, and as I have said and will continue—just like the Biden administration does, I am firmly opposed to the BDS movement.

Senator RISCH. With all due respect, ma'am, I do not believe it, not with what you put out here. Saying it over and over again just does not square with your actions.

Ms. MARGON. I am sorry, Senator, that you do not believe it. That is my firm belief, and if I am confirmed, going forward, I think you will see, as a member of the Biden administration, that that is the policy that I will implement.

Senator RISCH. When you met with my staff, you made the statement that you believed that the air strike against Soleimani was illegal. Do you still stand by that statement?

Ms. MARGON. That was from a tweet you are referring to?

Senator RISCH. No. That was in a meeting with my staff when you were preparing for this.

Ms. MARGON. That conversation, Senator, was in relation to a tweet that I had put out. I think that is probably a conversation best had with the Legal Adviser's Office at the State Department, for which I am not nominated.

Senator RISCH. Maybe, but you stated that you thought that that air strike was illegal. Is that true or not true?

Ms. MARGON. I did write that tweet at the time. But, again, I am looking at a position that is not for the Legal Adviser's Office.

Senator RISCH. I get that. What I am looking for is your view of these things. Obviously, the position you are in is not a legal position. But it, certainly, is very important in developing policy.

They also tell me that you said that the strikes that the past administration and even the current administration were illegal. Is that your position?

Ms. MARGON. Senator, I think, to be fair, there are wide discussions over the legality of some of these strikes. I am not a lawyer right now. I have never been a lawyer. I did work for an organization that engaged on these questions.

But if I am confirmed, I would consult with the legal advisers at the State Department to come to a determination.

Senator RISCH. I get that, and everybody here has to consult with the lawyers. Nonetheless, our policy decisions are based by our personal beliefs in that regard, and I am really, really troubled by these.

Have they straightened you out? My staff tells me that your Sherpa almost fainted when you said that the strikes by the current administration were illegal. Have they straightened you out on that? Are you willing to go along with the administration's view?

Ms. MARGON. Of course, I am willing to go along. President Biden and Secretary Blinken have nominated me to do a job and I will uphold administration policy.

Senator RISCH. In July of 2020, you retweeted an article from the New York Times op-ed entitled, "I no longer believe in a Jewish state." You retweeted that with approval. Do you still subscribe to that?

Ms. MARGON. Senator, sometimes when we tweet or say things in the heat of the moment we do not necessarily think of the broader impact of them. When I retweeted that article, what I was really focused on was the importance of ensuring Israelis and Palestinians could have equal protection under the law, access to democratic processes, security, and prosperity. That was the thrust of my tweet and what I intended with that.

I firmly believe in a two-state solution so that Israelis and Palestinians can live side by side in peace and security.

Senator RISCH. Thank you for your answers. I am not going to support your nomination, obviously. You have not persuaded me at all. In fact, I might have been persuaded if you would have owned up to these things and confessed there.

I am sorry I do not have any time for you, Senator Udall. But it is nice to see you. I know you will do a good job there and I will help you every way I can to get there.

Thank you very much, and thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Kaine?

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair and Ranking Member Risch, and thanks to our nominees. Congratulations to both of you, particularly to Senator Udall and Jill.

I am such huge fans of both of you as wonderful public servants, and it is exciting that you have had a lot of wonderful chapters in the past, both in New Mexico government and in the United States Senate, and in the House. And this next chapter is one I know you will do every bit as well. I am so proud to support you.

Ms. Margon, I want to ask you a question about the part of the world that I care most about outside the United States and that is the Americas.

I have been really troubled. I lived in Honduras when it was a military dictatorship. It is no longer a military dictatorship but, arguably, it is worse, and that is painful. A country that has gone from a military dictatorship in 1981 to a, quote, "democracy" is rife with corruption, the murder of journalists, the murder of environmental activists.

The current president was reelected in a widely disputed election. The OAS said it was so marked by fraud that the election should be rerun. For some reason, the United States discarded the OAS opinion and supported the current government, and then what has happened this president has been implicated in a variety of drug trafficking cases currently being brought in courts in the United States.

The good news is there is elections this weekend in Honduras. He is term limited and cannot run again. But I could give you the same story in El Salvador where there is currently massive backsliding of a government the people had a lot of hope in but it is behaving more and more authoritarian every day.

In Guatemala, serious issues with corruption. In Nicaragua, brutal repression of political dissidents. Costa Rica is a bit of a bright spot. We heard from Dr. Telles earlier.

I think the United States does not pay enough attention in the Americas. Just because we are not paying attention does not mean China is not paying attention. They are. Russia is paying attention. Cuba is paying attention. Iran is paying attention.

And so I would hope this administration could really embrace a more robust and continuous engagement with the Americas and show other nations because we are all Americans—North, Central, or South Americans—show other nations that our concern is continuous and not just episodic, quickly to be forgotten as we turn our attention elsewhere.

But if we are going to have an Americas policy we are going to have to really grapple with issues of human rights and democracy.

Should you be confirmed, what might your thoughts be about, as you say, centering human rights and pro-democracy within some of the nations that are the nearest to us?

Ms. MARGON. Thank you, Senator, for that question, and thanks for your long-standing work and interest in this region. It has been really notable, and you have been a real leader along with other members on this committee.

I think the Biden administration has taken the right approach in looking at a root driver strategy and allocating $4 billion dollars to the region. I think those two tranches are really important to start getting at what is at the foundation.

It is not going to be something that can change overnight. But you mentioned many of the issues that we need to be looking at—not just assistance and development, but also anti-corruption, looking to build an independent judiciary, helping to work so that the Security Forces are actually viable entities that can protect the people, looking at criminal networks.

There is very much a punitive approach and a carrot and stick incentivizing approach and I think they go hand in hand. I think even before my confirmation, if that happens, there is good groundwork for which DRL will be able to work on.

I see DRL's role—and if I am confirmed, I will hope to amplify this—is to bring the analysis of the human rights organizations and civil society into the policymaking, to work with the regional bureau closely, but also to work with other agencies and, of course, with this body to make sure that there is a consistent steadfast approach, that the finances are sufficient and, frankly, that we bring in some of the other regional actors.

I spoke yesterday with the Chairman a little bit about Latin America and the importance of engaging broadly on democratic decline and governance deficits, and I think this is the perfect opportunity for DRL to really center its work not just on election by election, as you say, but actually building and supporting with other partners the context in which those elections occur.

I have never been to Central America myself and I would really like to travel there as one of my first trips. I think that would send a very important message, not just about our commitment as a bureau but our commitment as the United States.

Senator KAINE. I thank you for that answer. There are two opportunities coming up that are really important, the Summit for Democracy that President Biden has indicated he wants to hold likely next year, and also the U.S. chairmanship of the Summit for the Americas, which we have not chaired in 25 years, and these are opportunities where these issues of democracy and human rights should be front and center. I appreciate your answers.

Mr. Chair, I yield back.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator BARRASSO?

Senator BARRASSO. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Congratulations to both of you. Senator Udall, great to see you again. Jill, nice to see you. As you know, when you gave your final speech on the floor, I made a number of comments about our service together and working in a bipartisan way, and congratulations on this nomination. I think you will be magnificent ambassador. Thank you, Senator.

Ms. Margon, on April 27th of this year, the Human Rights Watch published a report accusing Israel of being an apartheid state. Do you believe Israel is an apartheid state?

Ms. MARGON. No, Senator, I do not.

Senator BARRASSO. Do you believe Israel commits war crimes when it acts to defend itself from rocket and other terror attacks from Gaza?

Ms. MARGON. No, Senator. I strongly support Israel's right to defend itself and to protect its people.

Senator BARRASSO. The Biden administration has announced its intention to rejoin the United Nations Human Rights Council. Do you believe the Human Rights Council has a bias against Israel?

Ms. MARGON. That pesky Item 7, Senator, on the agenda at the Human Rights Council needs to be addressed. If I am confirmed, one of the things I would like to do if the U.S. rejoins the Human Rights Council is work with the International Organizations Bureau, the ambassador to Geneva, and this committee to help reform the Human Rights Council so it is more effective, so it does not have a disproportionate bias against Israel, including that agenda item.

I have seen in the past that when the U.S. is a member of that Council that there are less anti-Israel resolutions and there is a decrease in anti-Israel attacks. That would be one of my priorities.

Senator BARRASSO. When I think about the Human Rights Council and the membership, do you know how many members of them are serious human rights abusers?

Ms. MARGON. There are a number of them that are very problematic, Senator. I do not know the exact number.

Senator BARRASSO. Russia?

Ms. MARGON. Yes.

Senator BARRASSO. China?

Ms. MARGON. Yes.

Senator BARRASSO. Pakistan?

Ms. MARGON. Yes.

Senator BARRASSO. Cuba? I could go on.

It is to point out to me as I look at this, it says—do you know of any of these that have actually had a resolution passed condemning their own actions while on the Council?

Ms. MARGON. Senator, your concern is well placed and I think this would be part of the reform agenda. I will also say that the Human Rights Council has put out some extraordinary reports in the past that this body, I think, has found very useful.

I would draw your attention specifically to the Commission of Inquiry on North Korea. I think it was published in 2014. That was an extraordinary documentation of the horrific abuses in DPRK.

And my goal would be not only to help reform the membership, which I understand is a priority also of the Biden administration, but also to work with the Council so that it has stronger, better membership, and they can produce more reports like that DPRK report.

Senator BARRASSO. Because it does seem to me that a number of these keep themselves on the Council specifically so they can avoid accountability.

In terms of the blacklist the Human Rights Council has come up with, the Human Rights Council has published a blacklist of companies doing business in the West Bank and East Jerusalem. Many of them are American companies. It is viewed by many as laying the groundwork for sanctions against these companies.

If confirmed, will you work to encourage the Council to retract this database and discourage our allies from associating with this in any way?

Ms. MARGON. Yes.

Senator BARRASSO. Okay. And what can the U.S. do to limit the continuation of this dangerous exercise by this group?

Ms. MARGON. This is part of why I think U.S. membership on the Human Rights Council is so important. It gives us a seat at the table. It allows us to help influence decisions, it allows us to engage, and it allows us to ensure there is not a strong anti-Israel bias, but that the Human Rights Council is looking broadly and globally at human rights abuses.

Senator BARRASSO. On January 4th of 2020, you tweeted this, "The Iranian Government is replete with nasty characters. Soleimani himself was horrifically brutal. But normalizing selective ally engagement to conduct an illegal action that not only normalizes assassinations but also escalates dramatically has taken us to a whole new scary level."

Do you believe that the U.S. attack on General Soleimani was illegal?

Ms. MARGON. Senator, this is a tweet. I think if I were going forward, looking at this from my position should I be confirmed as Assistant Secretary, I would need to review all of the evidence and the intelligence to make that assessment and consult with the Legal Adviser's Office.

Senator BARRASSO. What is your view of the Biden administration's botched drone attack that killed 10 civilians outside of Afghanistan in the last couple of weeks?

Ms. MARGON. Thank you for that question. I was really pleased to see the Pentagon and its press—excuse me, at its press conference admit to the attack, to talk about what had been happening, to talk about the investigation that was going to be underway.

I think this is a very important step that the Pentagon has taken, and I understand that there is going to be an investigation, and from there we will see where it goes.

Senator BARRASSO. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Okay.

Ms. Margon, let me just get some things clear for the record. Did you ever advocate on behalf of the BDS movement?

Ms. MARGON. No, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. And regarding the allegation that has been flown around there characterizing Israel's actions as apartheid and attributed to you, to clarify, that refers to a report released by Human Rights Watch long after you departed the organization. Is that the case?

Ms. MARGON. That is correct. It was nearly two years later.

The CHAIRMAN. Okay. When we look at the question of human rights, especially when one is not in an administration, one has the ability to look at it from the vantage—from the perspective uniquely about what is it that we seek to uphold in terms of the fundamental Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Is that not fair to say?

Ms. MARGON. That would be fair to say, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And the organization that you once worked with, Human Rights Watch, which has been quoted by many members of Congress when they find it appropriate and of value to do so, looked at the world in terms of human rights violations in that context. Would that be fair to say?

Ms. MARGON. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Okay. The question is about participating at the United Nations Human Rights Council. The reality is when we are not there, then we cede to the world's worst actors the ability to take on allies like the State of Israel.

Is that a fair statement?

Ms. MARGON. I would say yes, that is.

The CHAIRMAN. While we do not like, and I, certainly, do not like—I find it appalling that Cuba can be on the Human Rights Council, but in the absence of the United States being there, I cannot push back on them and others, at the end of the day.

And so I think that one has to think about the perspective. Joining the Human Rights Council is not an acceptance of its actions. It is in defiance of its actions. Is that the way you would take the view if you were the assistant secretary?

Ms. MARGON. Yes, I think I would.

I would also say, Senator that it provides an exceptional opportunity for the United States to lead and to partner in pushing back against a number of those very abusive countries.

I would also say that the Biden administration has said it not only wants to rejoin but reform the Council, and there are plenty of opportunities to further that effort.

The CHAIRMAN. Israel remains our only democratic ally in the Middle East, and our bilateral relationship is rooted on shared democratic values. As in the United States or any country with a democratic process, we may not always agree with every policy that every government pursues.

International organizations, however, routinely unfairly target Israel for alleged human rights abuses while in the same breath actively ignoring the gravely serious human rights abuses of the leaders of some of its neighbors.

Would you commit to pushing back on unfair bias against Israel from international human rights organizations?

Ms. MARGON. Yes, absolutely.

The CHAIRMAN. And then, finally, because the world is—as much as Israel is incredibly important, the world that you will be encountering—there are so many different parts of the world so I could spend a lot of time talking to you about arms sales, which I will in the near future, about China and Belarus and Russia and many other places, about Turkey under Erdogan.

Even though they are a NATO ally, there are more journalists and lawyers in Turkish jails than in any other part of the world. That is saying something, considering some of the nasty parts of the world. Ethiopia and what is happening there in terms of human rights violations.

I look forward to having a more in-depth discussion with you. But I do want to just talk about one—something I broached with you when you came to visit me and I appreciated our visit, and it is about Cuba.

You noted that, quote, “Cuba offers more opportunities than dead ends when it comes to human rights, including by easing relations with other countries and encouraging them to pressure Cuba to, quote, “tolerate more dissent.”

I am of the view that dissent should not be tolerated but embraced as a fundamental human right. Would you agree with that?

Ms. MARGON. I think that is a much better word, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Okay. And these statements were made before the July 11th protests in Cuba this year, which—where the regime unleashed a brutal wave of repression in response to average people, mostly led by Afro-Cubans in terms of protests.

If you are confirmed as the Assistant Secretary for DRL, what are some of the specific steps you would take to advance democracy and human rights in Cuba?

Ms. MARGON. The protests in July, I think, reminded us very clearly, not just us here in the U.S. but globally, that what the Cubans need and are looking for—the Cuban people—are basic services and basic rights, and they go hand in hand.

And so there really is an opportunity for the United States, working closely with partners in the region and more globally, to support civil society more extensively, to ensure they have access and are able to be amplified on larger platforms to share their experiences with such a brutal and horrific government.

Because it is those experiences, it is those stories, and it is their fight for those basic rights that we need to be supporting. There are questions about what we can support internet wise. There are questions about what we can support media wise.

And I think the review that is underway, Senator, if I am confirmed, is something that I will want to be actively participating in. But even if that review is done before I am confirmed, I look forward to working with you to figure out the best ways in which we can support civil society, amplify those voices, and make sure that there is an increase in support globally for the movement.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. Thank you.

Senator Udall, you and I had a very good and in-depth conversation yesterday about economic opportunities, about how AUKUS is going to affect us with New Zealand on security, bilateral relationship, about New Zealand vis-a-vis China.

And so we had such a good in-depth conversation I do not feel compelled to explore it again here with you today. But I do not want you to think you are not the object of my affection.

[Laughter.]

Senator UDALL. Thank you. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. With knowing everything that you and I spoke about, and I am very pleased with the answers you gave me, I will reserve at this time.

Seeing no other member before the committee, the record for this hearing will remain open until the close of business tomorrow, Thursday, September 23rd. Please ensure that questions for the record are submitted no later than then.

I urge the nominees to answer those questions fully and expeditiously so that you can be considered for a business meeting.

And with the thanks of the committee, this hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 1:18 p.m., the committee was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. THOMAS R. NIDES BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Anomalous Health Incidents

Question. I am very concerned about directed energy attacks on U.S. Government personnel (so-called Anomalous Health Incidents). Ensuring the safety and security of our personnel abroad falls largely on individual Chiefs of Mission and the response of officers at post. It is imperative that any individual who reports a suspected incident be responded to promptly, equitably, and compassionately.

- Do you agree these incidents must be taken seriously, and pose a threat to the health of U.S. personnel?

Answer. Yes. There is nothing I take more seriously than the health and security of the people who will be working with me. The administration is actively examining a range of hypotheses but has made no determination about the cause of the AHIs or whether they can be attributed to a foreign actor. I understand that AHIs have been a top priority for Secretary Blinken, who set clear goals for the Health Incident Response Task Force to strengthen the Department's communication with our workforce, provide care for affected employees and family members, and better protect against these events in the future as we continue to work closely with the inter-agency to find the cause of these AHIs.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to ensuring that any reported incident is treated seriously and reported quickly through the appropriate channels, and that any affected individuals receive prompt access to medical care?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed I will do everything possible to ensure that employees who report a possible AHI receive immediate and appropriate attention and care and the incident is reported through appropriate channels.

Question. Do you commit to meeting with medical staff and the RSO at post to discuss any past reported incidents and ensure that all protocols are being followed?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed there is nothing I take more seriously than the health and security of the people who will be working with me.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. THOMAS R. NIDES BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

State Oversight

Question. Currently, there are three public diplomacy outposts serving primarily a Palestinian audience, America Houses in East Jerusalem and Ramallah as well as an American Corner in Hebron.

- Do you support keeping these facilities outside of the U.S. embassy compound?

Answer. While I am not in a position to speak to the specific facilities of the U.S. Embassy in Jerusalem, if confirmed I am committed to ensuring that the U.S. Embassy in Israel's capital, Jerusalem, enables our Government to carry out a full range of diplomatic activities, including public diplomacy engagement with local communities.

Question. What value do public diplomacy sites focused on the Palestinian audience provide to U.S. foreign policy?

Answer. I believe public diplomacy programs are valuable to U.S. national interests, as they allow the U.S. Government to communicate with local communities on our Government's strategic objectives. I understand that these are critical tools in our engagements with Palestinian communities as they encourage common values, such as the promotion of human rights, economic growth, freedom of speech, and upholding the rule of law.

Question. Do you support completing the renovation of the America House in Ramallah?

Answer. While I am not in a position to speak to the specific facilities of the U.S. Embassy in Jerusalem, if confirmed I am committed to ensuring that our diplomatic presence enables our Government to carry out a full range of diplomatic activities, including engagement with local communities.

Question. Mission Israel has been under enormous stress over the past five years with the move of the embassy to Jerusalem, changes to the Palestinian Affairs Unit, and COVID.

- What is your understanding of morale throughout Mission Israel?

Answer. Mission Israel is full of dedicated personnel committed to their jobs and carrying out U.S. foreign policy objectives. If confirmed, I look forward to building a collaborative and inclusive work environment, and placing a priority on morale.

Question. How do you intend to improve morale across all of Mission Israel?

Answer. If confirmed, I intend to build a collaborative and inclusive work environment. I am committed to placing a priority on embassy morale.

Question. How do you intend to create a unified mission and vision across Mission Israel?

Answer. If confirmed, I intend to underscore my commitment to an inclusive and representative working environment in support of U.S. national interests and strengthening the U.S.-Israel partnership.

Management Is A Key Responsibility for Chiefs of Mission

Question. How would you describe your management style?

Answer. My management style is one that focuses on promoting a collaborative, inclusive, and representative environment that is focused on promoting U.S. national interests.

Question. How do you believe this management style will translate to an embassy setting, where processes and resources aren't as readily available as they may be at Main State?

Answer. This style of management has served me well throughout my career and will translate well to an embassy setting. If confirmed, I look forward to working in partnership with the Embassy Jerusalem team to support an inclusive and collaborative environment that promotes U.S. national interests.

Question. As a political appointee rather than career diplomat, do you believe it is incumbent on the new chiefs of mission to integrate themselves into embassy operations and culture? If yes, how do you intend to do so?

Answer. I believe that it is important for us all, as representatives of the United States of America, to work towards serving our country to the best of our ability. If confirmed, I intend to fully integrate myself with the embassy team and look forward to supporting an inclusive and collaborative environment. We can't succeed any other way.

Question. Do you believe it is ever acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either in public or private?

Answer. No, this type of behavior is never acceptable.

Question. How do you envision your leadership relationship with the deputy chief of mission?

Answer. The deputy chief of mission is a key part of the embassy community and if confirmed, I look forward to building a collaborative, inclusive, and constructive partnership with him or her.

Question. If confirmed, what leadership responsibilities do you intend to entrust to your deputy chief of mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to the deputy chief of mission being involved in all facets of embassy leadership and working in partnership with him or her to strengthen the U.S.-Israel relationship.

Question. It is imperative that U.S. diplomats get outside of posts abroad to meet with local actors, including host government officials, non-government organizations, and everyday citizens.

- Given your previous tenure as the Deputy Secretary of State for Management and Resources, how do you assess the Department's current risk balance?

Answer. Advancement of U.S. foreign policy objectives inherently involves diverse types of risk, and it is the Department's policy that employees and leaders engage in risk management for the decisions and activities within the scope of their duties. All Department employees are expected to identify, evaluate, and mitigate any substantial risks to their objectives or to the enterprise in which they are engaged. Department leaders, including Chiefs of Mission, require the best possible assessment of risk, identification of mitigation measures, and evaluations of any remaining residual risk before making decisions. Department leaders ensure risk management is a continuous process that is adjusted as conditions change, and incorporated into planning and decision-making in a systematic, appropriate, timely and transparent manner by taking into account uncertainty and the impact on our capabilities to protect people, property, information and other assets.

Question. In your experience, do U.S. diplomats get outside of our embassy walls enough to accomplish fully their missions?

Answer. The mission of a U.S. diplomat is to promote peace, support prosperity, and protect American citizens while advancing the interests of the United States abroad. U.S. diplomats are dedicated to public service and, even in dire situations, are committed to accomplishing their mission and advancing U.S. objectives.

Question. How do you intend to increase the ability of U.S. diplomats to better access all local populations?

Answer. I believe that it is important for U.S. diplomats to have access to, and engage with, a wide range of local populations if the security environment permits. If confirmed, I am committed to ensuring that Embassy Jerusalem's diplomatic presence enables our Government to carry out a full range of diplomatic activities, including engagement with the local communities and government leaders.

Question. Do you agree that Jerusalem is the capital of Israel, should remain undivided, and should be the permanent place of the U.S. embassy to Israel?

Answer. Jerusalem is the capital of Israel. Jerusalem itself is a final status issue to be resolved through direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians. Jerusalem is central to the national visions of both Israelis and Palestinians. If confirmed, I will handle all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve. The administration is committed, as am I, to keeping the U.S. Embassy in Jerusalem.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to work diligently to see a new U.S. embassy constructed in Jerusalem?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to working diligently to see a new U.S. embassy constructed in Jerusalem.

Question. The administration has made clear its desire to open a consulate in Jerusalem for the Palestinians. It is my understanding that Israel would have to agree with the opening of a U.S. diplomatic facility in Jerusalem or anywhere else in Israel. Is that the case?

Answer. Secretary Blinken has publicly announced the administration's intent to reopen the Consulate General in Jerusalem. I understand that this is part of the administration's renewed engagement with the Palestinian people and leadership. While I cannot attest to all requirements necessary for opening a diplomatic facility, if confirmed, I will ensure that the U.S. diplomatic presence in Jerusalem enables our Government to carry out a full range of diplomatic activities, including engagement with local communities and government leaders.

Question. The Israeli Government has come out against a Palestinian consulate in Jerusalem. FM Yair Lapid said that the proposed reopening by the U.S. Government of its Jerusalem consulate would be a "bad idea" and would send the "wrong message" not only to the region and to the Palestinians, but to other countries as well, who might view this as a green light to establish their own embassies in what they perceive to be a Palestinian part of Jerusalem. In addition, such a move might destabilize the "interesting, yet delicate" coalition government. Will you pressure Israelis to reverse their opinion? Will you establish a consulate over Israeli objections?

Answer. Secretary Blinken has publicly announced the administration's intent to reopen the Consulate General in Jerusalem. I understand that this is part of the administration's renewed engagement with the Palestinian people and leadership. The United States has not recognized a "State of Palestine." Reopening the Consulate General in Jerusalem would not affect that policy or walk back or change our recognition of Jerusalem as Israel's capital.

While I am not privy to internal U.S. Government conversations with the Government of Israel, if confirmed, I will handle all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

Question. Another legal obstacle to a Palestinian consulate is the Jerusalem Embassy Act of 1995, passed overwhelmingly by the U.S. House and Senate, which recognized united Jerusalem as the capital of Israel and states that "Jerusalem should remain an undivided city." Does the Jerusalem Embassy Act prevent the United States from reopening a consulate for the Palestinians? What location for a Palestinian consulate would the 1995 law allow?

Answer. I understand that Secretary Pompeo determined and reported to Congress in 2019 that the U.S. Embassy in Jerusalem had officially opened, consistent with the requirements of the Jerusalem Embassy Act. I also understand the administration is committed, as am I, to keeping the U.S. Embassy in Jerusalem. Reopening the Consulate General in Jerusalem will not affect that policy or walk back or change our recognition of Jerusalem as Israel's capital.

If confirmed, I will always work to ensure that all our policies are consistent with U.S. interests and applicable U.S. law.

Question. If President Biden decided against (or Congress prohibited in law) the opening of a separate Consulate General to serve the Palestinian Authority, would you be prepared to carry out your duties as Ambassador to Israel with oversight of consular affairs in Palestinian-controlled territories?

Answer. The U.S. Embassy to Israel, which the U.S. Government has been clear will remain in Jerusalem, provides consular services to U.S. citizens and lawful permanent residents, as well as communities residing in Israel and the West Bank and Gaza. The President and Secretary Blinken have reaffirmed the administration's intent as well to reopen the Consulate General in Jerusalem, to support renewed engagement with the Palestinian people and leadership. If confirmed, I will ensure that the U.S. diplomatic presence in Jerusalem enables our Government to carry out a full range of diplomatic activities, including providing necessary consular services, and engaging with local communities.

Question. The Biden administration is reportedly conducting a review with the goal to open a Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) office in the United States, despite the legal prohibitions under the 1987 Anti-Terrorism Act (ATA) and the 2019 Promoting Security and Justice for Victims of Terrorism Act (PSJVTA). Is the opening of a PLO office in the United States permissible under U.S. law? Can you commit to using your position as U.S. Ambassador to Israel, if confirmed, to advocating against any move to re-open the PLO office in the U.S., in contravention of U.S. law?

Answer. I understand that the issue of the Palestinian presence in Washington is a complicated one, with a number of legal implications. If confirmed, I am committed to ensuring that any possible reopening of a PLO office in Washington is consistent with U.S. interests in advancing peace and applicable U.S. law.

Question. In 2019, the Trump administration officially recognized Israeli sovereignty over the Golan Heights. In your view, what is the strategic benefit of Israel's sovereignty of the Golan Heights? Under what conditions would Israeli sovereignty not apply?

Answer. In considering the U.S. position on the Golan Heights, I understand the administration gives great weight to Israel's security. As long as Bashar al-Assad is in control of Syria and Iran is present in Syria, it would be greatly irresponsible to urge Israel to part with the Golan Heights. Control of the strategic Golan Heights provides Israel an added measure of security from the turmoil next door. My understanding is that this administration has not changed U.S. policy on this important issue.

Foreign Assistance

Question. There are promising reports about the effectiveness of the BriLife vaccine for COVID-19, which the American-Israeli company NRx Pharmaceuticals has brought to trial. If approved, this new vaccine could prove to be a game-changer in expanding access to safe and reliable COVID-19 vaccines across the developing world, while also providing a suitable alternative to less reliable vaccines from China.

- If confirmed, will you commit to working with Israel to make its World Health Organization (WHO) and Federal Drug Administration (FDA) approved COVID-19 vaccines available to low- and lower-middle income countries, including as in-kind contributions to COVAX, as appropriate?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed I commit to working with Israel to make doses of its COVID-19 vaccines, authorized by the World Health Organization (WHO) and Federal Drug Administration (FDA), available to low- and lower-middle income countries, including as in-kind contributions distributed through COVAX.

Question. Institutions in Israel annually request, and routinely secure, funding through the American Schools and Hospitals Abroad (ASHA program). Notably, ASHA is not a development program. Instead, it provides funds for infrastructure and equipment for overseas schools, libraries, and hospitals “to highlight American ideas and practices, to provide concrete illustrations of the generosity of the American people, to further U.S. Government public diplomacy, and to catalyze collaborations between U.S. citizens and citizens of other countries”.

- Do you agree that the purpose of U.S. foreign assistance is to end the need for its existence?

Answer. U.S. foreign assistance serves important U.S. national security interests, including supporting our enduring partnership with Israel and priorities such as helping our allies and partners maintain stability and prosperity.

Question. Noting that Israel is a High Income Country that already shares U.S. values, should institutions in Israel continue to be eligible for assistance through the ASHA program?

Answer. While Israel is indeed a high-income country, I continue to value the importance of American Schools and Hospitals Abroad, and if confirmed, I commit to working to deepen the already existing partnerships in Israel.

Question. If so, why? If not, how do you intend to graduate Israeli institutions from dependence upon ASHA funding for basic infrastructure and equipment?

Answer. If confirmed, I would work closely with the U.S. Agency for International Development, which administers the ASHA program, on this matter. ASHA programs serve as an important link between American institutions and our partners overseas.

Question. Under what conditions, if any, would you support conditioning United States assistance to the West Bank and Gaza?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to ensuring U.S. assistance is well-calibrated to advance U.S. foreign policy interests. I understand that U.S. assistance provides critical relief to those in great need, fosters economic development, and supports Israeli-Palestinian understanding, security coordination, and stability. It also aligns with the values and interests of the United States and our allies and partners.

Question. Would you support conditioning assistance upon measurable progress in rolling-back the Palestinian Authority’s support for the heinous “pay for slay” program? If confirmed, would you make this a priority?

Answer. The Palestinian practice of prisoner and martyr payments is abhorrent. This administration and I are absolutely committed to working to end the practice of Palestinian prisoner and “martyr” payments in a manner that addresses longstanding U.S. and international concerns. If confirmed, I would build on the work done thus far through sustained diplomatic engagement and pressure, underscoring that part of resetting the U.S.-Palestinian relationship is seeing reform of this heinous practice.

Question. What forms of U.S. foreign assistance, if any, should be continued in the West Bank and Gaza, notwithstanding the PA’s continued support for the “pay for slay” program?

Answer. I understand the administration is committed to providing assistance in a manner that is consistent with U.S. law. U.S. foreign assistance for the West Bank and Gaza serves important U.S. interests, including providing critical relief to those in great need, fostering economic development, and supporting Israeli-Palestinian security coordination. Economic and humanitarian assistance programs improve the lives of millions of Palestinians by providing immediate relief and advancing development across sectors such as health, infrastructure, economic growth, and civil society, while security sector programs support Israeli-Palestinian security cooperation to enhance the stability of the West Bank.

Question. How would you define “humanitarian assistance” in the West Bank and Gaza? Please be specific.

Answer. U.S. humanitarian assistance for the West Bank and Gaza includes support to U.N. agencies, including UNRWA, other international organizations like the World Food Programme, and non-governmental organizations with the aim of providing immediate relief to the most vulnerable populations, including through support to needy households with food, clean water, and healthcare. Addressing immediate humanitarian needs, in combination with efforts to strengthen the Palestinian economy, civil society, and targeted infrastructure, helps eliminate a core source of social tension in the West Bank and Gaza and advances freedom, security, and prosperity for the Palestinian and Israeli people alike.

Question. How would you define “non-humanitarian assistance” in the West Bank and Gaza? Please be specific.

Answer. U.S. foreign assistance for the West Bank and Gaza serves important U.S. interests, including providing critical support to those in great need, fostering economic development, and supporting Israeli-Palestinian security coordination through economic, development, and security sector assistance. Economic and development programs for the West Bank and Gaza support critical issues that further progress toward peace such as our support for the development of the Palestinian economy, civil society, and other institutions to improve the lives of Palestinians and ensure the viability of a future Palestinian state. Assistance also supports youth engagement and employment activities, so that at-risk youth have access to positive forms of empowerment and are not lured by extremist groups. Further, U.S. assistance programs help small- and medium-sized enterprises to access financial and technical assistance to resume operations, build connections with traditional and new markets, and increase profitability. U.S.-funded security sector programs support Israeli-Palestinian security cooperation to enhance the stability of the West Bank, and advance efforts to uphold the rule of law and the protection of human rights and are a priority for both the United States and the Government of Israel.

Question. The Taylor Force Act prohibits assistance that “directly benefits” the Palestinian Authority. What is your interpretation of “directly benefit”?

Answer. I understand that, consistent with a report transmitted to Congress by the Department of State on May 3, 2018, the U.S. Government takes a number of criteria into account in assessing whether assistance “directly benefits” the PA in this context, such as the intended primary beneficiary or end user of the assistance; whether the Palestinian Authority is the direct recipient of the assistance; whether the assistance involves the payment of Palestinian Authority creditors; the extent of ownership or control the Palestinian Authority exerts over an entity or individual that is the primary beneficiary or end user of the assistance; and whether the assistance or services provided directly replace assistance or services provided by the Palestinian Authority.

Question. Despite compliance with the Taylor Force Act, opponents of continued assistance to the Palestinians argue that all money is fungible and that ESF to the Palestinian people relieves the Palestinian Authority of a burden and thus frees up additional funding for the pay to slay and martyr’s program. Do you believe this to be true? Please provide a detailed response to this argument.

Answer. The administration provides assistance in a manner consistent with U.S. law and through experienced, vetted, and trusted independent partners, who distribute directly to people in need. Further, I understand the administration goes to great lengths to provide assistance based on need and to advance important U.S. interests.

Question. The Nita Lowey Partnerships for Peace Act (PPA) authorized $250 million annually for five years to support peacebuilding initiatives between Israelis and Palestinians, including through a “People-to-People Partnership for Peace Fund” at the U.S. Agency for International Development and a “Joint Investment for Peace Initiative” at the U.S. International Development Finance Corporation (DFC).

- If confirmed, how would you measure progress of these initiatives?

Answer. I fully support the Nita M. Lowey Middle East Partnership for Peace Act (MEPPA). This legislation and the programs it would support are critical to strengthening civil society peacebuilding projects that build economic cooperation and people-to-people engagement between the Israeli and Palestinian people. If con-confirmed, I am committed to ensuring MEPPA is a vital tool of advancing U.S. foreign policy and supporting Israeli and Palestinian communities and cooperation. If confirmed, I plan to work with my colleagues at the DFC, USAID, and the Department of State to develop tools to measure the progress of this initiative.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to ensuring that all partners and activities undertaken pursuant to the PPA—including at the sub-award level—are fully vetted and transparently reported to Congress?

Answer. I understand the administration will provide assistance in the West Bank and Gaza through experienced and trusted independent partners, who distribute directly to people in need. The Department and the U.S. Agency for International Development have a robust vetting process to mitigate the risk that U.S. Government resources could inadvertently support Hamas or other terrorist groups. In addition, development and humanitarian partners in the West Bank and Gaza have aggressive risk-mitigation systems in place aimed at ensuring U.S. taxpayer-funded assistance is reaching those for whom we intend it to benefit. U.S. assistance is also closely coordinated with Israeli authorities.

Question. If confirmed, how will you leverage co-investment in PPA activities by Israelis and Palestinians, in addition to generating support by other donors?

Answer. I believe the PPA and the programs it would support are critical to strengthening civil society peacebuilding projects that build economic cooperation and people-to-people engagement between the Israeli and Palestinian people. I appreciate your and Congress' broad support for MEPPA and, if confirmed, I am committed to ensuring MEPPA is a vital tool of advancing U.S. foreign policy and supporting Israeli and Palestinian communities and generating support with other donors.

Question. Do you agree that all investments through a Joint Investment for Peace Initiative at the DFC must have a nexus to development, as envisioned by the BUILD Act which created the DFC?

Answer. Yes, I agree that all investments through a Joint Investment for Peace Initiative at the DFC must have a nexus to development.

Question. The Palestinian Authority recently passed a decree to “nationalize” NGOs working in the West Bank and Gaza, ostensibly giving the PA access to their funding. What concerns does this raise for continued assistance to the West Bank and Gaza? What safeguards are in place to prevent the PA from syphoning funding from “nationalized” NGOs?

Answer. I understand the administration is encouraging the Palestinian Authority to ensure that civil society organizations are free and empowered to engage fully in their activities, which support democratic, social, and economic development and are vital to a free and democratic Palestinian society and a viable future Palestinian state. I also understand the Department is closely following the conversation Palestinian civil society is having with the Palestinian Authority regarding this law and have engaged the Palestinian Authority on this issue. If confirmed, I plan to continue to monitor these efforts to ensure that U.S. assistance and civil society activities are not adversely affected and remain consistent with U.S. law.

Question. Despite the cancellation of elections for Palestinian leadership, there are concerns that Hamas, a foreign terrorist organization, will play a greater role in the Palestinian political environment. Should Hamas play a broader role in Palestinian politics and hand Fatah a defeat at the polls, how do you do reconcile Palestinian policy and counterterrorism policy? What are the implications for continued assistance to the Palestinian people and expenditures on Palestinian Security Forces?

Answer. U.S. assistance for the Palestinians is provided consistent with U.S. law. I understand the Department routinely assesses its foreign assistance programming and would do so as necessary following Palestinian elections or any other significant change related to the Palestinian Authority.

Security Cooperation

Question. The U.S. Israel Security Assistance Authorization Act, which was enacted into law in 2020, mandates not less than $ 1.3 billion in security assistance to Israel. What is your position with respect to conditioning security assistance to Israel?

Answer. I do not believe that conditioning security assistance to Israel furthers U.S. interests. The President has been clear that the administration does not support placing conditions on military aid to Israel.

Question. Do you support fulfilling U.S. funding commitments outlined in the current 10-year Memorandum of Understanding (MOU)?

Answer. I fully support the 10-year, $38 billion Memorandum of Understanding between the United States and Israel.

Question. If confirmed, can you commit to opposing any efforts to impose new restrictions on security assistance to Israel, which is an important show of the United States' commitment to the security of our allies?

Answer. The President has been clear that he does not support placing conditions on military aid to Israel. If confirmed, I commit to opposing any efforts to impose new restrictions on security assistance to Israel, consistent with the President's policy.

Question. In light of recent violence between Israel and militants in the Gaza Strip, do you support emergency funding for the Iron Dome?

Answer. Yes, I support emergency funding for the Iron Dome.

Question. If confirmed, can you commit to working to expand U.S.-Israel cooperation on the Iron Dome and other similar defense programs?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to working to expand U.S.-Israel cooperation on the Iron Dome and other similar defense programs, consistent with the President's policy.

Question. The 11 day war demonstrated that Israel's Iron Dome struggled to meet the demands of a one-front war with Hamas. A two-front war with both Hamas and Hezbollah would present a much more significant threat. Is Israel's current number of Iron Dome batteries, radars and munitions sufficient to meet the threat of a two-front war? What are the associated capability gaps you will address as the Ambassador to Israel?

Answer. The U.S. commitment to Israel's security is ironclad. The Biden-Harris administration remains committed to Israel's defense and security, including its qualitative military edge in the region, consistent with U.S. law and policy. On May 20, President Biden assured Prime Minister Netanyahu of his "full support to replenish Israel's Iron Dome system to ensure [Israel's] defense and security in the future."

I understand the administration is prepared to support President Biden's commitment to ensure Israel's right to defend itself from indiscriminate rocket attacks by assisting Israel in replenishing its Iron Dome Air Defense Missile System. If confirmed, I will work with Departments of State and Defense colleagues to see what can be done to assist Israel in replenishing its Iron Dome systems.

Question. Israeli vessels have been subject to an increasing number of Iranian attacks, which threaten freedom of navigation in the Red Sea and beyond. As a result, Israel has increased its deployments in the Red Sea region. How can the U.S. better support Israeli efforts to protect freedom of navigation?

Answer. The U.S. commitment to Israel's security is ironclad. The Biden-Harris administration remains committed to Israel's defense and security, including its qualitative military edge in the region, consistent with U.S. law and policy, which is the best way the United States can support Israeli efforts to protect freedom of navigation.

Question. One of Israel's top cyber security firms, NSO Group, is responsible for developing advanced cyber hacking technology, including Pegasus. NSO insists the software is used exclusively for the purposes of combatting terrorism and monitoring serious crime, underscoring the fact that the Israeli Government is responsible for vetting the company's sales. However, in recent years, numerous countries have been accused of using the software to spy civil society activists, journalists, and political dissidents among others.

- Do you feel the appropriate oversight checks are in place to prevent Pegasus, and other cyber surveillance software like it, from being used to commit human rights abuses?

Answer. The U.S. Government has undertaken a number of steps over the last year to avoid tools or products from U.S.-based cyber-surveillance companies being used abroad to undermine human rights. I understand that in October 2020, the Department of State released the first-of-its-kind "human rights due diligence" guidance to help businesses conduct a human rights impact assessment on relevant products or services and the Department of Commerce issued a Final Rule that revised the licensing policy for crime-control items in connection with human rights concerns, as well as expanded its consideration of human rights beyond crime controlled items. If confirmed, I will work with our bilateral partners to promote respect for and protect human rights.

Question. To what extent do you feel NSO's licensing of the Pegasus spyware is done in a manner that complies with U.S. values and upholds U.S. national security interests?

Answer. The United States condemns the harassment or extrajudicial surveillance of journalists, human rights activists, or other perceived regime critics. Just as states have the duty to protect human rights, businesses have a responsibility, too. Thus, they should work to avoid their products or services being used to abuse human rights. President Biden has affirmed that "American leadership must meet this new moment of advancing authoritarianism." This commitment includes working to help U.S. companies avoid fueling authoritarian practices, stemming the use of new technological tools for repression, and giving citizens tools to improve their digital security. If confirmed, I will uphold this commitment and work with our bilateral partners to promote respect for and protect human rights.

Question. The U.S.-Israel Security Assistance Cooperation Act passed in the FY21 NDAA allows the United States to waive statutory caps on the annual transfer of precision-guided munitions to Israel under section 514(b) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2321h(b)) under emergency circumstances. Would you consider a one front war with Hamas an emergency circumstance? A two front war with Hamas and Hezbollah? How do we balance U.S. PGM requirements and Israel's requirements?

Answer. The President has made clear that the United States supports Israel's legitimate right to defend itself and I understand the administration is prepared to support President Biden's commitment to ensure this. While any escalation that risks war is not in our interests, I cannot speak to hypothetical questions.

United Nations

Question. In 2012, you sent a letter to the Senate Appropriations Committee arguing against efforts to distinguish between Palestinian displaced by the conflict that led to the creation of Israel in 1948 and their descendants, who the U.N. currently classifies as refugees. This distinction would reduce the number of UNRWA registered refugees from 5 million to 30,000.

- Do you still maintain that efforts to limit those who can claim UNRWA refugee status would undermine U.S. interests in advancing discussions between Israel and the Palestinian Authority?

Answer. Yes. My understanding is that the status of Palestinian refugees remains a highly sensitive issue among Palestinians and their supporters, including U.S. regional allies such as Jordan.

Question. Who, in your view, should classify as an UNRWA refugee?

Answer. My understanding is that the United States recognizes UNRWA's definition of Palestinian refugees for the purposes of UNRWA's operations. UNRWA's definition of "Palestine refugees" is: "[P]ersons whose normal place of residence was Palestine during the period of June 1, 1946 to May 15, 1948, and who lost both home and means of livelihood as a result of the 1948 conflict." Descendants of eligible male "Palestine refugees" are eligible for registration with UNRWA for the purpose of accessing services. I understand this approach to including descendants is similar to that used by UNHCR in other protracted refugee situations, such as Afghanistan and Somalia.

Question. Why does UNRWA require 10,000 more staff to advocate its regional mission than UNHCR to advance its global mission?

Answer. UNRWA's mandate is set by the U.N. General Assembly and is to provide essential services directly to Palestinian refugees in the five regions it covers. Unlike UNHCR, which delivers most services to refugees through sub-partners, UNRWA employees include schoolteachers and health care workers who provide the services directly to beneficiaries.

Question. Do you believe UNRWA should be absorbed by UNHCR, given UNHCR's efficiency and infrastructure?

Answer. UNRWA's mandate is set by the U.N. General Assembly and is to provide essential services directly to Palestinian refugees in the five regions it covers. Unlike UNHCR, which works to deliver most services to refugees through sub-partners, UNRWA employees include schoolteachers and health care workers who provide services directly to beneficiaries. UNHCR's mandate focuses on seeking durable solutions (such as resettlement, repatriation, and local integration) for refugees, which cannot be adequately applied in the Palestinian context as these matters are final status issues to be negotiated directly between Israel and the Palestinians.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to working with the appropriate Congressional committees prior to any consultations related to new U.S. contributions to UNRWA?

Answer. The President and the Secretary have been clear that the administration is committed to working with Congress. I understand the Department has regularly engaged with Congressional committees since resuming humanitarian assistance to the Palestinian people. If confirmed, I am committed to supporting the continuation of this approach.

Question. How do you plan to work with UNRWA to advance reform, particularly as relates to anti-Semitic educational content of text books?

Answer. I condemn incitement of violence and anti-Semitism in any form. U.N. agencies, including UNRWA, do not develop their own curriculum, but use the curriculum of host governments. When concepts contrary to U.N. principles are identified in host governments' education materials, UNRWA provides instructions and supplementary materials for its staff to address the issue. If confirmed, I will emphasize the importance of following humanitarian principles, including neutrality, in discussions with UNRWA.

Question. In 1997, the Palestinian Authority signed an agreement to allow the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) to establish a Liaison officer in Ramallah, and subsequently upgraded relations admitting the PA as a full member state in 2011. In response, both the U.S. and Israel withdrew their member status.

- The Biden administration is requesting a waiver to allow the U.S. to re-join the body. In your view, should the United States be a member of UNESCO?

Answer. The President has stated he believes firmly that more can be accomplished by working within U.N. organizations than outside. However, I cannot speak to the administration's review of U.S. policy on UNESCO.

Question. Section 410, Title IV of the FY 94–95 Foreign Relations Authorization Act (P.L. 103-236) prohibits the U.S. from making any voluntary or assessed contribution to the U.N. or any affiliated organization which grants full membership to an entity which lacks “the internationally attributes of statehood” like the Palestinian Authority. If confirmed, can you commit to ensuring no U.S. funds are used to make a contribution to UNESCO or any other U.N. body that grants the PA full membership status?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that all our policies, including with respect to U.N. contributions, are consistent with U.S. interests and applicable U.S. law.

Question. How, in your view, should the United States address concerns around the body's politicization and alleged anti-democratic leanings? What specific reforms should UNESCO pursue before the United States rejoins the body?

Answer. I understand the administration has been reviewing various aspects of its multilateral engagement. UNESCO leadership has made progress in helping member states avoid politicized debate on Middle East questions and should continue its efforts to counter any anti-Israel bias in UNESCO decisions and resolutions. UNESCO should continue to build on its efforts to promote transparency and accountability in its personnel and financial management practices.

Question. Recently, the Palestinian Authority threatened action to circumvent ascension protocols and seek a change in their status at the U.N.

- Do you believe this action promotes the Middle East peace process and serves the needs of the Palestinian people?

Answer. As a matter of principle, there are no shortcuts to Palestinian statehood outside of direct negotiations between the parties. This includes counterproductive unilateral steps to gain membership as a state in U.N. specialized agencies and other international organizations.

Question. In your view, what consequences should the Palestinians face if they continue to attempt to gain membership in U.N. agencies?

Answer. While I cannot speak to hypotheticals, if confirmed, I will underscore to the Palestinians that unproductive, unilateral steps are not a shortcut to Palestinian statehood.

Question. If confirmed, can you commit to working to prevent the Palestinian Authorities' pursuit of full membership in U.N. entities?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will underscore to the Palestinian leadership that unproductive, unilateral steps are not a shortcut to Palestinian statehood.

Question. In 2018, the Trump administration withdrew from the United Nations Human Rights Council (UNHRC) citing "chronic anti-Israel bias." Since, the Biden administration has re-engaged with the body, claiming U.S. absence did nothing to address its disproportionate focus on Israel. Do you share the Trump administration's assessment regarding the UNHRC's reported anti-Israel bias? What steps should the U.S. take to improve the UNHRC's impartiality?

Answer. If confirmed, consistent with administration policy, I will oppose efforts to unfairly single out or delegitimize Israel through one-sided resolutions, reports, and other actions across the United Nations, including the Security Council, the General Assembly, the Human Rights Council, and other bodies. When we have had a seat at the table, we have been able to advocate on Israel's behalf, and we have seen changes like a reduction in the number of resolutions targeting Israel.

Question. What are your views on the U.N. Human Rights Council's decision to open a commission of inquiry the wake of the 11 day Israel-Gaza conflict in May?

Answer. I understand that the United States strongly opposed the special session of the U.N. Human Rights Council following the escalation in Gaza in May. It exemplifies the Council's disproportionate focus on Israel. I believe the establishment of an open-ended Commission of Inquiry distracts from the diplomatic work necessary to provide greater dignity, freedom, and prosperity for Israelis and Palestinians, and ensure that terrorist organizations, including Hamas, do not exploit the situation, including by indiscriminate firing of rockets, to further their own destructive aims. If confirmed, I will work closely with Israel and likeminded partners to influence the scope and timeline of this Commission as part of broader efforts to ensure Israel is treated fairly by the Human Rights Council, in line with other U.N. member states.

Question. Do you support U.N. Security Council Resolution 2334?

Answer. If confirmed, I will oppose, as I understand the administration does already, efforts to unfairly single out or delegitimize Israel through one-sided resolutions, reports, and other actions across the United Nations, including the Security Council, the General Assembly, the Human Rights Council, and other bodies. Equally, I will firmly oppose any unilateral provocative actions that risk sparking more violence and that undermine prospects for a just, durable resolution of the conflict between Palestinians and Israelis, which ultimately requires two states. I will work to preserve the path to a two-state solution as the best way to ensure Israel's future as a Jewish and democratic state and to give the Palestinians the state they seek. I will also continue and sustain diplomatic engagement on the issue of settlements.

Question. In March, the International Criminal Court (ICC) prosecutor opened an investigation into possible war crimes allegedly committed in the West Bank and Gaza. Do you believe that the ICC should be investigating a case involving alleged Israeli actions in the Palestinian territories? If yes, please explain.

Answer. The United States shares the goals of the International Criminal Court (ICC) in promoting accountability for the worst crimes known to humanity. Further, the United States has always taken the position that the ICC's jurisdiction should be reserved for countries that consent to it, or that are referred by the U.N. Security Council. I understand the administration continues to disagree strongly with the ICC's actions relating to the Palestinian situation.

Question. Do you believe that the ICC has jurisdiction to investigate or bring to trial Israeli service members, officials, or other Israeli citizens? If yes, please explain.

Answer. The United States has always taken the position that the ICC's jurisdiction should be reserved for countries that consent to it, or that are referred by the U.N. Security Council.

Question. Do you believe the ICC's reputation has been diminished by recent attempts to prosecute United States and Israeli nationals? If no, please explain.

Answer. The United States has always taken the position that the ICC's jurisdiction should be reserved for countries that consent to it, or that are referred by the U.N. Security Council.

Abraham Accords

Question. What is your opinion on the Abraham Accords? What, if anything, has hampered additional normalization agreements?

Answer. I welcome and strongly support the Abraham Accords and normalization agreements between Israel and countries in the Arab and Muslim world. While identifying new opportunities and negotiating agreements takes time, if confirmed I am committed to working with countries across the region to build on existing relationships and develop new ones, including by highlighting the tangible benefits of relations with Israel and leveraging the wide range of diplomatic tools at our disposal. I also look forward to learning from Israel's new partners in the region to better understand how we can work together to advance new normalization agreements and strengthen existing ones.

Question. How do you plan to operationalizing and expanding the existing Abraham Accords to ensure all parties reap tangible economic and security benefits?

Answer. The Abraham Accords and normalization agreements between Israel and countries in the Arab and Muslim world have already made an important contribution to regional security and economic development, yet even more is possible. If confirmed, I will work with Israel and neighboring Arab countries that have normalized relations with Israel to identify and capitalize on the many new opportunities that these agreements have unlocked.

Question. Please provide you assessment of the progress that's been made with respect to the normalization agreement between Israel and Sudan.

Answer. While the Israel-Sudan normalization agreement is yet to be finalized, I understand the two governments have made significant progress towards improving their relations since announcing their intention to normalize their relations on October 23, 2020. On January 6, 2020, Sudan signed the Abraham Accords declaration of principles in a ceremony in Khartoum. On April 19, 2021, Sudan officially repealed its 1958 law boycotting Israel. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the Government of Israel to support the full implementation of the normalization agreement.

Question. Please provide you assessment of the progress that's been made with respect to the normalization agreement between Israel and Morocco.

Answer. Since announcing their intention to normalize their relations on December 10, 2020, I understand Israel and Morocco have made significant progress in deepening their relations. On January 16, Israel reopened its Liaison Office in Morocco and Israel's Chargé d'Affaires to Morocco, Dr. David Govrin, arrived in Rabat four days later. On February 9, Moroccan envoy Abderrahim Beyyoudh arrived in Tel Aviv to reopen Morocco's liaison office. In August 2021, the countries agreed to open embassies in the future. This diplomatic progress has been matched by similar progress in improving economic and social ties. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the Government of Israel to ensure the strength of the Israeli-Moroccan partnership continues to grow.

Question. Please provide you assessment of the progress that's been made with respect to the normalization agreement between Israel and the United Arab Emirates (UAE). Which sectors do you feel should be targeted moving forward as we continue to build upon the historic normalization agreement between Israel and UAE?

Answer. Since normalizing relations, I understand Israel and the UAE have enjoyed robust cooperation across a range of areas. Israel opened its embassy in the UAE on January 25, 2021 and officially inaugurated it on June 29 during Israeli Foreign Minister Lapid's visit to Abu Dhabi, the first official visit by an Israeli foreign minister since the announcement of the Abraham Accords. On February 26, the UAE's first ambassador to the State of Israel, Mohammad Mahmoud Al Khajah, was sworn in and he arrived in Israel on March 1. On March 12, the UAE announced it was setting up a $10 billion investment fund aimed at "strategic sectors" in Israel. On May 31, Israel and the UAE announced an agreement on a tax treaty. If confirmed I look forward to identifying new ways to deepen Israel-Emirati cooperation, including increasing trade and investment, building new vehicles to support academic and people-to-people exchanges, and expanding security cooperation.

Question. Please provide your assessment of the progress that's been made with respect to the normalization agreement between Israel and Bahrain?

Answer. Since normalizing relations, I understand Israel and Bahrain have signed over a dozen Memoranda of Understanding covering cooperative initiatives in sectors ranging from healthcare to education. On March 30, King Hamad bin Isa Al Khalifa of Bahrain issued a Royal Decree appointing Ambassador Khalid Yusuf Al-

Jalahma as head of Bahrain's diplomatic mission to Israel, the first Bahraini envoy to the country. On September 3, Eitan Na'eh was nominated as Israel's first ambassador to Bahrain, the same day that Bahrain's Khalid Yusuf Al-Jalahma presented his credentials to Foreign Minister Yair Lapid. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the Government of Israel to nurture and grow this important new partnership.

Question. If confirmed, how do you plan to leverage the existing normalization agreements between Israel and its Gulf Arab neighbors, as well as Morocco and Sudan, to advocate for other countries to reach similar agreements with Israel?

Answer. I welcome and strongly support the Abraham Accords and normalization agreements between Israel and countries in the Arab and Muslim world. If confirmed, I am committed to working with countries across the region to build on existing relationships and develop new ones, including by highlighting the tangible benefits of relations with Israel and leveraging the wide range of diplomatic tools at our disposal. I also look forward to learning from Israel's new partners in the region to better understand how we can work together to advance new normalization agreements and strengthen existing ones.

Question. In your view, what tangible benefits does normalizing relations with Israel offer to Muslim Majority countries in the Middle East and beyond?

Answer. The Abraham Accords and normalization agreements between Israel and countries in the Arab and Muslim world have made an important contribution to regional security and economic development and support U.S. national security interests. The Abraham Accords have empowered our partners in the region to work together on their shared security interests, created new channels for peaceful dialogue and exchange, and fostered a broader culture of tolerance across the region. They are also an engine of economic growth, having spurred new trade and investment deals that previously would have been impossible. Over time, these new economic initiatives will create opportunities for the young and marginalized communities across the region. As more countries in the Middle East and beyond normalize their relations with Israel, more opportunities for cooperation and economic development will emerge.

Question. If confirmed as U.S. Ambassador to Israel, you will have the opportunity to interact with both the UAE and Bahraini Ambassadors to Israel—in addition to potentially hosting delegations or meeting with diplomats from other countries normalizing or considering normalization with Israel. Will you commit to meeting regularly with your Abraham Accords counterparts?

Answer. I believe it is important to foster and promote the Abraham Accords and normalization agreements by identifying ways to strengthen and expand them. If confirmed as U.S. Ambassador to Israel, I look forward to meeting regularly with my counterparts from Abraham Accords countries to capitalize on these opportunities.

Question. Some argue that the Trump administration's exit from the nuclear deal and maximum pressure against Iran coupled with its clear pro-Israel policies set the conditions for normalization under the Abraham Accords. Please provide your perspectives on this argument.

Answer. The Abraham Accords have empowered our partners in the region to work together on their shared security interests, created new channels for peaceful dialogue and exchange, and fostered a broader culture of tolerance across the region. They are also an engine of economic growth, having spurred new trade and investment deals that previously would have been impossible. I believe these shared interests, including an interest in working together preserve stability in the region in the face of malign actors, were the core drivers behind the Abraham Accords and will continue to drive new normalization agreements in the future.

Question. Some have argued that the Abraham Accords may set the conditions for a new multilateral security construct in the Middle East focused on the shared threat from Iran, countering violent extremist organizations, and transnational organized crime. What are your thoughts on the potential for new security constructs stemming from the Accords and what shape might these take? What do you see as your role as the Ambassador to Israel in driving these new constructs?

Answer. I am committed to helping Israel build partnerships that further integrate Israel into the region. Any sustainable regional economic and security dialogue will need to include Israel, and normalization efforts have opened that door. If confirmed, I will work with Israel to identify ways to advance a structured regional dialogue that explores ways to reduce tensions, create pathways to de-escalation, and manage mistrust.

Egypt/Jordan

Question. Please provide your assessment of the Egyptian-Israeli relations? What are some of the key frictions points in your view? What steps should the United States take to resolve these issues?

Answer. Peace between Egypt and Israel has lasted for more than 40 years and both countries have extensive areas of cooperation, including security, intelligence sharing, economic and energy. I understand the Biden-Harris administration is eager to explore ways to support development of a warmer peace between Egypt and Israel, including through greater people-to-people and civil society ties. If confirmed, I look forward to working with my Egyptian counterpart and Israeli officials to strengthen all parts of this partnership.

Question. In your view, what role does the Multilateral Forces Observer Mission (MFO) play in maintaining regional stability? Should the U.S. maintain existing levels of support?

Answer. The Multinational Force and Observers (MFO) remains essential to both the treaty relationship between Israel and Egypt and the enduring peace and security within the region. The MFO continues to work as an intermediary between the treaty parties, enabling open and frequent communication between them to maintain strong mutual trust and cooperation. The MFO promotes confidence in the treaty, maintains dialogue between the parties, and assists them during a period when both face security challenges. If confirmed, I will continue U.S. support for the MFO and its critical mission.

Question. Please provide your assessment of the Jordanian-Israeli relations? What are some of the key friction points in your view? What steps should the United States take to resolve these issues?

Answer. Israel's relationship with Jordan is both vital and complex. Over the 30 years since they signed a peace agreement, they have forged strategic ties and developed cross-border business ties that employ thousands of Jordanians, signed valuable contracts exporting Israeli natural gas to Jordan, and have collaborated on the allocation of scarce water resources. While domestic considerations tied to Jordan's large Palestinian population have made it difficult for Jordan to fully embrace and grow its relationship with Israel, both appreciate the need for deeper ties. If confirmed, I look forward to working with my Jordanian and Israeli counterparts as I work towards strengthening all parts of this partnership. I will also work to improve coordination between the two countries at the Haram Al-Sharif/Temple Mount.

Question. Since 1967, Jordan's custodial role over Temple Mount has helped maintain peace at one of the region's most contentious and divisive religious sites. For decades, religious worship at Temple Mount has been restricted to Muslims but in recent weeks the Israeli Government has authorized a growing number of Jewish worshippers to practice there.

- To what extent do you feel this shift in policy threatens to trigger further instability in East Jerusalem?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to continuing the U.S. recognition of the historic status quo on the Haram al-Sharif/Temple Mount and to handle all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

Question. What specific steps would you propose the U.S. takes to address concerns over worship at Temple Mount? What role should Jordan play in these discussions?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration made clear that it recognizes the historic status quo on the Haram al-Sharif/Temple Mount, and it continues to respect the 1994 Israel-Jordan peace treaty, which recognizes the special role of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan in Muslim holy shrines in Jerusalem.

While I am not privy to diplomatic discussions between the U.S. Government and its foreign counterparts, I understand that the U.S. Government hopes to partner with its counterparts to express the importance of maintaining calm and keeping flashpoints like the situation in Jerusalem-be it in the Old City, on the Temple Mount, or elsewhere-from igniting the situation.

If confirmed, I am committed to continuing the U.S. recognition of the historic status quo on the Haram al-Sharif/Temple Mount and to handling all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

Lebanon

Question. To what extent do you feel UNIFIL's current mandate is sufficient to oversee safety and security along the so-called Blue Line? Are there specific reforms to the mandate you feel the U.S. should pursue to help address Israel's ongoing security concerns?

Answer. The United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) plays a critical role in ensuring security and stability along the Blue Line, limiting Hizballah's operations in southern Lebanon, and preventing escalation between Lebanon and Israel. I was glad to see that the United States worked with France and other partners to amend the mandate to allow UNIFIL to provide food, fuel, and medicine to the Lebanese Armed Forces, a key partner that provides an important counterweight to Hizballah's argument that it is the legitimate defender of Lebanon. Despite the success that UNIFIL has had in implementing its mandate to date, Hizballah continues to impede UNIFIL's access to key points along the Blue Line and openly flouts the arms embargo established under UNSCR 1701. If confirmed, I will work with UNIFIL and international partners to strengthen the mandate and enable UNIFIL to fully implement all aspects of that mandate.

Question. If confirmed, how do you plan to advance efforts to resume U.S.-mediated maritime talks between Israel and Lebanon? How do you feel the change in administration in both Israel and Lebanon impacts the likelihood of negotiations making tangible progress towards a viable resolution?

Answer. The maritime boundary is a decision for both Israel and Lebanon to make. The administration remains committed to working with the parties toward an agreement benefiting both countries.

Question. Hezbollah threatens Israel with precision-guided munitions often stored in densely packed urban areas. Should the United States sanction Hezbollah under the Sanctioning the Use of Defenseless Shields Act of 2018 (P.L. 115-348)? Why or why not? How do you address the PGM threat to Israel?

Answer. The U.S. commitment to Israel is ironclad and, if confirmed, I will work to ensure the United States uses all the tools at our disposal to confront security threats to Israel, including from Hizballah. The U.S. Government remains committed to imposing sanctions on Hizballah and its financial supporters and enablers, and the Department of the Treasury's Office of Foreign Assets Control's designations on September 17, 2021 of members of a major financing network of Hizballah demonstrate this administration's commitment to continuing to target Hizballah's financial networks around the world. If confirmed, I also commit to consult with Congress about the range of U.S. efforts to counter Hizballah and support Israel's right to self-defense.

The West Bank and the Palestinian Authority

Question. In 2016, John Kerry argued there would be no "separate peace" between Israel and Arabs without first solving the issue of Palestinian statehood.

- What are your views on Palestinian statehood and its ties to additional normalization agreements?

Answer. I believe that a two-state solution is the best way to ensure equal measures of freedom, security and prosperity for Israelis and Palestinians. By making Israel more secure and opening new channels for constructive dialogue and diplomacy between Israel and the Arab world, normalization agreements also bring with them the potential to create new opportunities to advance a negotiated peace between Israelis and Palestinians. Similarly, making progress towards a two-state solution may hasten new normalization agreements. If confirmed, I will work to capitalize on all opportunities to advance peaceful co-existence between Israel and its Arab neighbors, as well as help create the conditions for direct negotiations of a two-state solution between Israelis and Palestinians.

Question. Doesn't re-inserting Palestinian statehood back into the peace process hinder prospects of further normalizations with Israel?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to working with countries across the region to build on existing relationships and develop new ones, including by highlighting the tangible benefits of relations with Israel and leveraging the wide range of diplomatic tools at our disposal. I also look forward to engaging with Israel's new partners in the region to find ways to improve the lives of Israelis and Palestinians alike to help create the conditions for a durable two-state solution.

Question. What is your assessment of Palestinian leadership and its ability to reach consensus between Gaza and the West Bank on issues of statehood and support for terrorism?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with Israel and the Palestinian Authority to restore calm in the West Bank and Gaza and keep flash point issues from flaring into violence. There are issues of good governance and accountability that affect the standing of the Palestinian Authority in the eyes of the Palestinian public, and that lie within the PA's hands to advance; there are at the same time steps that the Israeli Government can consider for enhancing the role of the PA in delivering services and economic opportunities. It is incumbent upon both sides to adopt an affirmative and practical approach to the conflict that encourages constructive, positive steps for providing the Palestinian people—whether in Gaza or the West Bank—greater economic opportunities while restoring the conditions that will make possible eventual direct negotiations toward a two-state solution.

Question. In your view, how do Israeli-Arab normalization agreements affect the prospects for Israel-Palestinian peace negotiations?

Answer. I believe that a two-state solution is the best way to ensure equal measures of freedom, security and prosperity for Israelis and Palestinians. By making Israel more secure and opening new channels for constructive dialogue and diplomacy between Israel and the Arab world, normalization agreements also bring with them the potential to create new opportunities to advance a negotiated peace between Israelis and Palestinians. Similarly, making progress towards a two-state solution may hasten new normalization agreements. If confirmed, I will work to capitalize on all opportunities to advance peaceful co-existence between Israel and its Arab neighbors, as well as help create the conditions for direct negotiations of a two-state solution between Israelis and Palestinians.

Question. In 2012, you claimed “final status issues can and must only be resolved between Israelis and Palestinians in direct negotiations.” Do you still feel this is the case? If so, how would you support efforts to facilitate direct talks between the Israeli and Palestinians?

Answer. I believe that final status issues can and must only be resolved between Israelis and Palestinians in direct negotiations. If confirmed, I will work to capitalize on all opportunities to advance peaceful co-existence between Israel and its Arab neighbors, as well as help create the conditions for direct negotiations of a two-state solution between Israelis and Palestinians.

Question. What do you view as the proper role for the U.S. to play in assisting the parties' efforts to reach an agreement?

Answer. I believe the United States is in a position to help create the conditions for direct negotiations of a two-state solution between Israelis and Palestinians, which is the best way to ensure equal measures of freedom, security, and prosperity for both people.

Question. Do you agree that the only way to reach a lasting two-state resolution to this conflict is through direct, bilateral negotiations between Israelis and Palestinians rather than one imposed by outside actors?

Answer. I believe that a two-state solution achieved through direct, bilateral negotiations between Israelis and Palestinians is the best way to ensure equal measures of freedom, security and prosperity for both people.

Question. What is your assessment of Palestinian leadership and its ability to reach consensus between Gaza and the West Bank on issues of statehood and terrorism?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with Israel and the Palestinian Authority to restore calm in the West Bank and Gaza, and keep flash point issues from flaring into violence. There are issues of good governance and accountability that affect the standing of the Palestinian Authority in the eyes of the Palestinian public, and that lie within the PA's hands to advance; there are at the same time steps that the Israeli Government can consider for enhancing the role of the PA in delivering services and economic opportunities. It is incumbent upon both sides to adopt an affirmative and practical approach to the conflict that encourages constructive, positive steps for providing the Palestinian people—whether in Gaza or the West Bank—greater economic opportunities while restoring the conditions that will make possible eventual direct negotiations toward a two-state solution.

Question. In August 2021, Israel rolled out several measures designed to strengthen the Palestinian Authority, including the extension of a $150 million dollar loan to the occupied West Bank. How can the U.S. work with the Israeli Government to ensure none of these funds are used to support the abhorrent pay for slay program?

Answer. Both the United States and Israel are likeminded in their opposition towards this abhorrent practice. If confirmed, I am committed to working with the Israeli Government to ensure funds are not misused to support this heinous practice.

Question. The Palestinian Authority (PA) and the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO) continue to incentivize and celebrate the use of violence against Israel through the egregious “pay to slay” program. In 2019 alone, the Palestinians spent $151 million dollars to support imprisoned terrorists and their families. In addition, to these prisoner payments, the PA and PLO maintain a “martyrs’ fund” to help support the families of terrorist killed while carrying out violent acts against the Israeli state. There is concern the Biden administration’s decision to re-establish relations with the Palestinians in a manner that failed to extract concessions with respect to their pay to slay program was a missed opportunity. How has the Biden administration’s outreach set conditions for any reforms on pay to slay?

Answer. While I am not in a position to comment on private diplomatic discussions, this administration and I, are absolutely committed to working to end the practice of Palestinian prisoner and “martyr” payments in a manner that addresses longstanding U.S. and international concerns. If confirmed, I would build on the work thus far, through sustained diplomatic engagement and pressure, underscoring that part of resetting the U.S.-Palestinian relationship is seeing reform of this heinous practice.

Question. Despite opening the aperture of ESF and INCLE to the Palestinians, the State Department has achieved no progress on the pay-to-slay policy. Please provide your roadmap for addressing this egregious practice.

Answer. I believe the Palestinian practice of prisoner and martyr payments is abhorrent. This administration and I are absolutely committed to working to end the practice of Palestinian prisoner and “martyr” payments in a manner that addresses longstanding U.S. and international concerns. If confirmed, I would build on the work thus far, through sustained diplomatic engagement and pressure, underscoring that part of resetting the U.S.-Palestinian relationship is seeing reform of this heinous practice.

Question. If confirmed, can you commit to making efforts to address the Palestinian Authority’s pay for slay program a priority?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, pursuing reform of this heinous practice is a priority for me.

Question. What is your position on the viability of a two-State solution? Is it your sense that the tenure between the Israeli Government and the Palestinian authority has changed under the new administration led by Prime Minister Naftali Bennett?

Answer. I believe that a two-state solution is the best way to ensure equal measures of freedom, security and prosperity for Israelis and Palestinians alike. The administration has been clear that Israelis and Palestinians alike equally deserve to live in freedom, security, and prosperity. As such, the United States is strongly encouraging both the Palestinians and the Israelis to avoid unilateral actions including settlement activity, annexation, and demolitions, as well as incitement to violence and providing compensation for individuals imprisoned for acts of terrorism. If confirmed, I am committed to taking an affirmative and practical approach that encourages constructive, positive steps to keep the possibility of a negotiated two-state solution alive.

Question. Please provide your views on the relative benefits and risks of ESF and INCLE expenditures targeted towards the Palestinian people and security forces.

Answer. Promoting democracy, human rights, and fundamental freedoms advances our national security. Our most valued, dependable, and effective partner governments and security forces around the world uphold democratic values, respect human rights and fundamental freedoms, and hold those who violate human rights accountable. I believe that we must continue to create and maintain strong security relationships with such partners through diplomacy, measured assistance, and frequent cooperation. Institutional reforms supported by U.S. security sector assistance are critical in building the capabilities necessary to maintain stability in the West Bank and improve the Palestinian Authority security forces. If confirmed, I am committed to ensuring that our security sector assistance further supports efforts to uphold the rule of law and the protection of human rights.

Gaza Strip and Hamas

Question. In your view, does Hamas' targeting of civilian infrastructure in Israel constitute war crimes?

Answer. Hamas's heinous rocket attacks on Israel in May only reinforced the Biden administration's ironclad resolve on Israel's security. I unequivocally condemn all rocket fire into Israel by terrorist groups Hamas and PIJ, and human rights abuses being committed in Gaza where Hamas, a U.S.-designated foreign terrorist organization, exercises de facto authority. The U.S. Government supports Israel's inherent right of self-defense, including against rocket attacks from Hamas and other Gaza-based terrorist groups. If confirmed, I will be committed to stabilizing Gaza to prevent further conflict and loss of civilian life.

Question. Hamas fighters reportedly position military tunnels and deploy rocket launches in close proximity to civilian infrastructure, like hospitals, schools, and mosques to limit the likelihood of an Israeli counterstrike. Is Hamas responsible for using Palestinian civilians as human shields to protect its military assets from Israeli counter strikes?

Answer. I unequivocally condemn all rocket fire into Israel by terrorist groups Hamas and PIJ, and human rights abuses being committed in Gaza where Hamas, a U.S.-designated foreign terrorist organization, exercises de facto authority. The President has made clear that the U.S. Government supports Israel's inherent right of self-defense, including against rocket attacks from Hamas and other Gaza-based terrorist groups. If confirmed, I will be committed to stabilizing Gaza to prevent further conflict and loss of civilian life.

Question. The Sanctioning the Use of Defenseless Shields Act of 2018 (P.L. 115-348) mandates sanctions on any member of Hezbollah or Hamas who "knowingly orders, controls, or otherwise directs the use of civilians protected as such by the law of war to shield military objectives from attack." Under the law, the President is required to submit to Congress a list of, and impose financial sanctions on, each foreign person involved in the use of human shields by Hamas or Hezbollah "on or after the date of enactment." Despite widespread reporting on Hamas's use of human shields, as of September 21, 2021, no action has been pursued under this act. If confirmed, can you commit to advocating for the imposition of sanctions under The Sanctioning the Use of Defenseless Shields Act of 2018 (P.L. 115-348)? Please provide your assessment of Qatar's role with respect to Gaza. To what extent do you see it as a stabilizing influence?

Answer. The President has made clear that the United States supports Israel's inherent right of self-defense, including against rocket attacks from Hamas and other Gaza-based terrorist groups, and unequivocally condemns Hamas's human rights abuses in Gaza. If confirmed, I will support efforts by across the Government to use the tools at our disposal, including sanctions authorities, in countering terrorist actors like Hamas. We must work to stabilize Gaza to prevent future conflict. We can do this by working with partners, such as Qatar, through meeting humanitarian needs, including increasing access to water, sanitation, and hygiene services, and increasing levels of electricity and freedom of movement, while facilitating political and physical reintegration in the West Bank. Qatar has played a stabilizing role in Gaza, and I believe their strong partnership with the Government of Israel will continue to help stabilize the situation.

Question. What is your position on Qatari assistance to the Gaza Strip? Can you commit to working with the U.N. and the Government of Israel to ensure it IS delivered in a manner that's consistent with Israeli and U.S. national security interests?

Answer. I understand the United States is committed to working with the international donor community to support the Palestinian people. If confirmed, I am committed to working with the United Nations and Government of Israel to ensure assistance to Gaza is delivered a manner that is consistent with U.S. and Israeli national security interests.

Question. To what extent is assistance to Gaza subject to diversion by Hamas?

Answer. I understand the U.S. Government provides assistance in a manner consistent with U.S. law and does not direct assistance to Hamas. The Department and the U.S. Agency for International Development have a robust vetting process to mitigate the risk that U.S. Government resources could inadvertently support Hamas or other terrorist groups. In addition, our development and humanitarian partners in the West Bank and Gaza have aggressive risk-mitigation systems in place aimed at ensuring U.S. taxpayer-funded assistance reaches its intended recipients.

Question. Please provide your assessment of Egypt's role in Gaza and its relationship with Hamas.

Answer. I believe that Egypt plays an important stabilizing role in Gaza, exhibited by Egypt's critical efforts to achieve a cessation of hostilities during the conflict in May.

Question. In August 2021, Egypt reportedly closed its main border point with the Gaza Strip, Rafah crossing, over "differences" between Cairo and Hamas with respect to the latest Egypt brokered ceasefire. Specifically, officials have cited concerns over the lack of progress in indirect talks with Israel following the 11 day war in May and efforts to reconcile the militant Palestinian factions that dominate Gaza Strip. Do you share these concerns?

Answer. We must work to stabilize Gaza to prevent future conflict. We can do this through meeting humanitarian needs, including increasing access to water, sanitation, and hygiene services and increasing levels of electricity and freedom of movement, while facilitating political and physical reintegration in the West Bank. An effective humanitarian response requires adequate access to Gaza to allow reputable, vetted organizations to meet emergency needs; continued and regular opening of border crossings; fast-track processing of humanitarian convoys; and the unimpeded movement of relief and recovery supplies, including critical goods required to meet the needs of Palestinian families.

Question. What is your position on the blockade over Gaza that Egypt and Israel imposed following Hamas's ascension to power in 2007? In your view, should this blockade be lifted? If so, on what basis?

Answer. I believe we must work to stabilize Gaza to prevent future conflict. We can do this through meeting humanitarian needs, including increasing access to water, sanitation, and hygiene services and increasing levels of electricity and freedom of movement, while facilitating political and physical reintegration with the West Bank. If confirmed, I am committed to working with the international community and Government of Israel to support these humanitarian efforts.

Question. Given Hamas' continued control over Gaza, what are some of the obstacles to post-conflict recovery?

Answer. Hamas is designated as a Foreign Terrorist Organization in accordance with section 219 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (INA) and as a Specially Designated Global Terrorist under Executive Order 13224. I understand U.S. engagement in the West Bank and Gaza and with the Palestinians is consistent with U.S. law. Given Hamas's role, many partners have similar restrictions on operating in Gaza.

Question. Do you agree that there are significant challenges to assisting with long-term reconstruction in the Hamas-ruled Gaza Strip? In your view, what impact would reconstruction efforts have on Hamas' credibility and legitimacy?

Answer. Yes, I agree there are significant challenges to assisting with long-term reconstruction in Gaza and I understand U.S. engagement in the West Bank and Gaza and with the Palestinians is consistent with U.S. law. I also understand relief and recovery efforts are done in coordination with the Palestinian Authority, Government of Israel, and international donors in a manner that does not permit Hamas to restock its arsenal or achieve any legitimacy.

Question. Please address concerns that long-term reconstruction projects in Gaza would merely serve to bolster Hamas' rule much to the detriment of the Palestinian people?

Answer. We must work to stabilize Gaza to prevent future conflict. I believe relief and recovery efforts should be done in coordination with the Palestinian Authority, Government of Israel, and international donors in a manner that does not permit Hamas to restock its arsenal.

Iran and Its Proxies

Question. Please provide an assessment of the threat Iran poses to the security of Israel, including a detailed assessment of the extent of support it provides to its proxies, like Hezbollah and Palestinian Islamic Jihad (PIJ) which pose similar dangers to Israeli sovereignty and the safety of its citizens.

Answer. Israel believes Iran is the greatest threat to its security. As Secretary Blinken and other senior U.S. officials have said, the United States is committed to ensuring Iran never acquires a nuclear weapon, and believes diplomacy, in coordination with our allies and regional partners, is the best path to achieve that goal. An Iran with a nuclear weapon is likely to act even more provocatively when it comes to these issues. The administration has fundamental problems with Iran's actions across a series of issues, including its support for terrorism, its ballistic missile program, its support to armed militant groups, and its destabilizing actions in the region. Our partners in the region share a similar concern.

Question. Please provide your assessment of the threat Hezbollah poses to Israeli security.

Answer. Israel's top national security priorities are forestalling Iran's nuclear ambitions, preventing the proliferation of advanced weaponry across the region, and ending support to terrorist organizations, particularly Hizballah, Hamas, and Palestinian Islamic Jihad. The United States remains unwavering in its commitment to Israel's security. The President and the Secretary have been clear that this administration has fundamental problems with Iran's behavior throughout the region, including acts committed by Iranian-backed militia groups. If confirmed, I commit to working with my Israeli counterparts to strengthen all facets of the U.S.-Israel partnership.

Iran

Question. In your view, should the United States make addressing Iran's support to its proxies like Palestinian Islamic Jihad (PIJ) a priority? If so, how should efforts to limit Iran's regional aggression fit into the Biden administration's efforts to pursue a mutual U.S.-Iranian return to the 2015 Iran Nuclear Agreement, otherwise known as the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA.)

Answer. Palestinian Islamic Jihad (PIJ) and other Iranian-backed terrorist and militant groups pose a serious threat to the security of Israel and to that of the Middle East. The United States is fully committed to working with Israel and our other partners in the region to deter and defend against these threats, using the full spectrum of tools available. Regarding Iran's nuclear program, the administration's goal is first to return to mutual compliance with the JCPOA, and then to build on that to address other areas of concern, including Iran's ballistic missile development and proliferation, and support for terrorism. I support using a variety of policy tools to strengthen the constraints on Iran's nuclear program and address other issues of concern.

Question. Israel faces constant threats from terrorist organizations including Hamas and Palestinian Islamic Jihad (PIJ) in Gaza, Hezbollah in Lebanon, and various Iran backed militia groups in Syria. If confirmed, how do you plan to work with the Government of Israel to address the threat Iran and its proxies pose to Israel's security?

Answer. The President has made clear that the United States remains unwavering in its commitment to Israel's security. The President and the Secretary have also been clear that this administration has fundamental problems with Iran's behavior throughout the region, including acts committed by Iran backed militia groups. If confirmed, I commit to working with my Israeli counterparts to strengthen all parts of the U.S.-Israel partnership.

Question. Do you support Israel's right to defend itself from terrorist attacks?

Answer. Yes. The United States has a long-standing, unshakable commitment to Israel's security.

Question. What role should the U.S. play in safeguarding Israeli sovereignty and security?

Answer. The United States should maintain its unwavering commitment to Israel's security and work to strengthen all aspects of the U.S.-Israel partnership.

Question. Since taking office, President Biden has made facilitating a U.S. return to the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA) a priority for his administration, and, in February, appointed Rob Malley as Special Envoy for Iran to oversee such efforts. Since, Special Envoy Malley has engaged in several rounds of indirect talks in Vienna, Austria aimed at facilitating a mutual U.S.-Iran return to JCPOA.

- After the 2015 Iran Nuclear Deal was signed, the Israeli Government, as with our Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) partners, made clear, both publicly and privately, their discontent over the lack of consultations prior to the U.S. entry into the agreement. If confirmed, can you commit to ensuring the U.S. consults Israel prior to any U.S. re-entry into the JCPOA?

Answer. Yes. I understand that the Department, and in particular Special Envoy for Iran Robert Malley, has been in close contact with our Israeli partners and will continue consulting closely with them throughout this process. I also understand that former U.S. ambassador to Israel Dan Shapiro has also recently joined the State Department and remains in close consultation with Israel over Iran.

Question. In your view, how extensive should these consultations be? To what extent should the U.S. be responsive to Israeli concerns over Iranian proxy activity in the context of talks with Iran?

Answer. I understand that the Department, and in particular Special Envoy Malley and senior advisor Ambassador Dan Shapiro, have been in close contact with, and updated, our Israeli counterparts extensively throughout the negotiations. If confirmed, I will continue to consult deeply and continuously with our Israeli partners on all dimensions of Iran policy.

Question. Further, many have characterized Special Envoy Malley's consultations as "one-way" and not responsive to their concerns. Do you commit to extensive consultations with Israel prior to making concessions to Iran?

Answer. I understand that the Department, and in particular Special Envoy for Iran Robert Malley, and senior advisor Ambassador Dan Shapiro have been in close contact with partners in Israel and among the Gulf Arab states, and will continue consulting closely with these key partners as this process proceeds. Every one of us shares a common interest: seeing to it that Iran never acquires a nuclear weapon.

Question. Can you commit to seeking Israel's concurrence before the U.S. and Iran finalize any arrangement or agreement related to Iran's nuclear program?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to consult deeply and continuously with our Israeli partners on the nuclear negotiations and on preventing Iran from ever acquiring a nuclear weapon.

Question. If confirmed, how will you manage disagreements with Israel over Iran policy?

Answer. I believe the Biden-Harris administration has conducted itself with a great deal of transparency, knowing that the United States and Israel share a common interest: seeing to it that Iran never acquires a nuclear weapon. I believe diplomacy, in coordination with our allies and regional partners, is the best path to achieve that goal.

Question. How do you address criticisms that the Biden administration's decision to re-engage with Iran merely served to isolate Israel and our Gulf partners?

Answer. The Biden—Harris administration has made clear that the United States has an ironclad commitment to Israel's security. Alongside that commitment, the administration is focused on de-escalating tensions, putting out the fires of conflict in Yemen, Libya, and Syria, and enhancing stability throughout the Middle East. The Department has updated Israeli and Gulf counterparts regularly before and after negotiation rounds, and is regularly engaged in discussions on its work to constrain and contain Iran's destabilizing regional activities. In fact, the administration's sustained diplomatic engagement with allies and partners has ensured a more united, better coordinated, and more consistent approach in countering the Iranian threat and advancing our shared goals in the region.

Question. If confirmed, can you commit to working with the Special Envoy for Iran, Rob Malley, to ensure Israeli concerns are addressed in the context of talks aimed at facilitating a U.S.-Iran re-entry into JCPOA? How would you do so?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with Special Envoy Malley and other colleagues in the administration to continue to consult deeply and continuously with our Israeli allies on the nuclear negotiations and on preventing Iran from ever acquiring a nuclear weapon.

Question. The Biden administration has indicated that it will address Iran's ballistic missile program and regional terrorism in follow-on agreements. Should the United States and Iran rejoin the JCPOA, what leverage does the United States possess to encourage follow on agreements? Iran's leadership has refused to address regional terrorism. How likely is Iran to engage in discussions on its ballistic missile program and support for regional terrorism?

Answer. As the President has said, the goal is first to return to mutual compliance with the JCPOA, and then to build on that to address other areas of concern, including Iran's ballistic missile development, proliferation, and support for terrorism using a variety of policy tools to strengthen the constraints on Iran's nuclear program and address other issues of concern. The administration will consult closely with our allies and partners in the region on ways to address this moving forward.

Question. Should the Iranian regime refuse to rejoin the JCPOA, what is “Plan B” to address Iran’s nuclear program, ballistic missile program, and support to terror proxies?

Answer. The administration has made clear that it believes that diplomacy is the best path forward on the nuclear challenge at this time. In the event Iran refuses to return to mutual compliance with the JCPOA, the administration is prepared to leverage all applicable authorities, including sanctions against Iran, as well as the support of allies and partners around the world, to prevent Iran from ever acquiring a nuclear weapon and to defend U.S. vital interests.

Question. Do you support Israel’s freedom to take unilateral military action against Iran’s nuclear program, its terror proxies, and ballistic missile program? Under what conditions would you constrain Israel’s freedom of action?

Answer. The President has made clear that the U.S. commitment to Israel’s security is ironclad. I support Israel’s freedom of action to counter Iran’s destabilizing activities and the United States will not take any action that jeopardizes Israel’s security.

Boycott, Divestment, Sanctions (BDS) Movement

Question. Please provide your assessment of the boycott, divest, sanctions (BDS) movement against Israel.

Answer. This administration and I firmly reject the BDS movement, which unfairly singles out Israel. While the administration will fully and always respect the right to freedom of expression, the United States will be a strong partner in fighting efforts to delegitimize Israel. We will continue to support Israel’s further integration into the international community.???

Question. If confirmed, can you commit to prioritizing efforts to fight boycott, divest, and sanctions (BDS) Israel globally? If so, how would you use your position to do so?

Answer. If confirmed, while respecting the rights of all Americans to free speech, I will continue the tireless work of this administration to firmly reject the BDS movement and boycott laws that unfairly single out Israel and I will continue to support Israel’s further integration into the international community.???

Question. Israeli Prime Minister Naftali Bennett has publicly stated that he will not annex West Bank territory, nor permit it to be incorporated into a Palestinian state, though he does intend to pursue additional construction in the settlements. Do you believe Israeli settlements in the West Bank are illegal? If so, on what grounds?

Answer. The two-state solution is the best way to ensure Israel’s future as a Jewish and democratic state, and to give the Palestinians the state they seek. I firmly oppose any unilateral provocative actions that risk sparking more violence and that undermine prospects for a just, durable resolution of the conflict between Palestinians and Israelis, which ultimately requires two states. I will continue to oppose any unilateral action that undermines the prospects for genuine progress and peace, whether that is settlement activity, home demolitions, annexation of territory, incitement to violence, or compensation for individuals imprisoned for acts of terrorism. I am not in a position to speak to the administration’s legal views. If confirmed, I will work to preserve the path to a two-state solution, as the best way to ensure Israel’s future as a Jewish and democratic state and to give the Palestinians the state they seek.

China

Question. In recent years, commercial ties between Israel and China have grown significantly, as reflected in the Israeli decision to award numerous infrastructure projects to Chinese building conglomerates.

- Please provide your assessment of bilateral relations between Israel and China.

Answer. Strategic competition with the People’s Republic of China is a defining feature of the 21st century. As Israel is a world leader in developing innovative technology with military, civilian, and dual-use applications, I understand the administration remains deeply concerned by PRC attempts to extend influence and acquire dual-use technology through acquisition and investment in Israel.

Question. Specifically, what, if any, concerns do you have about Israeli cooperation with China and the impact on core U.S. national security interests?

Answer. The administration remains deeply concerned by attempts by the People’s Republic of China to extend influence and acquire critical and dual-use technology through acquisitions and investment in Israel. The administration welcomes efforts by all countries to enhance investment in quality infrastructure development. I believe that such an investment must be within the confines of strong regulatory structures that ensure all companies investing in Israel do so in a responsible manner, consistent with international practices, that benefits the people of Israel, and does not undermine Israeli national security.

Question. In your view, to what extent should Israeli-Chinese relations shape and inform Israel's relationship with the U.S.?

Answer. Strategic competition with the People's Republic of China is a defining feature of the 21st century. While the administration remains deeply concerned with attempts by the People's Republic of China to extend influence and acquire critical and dual-use technology through acquisitions and investment in Israel, the United States views close cooperation with Israel as important to our security and intelligence partnership.

Question. In 2019, in response to U.S. concerns over growing Chinese investment, Israel announced the establishment of an advisory committee, led by the Finance Ministry, to oversee and evaluate foreign investments in Israel. Right now, that committee is an inadequate mechanism and lacks a broad enough scope to protect high technology firms. Only foreign investments in the Israeli financial, communications, infrastructure, transportation, and energy sectors are subject to regulatory approval. Israel is a world-leader in high technology industries. Without a mechanism empowered to review in high technology firms, Israel will lack the ability to ensure controlling and non-controlling investments in these companies do not disadvantage Israel's national security. If confirmed, can you pledge to work with the Government of Israel to improve oversight of foreign commercial investment in Israel, particularly as relates to dual use technology and infrastructure?

Answer. While Israel's establishment of a new investment advisory committee is a step in the right direction, I understand there are concerns as to its effectiveness, especially its lack of coverage for the high-tech sector. If confirmed, I will work with the Government of Israel to strengthen its foreign investment advisory committee to identify and mitigate risks associated with foreign direct investment, including investments involving critical technologies, sensitive data, and critical infrastructure.

Question. From your perspective, what specific reforms should the U.S. seek from Israel to help improve its existing foreign investments oversight regime?

Answer. While Israel's establishment of a new investment advisory committee is a step in the right direction, I understand there are concerns as to its effectiveness, especially its lack of coverage for the high-tech sector. If confirmed, I will work with the Government of Israel to strengthen its foreign investment advisory committee to identify and mitigate risks associated with foreign direct investment, including investments involving critical technologies, sensitive data, and critical infrastructure.

Question. Can you commit to working with the Government of Israel to ensure its investment oversight regime covers high tech industries?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with the Government of Israel to strengthen its foreign investment advisory committee to identify and mitigate risks associated with foreign direct investment, including investments involving critical technologies, sensitive data, and critical infrastructure.

Question. The United States has growing concerns with China's economic relationship with Israel. Given the relative weakness on Israel's committee on foreign investment and issues highlighted by the China's involvement in Haifa port, how do you effectively decouple China from Israel?

Answer. The United States views close cooperation with Israel on a variety of national security topics including foreign investment risk management as important to our security and intelligence partnership. If confirmed, I will work with the Government of Israel to strengthen its foreign investment advisory committee to identify and mitigate risks associated with foreign direct investment, including investments involving critical technologies, sensitive data, and critical infrastructure.

Russia

Question. Israeli Prime Minister Naftali Bennett is scheduled to travel to Moscow for a meeting with Russian President Vladimir Putin in the coming weeks. This will form the basis for joint Israeli-Russian cooperation on a number of issues, including Iran's role in Syria which remains a top priority concern. Please provide your perspective on the Israeli Russian relationship.

Answer. Russia views its military intervention in Syria as helping to solidify a dominant influence in the Middle East and is responsible for enabling numerous atrocities on the ground. While we routinely condemn Russia's brutal military intervention in Syria on behalf of the Assad regime, we recognize Russia has influence on the ground and that Israel wishes to test that influence with regards to curbing Iran's presence in Syria. The U.S. Government has found narrow areas in which to engage with Russia in Syria, for example to extend cross-border humanitarian access into Syria through Security Council Resolution 2585, and we will continue to explore additional avenues for discussion if they are to the benefit the Syrian people and stability in the region.

Question. How does the U.S.'s failure to mitigate the threat Iran and its proxies pose to Israeli security impact Israel's relationship with Russia? In your view, does it make Israel more reliant on Russia given the former's active ties with destabilizing actors like Iran and its proxy, Hezbollah?

Answer. Israel's security posture is independent of Russia's presence due to Iran's destabilizing tactics through Hezbollah and other proxies allowing it to focus on subversive activities by those responsible.

VISA Waiver Program

Question. President Biden in his recent meeting with Prime Minister Bennett committed to advance a process to see Israel join the visa waiver program. If confirmed, can you commit to making it a priority to advance the President's commitment?

Answer. The administration is fully supportive of Israel joining the Visa Waiver Program once it meets all the requirements for participation in the program. If confirmed, it is a priority for me to advance the President's commitment.

Question. If confirmed, will you work to ensure an efficient visa process that allows eligible Israelis to travel to the United States?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will work to ensure an efficient visa process that allows eligible Israelis to travel to the United States.

Question. Will you work with the Israelis to help bring down the refusal rate for Israelis applying for visas?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with the Government of Israel toward meeting all requirements for participation in the Visa Waiver Program.

Non-Defense Cooperation

Question. If confirmed, how will you work to expand trade and deepen the economic cooperation with Israel?

Answer. Advancing the depth and breadth of the bonds between our people, including our ever-expanding economic relationship, remains a top priority for me. Israel is a world leader in innovation, research and development, and its start-up economy is safe and welcoming for U.S. businesses, with American companies establishing two-thirds of the more than 300 foreign-invested research and development centers in Israel. If confirmed, I will build on these robust relationships to expand trade and deepen economic cooperation with Israel.

Question. If confirmed, what areas of the U.S.-Israel relationship will be priorities for you?

Answer. The U.S.-Israeli relationship has long been based on both common values and strategic interests. We remain united in our shared commitment to democracy, economic prosperity, and regional security. Should I have the honor of being confirmed, maintaining the U.S. Government's ironclad commitment to Israel's security, advancing the depth and breadth of the bonds between our people, including our ever-expanding economic relationship, working with a fellow democracy to oppose international institutional bias and promote human rights at home and abroad, and supporting the Abraham Accords and exploring new opportunities to advance normalization efforts are some of my top priorities.

Question. What areas of the relationship do you think can be strengthened?

Answer. Upholding Israel's security serves America's national security interests and ensures that we will always have a strong, reliable, and secure partner. If confirmed, I will work closely with Israeli partners to address critical threats from Iran and Iranian-backed militias and will work to strengthen Israel's foreign investment advisory committee to identify and mitigate risks associated with foreign direct investment, including investments involving critical technologies, sensitive data, and critical infrastructure. By making Israel more secure and opening new channels for constructive dialogue and diplomacy between Israel and the Arab world, normalization agreements also bring with them the potential to create new opportunities to advance a negotiated peace between Israelis and Palestinians. If confirmed, I will work to capitalize on all opportunities to advance peaceful co-existence between Israel and its Arab neighbors, as well as help create the conditions for direct negotiations of a two-state solution between Israelis and Palestinians.

SUBMITTED TO HON. THOMAS R. NIDES BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. In July, the U.N. Human Rights Council (UNHRC) announced a permanent, three person commission to investigate alleged Israeli war crimes during the conflict in Gaza earlier this year. Recent reporting indicates that all three members—Navi Pillay, Miloon Kothai, and Chris Sidoti—hold anti-Israel views. I'm concerned that the composition of this commission makes it all too likely that this is just another anti-Israel attack by a commission that should be focusing on the ongoing genocide of Uyghurs and Muslims in China, or on Cuba's human rights violations of peaceful protesters, or at least a dozen other countries.

- If confirmed, what steps would you take to cooperate with the Israeli Government to counter this blatant anti-Israel sentiment at the U.N.?

Answer. The United States strongly opposed the special session of the U.N. Human Rights Council following the escalation in Gaza in May. It exemplifies the Council's disproportionate focus on Israel. The establishment of an open-ended Commission of Inquiry distracts from the diplomatic work necessary to provide greater dignity, freedom, and prosperity for Israelis and Palestinians, and ensure that terrorist organizations, including Hamas, do not exploit the situation, including by indiscriminate firing of rockets, to advance their own destructive aims. If confirmed, I will work closely with Israel and likeminded partners to influence the scope and timeline of this Commission as part of broader efforts to ensure Israel is treated fairly by the Human Rights Council, in line with other U.N. member states.

Question. In May of this year, Hamas and other Palestinian terrorists launched more than 4,000 rockets that targeted Israeli civilians. As you know, shortly after this, the Biden administration announced that it would re-open the consulate general in Jerusalem. U.S. law is clear that Jerusalem is the undivided capital of Israel. Re-opening this consulate sends the wrong message.

- Do you support re-opening the consulate in Eastern Jerusalem?

Answer. In May, Secretary Blinken publicly announced the administration's intent to reopen the Consulate General in Jerusalem. I understand that this is a component of the administration's renewed engagement with the Palestinian people and leadership. If confirmed, I will ensure that the U.S. diplomatic presence in Jerusalem enables our Government to carry out a full range of diplomatic activities, including engagement with the local communities and government leaders.

Question. In your opinion, how does re-opening the Consulate comply with the Jerusalem Embassy Act of 1995?

Answer. I understand that the Jerusalem Embassy Act restricted certain funding for the Department of State until the Secretary determined and reported to Congress that the U.S. Embassy to Israel had officially opened in Jerusalem. During the Trump administration, Secretary Pompeo determined and reported to Congress in 2019 that the U.S. Embassy in Jerusalem had officially opened, consistent with the requirements of the Jerusalem Embassy Act. I understand the administration is committed, as am I, to keeping the U.S. Embassy in Jerusalem as called for by the Act. Reopening the Consulate General in Jerusalem would not affect that policy or walk back or change our recognition of Jerusalem as Israel's capital.

If confirmed, I will always work to ensure that all our policies are consistent with U.S. interests and applicable U.S. law.

Answer. Are you aware of other cases where the U.S. operates both a consulate and an embassy in the same city?

Answer. I cannot speak to the global U.S. diplomatic presence, however I understand that the Department uses a variety of diplomatic and consular platforms to best serve U.S. interests around the world and maintained a Consulate General and Embassy in Jerusalem simultaneously from May 2018 to March 2019. The Biden-Harris administration has made clear that Jerusalem is the capital of Israel and the U.S. Embassy will remain in Jerusalem. Jerusalem itself is a final status issue to be resolved through direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians.

SUBMITTED TO HON. THOMAS R. NIDES BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question. Do you believe, as is the policy of the United States, that we must assist the Government of Israel with its ongoing efforts to forge a peaceful, negotiated settlement of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict that results in two states living side-by-side in peace and security and to encourage Israel's neighbors to recognize Israel's right to exist as a Jewish state?

Answer. I believe that a two-state solution is the best way to ensure equal measures of freedom, security and prosperity for Israelis and Palestinians. By making Israel more secure and opening new channels for constructive dialogue and diplomacy between Israel and the Arab world, normalization agreements also bring with them the potential to create new opportunities to advance a negotiated peace between Israelis and Palestinians. Similarly, making progress towards a two-state solution may hasten new normalization agreements. If confirmed, I will work to capitalize on all opportunities to advance peaceful co-existence between Israel and its Arab neighbors, as well as help create the conditions for direct negotiations of a two-state solution between Israelis and Palestinians.

Question. As the President's nominee, do you agree that our diplomatic presence in Jerusalem through our Embassy is sufficient to meet the consular needs of Palestinians?

Answer. The U.S. Embassy to Israel, which the United States Government has been clear will remain in Jerusalem, provides consular services to U.S. citizens and permanent residents, as well as local communities residing in Israel and the West Bank and Gaza. The President and Secretary Blinken have reaffirmed the administration's intent as well to reopen the Consulate General in Jerusalem, to support renewed engagement with the Palestinian people and leadership. If confirmed, I will ensure that the U.S. diplomatic presence in Jerusalem enables our government to carry out a full range of diplomatic activities, including engagement with the local communities and government leaderships.

Question. While the opportunities for partnership are significant, there are also those who worry about China's growing relationship with Israel and needed proper guardrails in place when seeking to work on technology together. If confirmed, how would you seek to deepen the U.S.-Israel partnerships in emerging tech while seeking to deter the Israelis from taking steps closer to China?

Answer. The administration remains deeply concerned by attempts by the People's Republic of China (PRC) to extend influence and acquire critical and dual-use technology through acquisitions and investment in Israel. The administration welcomes efforts by all countries to enhance investment in quality infrastructure development. I believe that such an investment must be within the confines of strong regulatory structures that ensure all companies investing in Israel do so in a responsible manner, consistent with international practices, that benefits the people of Israel, and does not undermine Israeli national security. While Israel's establishment of a new investment advisory committee is a step in the right direction, I understand there are concerns as to its effectiveness, given the voluntary nature of its coverage and its lack of coverage for the high-tech sector. If confirmed, I will work with the Government of Israel to strengthen its foreign investment advisory committee to minimize exposure to national security risks, including the acquisitions of critical technologies, sensitive data, and critical infrastructure.

Question. What untapped opportunities exist for mutual exchanges to deepen our bilateral research and innovation relationship?

Answer. Advancing the depth and breadth of the bonds between our people, including our ever-expanding economic relationship remains a top priority for me. Israel is a world leader in innovation, research and development and Israel's start up economy is safe and welcoming for U.S. businesses, with U.S. companies establishing two-thirds of the more than 300 foreign-invested research and development centers in Israel. Three U.S.-Israel bi-national foundations have provided over $1.2 billion for joint science and technology projects and both sides signed a new Science and Technology Cooperation Agreement that entered into force in December 2020. If confirmed, I plan to build on these already robust relationships to promote further cooperation in bilateral research and innovation, including working with Israel to strengthen foreign investment risk management which is a key investment in the innovation relationship between the United States and Israel.

In addition, collaboration made possible because of the Abraham Accords and in the Eastern Mediterranean, including with the Eastern Mediterranean Gas Forum (EMGF) and 3+1 mechanism, presents new opportunities for collaboration with allies and key partners. These efforts can help promote Israel's regional integration and greater cooperation, energy security, and economic prosperity throughout the region. If confirmed, I look forward to expanding these efforts.

Question. A developing story from September 21 is that progressive Democrats in the House of Representatives have stripped funding for Iron Dome—Israel's primary tool for defending civilians from Hamas' terrorist rocket attacks—out from the upcoming funding bill. If confirmed, would you commit to advocating for the Congress to provide Israel with all the tools necessary to defend itself?

Answer. The U.S. commitment to Israel's security is ironclad. The Biden-Harris administration remains committed to Israel's defense and security, including Israel's ability to maintain its qualitative military edge in the region, consistent with U.S. law and policy. The President was clear when President Bennett visited Washington at the end of August that the administration fully supports replenishing Israel's Iron Dome System.

This administration is committed to ensuring Israel's right to defend itself from indiscriminate rocket attacks by assisting Israel in replenishing its Iron Dome Air Defense Missile System. If confirmed, I will work with relevant State and DoD colleagues to see what can be done in this regard.

Question. In carrying out the Memorandum of Understanding on U.S. Foreign Defense Aid to Israel, the funding for which Congress authorized last year, what are the most pressing threats that Congress must consider when we set aside annual funding for security assistance to Israel?

Answer. The commitment to Israel's security is a cornerstone of U.S. foreign policy in the Middle East, supported by the 10-year, $38 billion Memorandum of Understanding with Israel. This commitment includes $3.3 billion in annual Foreign Military Financing. As I shared in my opening statement, Israel is one of our closest security partners in countering a broad spectrum of threats ranging from climate change to cyber-attacks to nuclear proliferation. Chief among these is the critical threat that Iran and Iranian-backed militias pose. While President Biden has made clear his commitment to ensure that Iran never develops a nuclear weapon, upholding Israel's security serves America's national security interests and ensures that we will always have a strong, reliable, and secure partner.

The best way we can do this is by continuing robust levels of bilateral U.S. security assistance including through the Foreign Military Financing program, which will help to maintain Israel's Qualitative Military Edge; and acknowledge strong bilateral ties; and enable cutting-edge cooperation on missile defense. U.S. funding also supports Israel's continued defense modernization and provides for the acquisition of U.S.-origin defense equipment ranging from ammunition to advanced weapon systems and training.

SUBMITTED TO HON. THOMAS R. NIDES BY SENATOR TED CRUZ

Congressional Determinations and Policies

Question. In 1987, Congress passed The Anti-Terrorism Act, in which Congress determined that "the PLO and its affiliates are a terrorist organization and a threat to the interests of the United States, its allies, and to international law" (22 USC §5201). In 2012, Congress passed The United States-Israel Enhanced Security Cooperation Act, which established that it is "the policy of the United States. To assist the Government of Israel with its ongoing efforts to forge a peaceful, negotiated settlement of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict that results in two states living side-by-side in peace and security, and to encourage Israel's neighbors to recognize Israel's right to exist as a Jewish state" (22 USC §8602). In 2014, Congress passed The United States-Israel Strategic Partnership Act, which reaffirmed that it is "the policy of the United States. to support the Government of Israel in its ongoing efforts to reach a negotiated political settlement with the Palestinian people that results in two states living side-by-side in peace and security” (22 USC § 8602 Statutory Notes).

- Do you agree with Congress’s determination that “the PLO and its affiliates are a terrorist organization and a threat to the interests of the United States, its allies, and to international law?”

Answer. My understanding is that subsequent to the 1987 passage of the Anti-Terrorism Act, in 1993, in connection with the Oslo Accords, the PLO renounced terrorism and recognized Israel’s right to exist, and Israel recognized the PLO as the representative of the Palestinian people for purposes of negotiations for permanent status and peace. Subsequently, across administrations, Congress and the executive branch have worked together to press the PLO to continue to comply with those commitments, and to support its engagement with Israel, and with the United States in support of negotiations and its commitments including those disavowing terrorism.

If confirmed, I will work to ensure that our engagement with the Palestinians advances Israeli-Palestinian cooperation, understanding, peace, security coordination, and stability. To that end, I will work with the Palestinian Authority, Government of Israel, and international community to consider ways in which we can strengthen the position of the Palestinian Authority and to recommend that all sides adopt an affirmative and practical approach to the conflict that encourages constructive, positive steps-like condemning incitement to violence and terrorism- to keep the possibility of a negotiated two-state solution alive.

Question. Do you commit to “assist” and “support” the Government of Israel in its negotiations with the Palestinians?

Answer. I believe that a two-state solution is the best way to ensure equal measures of freedom, security, and prosperity for Israelis and Palestinians alike. If confirmed, I will work to capitalize on all opportunities to advance peaceful co-existence between Israel and its Arab neighbors, as well as to help create the conditions for direct negotiations between Israelis and Palestinians.

Question. Do you believe that the United States should be neutral between the Governments of Israel and the Palestinians?

Answer. I believe that a two-state solution is the best way to ensure equal measures of freedom, security, and prosperity for Israelis and Palestinians. By making Israel more secure and opening new channels for constructive dialogue and diplomacy between Israel and the Arab world, normalization agreements also bring with them the potential to create new opportunities to advance a negotiated peace between Israelis and Palestinians. If confirmed, I will work to capitalize on all opportunities to advance existing coordination between Israelis and Palestinians to help create the conditions for direct negotiations between the two parties.

Sovereignty

Question. The Obama-Biden administration’s approach to the Israeli-Arab conflict was justified on the basis of a theory of regional relations in which the Israeli-Palestinian conflict prevented broader Israeli-Arab rapprochement. Among other decisions, that administration implemented discriminatory policies that distinguished between Jewish communities in places Israel controlled before and after 1967. That approach culminated in December 2016, when the Obama administration maneuvered the United Nations Security Council into passing UNSCR 2334, which among other things denied Israel’s sovereignty over the Golan Heights and part of its capital Jerusalem, including the Jewish Quarter. The Trump administration systematically worked to hollow out and render UNSCR 2334 null and void. They did so, including by recognizing Israel’s sovereignty over the Golan Heights, by recognizing Jerusalem as Israel’s capital, by moving our embassy to Jerusalem, by seeking to end discriminatory approaches that distinguished legally and for the purposes of aid and trade between different Israeli communities, and by taking several other steps.

- Do you believe that Israel has sovereignty over the Golan Heights?

Answer. In considering the U.S. position on the Golan Heights, I understand the administration gives great weight to Israel’s security. As long as Bashar al-Assad is in control of Syria and Iran is present in Syria, it would be greatly irresponsible to urge Israel to part with the Golan Heights. Control of the strategic Golan Heights provides Israel an added measure of security from the turmoil next door. I understand the administration has not changed U.S. policy on this important issue.

Question. Do you believe that Israel has sovereignty over Jerusalem, including the Old City of Jerusalem?

Answer. I understand the administration has not altered U.S. policy on this important issue. Jerusalem is the capital of Israel. Jerusalem itself is a final status issue to be resolved through direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians. Jerusalem is central to the national visions of both Israelis and Palestinians. If confirmed, I will handle all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

Question. Do you believe that Israel is in illegal occupation of any part of the Golan Heights?

Answer. In considering the U.S. position on the Golan Heights, I understand the administration gives great weight to Israel's security. As long as Bashar al-Assad is in control of Syria and Iran is present in Syria, it would be greatly irresponsible to urge Israel to part with the Golan Heights. Control of the strategic Golan Heights provides Israel an added measure of security from the turmoil next door. The administration has not changed U.S. policy on this important issue.

Question. Do you believe that Israel is in illegal occupation of any part of Jerusalem, including the Old City of Jerusalem?

Answer. Jerusalem is the capital of Israel. Jerusalem itself is a final status issue to be resolved through direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians. Jerusalem is central to the national visions of both Israelis and Palestinians. If confirmed, I will handle all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

Abraham Accords

Question. In your testimony you indicated that you are supportive of the Abraham Accords. In early 2021 the State Department distributed internal guidance through emails about how to refer to the normalization between Israel and other countries. In the emails, staffers were instructed that the State Dept. would no longer refer to the normalization as the "Abraham Accords," and the use of "normalization agreements" instead was indicated, according to a June 4 report by the Washington Free Beacon.

- Please transmit copies of those emails. The Washington Free Beacon reviewed at least two of them.

Answer. While I understand your interest, as a nominee I am not in a position to act on behalf of the State Department with regard to its records. I take my responsibilities with respect to Congressional oversight seriously and if confirmed, I look forward to working with you to respond to your concerns.

Question. Please transmit any other internal guidance issued by State Department staffers—including emails, memos, cables, notes, decision memos, briefing papers, instructions, etc.—regarding the use of the phrase "Abraham Accords," from December 2020 through September 2021.

Answer. While I understand your interest, as a nominee I am not in a position to act on behalf of the State Department with regard to its records. I take my responsibilities with respect to Congressional oversight seriously and if confirmed, I look forward to working with you to respond to your concerns.

Question. Can you commit to ensuring that any guidelines or policies prohibiting using the phrase "Abraham Accords" are revised and reversed?

Answer. My understanding is that the Biden-Harris administration refers to the agreements known as the Abraham Accords as such. I certainly do. If confirmed, I will continue to use that moniker.

Palestinian Consulate

Question. The Biden administration has indicated and recently reiterated its intention to open a Palestinian-facing consulate in Israel's capital Jerusalem.

- Please describe your assessment of whether the Israeli Government supports such a plan?

Answer. Secretary Blinken publicly announced the administration's intent to reopen the Consulate General. I understand that this is part of the administration's renewed engagement with the Palestinian people and leadership. I am not in a position to comment further on diplomatic discussions related to this process. If confirmed, I look forward to ensuring that the U.S. presence in Jerusalem enables our Government to carry out the full range of diplomatic activities, including engagement with the local communities and government leaders. My understanding is that reopening the Consulate General in Jerusalem will not change our recognition of Jerusalem as Israel's capital, and the U.S. Embassy to Israel will remain in Jerusalem.

Question. Do you believe that opening a Palestinian-facing consulate in Jerusalem in the absence of affirmative permission from the Israeli Government would constitute an erosion of their sovereignty over Jerusalem? If not, why not?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to ensuring that the U.S. presence in Jerusalem enables our Government to carry out the full range of diplomatic activities, including engagement with the local communities and government leadership. The U.S. Government has been clear that our Embassy will remain in Jerusalem. The administration is committed, as am I, to keeping the U.S. Embassy in Jerusalem. My understanding is that reopening the Consulate General in Jerusalem will not change our recognition of Jerusalem as Israel's capital.

Question. Do you believe that the opening of a Palestinian-facing consulate in Jerusalem would prejudice final status negotiations between the Israelis and the Palestinians? If not, why not?

Answer. This administration recognizes that Jerusalem is central to the national visions of both Israelis and Palestinians. Jerusalem is the capital of Israel. Jerusalem itself is a final status issue to be resolved through direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians. The administration is committed, as am I, to keeping the U.S. Embassy in Jerusalem. Reopening the Consulate General in Jerusalem will not change our recognition of Jerusalem as Israel's capital. If confirmed, I will handle all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

Energy

Question. In January 2019, Egypt, Israel, Jordan, Greece, Italy, Cyprus, and the Palestinian Authority established the East Mediterranean Gas Forum (EMGF) headquartered in Cairo. The EMGF, an intergovernmental energy forum, knits together Eastern Mediterranean and Gulf countries, including through an Israeli-Cypriot-Greek pipeline. The forum members agree to work to formulate a common policy for the regional energy market.

- Do you support the efforts and objectives of the EMGF?

Answer. The Eastern Mediterranean Gas Forum presents new opportunities for collaboration with allies and key partners. The Forum can help promote greater cooperation, energy security, and economic prosperity throughout the region. If confirmed, I would build on the work between colleagues in the Bureaus of Near Eastern Affairs, Energy Resources, and European Affairs to coordinate our engagement and am eager to learn more about the EMGF's announcement earlier this year that it plans to work with specialists to discuss and promote gas decarbonization. I would also take steps to align our other regional embassies to support this effort in the field so that we can advance cooperation, energy security and U.S. national interests.

Question. Do you support the United States continued involvement within the EMFG?

Answer. The Eastern Mediterranean Gas Forum presents new opportunities for collaboration with allies and key partners. If confirmed, I hope to continue U.S. involvement with the Eastern Mediterranean Gas Forum.

Question. Do you support efforts by Israel and other regional partners to develop a sustainable natural gas infrastructure including through bilateral negotiations?

Answer. I support the development of sustainable, secure, energy sources by Israel and other regional partners, including through bilateral negotiations. Natural gas discoveries have helped redefine relationships and increase energy security in the Eastern Mediterranean, and our partners building up capacity in renewable energy sources will further transform the energy landscape in this region.

Question. Can you evaluate the impacts of the EMFG on advancing peace and cooperation between Israel and regional partners?

Answer. The Eastern Mediterranean Gas Forum presents new opportunities for collaboration with allies and key partners. The Forum promotes greater cooperation, energy security, and economic prosperity and supports Israel's greater integration in the region.

Question. Can you evaluate the impact that completing the EastMed pipeline would have on providing Europe with an alternative to Russian supplied gas?

Answer. If completed, the EastMed Pipeline project could increase regional energy security in the Eastern Mediterranean, diversify Europe's energy supply, and aid in ensuring a more stable energy transition.

Question. Do you support the continued development of the EastMed Pipeline?

Answer. As I understand it, there are a number of regional energy projects in the Eastern Mediterranean under consideration, including the EastMed Pipeline. If confirmed, I would advocate for regional energy and electrical interconnections that have the potential to increase our partners' and allies' energy security, diversify energy supplies, and aid in ensuring more stable and sustainable energy transitions.

Question. What impact do you think this energy forum has on regional dynamics, including those related to diplomatic, economic, and security?

Answer. The Eastern Mediterranean Gas Forum presents new opportunities for collaboration with allies and key partners and promotes greater cooperation, energy security, and economic prosperity in the region, which would help advance stability in the Eastern Mediterranean.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. THOMAS R. NIDES BY SENATOR BILL HAGERTY

Question. After the United States implemented the Jerusalem Embassy Act of 1995 (Public Law 104-45)—including by formally recognizing Jerusalem as the capital of the State of Israel on December 6, 2017, and by relocating and opening the U.S. Embassy to Israel in Israel's capital city of Jerusalem on May 14, 2018—it also closed the U.S. Consulate General for the Palestinians and merged this Consulate General's functions into Embassy Jerusalem under the U.S. Ambassador to Israel's Chief of Mission authority. Do you agree that opening/reopening a U.S. consulate for the Palestinians in Jerusalem—in particular, after the fact of U.S. recognition of Jerusalem as Israel's capital on December 6, 2017—would constitute a diminution of U.S. recognition of Jerusalem as Israel's capital?

Answer. During the Trump administration, Secretary Pompeo determined and reported to Congress in 2019 that the U.S. Embassy in Jerusalem had officially opened, consistent with the requirements of the Jerusalem Embassy Act. I understand the administration is committed, as am I, to keeping the U.S. Embassy in Jerusalem as called for by the Act. Reopening the Consulate General in Jerusalem will not affect that policy or walk back or change U.S. recognition of Jerusalem as Israel's capital.

Question. Do you also agree that opening/reopening a U.S. consulate for the Palestinians in Jerusalem—in particular, after the fact of U.S. recognition of Jerusalem as Israel's capital on December 6, 2017—would constitute a diminution of Israeli sovereignty? Please begin your answer with a yes or no.

Answer. Jerusalem is the capital of Israel. Jerusalem itself is a final status issue to be resolved through direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians. I understand the administration is committed, as am I, to keeping the U.S. Embassy in Jerusalem. Reopening the Consulate General in Jerusalem will not change U.S. recognition of Jerusalem as Israel's capital. If confirmed, I will handle all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

Question. The Government of Israel—under then-Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and now under Prime Minister Naftali Bennett—has consistently opposed the opening/reopening of a U.S. consulate for the Palestinians in Jerusalem after the United States recognized Jerusalem as Israel's capital on December 6, 2017, and relocated the U.S. Embassy to Jerusalem on May 14, 2018. Do you agree that the United States should not open/reopen a U.S. consulate for the Palestinians in Jerusalem if the Government of Israel continues to oppose it? Please begin your response with a yes or no.

Answer. The administration has also been clear, as am I, that our Embassy to Israel will remain in Jerusalem. If confirmed, I look forward to ensuring that the U.S. presence in Jerusalem enables our Government to carry out a full range of diplomatic activities, including engagement with the local communities and government leadership. In May, Secretary Blinken stated "the United States will be moving forward with the process to reopen our consulate in Jerusalem. That's an important way for our country to engage with and provide support for the Palestinian people." I understand that this is part of the administration's renewed engagement with the Palestinian people and leadership.

Question. Since the change in presidential administrations, some U.S. Government officials at times have publicly resisted using the term “Abraham Accords” and instead insisted on only using the term “normalization agreements.” If confirmed, do you commit that you will refer to the historic agreements that normalized Israel’s relations with the United Arab Emirates, Bahrain, Sudan, and Morocco by their name—the “Abraham Accords?”

Answer. My understanding is that the Biden-Harris administration refers to the agreements known as the Abraham Accords as such. I certainly do. If confirmed, I will continue to use that moniker.

Question. If confirmed as U.S. Ambassador to Israel, you will have the opportunity to interact with both the UAE and Bahraini Ambassadors to Israel—in addition to potentially hosting delegations or meeting with diplomats from other countries normalizing or considering normalization with Israel. Will you commit to meet regularly with your Abraham Accords counterparts? What other steps will you take to continue Arab-Israeli normalization from your position?

Answer. As President Biden and Secretary Blinken have said, the administration welcomes and strongly supports the Abraham Accords and normalization agreements between Israel and countries in the Arab and Muslim world. I understand the Department is leading the U.S. Government’s efforts, working with interagency partners, to deepen existing agreements and urge other countries to normalize relations with Israel.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with diplomatic colleagues in Israel, including those from countries that have recently established ties with Israel. I am committed to working with countries across the region to build on existing relationships and develop new ones, including by highlighting the tangible benefits of relations with Israel and leveraging the wide range of diplomatic tools at our disposal. I also look forward to engaging with Israel’s new partners in the region to find ways to improve the lives of Israelis and Palestinians alike to help create the conditions for a durable two-state solution.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO DAVID L. COHEN BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Canada & China:

Question. If confirmed, what steps will you take to deepen coordination with our Canadian allies and ensure that our two countries formulate a joint response to the challenges posed by China’s coercive diplomacy? What would success look like to you two years from now?

Answer. Consistent with the longstanding, strong bilateral relationship between Canada and the United States, I have observed that the United States and Canada have undertaken significant efforts in recent years to coordinate our engagement with the People’s Republic of China (“PRC”). If confirmed, I would maintain regular contact with Canadian leadership to build on this progress and explore new avenues in our response to this significant challenge. Success in two years would see us having engaged in continued dialogue with Canada to identify and act on opportunities to develop a joint approach to the PRC that reflects our shared values and effectively pushes back on the PRC’s problematic activities.

Anomalous Health Incidents

Question. I am very concerned about directed energy attacks on U.S. Government personnel (so-called Anomalous Health Incidents). Ensuring the safety and security of our personnel abroad falls largely on individual Chiefs of Mission and the response of officers at post. It is imperative that any individual who reports a suspected incident be responded to promptly, equitably, and compassionately.

- Do you agree these incidents must be taken seriously, and pose a threat to the health of U.S. personnel?

Answer. Yes, I agree that these incidents are serious and pose a threat to the health of U.S. personnel.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to ensuring that any reported incident is treated seriously and reported quickly through the appropriate channels, and that any affected individuals receive prompt access to medical care?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit that any such reported incident would be treated seriously and reported quickly through appropriate channels, and that affected individuals would receive prompt access to medical care.

Question. Do you commit to meeting with medical staff and the RSO at post to discuss any past reported incidents and ensure that all protocols are being followed?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit that I would meet with medical staff and RSO at post to discuss any past incidents to ensure protocols are being followed.

Canada and Refugees

Question. Canadians are among our most reliable partners on refugee resettlement, implementing innovative government and privately sponsored resettlement programs that enable the world's most vulnerable to find safety quickly. The Canadian Government has committed to accept 20,000 refugees from Afghanistan, adding to the tens of thousands they accepted from Syria, and the upwards of one million they've accepted since 1980. As conflicts become increasingly protracted and global challenges abound, the numbers of people in need of international protection will grow exponentially. Our partnership with Canada in anticipating and responding to new displacement-related needs will be critical.

- If confirmed, how would you seek to leverage Canada's experiences and deepen our collaboration with our Canadian partners on migration and protection issues?

Answer. As one of our closest allies, we have worked with Canada hand-in-hand on many issues, including migration and refugees. If confirmed, I would maintain the robust work our countries have done in conjunction with President Biden and Prime Minister Trudeau's Roadmap for a Renewed U.S.-Canada Partnership on addressing the global migration crisis. Our countries share a commitment to providing safe haven to refugees, including through refugee resettlement. These commitments have been spotlighted recently with Afghan refugees. I applaud Canada's commitment to receive 20,000 Afghan refugees, 5,000 of whom are to be referred by the United States.

Additionally, if confirmed, I look forward to working closely with our Canadian partners as they chair the MIRPS (Comprehensive Regional Protection and Solutions Framework) Support Platform under the theme of "protection and empowerment of women and girls on the move" to draw attention and support solutions to forced displacement in Mexico and Central America.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO DAVID L. COHEN BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

WESTERN HEMISPHERE

Canada-China Relations

Question. What is your assessment of the current state of Canada-China relations?

Answer. Canada-China relations reached their lowest point in 50 years following both the PRC's arbitrary detention of Canadians Michael Kovrig and Michael Spavor in December 2018 and PRC bans on some Canadian agricultural exports in response to Canada's arrest of Meng Wanzhou on a U.S. extradition request in December 2018. Canada's relations with the PRC remain strained.

Question. Please explain how you would recommend the United States work to address the worst aspects of China's economic, political, and security influence in the Western Hemisphere and the world at large.

Answer. If confirmed, taking advantage of the historically strong bilateral relationship between Canada and the United States, I would continue to explore ways to work with Canada to more closely align our approaches to Beijing, including to address the challenges the PRC presents to our collective interest and to the international rules-based order in our hemisphere and around the world. I would work to coordinate our policies pursuant to the Roadmap for a Renewed U.S.-Canada Partnership, including when dealing with the PRC's coercive and unfair economic practices, national security challenges, and human rights abuses, while cooperating on areas where it is in our interest, such as on the climate crisis.

Question. Please explain how you plan to communicate with the Canadian people about the challenges posed by the People's Republic of China to international norms.

Answer. The Canadian people appear to have a clear understanding of the challenges posed by the PRC, from its arbitrary detention of Canadian citizens to its use of economic coercion in trade to its intimidation of ethnic Chinese, Uyghur, and Tibetan communities in Canada. If confirmed, I plan to have significant interactions with Canadians and I would have frank conversations with Canadians about how the United States and Canada could work even more closely, bilaterally and multilaterally, to face the challenges the PRC poses to international norms.

Question. Please explain how the United States and Canada could enhance cooperation to counter Chinese disinformation, influence operations, academic espionage, and propaganda efforts.

Answer. These PRC efforts impact the United States, Canada, and many of our like-minded allies and partners. If confirmed, building on the historically strong bilateral relationship between Canada and the United States, I would work to increase cooperation with Canada and other likeminded countries to counter these PRC campaigns through joint actions, exchange of best practices, and multilateral initiatives.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to prioritize collaborative initiatives to implement the January 9, 2020 U.S.-Canada Joint Action Plan on Critical Minerals Development Collaboration?

Answer. As part of the Roadmap for a Renewed U.S.-Canada Partnership, President Biden and Prime Minister Trudeau agreed to strengthen the U.S.-Canada Critical Minerals Action Plan to target a net-zero industrial transformation, batteries for zero-emissions vehicles, and renewable energy storage. If confirmed, I would look to the Roadmap to guide my priorities as Ambassador, including efforts to strengthen the U.S.-Canada Critical Minerals Action Plan, as well as related efforts to build the necessary supply chains to make the United States and Canada global leaders in all aspects of battery development and production.

Question. Canada is the only member of the Five Eyes that has not formally barred or restricted use of equipment from Huawei in its telecommunication networks. Please explain what impact the presence of untrustworthy technologies, such as those from Huawei would have to our bilateral cooperation with Canada.

Answer. The United States understands the promise of 5G wireless networks, and governments and telecom operators need to prioritize security when building their 5G infrastructure. United States technical experts assess that the risk of allowing untrustworthy suppliers' equipment anywhere in 5G networks cannot be sufficiently mitigated; the United States is, therefore, removing untrustworthy equipment from its own government and private sector communications networks. Other governments, including the United Kingdom, Australia, and New Zealand have come to the same conclusion. If confirmed, I would help carry out the U.S. Government commitment to ensure that U.S. telecommunications networks do not use equipment from untrusted vendors.

Question. If confirmed, how would you communicate concerns about the use of untrustworthy technologies, such as Huawei's in Canada?

Answer. If confirmed, I would convey the need for governments and telecom operators to prioritize security when building 5G infrastructure. Through conversations with the Canadian Government, public, and business community, I would stress that allowing untrusted telecommunications suppliers to participate in or control any part of a 5G network creates unacceptable risks to national security, the integrity of critical infrastructure, privacy, and human rights.

Question. Please describe the impact on privacy, censorship, and human rights from the inclusion of communication networks and supply chains with equipment and services from companies with close ties to or susceptible to pressure from governments or security services without reliable legal checks on governmental powers.

Answer. Countries and citizens need to be able to trust that 5G equipment and software will not introduce risks that threaten national security, privacy, or human rights. Trust cannot exist where information and communications technology and services vendors are subject to control by authoritarian governments, like the PRC, which lacks an independent judiciary or democratic checks and balances to protect companies and consumers and has a long track record of using access to data to surveil, harass, and otherwise crack down on its dissidents and to enabling other authoritarian governments to do the same. Like-minded countries, companies, and civil society groups can and must work together to address these threats.

U.S.-Canada Border Closures

Question. In August, Canada lifted its travel restrictions on Americans that are vaccinated or have a negative COVID-19 test result. On September 20, the Biden administration extended restrictions on land travel from Canada for at least another month, while lifting air travel restrictions for travelers from around the world who have been vaccinated or tested negative for COVID-19.

Answer. Acknowledged, and noted as context for the question that follows.

Question. Please explain your understanding of the reasons behind the different approaches to U.S. restrictions on land travel versus air travel from Canada.

Answer. I understand the difficult impacts on United States border communities and their residents of COVID-based travel restrictions. I also understand the health-based justifications for those restrictions. I also understand that decisions regarding travel restrictions are made with advice from public health and medical experts, who consult regularly with their Canadian counterparts. These decisions are made to decrease the spread of COVID-19, especially emergent variants. If confirmed, I would coordinate closely with the White House, relevant U.S. agencies, and Congress on our policies to protect our borders and citizens, and to facilitate cross-border traffic and commercial activities to the extent possible.

Question. In your opinion, does the divergent approach to air and land travel with Canada constitutes sound policy?

Answer. I believe that decisions regarding the health, safety, and welfare of the United States and its citizens are best left to our public health and medical experts.

Question. What is your understanding of the economic and emotional hardship northern border closures are placing on American border communities?

Answer. I empathize with those who face challenges as a result of the ongoing border restrictions. I understand that some U.S. citizens, their families, and businesses do not fall under the essential travel exemptions and may have experienced social and economic challenges. I want to emphasize that I share the desire of many fellow Americans to resume normal cross-border travel as soon as possible, once public health and medical professionals deem it safe to do so.

Question. Do you agree that the Biden administration should pursue a more consistent approach to air and land travel from Canada?

Answer. I believe we should resume normal cross-border travel as soon as U.S. public health professionals conclude it is safe to do so. I trust their recommendations and know that decisions regarding travel are made with our safety in mind. If confirmed, I would prioritize the safety and security of U.S. citizens in all aspects of my duties.

Arctic

Question. Please explain how the United States and Canada can revitalize cooperation on continental defense and in the Arctic, including the modernization of the North American Aerospace Defense Command (NORAD) to effectively defend the Northern Hemisphere against the range of threats by peer competitors.

Answer. As a close and strategically located ally, Canada plays an indispensable role in promoting our common defense, especially in the Arctic. If confirmed, I would underscore in interactions with Canadian officials the strategic importance of NORAD to our mutual continental defense and emphasize the urgent need to bolster our aerospace defense through modernization efforts - efforts which Canada has embraced. Regarding Canada's Future Fighter Capabilities Project, I would continue U.S. efforts to advocate for a U.S. solution that would provide Canada with world-class defense technology at the best value while also supporting continued interoperability in our collective defense of Northern America.

Question. Please explain your views on the growing Chinese and Russian presence in the Arctic region.

Answer. Both Russia and the PRC have increased their activities in the Arctic in recent years, the latter going so far as to declare itself a "near Arctic state" and publicizing its objective of extending its Belt and Road Initiative into the Arctic. While investment in the Arctic is expected as climate change makes the region more accessible, such investment must be transparent, adhere to existing international law and practice, and support the needs of the peoples of the region. Neither Russia nor the PRC has been transparent about its operations in the Arctic, and both are eager to advance their interests. At the same time, Russia has indicated willingness to engage in discussions on our concerns, agreeing at the June Presidential Summit in Geneva to further discuss the Northern Sea Route and improved coordination between our respective Coast Guards. If confirmed, I would work to strengthen our ability to deter attempts by Russia and the PRC to constrain the United States and our allies, including in the Arctic.

Question. If confirmed, how would you communicate the need to heighten deterrence capabilities in the Arctic?

Answer. The Arctic is a strategic space in which U.S. and Canadian capabilities may be put to the test and in which our need to communicate credible deterrence is critical. This is another space where joint communication and action by the United States and Canada will send a more powerful signal. If confirmed, I would consult closely with the Department of Defense and others among the interagency to ensure we are conveying the full spectrum of our concerns, with supporting information, to our Canadian allies.

U.S.-Canada Border Security

Question. Last year, the CBP seizures of illicit narcotics along the Canadian border were up 1,000 percent. CBP seized nearly 40,000 pounds of marijuana across 16 ports of entry worth between $100 million and $120 million. There are concerns about increases in illicit trafficking of drugs through the border between the U.S. and Canada. How should the U.S. and Canada work together to better address these threats to prevent transnational criminal activity?

Answer. The U.S.-Canada Joint Action Plan on Opioids was launched in Washington on January 31, 2020. On February 23, 2021, President Biden and Prime Minister Trudeau recommitted to the U.S.-Canada Joint Action Plan on Opioids as part of the larger Roadmap for a U.S.-Canada Renewed Partnership jointly issued by both leaders.

If confirmed, I would build on close bilateral relationship between Canada and the United States and the good progress our countries have made on the joint action plan to combat opioids, and I would work closely with our Canadian counterparts to address the issue of the flow of illicit drugs over the border.

While the COVID-19 pandemic has presented numerous challenges, project subgroups focused on law enforcement, border security, and health meet regularly. The Working Group meets quarterly, and the Steering Committee meets bi-annually. I applaud the great work our respective countries have made to address this important issue, and I would support this action plan at every appropriate opportunity.

NATO

Question. Canada plans to increase its defense spending by 73 percent over ten years to reach C$32.7 billion ($25.2b) in 2026-2027. If implemented, Canada's total defense spending as a percentage of GDP would reach 1.4 percent in 2024-2025, which would fall well short of NATO's recommended 2 percent of GDP level. How do you see your role as Ambassador, if confirmed, to encourage Canada to adhere to its 2 percent commitment at NATO?

Answer. If confirmed, I would engage Canada's leadership to clarify the intent behind our security priorities, the underlying concerns that drive those priorities, and our position regarding equitable and sufficient contributions to NATO.

Question. Do you agree with Canada's counterargument that the countries' contributions to the alliance should be measured more by capabilities and the troops they provide over their defense expenditure as a percentage of GDP? How would you react to this if confirmed as Ambassador?

Answer. If confirmed, I would express appreciation for Canada's notable contributions to security in the hemisphere and globally (including through NATO), I would note how both our countries' interests have been undermined by the actions of third parties, and I would underscore that a robust and concerted response to these threats and challenges is required. Such a response must necessarily include funding as well as capabilities and troops.

Question. In what ways can the U.S. and Canada work better together in NATO engagements?

Answer. Our defense cooperation with Canada is one of the most comprehensive security relationships globally and comprises both bilateral and multilateral arrangements. If confirmed, I would ensure U.S. security interests concerning NATO are conveyed and advanced as part of the U.S. Mission's bilateral engagement plan. Additionally, I would engage Canada's leadership to clarify the intent behind U.S. security decisions, and I would regularly solicit Canada's input for how best to further strengthen the NATO alliance.

USMCA (United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement)

Question. What's your assessment of Canada's implementation of USMCA? What challenges do you foresee in USMCA implementation and how would you use your role as Ambassador to encourage Canada to rectify these issues?

Answer. Canada continues to work toward meeting its obligations under the USMCA, though challenges remain. If confirmed, I will work to further Canada's compliance with USMCA issues impacting dairy quotas, automotive trade, and digital services, among other topics. We will put the interests of American workers and businesses at the forefront of our foreign policy.

Trade Disputes

Question. The United States has longstanding disputes with Canada over softwood lumber imports. U.S. industry contends that Canada unfairly subsidizes its lumber by providing cheap access to public land. Softwood lumber is now in its fifth iteration of litigation. If confirmed as Ambassador, how would you work to ensure U.S. industry interests are represented?

Answer. If confirmed, I would work with the United States interagency and industry to ensure fair treatment for U.S. softwood lumber producers. Because this remains an active litigation matter, I am unable to comment further.

Energy

Question. The Biden administration cancelled the Keystone XL pipeline's border crossing presidential permit in January 2021, which would have moved up to 830,000 barrels of crude daily. Canadian Government officials have expressed disappointment with President Biden's decision. Do you agree with President Biden's decision to revoke the permit?

Answer. Canada remains the top energy partner of the United States. I understand we have a robust trading relationship and shared energy infrastructure. Tackling the existential threat of the climate crisis requires, as the President's Executive Order of January 20 stated, action on a scale and at a speed commensurate with the need to avoid setting the world on a dangerous and potentially catastrophic climate trajectory. The world must be put on a sustainable climate pathway to protect Americans and the domestic economy from harmful climate impacts, and to create well-paying jobs as part of the climate solution. If confirmed, I would support President Biden's efforts to restore American leadership in the fight against climate change and to help position our nation to be the global leader in clean energy and jobs, while continuing to respect the strong energy partnership between Canada and the United States.

Question. What negative implications does the cancelation of the Keystone XL pipeline have on the bilateral U.S.-Canada energy relationship? What about the broader bilateral relationship?

Answer. President Biden spoke with Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau in his first call to a foreign leader as President of the United States only two days after the cancelation of the permit for the Keystone XL pipeline. While President Biden acknowledged Prime Minister Trudeau's disappointment regarding the decision to rescind the permit, he reaffirmed his commitment to maintain an active bilateral dialogue and to further deepen cooperation with Canada. During the call, both leaders highlighted the strategic importance of the U.S.-Canada relationship and the desire to reinvigorate bilateral cooperation on an ambitious and wide-ranging agenda, including combating the COVID-19 pandemic, strengthening economic ties, defense, and global leadership to address the pressing challenge of climate change. The continuing strength of our relationship was further demonstrated with the issuance of the Roadmap for a Renewed U.S.-Canada Partnership in February.

Question. Do you think this decision has casted doubt among Canadians of the U.S. as a long-term reliable energy partner?

Answer. No. Following President Biden's decision to rescind the permit for the Keystone XL pipeline, Prime Minister Trudeau welcomed the President's decisions to rejoin the Paris Agreement and to place a temporary moratorium on all oil and natural gas leasing activities in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, noting, "I look forward to working with President Biden to reduce pollution, combat climate change, fight COVID-19, create middle class jobs, and build back better by supporting a sustainable economic recovery for everyone." The United States and Canada are working together to increase the scale and speed of action to address the climate crisis and support the transition to a net-zero clean energy future. If confirmed, I would support these goals in the course of my duties.

Question. If confirmed, where does North American energy security would fall on your list of priorities as U.S. Ambassador to Canada?

Answer. Energy security is an important priority. President Biden and Prime Minister Trudeau recognized the important energy security benefits of our bilateral energy relationship and its highly integrated infrastructure as part of the Roadmap for a Renewed U.S.-Canada Partnership. President Biden's Build Back Better agenda also highlights the importance of creating clean energy jobs as part of our economic recovery. If confirmed, I would focus on President Biden's priorities for the bilateral relationship as highlighted in the Roadmap, including the importance of energy security in the bilateral energy relationship.

Question. If confirmed, how would you work to promote American and North American energy security?

Answer. President Biden and Prime Minister Trudeau have pledged to work together to build on the countries' strong energy security partnership, including in the Roadmap for a Renewed U.S. Canada Partnership and to strengthen action towards a net-zero clean energy future. If confirmed, I would work to support this vision by communicating often and openly with Canadian counterparts on their energy plans, by identifying areas for deeper collaboration between our respective governments, and by looking for investment opportunities for U.S. companies.

Foreign Assistance

Question. In what areas do you see the greatest opportunity for U.S.-Canadian cooperation in foreign assistance?

Answer. A top priority of the United States and Canada is to end the COVID-19 pandemic and support global health security by working together to support global affordable access to and delivery of COVID-19 vaccines, including through the COVAX Facility. The United States and Canada cooperate closely in multilateral groups to raise global climate ambition, including through increased pledges of climate-related assistance to developing countries. Consistent with our shared values, the United States and Canada promote diversity and inclusion in our foreign assistance, particularly in support of gender equality through equal rights for women and girls.

Question. Canada is considered to be a "strong supporter" of the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria, and even hosted the Fund's fifth replenishment conference in 2016. Still, Canada has provided roughly $2.5 in contributions to the Fund since 2002, while the United States has provided over $17.6 billion. Similarly, Canada is considered to be an "anchor" donor to Gavi, the Vaccine Alliance, as well as to the Gavi-led COVID-19 Vaccines Global Access initiative (COVAX). Canada has provided $842 million in contributions for Gavi since 2002 and $545 million for COVAX, while the United States has provided over $4.4 billion and $3.5 billion, respectively. If confirmed, how will you encourage Canada to take on a larger proportion of contributions for the Global Fund, Gavi, and COVAX? Do you consider this a priority?

Answer. If confirmed, I intend to prioritize the issues highlighted in the bilateral Roadmap, of which fighting COVID-19 is first and foremost. Efforts to support global health security remain a top priority for both the United States and Canada, as demonstrated by Prime Minister Trudeau's participation at the Global COVID-19 Summit, hosted by President Biden on September 22, 2021. Both the United States and Canada have agreed to strengthen existing pandemic preparedness platforms and arrangements and to work to improve international institutions, including the World Health Organization and the Pan American Health Organization.

Question. How will you encourage the Canadian Government to help finance international pandemic preparedness and response more broadly? What levers does the United States have? Are you willing to use them?

Answer. Through the Roadmap for a Renewed U.S.-Canada Partnership, Canada has committed to strengthening international pandemic preparedness as a top priority. If confirmed, I would work closely with Canadian counterparts to drive progress on our shared priorities, including efforts to support increased global health security.

Venezuela

Question. Canada has taken a series of multilateral and bilateral actions in support of the Venezuelan people and to weaken the illegitimate Maduro regime.

- If confirmed, in what ways would you encourage Canada to take heightened action against the corrupt and illegitimate Maduro regime?

Answer. If confirmed, I would encourage Canada to continue to coordinate with the United States and other international partners to maintain and increase pressure on the Maduro regime, as appropriate. I would do this by seeking avenues to further isolate Maduro internationally, call attention to the regime's human rights abuses, and through the application of additional targeted sanctions, if warranted.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to encourage the Canadian Government to maintain support for the Guaido-led democratic forces as legitimate representative of Venezuela at the Organization of American States?

Answer. If confirmed, I would encourage the Canadian Government to maintain support for the Guaido-led democratic forces as the legitimate representatives of Venezuela at the Organization of American States.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to encourage the Canadian Government to maintain sanctions on the Maduro regime until there is a credible transition to democratic order in Venezuela?

Answer. Canada has implemented significant sanctions against the regime to date. If confirmed, I would seek continued support from Canada to maintain coordinated pressure against Maduro -including through sanctions- until there is a credible process underway to restore democracy, rule of law, and human rights in Venezuela.

Nicaragua

Question. Canada has issued sanctions related to Nicaragua in response to the gross and systematic human rights violations that have been committed by the Ortega regime against Nicaraguan people. In what ways would you encourage Canada to put further pressure on the Ortega regime?

Answer. If confirmed, I would encourage Canada to remain linked up with international efforts to further pressure the Ortega regime. I would also encourage Canada to continue to take a leadership role in the Organization of American States, where it has been instrumental in crafting previous joint statements denouncing the Ortega-Murillo regime.

STATE DEPARTMENT MANAGEMENT AND PUBLIC DIPLOMACY

Mission Canada

Question. Mission Canada has been under enormous stress over the past few years with management issues and COVID.

- What is your understanding of morale throughout Mission Canada?

Answer. Based on the experience of this nomination process, I understand our mission in Canada to be staffed by hard-working civil servants, foreign service officers and specialists, uniformed military personnel, and locally employed staff. Respecting the limitations of my role as a nominee, I have not had any personal contact with Mission Canada. If confirmed, one of my first priorities would be to assess the morale of these dedicated staff members at the embassy and at our constituent posts.

Question. How do you intend to improve morale across all of Mission Canada?

Answer. If confirmed, I would consult at the start of my tenure with key managers at U.S. Embassy Ottawa and at all our constituent posts to determine where the strengths and weaknesses of the mission are in terms of morale. I would make the maintenance of strong morale a priority in my role as Ambassador.

Question. How do you intend to create a unified mission and vision across Mission Canada?

Answer. If confirmed, I would consult closely with the Canada country desk, with others at State and across the interagency, and with Congress on priorities for our relationship with Canada. In Canada, I would consult with embassy and constituent post staff to solicit a full range of inputs and opinions, and I would encourage all to speak frankly. I would refer to the Roadmap for a Renewed U.S.-Canada Partnership to inform my vision for Mission Canada, and I would build on priorities and lines of effort in Mission Canada's current Integrated Country Strategy.

Management

Question. How would you describe your management style?

Answer. I would describe my management style as collaborative and respectful. I consider myself to be an accessible and communicative leader. I believe in communicating expectations clearly and in providing constructive feedback as required.

Question. How do you believe your management style will translate to an embassy setting, where resources may not be readily available and your diplomatic workforce are career employees?

Answer. As noted above, I understand our mission in Canada to be staffed by dedicated civil servants, foreign service officers and specialists, uniformed military personnel, and locally employed staff. I have the utmost respect for their work and for what they do every day on behalf of the American people. If confirmed, this respect would be the foundation for my management of the complex operations of Mission Canada. I have had the experience of working with similarly well motivated career (civil service) employees when I served as Chief of Staff in the Philadelphia City government. In order to accomplish the Mission's goals, I would prioritize securing appropriate resources for the Mission, commensurate with the importance of the U.S.-Canada relationship.

Question. As a political appointee rather than career diplomat, do you believe it is incumbent on new chiefs of mission to integrate themselves into embassy operations and culture? If yes, how do you intend to do so?

Answer. I agree with this approach. No leader can be successful if he or she lacks understanding of the organization's operations or workplace culture. If confirmed, I would commit to understand the Mission's operations and culture across the full spectrum of employees in Ottawa and at the constituent posts. As a manager and leader, I believe strongly in meeting and interacting with a wide swath of the employees in the Embassy and in being accessible and communicative.

Question. Do you believe it is ever acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either in public or private?

Answer. No. Respect for subordinates is an essential leadership trait.

Question. How do you envision your relationship with your deputy chief of mission?

Answer. The deputy chief of mission (DCM) plays a key role in ensuring that the Mission's priorities are pursued properly and that the Mission's functions are carried out smoothly. The DCM is also a wealth of institutional knowledge about the bilateral relationship and the workings of the State Department and the inter-agency. If confirmed, I would seek to complement the DCM's experience with my leadership of the Mission.

Question. If confirmed, what leadership responsibilities do you intend to entrust to your deputy chief of mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I would seek the advice of the DCM on how best to engage with Canada to pursue U.S. interests, how to solicit required resources so that the Mission may fully pursue these interests, and how best to support Mission staff in the completion of their duties.

Local Interaction

Question. It is imperative that U.S. diplomats get outside of posts abroad to meet with local actors, including host government officials, non-government organizations, and everyday citizens.

- In your experience, do U.S. diplomats get outside of our embassy walls enough to accomplish fully their missions?

Answer. Diplomats are most successful when they are able to allot ample time and are sufficiently resourced to engage directly and regularly with host country and host government contacts. If confirmed, I would support and prioritize my own engagement and staff engagement with their contacts to the maximum extent possible, consistent with Canada's current public health advice.

Question. How do you intend to increase the ability of U.S. diplomats to better access all local populations?

Answer. If confirmed, I would assess if the Mission had adequate resources to pursue U.S. interests and accomplish its goals, including the ability of our diplomats to access a sufficiently representative cross section of the local population. If these resources were lacking, I would work with my DCM and others to determine how best to fulfill our needs.

Public Diplomacy

Question. What is the public diplomacy environment like in Canada? What public diplomacy challenges do U.S. diplomats face?

Answer. The bilateral relationship between Canada and the United States is strong and productive, with deep, historic ties. Although Canadians see the bilateral relationship as vitally important, public opinion polling in 2021 showed Canadians perceived the state of relations between Canada and the United States with mixed feelings. To address this challenge, Mission Canada works to reinforce our shared values and goals, including our commitment to combat the COVID-19 pandemic, building back our economies in environmentally sustainable and socially inclusive ways, accelerating climate ambitions, advancing diversity and inclusion, bolstering security and defense, and building global alliances. Continuing to pursue these objectives, and to communicate our commitment and work on these issues would be a top priority if I am confirmed.

Question. How do you balance the importance of Main State versus the in-country mission when it comes to tailoring public diplomacy messages for foreign audiences?

Answer. The U.S. Mission in Canada conducts public diplomacy activities through its eight posts across Canada. Main State, through bureaus like Global Public Affairs, Western Hemisphere Affairs, and the Global Engagement Center, provides overall policy guidance and general messaging. Each post tailors messaging to its audience based on daily interactions with the Canadian public.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO DAVID L. COHEN BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Canada's Participation in the OSCE Parliamentary Assembly

Question. As Ambassador to Canada, how would you lead the U.S. Embassy to work with the newly-elected Canadian members of the Parliamentary Assembly to become active in the OSCE PA?

Answer. Our shared democratic heritage, including the regular election of legislative bodies to represent our populations, is a foundational aspect of the bilateral relationship between Canada and the United States. If confirmed, one of my top priorities would be to build strong connections with members of Canada's Parliament, in particular those newly elected on September 20. Canada participated in its 29th Annual Session of the OSCE Parliamentary Assembly (PA) on June 30 to July 6. If confirmed, I would encourage further inter-parliamentary dialogue through vigorous engagement with parliamentarians. I would also encourage active Canadian participation in OSCE PA meetings, committees, and election observation activities to advance our shared goals of promoting security, prosperity, and democracy in the OSCE region.

Question. I also authored a law directing the State Department to seek to build out a parliamentary assembly in the OAS. How would you propose that Canada help to support this initiative?

Answer. The United States and Canada both have a long history of supporting parliamentary exchanges. The Canadian Section of ParlAmericas is one of the 35 members of ParlAmericas, an institution that promotes Parliamentary Diplomacy in the Inter-American System. The international Secretariat of ParlAmericas is incorporated in Canada and remains the only interparliamentary forum to have its headquarters located in Ottawa.

If confirmed, I would cite past successes and promote the value of parliamentary exchanges, and I would encourage counterparts and legislators in Canada to continue to support a parliamentary assembly in the OAS comprising elected legislators.

SUBMITTED TO DAVID L. COHEN BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question. The Trudeau Government has stated it supports upgrading its equipment to strengthen NORAD, including purchasing more than 80 fighter aircraft. Yet the procurement process has been delayed for more than a decade, raising questions about Canada's political commitment to NORAD. What message would you communicate to the Government of Canada regarding NORAD and our shared aerospace defense?

Answer. If confirmed, I would build on our robust relationship and our frank engagement with Canada to underscore the strategic importance of the role NORAD plays in our continental defense, and the urgency with which Canada should bolster its contribution to our shared aerospace defense. In my engagement with Canada, I would further highlight the indispensable role we need Canada to play in promoting our common defense due to its position as a close ally and a strategically located neighbor. Regarding Canada's Future Fighter Capabilities Project, I would continue U.S. efforts to advocate for a U.S. solution to offer world-class defense technology at the best value in support of continued interoperability in defense of Northern America.

Question. How do you view our defense cooperation with Canada? Given our recent diplomatic tension with France and other allies over questions of defense cooperation, what steps will you take if confirmed to reassure Canada about our enduring commitment?

Answer. Our defense cooperation with Canada is one of the most comprehensive security relationships in the world and comprises both bilateral and multilateral arrangements. If confirmed, I would ensure U.S. security interests are fully represented in the U.S. Mission's engagement. Additionally, I would engage Canada's leadership to clarify the intent behind our security decisions, and I would regularly solicit Canada's input for how best to strengthen our alliance even further.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DR. CYNTHIA ANN TELLES BY SENATOR ROBERT MENEZDEZ

Economic Stability

Question. Costa Rica's remarkable economic growth over the past quarter of a century has been made possible through the strength of its democratic institutions, its openness to foreign investment, and steadfast adherence to environmental and humanitarian principles. Although Costa Rica still has one of the lowest poverty rates in the region, the COVID-19 pandemic has had a severe impact on the country's tourism-dependent economy.

- Given these setbacks, if confirmed as our ambassador in Costa Rica what would be your top priorities over the next year to help the country recover from the pandemic and build resiliency against future potential economic shocks?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to strengthen our economic partnership, which supports prosperity in both Costa Rica and the United States. In the short term, I will support Costa Rica's efforts to combat the COVID-19 pandemic, which has created a significant retraction of the economy, as it has in the region. Additionally, with respect to economic resiliency, I will strongly support efforts to expand bilateral trade and foreign direct investment (FDI). I will encourage Costa Rica to follow through on commitments for governmental and economic reforms, which will lead to a more sustainable path toward prosperity. I will also urge Costa Rica to leverage its recent accession to the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development to align itself even more closely with standards that will help it attract investment from U.S. firms and create quality employment. Lastly, I will support Costa Rica's efforts to ensure that post-pandemic growth is inclusive, creating opportunities in tourism and other key sectors for all its citizens.

Anomalous Health Incidents

Question. I am very concerned about directed energy attacks on U.S. Government personnel (so-called Anomalous Health Incidents). Ensuring the safety and security of our personnel abroad falls largely on individual Chiefs of Mission and the response of officers at post. It is imperative that any individual who reports a suspected incident be responded to promptly, equitably, and compassionately.

- Do you agree these incidents must be taken seriously, and pose a threat to the health of U.S. personnel?

Answer. Absolutely. There is nothing I take more seriously than the health and security of the people who will be working with me. The interagency community is actively examining a range of hypotheses but has not yet made a determination about the cause of the AHIs or whether they can be attributed to a foreign actor. AHIs have been a top priority for Secretary Blinken, who set clear goals for the Health Incident Response Task Force to strengthen the Department's communication with its workforce, provide care for affected employees and family members, and better protect against these events in the future.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to ensuring that any reported incident is treated seriously and reported quickly through the appropriate channels, and that any affected individuals receive prompt access to medical care?

Answer. Yes. I will do everything possible to ensure that employees, who report a possible AHI, receive immediate and appropriate attention and care and that the incident is reported through appropriate channels.

Question. Do you commit to meeting with medical staff and the RSO at post to discuss any past reported incidents and ensure that all protocols are being followed?

Answer. Yes. Again, if confirmed, there is nothing I will take more seriously than the health and security of the people who will be working at U.S. Embassy San Jose.

Migration

Question. Costa Rica has a long tradition of welcoming asylum seekers. As of the end of 2020, Costa Rica hosted nearly 122,000 people of concern to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. Already in 2021, nearly 23,000 people have applied for asylum in the country, mainly citizens fleeing oppression in Nicaragua.

- Dr. Telles, in your view, how important is it for the United States to support Costa Rica's humanitarian efforts and what will you do as our ambassador to further these efforts?

Answer. Costa Rica is a regional leader in providing access to international protection for refugees and asylum seekers and welcoming vulnerable migrants and guest workers from Nicaragua, Venezuela, Colombia, and elsewhere. We anticipate Costa Rica will continue to support Nicaraguan refugees and asylum seekers, which are likely to increase as a function of upcoming elections. If confirmed, I will work closely with Costa Rica to further our cooperation on migration and to assess the need to increase capacity to welcome refugees and asylum seekers.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DR. CYNTHIA ANN TELLES BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. Please describe the evolving Chinese presence in Costa Rica since President Solis switched diplomatic relations from Taiwan to the People's Republic of China in 2007.

Answer. Costa Rica was the first Central American country to recognize the People's Republic of China (PRC) in 2007. The countries signed a free trade agreement in 2011 and a bilateral investment treaty in 2016, but the economic relationship remains very limited. Foreign direct investment (FDI) from the PRC in Costa Rica is small, topping $10 million only once in the last decade and never exceeding one percent of total FDI inflows. Large PRC-backed infrastructure projects have been marred by delays or outright cancellations. Nonetheless, there are efforts to increase public diplomacy and to expand the PRC's economic presence in specific areas, including telecommunications.

Question. Please describe any efforts by the PRC to build relations with legislators and local government officials in Costa Rica.

Answer. My understanding is that the PRC has actively built relations with legislators and local government officials in Costa Rica to build support for PRC-backed infrastructure projects, which have been marred by delays or outright cancellations. The PRC has also attempted to make inroads with local officials through offers of monitoring and communications technology for municipalities.

Question. Please describe what would be your approach to countering Chinese influence in Costa Rica, if confirmed.

Answer. If confirmed, I will vigorously promote the United States as Costa Rica's steadfast partner, emphasizing our common democratic values and strong track record of success. I will communicate to the Costa Rican Government the security risks to Costa Rica's telecommunications infrastructure of allowing PRC-backed vendors to participate in or control its networks. I will also call attention to the poor-quality and costly infrastructure projects financed by the PRC and promote high-standard and transparent investment by the United States and our partners. I would also continue to support ongoing Embassy efforts to build strong relations and security programs with local governments, which have already served as effective counterpoints to the PRC's efforts to increase its influence in Costa Rican municipalities.

Question. Do you agree that the presence of Huawei in Costa Rica is concerning, especially as Costa Rica transitions to 5G?

Answer. The presence of equipment from untrustworthy vendors, such as Huawei, in any country's telecommunications networks is concerning. Allowing high-risk suppliers like Huawei to participate in or control any part of a 5G network, or nationwide broadband networks, creates risks to national security, critical infrastructure, and privacy. If confirmed, I will lead Embassy San Jose's ongoing efforts to engage with Costa Rica on the risks posed by PRC-backed 5G network providers and to encourage the use of only trustworthy vendors in the information and communications technology ecosystem.

Question. Costa Rica participates in China's Belt and Road Initiative (BRI) with the China Harbour Engineering Company (CHEC) undertaking upgrades and widening works for its primary national route (Route 32), costing US$465 million. Please describe U.S. concerns with the Belt and Road Initiative, including in Costa Rica.

Answer. The United States remains concerned about infrastructure projects built under the Belt and Road Initiative (BRI), including its efforts in Costa Rica. In many countries, the PRC uses investment under the BRI and diplomatic engagement to create dependency on PRC resources. In Costa Rica, efforts include the PRC's donation of a $100 million national soccer stadium (2011) and subsequent donation of $11 million to modernize the stadium (2018), as well as a multimillion-dollar contribution towards the construction of a police academy. Other large public investments in Costa Rica have not been successful. The financing and construction of the Route 32 highway expansion has been marred by delays, poor planning, and poor budgeting. If confirmed, I will work to maintain the United States' position as Costa Rica's economic partner of choice and trusted ally by emphasizing our geographic proximity, common democratic values, and strong track record of success.

According to the U.N. Refugee Agency, more than 108,000 Nicaraguans have fled the repression of the Ortega-Murillo regime in Nicaragua since 2018, mainly to the United States and Costa Rica. Nearly 23,000 Nicaraguans have sought asylum in Costa Rica in 2021 alone.

Question. Do you agree that the Ortega/Murillo regime in Nicaragua has become a source of significant instability in Central America, and for Costa Rica specifically?

Answer. Yes. The Ortega-Murillo Government's repression has contributed to instability in Central America and a dramatic increase in Nicaraguan refugees and asylum seekers. The Ortega-Murillo regime has taken actions that undermine respect for human rights and exacerbate fear and insecurity, thus, fueling surges in migration. Costa Rica is a regional leader in providing protection to asylum seekers, refugees, and vulnerable migrants, including a great number of Nicaraguans. If confirmed, I will work with Costa Rica and our international organization partners to increase their capacity to process asylum seekers and refugees and to provide protection to vulnerable Nicaraguans.

Question. The Ortega-Murillo regime of Nicaragua continues to receive international financing by the Central American Bank for Economic Integration (CABEI), despite the instability it generates in Central America.

Answer. I understand that the amount of CABEI financing that benefits the Ortega-Murillo Government is disproportionate, particularly given the many challenges we are addressing in Central America. If confirmed, I will support ongoing efforts to encourage Costa Rica to oppose any funding from CABEI that would go toward sustaining the Nicaraguan Government while it represses its people and undermines democracy and human rights.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to work with Costa Rica to ensure that any loan or assistance provided by CABEI to Nicaragua is administered through entities with full technical, administrative, and financial independence from the Ortega-Murillo regime?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will support ongoing efforts to encourage CABEI members to halt financing that directly benefits the Ortega-Murillo Government. If confirmed, I will encourage CABEI members, particularly Costa Rica, to explore ways to structure projects and work through non-governmental organizations and implementers, in order to ensure that financing more directly benefits the Nicaraguan people rather than the repressive Ortega-Murillo Government.

In March 2020, the U.S. indicted Nicolas Maduro and 14 current and former Venezuelan officials for allegedly partnering with the FARC to use cocaine as a weapon to “flood” the United States.

Question. Do the actions by the Maduro regime related to transnational criminal activities undermine U.S. counternarcotic and law enforcement cooperation with Costa Rica?

Answer. We are concerned about the Maduro regime’s transnational criminal activities and their impacts across the region. Costa Rica has become a major transshipment hub for South American cocaine headed to the United States, and it is used by transnational criminal organizations for trafficking both narcotics and people through Central America and Mexico. Therefore, sustaining support of Costa Rica’s security forces with training, equipment, and infrastructure will be key to ensuring their continued success in combating transnational crime. If confirmed, I will continue the strong U.S. support to bolster Costa Rica’s capacity to be our partner in these efforts.

Question. Please explain your understanding of the nexus between transnational criminal organizations and human smuggling/trafficking across Central America and Mexico.

Answer. Transnational criminal organizations fund their activities by engaging in drug trafficking, human smuggling, and human trafficking through Central America and Mexico. Irregular migrants pay smugglers to guide them through Central America to the United States and then later fall prey to human traffickers, who force them into committing crimes, such as transporting drugs to the United States. Irregular migrants are particularly vulnerable to exploitation and human rights abuses by transnational criminal organizations that engage in human trafficking crimes, such as commercial sex, forced labor, forced criminality, and forced recruitment. Irregular migrants who embark on a journey to the United States unwittingly put themselves at greater risk of financial hardship and human trafficking abuses.

Question. What financial benefits would you estimate drug trafficking groups are reaping from the increased flows of illegal migrants transiting through Costa Rica towards our Southwest border?

Answer. Transnational criminal organizations (TCOs) are reaping significant profit from smuggling migrants northward through Central America. Costa Rican and Panamanian authorities, assisted by a U.S. Department of Homeland Security investigative unit, are pursuing a cross-border human smuggling ring. Costa Rican media outlets widely reported smugglers are charging migrants from $11,000 to $22,000 per person.

In 2020, Guatemala and Honduras declared Hizballah a foreign terrorist organization.

Question. In your opinion, would it be in the interest of the United States for Costa Rica to make a similar determination?

Answer. Yes, it would be in the U.S. interest for Costa Rica to make a similar determination.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to seek Costa Rica’s designation of Hizballah as a foreign terrorist organization?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to seeking Costa Rica’s designation of Hizballah as a foreign terrorist organization.

Question. Costa Rica is a reliable partner in the fight against illicit narcotics. Please explain how an increase in coca cultivation in South America impacts the ability of the Costa Rican Government to effectively reduce the flow of illicit narcotics through its territory and into the United States.

Answer. Certainly, increased coca cultivation in South America impacts Costa Rica’s efforts to reduce the flow of narcotics bound for the United States. Costa Rica is the number one transshipment point for Colombian cocaine moving towards the United States. Nonetheless, it is a strong partner in the fight against drug trafficking as exemplified by its interdiction of a record 71 tons of narcotics in 2020. Increased coca cultivation leads to a higher volume of cocaine flowing through Costa Rica. The Embassy works closely with multiple partners in Costa Rica, including their Coast Guard, Border Police, Air Surveillance Service, and national police to increase interdictions and to build law enforcement capacity. In order to ensure that Costa Rica continues to be successful in combating transnational crime, it is critical for the United States to maintain its support of Costa Rica’s security forces with training, equipment, and infrastructure. If confirmed, I will continue the strong U.S. support to bolster Costa Rica's capacity to be our partner in these efforts.

There is currently a case of a minor American Citizen who was abducted by her mother to Costa Rica. Costa Rica, a signatory to the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction, is in direct violation of their agreements under the Convention and has not returned the child to her parent here in the U.S.

Question. If confirmed, what steps will you take to engage on this matter with Costa Rican authorities?

Answer. I understand the Embassy maintains regular contact with PANI (Costa Rican child protective services, the central authority for Hague Abduction Convention cases) and often communicates with the parents, in addition to conducting welfare checks on the child when possible. If confirmed, I will ensure that compliance with the Hague Convention agreements continues to be a top priority for the U.S. Embassy.

Question. How will you work to ensure Costa Rica becomes compliant with the obligations under the Convention?

Answer. Costa Rica was cited for demonstrating a pattern of noncompliance in the Department's 2020 and 2021 Annual Reports on International Child Abduction due to judicial delays and decisions that were noncompliant with the Hague Abduction Convention. To address these concerns, the Department of State's Consular Affairs Bureau engages with Costa Rican authorities and international partners. As part of these efforts, the State Department's Bureau of Consular Affairs helped organize a series of judicial seminars focused on the Convention hosted by the Costa Ricans in November 2020 and February 2021. If confirmed, I will be committed to supporting these and other efforts of the U.S. Embassy to help ensure that Costa Rica complies with its obligations under the Convention.

Question. According to the State Department's 2021 Trafficking in Persons report, Costa Rica was again placed on Tier 2, indicating they do not meet the minimum standards to eliminate trafficking but are making significant efforts to do so.

If confirmed, how will you engage with the host government on this issue to provide additional support to victims, increase prosecutions, and continue prevention efforts?

Answer. The Costa Rican Government demonstrated increasing efforts overall to combat human trafficking compared to the previous reporting period, considering the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on its anti-trafficking capacity. The Costa Rican Government's anti-trafficking efforts included employing new investigative techniques in trafficking cases, identifying more victims, and converting planned training and interagency coordination to virtual delivery amidst the pandemic. However, authorities decreased funding for anti-trafficking efforts and closed a trafficking-specific emergency shelter. If confirmed, I will encourage the Costa Rican Government to strengthen anti-trafficking efforts and to continue providing support for ongoing projects that improve prosecution efforts, protective services, and prevention campaigns.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DR. CYNTHIA ANN TELLES BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question. If confirmed, how would you engage with Nicaraguan activists and refugees in Costa Rica fleeing the persecution of Daniel Ortega's regime?

Answer. I am deeply concerned about the Nicaraguan refugees fleeing the Ortega-Murillo Government's repression. If confirmed, I will support Costa Rica as it continues to serve as a safe haven for those Nicaraguans. I also commit to engage with those courageous individuals who are advocating for democracy and human rights in their home country.

Question. What steps is the administration taking to support Costa Rica in its efforts to welcome and care for the Nicaraguan refugees streaming into the country?

Answer. Costa Rica is a regional leader in providing protection to asylum seekers and vulnerable migrants and has a tradition of welcoming vulnerable migrants from Nicaragua. This summer, Costa Rica has seen a rise of Nicaraguan asylum seekers and migrants in the wake of political violence in Nicaragua. If confirmed, I will work with Costa Rica to continue to increase their capacity to process asylum seekers and provide protection. Costa Rica is concerned that it does not have the resources to continue to care for Nicaraguan asylum seekers and vulnerable migrants.

If confirmed, I will continue to work closely with our international organization partners on the ground and the Costa Rican Government to build capacity and provide protection.

Question. The Trump administration's donation of three former Coast Guard cutters to Costa Rica in 2018 gave the country its first blue water interdiction capability. Since then, seizures of illegal drugs has dramatically increased in the country. I applaud this creative use of former Coast Guard cutters to support our allies in defense of U.S. national security interests. Looking forward, what are the current gaps in Costa Rica's capability to disrupt the flow of illegal drugs from South America through the country? What is the Biden administration doing to address these gaps in cooperation with the Government of Costa Rica?

Answer. Costa Rica remains a strong partner in the fight against drug trafficking, interdicting a record 71 tons of narcotics in 2020. The Embassy works closely with multiple partners in Costa Rica, including their Coast Guard, Border Police, Air Surveillance Service, and national police, on increasing interdictions and building law enforcement capacity. Costa Rica has become a major transit point for South American cocaine heading to the United States. Continuing to support Costa Rica's security forces with training, equipment, and infrastructure will help ensure it can effectively combat transnational crime. If confirmed, I will assess the U.S. support needed to bolster Costa Rica's capacity to be our strong partner in these efforts.

Question. How has U.S. security assistance and cooperation been utilized by Costa Rica? If confirmed, what steps would you take to oversee and strengthen our cooperation?

Answer. The U.S. Government works with Costa Rica closely on a number of shared security concerns, including narcotics trafficking. U.S. security assistance to Costa Rica focuses on four areas: counternarcotics; curbing transnational threats and crime; improving citizen security and law enforcement capacity; and strengthening rule of law. If confirmed, I will continue the strong U.S. support for bilateral security cooperation with Costa Rica and assess the need for enhancing this partnership.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO HON. TOM UDALL BY SENATOR ROBERT MENEDEZ

Question. What steps should the United States take to work more closely with New Zealand on economic and trade matters?

Answer. Robust economic engagement in the Indo-Pacific is a key part of the Biden-Harris administration's effort to Build Back Better. The United States will continue working with New Zealand and other partners in the Indo-Pacific region to address specific economic issues such as infrastructure, the digital economy, and energy.

Question. How do you anticipate this agreement will affect the U.S.-New Zealand bilateral relationship?

Answer. AUKUS will increase peace and stability in the Indo-Pacific, which will have a positive impact on the bilateral relationship with New Zealand. PM Ardern has said that she welcomes "the increased engagement of the UK and US in the region and reiterate our collective objective needs to be the delivery of peace and stability and the preservation of the international rules based system."

Question. In what ways can we bolster our security partnership with New Zealand and work towards stability in the South Pacific?

Answer. Our military-to-military relationship has reached new heights since the signing of the Wellington and Washington declarations in 2010 and 2012, respectively. Combined naval patrols and exercises have become routine, the New Zealand Army holds one of the Deputy Commander positions with the 25th Infantry Division, and the Royal New Zealand Air Force has been instrumental in providing critical intelligence, surveillance, and reconnaissance (ISR) support in the Pacific.

The United States and New Zealand defense forces continue to explore additional ways to cooperate beyond our current work in the areas of humanitarian assistance and disaster relief and peacekeeping support operations.

Question. What is your assessment of how New Zealand's thinking on China has evolved in recent years? And what should the United States be doing to influence New Zealand's approach towards confronting and competing with China?

Answer. New Zealand is increasingly concerned about growing PRC influence in the Pacific, an indelible part of its own identity and backyard. Mission New Zealand in turn has deepened government, parliamentary, and academic engagement with the United States. Mission New Zealand's Public Affairs section has collaborated with speakers and exchanges to promote our shared understanding on issues related to the PRC.

Question. Do you agree these incidents must be taken seriously, and pose a threat to the health of U.S. personnel?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed. There is nothing I take more seriously than the health and security of the people who will be working with me. There is an extensive, ongoing interagency investigation into the cause of these incidents and how we can best protect our people.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to ensuring that any reported incident is treated seriously and reported quickly through the appropriate channels, and that any affected individuals receive prompt access to medical care?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will do everything possible to ensure that employees who report a possible AHI receive immediate and appropriate attention and care and the incident is reported through appropriate channels.

Question. Do you commit to meeting with medical staff and the RSO at post to discuss any past reported incidents and ensure that all protocols are being followed?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed. Again, there is nothing I take more seriously than the health and security of the people who will be working with me.

Question. If confirmed, what opportunities and priorities will you pursue to grow U.S.-New Zealand climate cooperation?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to continue strong U.S.-New Zealand climate cooperation, for instance on the Global Methane Pledge and USDA's AIM4C. The United States is committed to working with New Zealand to raise global ambition on climate change.

Question. What are the U.S.-New Zealand shared security interests in building resilience and climate change adaptation capacities in Oceania—especially the countries facing existential crises due to climate change?

Answer. Climate change is considered an existential crisis by many Pacific Island countries. The United States and New Zealand share similar concerns about the security of Pacific Islands that may be forced to take on financial debt from other countries, such as the PRC, to fund adaptation programs like climate-resilient infrastructure.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. TOM UDALL BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. What are the key interests underpinning U.S. strategy in the Indo-Pacific region, and what should our objectives and goals be in the region?

Answer. Strong diplomatic, military, and economic relationships with like-minded allies and partners can help ensure a safe, prosperous United States. To that end, I support a peaceful and prosperous Indo-Pacific region where democracies can thrive, with strong institutions, responsible actors, and close security, economic, and people-to-people ties.

Question. The 2018 National Defense Strategy states that “great power competition, not terrorism, is now the primary focus of U.S. national security.” Do you agree with the Defense Department's assessment?

Answer. Counterterrorism remains a deep concern to the United States and our partners, as recent acts of terrorism in New Zealand have demonstrated. As Secretary Blinken has said, China is the only country with the economic, diplomatic, military, and technological power to seriously challenge the stable and open international system. I support that statement and, if confirmed, will work closely with our New Zealand partners to advance U.S. interests and support a free, open, and prosperous Indo-Pacific.

Question. Do you agree that the objectives and policies of the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) is the greatest foreign policy challenge facing the United States today? If not, why not? What do you think instead is our greatest foreign policy challenge?

Answer. The People's Republic of China (PRC) is the only competitor potentially capable of combining its economic, diplomatic, military, and technological power to mount a sustained challenge to a stable and open international system. However, the United States can still cooperate with China on issues of mutual interest. If confirmed, I will work with New Zealand under the premise that the U.S. relationship with China will be competitive when it should be, collaborative when it can be, and adversarial when it must be.

Question. If confirmed, what will your top 3-5 policy priorities be as U.S. Ambassador?

Answer. I look forward to working with our partners to advance U.S. and common interests in a variety of issues. My top three priorities would be strengthening our Pacific and Antarctic cooperation, advancing security ties, and expanding economic cooperation and commercial opportunities. The United States would like to be the Pacific's "partner of choice."

Question. How would you characterize the current U.S.-New Zealand relationship? What are our main challenges? Where do we have opportunities for growth?

Answer. The United States and New Zealand have a very close relationship, with strong political, economic, intelligence sharing, security, and people-to-people ties. We cooperate on a range of international issues from upholding the rules-based international order and defending against threats to shared democratic values. We also work together to counter foreign influence and debt diplomacy in the region. Our space and cyber cooperation are vibrant and growing. Challenge areas include COVID-19 recovery, climate change, and ensuring a free and open Indo-Pacific. If confirmed, I will work to strengthen our Pacific and Antarctic cooperation, advance U.S.-New Zealand security ties, and expand economic and commercial opportunities.

Question. What role do you see New Zealand playing in the Indo-Pacific region in light of the growing challenges from China?

Answer. China is New Zealand's most important goods trading partner and second most important overall trading partner after Australia. Recent New Zealand Governments have made tough public statements about the PRC's influence in the Pacific and its human rights record and sharpened the country's stance on the South China Sea. If confirmed, I would continue to work with New Zealand as a likeminded democratic partner. In addition to diplomatic responses in the South China Sea, New Zealand has funded repairs to identified substandard projects completed by Chinese construction companies in the Cook Islands.

Question. What specifically can we do to strengthen our security relationship with New Zealand in the short-term?

Answer. New Zealand officials have previously stressed the importance of their Government's commitment to increased intelligence and defense interoperability, prevention of the movement of foreign terrorist fighters, and stoppage of terrorist financing. If confirmed, I would continue to expand these efforts and work with the New Zealand defense forces to explore additional ways to cooperate beyond our current work in the areas of humanitarian assistance and disaster relief and peace-keeping support operations.

Question. What specifically can we do to strengthen our security relationship with New Zealand in the medium- to long-term?

Answer. U.S. defense engagement with New Zealand is strong but limited by the small size of the New Zealand Defense Force. However, New Zealand has recently taken steps to increase interoperability with the United States by purchasing P-8s and C-130Js and conducting combined patrols in the South China Sea with the United States and other Five Eye partner nations. If confirmed, I would continue to encourage New Zealand to work with the United States as the security partner of choice, including by enhancing our cooperation in the fields of space and cybersecurity.

Question. What specifically can we do to strengthen our economic relationship with New Zealand in the short-term? What about the longer-term?

Answer. Partnerships in innovation, like the technology sector, film industry, and the space sector, are helping to drive trade and investment in both New Zealand and the United States. New Zealand has a small but developed economy that is highly trade dependent, so New Zealand's trade dependency on the PRC has a distorting effect on its foreign policy. If confirmed, I will explore whether regulatory reforms or a digital services/trade agreement could provide interim steps that signal U.S. support to New Zealand on trade.

Question. How would you characterize the current U.S.-Samoa relationship?

Answer. The United States and Samoa enjoy strong bilateral relations based on shared values and mutual trust. Cultural and historical linkages, including shared connections to the U.S. territory of American Samoa, translate into strong people to people ties. The United States and Samoa also share close economic ties on multiple levels and cooperate on security and policing matters.

Question. What are our main challenges?

Answer. China is seeking to grow its influence among the Pacific Islands, including Samoa. Samoa is particularly vulnerable to the effects of climate change. Additionally, unreported, unregulated and illegal fishing threatens the livelihoods of Samoan fisherman. If confirmed, I look forward to discussing how to best address these challenges with the Government of Samoa.

Question. Where do we have opportunities for growth?

Answer. Our engagement with Samoa is vital for a peaceful and prosperous Indo-Pacific region where democracies can thrive, with strong institutions, responsible actors, and close security, economic, and people-to-people ties that benefit the U.S. economy and our people. The PRC is engaged in Samoa, as it is throughout the Pacific, and the United States needs to be present to maintain and expand its influence. If confirmed, I look forward to establishing strong ties with the new Government of Samoa and identifying what more we can do together as Pacific nations.

Question. What role does Samoa and the Pacific Islands play in broader U.S. strategy goals in the Indo-Pacific?

Answer. Samoa is an active member of regional and international organizations, including the United Nations, the World Trade Organization, the Pacific Islands Forum, and the Polynesian Leaders Group. Samoa regularly sides with the United States on key votes in international fora. Samoa is particularly vulnerable to climate change, and I understand the Government will be a willing partner on U.S. or global initiatives to mitigate the ongoing effects of climate change or expand the use of new climate-friendly technologies. If confirmed, I will reassure Samoa that the Pacific region remains an enduring foreign policy priority for the United States.

Question. In your assessment, what are the implications for U.S. interests of more pronounced presence and influence by China in the Pacific Islands?

Answer. The PRC's goals for the Indo-Pacific include reducing U.S. influence and that of like-minded partners, growing its own influence, and reducing Taiwan's international space.

Question. What forms of influence are we seeing from China that could have a negative impact on U.S. interests in the Pacific Islands region?

Answer. The Pacific Island Countries are susceptible to questionable loans and infrastructure projects that can threaten their sovereignty and the stability and security of the region. China has made significant inroads in Samoa over the last decade by providing extensive development assistance, primarily in the form of large infrastructure projects, including the airport, the national hospital, and government buildings. In September 2019, the Solomon Islands and Kiribati established diplomatic ties with Beijing, leaving Taiwan with just four diplomatic partners in the region (Marshall Islands, Nauru, Palau, and Tuvalu). Some Pacific Islands Countries no longer accept PRC loans, but grants remain on the table, and there is high demand from the region for development and infrastructure assistance.

Question. How can the U.S. better collaborate with Indo-Pacific countries, including New Zealand and Samoa, to deal with the negative effects of China's economic coercion and malign political influence?

Answer. If confirmed, I will seek to engage with New Zealand and Samoa where our mutual interests are being undermined by PRC actions. Like the United States, New Zealand has areas of cooperation and areas of disagreement with China. I welcome New Zealand's public comments on regional security and the South China Sea, including that all countries, big and small, need to follow the rules of international conduct. I also welcome New Zealand's public comments regarding human rights in Hong Kong and Xinjiang.

Question. Do you support pursuing a robust trade agenda in the Indo-Pacific region?

Answer. Robust economic engagement in the Indo-Pacific is a key part of the Biden-Harris administration's effort to Build Back Better. If confirmed, I would support an Indo-Pacific trade agenda focused on supporting American working families, defending our values, and protecting the long-term prosperity and security of the United States. As President Biden has said, the United States is focused on making investments in U.S. workers and U.S. competitiveness before he signs new trade agreements, including in the Indo-Pacific.

Question. What are your views on the United States joining the Comprehensive and Progressive Trans-Pacific Partnership agreed to by 11 other nations in 2019?

Answer. As White House Press Secretary Jen Psaki said, “The President has been clear that he would not rejoin the TPP as it was initially put forward.” Much has changed in the world since the original TPP was signed in 2016. The administration is reviewing the CPTPP to evaluate its consistency with the Build Back Better agenda. If confirmed, I would work with the White House, other agencies, and Congress to negotiate and develop trade policies that advance the interests of all Americans, support American innovation, and enhance our competitiveness.

Question. What areas can the U.S. expand its trade and investment footprint in the region?

Answer. If confirmed, I would look for ways to work with New Zealand to build the capacity of countries in the Pacific to participate in comprehensive, high standard bilateral or multilateral trade agreements that remove barriers and unfair practices. I would also explore securing, diversifying, and strengthening resilient U.S. supply chains to ensure we are prepared not only to defeat COVID-19, but to reduce the likelihood that future crises or global challenges can impede our supply chains and economic growth.

Question. Do you support exploring opportunities for expanding digital trade in the region specifically? Why or why not?

Answer. Barriers to digital trade threaten the ability of all firms—including small businesses—to benefit from the advantages of the digital economy. Our test for trade policies—including in the area of digital trade—is whether they deliver for the American worker and the middle class. If confirmed, I would apply that metric to any new trade deal. For further questions, I refer you to USTR.

Question. On September 17th, Chinese Commerce Minister submitted China’s application to join the Comprehensive and Progressive Agreement for Trans-Pacific Partnership (CPTPP) to New Zealand’s trade minister. What should the future of the trade structure in the Indo-Pacific look like?

Answer. I understand that China has submitted a formal request to join CPTPP. The United States is not a party to the CPTPP; therefore, it defers to CPTPP parties regarding views on China’s potential accession. That said, if confirmed, I would engage with New Zealand and other partners who are members of the CPTPP to remind them that China’s non-market trade practices and use of economic coercion against other countries should factor into CPTPP parties’ evaluation of China as a potential candidate for accession. For further questions, I refer you to USTR.

Question. The U.S. has been engaged with the Pacific Islands on multiple energy projects. What would your priorities be with respect to cooperation on energy, should you be confirmed?

Answer. New Zealand is an important partner for assisting the Indo-Pacific region with its clean energy transition. If confirmed, I will work to strengthen our energy cooperation with New Zealand to increase energy security, expand access to energy, and accelerate the region’s decarbonization. One project I would like to continue pursuing with New Zealand and other like-minded partners is the Papua New Guinea Electrification Partnership (PEP), which will help 70 percent of Papua New Guinea’s population have reliable access to energy by 2030.

Question. Should the Development Finance Corporation be restricted from financing energy projects in Samoa and other qualifying Pacific Island nations if those projects are related to oil, natural gas, or other fossil fuels?

Answer. The Development Finance Corporation and other U.S. development financing tools will be important to accelerating the Pacific’s transition to clean energy economies. Assisting the Pacific in its deployment of renewable energy can best advance the region’s energy security, energy access, and decarbonization goals in most instances.

Question. Does New Zealand’s nuclear free policy present challenges to the U.S.-New Zealand security relationship?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to work with New Zealand to advance our security relationship. Despite its history, New Zealand invited the U.S. Navy to send a ship to celebrate the 75th anniversary of the Royal New Zealand Navy in 2016. New Zealand has again invited the Navy to make a port visit in New Zealand as soon as is practical with COVID-19.

Question. How can we mitigate the negative effects of these challenges?

Answer. U.S.-New Zealand relations have warmed significantly over the past decade, which has resulted in several Royal New Zealand Navy ship visits to U.S. military ports. The bilateral relationship has grown significantly over the past few years and is stronger than it has been in decades. If confirmed, I will work to further strengthen our partnership.

Question. Do you commit to messaging these negative effects to New Zealand?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the frequent, candid, and constructive conversations on issues across the board and at the highest levels of government.

Question. Do you agree that extended deterrence is fundamental to our alliance network in the Indo-Pacific?

Answer. I believe the United States should remain committed to maintaining a strong, credible deterrent to defend the United States and our allies, while also taking steps to reduce the role of nuclear weapons. If confirmed, I will uphold the policy that extended deterrence in the Indo-Pacific region plays a critical role in advancing U.S. national security interests, including providing assurance to allies and promoting nonproliferation.

Question. China has a history of breaking its promises, and its words on climate change often do not match its actions. Will you commit to the following: not to advise or support entrance into an agreement with the People's Republic of China (PRC) that trades key U.S. interests away for cooperation or future promises by Beijing on climate change;

Answer. I believe the United States must judge Beijing by its actions, not its words. If confirmed, I will work with allies and partners to impose costs on China when it violates international norms and agreements. If confirmed, I will also work with New Zealand and other partners to press Beijing to raise its climate ambition significantly during this critical decade.

Question. not to recommend any the following policies to either secure or preserve a climate change agreement with the PRC:

- Decreasing freedom of navigation exercises in the South China Sea;
- Making changes in our defense relationships with any U.S. ally, or our overall defense posture in the Indo-Pacific region;
- Delaying arms sales to Taiwan, or pulling back from any form of U.S.-Taiwan cooperation;
- Deciding not to pursue policies that safeguard the U.S. economy from Beijing's anti-competitive trading practices;
- Terminating sanctions against individuals or entities of the PRC, or removing a PRC company from the Entity List;
- Dropping U.S. policies that hold CCP officials and companies accountable for egregious human rights abuses, including those conducted in Xinjiang?

Answer. Prime Minister Ardern's Government has spoken out about human rights abuses by China, condemned malicious cyber activity by Chinese state-sponsored actors, and reaffirmed its support for the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea (UNCLOS) in the face of expansive Chinese claims in the South China Sea. If confirmed, I will continue to work with the Government, businesses, and people of New Zealand to promote our shared interests on issues related to China. If confirmed, I will engage with New Zealand and other partners on climate change, while continuing to protect our national security interests and working to maintain a free, open, and secure Indo-Pacific.

Question. What is your view on the challenges presented by greater presence of Huawei Marine in constructing undersea cables?

Answer. If confirmed, I would urge our partners to consider the potential risks to national and economic security, critical infrastructure, and privacy of selecting untrusted vendors to build and maintain undersea cable systems. Undersea cables are vital lines of communication, but there are national security risks associated with network equipment that can be manipulated, disrupted, or controlled by authoritarian regimes, like the People's Republic of China, which have no regard for human rights or privacy, or where the equipment is susceptible to potential unethical, unlawful, and otherwise inappropriate behavior, including intellectual property theft.

Question. Do you commit to prioritizing this issue should it come up for either of the two countries where you are credentialed, should you be confirmed? How would you use diplomacy and other tools to address this issue?

Answer. If confirmed, I would urge our partners to consider the potential risks to national and economic security, critical infrastructure, and privacy of selecting untrusted vendors to build and maintain undersea cables or choosing to land and interconnect with such cable systems.

Question. What is your understanding of morale throughout Mission New Zealand?

Answer. I understand Mission New Zealand is, unsurprisingly, a very sought after posting with high morale. As an outsider, I do not yet know specifics, but I know that Mission New Zealand and Mission Samoa, like much of the world, have faced quarantine requirements, occasional lock-downs, and travel disruptions due to COVID-19 restrictions.

Question. How do you intend to improve morale across Mission New Zealand?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with the teams at Mission New Zealand and Mission Samoa to understand and address any issues affecting morale.

Question. How do you intend to create a unified mission and vision across Mission New Zealand?

Answer. If confirmed, I will start by listening to those already in Mission New Zealand and Mission Samoa. I will also clearly communicate my priorities and those of the Biden-Harris administration.

Question. How would you describe your management style?

Answer. I believe in being an inclusive manager and encouraging everyone to perform to the best of their abilities.

Question. How do you believe your management style will translate to an embassy setting, where resources may not be readily available and your diplomatic workforce are career employees?

Answer. As a collaborative and inclusive manager, if confirmed, I hope to listen closely and to seek ideas and opinions widely throughout Mission New Zealand and Mission Samoa. Many of the best ideas come from those closest to the issues.

Question. As a political appointee rather than career diplomat, do you believe it is incumbent on new chiefs of mission to integrate themselves into embassy operations and culture? If yes, how do you intend to do so?

Answer. New Chiefs of Mission must integrate themselves into the mission community and culture. A lot can be learned from career State Department Personnel.

Question. Do you believe it is ever acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either in public or private?

Answer. I don't believe in berating mission employees in public or private. If confirmed, I would work to supply constructive criticism without belittling, if and when required. When State Department performance reviews are required, I would conduct these with the goal of recognizing strong performance and improving weaker performance.

Question. How do you envision your relationship with your deputy chief of mission?

Answer. As an inclusive manager, if confirmed, I will work to empower my deputy chief of mission (DCM) to do his or her best work by being trusted and having my full confidence.

Question. If confirmed, what leadership responsibilities do you intend to entrust to your deputy chief of mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will rely on my DCM's career-knowledge of Department policies and procedures to ensure the smooth functioning of Mission New Zealand and Mission Samoa.

Question. In your experience, do U.S. diplomats get outside of our embassy walls enough to accomplish fully their missions?

Answer. My experience overseas has taught me that State Department employees are out in the community and trying hard to learn about the country they are serving in.

Question. How do you intend to increase the ability of U.S. diplomats to better access all local populations?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with the public affairs teams in Mission New Zealand and Mission Samoa to ensure we are reaching all of the local populations to the best of our ability.

Question. What is the public diplomacy environment like in New Zealand? What public diplomacy challenges do U.S. diplomats face?

Answer. I understand there is a vibrant and active public diplomacy environment in New Zealand. If confirmed, I would work to expand and strengthen the relationship between the people and Government of the United States and the citizens of New Zealand and Samoa. Some of the successful programs Mission New Zealand has done include cultural and sports programming, academic grants, educational exchanges, and international visitor programs. I hope to continue science and technology-related public diplomacy programs which focus on encouraging youth, particularly women, to explore STEM fields, including space industries. The COVID-19 pandemic has been a challenge for public diplomacy programming, although many initiatives have continued by shifting online or by changing logistics.

Question. How do you balance the importance of Main State versus the in-country mission when it comes to tailoring public diplomacy messages for foreign audiences?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with the team at Mission New Zealand to understand and protect the Mission's crucial role in formulating public diplomacy programs and responses. The staff of Americans, New Zealanders, and Samoans based at the Embassy in Wellington, the Consulate General in Auckland, and the Embassy in Apia, Samoa, all provide expertise and local insight. If confirmed, I will draw on that local expertise to ensure our public diplomacy messages are appropriate for the local audience.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. TOM UDALL BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question. How do you assess New Zealand's relationship with China?

Answer. New Zealand is increasingly concerned about growing PRC influence in the Pacific and has made clear that it will follow an independent foreign policy that supports the rules-based international order in the face of challenges to democracy, human rights, governance, free markets, and the global common good. New Zealand's trade relationship with China has not stopped its Government from speaking out on matters of security and human rights.

Question. What are the implications for U.S. security and defense cooperation from a growing relationship between New Zealand and China?

Answer. The United States and New Zealand are both committed to the security, stability and prosperity of our shared neighborhood, as well as strengthening democracy and democratic resilience across the Pacific region. We continue to draw on New Zealand's depth of knowledge and unique perspective on the South Pacific and look forward to greater partnership in the North Pacific.

Both the United States and New Zealand have a clear national interest in ensuring freedom of navigation and overflight, respect for international law, unimpeded lawful commerce, and the peaceful resolution of disputes. New Zealand's relationship with China, like ours, can be expected to have aspects of competition and cooperation.

Question. If confirmed, what would be your message to the Government of New Zealand regarding strategic competition with China?

Answer. If confirmed, I will seek to engage with New Zealand where our mutual interests are being undermined by PRC actions, while recognizing areas where cooperation with China is still possible. I welcome New Zealand's public comments on regional security and the South China Sea, including that all countries, big and small, need to follow the rules of international conduct. I also welcome New Zealand's public comments regarding human rights in the PRC including in Hong Kong and Xinjiang.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO MS. SARAH MARGON BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Cuba

Question. If confirmed as Assistant Secretary for Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor, what are some of the specific steps you would take to advance democracy and human rights in Cuba?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure the U.S. Government continues its steadfast support and engagement with Cuban human rights defenders, activists, and other civil society members to bolster their important work; promote human rights, fundamental freedoms, and democracy; and facilitate the free flow of information to the Cuban people, including access to the internet. I will also support continued use of targeted sanctions and other punitive measures that respond to human rights violations. In addition, I will work closely with partners and allies—in the region and beyond—to develop a coordinated, comprehensive, and expanded approach to this support.

Question. What are the redlines, in your view, for the steps that the Díaz Canel regime must take before there should be any sort of normalization with Cuba?

Answer. Before any sort of normalization with Cuba takes place, there must be signs that the Díaz-Canel regime is adhering to long-established benchmarks for democratic governance, respect for human rights, and fundamental freedoms. This includes the release of political prisoners, the freedom of movement, speech, and expression, and an end to arbitrary detention.

Question. Will you commit to pushing back on unfair bias against Israel from international human rights organizations?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to pushing back against unfair and disproportionate bias against Israel across the international system.

Question. There have been extensive efforts by many countries including China, Saudi Arabia, Belarus and Russia, to engage in assassinations, abductions, and other forms of violence against nationals abroad, including human rights activists, dissidents, and members of diaspora communities. Freedom House recently documented 608 cases of direct, physical transnational repression since 2014, including assassinations, abductions, assaults, detentions, and unlawful deportations. How should the United States respond to and deter these activities?

Answer. Human rights abuses through transnational repression activities are disturbing and must be taken seriously, and I understand that the Biden administration is focusing additional attention and resources to combatting the growing scourge of transnational repression. If confirmed, this will be a top priority for me, especially given the potential implications transnational repression has here at home. I will endeavor to ensure that human rights activists, journalists, political dissidents, former insiders, and members of minority groups are able to exercise their human rights and fundamental freedoms without fear of retribution, retaliation, punishment, or harm from the governments of their home state and that if they flee their home state they are adequately protected. To promote accountability for government officials who engage in transnational repression, I will ensure that combatting transnational repression remains a high priority for DRL, and will work closely with interagency partners, as well as congressional allies, to consider all available tools to deter perpetrators, including financial sanctions and visa restriction authorities such as the Khashoggi Ban, which the Department announced in February to promote accountability for governments that threaten and attack journalists and perceived dissidents overseas.

Question. In what ways should we work together with our partners and allies to combat this sort of authoritarian reach and protect threatened communities?

Answer. I take very seriously the growing threat of transnational repression, as I understand the Biden administration does. If confirmed, I will support and lead diplomatic engagement with like-minded partners to deter, counter, and hold accountable perpetrators of transnational repression. I support information-sharing between like-minded partners to identify and build evidence against those responsible for these attacks, to prevent transnational repression from occurring, and to protect the individuals who are targeted. I will coordinate diplomacy, messaging, and action such as sanctions, with our partners and allies, to strengthen their impact and deterrent effect. Publicly denouncing individuals involved in transnational repression, as with other human rights abuses, can help deter them and others from committing subsequent attacks.

Question. Please describe the Department's efforts to address abuses and violations of the rights of people with disabilities.

Answer. I understand that the Department's disability rights programs promote the rule of law and good governance by strengthening the capacity of Disabled Persons Organizations (DPOs) to effectively promote implementation and enforcement of national and local disability rights laws. Currently, the Department's disability rights programming is in 46 countries including: 7 countries in Africa, 11 countries in East Asia and the Pacific, 4 countries in Europe and Eurasia, 8 countries in Near East Asia, 4 countries in South Central Asia, and 12 countries in the Western Hemisphere. If confirmed, I will be happy to consult on these programs.

Question. How much funding does the Department provide to foreign governments, foreign NGOs, and U.S. NGOs to promote and advance the rights of people with disabilities?

Answer. I understand that DRL has approximately $15,500,000 in active programming dollars focused on disability rights programming in 46 countries.

Question. How does the DRL bureau engage with other parts of the Department and the broader interagency to prioritize support for people with disabilities in U.S. foreign policy, including in bilateral engagements?

Answer. I understand that DRL promotes the full inclusion of persons with disabilities by providing capacity building training, resources, and technical assistance to Department personnel and collaborating with regional and functional bureaus and the interagency to achieve policy objectives that promote inclusion and expand disability rights. Further, I understand that DRL works with federal agencies to support bilateral policy engagements on employment, inclusive education, accessibility, and independent living.

Question. Describe the Department's efforts to support human rights defenders, both in terms of support to their work and support to provide them with safety and protection when threatened. Please be specific. How does the Department currently define a human rights defender?

Answer. I understand the Department defines a human rights defender (HRD) as an individual, working alone or in groups, who non-violently advocates for the promotion and protection of universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms. I understand the Department supports HRDs through a variety of diplomatic tools, including by engaging with the U.N. and its special rapporteurs to address specific threats against human rights defenders; developing policies to reduce violence against human rights defenders; working across the interagency to strengthen policies and practices related to protecting human rights defenders; and conducting foreign assistance programs. More specifically, I understand DRL has developed programming to provide HRDs with flexible, short-term, emergency financial support that gives them the real-time assistance they need to increase their safety and continue their critical work. I understand short-term emergency grants include support for: medical expenses, legal representation, prison visits, trial monitoring, temporary relocation, security, equipment replacement, daily living necessities, and dependent support. Since the inception of impact reporting, I understand 97 percent of respondents stated that the assistance received has had a positive impact on their safety or reduced the threat they faced and 80 percent of respondents have been able to continue their human rights work in some way.

Question. Please describe the role played by the DRL bureau in the planning for the December Summit for Democracy.

Answer. The Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor serves as the subject matter experts within the Department. Given the scope of the Summit shared to date, I am confident that DRL has been involved in providing technical expertise in anti-corruption, human rights, countering authoritarianism, supporting marginalized populations, and engaging international organizations and civil society. DRL is also skilled in planning and hosting large events including the Community of Democracies Governing Council Ministerial in 2017. If confirmed, I will also engage in Summit planning and implementation.

Question. What influence does the DRL bureau have on the invitees to and the agenda of the Summit?

Answer. I understand that both established and emerging democracies will be invited to participate in the Summit. I have not seen the invitation list nor the agenda and am not involved in internal administration deliberations. Therefore, I cannot provide specifics about them, but believe DRL has played an important role in providing input and more generally that this is an important opportunity for the Biden administration to shore up not only its support for global democracy but its own commitments to democracy as well. If confirmed, I will engage on both the agenda and the proposed invitees.

Question. What criteria or process is being used to determine which countries which will receive invites, and which countries will not?

Answer. It is my understanding that since this is a Presidential Summit, the White House will make the final determination on which countries will receive an invitation. I understand the Summit will include both established and emerging democracies and presume geographic diversity and country context may have also been factors in the invitation list. In my view, the Summit would benefit from the diversity of perspectives and voices discussing both democratic achievements and challenges and hearing directly from organizations and individuals who work on democracy and understand how best to secure some of the core institutional components of a democracy in today's world.

Question. How do you think the U.S. arms transfer process should change to better incorporate human rights and civilian harm concerns, and what changes would you advocate for as Assistant Secretary?

Answer. I understand the administration is already working to develop a new Conventional Arms Transfer (CAT) Policy to ensure arms transfer decisions reflect the administration's foreign policy priorities, including its emphasis on putting human rights at the center of foreign policy. While I understand human rights and civilian harm concerns are one of several factors taken into account in the arms transfer process, together with the implications of such sales for U.S. and regional security, bilateral relations, and U.S. commercial interests, if confirmed I will make sure DRL is at the right decision-making tables to ensure human rights concerns are incorporated into the process early on and given adequate weight. In addition, I will coordinate closely with the Political-Military (P/M) and regional bureaus to ensure they are seeing the same information and analysis that we see. If confirmed, I will ensure that the arms sales process gives appropriate weight to any human rights and civilian harm concerns.

Question. Do you agree that the U.S. Government should refrain from exporting arms to fragile states or countries at risk of atrocities?

Answer. Promoting democracy, human rights, and fundamental freedoms advances our national security interests. Our most valued, dependable, and effective partner governments and security forces around the world uphold democratic values, respect and protect human rights, and hold human rights violators accountable. The United States must continue to create and maintain strong security relationships with such partners through diplomacy, measured assistance, frequent and ongoing cooperation, and carefully considered arms exports. If confirmed, I will work to ensure our arms export policies uphold and support U.S. laws on global fragility and atrocity prevention.

Question. Under Erdogan, Turkey is neither a reliable NATO ally nor a democracy. Turkey is among the top jailers of journalists and lawyers in the world, which is unacceptable for a NATO member. The Government of Turkey has slapped arbitrary restrictions on the Orthodox Church and Orthodox community, Turkey's Kurds, and other minority groups. We must be clear-eyed about Erdogan and the autocratic path he is taking, and we must stand with the Turkish people as they work to change that. What is the best way to support civil society and counter Erdogan's aggressive push for power?

Answer. I share your concerns about measures employed by the Government that negatively impact civil society and other voices critical of the Government in Turkey. I am deeply troubled by the pattern of punitive actions by Turkish officials targeting those whose views differ from those of the Government. Turkey has been an important NATO Ally for nearly 70 years and addressing democratic backsliding is critical to our alliance. If confirmed, I would call for the immediate release of Osman Kavala, who remains incarcerated on specious charges despite a European Court of Human Rights ruling calling for his immediate release, and will work to coordinate with U.S. allies, particularly in the EU, on this issue. I would also urge Department action to underscore for the Turkish Government the fundamental importance of the freedoms of expression, peaceful assembly, and association in democracies. I would urge the Turkish Government to revise laws that restrict freedom of expression and other essential freedoms guaranteed by Turkey's constitution. I would also urge the Department and the embassy to regularly engage with Turkish civil society, hear their concerns, and amplify their voices.

Question. The situation in Tigray and across Ethiopia is bleak. U.N. High Commissioner for Human Rights, Michelle Bachelet, released a statement, in which she deplored "multiple and severe reports of alleged gross violations of human rights, humanitarian and refugee law" committed by all parties to the conflict in Tigray. Violations included extrajudicial killings, torture, sexual violence, rape, and racially-targeted killings. President Biden recently signed an executive order threatening sweeping new sanctions against all parties if serious negotiations do not start, attacks on civilians continue, and if humanitarian access remains blocked.

While this is a welcome step, what more can the United States do to ensure that gross human rights violations cease in Ethiopia and that all parties are held accountable for mass atrocities committed over these past eleven months?

Answer. It is imperative that the United States continue to use every available tool to urge all parties to end the conflict in northern Ethiopia and cease all gross violations of human rights. These tools include the newly-signed Executive Order; a visa restriction policy targeting those responsible for, or complicit in, undermining resolution of the crisis; foreign assistance restrictions; defense trade controls; multilateral development bank lending; and certain trade benefits.

The United States must continue to marshal its diplomatic resources to press for a negotiated ceasefire; full and unhindered humanitarian access; protection of civilians; the withdrawal of Eritrean forces from Ethiopia; a withdrawal of the Tigray People's Liberation Front and Amhara regional forces to their home regions prior to the military conflict; and a political settlement of the crisis. The United States also must continue to press our concerns with like-minded partners, regional governments, the African Union, eminent African voices, and the U.N. Security Council and engage independent actors—including Ethiopian civil society—in the process. If confirmed as Assistant Secretary, I would work steadfastly to resolve the human rights crisis in Ethiopia through these and other means.

I also believe that U.S. efforts must remain focused on ensuring that all those who are responsible for atrocities, violations of international humanitarian law, and human rights abuses in Ethiopia are held accountable in transparent processes. To that end, if confirmed as Assistant Secretary, I would make sure that DRL continues to support independent, international investigations of human rights violations and abuses and atrocities as part of a broader strategy to advance transitional justice efforts in Ethiopia.

Question. During the 2020 Armenia-Azerbaijan war, according to human rights organizations, the Azeri military deliberately targeted civilians in Nagorno-Karabakh with cluster munitions and committed extrajudicial executions, including decapitations, as well as beatings of prisoners of war. The State Department's 2020 Country Report on Human Rights for Azerbaijan documented these and other gross human rights violations by the Azeri military. How will you lead State Department efforts to hold Azerbaijan accountable? Why does the administration continue to provide an exemption waiver for Section 907 of the FREEDOM Support Act, further incentivizing this conduct?

Answer. The 2020 Country Reports on Human Rights for Azerbaijan and Armenia both detail credible reports of unlawful killings involving summary executions of detained combatants and civilians, and civilian casualties during the 44 days of intensive fighting last fall. The Biden-Harris administration is deeply committed to fostering respect for human rights. I understand that the administration has been urging both sides to investigate any and all allegations of human rights abuses or violations of international humanitarian law and bring to justice those responsible, and, if confirmed, I would press for accountability for such abuses. I also understand that administration officials have been urging both sides to return all remaining detainees—an area of work I would also take up, if confirmed, should it remain unresolved.

U.S. assistance to the Government of Azerbaijan is provided consistent with Section 907 of the FREEDOM Support Act and related provisions of U.S. law. Assistance provided to the Government of Azerbaijan that does not fall under a statutory exemption is contingent upon a presidential waiver certifying that such assistance is a) necessary to support U.S. efforts to counter international terrorism, or b) is necessary to support the operational readiness of U.S. Armed Forces or coalition partners to counter international terrorism, or c) is important to Azerbaijan's border security, and d) will not undermine or hamper ongoing efforts to negotiate a peaceful settlement between Armenia and Azerbaijan or be used for offensive purposes against Armenia. The aforementioned waiver authority comes with reporting and consultation requirements to help ensure that Congress is fully informed with respect to assistance for the Government of Azerbaijan. Additionally, all units receiving U.S. security assistance continue to go through the Leahy vetting process. If confirmed, I would strongly support the Leahy vetting process, which DRL is responsible for managing.

Question. In the past year, the Lukashenka regime has detained thousands of protesters, torturing hundreds, jailed political opponents, banned and shut down media organizations, and persecuted its people both at home and abroad. The regime is weaponizing migrants by forcing them at gunpoint to cross illegally into Poland, Latvia, and Lithuania. How can the United States partner with countries like Lithuania and others on the front lines of democracy to support the democratic opposition in Belarus?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to strengthen U.S. support for the pro-democracy movement in Belarus and promote accountability for the regime's abuses. As such, I will press for additional sanctions to promote accountability for those responsible for human rights abuses, undermining democracy in Belarus, and for supporting the Lukashenka regime. Similarly, I hope to continue U.S. support for international mechanisms designed to document the regime's abuses, including the International Accountability Platform for Belarus (IAPB) and U.N. fact-finding mission. If confirmed, I seek to increase U.S. support for Belarusian civil society, independent media, and exiles fleeing repression. Lastly, I hope to increase cooperation with likeminded countries in the context of the Summit for Democracy, including Lithuania, which has done remarkable work to provide a safe haven for the Belarusian opposition, civil society, journalists, and ordinary citizens fleeing the Lukashenka regime's repression. Lithuania continues to demonstrate its strong commitment to democratic values, and we look forward to collaborating with them and others to safeguard and advance democracy globally.

Question. Earlier this month, Russian occupation authorities in Crimea detained more than 50 Crimean Tatars, reportedly beating them and questioning them without lawyers present. Arbitrary arrests, forced disappearances, and torture of Crimean Tatars and ethnic Ukrainians have been a recurring feature of Russian occupation, with many residents being persecuted on religious grounds. An estimated 30,000 Tatars have fled from the region. How can the State Department work with the international community to hold Russian authorities accountable for their crimes in occupied Crimea?

Answer. I am appalled by the egregious abuses Russia carries out in occupied Crimea and its targeting of Crimean Tatars, ethnic Ukrainians, and other religious and ethnic minorities for intimidation, harassment, and repression. Such abuses must cease immediately and perpetrators must be held to account. If confirmed, I will lead the U.S. Government in playing an active role in the newly launched Crimea Platform to increase the spotlight on Russia's occupation of Crimea, hold Russian occupation authorities to account for their human rights abuses on the peninsula, and implement policy that increases the costs to Russia for their continued occupation. Crimea is Ukraine. I would also focus on securing releases for political prisoners and documenting human rights abuses so that perpetrators can be held to account.

Question. Hungary, Poland, and other nominal democracies in Europe continue to backslide on democracy and human rights. These countries have undermined the independence of their judiciaries. In addition, Hungary has outlawed gender transition and gay adoption, and banned LGBTQ content from television and in schools. Poland has created 'LGBT-free' zones in almost 100 Polish regions, town and cities. How can the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor work with NATO partners like Hungary and Poland to meet not only their defense commitments to the alliance, but their commitments on values like individual liberty, human rights, democracy, and the rule of law?

Answer. I share the concerns expressed by the Biden-Harris administration and members of Congress regarding the undermining of democratic institutions in Poland and Hungary. Being a member of NATO includes commitments to Transatlantic values, not only security. If confirmed, I would engage with governments, civil society, the private sector, and core European allies to support strengthening Poland and Hungary's democratic institutions and urge transparency and respect for the rule of law. I would work with partners in the European Union to encourage the EU and member states to amplify U.S. messages through complementary statements and action. Additionally, I would look for opportunities to use available tools, including the Global Magnitsky sanctions passed by the Congress, when there is sufficient credible information that a particular politician has engaged in corruption or serious human rights abuses. I am troubled by the rise in anti-LGBTQI+ rhetoric and legislation in recent years in both countries. If confirmed, I would work with the Special Envoy to Advance the Rights of LGBTQI+ Persons to raise awareness of this challenge and determine the best way to respond to discriminatory laws and policies and intolerant rhetoric while engaging local communities and/or organizations and maintaining the safety and security of LGBTQI+ persons.

Question. The UK's Northern Ireland Secretary Brandon Lewis introduced a proposal in July that would create a statute of limitations on all crimes committed during the Troubles prior to April 1998. The proposal is not supported by a single political party in Northern Ireland, signaling cross-community opposition, and its incompatibility with the intent undergirding the Good Friday Agreement. 1,000 civil cases seeking justice and resolution for crimes during the Troubles are currently pending in the High Court in Belfast, indicating a continued desire to address legacy issues in the courts. What leverage can the United States exert on the United Kingdom to ensure that it protects the Good Friday Agreement, and respects the intertwined questions of legacy and reconciliation?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to protecting the gains of the Belfast/Good Friday Agreement as the bedrock of peace, stability, and prosperity in Northern Ireland. Constructive engagement with all affected parties is critical, and I will continue to urge the parties to negotiate within existing mechanisms when differences arise. I will encourage a focus on solutions that promote peace and stability in Northern Ireland and help victims move forward.

Question. As of August, The Memorial Human Rights Center in Moscow recognized 329 Russian political prisoners that were imprisoned in connection with their right to freedom of religion. This list includes 87 Jehovah's Witnesses. Memorial identifies another 81 political prisoners for non-religious reasons, including those on the front lines of democracy in Russia like opposition leader Alexey Navalny and his supporters. How will you use your role as Assistant Secretary to pressure the Russian Government to release those unjustly imprisoned by the Putin regime?

Answer. I share your concern about the growing number of political prisoners and prisoners of conscience in Russia, one of the many manifestations of the Kremlin's deepening repression. If confirmed, I will ensure that the Department continues to call for the release of political prisoners and prisoners of conscience in public statements and in multilateral fora. I will work with likeminded governments and civil society organizations to raise awareness of their cases and demonstrate solidarity with their families, friends, and colleagues. I will also use all available tools to promote accountability for those officials responsible for their wrongful imprisonment and work with other allies to ensure they're doing the same.

Question. In September, on the eve of the Russian elections, the Russian Government accused Google and Apple of supporting extremism under the Russian extremism law for hosting apps critical to informing Russians of candidates associated with Alexei Navalny's democracy movement. How will you work to address the increasing media repression in Russia, where the internet seems to be the last outpost for freedom of expression? How will you engage U.S. tech companies on their policies and practices with regard to authoritarian regimes like Putin's?

Answer. I share your concern about the stark erosion of media freedom in Russia, including increasing restrictions on Internet Freedom. If confirmed, I will ensure that the Department continues to promote the courageous work of Russia's independent media, civil society organizations, and democratic elements of society, and call out and hold accountable the Russian Government for its repressive actions.

More broadly, concerns around the use of technology to undergird authoritarian tendencies are only accelerating. While the United States needs to continue promote connectivity to an open, interoperable, reliable, and secure internet where the rights that all persons have offline are also protected online, including freedom of expression, there is also much work to be done engaging a wide range of stakeholders, including other governments and tech companies, to advocate for implementation of human rights principles in the tech space. But additionally, if confirmed, I will work across the Department to help build a collective and strategic approach to combating digital authoritarianism that ensures public-private partnerships and any potential regulation are rooted in the promotion and protection of basic rights and the core principles of democratic governance.

Question. Locally-employed U.S. Embassy and Consulate staff remain in prison following the Government's purges in 2016. In June 2020, one translator employed by the U.S. Consulate was sentenced to more than 8 years in prison. Will you prioritize getting these staff out once confirmed?

Answer. I am deeply troubled by the ongoing prosecutions of U.S. locally employed staff in Turkey based on unsubstantiated charges related to their official duties. If confirmed, I would strongly support continued Department efforts to secure the immediate release of Metin Topuz from prison and press Turkey to terminate any judicial controls or prosecutions targeting Mete Canturk and Hamza Ulucay, including movement restrictions.

Question. In June 2021, the Turkish Constitutional Court agreed to hear a case seeking to ban the Peoples' Democratic Party (HDP), the country's third largest political party and a strong proponent for ethnic Kurdish rights. The campaign follows years of replacing democratically-elected HDP mayors with so-called "trustees" appointed by the Government. The State Department reported in its 2020 Country Report on Human Rights for Turkey that "the Government suspended 81 percent of HDP mayors elected in the March 2019 municipal elections, suspending 16 mayors in 2020 alone." What do you intend to do about this democratic backslide in Turkey, especially ahead of potential snap elections? How will your bureau ensure ethnic minority rights and political representation are protected in Turkey?

Answer. I share your concerns about democratic backsliding, erosion of rule of law, and the repressive tactics employed by the Turkish Government. If confirmed, I would urge Department action to make clear to the Turkish Government the importance of political pluralism. Banning the country's second largest opposition party would unduly subvert the will of Turkish voters, further undermine democracy in Turkey, and deny potentially millions of Turkish citizens their elected representation. If confirmed, I would urge the Government to abandon efforts to dissolve the Peoples' Democratic Party (HDP) and impose political bans on hundreds of HDP members. I would also call upon the Turkish authorities to investigate and hold accountable perpetrators of violence against HDP members. I would also support efforts to ensure all parties in Turkey are able to campaign freely and on a level playing field. I would also seek to work closely with like-minded governments and consider engaging private sector companies that might also have an interest in advancing rule of law issues to the benefit of all Turkish citizens.

Question. How is State measuring Bangladesh's progress on labor rights in the aftermath of the 2013 Rana Plaza disaster? Is the administration considering restoration of Dhaka's access to the Generalized System of Preferences (GSP)? Under what circumstances or conditions would it do so?

Answer. I understand that since the horrific building collapse at Rana Plaza in 2013, the United States Government has worked with partners across the international community, major industries, and Bangladeshi authorities to advocate for and enable improvements in factory safety, which included the establishment of new agreements by major international brands to enforce safety standards across factories. While these changes are encouraging, much more needs to be done to institutionalize safety standards across Bangladesh's major industries, as evidenced by the tragic fire at a juice factory in July 2021. The Department of State works closely with the U.S. Trade Representative (USTR) and the Department of Labor to monitor Bangladesh's progress to meet internationally recognized labor rights, especially workplace safety, freedom of association, and collective bargaining. I commit, if confirmed, to upholding the USTR's position that if Congress reauthorizes GSP, restoring Bangladesh's GSP benefits must be contingent upon strengthening labor rights and workplace safety, as well as improving the overall business and civil society operational environment.

Question. Extrajudicial killings by the Rapid Action Battalion (RAB) have reportedly spiked since the Government of Bangladesh began its 'war on drugs' in the months ahead of the December 2018 elections. Do you support imposing sanctions on senior commanders of Bangladesh's Rapid Action Battalion (RAB), which has reportedly conducted more than 400 extrajudicial killings since 2015?

Answer. I share the Biden-Harris administration's deep concern regarding reports of extrajudicial killings in Bangladesh and urge the Government to thoroughly and transparently investigate and hold perpetrators accountable. I believe the United States Government must continue to press the Bangladeshi Government to uphold its commitments to human rights and the rule of law. If confirmed, I will seek to utilize available tools to promote accountability, including, as applicable, Section 7031(c) visa restrictions and/or with the Department of the Treasury to consider the Global Magnitsky sanctions program, in a targeted manner, to advance our human rights goals.

Question. There have been nearly 600 forced disappearances of activists, opposition members, and government critics since Prime Minister Hasina took office in 2009, as documented in Human Rights Watch's August 2021 report. How will you address this issue?

Answer. I understand the Department of State has repeatedly emphasized its concern over reports of enforced disappearances and have urged the Government to hold perpetrators accountable. If confirmed, I will maintain this approach in bilateral meetings, multilateral exchanges, and coordinate with like-minded partners to stop these abusive practices and protect human rights in Bangladesh. If confirmed, I will explore the use of available tools to promote accountability and deter further violations and abuses.

Question. Rights groups have detailed increased abuse of Tamil political prisoners—including beatings, burnings, suffocations, sexual assaults—since Gotabaya Rajapaksa became president in 2019. What consequences should there be to hold those responsible accountable?

Answer. Such allegations of abuse and gross violations of human rights are disturbing and must be taken seriously. If confirmed, I will work to promote the protection of human rights for all in Sri Lanka, including, but not limited to, members of ethnic and religious minority groups, women and girls, LGBTQI+ persons, and persons with disabilities. For reconciliation to take place, members of the Tamil and other ethnic communities can no longer suffer from systematic discrimination and targeted treatment such as monitoring, harassment, and abuse by security forces. If confirmed, I will utilize all available tools to promote accountability, including, as applicable, Section 7031(c) visa restrictions and/or with the Department of the Treasury to consider the Global Magnitsky sanctions program, in a targeted manner, to advance our human rights goals. I will also advocate that Sri Lanka amend its Prevention of Terrorism Act (PTA)—legislation that denies due process and is used disproportionately to crack down on members of Tamil and Muslim minority communities. If confirmed, I will continue the Department's commitment to promote justice, accountability, and reconciliation measures in support of all people in Sri Lanka.

Question. In January 2021, Michelle Bachelet pushed for targeted sanctions on Sri Lankan military commanders implicated in war crimes committed during the civil war, including the current army chief and in March, the Human Rights Council passed resolution 46/1 promoting accountability in Sri Lanka. Furthermore, recently policies and actions indicate that the Government's commitment rule of law, judicial processes, and democracy are weak. How will you work to hold accountable those who perpetrated atrocities during the war and since, including current Sri Lankan officials and, if possible, forestall further deterioration in Sri Lankan democracy?

Answer. I am deeply concerned by the backsliding of democratic governance and human rights in Sri Lanka, especially pertaining to justice for victims, civil society, rule of law, human rights defenders, and religious freedom. The United States' co-sponsorship of Human Rights Council resolution 46/1 is a testament to our Government's commitment to promoting democratic values, human rights for all, and accountability measures. If confirmed, I will utilize all available tools to promote accountability, including, as applicable, Section 7031(c) visa restrictions and/or with the Department of the Treasury to consider the Global Magnitsky sanctions program, in a targeted manner, to advance our human rights goals. I will also urge my Sri Lankan counterparts, at the highest levels, to follow through on recommendations of the United Nations and Sri Lanka's robust civil society to make progress on justice, accountability, and reconciliation objectives. If confirmed, I will continue the Department's commitment to promote democratic values, respect for human rights, justice, and accountability measures in support of the people of Sri Lanka.

Question. The five countries of Central Asia—despite progress in some—regularly confine human rights defenders, political opposition figures, outspoken minority members, and others to lengthy detention without trial or following conviction for trumped-up charges. What will you do to ensure that our diplomacy with these countries continues to advocate for these unlawfully detained prisoners?

Answer. Countries are stronger when they enshrine and respect the rights to peaceful protest and freedom of expression. Despite advancement in some Central Asian countries, many challenges remain on these issues, including meaningful democratic reform. If confirmed, I will urge these issues be a priority for our diplomacy in Central Asia. I will stress the long-term benefit in strengthening protection of human rights. I am particularly concerned about the criminalization of non-violent political speech and the detention of political prisoners, but also concerned by an uptick in restrictions on freedom of expression and politically motivated detentions in the run up to upcoming elections in the region. If confirmed, I will directly engage on specific cases, broader systematic concerns regarding political prisoners, and the need to protect dissenting voices.

Question. Democratic progress in Central Asia is always uncertain. Some countries may be trending in the right direction now, but we know that this could change. What can the U.S. do to shore up human rights in the region amidst our competing priorities with regard to China, Russia, and Afghanistan?

Answer. Thirty years after their independence, some Central Asian countries have made considerable progress in human rights reforms; however, significant challenges in the region remain. Addressing these shortcomings by promoting democracy and human rights in Central Asia is central to our regional efforts to reassert core values and advance respect for human rights, especially for women, girls, and minority groups, as a cornerstone of our foreign policy. If confirmed, I will support and reinforce ongoing reforms while pressing governments to take necessary steps to create genuinely pluralistic political systems that uphold human rights for all, including women, members of religious and ethnic minority groups, LGBTQI+ persons, persons with disabilities, and opposition members. I will press governments to secure fundamental freedoms and expand space for civil society—including organizations that work on resource transparency and accountability—by amending problematic laws, easing excessive and burdensome administrative requirements, and enhancing trust between the Government and independent civil society. U.S. support is vital for democratic progress to continue in Central Asia.

Question. Minority groups in Pakistan are under duress. Members of the Ahmadi Muslim community are frequently accused of, prosecuted for, and murdered on the basis of their identity or the belief that they have committed blasphemy or apostasy. Furthermore, the Pakistani Government has successfully pressured U.S. based technology companies to remove web-based content and apps provided by the Ahmadi community to its members. How will you lead State Department efforts to the State Department to address the dire human rights situation there for millions of minorities? What tactics will you employ to ensure that the internet in Pakistan remains free of malicious government control for these same persons?

Answer. I am very concerned about Pakistan's continued enforcement of blasphemy laws, which are inconsistent with international human rights law. Several dozen people are currently serving life imprisonment or are on death row for blasphemy.

I am also deeply concerned by the targeted killings of individuals accused of blasphemy and members of Pakistan's Ahmadiyya Muslim community, spurred in part by discriminatory anti-Ahmadi laws. A recent example of such violence was the assassination of Tahir Naseem, an Ahmadi and U.S. citizen who was murdered by a violent extremist in open court while on trial in Peshawar for blasphemy in July 2020.

If confirmed, I will advocate for the human rights of all individuals irrespective of their religion or beliefs. I will advocate for everyone to have the opportunity to live freely from harassment or threat of violence and to practice the religion of their choice. I will work with the Ambassador at Large for International Religious Freedom and the Office of International Religious Freedom to engage technology companies, to highlight the human rights costs of enabling these abuses by governments, and to help empower civil society groups, including religious actors, advocating against the use and abuse of blasphemy laws. If confirmed, I will join my colleagues across the U.S. Government actively supporting freedom of expression online and offline and working to remove obstacles facing members of minority groups around the world.

Question. I have concerns about the persecution of minorities in India, the re-categorization of Muslim citizens as stateless persons under the Citizenship Amendment Act. What will you do to ensure that Indian democracy and its diverse population remain a centerpiece of our diplomacy with India?

Answer. I share your concerns and believe strongly in the importance of Indian democracy serving as a model for the region. If confirmed, I would advocate the United States Government continue to place human rights and democratic principles at the heart of our diplomacy with India, including an open, inclusive civil society, and respect for human rights, including the freedoms of religion or belief, expression, peaceful assembly, and association. If confirmed, I will urge Indian officials to protect and respect the right to practice one's religion or belief, the right to peaceful assembly, and freedom of expression for all, on and offline, in keeping with India's constitution and democratic values.

Question. After a decade of work to establish a civilian-led democratic government, the Tatmadaw tragically overthrew Burma's Government. The same leaders now running the country are guilty of genocide against the Rohingya and of a sustained campaign of violence against Burma's ethnic minorities. While I welcome Secretary Blinken's decision to review the atrocities and make a determination on genocide, such determination is long overdue.

How can the United States work to promote accountability for the military's gross abuses and atrocities? When will the administration announce whether the Tatmadaw and/or the Burmese regime committed genocide against the Rohingya people?

Answer. I am appalled by the atrocities that the Burmese military continues to commit against the people of Burma, which underscores the urgency of promoting accountability for perpetrators of atrocities and other human rights violations and abuses. I understand that the administration is taking action, alongside our allies and partners, to promote justice for victims and accountability for those responsible, including by supporting the U.N. Independent Investigative Mechanism for Myanmar, providing assistance to Burmese civil society actors seeking justice, and implementing sanctions on those responsible for these horrific abuses. The Secretary has committed to reviewing whether the atrocities committed against Rohingya constitute specific atrocity crimes. If confirmed, I will support the Secretary in reaching a decision and to making sure our commitments on accountability are implemented with both the spirit and the letter of the law.

Question. After a decade of work to establish a civilian-led democratic government, the Tatmadaw tragically overthrew Burma's Government. The same leaders now running the country are guilty of genocide against the Rohingya and of a sustained campaign of violence against Burma's ethnic minorities. While I welcome Secretary Blinken's decision to review the atrocities and make a determination on genocide, such determination is long overdue.

How can the United States continue to support democracy and human rights in Burma and halt the horrific reversal of progress there?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to continuing our longstanding support for democracy and promotion of respect for human rights in Burma, which is vital in the face of the military coup d'état and continued deterioration of civilian security and human rights across the country. I would continue to support Burma's pro-democracy movement and provide humanitarian assistance on the basis of need, including to ethnic and religious minority communities as appropriate, and to regularly meet with members of Burma's civil society. Ensuring their voices are heard as part of the roadmap for Burma's democracy is an essential part of its legitimacy and so if confirmed I would urge that the U.S. remain steadfast in our support for the people of Burma. Additionally, I would encourage strong diplomatic engagement and cooperation with our likeminded and regional partners, including in international organizations, to deny the military regime international credibility and press the regime to reverse course. If confirmed, I will support continued efforts to pursue targeted sanctions and other actions to deny the military financial resources and promote accountability for perpetrators of human rights abuses.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO MS. SARAH MARGON BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. What would you do to bolster and reiterate the U.S. Government's commitment to protect and advocate for those on the frontlines, including civil society organizations?

Answer. If confirmed, I will seek to bolster protections for the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all people—including women, youth, and members of historically marginalized groups—so that they may shape the laws, policies, and political processes that affect their lives. To do so, I will support the utilization of a wide array of tools to achieve this goal, including bilateral and multilateral diplomacy; public messaging; accountability tools; and foreign assistance to civil society, including rapid response programs to support journalists, activists, and human rights defenders under threat for their work. I will also make sure to seek out the views of civil society groups and activists, meet them when I travel, help ensure they are able to participate in multilateral fora, and take all steps to ensure their concerns are central to our consideration on larger U.S. policy decisions.

Question. How would you direct the State Department to enhance the protections globally governing freedom of expression and press?

Answer. If confirmed, I will direct the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor to work with other parts of the Department, executive branch agencies, and Congress to bolster efforts to promote the ability of people everywhere to exercise their right to freedom of expression—online and offline—free from harassment, intimidation, and violence. This includes through bilateral and multilateral diplomacy; public messaging; accountability tools; multi-stakeholder initiatives such as the Media Freedom Coalition, the Freedom Online Coalition, and the President’s upcoming Summit for Democracy; and foreign assistance to civil society, including rapid response programs to support activists, human rights defenders, and journalists under threat.

Question. How will you prioritize a “whole-of-government” approach to human rights policy and its application in regional and functional diplomatic relationships?

Answer. The diplomatic work of the United States encompasses all the work of all applicable federal agencies and tools. If confirmed I will consult broadly with federal agencies and within the Department to ensure that U.S. policy on human rights and fundamental freedoms is a significant component of decision-making. If confirmed, my job will be to use resources and information to ensure policy making adequately reflects core human rights and democracy standards. It means ensuring DRL is at the table, participating actively in interagency debates and decision making. It also means making sure DRL is viewed across the foreign service as career enhancing and a net positive in career development so there is interest, engagement, and an understanding of why our work matters. This cross-Bureau and inter-agency work is a high priority and essential to effective diplomacy.

Question. There is serious concern about the state of press freedom around the world. If confirmed, what actions will you take to curb suppression of press freedom and support independent journalists around the world?

Answer. I share the concern that press freedom is threatened globally. If confirmed, I will direct the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor to work with other parts of the Department, executive branch agencies, and Congress to promote the ability of journalists everywhere to do their work—online and offline—free from harassment, intimidation, and violence. This includes through bilateral and multilateral diplomacy; public messaging; accountability tools; multi-stakeholder initiatives such as the Media Freedom Coalition, the Freedom Online Coalition, and the President’s upcoming Summit for Democracy; and foreign assistance to civil society, including rapid response programs to support journalists under threat and training and capacity building programs to bolster the safety of independent journalists globally. If confirmed I’ll also look at new ways to partner in support of press freedom and to do so with allies around the globe—whether other governments, philanthropic groups, or the private sector.

Question. Everyone should be able to practice their faith however they choose, including in places like China, India, and Uzbekistan. How does international religious freedom factor into your priorities?

Answer. President Biden and Secretary Blinken have made clear that the United States prioritizes respect for human rights, including freedom of religion or belief, as a key foreign policy objective. Human rights are universal—no matter where someone is born, what they believe, how they identify, or whom they love, they are entitled to the enjoyment of these rights. Human rights are also co-equal, inter-related, and interdependent. All people should be able to organize their lives in accordance with their conscience, free from violence, abuse, and discrimination. If confirmed, I intend to work alongside the Ambassador at Large for International Religious Freedom and with our embassies and consulates around the world, to deploy the full range of diplomatic tools—both positive and punitive—to encourage governments to respect their international obligations and commitments to protect freedom of religion or belief.

Question. What do you believe is the U.S. Government role in advocating on behalf of religious minorities?

Answer. I believe the U.S. Government must be committed to advancing religious freedom internationally, including the protection of members of religious minority groups, across the globe. As a part of those efforts, we must demonstrate solidarity with those struggling to secure their rights and provide foreign assistance to build the capacity of local organizations to effectively advocate for themselves. We must assist victims of abuses through direct advocacy with foreign governments and other forms of emergency assistance, including working to free individuals imprisoned for their beliefs. It is also imperative that we engage in bilateral diplomacy to encourage governments to bring their laws and policies into alignment with their obligations and commitments to promote respect religious freedom, including ensuring protection for members of religious minority groups. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the Office of International Religious Freedom and its appointed Ambassador at Large on these issues.

Question. Would you describe the U.N. Human Rights Council as a deeply flawed body? Why or why not?

Answer. The U.N. Human Rights Council (HRC) does have flaws, including in particular the Council's problematic membership and its disproportionate focus on Israel. If confirmed, I am committed to ensuring with colleagues the HRC can be as effective and balanced as possible. When the United States has a seat at the table, it has been able to advocate on Israel's behalf, resulting in changes like a reduction in the number of resolutions targeting Israel, a clear benchmark for U.S. leadership, and has stood up to more problematic members with notable records of abuse. When the United States plays an active and constructive role on the Council, it has been able to engage with our allies and partners to keep some of the countries with the worst human rights records off the Council and encourage countries with better records to run for seats.

Question. Can you please explain in detail how the Biden administration plans to reform the U.N. Human Rights Council?

Answer. The United States is committed to seeking reforms of the U.N. Human Rights Council, particularly with respect to the Council's disproportionate focus on Israel and the Council's problematic membership. When the U.S. has had a seat at the table, it has been able to advocate on Israel's behalf, and has seen changes like a reduction in the number of resolutions targeting Israel, one benchmark I will use for our leadership. I have not been part of these conversations, but I understand it is a priority for the administration—and certainly one for me, if confirmed. As part of that effort, I will prioritize working closely with U.S. friends, allies, and long-time HRC experts in civil society to address the Council's problematic membership record and its anti-Israel bias. I will engage regularly with the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights on a wide range of issues and also make clear U.S. opposition to problematic anti-Israel mandates.

When the United States plays an active and constructive role on the Council, it has been able to engage with our allies and partners to keep off some of the countries with the worst human rights records and to encourage and support countries with better records to run for seats.

Question. Do you believe that human rights should be a permanent agenda item for the U.N. Security Council?

Answer. Human rights are woven into the agenda items for the U.N. Security Council in its work to maintain international peace and security. Peace and security are intrinsically linked to respect for and support of human rights. The U.N. Human Rights Council, to which the United States is running for an elected seat, is the premier U.N. body focused on human rights issues. I look forward to utilizing that platform to advance human rights, if confirmed.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. Do you believe that human rights should be a permanent agenda item for the U.N. Security Council?

Answer. Yes. That said, human rights are woven into the agenda items for the U.N. Security Council in its work to maintain international peace and security. Peace and security are completely linked to respect for human rights. The U.N. Human Rights Council, to which the United States secured an elected seat, is the premier U.N. body focused on human rights issues. If confirmed, I look forward to utilizing that as well as other multi-lateral platforms to advance human rights.

Question. Do you support U.N. Security Council Resolution 2334?

Answer. I am committed to achieving a comprehensive and lasting peace between the Israelis and Palestinians and to supporting dignity, equal protection under the law, and fundamental freedoms for all. For as long as Israel has been a member of the United Nations, Israel has been treated differently from other nations at the United Nations. Such unequal treatment not only unfairly singles out Israel, it undermines the legitimacy of the United Nations itself.

If confirmed, I will uphold President Biden's strong commitment to Israel and its security. This includes opposing efforts to unfairly single out or delegitimize Israel through one-sided resolutions, reports, and other actions across the United Nations, including the Security Council, the General Assembly, the Human Rights Council, and other bodies. I will also continue to oppose any unilateral provocative actions that risk sparking more violence and that undermine prospects for a just, durable resolution of the conflict between Palestinians and Israelis, which ultimately requires two states.

I understand the United States will block any resolution that we believe may undermine Israel's security or seek to impose a resolution to the conflict.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. Do you support U.N. Security Council Resolution 2334?

Answer. If confirmed, I will oppose, as I understand the administration does already, efforts to unfairly single out or delegitimize Israel through one-sided resolutions, reports, and other actions across the United Nations, including the Security Council, the General Assembly, the Human Rights Council, and other bodies. Equally, I will firmly oppose any unilateral provocative actions that risk sparking more violence and that undermine prospects for a just, durable resolution of the conflict between Palestinians and Israelis, which ultimately requires two states. I will work to preserve the path to a two-state solution as the best way to ensure Israel's future as a Jewish and democratic state and to give the Palestinians the state they seek. I will also continue and sustain diplomatic engagement on the issue of settlements.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to working with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in a bipartisan manner, including by providing timely, accurate, and complete information on all relevant strategies, initiatives, programs, and assistance under the purview of DRL?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed I would welcome the opportunity to work closely with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, in a bipartisan manner, and in coordination with the Bureau of Legislative Affairs.

Foreign Assistance

Question. If confirmed, under what conditions, if any, would you support conditioning U.S. foreign assistance?

Answer. Conditions that prohibit certain assistance to foreign security forces that are credibly implicated in gross violations of human rights, such as the Leahy Laws, support the U.S. foreign policy objective of promoting democracy, human rights, and fundamental freedoms. U.S. national security is strengthened when partner governments and security forces around the world uphold democratic values, promote, and protect human rights, hold human rights violators accountable when necessary, and do not unduly restrict fundamental freedoms. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department of State's continued rigorous implementation of the Leahy Laws and similar conditions. Foreign assistance is an important part of how the U.S. engages globally—a way for us to engage local communities and support their goals for a more pluralistic society. I believe the principle of “do no harm” is an important one for all donors to embrace. If confirmed, I would work closely with colleagues at USAID to consider whether restrictions on U.S. foreign assistance related to DRL equities are prudent.

FOLLOW-UP TO PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. If confirmed, under what conditions, if any, would you support conditioning U.S. foreign assistance?

Answer. I believe effective implementation of existing U.S. law provides helpful starting points to identify the conditions under which I would support appropriate conditioning or limitations on applicable U.S. assistance. For example, Section 502(b) of the Foreign Assistance Act precludes assistance to governments that engage in a consistent pattern of gross violations of internationally recognized human rights. Similarly, the Leahy laws prohibit the provision of applicable U.S. assistance to foreign security force units that are credibly implicated in gross violations of human rights. U.S. national security is strengthened when partner governments and security forces around the world uphold democratic values, promote, and protect human rights, and hold those responsible for human rights violations accountable. In addition, if confirmed, I would carefully examine, on a case-by-case basis, other human rights factors that may impact decisions about foreign assistance, such as whether another government is engaged in acts that could constitute atrocities or gender-based violence.

Question. Would you support conditioning assistance to the West Bank and Gaza upon the achievement of measurable progress in ending the Palestinian Authority's support for human rights atrocities through the heinous "pay for slay" program?

Answer. I believe the Palestinian practice of prisoner and martyr payments is abhorrent. The Biden-Harris administration is committed to working to end the practice of Palestinian prisoner and "martyr" payments to address longstanding U.S. and international concerns. If confirmed, I will commit to closely tracking requirements under the Taylor Force Act and other similar legislation and ensuring that U.S. assistance is consistent with it. By providing critical humanitarian relief, fostering economic development, and supporting Israeli-Palestinian security coordination, we will help millions of vulnerable Palestinians and promote a stable environment that benefits both Israelis and Palestinians in a manner that is consistent with our values, with U.S. foreign policy priorities, and with U.S. law.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. Would you support conditioning assistance to the West Bank and Gaza upon the achievement of measurable progress in ending the Palestinian Authority's support for human rights atrocities through the heinous "pay for slay" program?

Answer. I believe the Palestinian practice of prisoner and martyr payments is abhorrent. The Biden-Harris administration is committed to working to end the practice of Palestinian prisoner and "martyr" payments to address longstanding U.S. and international concerns. If confirmed, I would build on the work thus far, through sustained diplomatic engagement and pressure, underscoring that part of resetting the U.S.-Palestinian relationship is seeing an end to this heinous practice.

Question. If confirmed, how will you work with regional and functional bureaus, including the Bureau for Political-Military Affairs (PM) to ensure statutory restrictions on the provision of certain forms of U.S. foreign assistance to foreign security forces that commit human rights abuses are upheld on the one hand, while balancing U.S. national security interests and regional security imperatives on the other?

Answer. Promoting democracy, human rights, and fundamental freedoms advances U.S. national security interests. Our most valued, dependable, and effective partner governments and security forces around the world uphold democratic values, respect and protect human rights, and hold human rights violators accountable. Human rights is one of a number of national security interests that need to be considered as part of U.S. foreign assistance, but ensuring human rights is part of that conversation requires doubling down on both information-sharing and relationship-building. I understand DRL colleagues are engaged in building relationships with the various regional and functional bureaus; if I am confirmed, I will not only support such efforts but undertake them myself. If confirmed, I will work to support to the fullest extent partner governments' accountability mechanisms essential to the resumption of assistance to elements of foreign security forces critical to U.S. national security and regional security.

Question. If confirmed, how will you work with regional and functional bureaus to ensure that statutory restrictions on assistance to foreign governments that engage in corruption and/or fail to uphold budget transparency requirements are upheld on the one hand, while balancing U.S. national interests and on the other?

Answer. U.S. national interests are served through a wide array of tools and approaches, including bilateral and multilateral diplomatic engagement, public diplomacy, and foreign assistance. In countries that do not meet statutory restrictions on assistance to foreign governments, including those relating to corruption, I understand the Department elevates other forms of engagement, and can at times provide assistance to civil society organizations capable of advancing U.S. interests. Congress has passed important bipartisan legislation that enables U.S. Government efforts to better fight corruption and President Biden's Memorandum on the Fight Against Corruption as a Core United States National Security Interest will further enable the executive to assess corruption concerns by modernizing and resourcing our ability to elevate and effectively address this problem. If confirmed, I pledge to work closely and collaboratively with regional and functional bureaus and across the interagency to strategically leverage all foreign policy tools possible in each country context.

Question. If confirmed, how will you measure the impact of DRL grants for building the capacity of civil society organizations, particularly in non-permissive environments? What is—or should be—the criteria for “graduating” civil society organizations from reliance upon U.S. foreign assistance?

Answer. I understand that DRL is a leader in the Department of State for their monitoring and evaluation of programs and grants. I understand DRL measures outcomes and impact, including on capacity building, through a set of custom indicators and routine evaluation. If confirmed, I will continue to support this practice and closely examine what criteria and metrics are in place for measuring success over all programmatic goals, including capacity building for civil society organizations (CSOs), including in non-permissive environments. My understanding is that DRL does not provide core funding for CSOs, but instead provides technical assistance (which can be geared towards CSO sustainability) or assistance to conduct particular activities within a time-limited grant (usually 2-3 years in length). Furthermore, my understanding is that it is not a question of “graduating” from U.S. foreign assistance as the grants, by nature, are time-limited and end.

Question. If confirmed, how will you de-conflict DRL’s grant-making with the work of the U.S. Agency for International Development—which has a far more significant budget and deep roots with civil society across all development sectors—to guard against duplication and waste?

Answer. DRL adds unique value to U.S. democracy, governance, and human rights programming. DRL’s close connection with activists and human rights defenders on the ground, especially in repressive environments, and programmatic flexibility allow it to address emerging opportunities and challenges. If confirmed, I pledge to ensure these programs are closely coordinated with the U.S. Agency for International Development. My understanding is that USAID and other relevant interagency representatives regularly participate in DRL’s grant-making process, to include serving on panels and reviewing program proposals. I hope to continue and deepen this collaboration if confirmed.

Question. In your view, should the U.S. Agency for International Development be directly engaging in democracy promotion, or would democracy promotion be best left to the Department of State and its diplomatic corps?

Answer. I believe that the U.S. Agency for International Development should engage in democracy support, especially in the context of development and strengthening government institutions in permissive environments. Supporting and advancing democracy in all environments is vitally important and has important links to development and aid efforts. support , If confirmed, I look forward to working with my colleagues both at the Department of State and the U.S. Agency for International Development to use all tools at our collective disposal to promote democracy.

Question. In your view, what is the difference between human rights defenders and climate activists?

Answer. I understand the United States defines human rights defenders as individuals, working alone or in groups, who non-violently, and consistent with the law, advocate for the promotion and protection of universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms. Human rights defenders can be of any ethnicity, gender, sexual orientation, religious denomination, disability status, or age. They can come from any part of the world, from any social class or background, and work on a wide range of issues. A climate activist is someone who actively campaigns to have issues of climate change recognized and addressed. In some countries, individuals who exercise their human rights to peacefully express views on land, climate, or environmental issues face abuses from corrupt actors and/or politically motivated repression or reprisal. In such cases, I believe the Department should continue to protect the universal human right of these individuals to express and advocate for their views non-violently.

Question. Do you agree with the Biden administration’s recent efforts to prioritize U.S. foreign assistance specifically set aside for human rights defenders for climate activists, effectively placing them above other categories of activists that may be subject to security action?

Answer. The Department works to ensure foreign assistance funds are programmed consistent with applicable directives, including those related to human rights defenders. Members of civil society should be heard and not silenced when exercising their rights to freedoms of expression, association, and peaceful assembly as they seek to participate in the governance of their country. U.S. diplomatic efforts and foreign assistance programs seek to protect and support civil society members and human rights defenders threatened and attacked for exercising their human rights, including those advocating on environmental issues. I also understand the Department has long included environmental activists as beneficiaries of support through a variety of foreign assistance programs. Activists exercising their human rights when seeking to protect the environment, including addressing climate change, are experiencing increasing repression and violence, including killings. I understand U.S. foreign assistance is provided to help address these threats. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you and the committee on these and other U.S. foreign assistance matters.

Security Partnerships

Question. How do you define a values-based security partnership?

Answer. Promoting democracy, human rights, and fundamental freedoms advances U.S. national security. Our most valued, dependable, and effective partner governments and security forces around the world uphold democratic values, protect the human rights of their citizens and civilians they protect, hold human rights violators accountable, and do not unduly restrict the fundamental freedoms of their people. Partnerships should also allow partners to speak openly and honestly about all issues—ones where there is agreement and ones where there is disagreement. Waiting until a U.S. law is violated doesn't help the U.S. and doesn't help the partner be at its best and more effective. If confirmed, I will make every effort to ensure core DRL equities are part of all security cooperation discussions, with an eye towards enhancing behavior and strengthening the partnership. I believe that we must continue to create and maintain strong values-based security relationships with such partners through diplomacy, measured assistance, and frequent and ongoing cooperation.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. How do you define a values-based security partnership?

Answer. I define a values-based security partnership as one that promotes democracy, human rights, and accountability in partner security forces. This means supporting leaders and institutional safeguards in foreign security forces that seek to advance those values but also placing importance on transparency, both between governments and with the American public. It means having regular, respectful, and frank conversations with our foreign security partners through embassy personnel as well as in bilateral security meetings with more senior officials. Rights-respecting, accountable security forces enjoy more support from their public, are better allies, and are more effective in promoting security in their own countries. It also means looking for opportunities to help with remediation so security forces can get back on track—or at least understand that doing so is a viable option. This ultimately improves U.S. security as well. If confirmed, I will work to build and maintain such values-based security partnerships.

Question. Do you believe that the U.S. should only pursue security partnerships with liberal democracies? Why or why not?

Answer. No. I believe that supporting democracy, human rights, and fundamental freedoms advances U.S. national security and that most valued, dependable, and effective partner governments and security forces around the world uphold democratic values, protect the human rights of their citizens and civilians, hold human rights violators accountable, and do not unduly restrict the fundamental freedoms of their people. While these are not the only security partnerships that exist, it is important to centralize core democratic tenets within these efforts. In some cases, if the partner in question isn't a democracy, security assistance can be a valuable incentive to generate reform. If confirmed, I will work to realize President Biden's vision of a foreign policy, including with regards to security partnerships, that are centered around human rights and democratic values, which can certainly but not exclusively find expression in partnerships with other democracies.

Question. How do you think a country's human rights environment will be affected if China replaces the U.S. as security partner of choice?

Answer. The PRC's active campaign to reshape the rules-based order, and corrupt practices are often conducted under the guise of diplomatic, economic, and security cooperation and can threaten both the human rights situation in countries with which China partners, as well as the partner country's very sovereignty. America's commitment to democracy and human rights in our foreign policy is a competitive advantage, including with our security partners, and one we have seen demanded by local populations from Hong Kong to Belarus. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that American values continue to remain a centerpiece of U.S. security cooperation.

FOLLOW-UP TO PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. How do you think a country's human rights environment will be affected if China replaces the U.S. as security partner of choice?

Answer. I believe the PRC's active campaign to reshape the rules-based order and other problematic practices are often conducted under the guise of diplomatic, economic, and security cooperation and threaten to degrade the human rights situation in countries with which China partners if China replaces the U.S. as a country's security partner of choice. America's commitment to promoting democracy and respect for human rights in our foreign policy is a competitive advantage, including with our security partners and has created important opportunities for strengthening bilateral relations. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that American values continue to remain a centerpiece of U.S. security cooperation.

Question. Do you support imposing a new requirement for Leahy-like vetting for all U.S. arms sales? Why or why not?

Answer. I understand the Biden-Harris administration is already working to develop a new Conventional Arms Transfer (CAT) Policy to ensure arms transfer decisions reflect the administration's foreign policy priorities, including its emphasis on putting human rights at the center of foreign policy; if confirmed, I will support and uphold that policy. In the meantime, I understand the Department—consistent with the Arms Export Control Act and other applicable laws—determines on a case-by-case basis whether arms transfers support U.S. interests, including human rights. If there is interest from Congress to move a new Leahy-like vetting for all U.S. arms sales, I would engage meaningfully in the discussion and consult closely with others in the Department—as well as outside experts. When appropriate, that review should include consultations with the U.S. Congress and input from DoD and other interagency partners—a process I intend to take very seriously, if confirmed.

Question. Should the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor have a veto over arms sales?

Answer. No single bureau has or should have a veto over foreign arms sales; I understand human rights concerns are one of several factors taken into account in the arms sales process, together with the implications of such sales for U.S. and regional security, bilateral relations, and U.S. commercial interests. If confirmed, I will ensure that the arms sales process gives appropriate weight to human rights concerns raised by any bureau, and I will fully support the role of human rights considerations in arms transfer decisions, in line with the requirement for such considerations in statute and with President Biden's commitment to putting human rights at the center of foreign policy. I understand the Biden administration is already working to develop a new Conventional Arms Transfer (CAT) Policy to ensure arms transfer decisions reflect the administration's foreign policy priorities, including its emphasis on putting human rights at the center of foreign policy.

Question. There are efforts in Congress to condition security assistance given to Israel. Yes or no, do you believe in conditioning Foreign Military Financing, International Military Education and Training, and other forms of assistance that the U.S. gives Israel? Why or why not?

Answer. If confirmed I will fully support the administration's commitment not to condition U.S. assistance to Israel. President Biden's commitment to Israel's security is ironclad. I understand that the Leahy laws prohibit Foreign Military Financing, International Military Education and Training, and other forms of U.S. assistance to foreign security forces that are credibly implicated in gross violations of human rights, where no accountability is taking place. If confirmed, I will fully support the letter and spirit of the Leahy Laws and their rigorous implementation by DRL, the Department of State, and the Department of Defense.

Question. There are efforts in Congress to condition security assistance given to Israel. Yes or no, do you believe in conditioning Foreign Military Financing, International Military Education and Training, and other forms of assistance that the U.S. gives Israel? Why or why not?

Answer. If confirmed, I will fully support the administration's commitment not to condition U.S. assistance to Israel. President Biden's commitment to Israel's security is ironclad. I understand that the Leahy laws prohibit Foreign Military Financing, International Military Education and Training, and other forms of U.S. assistance to foreign security forces that are credibly implicated in gross violations of human rights, where no accountability is taking place. If confirmed, I will fully support the letter and spirit of the Leahy Laws and their rigorous implementation by DRL, the Department of State, and the Department of Defense.

Question. Can the nominee clarify whether she thinks Israel is such a place where no accountability is taking place, as referenced in her answer?

Answer. I do not believe that Israel is a place where no accountability is taking place.

Question. The United States provides significant funding to the International Committee of the Red Cross. However, ICRC is now advocating for the Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons, a treaty that threatens the ability of the U.S. to defend itself and its allies, among other issues. Do you believe this advocacy is outside the ICRC's mandate? Should U.S. taxpayers fund it?

Answer. I am aware the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) has been addressing nuclear weapons since 1945 as part of its mission. I also understand that the PRM bureau at the State Department is authorized to provide funds to the ICRC to respond to emergencies, protect and assist civilians in situations of armed conflict, wounded members of armed forces, prisoners of war, and other vulnerable populations, and promote international humanitarian law. I understand that the United States does not support the TPNW and, if confirmed, I will commit to work with my State Department and interagency colleagues on tangible, verifiable measures to reduce strategic risk and enable progress on nuclear disarmament.

Question. The United States provides significant funding to the International Committee of the Red Cross. However, ICRC is now advocating for the Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons, a treaty that threatens the ability of the U.S. to defend itself and its allies, among other issues. Do you believe this advocacy is outside the ICRC's mandate? Should U.S. taxpayers fund it?

Answer. I am aware that the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) has been addressing nuclear weapons since 1945 as part of its mission. The ICRC has an important role that includes promoting respect for international humanitarian law (IHL), helping to disseminate and teach it, and working with States in fulfilling their obligations under IHL, especially those of states parties to the Geneva Conventions. The United States does not support the Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons, nor does the U.S. Government provide funds to support the ICRC's advocacy activities related to it. If confirmed, I commit to defending the ability of the United States to defend itself and our allies and will work with my State Department and interagency colleagues on tangible, verifiable measures to reduce strategic risk and enable progress on nuclear disarmament.

Question. Since 2015, parties to the conflict in Yemen have carried out gross human rights violations with impunity. This includes the Iran-backed Houthis, who, both the U.N. and the Department of State, have implicated in abuses ranging from arbitrary arrest, forced disappearance, to gender-based violence and even torture.

- Please provide your assessment of the Houthi Movement's adherence to international human rights and humanitarian law.

Answer. The Houthis have committed egregious human rights abuses in Yemen; the United Nations Panel of Experts noted they may have also committed war crimes. The 2020 State Department Human Rights Report on Yemen notes many of these allegations, including arbitrary deprivation of life, enforced disappearances, arbitrary detention, gender-based violence, including sexual violence, torture, and the recruitment and use in hostilities of children. All parties to Yemen's armed conflict, including the Houthis, are responsible for compliance with international human law. Efforts to hold the Houthis responsible for grave crimes are just as important as those to hold government officials accountable. If confirmed, I would work with U.S. Special Envoy Tim Lenderking and our international partners to push all parties to the conflict to engage with the new U.N. Special Envoy for Yemen Hans Grundberg in good faith and without preconditions.

Question. If confirmed, can you commit to using your position to bringing greater awareness to the human rights violations being actively perpetrated by the Houthis in Yemen, which poses a grave and long-term threat to regional stability?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I would work with U.S. Special Envoy Tim Lenderking and our international partners to push all parties to the conflict to engage with the new U.N. Special Envoy for Yemen Hans Grundberg in good faith and without preconditions. The United States continues to work with our international partners to apply pressure on the Houthis, including via domestic and U.N. sanctions, and, if confirmed, I would support that work. I would also work closely with the U.N. Human Rights Council to continue highlighting the importance of accountability for human rights abuses committed in Yemen.

Question. To what extent do you feel the deliberate targeting of civilian infrastructure by the Houthis both in Yemen and in Saudi Arabia constitutes war crimes?

Answer. The Houthis continue to impact Saudi civilians and infrastructure with missiles and unmanned aircraft systems launched from Yemen. I understand that the Department of State shares concerns over these actions and has continued to urge all parties to this conflict to respect their obligations under international humanitarian law, and to mitigate the risk of harm to civilians.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. To what extent do you feel the deliberate targeting of civilian infrastructure by the Houthis both in Yemen and in Saudi Arabia constitutes war crimes?

Answer. The Houthis continue to mount egregious attacks against Saudi civilians and infrastructure with missiles and unmanned aircraft systems launched from Yemen. While I am not in a position to make a legal assessment of whether individual attacks constitute war crimes, credible NGOs such as Human Rights Watch have alleged that some of these attacks constituted war crimes. Houthi attacks on Marib have killed civilians, including small children, and have put over one million internally displaced Yemenis at grave risk, and Houthi attacks on Saudi civilian infrastructure have killed and wounded civilians. I understand that the Department of State shares concerns over these actions and has continued to urge all parties to this conflict to respect their obligations under international humanitarian law, and to mitigate the risk of harm to civilians.

Question. How would the role of the Houthis in a future Government of Yemen impact this administration's ability to carry out its priorities with respect to human rights, religious freedom, and democracy promotion in Yemen?

Answer. President Biden has committed to elevating the importance of human rights in our foreign policy. The Houthis have a record of egregious human rights abuses. Respect for human rights, accountability for human rights abuses and violations, and progress on the political track are all mutually reinforcing. If confirmed, I would work with U.S. Special Envoy Tim Lenderking and our international partners to push all parties to the conflict to engage with the new U.N. Special Envoy for Yemen Hans Grundberg in good faith and without preconditions.

Question. In a 2020 report, the U.N. panel of experts noted that their investigations "confirmed rampant levels of serious violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, many of which may amount to war crimes." What role should DRL play in international efforts to pursue accountability and justice for crimes committed in Yemen?

Answer. The United States continues to work with our international partners to promote accountability in Yemen, including via domestic and U.N. sanctions, public and private diplomatic engagement, and support for documentation of human rights violations and abuses by all parties to the conflict. If confirmed, I would support that work and also engage local civil society organizations on what types of justice would be most meaningful.

Question. How does institutional capacity building at the local level fit into the overall peace process in Yemen?

Answer. Years of war have degraded governmental and non-governmental institutions throughout Yemen, and rebuilding key social, political, and economic institutions will be critical to reaching and maintaining a durable peace agreement. If confirmed, I will work closely with U.S. Special Envoy for Yemen Tim Lenderking, the United Nations, the Government of Yemen, civil society leaders, including women and youth, and key regional and international partners to build on the unprecedented international consensus on the need to end the war.

Question. How can local government structures be better used to advance efforts to find a political settlement to the conflict?

Answer. Only a comprehensive peace agreement between Yemenis can begin to reverse the humanitarian crisis and bring sustainable relief. If confirmed, I will work closely with U.S. Special Envoy for Yemen Tim Lenderking, the United Nations, the Government of Yemen, and key regional and international partners to build on the international consensus on the need to end the war and to engage civil society leaders, including women and youth at the local and national level. An inclusive political dialogue involving civil society is essential to ensuring all Yemenis are heard and represented in efforts to end the war.

Question. Since anti-government protests broke out in October 2019, dozens of protestors have been killed by Iran backed militia groups in Iraq. These groups operate largely with impunity having successfully evaded the Government of Iraq's efforts to hold them to account for their crimes. What role should DRL play in ensuring the protests movement's voices are heard and their concerns addressed?

Answer. The Government of Iraq has an obligation to respect and protect freedom of expression and peaceful assembly. Peaceful demonstrators seeking democratic reforms should never be met with threats and violence. If confirmed, I will prioritize promoting accountability for the ongoing violence against protesters, journalists, and activists in Iraq. I also will ensure DRL continues to work with other U.S. Government stakeholders and likeminded countries to pursue justice, accountability, and democratic reforms through increased diplomatic pressure on the Government of Iraq to investigate and hold accountable individuals responsible for violence against the media, protesters, voters, civil society activists and minority populations, as well as to continue to communicate the U.S. Government's strong support for the rights and dignity of all persons.

Question. After months of stalled government formation efforts following the August 4, 2020 Beirut Port Blast, Lebanon's political elite finally reached an agreement to form a cabinet on September 20, 2021. If confirmed, please outline your list of priorities with respect to Lebanon.

Answer. If confirmed, I would support efforts to urge the newly formed Lebanese Government to take action to address the dire economic situation facing those living in Lebanon and to address the legitimate demands of the Lebanese people, including concrete political and economic reforms which would combat corruption and protect the rights of Lebanese civil society, as well as accountability for the port blast. I would also support efforts to work to ensure Lebanon's parliamentary elections are held on-time and conducted in a free and fair manner.

Question. How do you plan to work with Lebanon's newly formed cabinet and civil society to support efforts to pursue accountability for the Beirut Port Blast?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support efforts to push for the newly formed Lebanese Government to work closely with Lebanese civil society to ensure accountability for the Beirut Port Blast. I believe the Lebanese justice system must work without any political interference, and civil society plays an important role in promoting transparency.

Question. Please provide your assessment of Russia's role in the Middle East and North Africa region with respect to human rights and democratic ideals.

Answer. Russia's actions in the Middle East and North Africa largely serve to undermine the international order, including human rights and democracy, through its enabling of regimes committing human rights violations. Among the greatest concerns is Russia's military campaign in Syria in support of the Assad regime, which has led to massive destruction, the detainment and abuse of countless individuals, the displacement of millions, and the deaths of hundreds of thousands. If confirmed, I will push back on Russia's efforts to shield the Assad regime from accountability, including in multilateral fora.

Question. Is it your view that closer partnership with Russia positively, or negatively, impacts U.S. interests in the region?

Answer. In general, Russia's interests in the region are mostly geopolitical but there is an element of commercial interest as well—which means there are multiple angles for the U.S. to consider engaging. If confirmed, I would support cooperation with Russia in the Middle East and North Africa region on issues where our interests align, such as on constraining Iran's nuclear ambitions. In Syria, the United States has always been open to dialogue with Russia as long as it contributes to the protection of civilians, enables steps toward a political resolution to the conflict, and promotes Syria's adherence to its international obligations. Where Russia acts to thwart U.S. objectives in the region, however, I believe the United States should respond with firm resolve. Calling out and holding Russia accountable for its malign actions is an important response tool.

Question. According to the U.N., widespread human rights violations have been committed over the course of the conflict in Libya. What role should DRL play in efforts to pursue accountability for the victims?

Answer. The United States shares the aspirations of the Libyan people: a sovereign, stable, unified, and secure Libya, free from foreign interference. Libyans should be able to feel that their rights will be respected. Ensuring accountability for human rights abuses is critical to the national reconciliation process.

If confirmed, I will explore all tools available to promote accountability for those responsible for human rights violations and abuses in Libya, including sanctions and support for multilateral mechanisms like the U.N. International Fact-Finding Mission on Libya. I will continue ongoing diplomatic engagement with the Libyan Government and civil society, and will support civil society in their efforts to document human rights violations and abuses as part of broader accountability mechanisms.

Question. What is the best recourse to pursue action against the alleged perpetrators of such crimes?

Answer. If confirmed, I will consult with Libyan civil society and build on international best practices and the expertise of my colleagues in the Department to determine the most effective way to promote accountability in support of a sovereign, stable, secure, and unified Libya that protects the human rights of all individuals in the country.

Question. Please provide your assessment of the exceptional measures taken by President Kais Saied in July through which he suspended parliament, lifted MP's immunity, and dismissed the prime minister.

Answer. I share the Tunisian people's goal of a democratic government that is responsive to the country's needs, as it battles economic and health crises. I am concerned that President Saied's transitional measures are continuing without a clear end in sight. If confirmed, I would echo calls from the Tunisian public for the president to articulate a plan with a clear timeline for an inclusive reform process that includes civil society and diverse political voices and ensure that Tunisians' human rights are respected and protected.

Question. To what extent do you feel President Saied's recent actions threaten the state of Tunisian democracy?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration continues to urge President Saied to swiftly end exceptional measures, appoint a prime minister to form a capable government that can respond to Tunisians' legitimate economic and political demands, and launch an inclusive reform process that incorporates civil society and diverse political perspectives. If confirmed, I would support and advance administration policy on these fronts, echo calls from the Tunisian public for the president to articulate a plan with a clear timeline for an inclusive reform process that includes civil society and diverse political voices and ensure that Tunisians' human rights are respected and protected.

Question. If confirmed, how do you plan to work with Tunisia to preserve hard won democratic gains?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration has called on the Tunisian Government to continue its public commitment to respect Tunisians' fundamental freedoms and the rule of law. If confirmed, I would continue to make clear the United States' unwavering support for Tunisian democracy and work closely with a range of Tunisian interlocutors, including Tunisian civil society, to strengthen Tunisia's democracy, and ensure that Tunisians' human rights are respected and protected. I would also work closely with multilateral organizations and the international financial institutions to ensure Tunisia's democracy has wide support and adequate resources to succeed.

Question. In 2016, the Obama administration signed a 10-year security assistance Memorandum of Understanding with Israel in which the U.S. pledged military assistance in the form of Foreign Military Financing and missile defense funding. Do you support providing Israel with defensive capabilities that include Iron Dome munitions?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration remains committed to Israel's defense and security, including its qualitative military edge in the region, consistent with U.S. law and policy. On May 20, President Biden assured Prime Minister Netanyahu of his "full support to replenish Israel's Iron Dome system to ensure [Israel's] defense and security in the future." If confirmed, I will support transfers of defensive capabilities to Israel consistent with U.S. law and the 2016 Memorandum of Understanding.

Question. In May, President Biden confirmed his administration's support for Israel and said, "Until the region says unequivocally they acknowledge the right of Israel to exist as an independent Jewish state, there will be no peace."<sup>5</sup> If confirmed, will you support transfers of offensive capabilities to Israel so they can properly defend themselves?

Answer. The United States remains unwavering in its commitment to Israel's security. If confirmed, I will support transfers of offensive capabilities to Israel consistent with U.S. law.

Question. Should the International Criminal Court investigate U.S. or Israeli personnel? Why or why not?

Answer. No. I support the administration's efforts to firmly oppose investigations by the International Criminal Court of U.S. or Israeli personnel. The United States and Israel are not parties to the ICC and have not consented to the Court's jurisdiction. I understand the U.S. Government has expressed serious concerns about the ICC's attempts to exercise its jurisdiction over Israeli personnel. The Palestinians do not qualify as a sovereign state and therefore, are not qualified to obtain membership as a state in, participate as a state in, or delegate jurisdiction to the ICC.

I understand the United States Government remains deeply committed to ensuring justice and accountability for international atrocity crimes. I recognize the role that international tribunals such as the ICC can play—within their respective mandates—in the pursuit of those important objectives and believe a peaceful, secure, and more prosperous future for the people of the Middle East depends on building bridges and creating new avenues for dialogue and exchange, not unilateral judicial actions that can exacerbate tensions and undercut efforts to advance a negotiated two-state solution.

Question. What are your views on the Boycott, Divestment, Sanctions (BDS) movement, which includes companies with whom the Department of State does business?

Answer. I firmly oppose the BDS movement. While the United States will protect the constitutional rights of our citizens to free speech, the Biden-Harris administration has been clear that it resolutely opposes the Boycott, Divestment, and Sanctions (BDS) movement because it unfairly and inappropriately singles out Israel.

Question. Under what conditions would you advocate for the United States—and the Department of State, in particular—to join the boycott movement?

Answer. Like the Biden-Harris administration, I firmly oppose the BDS movement.

Question. Do you believe that Israeli settlements in West Bank and Gaza are illegal?

Answer. I believe it is critical for both Israel and the Palestinian Authority to refrain from unilateral steps that exacerbate tensions and undercut efforts to advance a negotiated two-state solution, including annexation of territory, settlement activity, demolitions, incitement to violence, and providing compensation for individuals imprisoned for acts of terrorism.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. Do you believe that Israeli settlements in West Bank and Gaza are illegal?

Answer. The two-state solution is the best way to ensure Israel's future as a Jewish and democratic state, and to give the Palestinians the state they seek. I firmly oppose any unilateral provocative actions that risk sparking more violence and that undermine prospects for a just, durable resolution of the conflict between Palestinians and Israelis, which ultimately requires two states. I believe it is critical for both Israel and the Palestinian Authority to refrain from unilateral steps that exacerbate tensions and undercut efforts to advance a negotiated two-state solution, including annexation of territory, settlement activity, demolitions, incitement to violence, and providing compensation for individuals imprisoned for acts of terrorism. I am not in a position to speak to the administration's legal views. If confirmed, I will work to preserve the path to a two-state solution, as the best way to ensure Israel's future as a Jewish and democratic state and to give the Palestinians the state they seek.

Question. The Egyptian Government has a less-than-stellar record on human rights, including recent arbitrary detentions of human rights activists, impunity for security services, deplorable detention conditions, suppression of fundamental freedoms, and more. It is important that the United States seek to bolster human rights and civil society in Egypt. What tools will you use to address these human rights abuses and end impunity for those committing them?

Answer. It's clear that the United States has multiple priorities when it comes to policy toward Egypt, but I think it's important to recognize that the Secretary of State's recent decision neither to certify improvements in Egypt's human rights record nor to waive the Foreign Military Financing human rights conditions presents an opportunity for the administration to double down on its efforts to address Egypt's grave human rights crisis. If confirmed, I will consider all tools available to address human rights violations in Egypt and to end impunity for those violations, including through public and private diplomatic engagement, engagement with partners and at multilateral forums, and more punitive measures to address specific abuses, including restrictions on security assistance as appropriate. I also will support engagement with Egyptian civil society groups, including human rights defenders and work closely with the NEA bureau and Embassy Cairo to ensure those civil society voices are heard. Ultimately, the Egyptian people will be the most effective advocates for human rights and government accountability in Egypt, so if confirmed I will prioritize identifying how to best push back on Egyptian restrictions on civic space and how to secure adequate space for independent civil society groups working to address these issues in Egypt.

Question. If confirmed, what would you change about current programming in Syria?

Answer. I understand that since before the 2011 uprisings, DRL programs have been actively supporting Syrian civil society, independent journalists, civic groups, and women and youth activists, to advance the cause of democracy and human rights. I believe DRL's programs protect civic space for Syrian civil society groups to advocate for the needs of their communities; play an active role in the political process; promote reconciliation and stabilization of areas recently liberated; hold local governance institutions accountable; contribute to accountability and transitional justice efforts; and provide support to survivors of torture and sexual and gender-based violence. While other donors have ceased or limited their support for these Syrian civil society actors, DRL has provided continuous assistance to help protect civil society's role as positive change agents within Syria, in neighboring countries, and in the diaspora. If confirmed, I will look closely at DRL's programmatic efforts in Syria to determine if any changes are needed to ensure the continued success and impact of these efforts, to ensure our programs remain aligned with our policy, and to ensure our partners can continue to operate as safely as possible.

Question. Do you agree that the United States should not be funding reconstruction efforts in Syria? Please explain your answer.

Answer. If confirmed, I would not support reconstruction assistance to Syria until there is irreversible progress toward a political resolution to the conflict in line with United Nations Security Council Resolution 2254. I would support the United States continuing to provide humanitarian aid in Syria, including certain early recovery assistance, to build resilience and restore Syrian civilians' access to basic services, so long as these are delivered on the basis of need and conducted by independent and impartial humanitarian agencies.

Question. What steps, if confirmed, will you take to bolster civil society in country?

Answer. If confirmed, I would ensure the United States continues its strong support for courageous Syrian civil society actors whose efforts are critical to advancing peace and stability in Syria. I understand DRL has provided continuous assistance to maintain civil society's role as positive change agents within Syria, including through efforts to protect and expand civic space and encourage meaningful citizen participation in public policy and governance; promote local reconciliation; support human rights and accountability efforts; and facilitate reintegration of returning IDPs, among other activities, as well as Syrians in neighboring countries and the diaspora. If confirmed, I will ensure DRL continues to work closely with interagency colleagues to ensure the continued success and impact of these efforts, and that our partners can continue to operate as safely as possible.

Question. What steps, if confirmed, will you take to bolster human rights defenders in country?

Answer. If confirmed, I would ensure DRL continues its strong support for courageous Syrian human rights defenders whose efforts are critical to advancing peace and stability in Syria. I understand DRL has provided continuous assistance to ensure human rights defenders' efforts to contribute to accountability and transitional justice efforts; provide support to survivors of torture and gender-based violence; play an active role in the political process; and promote stabilization in areas liberated from ISIS. If confirmed, I will ensure DRL continues to work closely with interagency colleagues to support and encourage the continued success and impact of these efforts, and that our partners can continue to operate as safely as possible.

Question. Syrian-Russian forces continue to deliberately and openly attack civilian entities, community centers, and populations. How would you engage with the intra-Department and interagency to promote a political solution through United Nations Security Council Resolution (UNSCR) 2254?

Answer. If confirmed, I would encourage the United States to remain engaged with the U.N., our allies, and our international partners to encourage all possible efforts to advance a political resolution to the conflict through a U.N.-facilitated, Syrian-led process as laid out in U.N. Security Council Resolution 2254, including a nationwide ceasefire and the release of arbitrarily detained Syrians. Peace and stability in Syria, and the greater region, can only be achieved through a political process that addresses the root causes of the conflict, including the Assad regime's ongoing campaign of arbitrary detention and violence against his own people, and promotes accountability for the innumerable atrocities the Assad regime and its allies have perpetrated against the Syrian people.

Question. The use of arbitrary detention and torture by the Assad regime continues to shock the conscious. Please explain what tools are available to you, if confirmed, to hold the regime accountable for its crimes against civilians?

Answer. If confirmed, I would use every tool at my disposal to promote an end to the Assad regime's vicious campaign of arbitrary detention and torture in Syria. I will consult with our DRL team and Department colleagues to assess which tools are most appropriate to achieving this objective, including continued support for human rights and documentation groups laying the groundwork for accountability efforts; support for former detainees, families of the missing, and other survivors of the regime's abuses; the continued use of targeted sanctions that promote accountability for perpetrators of human rights abuses and limit their access to resources; and ensuring our efforts to advance a political resolution also address the root causes of the conflict and promote accountability for the innumerable atrocities the Assad regime and its allies have perpetrated against the Syrian people.

Question. The recent botched evacuation in Afghanistan highlights some serious gaps in the policy decisions made by this administration. What conditions would a Biden administration place on future assistance to Afghanistan?

Answer. If confirmed, I will monitor closely how any future Government of Afghanistan respects and protects human rights, especially for women, girls, and minority groups, and fundamental freedoms that have become an integral part of the life of all Afghan citizens, and actively engage our bilateral and multilateral partners to maintain unity in holding the Taliban accountable to their actions. If confirmed, I also commit to ensuring unhindered U.S. humanitarian assistance continues to safely flow to support the needs of Afghan people and that female aid workers are granted the ability to fully participate in the delivery of aid. I will work to increase support to human rights defenders, independent journalists, and civil society activists who remain in Afghanistan. The provision of humanitarian assistance is a demonstration of the U.S. commitment to the Afghan people, and an important part of ensuring they remain protected and supported. If confirmed, I will encourage the United States, to work with other governments, with financial institutions, and with NGOs to support humanitarian and emergency assistance to Afghans whose lives depend on it.

Question. U.S. efforts in Afghanistan dramatically improved conditions for women, minority and youth but now are at great risk of violence and regression from the Taliban. How should the State Department safeguard the gains made for Afghan women, minority, and youth in the current security environment?

Answer. The meaningful participation of women and members of minority groups in governance has a positive effect on the economic, political, and health aspects of a country and its people. If confirmed, I will support U.S. efforts to hold the Taliban to its stated commitment to allow U.S. citizens, Legal Permanent Residents, and Afghans with the proper documentation who wish to leave the country to do so. I will also continue to support efforts to hold the Taliban to international expectations on respecting the fundamental human rights of all Afghans, including those of women, children, and members of minority and vulnerable groups. I will also work with the international community, including the United Nations, to hold the perpetrators of human rights abuses and violations accountable for those actions. Part of my job, if confirmed, will be to make sure the Department—as well as the interagency—is aware of the fragile situation for women, minorities, and youth and has all the updated information available so we can make decisions as U.S. Government that lessens the burdens—and threats—they face and increase protection and opportunities.

Question. Do you feel that this administration failed women, girls, and youth in Afghanistan given the botched evacuation?

Answer. Over 124,000 American citizens, lawful permanent residents (LPRs), locally employed staff, Special Immigrant Visas (SIVs), and Afghans at-risk, including women, children, journalists, persons with disabilities, members of the LGBTQI+ community, and members of minority groups were evacuated from Afghanistan prior to September 1. That said, many vulnerable Afghans remain in Afghanistan and will need support and protection. The administration will continue to hold the Taliban to their commitment to allowing the safe passage of American citizens, LPRs, and Afghans with the proper documentation, including women and children, who desire to leave. The meaningful participation of women and members of minority groups in governance has a positive effect on the economic, political, and security health of a country. If confirmed, I will work with the rest of the interagency to press the Taliban on the international community's expectations of their ability to uphold the rights of all Afghans, including women and children. I will engage our multilateral and bilateral partners on the same, to ensure they are pushing the same message of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and the need to form an inclusive government that includes women and members of minority groups. I will work with the international community, including the United Nations, to hold the perpetrators of human rights abuses and violations accountable for their actions.

Question. How will you continue to support vulnerable populations in Afghanistan and the region?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to promoting respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, especially for Afghan human rights defenders, women, children, journalists, persons with disabilities, members of the LGBTQI+ community, members of minority groups, and other vulnerable persons. I will support U.S. efforts to hold the Taliban to its stated commitment to allow American citizens, Legal Permanent Residents, and Afghans with the proper documentation who wish to leave the country to do so, as well as press them to respect human rights, including those of women and children, in Afghanistan. I will also look for ways for the State Department to support multilateral initiatives that protect and support vulnerable populations, work with regional governments, multilateral organizations, international civil society organizations and USAID colleagues. I will seek to maintain our robust relationships with Afghan human rights defenders both inside and outside Afghanistan. If confirmed, my commitment to these relationships will remain unwavering as we work with academics, human rights defenders, women activists, and disability activists on these issues.

Question. The U.S. recently killed 10 civilians, including seven children, via an over-the-horizon drone strike in Afghanistan. The U.S. has killed civilians in numerous other errant strikes. Would other countries be justified in boycotting, divesting, and sanctioning the United States? Why or why not?

Answer. I share my deepest condolences with the families and friends of those who were killed by the strike. While the United States, like all other countries, has a right to defend itself and, if confirmed, I will defend that right, there has been tremendous work in the area of how best to respond to civilian casualties and a number of lessons learned that if implemented robustly can help generate both effectiveness towards national security goals and good will amongst local communities. General McKenzie stated on September 17, “This strike was taken in the earnest belief that it would prevent an imminent threat to our forces and the evacuees at the airport. But it was a mistake and I offer my sincere apology.” Secretary Austin said that “We will endeavor to learn from this horrible mistake. To that end, I have directed a thorough review of the investigation just completed by U.S. Central Command. I have asked for this review to consider the degree to which the investigation considered all available context and information, the degree to which accountability measures need be taken and at what level, and the degree to which strike authorities, procedures and processes need to be altered in the future.” I believe such a response is important not just to the immediate friends and family of those killed but also for us as a country and is morally responsible. If confirmed, I will support the approach described in these statements.

Question. Is it your opinion that the policy and objectives being advanced by the Chinese Communist Party pose the greatest foreign policy challenge to the United States today and will continue to do so for the foreseeable future?

Answer. There is no doubt that the PRC poses the most significant challenge of any nation to the United States in terms of our values and the interests of the American people. If confirmed, I will pay special attention to the PRC, whose pernicious attacks on human rights, dissent, and the rule of law are on the rise domestically and fast becoming a common export. Our priority must be making sure the PRC does not succeed in its efforts to undermine international human rights and the rules-based order.

Question. If not, why not?

Answer. There is no doubt that the PRC poses the most significant challenge of any nation to the United States in terms of our values and the interests of the American people.

Question. What do you believe is our greatest foreign policy challenge?

Answer. I believe there is not one issue that is our greatest foreign policy challenge but instead a number of interlocking ones that include digital and technological advancements, the climate crisis, rising authoritarianism, and an increasingly aggressive China. These transnational issues are already testing democracies worldwide and, left unchecked or ill-coordinated, have the potential to lead to frayed alliances, institutional vulnerabilities, massive, large scale and persistent migration, and a serious deterioration of basic, fundamental freedoms. If we don’t rise to the occasion to respond to each of these developments in a coordinated way, the consequences to democracy, security, and human rights could be catastrophic.

Question. Will the Biden administration continue public presidential meetings with, and support for, the Dalai Lama as conducted by the Trump administration?

Answer. Yes. I understand administrations from both political parties have long welcomed engagement with, and support for, His Holiness the Dalai Lama as a globally renowned religious leader. If confirmed, I would support a continuation of that practice.

Question. Will you commit that the Department of State will meet with the Dalai Lama’s representatives, as the Assistant Secretary of State for Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor did in 2020?

Answer. Yes. I understand administrations from both political parties have long welcomed engagement with representatives of His Holiness the Dalai Lama. If confirmed, I would support a continuation of that practice.

Question. If confirmed, how do you plan to confront the Chinese Government on the human rights violations taking place in Xinjiang?

Answer. The United States should continue to speak out consistently and jointly with allies and partners to condemn these atrocities, and to consider all appropriate tools to promote accountability for those responsible and deter future abuses. If confirmed, I will continue concrete U.S. Government action—in coordination with our allies and partners whenever possible—to promote accountability for ongoing atrocities and genocide in Xinjiang, including through the imposition of visa restrictions, tightening of export controls, enforcement of import restrictions, imposition of financial sanctions, and multilateral initiatives. We will continue to caution businesses about the economic, legal, and reputational risks of supply chain links to entities that engage in human rights abuses, including forced labor in Xinjiang and elsewhere in China.

Question. Due to the massive amounts of human rights abuses being committed by the Chinese Communist Party, do you believe they should be allowed to host the Olympics in 2022?

Answer. I am deeply concerned by the human rights violations and abuses being committed by the PRC. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department of State continues to play a strong leadership role in global efforts to combat serious human rights abuses committed by the PRC, domestically and abroad, and consults closely with our allies and partners to establish a shared approach regarding the Olympics.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. Due to the massive amounts of human rights abuses being committed by the Chinese Communist Party, do you believe they should be allowed to host the Olympics in 2022?

Answer. The International Olympic Committee (IOC) members select the Olympic host. If confirmed, I will engage with the IOC and the U.S. Olympic and Paralympic Committee to advocate for human rights to be considered in the selection of host cities consistent with the Olympic Charter, which highlights respect and human dignity as key values.

I am deeply concerned by the human rights violations and abuses being committed by the PRC Government and the PRC Government's abhorrent genocide and crimes against humanity against predominantly Muslim Uyghurs and members of other ethnic and religious minority groups in Xinjiang. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department of State continues to play a strong leadership role in global efforts to end the genocide and crimes against humanity in Xinjiang, combat human rights abuses committed by the PRC, domestically and abroad, and will consult closely with our allies and partners to define our common concerns and establish a shared approach.

Question. Legislation currently under consideration proposes a human rights briefing for the Olympic athletes on Team USA. The briefing would help inform athletes about major human rights abuses committed by the government hosting the Olympics, and alert them to narratives that the government pushes to deflect or deny such abuses. Do you support such a proposal?

Answer. I support raising awareness among athletes of the human rights abuses committed by the government hosting the Olympics. If confirmed, I will consult with key stakeholders, including the Centre for Sport and Human Rights, in developing an approach that does so.

Question. Would you devote Department of State resources and personnel toward working with the International Olympic Committee and other relevant stakeholders to ensure such briefings are provided to as many American athletes as possible prior to the 2022 Olympics?

Answer. If confirmed, I will consult with key stakeholders, primarily the U.S. Olympic and Paralympic Committee, in developing our approach to continue to conduct outreach on human rights issues to American athletes chosen or competing for a place on Team USA prior to the 2022 Olympics.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. Would you devote Department of State resources and personnel toward working with the International Olympic Committee and other relevant stakeholders to ensure such briefings are provided to as many American athletes as possible prior to the 2022 Olympics?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will work with the U.S. Olympic and Paralympic Committee (USOPC) and relevant others in the Department to ensure that briefings, including about PRC human rights and atrocities, are provided to as many American athletes chosen or competing for a place on Team USA prior to the 2022 Olympics.

Question. Do you support a diplomatic boycott of the Beijing 2022 Olympics? Why or why not?

Answer. I understand this is a strongly bipartisan issue that many in Congress are focused on and I understand why. If confirmed, I will consult with key stakeholders in developing our approach, ideally a shared approach with allies and partners, in advance of and during the 2022 Olympic Games. I will review this issue in light of the PRC's abhorrent human rights record, including genocide and crimes against humanity in Xinjiang.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. Do you support a diplomatic boycott of the Beijing 2022 Olympics? Why or why not?

Answer. The PRC has an abhorrent human rights record, including the commission of genocide and crimes against humanity in Xinjiang. I believe the United States should continue to speak out consistently and jointly with allies and partners to condemn these atrocities, and to consider all appropriate tools to promote accountability for those responsible and deter future abuses, including a potential diplomatic boycott of the Beijing 2022 Olympics. I personally support such a diplomatic boycott as a way of signaling U.S. disapproval of the PRC's behavior.

Question. The CCP has cracked down on the most basic rights of the people of Hong Kong. How will you address the human rights abuses occurring in Hong Kong?

Answer. I am deeply concerned by the PRC and Hong Kong Governments' increased efforts to wield the National Security Law as a tool to curtail the exercise of human rights, dismantle civil society, and silence dissenting views. If confirmed, I will support the United States' continued efforts to press the PRC to abide by its international obligations and commitments; to cease its dismantlement of Hong Kong's democratic institutions, autonomy, and rule of law; to immediately release and drop all charges against individuals unjustly detained in Hong Kong; and to respect the human rights of the people of Hong Kong.

Question. Do you believe that reaching a climate agreement should be the top priority in our dealings with China? If so, why?

Answer. Addressing the climate crisis with urgency is a top priority for the administration, but without question, so is protecting human rights. I believe human rights should not be given a back seat even as other issues come to the fore. The administration has said rights are not a negotiating chip in engagements with the PRC or any other country for greater action on climate. If confirmed, I will seek to ensure that that approach continues.

Question. If not, what should be our top priority instead?

Answer. The administration's Interim National Security Strategy states that "we will only succeed in advancing American interests and upholding our universal values by working in common cause with our closest allies and partners, and by renewing our own enduring sources of national strength." If confirmed, I will seek to ensure the promotion of our democratic values are at the center of U.S. foreign policy, including in our dealings with China.

Question. The PRC Government and Chinese companies have been implicated in corruption at home and in its dealings with other countries around the world. If confirmed, will you commit to highlighting corrupt Chinese practices and prioritize assistance to help counter corruption, including corruption caused or exacerbated by the Chinese Government or Chinese companies?

Answer. Yes.

Question. Several countries have forcibly returned Uyghurs fleeing persecution and abhorrent human rights abuses by the Chinese Communist Party. How will you and interagency partners work with other nations to discourage, and eventually end, this practice?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with interagency partners to urge third countries to act to avoid complicity in the PRC's human rights violations and abuses committed against Uyghurs and other ethnic and religious minorities from Xinjiang, including by providing protection to and preventing the forcible return of individuals seeking to flee the PRC's repressive policies.

Question. Do you consider the human rights abuses committed by the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) against the Uyghurs and other religious and ethnic minorities, including forced sterilization, to constitute a genocide? If not, please explain.

Answer. Yes. As Secretary Blinken has said, the PRC has committed genocide and crimes against humanity against Uyghurs, who are predominantly Muslim, and members of other ethnic and religious minority groups. These atrocities remain ongoing.

Question. The Chinese Government continues to "Sinicize" religions, which the Congressional Executive Commission on China describes as "a campaign that aims to bring religion in China under closer official control and into conformity with officially sanctioned interpretations of Chinese culture.” These policies affect Christians, Muslims, Han Buddhists, Taoists, and many others. What can the Biden administration do to support freedom of religious practice for the people of China, free from interference and enforced conformity?

Answer. I share your concerns regarding the ongoing deterioration of freedom of religion or belief in the PRC. The PRC demonstrates blatant disregard for freedom of religion or belief and exercises extreme hostility toward members of all religious and spiritual communities, including predominantly Muslim Uyghurs, Tibetan Buddhists, Protestants, Catholics, and Falun Gong. These communities have suffered unspeakable oppression at the hands of China’s authoritarian government.

The PRC is engaged in human rights abuses—and in the case of Xinjiang, genocide and crimes against humanity—that shock the conscience and must be met with serious consequences.

If confirmed, I will speak out consistently with allies and partners to condemn these atrocities and abuses, and I will consider all appropriate tools to promote accountability for those responsible and to deter future abuses. I will also continue to urge the PRC to uphold its international commitments with respect to freedom of religion or belief for all individuals and call on the international community to condemn with a united voice the PRC’s atrocities in Xinjiang.

Question. The Vatican extended its agreement with the Chinese Government that establishes a process for appointing bishops in China. Under the Agreement, bishops in China are in communion with Rome but also approved by the Chinese Government. The details of this agreement have never been made public. Despite the agreement, Catholic bishops not affiliated with the Chinese Catholic Patriotic Association continue to face persecution. Do you believe this Vatican-China agreement advanced human rights and religious freedom in China? If so, why? If not, why not?

Answer. As I understand, despite the provisional agreement between the Holy See and Beijing, the PRC continues to repress Catholics, particularly clergy and laypersons who refuse state control of religion. In his book published late last year, Pope Francis characterized Uyghurs in the PRC alongside members of other religious and ethnic communities as persecuted due to their beliefs.

If confirmed, I would encourage the Holy See to speak out publicly against the PRC’s human rights violations and abuses of members of minority religious and ethnic communities. I would also encourage the Holy See to hold the PRC Government accountable to the terms of the provisional agreement and make the terms of the agreement public to promote accountability for the PRC’s commitments.

Question. If confirmed, will you prioritize religious freedom issues in China in your diplomatic engagements with Vatican officials? What will you emphasize to them in these engagements?

Answer. The Holy See has a long history of promoting freedom of religion or belief, including through advocacy and interfaith dialogue, and, if confirmed, I look forward to working with the Vatican on this issue. If confirmed, I would encourage the Holy See to speak out publicly against the PRC’s human rights violations and abuses of members of minority religious and ethnic communities. I would also encourage the Holy See to hold the PRC Government accountable to the terms of the provisional agreement and make the terms of the agreement public to promote accountability for the PRC’s commitments.

Question. Xi Jinping has emphasized the desire to ensure that Hollywood filmmakers use their position to “tell China’s story well”. This translates into Beijing’s overreach into and censorship of Hollywood films through explicit censorship requirements for the Chinese market, boycotts and economic pressure, and acquisitions of industry corporations by Chinese companies. As Hollywood director Judd Apatow recently said, “Instead of us doing business with China and that leading to China being more free, what has happened is that China has bought our silence with their money”.

- Will the Biden administration, including yourself and other senior State Department officials, engage the film industry regarding the pernicious impact of censorship by the Chinese Government and other authoritarian governments on freedom of expression and other principles that are fundamental to the political system of United States?

Answer. Yes.

Question. What are your views on the implications and consequences of Beijing’s tactics in Hollywood for the PRC’s overall strategy to exercise malign influence across various types of U.S. media? What other types of media in the United States are at risk of being subjected to tactics we are seeing used by Beijing to influence Hollywood?

Answer. I am concerned by the PRC's campaign of disinformation and censorship, which extends well beyond its borders and directly impacts the information environment in the United States. The PRC's attempts to control freedom of expression are not limited to Hollywood or U.S. media but extend into cultural, academic, and social media spaces as well.

If confirmed, I will engage with governments and nongovernmental actors, including media organizations and private institutions, to promote freedom of expression and support U.S. entities in resisting PRC malign influence and coercion. I will also work closely with partners and allies to build resilience to, and jointly confront, the PRC's efforts to control the global information environment.

Question. China is starting to build extraterritoriality into its laws and regulations, not just the Hong Kong National Security Law but also numerous other laws and regulations. Please describe what you think the implications are for human rights abroad and for the United States in particular.

Answer. The PRC continues its efforts to reshape the international rules-based order to advance its own interests, including by utilizing its laws and regulations to commit transnational repression. These actions threaten global peace and stability and threaten human rights and democratic institutions and actors in the United States and globally.

If confirmed, I will work closely with our partners to address these challenges from a position of strength, reengage in international institutions, and resist attempts to rewrite the rules that govern these institutions. I will use all available diplomatic tools to promote accountability for these egregious abuses and support human rights defenders and civil society organizations seeking protection.

Question. Will you commit not to advise or support entrance into an agreement with the People's Republic of China (PRC) that trades key U.S. interests away for cooperation or future promises by Beijing on climate change?

Answer. If confirmed, I will strongly support policies that advance U.S. values and interests. I believe this can be done in a manner consistent with the President's commitment to policies that address the climate crisis. I believe these two goals are complementary.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. Will you commit not to advise or support entrance into an agreement with the People's Republic of China (PRC) that trades key U.S. interests away for cooperation or future promises by Beijing on climate change?

Answer. If confirmed, I will strongly support policies that advance U.S. values and interests and focus on what Beijing does—not what it says it will or won't do. I will not advise that the United States sacrifice vital U.S. interests or our values for PRC promises on climate change. We can speak the truth about the PRC's human rights abuses and atrocities and promote accountability for them while working to reverse the effects of climate change.

Question. Will you commit not to recommend decreasing freedom of navigation exercises in the South China Sea to either secure or preserve a climate change agreement with the PRC?

Answer. If confirmed, I will strongly support policies that advance U.S. values and interests, including a rules-based order in the Indo-Pacific and South China Sea that ensures freedom of navigation. I believe this goal is consistent with and supportive of the President's goals on climate change.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. Will you commit not to recommend decreasing freedom of navigation exercises in the South China Sea to either secure or preserve a climate change agreement with the PRC?

Answer. If confirmed, I will strongly support policies that advance U.S. values and interests, including the continuation of activities that protect and promote the rules-based order in the South China Sea such as freedom of navigation exercises. I will not recommend decreasing freedom of navigation exercises in the South China Sea to either secure or preserve a climate change agreement with the PRC.

Question. Will you commit not to recommend making changes in our defense relationship with any U.S. ally, or our overall defense posture in the Indo-Pacific region to either secure or preserve a climate change agreement with the PRC?

Answer. If confirmed, I will strongly support President Biden's commitment to policies that address climate change while deepening and strengthening strategic alliances including in the Indo-Pacific region in line with U.S. interests, including the protection and promotion of human rights; I believe these goals are complementary.

If confirmed as Assistant Secretary for Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor, I will seek to enhance the U.S. relationship with Taiwan, including the defense relationship, as a way of implementing the President's vision of a foreign policy with democracy and human rights at the center.

Question. Will you commit not to recommend deciding not to pursue policies that safeguard the U.S. economy from Beijing's anti-competitive trading practices to either secure or preserve a climate change agreement with the PRC?

Answer. If confirmed, I will strongly support policies that advance U.S. values and interests. I believe this can be done in a manner consistent with the President's commitment to policies that address the climate crisis.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. Will you commit not to recommend deciding not to pursue policies that safeguard the U.S. economy from Beijing's anti-competitive trading practices to either secure or preserve a climate change agreement with the PRC?

Answer. If confirmed, I will strongly support policies that advance U.S. values and interests and to work alongside U.S. allies and partners to confront the PRC's anti-competitive, market distorting, and coercive behaviors. I will not recommend against pursuing policies that safeguard the U.S. economy from Beijing's anti-competitive trading practices to either secure or preserve a climate change agreement with the PRC.

Question. Will you commit not to recommend terminating sanctions against individuals or entities of the PRC, or removing a PRC company from the Entity List to either secure or preserve a climate change agreement with the PRC?

Answer. If confirmed, I will strongly support policies that advance U.S. values and interests. I will make recommendations regarding sanctions and Entity List designations that promote and protect human rights and labor rights, including forced labor and I will recommend those not be lifted until there is progress on human and labor rights. I believe this can be done in a manner consistent with the President's commitment to policies that address the climate crisis.

Question. Will you commit not to recommend dropping U.S. policies that hold CCP officials and companies accountable for egregious human rights abuses, including those conducted in Xinjiang to either secure or preserve a climate change agreement with the PRC?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to advocating for U.S. policies that protect and promote human rights and hold PRC and CCP officials accountable for egregious human rights abuses, including the ongoing atrocities in Xinjiang and campaign of repression targeting Tibetans, Hong Kongers, lawyers, and human rights defenders. I believe this can be done in a manner consistent with the President's commitment to policies that address the climate crisis.

Question. Recently the Government of Bangladesh has forcibly moved Rohingya refugees from Cox's Bazaar to Bhasan Char, an island in the Bay of Bengal. This move was done without consultation with donor countries and international organizations. If confirmed, do you commit to discussing this move with Bangladeshi Government officials?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will uphold the U.S. Government's long-standing commitment to ensure movements of displaced persons are informed and voluntary. I recognize and appreciate the generosity Bangladesh has shown in hosting nearly 900,000 Rohingya refugees since they fled horrific atrocities and abuses in Burma in 2017. I believe that the United States, as the leading contributor of humanitarian assistance in response to the Rohingya crisis, also has a responsibility to ensure Bangladesh respects these refugees' human rights, including freedom of movement. If confirmed, I will work with other donor countries and international organizations to message consistently to Bangladeshi authorities that any transfers must be in full coordination with humanitarian organizations and align with humanitarian principles.

Question. Do you commit to pressing the Bangladeshi officials to ensure that no further moves before the United Nations conducts a thorough and independent technical and protection assessments to determine the safety, feasibility, and desirability of relocating refugees Bhasan Char?

Answer. Yes. I understand the United States has consistently recognized and appreciated the challenges and responsibilities that the Rohingya humanitarian response has placed on the Government and people of Bangladesh. If confirmed, I will commit to supporting consistent, strong U.S. messaging to urge Bangladesh to permit the U.N. to conduct a comprehensive technical and protection assessment on Bhasan Char. I would also commit to working with Bangladesh and humanitarian groups to ensure that such relocations are voluntary and based on informed consent without pressure or coercion.

Question. Do you support United States security alliances and partnerships in the Indo-Pacific?

Answer. Yes. U.S. national security benefits when partner governments and security forces around the world uphold democratic values, promote and protect human rights, hold human rights violators accountable when necessary, and do not unduly restrict fundamental freedoms. If confirmed, I will work to ensure we develop and maintain such important security alliances and partnerships in the Indo-Pacific, guided by President Biden's insistence that U.S. interests and values are inseparable.

Question. Do you believe that U.S. security alliances and partnerships can contribute to improving human rights records in relevant countries?

Answer. Yes, I believe U.S. security alliances and partnerships as important aspects of foreign policy can and should be used for positive effect on countries' human rights records. Promoting democracy, human rights, and fundamental freedoms advances U.S. national security. Our most valued, dependable, and effective partner governments and security forces around the world uphold democratic values, respect and protect human rights, and hold human rights violators accountable. The United States must continue to create and maintain strong security relationships with such partners through diplomacy, measured assistance, and frequent and ongoing cooperation.

Question. Do you consider the Philippines to be a strategically important ally of the United States? Please explain your position.

Answer. Yes. The U.S. alliance with the Philippines is one of the oldest and most strategically important in East Asia. Continued engagement with the Philippine Government is vital to regional security. At the same time, in that engagement, I believe it is crucial for the U.S. to emphasize the importance of shared values including respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms to sustain a stable, bilateral partnership. If confirmed, I will raise human rights concerns—from arbitrary and unlawful killings to targeting the independent press—at every possible opportunity with the Government of the Philippines.

Question. What is your assessment of the U.S.-Philippine relationship and its importance to U.S. strategy in the Indo-Pacific region more broadly?

Answer. The United States' effort to build a network of allies and partners that can credibly and collectively respond to shared security threats has the benefit of strengthening the free, open, and inclusive regional order, which is in our national interest. If confirmed, I will continue to pursue that goal while helping to ensure that our engagement with those partners and allies includes promotion of human rights and accountability for abuse. I believe that respect for human rights is integral to maintaining strong and sustainable countries and partnerships.

Question. Do you support continuing a robust security partnership with the Armed Forces of the Philippines, including through appropriate arms transfers consistent with existing U.S. law?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support continuing a robust security partnership with the Armed Forces of the Philippines, including through appropriate arms transfers consistent with existing U.S. law and provisions that promote and protect human rights.

Question. Do you support United States security alliances and partnerships in the Indo-Pacific?

Answer. Yes. U.S. national security benefits when partner governments and security forces around the world uphold democratic values, promote and protect human rights, hold human rights violators accountable when necessary, and do not unduly restrict fundamental freedoms. Question. Do you believe that U.S. security alliances and partnerships can contribute to improving human rights records in relevant countries?

Answer. Yes, I believe U.S. security alliances and partnerships as important aspects of foreign policy and can be used to positive effect on countries' human rights records. While security alliances have manifold reasons to exist, the important role they can also play as a joint investment in promoting democracy and human rights is central to also advancing U.S. national security. Our most valued, dependable, and effective partner governments and security forces around the world uphold democratic values, respect and protect human rights, and hold human rights violators accountable. The United States must continue to create and maintain strong security relationships with such partners through diplomacy, measured assistance, and frequent and ongoing cooperation.

Question. Will you ensure that the U.S. Department of State consults with Congress before taking action on issues that could jeopardize U.S. access to or create significant tensions in our relationships with key defense partners in the Indo-Pacific, especially those in Southeast Asia?

Question. Will you ensure that the U.S. Department of State consults with Congress before taking action on issues that could jeopardize U.S. access to or create significant tensions in our relationships with key defense partners in the Indo-Pacific, especially those in Southeast Asia?

Answer. Our alliances and partnerships are a strategic advantage over our competitors and the strength of this network of defense relations cannot be taken for granted. If confirmed, I am committed to consulting with Congress, as appropriate, on our actions and engagements with all partners and allies in the Indo-Pacific region, including those partners and allies in Southeast Asia.

Question. How will you prioritize Internet Freedom within the Democracy, Human Rights and Labor bureau and across the Department?

Answer. I strongly believe that the same human rights people have offline must be protected online, including the rights to freedoms of expression, association, and peaceful assembly. If confirmed, I will support DRL's efforts to promote internet freedom by raising our concerns bilaterally and building and participating in multi-lateral and multi-stakeholder coalitions such as the Freedom Online Coalition, where we play a leadership role. I will support investment in global internet freedom programming to support digital safety, policy advocacy, technology, and research to help global internet users overcome barriers to accessing the open internet.

Question. Do you believe that internet shutdowns are a threat to human rights?

Answer. Yes. In May, Secretary Blinken condemned the use of partial or complete government-imposed internet shutdowns, among other tactics, to prevent the exercise of freedom of expression online. I believe that in addition to restricting the exercise of human rights, including the right to expression and assembly, internet shutdowns disrupt access to essential services such as healthcare and emergency services, and negatively impact the economy. If confirmed, I will support DRL's efforts to address internet shutdowns by raising our concerns bilaterally, continuing our participation in multilateral fora that are working to raise awareness such as the G7, and supporting our efforts in multi-stakeholder coalitions such as the Freedom Online Coalition, where we play a leadership role.

Question. The Department has been focused on the idea of "internet freedom" as a key programmatic effort to combat and counter malign influence and authoritarian governments. How will you bring more cohesion to the various internet freedom programs throughout the department?

Answer. I will support DRL's continued leadership of the State Department's efforts to promote internet freedom globally through a variety of bilateral and multi-lateral engagements as well as through foreign assistance programming. I understand that DRL works to advance the U.S.-led vision of the open, interoperable, reliable, and secure internet, governed in a manner consistent with international human rights standards and democratic norms. I also believe growing concerns around digital authoritarianism or tech governance are tremendously important policies on which DRL needs to engage given how these tools are used to undermine democracy and restrict fundamental freedoms. If confirmed, I will ensure that DRL continues to coordinate throughout the Department on internet-related issues, such as cybersecurity, disinformation, and emerging technologies.

Question. Do you believe that these programs are effective in providing training and tools to civil society?

Answer. Yes, I believe that DRL's global internet freedom programs are effective in providing training and tools to civil society. My understanding is that since 2008, the State Department has invested over $320 million in global internet freedom programs, which support digital safety, policy advocacy, technology, and research to help global internet users overcome barriers to accessing the open internet. These programs support leading anti-censorship tools that allow millions of internet users worldwide to safely connect to the uncensored internet, which helps to advance U.S. business opportunities abroad, foster the free sharing of information across borders, and counter political repression around the world. They also help to protect journalists and activists operating in repressive environments from online censorship and cyber-attacks. I believe these efforts ensure that users have access to diverse information and perspectives, which play a critical role in combatting corruption, countering disinformation, undermining extremist narratives, strengthening democratic norms, and promoting accountability for violations of human rights.

Question. If confirmed, how would you expand internet freedom programming to additional countries with shrinking civil societies and/or space for free online expression?

Question. If confirmed, I will prioritize this critical programming and apply DRL's deep expertise on regional and country-level threats to human rights online to direct resources to where they are most needed. I believe that the Department should apply available resources to innovative technical programs, including surging and sustaining support for critical anti-censorship platforms, in order to counter technical developments in censorship and surveillance by repressive governments, and further develop programs to provide protection against accelerating cyber threats to civil society and independent media. If confirmed, I look forward to working with my colleagues—and Congress—to expand these vital programmatic efforts.

Question. If confirmed, what steps will you take to ensure that information collected by the bureau of Conflict Stabilization Operations (CSO) and then used by the bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor are harmonized and used for the improvement of programmatic efforts?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will continue to foster what I understand is a productive relationship between DRL and CSO. DRL will utilize all data sources available to maximize the efficiency and effectiveness of its programs.

Question. The White House-led Atrocity Early Warning Task Force (the Task Force) was designed to serve as a focal point for the relevant Federal departments and agencies, policy makers, and civil society working to identify and address the early warning signs of atrocities. How does the task force define success?

Answer. I will work with the various interagency players in the task force, if confirmed, to refine and clearly articulate our successes, but ultimately the goal is to identify the various risk factors for atrocities and then address, mitigate, and ameliorate them, thereby reducing the likelihood of an atrocity occurring. This measurable reduction in risk is success.

Question. How would you, if confirmed, use this data as the Assistant Secretary of DRL?

Answer. If confirmed, I will use all available sources of data and information to make the soundest and most effective decisions possible including where to focus diplomatic efforts, programmatic efforts, allocation of resources, and where and when to partner with likeminded colleagues.

Question. What efforts can the task force undertake to amplify public messaging on signs of atrocities and/or other conflict indicators?

Answer. If confirmed, I will seek out opportunities to encourage the Task Force to present atrocity prevention messaging in whatever fora are available, including multilateral and within the civil society and non-governmental space. If confirmed, I will also consult with interested Members of Congress.

Question. What efforts can DRL undertake to amplify public messaging on signs of atrocities and/or other conflict indicators?

Answer. If confirmed, I will seek out opportunities to amplify atrocity prevention messaging in whatever fora are available: multilateral, with DRL's extensive networks in the civil society and non-governmental space, and with partners across the interagency. I also believe in some cases calling out human rights abuses and looking for ways to course correct and address impunity can be an important way to respond to signs of atrocities before they worsen. If confirmed, I will also consult with interested Members of Congress. I understand the Secretary participated in the rollout of this year's Elie Wiesel annual report and I will further expand this high-level involvement and attention.

Question. How would you use the tools available within the task force and within the department to provide assistance to Afghanistan?

Answer. If confirmed, I will collaborate with the State Department and interagency to use all available sources of data and information to make the soundest decisions possible in what tools to utilize in the case of Afghanistan to support our goal goals and objectives. These tools include but are not limited to diplomatic efforts, sanctions regimes, support for civil society, messaging, accountability and justice efforts, and potential to partnerships with likeminded colleagues, depending on the policy goals under consideration. I will also regularly engage civil society members that fled Afghanistan to better understand the situation on the ground and what the most viable pathways are to offer support in a way that does not create additional security risks.

Question. The White House-led Atrocity Early Warning Task Force (the Task Force) was designed to serve as a focal point for the relevant Federal departments and agencies, policy makers, and civil society working to identify and address the early warning signs of atrocities. How would you use the tools available within the task force and within the department to provide assistance to Tigray?

Answer. I am deeply concerned by the atrocities underway in Tigray, the dehumanizing rhetoric, clear indications from the U.N. that the region is "sliding into famine," and the government's recent decision to eject U.N. humanitarian officials from the country. I am grateful for this committee's activity on Ethiopia and its repeated efforts to draw attention to the Tigray crisis and Ethiopia's growing instability. If confirmed, addressing the crisis in northern Ethiopia would be one of my top priorities. I would use all appropriate tools available within the Task Force to ensure the USG's response to ongoing atrocities in northern Ethiopia continued to involve a whole-of-government, coordinated response. And I would work through the Task Force to ensure that the United States continues to use every available tool to urge all parties to end the conflict in northern Ethiopia, cease all gross violations of human rights, hold those perpetrators accountable, and allow full and unhindered humanitarian access so that those in need receive urgently needed assistance.

Question. How would you use the tools available within the task force and within the department to provide assistance to Burma?

Answer. If confirmed, I will use all available sources of data and information to make the most informed decisions possible on what tools to utilize in Burma. These tools include but are not limited to diplomatic efforts, programmatic assistance, sanctions regimes, other forms of support for civil society, public messaging, accountability and justice efforts, and where and when to partner with likeminded colleagues. I will also regularly engage civil society members that fled Burma to better understand the situation on the ground and what the most viable pathways are to offer support in a way that doesn't create additional security risks.

Question. How would you use the tools available within the task force and within the department to provide assistance to Venezuela?

Answer. If confirmed, I will use all available sources of data and information to make the most sound decisions possible in what tools to utilize in the case of Venezuela. These tools include but are not limited to diplomatic efforts, programmatic efforts, assistance, sanctions regimes, support for civil society, messaging, accountability and justice efforts, and where and when to partner with likeminded colleagues. I will also regularly engage civil society members that fled Venezuela to better understand the situation on the ground and what the most viable pathways are to offer support in a way that doesn't create additional security risks.

Question. How would you use the tools available within the task force and within the department to provide assistance to Yemen?

Answer. If confirmed, I will use all available sources of data and information to make the soundest decisions possible in what tools to utilize in the case of Yemen. These tools include but are not limited to diplomatic efforts, programmatic efforts, assistance, sanctions regimes, support for civil society, messaging, accountability and justice efforts, and where and when to partner with likeminded colleagues. I will also regularly engage Yemeni civil society members, including individuals who have fled Yemen, to better understand the situation on the ground and what the most viable pathways are to offer support in a way that doesn't create additional security risks.

Question. How would you use the tools available within the task force and within the department to provide assistance to Syria?

Answer. If confirmed, I will use all available sources of data and information to make the soundest decisions possible in what tools to utilize in the case of Syria. These tools include but are not limited to diplomatic efforts, programmatic efforts, assistance, sanctions regimes, support for civil society, messaging, accountability and justice efforts, and where and when to partner with likeminded colleagues. I will also regularly engage Syrian civil society members, including individuals who have fled Syria, to better understand the situation on the ground and what the most viable pathways are to offer support in a way that doesn't create additional security risks. I will also assess what is already funded by DRL and what additional support would be useful.

Question. Do you commit to regular, quarterly briefings to Congress on the efforts of the Task Force as well as those within the Department?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to continuing what I understand is a productive, ongoing, regular conversation between the Department and interested congressional members and committees about atrocity prevention efforts.

Question. State Department employees have been under enormous stress over the last few years, in large part due to COVID-19 working from home, and Department management issues. What is your understanding of morale throughout the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor (DRL)?

Answer. As a nominee I have not discussed morale issues with anyone at DRL, but I understand that the bureau is full of passionate and experienced civil service and foreign service officers committed to advancing human rights and democracy around the world and pushing back against authoritarianism and democratic backsliding. The Biden administration's public commitment to putting human rights at the center of U.S. foreign policy, and its demonstrated pledge to advancing the human rights of all persons, are important validations of DRL's centrality to the mission of the State Department.

Question. How do you intend to improve morale across DRL?

Answer. If confirmed I would seek to hold regular meetings with each office within DRL to really get to know the bureau, the work, and the teams. I also would conduct "deep dive" reviews to understand each team's long-term vision, current priorities, and the challenges they face. If confirmed, I would be as accessible as possible to the entire bureau, keeping an "open door" policy and blocking off regular times on the schedule to meet with any DRL staff. If confirmed, I won't only be there to lead the bureau, but also to support the team, amplify and advance shared priorities, and reward hard work. Morale is in part about leadership, team strengthening, and seeing "wins" on the board, but it is also dependent on proactive recruitment and retention policies. To that end, if confirmed I would strive to continue to strengthen the bureau's reputation as one of career-enhancement and excellence. I would also support DRL staff's career development within the wider State and foreign affairs community. I would seek to rely on the expertise that already exists in the bureau to ensure staff feel empowered, are heard, and know that they are having impact. Responsibility and accountability for the A/S are essential, but I would be equally focused on encouraging problem-solving by staff while making sure they know I'm in their corner and ready to contribute as needed so that together we can tackle the challenges that come our way. That's what I've always done and it's what I'll do at DRL if confirmed.

Question. How do you intend to create a unified mission and vision across DRL?

Answer. I am excited by the potential, if I am confirmed, to help guide DRL into a team that is even better unified to promote and support human rights and democracy around the globe in a genuine and principled manner. Foremost, I would seek to create opportunities for DRL's offices to collaborate more closely on functional issues like counter-authoritarianism, technology and human rights, and arms sales/security assistance. Part of creating that unified mission and vision will mean defining goals with the staff, within the framework the President and the Secretary have set, and then empowering the experts to implement them with encouragement and top cover. Once our goals are set, if confirmed, I will encourage DRL colleagues to reinforce relationships with allies in and out of the building—including in Congress. Finally, I would want to make sure we're learning lessons whenever possible and course-correcting whenever necessary. Programs and policies need to be closely integrated and matched with the current moment, which means being flexible and open to changing direction as needed.

Question. Management is a key responsibility for Assistant Secretaries of State. How would you describe your management style?

Answer. I believe effective leaders need to surround themselves with an empowered team. My support of my team means they will support me; we all bring complementary skills to the table. At DRL, if confirmed, I would seek to encourage staff to think boldly and take risks to advance our shared goals, knowing that I will have their back. I want to empower problem-solving before elevating. I want to build trust through our mutual belief in the power of the United States to do good in the world, and through our shared work to overcome the challenges in seeing that belief fully realized. Good management also sometimes requires engaging more senior principals and responding to their needs while simultaneously providing direction to staff. If confirmed I will seek to balance both while helping staff value how their work fits into a larger picture. Humility and humor are key to me, balanced with clarity of purpose and a calm, steady approach.

Question. How do you believe your management style will translate to a Department setting, where resources may not be readily available and your workforce are career employees?

Answer. My hope is that my style may be refreshing and invigorating for career employees, for whom I have great respect and admiration. They deserve someone who believes in them. I believe strongly in the talent and expertise of the bureau, so I want to elevate and support them in areas where I am able, even if resources are not readily available. Sometimes support is less about more money and bigger offices, and more about a leader who will listen and take action. I've spoken to a number of former DRL Assistant Secretaries who served in administrations of both parties, to hear their guidance on policy, vision, and management strategies. I believe there is a lot to learn from their experiences.

Question. As a political appointee rather than career diplomat, do you believe it is incumbent on the Department leaders to integrate themselves into Bureau operations and culture? If yes, how do you intend to do so?

Answer. No matter one's appointment authority, I think any Assistant Secretary's goal is to maximize the contributions that every member of the team can make and understanding how the bureau operates is essential to good management and good policy making. If confirmed, I intend to take the time to understand how DRL has operated, what the culture has been, and what's worked, what needs to be fixed, and what disagreements, if any, need to be resolved so we can function as a united team. I am not afraid to make tough decisions if there's a need but will want to do so after a full review and adequate consultation.

Question. Do you believe it is ever acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either in public or private?

Answer. No, it is never appropriate or constructive, and as a leader I have never and will never tolerate such behavior.

Question. In order to create and continue employee excellence at the Department, accurate performance reviews for both Foreign and Civil Service Officers are imperative, though often lacking. Do you believe that it is important to provide employees with accurate, constructive feedback on their performance in order to encourage improvement and reward those who most succeeded in their roles?

Answer. Yes. Constructive feedback is an important part of holding staff accountable for their work, holding supervisors accountable for their management, and ensuring strong work products. If confirmed, I will make sure all formal evaluations are completed on time and with a high degree of specificity. For those whom I may not directly oversee, I will put time on my calendar to ensure we are discussing their goals, concerns, and accomplishments.

Question. If confirmed, would you support and encourage the managers in your bureau to provide clear, accurate, and direct feedback to employees in order to improve performance and reward high achievers?

Answer. Yes, I would, because such feedback is essential to helping high achievers continue to excel, helping other employees become high achievers, and retaining talent in a competitive environment.

Question. If confirmed, how will you organize and mobilize the resources of the DRL Bureau to counter malign Russian Government behavior and influence in the Western Hemisphere?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration is committed to countering malign Russian Government influence around the world, including in the Western Hemisphere. If confirmed, I will take a comprehensive view of this complex problem and its effects on democracy and human rights in the Western Hemisphere. If confirmed, I will advocate for the use of all of our tools to counter Russian malign influence in the hemisphere, including diplomatic engagement, technical exchanges, foreign assistance, and public diplomacy. DRL's existing policy and programmatic lines of effort focused on anti-corruption, civil society, and strengthening rule of law should continue, and undercut Russian malign influence and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms in the region.

Question. If confirmed, how will you organize and mobilize the resources of the DRL Bureau to counter malign Chinese Government behavior and influence in the Western Hemisphere?

Answer. The People's Republic of China (PRC) represents a serious challenge to U.S. interests and values in the region, with its growing security ties and infrastructure investments. If confirmed, I will lead our team to meet this challenge by advancing our positive agenda for the hemisphere and working with likeminded partners—whether aligned governments or regional organizations. We will build on our shared values of democracy, human rights, and the rule of law. We will welcome our allies and partners' expertise and resources to support the region's COVID-19 response, entrepreneurship, and sustainable infrastructure. We will support high-standard investment in infrastructure and transparent economic development that creates jobs essential for regional pandemic recovery.

Question. Are China's growing commercial ties and investments in Latin America a threat to human rights in the hemisphere? Please explain.

Answer. The People's Republic of China's (PRC) aggressive efforts to expand market share for state-affiliated firms, carrying out of infrastructure projects, implementation of disinformation campaigns, and export of surveillance and censorship tools play a direct and indirect role in human rights violations and abuses in Latin America. The lack of transparency in the PRC's transactions and its increase of the region's dependence on debt financing enables corruption. The PRC's infrastructure projects often ignore both labor and environmental laws, undermining individual workers' rights and labor standards more generally. The PRC's manipulation of media outlets silences investigative journalists who hold human rights abusers publicly accountable while suppressing negative stories of the PRC's activities in the region. The proliferation of untrusted vendors' surveillance and control equipment in the region also increases the risk to human rights defenders and those willing to expose human rights violators. The PRC's activities take place throughout the region and result in countries adopting policies inconsistent with democratic values.

Question. Are Russia's activities in Latin America a threat to human rights in the region? Please explain.

Answer. Russia's engagement in the region is marked by disinformation, military and equipment sales, and energy deals, all with implications for human rights in the region. The Biden administration is committed to countering disinformation and imposing costs on Russia for its aggression and malign activities across the globe. If confirmed, I will continue to monitor closely Russia's activities in the region, including its relationships with Cuba, the illegitimate Maduro regime in Venezuela, and the Ortega-Murillo Government in Nicaragua. I will work with colleagues and the interagency to promote and protect human rights, combat disinformation, and combat corruption and reduce impunity in Latin America.

Question. According to the 2019 National Drug Threat Assessment, fentanyl and other highly potent synthetic opioids continue to be the most lethal category of illicit substances in the U.S. The 2020 DEA report on fentanyl flows to the United States indicates that Mexican transnational criminal organizations are producing increased quantities of fentanyl and cartels such as the Sinaloa and the New Generation Jalisco cartel are the primary trafficking groups responsible for smuggling fentanyl into the U.S. from Mexico.

- Please explain how illicit drug trade impacts human rights in Mexico.

Answer. Transnational criminal organizations (TCOs) in Mexico are a threat to public health, safety, and human rights. Crime and violence are at record-high levels in Mexico, with as many of three-fourths of all homicides tied to organized crime. Mexico reported 34,515 homicides in 2020 and 34,648 in 2019, a rate of around 29 per 100,000 inhabitants.

As to other human rights abuses, for example, indigenous persons in isolated regions reported incidents of forced labor, in which cartel members forced them to perform illicit activities or face death. Minors were recruited or forced by cartels to traffic persons, drugs, or other goods across the border. Migrants were also recruited by criminal organizations to conduct illicit activities. To enable their criminal activities, TCOs corrupt democratic institutions and put the safety and livelihoods of ordinary citizens at risk. If confirmed, I will continue the State Department's work with government partners in Mexico to build institutional capacity to dismantle TCOs and hold them accountable for their behavior.

Question. The Ortega regime in Nicaragua has repeatedly failed to take action to pass meaningful electoral reforms—which the U.S., OAS, EU and U.N. have called for. The U.S. has leveraged sanctions and diplomatic tools, but what other options are on the table?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support the United States' ongoing efforts to rally international pressure on the Ortega-Murillo Government, through public statements by Secretary Blinken, regular media engagements by Department leadership, and bilateral and multilateral diplomacy with our partners, such as joint public condemnations that call out the Ortega-Murillo Government's attacks on democracy. If confirmed, I will support continued use of the diplomatic and economic tools available to the Department, such as sanctions and visa restrictions.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to prioritizing and maintaining policies and programs to create acceptable conditions for free and fair elections in Nicaragua?

Answer. Yes. As Secretary Blinken stated on August 7, the Nicaraguan electoral process, including its eventual results, has lost all credibility. The Ortega-Murillo Government has made no effort to honor its agreement with the opposition to begin electoral reforms ahead of the November election. To the contrary, it has changed the legal code and implemented new, vague laws based on Russian legislation that restrict human rights and fundamental freedoms. If confirmed, I will support continuing U.S. policies and programs in support of the Nicaraguan people's desire for a return to democracy.

Question. What strategies would you employ to improve the capacity of the democratic opposition to coalesce and become a credible challenge to Ortega?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support the Department's efforts to build the capacity of and strengthen civil society organizations that work to promote human rights protections, democratic governance, and transparency.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. What strategies would you employ to improve the capacity of the democratic opposition to coalesce and become a credible challenge to Ortega?

Answer. President Ortega has ensured the rigged elections on November 7 will proclaim him victorious. If confirmed, I will support the Department's efforts to hold the Ortega-Murillo Government accountable. Through USAID and the Department of State, we will continue to support Nicaraguan civil society organizations, independent media, and human rights defenders as they fight to restore democracy, rule of law, and respect for human rights. We will continue to work with democratic actors, inside and outside of Nicaragua, to promote consensus-building and unification around their efforts to challenge President Ortega and Vice President Murillo's authoritarian government. Our continued support will help to demonstrate to the Nicaraguan people that the international community has not forgotten them.

Question. Please describe the long-term implications for Nicaragua and the region if Ortega fraudulently extends his time in office.

Answer. The Ortega-Murillo Government will not have a democratic mandate following fraudulent elections in November. The June resolution of the Permanent Council of the OAS stated just this—that the measures adopted by the Government of Nicaragua do not meet the conditions for transparent, free and fair elections to which all member states have committed under the Inter-American Democratic Charter. Thus, it is foreseeable that a fraught election could further isolate the government internationally and rekindle domestic unrest. At the same time, a fraudulent election in Nicaragua could embolden other autocratic governments in the region. The consolidation of power under Ortega and Murillo will also have migration implications for the region, as an increasing number of Nicaraguans decide to leave their country due to continued repression. If confirmed, I will support consideration of all diplomatic tools to address the fraudulent elections in Nicaragua.

Question. Should the U.S. support an internationally-accompanied negotiation between the Ortega regime and the Nicaraguan democratic forces, as the Biden administration is supporting in Venezuela? Please explain.

Answer. If confirmed, I will support the Nicaraguan people's expressed desire for democracy. I will collaborate with the embassy in Managua and Department staff in Washington to continue to work with civil society and the international community to support opposition voices in Nicaragua and within the Nicaraguan diaspora. It is past time for free and fair elections so the people of Nicaragua can turn the page on the corrupt and repressive Ortega-Murillo Government.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. Should the U.S. support an internationally-accompanied negotiation between the Ortega regime and the Nicaraguan democratic forces, as the Biden administration is supporting in Venezuela? Please explain.

Answer. The United States continues to seek to increase bilateral and multilateral pressure on the Ortega-Murillo Government. With President Ortega and Vice President Murillo throwing the leading opposition figures in jail and crushing all political dissent, the repressive conditions in Nicaragua do not support the prospect of negotiations. If confirmed, I will continue to support the unilateral and multilateral efforts to hold the Ortega-Murillo Government accountable and explore with allies a coordinated path forward to address the electoral sham scheduled for November 7.

Question. Should Cuba be removed from the list of state sponsors of terrorism (SST) while they continue to harbor U.S. fugitives?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support the administration's goals toward Cuba, and I look forward to consulting with Congress on this issue.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. Should Cuba be removed from the list of state sponsors of terrorism (SST) while they continue to harbor U.S. fugitives?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support the administration's goals toward Cuba. In May, the administration certified Cuba as a Not Fully Cooperating Country with U.S. counter-terrorism efforts, which I fully support. If confirmed, I will consult closely with my counter-terrorism and other colleagues in reviewing the facts and legal standards in determining my position on whether Cuba should be removed from the list of state sponsors of terrorism (SST).

Question. Would you advise establishing diplomatic relations with Cuba while it continues to provide safe harbor to fugitives from the U.S. justice system?

Answer. I am aware that Cuba harbors several U.S. fugitives from justice wanted on or convicted of charges of political violence, many of whom have resided in Cuba for decades. If confirmed, I will support the regular U.S. calls on Cuba to return fugitives from justice and would look forward to supporting the administration's review of Cuba policy.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. Would you advise establishing diplomatic relations with Cuba while it continues to provide safe harbor to fugitives from the U.S. justice system?

Answer. I am aware that Cuba harbors several U.S. fugitives from justice wanted on or convicted of charges of political violence, many of whom have resided in Cuba for decades. If confirmed, I will strongly support the regular U.S. calls on Cuba to return fugitives from justice and would not advocate for increased diplomatic engagement unless it would enhance respect for human rights and democracy in Cuba.

Question. If confirmed, would you support Cuba's removal from the SST list without verifiable assurances that it would cease to foster a permissive environment for international terrorists in Venezuela?

Answer. I have long believed that state sponsor of terrorism designations should be used for states that are terrorists, based on fact, analysis, and intelligence. Similarly, I believe a designation should not be lifted until there's full clarity that the government in question has taken all steps necessary to relieve themselves of the criteria needed for such a designation. Regardless of the state sponsor of terrorism designation, I do believe other corresponding punitive measures are an important tool to be used on repressive governments and/or officials. I will consult closely with the intelligence community and Congress on the way forward, including on the decision to designate Cuba as a State Sponsor of Terrorism.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. If confirmed, would you support Cuba's removal from the SST list without verifiable assurances that it would cease to foster a permissive environment for international terrorists in Venezuela?

Answer. I am very concerned about the support Cuba has provided to the Maduro regime to engage in human rights abuses against the Venezuelan people. I have long believed that state sponsor of terrorism (SST) designations should be based on fact, law, and analysis. I believe an SST designation should not be lifted until the government in question has taken all steps necessary to meet the criteria needed for rescission. The administration has committed to carefully reviewing decisions made in the prior administration, including the decision to designate Cuba as a State Sponsor of Terrorism. If confirmed, I am committed to carefully reviewing the facts and the law in determining my views on whether Cuba should continue to be designated as a State Sponsor of Terrorism and to consulting closely with Congress on the issue.

Question. Please describe the trajectory of Cuban involvement in Venezuela.

Answer. Cuba has long had deep engagement in Venezuela's military and intelligence services. Fidel Castro was a close confidant and advisor to Hugo Chavez. With Cuba's support, the Maduro regime, which the United States does not recognize as the Government of Venezuela, has ignored the Venezuelan people's calls for change and a return to democracy, and learned from Cuban advisors how to spy on its own citizens and suppress dissent. Venezuelan secret police have perfected the torture tactics, systems of social control, and mechanisms of repression that Cuban authorities have used against their own people for decades. If confirmed, I would seek to thwart such abuses.

Question. Do you agree that Cuban military and intelligence support is the linchpin to Maduro's survival in Venezuela?

Answer. Cuba shields the Maduro regime, which the United States does not recognize as the Government of Venezuela, from some of the effects of international economic and diplomatic pressure, while providing the intelligence and muscle that improves Maduro's ability to cling to power. I understand that Cuban military and intelligence advisors actively support Maduro through the provision of security forces, intelligence officers, and by providing direction to Venezuelan authorities. They equip the Maduro regime with the tools he needs to repress any domestic or internal dissent, including in his military. Cuba also provided thousands of medical professionals to Venezuela, before and during the COVID-19 crisis, allowing Maduro to avoid the domestic political consequences of his failed economic and health policies. Allegations of forced labor and using the mission to conduct political interference and intelligence collection on behalf of Maduro are widely reported by former participants. If confirmed, I would seek to stem these practices.

Question. Please describe your views on the most effective approach to persuade the Cuban regime to play a more positive role in Venezuela.

Answer. I understand the United States will continue to coordinate closely with like-minded nations, including within the EU and OAS, to promote a negotiated solution to the crisis in Venezuela. The aim is to counter interference and raise the costs to Cuba for supporting any anti-democratic actions or human rights abuses by the Maduro regime, which the United States does not recognize as the Government of Venezuela. I support this approach.

Question. Please explain your views on how the international community can exert pressure on Cuba for its involvement in Venezuela.

Answer. If confirmed, I will support the United States' efforts to continue to exert pressure on Cuba through Secretary Blinken's public statements, regular media engagements by Department leadership, bilateral diplomacy with other countries in the region, and multilateral diplomacy. I would also continue U.S. efforts to protect and support the human rights of Cubans and to empower them to determine their own future.

Question. Please explain your views on the impact it would have on human rights conditions in Cuba and Venezuela if the United States were to elevate its diplomatic relations with Cuba by nominating and confirming an Ambassador.

Answer. I believe the protests that began on July 11 have demonstrated how important it is for U.S. diplomats to engage directly with the Cuban people. I understand the U.S. diplomatic corps will continue to engage directly with and support civil society, including human rights defenders and political dissidents, as part of an overall effort to empower the Cuban people and their desire for freedom. If confirmed, I would strongly support such continued engagement.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. Please explain your views on the impact it would have on human rights conditions in Cuba and Venezuela if the United States were to elevate its diplomatic relations with Cuba by nominating and confirming an Ambassador.

Answer. Our primary goal in Cuba and Venezuela is to promote democracy and respect for human rights and any potential change in our diplomatic relations must serve to further this goal. The United States must ensure that any changes to our diplomatic engagement do not negatively affect our ability to support the societal demands in Cuba and Venezuela for democratic reforms. If confirmed, I will closely evaluate the impact of potential changes to diplomatic engagement on the administration's ability to promote democracy and human rights.

Question. Please describe your understanding of the role of military-controlled firms in the Cuban economy.

Answer. The Cuban Government exercises significant control over most of Cuba's important economic sectors. For example, the Cuban Government benefits from remittance fees that are handled through its remittance processor, Financiera Cimex S.A. (FINCIMEX), which is a military-controlled entity. State-owned stores as well as the medical missions program are also an economic boon for the Cuban Government, which significantly marks up prices in the stores and keeps a large portion of medical workers' salaries. The Armed Forces Business Enterprise Group (GAESA), which is led by Raul Castro's son-in-law, is involved in all sectors of the economy. The Cuban military controls tourism, including through ownership of Gaviota Hotels.

Question. Please explain your views on the impact it would have on human rights conditions in Cuba if U.S. policy were to facilitate or allow financial transactions that benefit military-controlled firms in Cuba.

Answer. Democracy and human rights are at the core of the administration's efforts toward Cuba. If confirmed, I will support the administration's goals to support the Cuban people and hold the regime accountable for its abuses through efforts that maximize benefits to the Cuban people and minimize or eliminate any benefits to the Cuban Government and its military. I look forward to consulting with Congress on these efforts.

Question. Please explain your views on the impact it would have on human rights conditions in Cuba if U.S. policy were to facilitate or allow financial transactions that benefit military-controlled firms in Cuba.

Answer. I share your concerns about Cuba's military, intelligence, and security services' role in serious human rights abuses against the Cuban people, and I recognize the military's role in the Cuban economy. If confirmed, I will support the administration's goals to support the Cuban people and hold the regime accountable for its abuses, including by minimizing or eliminating any financial benefits to the Cuban Government and its military.

Question. Please explain your views on the impact it would have on human rights conditions in Cuba if U.S. public and private engagement with Cuba were to disproportionately benefit the Cuban military, intelligence, or security services or personnel at the expense of the Cuban people?

If confirmed, I will support the administration's goals to support the Cuban people and hold the regime accountable for its abuses, including efforts that maximize benefits for the Cuban people and minimize or eliminate any benefit to the Cuban Government and its military. Question. Please explain your views on the impact it would have on human rights conditions in Cuba if U.S. public and private engagement with Cuba were to disproportionately benefit the Cuban military, intelligence, or security services or personnel at the expense of the Cuban people?

Answer. I share your concerns about Cuba's military, intelligence, and security services' role in serious human rights abuses against the Cuban people, and I recognize their role in the Cuban economy. I would oppose any move that would disproportionately benefit the Cuban military, intelligence, or security services at the expense of our efforts to lift the Cuban people out of oppression. If confirmed, I will further the administration's goals to support the Cuban people and hold the regime accountable for its abuses, including efforts that maximize benefits for the Cuban people and minimize or eliminate any benefit to the Cuban Government and its military intelligence, or security services.

Question. According to the State Department, in 2019, the Government of Cuba maintained an estimated 50,000 medical personnel in more than 60 countries under conditions that represent forced labor. The U.S., United Nations, independent media outlets and NGOs have documented and called out the Cuban regime's exploitative and coercive practices toward its doctors participating in its overseas medical programs.

Can you describe your understanding of how Cuban doctors are forced into participating the program and sent to a foreign country, as well as the conditions by which they live while in this program?

Answer. I understand that former participants in Cuba's overseas medical programs have stated that the Cuban Government coerced some participants to remain in the program, including by withholding their passports and medical credentials; restricting their movement; using "minders" to conduct surveillance of participants outside of work; threatening to revoke their licenses to practice medicine in Cuba; retaliating against their family members in Cuba if participants left the program; or imposing criminal penalties, forced exile, and family separation if participants did not return to Cuba as directed by government supervisors.

Question. Can you describe how these programs only go to serve the Cuban Government at the expense of the Cuban people?

Answer. The export of professional services, including medical missions, remains Cuba's largest source of foreign exchange earnings. I understand that it is difficult to ascertain the exact amount of proceeds due to a lack of transparency in bilateral agreements with host countries. Contracts often involve direct payments to the Cuban Government with former participants reporting receiving roughly 10 to 25 percent of the amount paid by the host governments to the Cuban Government for their services. In addition, there are reports of in-kind transfers of medical equipment for medical professionals in South Africa and of oil for doctors in Venezuela and Algeria.

Question. Do you consider the Cuban regime's overseas medical missions to be exploitative human trafficking efforts?

Answer. I understand there are documented reports of widespread abuse and exploitation of medical professionals within the medical program, including allegations that the Cuban regime coerced some participants to remain in the program, including by withholding a large portion of their salaries; restricting their movements; using "minders" to conduct surveillance of participants outside of work; threatening to revoke their medical licenses; retaliating against their families in Cuba if participants leave the program; or imposing criminal penalties, exile, and family separation if participants do not return to Cuba as directed by government supervisors. I agree with the Department of State's conclusion that these practices are "clear indicators of human trafficking." If confirmed, I will urge countries to take the necessary measures to protect Cuban medical workers and to seek transparency on contractual agreements between the Cuban Government and the medical professionals.

Question. Do you commit to instructing our Embassies in countries that accept Cuban medical missions to communicate to host governments to inform them of the Cuban regime's forced labor practices?

Answer. I am very concerned about the human and labor rights abuses within the Cuban medical missions program. If confirmed, I will highlight these issues with host governments and work with our officers in the field and foreign government officials, at the highest appropriate level, to urge them to take necessary measures to protect Cuban medical workers and to seek transparency on contractual agreements between the Cuban Government and medical professionals. I will encourage countries to put steps in place to prevent exploitation and forced labor, and to proactively monitor these programs, given persistent allegations that the Cuban Government are compelling medical professionals to work.

Question. Please describe your understanding of the relationship between the Government of Cuba, the U.S.-designated Foreign Terrorist Organization Ejercito de Liberacion Nacional (ELN), and the Maduro regime in Venezuela.

Answer. I understand members of the Colombian-origin National Liberation Army (ELN), including senior leadership, traveled to Cuba in 2018 for now-defunct peace negotiations with the Government of Colombia. When negotiations failed, Cuba continued to provide safe haven to ELN leadership. In January 2019, ELN claimed responsibility for a deadly bombing in Colombia. Citing peace protocols signed before the ELN negotiators traveled to Cuba, Cuba has refused to extradite ELN leaders to Colombia. With respect to Venezuela, Maduro and his associates use criminal activities to help maintain their hold on power, fostering a permissive environment for known terrorist groups, including the ELN and its sympathizers. The Cuban intelligence and security apparatus has infiltrated Venezuela's security and military forces, helping Nicholas Maduro to maintain his stranglehold over his people while allowing terrorist organizations to operate.

If confirmed, I will commit to closely reviewing the status of ELN leadership in Cuba and consulting with Congress as the Biden-Harris administration reviews U.S. policy toward Cuba.

Question. Considering the well-documented ties between the Maduro regime and the ELN, and Cuba's harboring of ELN terrorists, why should the Cuban regime not be included in the list of States Sponsors of Terrorism?

Answer. I have long believed that state sponsor of terrorism designations should be used for states that are terrorists, based on fact, analysis, and intelligence. Similarly, I believe a designation should not be lifted until there's full clarity that the government in question has taken all steps necessary to relieve themselves of the criteria needed for such a designation. If confirmed, I will consult closely with the intelligence community and Congress on the way forward, including on the previous administration's decision to designate Cuba as a State Sponsor of Terrorism.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

Question. Considering the well-documented ties between the Maduro regime and the ELN, and Cuba's harboring of ELN terrorists, why should the Cuban regime not be included in the list of States Sponsors of Terrorism?

Answer. I am very concerned about Cuba's harboring of members of the ELN. I have long believed that state sponsor of terrorism designations should be based on fact, law, and analysis. Similarly, I believe a designation should not be lifted until the government in question has taken all steps necessary to meet the criteria needed for rescission. If confirmed, I am committed to carefully reviewing the facts and the law in determining my views on whether Cuba should continue to be designated as a State Sponsor of Terrorism and to consulting closely with Congress on the issue.

Question. Over the last three decades, Colombia has emerged as source of economic and stability in the region, in great part due to the success of the U.S.-Colombia Free Trade Agreement and Plan Colombia. Yet, policy decisions made during the negotiations of the 2016 deal with the FARC created new challenges for Colombia and our relations. Coca production in Colombia steadily increased since 2013, reaching 212,000 hectares in 2019. In March 2020, the United States and Colombia announced a joint action plan to reduce coca cultivation and cocaine production by 50 percent by the end of 2023. The plan would make full use of all available tools, including rural development, interdiction, as well as manual and aerial eradication.

- Would you agree that achieving this goal by 2023 would deliver significant health and security benefits for Americans here at home?

Answer. Yes. Significant and sustainable reductions in coca cultivation and cocaine production will deliver significant health and security benefits for Americans by reducing the amount of cocaine flowing to the United States. The U.S. Government's new counternarcotics strategy for Colombia pursues sustainability through an integrated, bilateral focus on integrated supply reduction, rural security and development, and environmental protection. Integrated implementation of these pillars will reduce cocaine-related overdoses and violence in the United States, and slow migration caused by narcotrafficking-related violence in drug-transit countries. If confirmed, I would support this approach.

Question. Please explain your understanding of the nexus between growing coca cultivation and violence against human rights defenders in Colombia.

Answer. The enormous profit margins associated with the cocaine trade mean that narcotrafficking organizations will violently oppose any interference in their money-making activities, whether it be from the Colombian Government for prosecuting offenders; human rights defenders and social leaders for their efforts to support crop substitution and public advocacy on behalf of rural communities; or competition from rival criminal organizations. Narcotrafficking organizations will target anyone who interferes in their illicit business model.

In areas with significant narcotics trafficking, coca cultivation, and where organized criminal groups exercise significant control, human rights challenges abound, including killings of social leaders, including human rights defenders. I understand that a review by the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement (INL) of social leader murders in 2020 found that 93 percent occurred in areas the Colombian National Police identify as being under the control of criminal organizations. The UNODC has found that in Cauca, the department with the highest level of social leader killings, the probability of a social leader being killed is 4.3 times higher in areas where coca is grown. I understand that Embassy Bogotá's integrated counternarcotics and rural security strategy aims to reduce coca cultivation while also expanding state and CNP presence to rural areas to reduce the influence of armed groups and curtail the violence they perpetrate against social leaders and the general public. If confirmed, I would support these efforts.

Question. Please explain your understanding of the nexus between community participation in Colombia's National Program for Integral Substitution and the rate of social leaders' killings.

Answer. Narcotrafficking organizations' profits depend upon having farmers who either work directly for them or from whom they buy coca. The National Program for Integral Substitution (Programa Nacional Integral de Sustitución de Cultivos Ilícitos—PNIS) seeks to convince farmers to switch to the cultivation of legal commodities. As the Government's authority is weaker in rural areas, the farmers are vulnerable to threats from the narcotrafficking organizations.

I understand that INL invests an average $10 million annually to implement human rights programming that seeks to improve protections of human rights defenders (HRDs) and help Colombian authorities pursue accountability for crimes against HRDs. Since its creation, INL has assisted the unit of specialized human rights prosecutors in the Attorney General's Office with training, mentoring, and equipment and is now working with specialized human rights judges to provide similar assistance. If confirmed, I would support these efforts and look for ways to build on them.

Question. Do you agree that the humanitarian crisis in Venezuela is the direct result of the political and security conditions imposed by the Maduro regime in that country?

Answer. Yes. Since 2015, nearly 5.7 million Venezuelans have been forced to flee the economic, political, and humanitarian crisis caused by the Maduro regime's abuses, corruption, and mismanagement, making it the largest external displacement of persons in the Hemisphere's history. I understand the United States supports a wide range of life-saving humanitarian programs for Venezuelans, such as food assistance; emergency shelter; access to health care, water, sanitation, and hygiene supplies; support for livelihoods; and protection for vulnerable groups including women, youth, LGBTQI+, and indigenous people. If confirmed, I would support the continuation of that assistance.

Question. Can the humanitarian crisis be resolved on Maduro's watch?

Answer. Maduro could resolve the underlying causes of the humanitarian crisis by restoring democracy and respect for human rights, as well as taking the necessary steps to rebuild the Venezuelan economy. Venezuelans are suffering from one of the worst economic and humanitarian crises outside of a war in modern history. Since 2017, more than 5.6 million Venezuelans have been forced to flee their country.

The Maduro regime mismanages the economy, plunders public coffers, and impedes access to critical humanitarian assistance, including lifesaving food and nutrition aid. If confirmed, I will work to open more possibilities for humanitarian workers, organizations, and assistance to reach the Venezuelan people in Venezuela and beyond, to meet their most urgent needs. I am deeply committed to the Venezuelan people and strongly support their desire for free and fair presidential and parliamentary elections and the return to the rule of law and democracy, which can only have a positive impact the humanitarian crisis.

Since 2017, the United States has provided more than $1.2 billion in humanitarian, economic, development, and health assistance to help Venezuelans, including more than $1 billion in humanitarian assistance, both inside Venezuela and throughout the region. On September 22, the United States announced more than $336 million in additional humanitarian, economic, development, and health assistance at the 76th Session of the United Nations General Assembly. Of this total, nearly $247 million is for humanitarian assistance and more than $89 million is for economic, development, and health assistance. The United States is the largest donor of foreign assistance for the Venezuela regional crisis, having provided over $1.9 billion in funding since Fiscal Year 2017. If confirmed, I would support these efforts.

Question. There has been more than a dozen failed attempts at negotiating with Maduro. They have occurred in an environment of engagement during the Obama administration, and under the pressure of punitive measures implemented by the Trump administration.

- Is the United States using all available tools to create the appropriate conditions for a successful negotiation with the Maduro regime to transition to democratic rule in Venezuela?

Answer. I understand the United States continues to support a negotiated, Venezuelan-led solution to the Venezuelan crisis that leads to free and fair presidential and parliamentary elections and a return of the rule of law and democracy in Venezuela.

I also understand the State Department continues to prioritize coordination with its closest regional partners, as well as its European partners, to improve the effectiveness of our sanctions, address growing humanitarian needs, and support a negotiated, political solution. I understand the United States remains steadfast in our support to the Venezuelan people in their struggle for the restoration of democracy and rule of law. If confirmed, I would support these efforts.

Question. There has been more than a dozen failed attempts at negotiating with Maduro. They have occurred in an environment of engagement during the Obama administration, and under the pressure of punitive measures implemented by the Trump administration. Is the United States using all available tools to create the appropriate conditions for a successful negotiation with the Maduro regime to transition to democratic rule in Venezuela?

Answer. The United States supports a Venezuelan-led solution to the crisis, which the Venezuelans have decided must be a negotiated solution that leads to free and fair presidential and parliamentary elections and a return to rule of law and democracy in Venezuela. The United States will continue to advocate for pressure from regional and European partners to pursue this end. If confirmed, I would support these efforts.

Question. Please explain how the United States could work with the European Union—and specifically Spain—to create the right conditions for a credible transition to democratic rule in Venezuela.

Answer. I understand the Department regularly engages with the international community bilaterally and in multilateral fora to raise awareness of human rights violations and abuses in Venezuela and to get other countries and international bodies to join us in pressing the Maduro regime to uphold democracy and respect human rights. If confirmed, I would support these efforts and look for creative ways to double down on these efforts, including support for justice and accountability measures, programs that strengthen democratic institutions, transparency, rule of law, inclusion, empowerment, and access to information.

Answer. Will you, if confirmed, advocate for the release of the nine American Citizens currently held on political charges and against their will in Venezuela? How will you work with the regional bureau and Special Presidential Envoy for Hostage Affairs?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will advocate for the release of all American citizens currently held on political charges and against their will in Venezuela. I will consult with all relevant Bureaus and Offices, including the Special Presidential Envoy for Hostage Affairs, to resolve these cases.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. Will you, if confirmed, advocate for the release of the nine American Citizens currently held on political charges and against their will in Venezuela? How will you work with the regional bureau and Special Presidential Envoy for Hostage Affairs?

Answer. The safe return of wrongfully detained U.S. nationals is a top priority for the Biden administration. Using wrongful detention as a bargaining chip represents a threat to the safety of everyone traveling, working, and living abroad. The U.S. opposes this practice everywhere. If confirmed, I will work closely with the Special Presidential Envoy for Hostage Affairs and WHA to identify how DRL can help ensure the safe return of the nine American Citizens currently held on political charges in Venezuela and any other American who is wrongfully detained.

Question. In September 2020, the U.N. Independent International Fact Finding Mission on Venezuela cited evidence of unlawful executions, enforced disappearances, arbitrary detentions and torture in the country since 2014, amounting to crimes against humanity. If confirmed, what tools will you use to ensure every person responsible is punished for their actions and brought to justice?

Answer. I understand the United States will continue to hold the Maduro regime, which the United States does not recognize as the Government of Venezuela, and regime-aligned individuals accountable for their human rights abuses by applying a wide array of diplomatic and economic tools, including employing sanctions and visa restrictions. If confirmed, I would support these efforts.

Question. In December 2020, the General Secretariat of the Organization of American States (OAS) accused the chief prosecutor of the International Criminal Court (ICC) of failing to take swift action after allegations that Venezuelan President Nicolas Maduro's Government committed crimes against humanity. Do you support the ICC opening a formal investigation into these allegations?

Answer. I understand the United States is committed to promoting accountability for human rights violations and abuses in Venezuela, which is a party to the Rome Statute of the ICC. If confirmed, I will promote the importance of accountability for the horrific violations and abuses that continue to be committed in Venezuela. Where domestic systems are unable or unwilling to genuinely pursue the justice that victims deserve and that societies require to sustain peace, international courts such as the ICC can play a meaningful role in advancing accountability. I understand the United States is united with like-minded democracies in denouncing human rights violations and abuses that have occurred in Venezuela and in calling for accountability for the perpetrators and justice for the victims.

I understand the United States is aware of the ICC Prosecutor's ongoing evaluation of whether to open an investigation into the situation in Venezuela.

Question. Please explain your understanding of how the Maduro regime operates as a narco-terrorist regime.

Answer. According to the Department of Justice indictments of Maduro and 14 other regime officials unsealed in March 2020, senior Venezuelan political, intelligence, and military officials have facilitated drug trafficking through the country since at least 1999. Colombian drug-trafficking organizations—including dissident FARC factions and the ELN—exploit the lack of rule of law created by the Maduro regime, which the United States does not recognize as the Government of Venezuela, to traffic narcotics. President Biden has been clear that he believes Maduro is a dictator and that his administration will stand with the Venezuelan people and their call for a restoration of democracy through free and fair elections. I agree with the "VERDAD Act" and the administration that there must be a negotiated solution to the problems in Venezuela.

If confirmed, I will continue to work with allies, such as Colombia, to combat drug trafficking in the Andean region in ways that are both meaningful and economically sustainable. I also will support U.S. Government efforts to increase multilateral pressure on Maduro, call for the release of political prisoners, and implement sanctions against Venezuelan officials credibly accused of corruption and human rights abuses.

Question. Please explain your views on the role of the Venezuelan military in narcotics trafficking.

Answer. According to the Department of Justice indictments of Maduro and 14 other regime officials unsealed in March 2020, senior Venezuelan political, intelligence, and military officials have facilitated drug trafficking through the country since at least 1999. I also will support U.S. Government efforts to increase multilateral pressure on Maduro, call for the release of political prisoners, and implement sanctions against Venezuelan officials credibly accused of corruption and human rights abuses.

Question. Please explain your views on the relationship between the Maduro regime and U.S.-designated foreign terrorist organizations, FARC and ELN

Answer. According to the Department of Justice indictments of Maduro and 14 other regime officials unsealed in March 2020, senior Venezuelan political, intelligence, and military officials have facilitated drug trafficking through the country since at least 1999. Colombian drug-trafficking organizations—including dissident FARC factions and the ELN—exploit the lack of rule of law created by the illegitimate Maduro regime to traffic narcotics.

Question. In Africa, DRL focuses its programs on non-presence countries or where limited democracy, rights and governance (DRG) investments are made by USAID. Do you agree with this approach? Why?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure DRL continues to consider many factors in determining where to support democracy and governance program goals, including those mentioned above. I believe it is important for DRL programming to continue to support U.S. policy objectives on the continent—while also maximizing effectiveness and avoiding duplication—through close coordination with other funders, including USAID. I understand that DRL’s approach to programming, however, is different from other bureaus within the Department and other U.S. agencies due to its close connection with activists and human rights defenders on the ground and programmatic flexibility which allows it to address emerging opportunities and challenges. Recognizing this, I believe DRL should remain invested in certain countries with a USAID presence, such as Sudan and Nigeria, where DRL’s programming can complement and amplify other programs and given long-standing and sensitive human rights concerns that could complicate aspects of the bilateral relations.

Question. In your role as Assistant Secretary for Democracy, Human Rights and Labor, if confirmed, how will you follow through on administration statements that “Africa is a priority for the Biden administration”? How will you demonstrate—through DRL’s work and in your engagements within the Department—that the U.S. respects and values our African partners while being clear about our values and expectations, particularly as it relates to respect for democratic norms, human rights and rule of law?

Answer. Promoting and advancing respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms is a top priority for the United States in Africa. If confirmed, I would seek ways to support democratic advancement on the part of governments and stand with citizens, civil society, and the private sector to hold their governments to be more responsive and accountable. I would also travel regularly to the continent and meet with a range of actors, including opposition leaders and members of the independent media. In diplomatic engagements, I would encourage close attention to free and fair elections and attempts to manipulate term limits, the context in which elections are held, respect for democratic norms, media freedom, and the health of civil society.

Question. Across Africa, the USG has invested in a number of early warning early response (EWER) systems focused for conflict prevention and mitigation. What is your assessment of EWER systems as an effective conflict prevention tool in Africa?

Answer. I understand EWER systems across Africa provide communities at risk for conflict and atrocities practical means to take a lead role in their own protection. I believe by creating low-cost, easy to use means of communicating with security providers and other communities at risk, these USG-supported programs have empowered previously unprotected or ignored communities and have evidently prevented escalations of conflict in the Central African Republic, Democratic Republic of Congo and Nigeria especially at the grassroots, community-level.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. Across Africa, the USG has invested in a number of early warning early response (EWER) systems focused for conflict prevention and mitigation.

What is your assessment of EWER systems as an effective conflict prevention tool in Africa?

Answer. EWER systems across Africa enable vulnerable and remotely located communities at risk for conflict and atrocities practical means to take a lead role in their own protection. I believe that by creating low-cost, easy to use means of communicating with security providers and other communities at risk, these U.S. Government-supported programs have empowered previously unprotected or ignored communities and have evidently prevented escalations of conflict in the Central African Republic, Democratic Republic of Congo and Nigeria. I understand U.S. Government investments also seek to support EWER systems that can be easily adapted and managed by local actors, ensuring sustainability and ownership at both the government and community level.

Question. Do you feel they are a good investment of U.S. resources given limited resources for conflict prevention and resolution in Africa?

Answer. Yes. I understand these early warning systems use radio and SMS to communicate, and that the training required to use them is cost-effective. Trained community members can in turn train others in their operation, and partnerships with telecom and security providers ensure that the communication channels remain available at a very low cost. I believe their sustainability and effectiveness make them a good investment of limited resources in this field.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. Do you feel they are a good investment of U.S. resources given limited resources for conflict prevention and resolution in Africa?

Answer. Yes, especially when paired with training and capacity support for community members to identify violence trends and forecast risks to prevent attacks before they happen. Preventing violence and interrupting cycles of retaliatory intercommunal violence helps save lives and is a more impactful and cost-effective intervention than responding to conflict once it has broken out. Moreover, I understand that these early warning systems use radio and SMS to communicate, and the training required to use them is cost-effective. I understand trained community members can in turn train others in their operation, and partnerships with telecom and security providers ensure that the communication channels remain available at a very low cost. Their sustainability and effectiveness make them a good investment of limited resources in this field. While sophisticated defense systems have their place in protecting vulnerable populations in Africa, EWER systems that utilize technology already in regular use in at-risk locations can be much more effective in alerting populations in real time by being readily accessible, quick to stand up, and easy to use.

Question. Are you supportive of DRL investing in EWER systems in Africa? If yes, in what circumstances are they appropriate?

Answer. Yes. I believe EWER systems can be appropriately deployed in a number of situations where security providers are either slow or reluctant to provide quality protection for communities at risk for conflict due to ethnic, religious, resource, or other reasons. I understand due to the ease of use, DRL-supported EWER access is not limited to only a certain subset of users; indeed, we have seen tangible success when groups often overlooked for leadership roles—youth and women—have been empowered to use these systems. DRL's EWER systems are also appropriate and effective even where the government is the primary perpetrator. I believe in those circumstances, the alerts can be directed to alternative sources for response, such as local civil society or regional or international actors.

Question. Across Sub-Saharan Africa, democratic gains are under threat as long-serving rulers manipulate constitutional and electoral processes to remain in power, while stifling dissent and limiting the activities of opposition parties and candidates. In 2020 alone, we saw ruling parties and incumbent leaders apply authoritarian tactics under the guise of democracy, including in Tanzania, Uganda and Zimbabwe, and in the last year, four coups d'état have occurred in Chad, Guinea and two in Mali:

What is your perspective on balancing the sometimes competing U.S. priorities of security and democracy and human rights in Sub-Saharan Africa, especially when some of our top security partners—including Uganda, Ethiopia, Nigeria, Chad and Mali—periodically or consistently engage in undemocratic practices or experience undemocratic and unconstitutional transitions of power?

Answer. A 2019 Afrobarometer study encompassing survey data from 34 African nations found that 68 percent of Africans believe democracy is the best form of government, while 78 percent reject strong-man rule and 72 percent oppose military rule. While it is in the U.S. interest to support African states facing security crises, we must make clear to African leaders who flout democratic norms that respect for human rights and democratic institutions is in their best interest, as well as that of their people, and their country. Without meaningful democratic governance, African states will not be well-positioned to expand peace and security and foster economic growth.

Question. In your view, which should take priority in Africa?

Answer. I firmly agree with President Biden's stated commitment to place respect for human rights at the center of U.S. foreign policy. I also believe considering the human rights and democracy components of U.S. security engagement is an important element of policy development and can help guide and strengthen how the administration engages in Sub-Saharan Africa, particularly in countries with weak or nascent democracies. If confirmed, I look forward to participating in an interagency policy process as the Biden-Harris administration develops a fresh U.S. approach for Africa that addresses our national interests in Africa including respect for human rights and democratic norms, as well as security.

Question. How can the U.S. better engage the African Union on issues related to democracy, human rights, corruption, and rule of law?

Answer. I understand that democracy and governance is a core pillar of the U.S. High Level Dialogue with the African Union (AU), and one through which the U.S. Government works to advance the shared values of promoting democratic institutions and human rights on the continent throughout the year. If confirmed, I would work with the U.S. Ambassador to the AU as well as the AF bureau to seek policies that continue to counter corruption; promote constitutional reform undertaken in a democratic and transparent manner; mitigate conflict; protect civilians; support transitional justice; protect the independence of accountability mechanisms, such as the African Commission of Human and People's Rights; and promote political space for civil society. I also welcome the strategic use of U.S. foreign assistance resources to advance shared democracy, human rights, and good governance priorities through the AU, such as the ongoing technical assistance in support of the AU Assembly presidency in an effort to advance democracy and human rights, and training for youth experts on the AU's transitional justice policy.

Question. In the last three years, Sudan and Ethiopia embarked on unexpected democratic transitions. While the U.S. was, and continues to be, eager to support these transitions, rapidly mobilizing adequate resources has been a challenge in both cases:

- As Assistant Secretary of State for Democracy, Human Rights and Labor, how will you work inside DRL and with the Africa Bureau to be better prepared to contribute financial and diplomatic resources to support democratic transitions and opportunities that emerge unexpectedly in Africa?

Answer. If confirmed, I would seek to build on democratic openings across the Africa continent and in close coordination with the recently confirmed A/S for Africa to ensure we are coordinating closely and maximizing our resources and aligned in our policy approach. I would work to develop and coordinate strategic U.S. diplomatic engagement and assistance on democracy and human rights for countries in transition, working closely with the Africa Bureau, as well as colleagues from throughout the J Family, USAID and beyond.

Question. What lessons have the challenges to the transitions in Sudan and Ethiopia taught us about how to best support unexpected democratic transitions in the medium and long term?

Answer. The challenges in the transitions in Sudan and Ethiopia have taught us that the democratic transition process is extremely fragile and that success requires sustained medium and long term support but also that civil society—and women in particular—are important partners to understand alternative perspectives in transitioning countries.

If confirmed, I would work to support democratic institutions, so that they're strong, accountable, able to govern capably, and have the capacity to support credible and inclusive elections, enabling a peaceful transition to a democratic state; promote the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms including through legal reforms; and promote comprehensive transitional justice measures and credible, independent justice mechanisms.

Question. Russian malign activity in Africa is of increasing concern, particularly given credible reports of election interference, the engagement of Russian mercenaries, including Wagner Group, in Northern Mozambique, and Russia's security sector support to the Touadera administration (which includes an exemption to the U.N. arms embargo) in the Central African Republic (CAR).

- In your opinion, what should the U.S. be doing in Africa to counter malign Russian interference in elections, other democratic processes, and to reduce its influence over elected leaders?

Answer. I understand that the United States supports efforts by African nations to develop strong peace and security institutions to improve access to justice through capacity building and technical assistance. If confirmed, I will work to strengthen coordination within the Department of State, across the U.S. Government, and with likeminded partners such as the European Union and France to ensure our efforts are aligned and mutually supportive to strengthen African governments' abilities to mitigate conflict, stop human rights abuses and violations, hold those responsible for such actions accountable, and help countries achieve stable democracies that do not require the short-term security assistance of malign external actors. As has been demonstrated in multiple contexts, governments that partner with groups like Russian-supported Wagner become weaker, poorer, and less secure. As a practical matter, leaders in such countries lose control of their militaries and natural resources. Specifically, to counterbalance Russia's influence, if confirmed, I will pursue opportunities to stand up to Russian malign influence and reaffirm America's commitment to countries that uphold democracy and human rights. Additionally, I will work with partners to develop security alternatives for governments facing conflict and poverty.

Question. The recent coups d'etat in Mali are recent examples of the fragility of the Malian state. What is your assessment of the status of the Algiers Accord and prospects for its implementation?

Answer. The events in May of this year underscore just how important it is that Mali conducts free and fair elections on time in February 2022 and that the Head of the Transition and the Prime Minister of the Transition should not under any circumstances be candidates for the forthcoming presidential election. Without a legitimate government in place, it will be very difficult to make progress on the key provisions of the Algiers Accord.

Question. In your opinion, should the Algiers Accord remain the primary framework for peacebuilding and governance in Mali? If so, why? The recent coups d'etat in Mali are recent examples of the fragility of the Malian state.

Answer. In my opinion, the United States should continue to support the Algiers Accord, because, if implemented, it would play a substantial stabilizing role in Mali and the region. In particular, Accord provisions that concern decentralization and government services for marginalized populations will help respond to ongoing grievances that erode state legitimacy and fuel conflict.

Question. In light of the recent coups d'etat in Mali and Chad, would you agree that Niger is the U.S.' most important democratic ally in the Sahel? If yes, do you feel that U.S. democracy and governance support to Niger is sufficient to reflect the importance of this strategic relationship? If no, why not?

Answer. Niger is a democratic example for the region, especially for the transition governments in Mali and Chad. In February, the transition from former Nigerien President Issoufou, who voluntarily stepped down after two terms, to President Bazoum was Niger's first handover from one democratically elected president to another. Mauritania similarly achieved its first peaceful democratic transition of power in 2019. I understand Niger is a strong partner of the United States on matters of regional security through its participation in the G5-Sahel Joint Force, MINUSMA, the MNJTF, and D-ISIS Coalition. U.S. democracy and governance support to Niger totaled $1.78 million in FY2021. I believe greater U.S. democracy and governance support to Niger would further strengthen Nigerien democratic institutions and serve as a bulwark against growing regional anti-democratic trends.

Question. Given the ongoing political and constitutional crisis in Somalia, do you feel U.S. policy toward Somalia requires a re-think? If no, why not? If yes, in what alternative ways should the U.S. support democracy and human rights in Somalia?

Answer. I believe that it is always important for the United States to reflect upon its policies and seek to ensure that its approach will bring about the best possible outcome, and this is especially true when there is a crisis. I understand the administration recently completed a comprehensive policy review for Somalia, which identified addressing the political dynamics at the root of the current political situation as necessary for advancing long-term stabilization goals for the country.

If confirmed, I would seek to ensure that implementation of U.S. policy toward Somalia helps resolve the political and constitutional crisis and supports long-term democracy and human rights objectives. If confirmed, I will welcome your engagement and make myself available to brief you on these efforts.

Question. Immediately following the indirect selection of Mohamed Abdullahi Mohamed (aka Farmajo) as President of Somalia in 2017, the U.S. engaged with the Somali Government in Mogadishu on the premise that Somalia would hold one-person-one-vote direct elections in 2020.

- Was this a realistic expectation to set in 2016 or has U.S. policy been based on a fundamentally-flawed assumption?

Answer. I am not aware of the deliberations that followed the indirect selection of Farmajo as President of Somalia in 2017, but I am aware that one-person-one-vote direct elections have not yet come about in Somalia.

Question. How do you view the prospects of one-person-one-vote direct elections in Somalia in the future?

Answer. Somalia is a deeply challenging context, but I am always hopeful about the prospects for democracy and the tenacity of people to pursue a governance system that truly affords them fundamental freedoms. If confirmed, I am committed to supporting efforts towards more inclusive, representative governance in Somalia, to include one-person-one-vote elections when feasible.

Question. Is it an appropriate approach to orient U.S. democracy and governance programs toward a specific electoral event in Somalia? If no, what is a more prudent approach for building democratic institutions and norms?

Answer. I believe that democracy is an evolving process. While elections are seminal events that often serve as milestones for measuring democratic progress, they are insufficient markers for building or consolidating a democratic state. If confirmed, I would seek to ensure that U.S. democracy support continues to be holistic in its response to challenges and focuses on building institutions and support norms globally. I understand that while DRL does not currently have any programs in Somalia, any future investment should be strategically targeted in coordination with interagency efforts to further democratic priorities in country.

Question. Is it your view that a coup d'état occurred in Guinea on September 5, 2021 to depose President Alpha Conde?

Answer. On September 5, military officers led by Colonel Mamdy Doumbouya deposed duly elected President Alpha Conde and seized power. Doumbouya's dissolution of the constitution and government plunged Guinea into a political crisis. COL Doumbouya now exerts de facto control over the Guinean Government.

Question. What is your assessment of the challenges to democracy and human rights in Liberia?

Answer. Corruption is endemic in Liberia and affects nearly every facet of life. In 2019 and 2020, Liberia ranked 137 of 180 countries and territories on the Transparency International Corruption Perceptions Index, having fallen from 120 in 2018.

Recent editions of the Department of State's annual Human Rights Report note that restrictions on freedom of expression are among the most significant human rights issues in Liberia. Journalists sometimes perceive the Government's approach to them as antagonistic and sometimes self-censor as a result. Individuals protesting against the Government must apply for a permit from the Ministry of Justice before organizing demonstrations, though the laws and regulations regarding permits remain unclear. Other significant human rights issues in Liberia include violence against women, including widespread female genital mutilation and other harmful practices against women and girls; ongoing impunity for serious human rights abuses and violations, and harsh prison conditions and lengthy pretrial detention; and discrimination against lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and intersex (LGBTQI) persons.

Question. Do you feel that issues of justice and reconciliation from Liberia's civil wars has been adequately addressed? If no, what options for justice and reconciliation in Liberia should be explored?

Answer. Liberia's 2009 Truth and Reconciliation Commission report recommended a mix of criminal accountability and restorative measures to address the crimes committed during the country's civil wars to include prosecution of gross violations of human rights and violations of international humanitarian law and monetary reparations and memorialization of victims. To date, I understand the Liberian Government has not implemented the majority of the recommendations from the TRC report. Efforts to promote justice and reconciliation in Liberia must be Liberian-led. This is not to say that all Liberians feel their issues from that long war have been resolved, and questions about how the administration can continue to support those needs remain important. If confirmed, I will work to ensure the United States stands ready to be a partner to Liberia in justice and reconciliation efforts and will continue to encourage the Liberian Government and people to pursue such efforts.

Question. In several Francophone African countries—Togo, Gabon, Democratic Republic of Congo, and recently Chad—dying and long-serving presidents have manipulated fragile constitutions to pave the way for their sons to replace them should they pass away while in office. Is such a scenario likely in Cameroon, and if so, what should be the U.S. position if this occurred?

Answer. The trend of elected leaders seeking to change constitutions or laws in order to remain in office, or transfer power to members of their family, is deeply concerning and undermines critical governing institutions that bring stability. President Biya has been in power for nearly 40 years and is among the world's longest ruling leaders. If confirmed, I will seek to promote democracy, respect for human rights, and accountability in Cameroon and will use a range of tools to do so.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. In several Francophone African countries—Togo, Gabon, Democratic Republic of Congo, and recently Chad—dying and long-serving presidents have manipulated fragile constitutions to pave the way for their sons to replace them should they pass away while in office. Is such a scenario likely in Cameroon, and if so, what should be the U.S. position if this occurred?

Answer. I am deeply concerned by the trend of unconstitutional changes in power in Africa and efforts to manipulate constitutions and laws in a manner that undermines democratic transfers of power, including in favor of successions within families. While Cameroon's constitution is clear regarding the presidential transition process, it has not been tested in more than 40 years. It is important that the Government and people of Cameroon work to strengthen institutions to ensure a democratic transition should the President be unable to complete his term. An unconstitutional transfer of power to any would-be successor could exacerbate current challenges and lead to instability. If confirmed, I will work with our Embassy in Yaoundé and like-minded partners to engage the Cameroonian Government and civil society actors interested in strengthening Cameroon's democratic institutions, respect for human rights, and accountability. I will also reaffirm the United States' strong support for countries to respect their constitutions during transitions in power and to oppose extra-constitutional changes or maneuvers to facilitate successions within families.

Question. As Assistant Administrator for Democracy, Human Rights and Labor, if confirmed, how can DRL better support a resolution to the Anglophone Crisis and the significant and longstanding challenges to democratic elections and democratic governance in Cameroon?

Answer. I share your concerns about the ongoing violence in Cameroon and the crisis in the Anglophone region. Secretary Blinken's decision to restrict the visas of individuals responsible for undermining peace in Cameroon is a concrete example of options the Department of State can exercise to push for peace and dialogue. If confirmed, I will seek to promote accountability for human rights violations and abuses and ensure any Cameroonian security force unit that may be nominated for assistance is fully vetted for allegations of gross violations of human rights, consistent with the Leahy law.

My focus would be to continue urging all parties to end violence and to engage in an inclusive dialogue without preconditions. I would make clear U.S. support for the Swiss Government's effort to advance mediation between the Government and separatist armed group leaders and encourage the Cameroonian Government take concrete steps to move this effort forward. I would also continue to pursue engagement with African nations, France, other likeminded partners, and U.N. Security Council member states to find ways to promote a peaceful resolution of the ongoing violence.

Question. DRL has led the USG's efforts to support electoral processes and a democratic transition in CAR since the lead up to CAR's 2016 elections. In your opinion, what areas are most critical for U.S. democracy, governance and human rights support to focus on in CAR in the post-2020/21 election period?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage with colleagues throughout the State Department and interagency and with likeminded governments to identify areas where interventions may advance democracy, governance, justice and accountability, and respect for human rights in the Central African Republic (CAR). I understand that the United States has historically supported CAR's efforts to develop strong institutions and strengthen rule of law through capacity building and technical assistance. I am deeply concerned by reports of human rights violations and abuses by the CAR Armed Forces and Russian-supported mercenaries, respectively, and reports of violence by armed groups against civilians and increased use of IEDs. I am equally concerned by credible reports of money laundering and a wide range of illicit trafficking and believe the U.S. has a role to play in further investigating these allegations and ensuring they do not undermine CAR's electoral process. The CAR Government's pending commission of inquiry will be critical to demonstrating its commitment to justice and accountability. If confirmed, I will seek to strengthen the CAR Government's ability to expand access to justice for more Central Africans, prevent human rights abuses and violations, promote accountability for those responsible, and help the country achieve stability and security without calling on malign actors for short-term security assistance.

Question. What is your perspective on the performance of the Tshisekedi administration to date?

Answer. Since President Tshisekedi took office in 2019, the DRC has released unjustly detained individuals; established an anti-trafficking agency; and realized the highest-level corruption conviction in DRC history. These were among the steps that merited the reinstatement of DRC's AGOA eligibility. I was pleased to see the first U.S.-DRC Human Rights Dialogue occur in June 2021 with the support of the Tshisekedi administration and if confirmed, I will aim to advance and deepen the commitments made during that dialogue.

Question. Do you feel that the Tshisekedi administration is in a position to continue to advance reforms, including in the areas of anti-corruption, the security sector and the natural resources sector?

Question. I understand that under the Tshisekedi administration, the DRC saw the highest-level corruption conviction in that country's history. If confirmed, I would work with the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs and partners in the DRC to help address corruption and encourage accountability for corrupt actors with all available tools. The DRC has a long history of corruption and abuse in the mining and security sectors so a core component of any strategy must be engaging on both issues in a meaningful way that can bring about a more professional and effective security sector and a mining sector that truly benefits all Congolese. Essential to doing this work will be close collaboration with local communities and civil society groups.

I believe that the United States should support the Congolese Government's efforts to stabilize eastern DRC by addressing the drivers of escalating violence, including holding those in the military responsible for corruption and human rights abuses and violations to account.

Question. In your view, how can the U.S. best continue to support democratic reforms in DRC, including prospects for free, fair and transparent elections in 2023?

Answer. If confirmed, I will emphasize to DRC leaders the early imperative of undertaking the legal, financial, and technical preparations necessary for free and fair elections in 2023, including reform of the Independent National Electoral Commission. To be credible, the 2023 elections must be inclusive, conducted transparently and impartially, and held in accordance with constitutional deadlines. If I am confirmed, I would work to ensure appropriate resources are in place to help our Congolese partners with this important task.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to supporting the legitimate victor of a free and fair electoral process in 2023?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work diligently to support a free and fair electoral process and a constructive election environment in the run up to and including the 2023 elections. The declared winner of the presidential election should reflect the will of the Congolese people at the ballot box through a transparent, impartial, and inclusive electoral process.

Question. What is your assessment of the current human rights situation in Burundi?

Answer. Since the election of President Ndayishimiye, the Burundian Government has lifted bans on media outlets associated with the political opposition, freed imprisoned journalists and human rights defenders, increased efforts to address trafficking in persons, and taken steps to end abusive practices by the ruling party's youth militia. However, I am also aware of the recent report by the United Nations Commission of Inquiry on Burundi, which documents ongoing human rights violations, the absence of adequate democratic space, ongoing targeting of journalists, denial of freedom of association to civil society, and a lack of meaningful structural reform. If confirmed, I will engage with colleagues from across the State Department and the interagency to address the current human rights situation in Burundi.

Question. Do you feel the democracy and human rights situation in Burundi has improved or declined in Burundi since President Nkurunziza's death and the inauguration of President Ndayishimiye? How?

Answer. I understand that Burundi's 2020 elections took place in a markedly different atmosphere from that in 2015 and were characterized by a competitive process with relatively little violence. Since the election of President Ndayishimiye, the Burundian Government has lifted bans on media outlets associated with the political opposition, freed imprisoned journalists and human rights defenders, increased efforts to address trafficking in persons, and taken steps to end abusive practices by the ruling party's youth militia. However, I am also aware of the recent report by the United Nations Commission of Inquiry on Burundi, which notes the absence of any structural reform to "durably improve the [human rights] situation" and multiple ongoing human rights violations and other concerns. If confirmed, I will engage with colleagues across the State Department and the interagency to assess the approach of President Ndayishimiye's administration and review Burundi's progress on democracy and respect for human rights.

Question. In your opinion, have the conditions in Burundi adequately changed for the Departments of State and Treasury to consider terminating the Burundi Sanctions Program?

Answer. I understand the Burundi sanctions program has been a valuable tool to deter abuses and promote accountability among those connected with the 2015 violence and instability in the country. If confirmed, I will engage with the Bureau of Economic and Business Affairs, the Bureau of African Affairs, and the Department of the Treasury to assess whether Executive Order 13712 remains an effective tool to advance our foreign policy goals in Burundi, including improved respect for human rights. I will also consider the use of all available tools to respond to human rights violations and abuses in Burundi.

Question. Do you feel that the upgrading of Burundi from Tier 3 to Tier 2 Watch List in the 2021 Trafficking in Persons (TIP) Report was an objective reflection of the efforts of the Burundian Government, specifically its justice sector, to make good faith efforts to improve the TIP situation in Burundi?

Answer. I understand that Burundi's 2021 Trafficking in Persons Report tier ranking as Tier 2 Watch List was based on the Burundian Government's increased efforts, including by the Ministries of Justice, Foreign Affairs, and Interior, at the direction of the Office of the President, to counter trafficking in persons. These efforts included increasing investigations and prosecutions of suspected trafficking offenses, convicting traffickers, and referring victims to assistance. The Government also developed and implemented the country's first-ever national data collection system on law enforcement's efforts to combat human trafficking and trained officials on its use. If confirmed, I commit to working with Burundi to ensure it continues to prioritize countering trafficking in persons.

Question. Kenya will have elections in 2022. In your opinion, are planned levels of USG support to Kenya's electoral process adequate?

Answer. I understand that the United States has invested significant resources over the last two decades in support of free and fair elections and democratic reform in Kenya, covering a broad set of programming areas. If confirmed, I would assess the electoral climate and work with colleagues to determine whether planned levels of U.S. Government support are adequate for the 2022 general elections in Kenya and whether additional funding, if available, would be merited. I believe continued U.S. engagement and programs for the August 2022 elections can help Kenya, one of four U.S. strategic partners in Africa, conduct credible elections and forestall the violence and instability that have too often plagued prior election cycles. I strongly support the ongoing efforts to enhance accountability and transparency of the election process, support anti-corruption efforts, promote initiatives to mitigate possible election-related violence and protect human rights, strengthen civic engagement and voter education, and improve the information and media environment.

Question. While there was hope that the end of Mugabe's 37 year reign as president of Zimbabwe would usher in democratic and economic reforms that would enable the beleaguered country to cast off its pariah status, the three years of leadership under President Mnangagwa has demonstrated a continuation, if not worsening, of human rights abuses, economic mismanagement and kleptocratic behavior of the ZANU-PF regime. What tools does the U.S. have at its disposal that are underutilized to encourage democratic and economic reforms in Zimbabwe?

Answer. The Government of Zimbabwe's authoritarian and corrupt practices, including the targeting of opposition political figures, journalists, and members of civil society through harassment, arrests, and detentions are matters of great concern. I greatly appreciate that this committee has publicly called out repressive actions taken by the Zimbabwe Government. The State Department and the U.S. Embassy in Harare also issue condemnations when appropriate and publicly voice support for the courageous Zimbabwean women and men who speak out against government corruption and abuses. I understand the U.S. supports governance programs that improve electoral processes, refine citizen advocacy strategies, and enhance public accountability measures. It provides support to those the Zimbabwean Government singles out for abuse, and imposes targeted sanctions to promote accountability for corrupt actors and those who abuse human rights and undermine democratic processes. If confirmed, I will work with this committee, civil society, regional neighbors, and likeminded partners to direct more attention to the situation in Zimbabwe so that, together, we can increase the pressure on the Government to respect democratic principles and human rights. If confirmed, I will also work with interagency partners to mobilize sanctions programs to promote accountability for those individuals who are currently active in corruption and human rights abuses.

Question. An area of considerable debate has been the value of reincorporating political party programming into the U.S.' portfolio of democracy assistance to Zimbabwe. Do you commit to working with the Africa Bureau to review the Department of State's posture on political party support to Zimbabwe?

Answer. The Government of Zimbabwe has systematically weakened the opposition through manipulated court rulings, harassment and incarceration of key figures, and thinly veiled actions to install pliant political figures in parliament since it took power after the 2018 election.

If confirmed, I commit to reviewing the Department of State's posture on political party support in Zimbabwe, as well as how to better engage civil society organizations, build confidence in the electoral commission, and encourage more regional engagement.

Question. As Assistant Secretary of State for Democracy, Human Rights and Labor, would you support the investment of DRL resources into programming that would support investigative journalism and research to better understand corruption and kleptocratic networks in Zimbabwe?

Answer. It is important to look into all options available that would help counter the corrupt and authoritarian actions of the Government of Zimbabwe. If confirmed, I will explore new funding options for DRL interventions in Zimbabwe while factoring how such programs would complement existing USAID programs in country to ensure effectiveness and avoid duplication of efforts, as well as the availability of funds, the timing of appropriations, and procurement lead times.

Question. Given the supermajority retained by the MPLA in the August 2017 legislative elections, has President Lourenco and his party used this legislative power to push through the necessary democracy and human rights reforms from the start of their current term in office as prioritized by the United States and the international community? If so, what are these specific democracy and human rights reforms? If not, what has the U.S. done to ensure that Angola's Government makes these necessary reforms?

Answer. I understand the Government of Angola has made significant progress in its efforts to combat corruption, including investigations and prosecutions of current and former government officials and adopting a new penal code which increased penalties for corrupt officials. The Government has also taken steps to hold officials accountable for human rights abuses. Though challenges remain, the Government has noted that human rights are a matter of national security and acknowledged the need for oversight provided by civil society organizations across the country. Since the release of the 2020 Trafficking in Persons Report, Angola has demonstrated further commitment to combat human trafficking by increasing the criminal penalties for human trafficking; convicting and sentencing traffickers to prison; and conducting a national awareness campaign on human trafficking. Angola also modified its religious registration law to reduce restrictions on Islam and other religions. I understand the United States looks forward to discussing ways to build upon Angola's progress at their fourth Bilateral Dialogue on Human Rights in the coming months. If confirmed, I intend to use that and other opportunities to strengthen bilateral cooperation to support Angola's anti-corruption efforts, enhance accountability mechanisms for human rights violations and abuses, advance democratic governance, and support protections for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the rights to peaceful assembly and freedoms of expression, association, and religion or beliefs.

Question. While Angola's constitutional court rejected the opposition parties' legal petitions in the last election for alleged irregularities, what specific electoral reforms are needed to address some of the concerns raised in those petitions as well as to improve the overall electoral process for the 2022 polls?

Answer. The 2022 legislative elections will be an opportunity for Angola to demonstrate its commitment to democratic governance. A transparent planning process for the elections will aid in their success.

If possible, I would also like to see local elections held in conjunction with the legislative elections, noting that they would be the first to be held in recent Angolan history.

Question. The ruling MPLA under the leadership of President Lourenco introduced changes to the electoral law that would centralize the counting of votes instead of doing it at the level of each municipality and province. Given that centralized counting of votes is not a best practice in results management, particularly in terms of engendering confidence in the transparency and credibility of transmission of election results, how would the centralizing of vote counting be seen in your view? Given the concerns raised by opposition candidates in the 2017 elections through their legal petitions citing the lack of transparency by the electoral commission and alleged vote counting irregularities at the provincial level, would such a law engender greater confidence in the electoral process? If so, how so? If not, why not?

Answer. President Lourenço has shown a willingness to take into account the concerns of minority parties as well as the public demand for free and fair elections. The draft law could present logistical challenges in registering voters in remote areas, and constraints in the prescribed electoral timeframe could lead to low voter registration and participation abroad. As the law is debated and refined, the U.S. Government should continue to advocate for transparency and adherence to international norms.

I also note that on September 11, Angola saw its largest political demonstration since before the pandemic began in response to the draft election law, and that the peaceful nature of the march and the authorities' willingness to permit such a sizeable gathering, despite standing COVID restrictions, is a hopeful signal as Angola gears up for its 2022 legislative elections.

SUBMITTED TO MS. SARAH MARGON BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. In 2016, the Washington Examiner quoted you as saying that the human rights situation in Cuba was improving. Specifically, you said that in "Cuba we've seen more engagement on HR issues." In 2021, you opposed the State Department's decision to designate Cuba as a State Sponsor of Terrorism:

- Do you believe that the human rights situation in Cuba is improving? And if so, what specific indicators are you looking at to make this determination?

Answer. I do not believe that the human rights situation is improving. In response to peaceful protests in July, Cuban security forces violently repressed the protests, arresting hundreds of demonstrators simply for exercising their rights of freedom of expression and peaceful assembly, as well as numerous human rights activists. If confirmed, I pledge democracy and human rights in Cuba will remain at the core of our Cuba policy.

Question. Can you explain why you oppose Cuba's designation as a state sponsor of terrorism?

Answer. As a nominee I do not have access to information that would enable me to have an informed opinion as to whether Cuba should be designated as a state sponsor of terrorism. I have long believed that state sponsor of terrorism designations should be used for states that are terrorists, based on fact, analysis, and intelligence. Similarly, I believe a designation should not be lifted until there's full clarity that the government in question has taken all steps necessary to relieve themselves of the criteria needed for such a designation. Regardless of the state sponsor of terrorism designation, I do believe other corresponding punitive measures are an important tool to be used on repressive governments and/or officials. If confirmed, I will consult closely with the intelligence community and Congress on the way forward, including on the decision to designate Cuba as a State Sponsor of Terrorism.

Question. Are you aware that Cuba continues to provide safe haven to convicted criminals on the FBI's most wanted list, like Joanne Chesimard, who executed a New Jersey State Troop in 1973 and William Morales who was convicted in a U.S. District Court for possession of explosives and other crimes?

Answer. Yes, I am aware that Cuba harbors several U.S. fugitives from justice wanted on or convicted of charges of political violence, many of whom have resided in Cuba for decades. If confirmed, I will support the regular U.S. calls on Cuba to return fugitives from justice.

Question. If confirmed, will you advocate for Cuba to be de-listed as a state sponsor of terrorism?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to supporting the administration's review of Cuba policy, including the previous administration's decision to designate Cuba as a State Sponsor of Terrorism. I will consult with the intelligence community and Congress on the way forward.

Question. In July of this year, we witnessed the largest protests against the regime in 62 years. It's clear from the videos and messages shared, that these protests were clearly sparked by decades of mismanagement and human rights abuses by the regime. The unprecedented size and spread of these protests are directly related to ordinary Cubans' access to internet circumvention tools like VPNs. If confirmed, you will oversee the Bureau at State, which is responsible for U.S. assistance to promote democracy and human rights in Cuba.

- If confirmed, do you commit to support robust funding for the democracy movement in Cuba?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will use all tools at my disposal to support independent civil society and democratic actors in Cuba, including through robust funding for democracy and human rights programs. I believe that these programs, including those that promote internet freedom, are central to empowering independent civil society organizations and ordinary citizens to promote democracy and human rights in Cuba.

Question. If confirmed, will you support providing internet circumvention tools that allow Cubans unfettered and uncensored access to the internet?

Answer. I understand the United States provides funding—over $70 million globally on an annual basis—to support the development, deployment, and operation of the latest secure and reliable technical solutions to counter Internet censorship, content blocking, and shutdowns, and other violations of Internet Freedom. I also understand U.S.-supported programming makes secure circumvention and communications tools available to internet users everywhere, including in Cuba. If confirmed, and with the continued appropriations support for these activities, I will ensure DRL continues these critical programs.

Question. In 2018, you tweeted in support for the anti-Semitic BDS movement, praising AirBnB for removing rental listings of homes located inside the West Bank.

- Do you still support this decision?

Answer. I firmly reject the BDS movement, which unfairly singles out Israel. If confirmed, I will work with Israel to counter efforts to delegitimize it around the world, while respecting the First Amendment rights of Americans and supporting U.S. businesses.

Question. Do you view the BDS movement as hateful and anti-Semitic?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration has been clear that it resolutely opposes the BDS movement. I also have made clear that I firmly reject the BDS movement. The administration has stated it will always fully respect Americans' First Amendment rights, while also remaining a strong partner in fighting efforts to delegitimize Israel. If confirmed, I will work tirelessly to support Israel's further integration into the international community, and to oppose the BDS movement and any efforts to delegitimize Israel.

Question. In July 2020, you praised an op-ed by Peter Beinert that argued for Israel to discard its identity as a Jewish State. This conflicts with longstanding U.S. support for Israel as a Jewish state.

- Can you clarify whether or not you fully endorse the views expressed by Beinert in this op-ed? Specifically, like Beinert, do you no longer believe in a Jewish state?

Answer. I believe that Israel is a democratic and Jewish state. If confirmed, I will work to strengthen all aspects of the U.S.-Israel partnership.

Question. Can you clarify, is it “cruel” to limit Tehran’s support for groups that violate the human rights of ordinary people across the region?

Answer. The Iranian Government has a deeply troubling record on human rights both at home and abroad. If confirmed, I am committed to working to disrupt Iran’s efforts to repress, harass, harm, or otherwise violate the human rights of individuals in any part of the world, including via its support for violent partners and proxies, and to continuing to use a variety of tools, including sanctions, to counter Iran’s support for violent partners and proxies in the region.

Question. Has your opinion of the Iranian Government changed since Raisi’s election as President?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration’s Iran policy is designed to advance U.S. interests, which include deterring and punishing human rights abuses, regardless of who is in power in Tehran. If confirmed, I will ensure that we deploy all available tools to promote accountability for human rights violators.

Question. If the Iranian Government is still replete with nasty characters, do you believe that providing that regime with sanctions relief advances democracy and human rights in Iran?

Answer. The Iranian Government regularly denies Iranians their human rights, including through severe restrictions on the freedoms of peaceful assembly, association, religion or belief, and expression. If confirmed, I will ensure we continue to call out and stand up to Iran’s human rights abuses, and to maintain and impose sanctions on Iranian entities and individuals perpetrating human rights abuses.

SUBMITTED TO MS. SARAH MARGON BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question. Recently, the United States and the U.N. Relief and Works Agency agreed upon a framework for cooperation which includes a mutual commitment to abide by the Foreign Assistance Act’s prohibition on assistance to UNRWA without adequate oversight of funding, specifically over funds which could end up in the hands of terrorist. But UNRWA has displayed an insufficient track record in exercising oversight of its funds, even after committing to our government to do so:

- At what point is it necessary to accept that the constant flow of U.N. support is enabling corrupt entities in the region and not actually helping bring about peace and security? What options exist for alternative, U.S.-led and U.S.-facilitated assistance?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration supports the work of UNRWA, which provides critical services to vulnerable Palestinian refugees. UNRWA is a lifeline for thousands of Palestinian refugees in the region. I understand the United States and UNRWA have reaffirmed a commitment to uphold the principles of accountability, neutrality, and transparency. I understand the Department is deeply engaged with UNRWA, including on key reforms related to efficiency, effectiveness, and importantly neutrality. I want to be clear—neutrality means antiracism, combatting anti-semitism and tolerance.

The Department is committed to ensuring U.S. Government funding does not end up in the hand of terrorists, including Hamas. The administration provides assistance to trusted international organizations and NGOs in a manner consistent with U.S. law and does not direct assistance to Hamas. The Department takes oversight of U.N. operations, including UNRWA, seriously to ensure U.S. taxpayer-funded assistance is reaching the intended recipients.

Question. Do you agree with President Biden that further conditioning security aid to Israel would be “outrageous”?

Answer. Yes. The Biden-Harris administration remains unwavering in its commitment to Israel's security and will work to strengthen all aspects of the U.S.-Israel partnership. If confirmed, I will support these efforts to strengthen our bilateral ties.

Question. Do you acknowledge that Israel's security environment is unlike any other in the world, by means of its very existence?

Answer. Yes.

Question. Is the Human Rights Council serving the interests of the United States when it consistently displays bias against the state of Israel?

Answer. The U.N. Human Rights Council (HRC) has flaws, including in particular the Council's problematic membership and its disproportionate focus on Israel. If confirmed, I am committed to ensuring with colleagues the HRC can be as effective and balanced as possible, and will continue to advocate that the HRC treats Israel in the same way as the HRC handles any other country. When the United States has a seat at the table, we are able to advocate on Israel's behalf. The U.S. is hopeful about moving resolutions out of Agenda Item 7, which will be a step in the right direction. Advancing democracy and protecting human rights are vital to U.S. national security interests. U.S. leadership in multilateral venues, including the Human Rights Council helps focus international attention on the world's most egregious human rights situations such as Afghanistan, Iran, Syria, Ethiopia, Burma, and help direct U.N. assistance to countries in transition like Sudan.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO MS. SARAH MARGON BY SENATOR TED CRUZ

Cuba

Question. The Cuban regime annually proposes a resolution at the United Nations General Assembly condemning the U.S. for policies toward Cuba, and among other things calling for the embargo to be lifted. The U.S. has consistently voted against this measure, with the exception of 2016, when the Obama-Biden administration instead abstained from the vote. Long-standing policy of the U.S. to use its voice and vote to oppose this measure was restored under the Trump administration. The Biden administration has extended this policy, and this year U.N. Ambassador Thomas Greenfield voted against the Cuban-sponsored resolution condemning the United States' congressionally mandated trade embargo at the United Nations General Assembly.

Meanwhile, the United States Congress has been and remains committed to maintaining America's embargo on Cuba. The Cuban Liberty and Democratic Solidarity (LIBERTAD) Act of 1996 (P.L. 104-114) codifies the U.S. embargo. The executive branch is prevented from lifting the embargo without congressional concurrence through legislation until certain democratic conditions set forth in the law are met.

- Do you agree with the Congressionally mandated policy mandating an embargo?

Answer. The LIBERTAD Act codifies the bulk of the embargo and the circumstances under which it can be ended. Unless it is repealed or amended by Congress, the embargo can only be ended if the President determines Cuba has entered a transition to democracy. The administration is committed to implementing U.S. law while ensuring its policies advance the right to self-determination for the Cuban people, greater freedom for the Cuban people, and expanded support for pro-democracy, human rights, and independent media in Cuba. If confirmed, I look forward to supporting these goals as part of the administration's policy toward Cuba and consulting with Congress on ways to advance them that is consistent with U.S. law.

Question. Do you agree with the decision to vote against U.N. resolutions condemning the U.S. embargo?

Answer. Yes. Under LIBERTAD, the embargo is U.S. law. If confirmed, I commit to supporting the administration's policy approach to Cuba consistent with U.S. law.

Question. Please describe what policies you would take to deepen Congress's policy mandating an embargo of Cuba?

Answer. Democracy and human rights in Cuba are at the core of the administration's efforts to empower the Cuban people to determine their own future. If confirmed, I look forward to supporting the administration's goals to support the Cuban people to further strengthen Cuban civil society, and to increase pressure on the regime for its repression and human rights violations, as the Biden administration did this past July following the Government's brutal response to protests. I look forward to consulting with Congress on the way forward and to ensuring our policy towards Cuba is rooted in broad support for fundamental values.

Israel/State Dept

Question. On July 8, 2014 our Israeli allies launched Operation Protective Edge in response to a string of Hamas terrorist attacks and atrocities. The State Dept. among other things called on Israel to avoid civilian casualties and committed to resupplying them with military technology they required to defend themselves. On July 31 you criticized that stance as "consistently inconsistent" in a post on Twitter. Your view is particularly worrisome because, if confirmed, you would contribute to decision-making related to providing resources to allies in crisis conditions.

- Please clarify what you meant by the criticism that the State Dept. being "consistently inconsistent" for urging Israel to avoid civilian casualties while seeking to resupply Israel.

Answer. I strongly support Israel's right to self-defense and the United States' continued commitment to Israel's security. I also believe that mitigation of civilian casualty risks, consistent with U.S. law, should be considered for all U.S. arms sales. My tweet was an unnuanced expression of that objective. If confirmed, I will support the United States' continued commitment to Israel's security and will work to strengthen all aspects of the U.S.-Israel partnership. Secretary Blinken also has underscored the U.S. expectation that Israel should do everything it possibly can to mitigate the risk of civilian casualties, which I believe is in line with our shared values and common strategic interests.

Question. Please describe human rights concerns that you believe are relevant to decisions related to supplying our Israeli allies with resources they need to defend themselves.

Answer. The U.S. commitment to Israel's security is ironclad. The Biden-Harris administration remains committed to Israel's defense and security, including its qualitative military edge in the region, consistent with U.S. law and policy. The President has also made it clear that the rule of law and respect for human rights are front and center in U.S. foreign policy. If confirmed, I will join this administration in insisting on adherence to our agreements on the use of U.S.-origin defense equipment by our allies and partners, compliance with the laws of armed conflict, and respect for human rights.

Question. In May 16, 2018 you criticized the United States Government on Twitter for being "virtually silent" on "Israeli security forces' disproportionate attacks on Palestinians in Gaza." This assessment is not a legal assessment: it is an institutional judgment about the role of U.S. Government officials. These assessments and others like them would be significant if you are confirmed for role as Assistant Secretary of State for Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor.

Please list which Israeli actions in the context of your May 16, 2018 post you believe the U.S. Government should have been more vocal about?

Answer. I believe that the United States should continue to underscore the expectation that Israel, as a key democratic ally in the region, should do everything it possibly can to mitigate the risk of civilian casualties. It is critical for all parties to refrain from unilateral or disproportionate steps that exacerbate tensions and undercut efforts to advance a negotiated two-state solution, such as annexation of territory, settlement activity, demolitions, and incitement to violence.

Interbranch Cooperation

Question. In January 2020 Sens. Cotton, Cruz, and Braun sent an oversight letter to then-Attorney General Barr requesting that he "review the activities of the National Iranian American Council (NIAC) and its sister organization NIAC Action for potential violations of the Foreign Agents Registration Act (FARA)." You criticized this request, and joined a letter saying that the Senators had used "tactics [that] have no place in our political process or our national discourse, and risk turning our Justice Department into a political tool."

- Do you believe that the Senators' letter asking for a review of activities has no place in our political process?

Answer. To the contrary, I believe Congress has a strong role to play in exercising vital oversight functions. In joining that letter, I was expressing concern about the potential for federal law enforcement power to be misused to intimidate or silence civil society organizations. If confirmed, I would seek to be in regular communication with Congress and meaningfully accommodate oversight requests.

Question. Please describe your understanding of the role that elected officials play in overseeing agencies charged with investigating potential violations of statutory regulations such as FARA, in the context of your potential role as Assistant Secretary of State for Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor?

Answer. Elected officials have an important oversight function. I commit to working with Congress to accommodate its need for information to conduct oversight.

Question. Do you agree with the assessment that the Chinese Government is engaged in a genocide against the Uyghurs and other minorities in the XUAR that is ongoing?

Answer. Yes. I agree that the PRC has committed genocide and crimes against humanity against Uyghurs, who are predominantly Muslim, and members of other ethnic and religious minority groups, and that these crimes are ongoing.

Question. What role do you see for the State Department in countering that ongoing genocide, and more broadly the human rights atrocities being committed by the Chinese Communist Party?

Answer. The United States should continue to speak out consistently and jointly with allies and partners to condemn these atrocities, and to consider all appropriate tools to promote accountability for those responsible for those abuses. If confirmed, I will advocate to continue concrete U.S. Government actions—in coordination with allies and partners whenever possible—to promote accountability for ongoing atrocities and genocide in Xinjiang and elsewhere in China, including through the imposition of visa restrictions, tightening of export controls, enforcement of import restrictions, imposition of financial sanctions, and multilateral initiatives. I will also look to engage the private sector on questions related to digital authoritarianism and the economic, legal, and reputational risks of supply chain links to entities that engage in human rights abuses, including forced labor in Xinjiang and elsewhere in China. Finally, if confirmed I will work with DRL colleagues and other non-governmental entities to ensure civil society is adequately supported to monitor, document, and respond to China's abuses—wherever they may occur.

Israel/Sovereignty

Question. The Obama-Biden administration's approach to the Israeli-Arab conflict was justified on the basis of a theory of regional relations in which the Israeli-Palestinian conflict prevented broader Israeli-Arab rapprochement. Among other decisions, that administration implemented discriminatory policies that distinguished between Jewish communities in places Israel controlled before and after 1967. That approach culminated in December 2016, when the Obama administration maneuvered the United Nations Security Council into passing UNSCR 2334, which among other things denied Israel's sovereignty over the Golan Heights and part of its capital Jerusalem, including the Jewish Quarter. The Trump administration systematically worked to hollow out and render UNSCR 2334 null and void. They did so, including by recognizing Israel's sovereignty over the Golan Heights, by recognizing Jerusalem as Israel's capital, by moving our embassy to Jerusalem, by seeking to end discriminatory approaches that distinguished legally and for the purposes of aid and trade between different Israeli communities, and by taking several other steps.

- Do you believe that Israel has sovereignty over the Golan Heights?

Answer. I understand that the Biden-Harris administration gives great weight to Israel's security. As long as Bashar al-Assad is in control of Syria, it would be irresponsible to urge Israel to part with the Golan Heights. Control of the strategic Golan Heights provides Israel an added measure of security from the turmoil next door. The Biden administration has not reversed U.S. policy on this important issue.

Question. Do you believe that Israel has sovereignty over Jerusalem, including the Old City of Jerusalem?

Answer. I understand the Biden-Harris administration has not altered U.S. policy on this important issue. Jerusalem is the capital of Israel. Jerusalem itself is a final status issue to be resolved through direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians. The administration also recognizes that Jerusalem is central to the national visions of both Israelis and Palestinians. If confirmed, I will handle all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

Question. Do you believe that Israel is in illegal occupation of any part of the Golan Heights?

Answer. I understand that U.S. policy regarding the Golan has not changed since the beginning of the Biden-Harris administration. As long as Bashar al-Assad is in control of Syria, it would be irresponsible to urge Israel to part with the Golan Heights. Control of the strategic Golan Heights provides Israel an added measure of security from the turmoil next door.

Question. Do you believe that Israel is in illegal occupation of any part of Jerusalem, including the Old City of Jerusalem?

Answer. Jerusalem is central to the national visions of both Israelis and Palestinians. Jerusalem is the capital of Israel. Jerusalem itself is a final status issue to be resolved through direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians. If confirmed, I will handle all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

Question. Do you believe that Israel has engaged in discriminatory policies, in response to which the private sector has an important role to play in not promoting or pursuing?

Answer. I believe all governments, including the United States and Israel, should work to end discrimination of any kind. If confirmed, I will work with all partners, including the private sector, to address discrimination and help ensure all people are treated with the dignity and respect they deserve.

Question. If so, please describe which discriminatory Israeli policies you believe the private sector has an important role to play in not promoting or pursuing.

Answer. If confirmed, I will review all available evidence and work with all partners to address discrimination—whether targeting Israelis or Palestinians—and ensure full compliance with existing U.S. policy and law, while also ensuring that all people are treated with the fundamental dignity and respect they deserve.

Question. The Biden administration has repeatedly expressed commitments to providing assistance to Lebanon, including in the absence of any government or in the context of a government controlled or unduly influenced by Hezbollah. If confirmed, you would have a central role in evaluating the humanitarian situation in Lebanon and you would have significant equities in what a response would look like.

- Do you believe that it would be in America's national security interest for resources to go to the Government of Lebanon even if that government was controlled or unduly influenced by Hezbollah?

Answer. Hizballah is a terrorist organization, and the United States undertakes rigorous measures to safeguard U.S. assistance from conferring benefits to Hezbollah or any other terrorist group, including thorough oversight, vetting, and robust risk mitigation practices. If confirmed, I would ensure the Department continues to support our vital interests in Lebanon through the ongoing but carefully allocated provision of U.S. assistance, including to Lebanese civil society, which helps to bolster Lebanon's resiliency, stability, and security.

Question. On January 10, 2021, the State Department designated Ansarallah, sometimes called the Houthis, and Abdul Malik al-Houthi, Abd al-Khaliq Badr al-Din al-Houthi, and Abdullah Yahya al Hakim, three leaders of Ansarallah, as Specially Designated Global Terrorists (SDGTs) pursuant to Executive Order 13224. On February 5, the Biden administration informed Congress of its intention to revoke those sanctions. The issue of humanitarianism was central to the public explanation of the decision: officials at the State Department have justified the delisting of what they described as the "broad" designation of Ansarallah on humanitarian grounds, e.g. that large parts of Yemen's population live under areas controlled by the group. Since then, the Houthis have escalated their violence across the region, bombarding civilians in Yemen and Saudi Arabia. Yemen was already one of the worst humanitarian catastrophes in the world, in large part because the Houthis and their Iranian backers block aid, steal aid, and attack civilians.

- Please describe the role played by Iran and the Houthis in deepening the humanitarian catastrophe in Yemen.

Answer. The Houthis, with continued Iranian support, remain intransigent and focused on their military offensive against Marib. The offensive is the single biggest threat to peace efforts and is exacerbating an already-dire humanitarian crisis, placing at risk the approximately one million internally displaced persons who found refuge in Marib after escaping fighting in other parts of the country. The Houthis also exacerbate the humanitarian consequences of the fuel situation at Hudaydah port by stockpiling fuel and manipulating fuel prices, driving up the cost of fuel far beyond the reach of most Yemenis. In addition, the Houthis continue to interfere in the delivery of humanitarian aid.

Question. Please assess the degree to which the Biden administration's decision to lift terrorism sanctions against the Houthis and their leaders has enhanced the ability to provide humanitarian relief to Yemeni civilians in general.

Answer. The Biden administration revoked the terrorism designations of Ansarallah, sometimes referred to as the Houthis, in recognition of the dire humanitarian situation in Yemen. I understand the administration listened to concerns voiced by the United Nations, humanitarian groups, and bipartisan members of Congress, among others, regarding potential impacts the designations could have had on Yemenis' access to essential basic commodities. The short time that passed between the designations and their revocations limited the impact the designations could have had on humanitarian assistance and commercial imports. According to U.N. data, food and other humanitarian assistance items are moving through Yemeni ports at normal rates.

Question. Please assess the degree to which the Biden administration's decision to lift terrorism sanctions against the Houthis and their leaders has enhanced the ability to provide humanitarian relief to Yemeni civilians in Marib.

Answer. The short time that passed between the designations and their revocations limited the impact that designations could have had on humanitarian assistance and commercial imports. The situation has been especially critical in Marib, where the escalation of hostilities has caused additional needs and secondary displacement. Critically, delivery has safely continued of life-saving food, emergency shelter, water, and sanitation and hygiene supplies, as well as essential non-food items, such as blankets and water containers.

Question. In May 2014, you criticized the United States Government for having done "little to follow up" on calls to create distance between the U.S. and Nigerian security forces, who you described as "barely more palatable" than Boko Haram fighters who had kidnapped hundreds of girls. In contrast, many in Congress and across the federal government see the Nigerian Government as a critical national security partner.

- Do you continue to believe that the U.S. should limit security cooperation with the Government of Nigeria?

Answer. Nigeria faces numerous security threats, including terrorism, rural banditry, kidnapping for ransom, herder-farmer violence, separatist attacks, maritime piracy, and rampant criminality. I understand the U.S. Government's strategy takes a holistic approach to help Nigeria address insecurity by harnessing a range of security, governance, and development tools. Nigeria is an important national security partner and has taken some steps to investigate alleged abuses by both the police and the military, which are essential steps to addressing longstanding impunity. A central part of U.S. security cooperation is focused on helping Nigeria build capable, well-equipped, professional, accountable security forces that effectively respond to threats, protect civilians, and respect human rights. U.S. Government also supports rule of law capacity building efforts, community-based conflict prevention and peacebuilding programs, livelihoods programs, and provides humanitarian assistance to build resilience among conflict-affected populations.

If confirmed, I will support the U.S. goal of a stable and secure Nigeria while ensuring the United States continues to use its engagements with the Nigerian Government to prioritize respect for human rights and accountability for past human rights violations and abuses

Question. What specific steps do you envision pursuing in your role as Assistance Secretary of State for Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor, should you be confirmed, that would limit cooperation with either the Government of Nigeria or Nigerian security forces?

Answer. If confirmed, I would underscore that the United States expects the Nigerian Government and security forces to demonstrate a strong commitment to respect for human rights and international humanitarian law, and to prioritize accountability for past human rights violations and abuses. Assessing credible information of gross violations of human rights, consistent with the Leahy Law, and consulting with the Africa bureau would be an essential part of assessing whether cooperation should be limited. If confirmed, I would support the thorough vetting of Nigerian security force units, consistent with U.S. law, to ensure that we are not providing assistance to those units where there is credible information that the unit has committed a gross violation of human rights.

Question. How would you characterize the professionalism of Nigerian armed forces today?

Answer. Nigeria has an estimated 120,000 active-duty personnel in the military with a 70,000-person army. I understand the Nigerian Police Force lacks appropriate staffing and resources with only 375,000 police in a country of over 200 million citizens. The military is deployed on operations in 35 of the 36 states to support Nigeria's overstretched police force, but the reality is both are stretched.

According to the State Department's Human Rights Report, there were reports that members of the Nigerian security forces committed human rights abuses in 2020 and impunity remained a significant problem. If confirmed, I will work with my counterparts across the U.S. Government as well as international partners to convey the consistent message that we need to see steady improvement toward more professional and accountable Nigerian security institutions.

Question. How would you characterize the Buhari administration in the context of counter-terrorism operations?

Answer. Defeating Boko Haram, ISIS-West Africa, and other violent extremist organizations is essential for the security and prosperity of Nigeria and the broader Lake Chad Basin. Violent extremist groups have caused at least 35,000 deaths in northeast Nigeria in the last decade, as well as displaced more than two million persons. In the Northeast, Nigeria is fighting insurgencies against ISIS-West Africa and Boko Haram with an increasingly overstretched and undermanned Nigerian Army. Lacking manpower, the armed forces desperately need an increase in resources. Additionally, support for non-military responses to countering terrorism—including increased development, good governance, and economic opportunities remain vital. Beyond being stretched, limited capability and uneven local government willingness to intervene present counter-terrorism challenges.

Question. Which countries would you advocate to be added or removed from the State Department's Country of Particular Concern list?

Answer. The law gives the Secretary of State the responsibility of making CPC designations, which provides important leverage to engage on religious intolerance, a central human rights concern. The 2020 International Religious Freedom Report was released in May, and Secretary Blinken will now have his first opportunity to undertake the annual designations, and without prejudging Secretary Blinken's CPC designations, I am confident the Secretary will carefully review the religious freedom situation in all countries and make designations based on the criteria set forth in the IRF Act.

These designations are one of a range of tools the Department has to promote accountability for governments and non-state entities that are religious freedom violators, and it is a very important tool. If confirmed, I will support the implementation of the full range of these tools, in partnership with the Ambassador at Large for International Religious Freedom.

Question. In December 2020, the Department of State designated Nigeria as a country of particular concern (CPC) in response to pervasive and egregious violations of religious freedom. Do you believe Nigeria should remain or be removed from the State Department's Country of Particular Concern list?

Answer. There are serious human rights issues in Nigeria. Although I cannot forecast any decisions regarding potential designations, I share Congressional concern about religious freedom issues in Nigeria. Religious freedom is a key U.S. foreign policy priority and I understand the Department continues to closely monitor human rights and the religious freedom situation in Nigeria. As with every region, the causes of conflict in Nigeria are complex. In addition to religious differences, ethnicity, politics, lack of accountability, access to justice, and competition over land resources are also drivers of the violence. Under the International Religious Freedom Act of 1998, as amended, the Secretary takes into consideration all relevant information available in his annual review of designations. If confirmed, I will make Nigeria a priority and I commit to work with the Ambassador at Large for International Religious Freedom and Congress to address religious freedom concerns in Nigeria.

Question. Please describe the degree to which you consider anti-blasphemy laws to be acute threats to global or regional human rights?

Answer. I understand that the U.S. Government uniformly opposes apostasy, blasphemy, and anti-conversion laws, which are frequently used to oppress those whose religious beliefs differ from the majority. If confirmed, I will urge governments to eliminate such laws.

Laws against blasphemy or apostasy are too often used and abused by governments, as a means of protecting or extending their powers, to target political dissenters or members of religious or ethnic minority groups. These laws are also too often used and abused by individuals as a pretext to justify violence against those whose religion or ethnicity differs from their own or to settle personal grievances. When governments actively or passively support such individuals, instead of protecting members of minority groups, those in society who want to take the law into their own hands are empowered to use violence against these victims.

Therefore, I consider these laws to be acute threats to human rights, especially freedom of expression and freedom of religion or belief.

Question. If confirmed, how would you orient the bureau to mitigate the effects or erode the scope of blasphemy laws?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work closely with the Ambassador at Large for International Religious Freedom to urge governments to annul these laws and to oppose the enforcement and abuse of these laws, especially enforcement with criminal penalties.

Question. Can you commit to ensuring that unclassified information is not unnecessarily comingled with classified information in notifications provided by the State Department to Congress? If not, why not?

Answer. Yes. I recognize that there are times when unclassified information from various sources, taken together, can result in revealing classified information damaging to our national security. In those instances, that information must be secured. If confirmed, I commit to avoiding the over-classification of materials required by Congress for the oversight of the Department.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 2021

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:03 a.m., in Room SD-106, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Robert Menendez, chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Menendez [presiding], Cardin, Shaheen, Coons, Kaine, Booker, Van Hollen, Risch, Johnson, Romney, and Young.
Also Present: Senator Graham.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ, U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

The CHAIRMAN. This hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

We are here to consider nominations for four important positions—Senator Jeff Flake to be Ambassador to Turkey, Ambassador Mark Gitenstein to be the U.S. Representative to the European Union, Ms. Cindy McCain to be the U.S. Representative to the United Nations Agencies for Food and Agriculture, and Governor Jack Markell to be U.S. Representative to the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, the OECD.

So congratulations on all your nominations, as well as to your families who are part of the sacrifice in this process. We certainly appreciate them as well.

The four of you have a distinguished history of public service and advocacy, and I appreciate your willingness to serve the country in this capacity.

I understand that Senator Coons will be introducing Senator Flake—in a great, grand show of bipartisanship at a time that it is difficult to achieve it here—and Governor Markell. And that Senator Graham, who we welcome back to the committee—he left us precipitously—will be introducing Ms. McCain.

So, Senator Coons?

STATEMENT OF HON. CHRISTOPHER A. COONS, U.S. SENATOR FROM DELAWARE

Senator COONS. Thank you very much, Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch.

Before proceeding with more detailed introductions, I ask unanimous consent to add a statement from my predecessor, former Senator Ted Kaufman, a detailed statement of introduction in support of Mark Gitenstein to serve as U.S. Ambassador to the EU.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, so ordered.
[The information referred to follows:]

INTRODUCTION OF HON. MARK GITENSTEIN BY FORMER SENATOR TED KAUFMAN

Senator KAUFMAN. As a former member of this committee and as a friend and colleague of Mark Gitenstein, I am pleased to introduce Mark to this committee to be Ambassador to the European Union.

I have known Mark for over 40 years and have worked closely with him as a colleague on the staff of then-Senator Biden and later in then-Senator Biden's transition to the vice presidency. More recently, I worked closely with Mark in setting up the Vice President's transition to the presidency.

I know him to be a man of integrity, principle, intelligence and drive.

He also brings exactly the right experience to the job.

From 2009 to 2012, he was the U.S. Ambassador to Romania. The U.S.-Romanian Ballistic Missile Defense Agreement was negotiated and signed during his tenure.

In 2012, Romanian President Traian Basescu awarded Mark with the "Star of Romanian Grand Cross," the country's highest civil order.

Mark also led efforts to strengthen the rule of law and fight corruption in Romania, doing so with considerable diplomatic skill and success. In the midst of this struggle to preserve the rule of law in Romania, he was honored in 2011 by Nine O'clock, the premier English speaking journal in Romania, as the best foreign diplomat in Bucharest.

He developed deep expertise in rule of law and intelligence issues in his 17 years working on the Senate staff. These included his tenure as Chief Counsel for the Senate Judiciary Committee, and its Subcommittee on Criminal Justice. He also served as counsel to the Senate Intelligence Committee, and the Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights.

Mark has spent over 25 years in private law practice. Especially in the last eight years, he has focused on strengthening energy independence for Romania, a key issue he will face for all of Central and Eastern Europe should he become Ambassador to the EU.

Mark has the core values and toughness to deal with the Russians. He also possesses the keen ability to build consensus and enhance our relationships with European allies. As a creature of the Senate, Mark will also be very mindful of, and responsive to, this committee's oversight responsibilities.

He knows well the President and the key leaders of the administration's foreign policy and national security teams.

Having Mark in Brussels will greatly enhance the ability of this administration to accomplish one of its critical goals: to rebuild multilateralism by rebuilding trust between the U.S. and the EU. The sooner we can get Mark to Brussels, the better.

Senator COONS. And I join Senator Kaufman in urging support for Mark Gitenstein, who I know will be a very capable and experienced Ambassador, his second term of service as an Ambassador to now an entire region so critical to all of us.

I have known Jack and his wonderful wife, Carla, for 32 years. In Delaware, we pride ourselves on being able to work together. We are a State of neighbors, a State that cares about solving problems and doing the right thing. And no one epitomizes that more than our former Governor and State treasurer, Jack Markell.

As State treasurer for 10 years, Governor for 8 years, Jack has been guided by strong values and a sharp intellect. His passion for helping others is rooted in his faith and strengthened when, at age 17, he had a chance to travel to India and to see profound inequality and deep poverty. And in the decade since, he has built a remarkable record of achievement, of creating opportunity, of not just talking the talk, but of taking effective action.

Across two decades in leadership, he led innovative financial literacy and banking access initiatives; managed a severe fiscal crisis that affected our whole country, but did so responsibly in Delaware; helped grow our local economy; and showed real vision in creating new opportunities for people with intellectual disabilities. He helped create Pathways to Prosperity in the State of Delaware, a national model for helping workplace experience and college credit opportunities for young people, and launched one of the best language immersion programs in kindergarten.

He has a deep understanding of the private sector and economic development. He has an MBA from the University of Chicago, and helped launch and create the telecom company Nextel, a company now valued at $35 billion. So he understands both how to solve complex problems and how the United States can work with our OECD partners to put in place policies to create conditions for economic growth.

He led both the Democratic Governors Association and the National Governors Association, and today, he is leading Operation Allies Welcome, the resettlement of thousands of the Afghan partners who served alongside us in our 20 years of conflict.

A dedicated and capable public servant, with the experience, intelligence, and character to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to the OECD, I look forward to supporting him not just in his nomination, but in his service and urge my colleagues to do the same.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I might, I am also honored to introduce my friend and our former colleague, Senator Jeff Flake.

Senator Flake, to be clear, is a conservative Republican from Arizona, and I am a Democrat from Delaware. In the 6 years we served alongside each other, we voted on the opposite way of virtually every vote we ever took in the Senate. But during those 6 years, I came to know Jeff as an honorable man, as a principled public servant, as a patriotic American, and a loyal friend.

We traveled together to more than a dozen countries—West Africa, East Africa, and Northern Europe. We had the bonding moment of both being chased by elephants in Mozambique. We worked together on legislation to protect wildlife from trafficking, to protect the rule of the law on the Judiciary Committee, to promote free and fair elections and economic reforms in Zimbabwe, where he did his mission service.

Senator Flake has long championed American leadership around the world by promoting the rule of law, protecting human rights, and through strong international agreements. And his deep sense of right and wrong has not wavered. I am confident that his commitment and character thoughtfulness and skills will serve him well in a very demanding post as Ambassador to Turkey, where his abilities will be greatly needed to navigate difficult security issues and one where his service will reinforce the importance of bipartisanship in foreign policy.

I know he will be even more successful with his amazing wife, Cheryl, by his side, and I look forward to supporting Senator Flake's nomination and encourage my colleagues to do so as well.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Coons.

I noticed you said you are a Democrat from Delaware. You did not define what type of Democrat from Delaware, but in any event—

Senator RISCH. There are different types?

The CHAIRMAN [continuing]. Well, he said Senator Flake was a conservative Republican. So I thought maybe he wanted to share some light—we have to have a little fun here. Otherwise, it is tough to get through the day.

To our dear colleague, Senator Graham.

STATEMENT OF HON. LINDSEY GRAHAM,
U.S. SENATOR FROM SOUTH CAROLINA

Senator GRAHAM. Glad to be back, Mr. Chairman. Thank you very much.

Our good friend Chris Coons is a short Democrat from Delaware, as I am a short Republican from South Carolina. We literally see eye-to-eye on everything.

So I just want to let the committee know when Cindy called me last week and asked me to introduce her to the committee, I stopped for a second and thought, wow, I am very proud to do it. I know John is looking down with pride. President Biden chose wisely.

She is being nominated to be the Ambassador to the United Nations Agencies for Food and Agriculture in Rome. So all of us will be visiting you.

I am very familiar with this program because, along with Senator Coons, I am the vice chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee that deals with the State Department's budget and the United Nations' budget. And the World Food Program just received the Nobel Peace Prize. That is run by David Beasley, the former Governor of South Carolina.

They received the Nobel Peace Prize because the World Food Program has made a huge difference. With the advent of war and climate change, there are so many people in this world not knowing where their next meal comes from, and the World Food Program has stepped up to the plate, and the American taxpayer should be proud. The agency that Cindy has been nominated to lead as an Ambassador I think is the key to this whole problem. It is one thing to provide meals. It is another thing to provide the ability to grow your own food.

And Senator Risch, I am going to be all in working with this committee as an appropriator, along with Senator Coons, to beef up the capability of people throughout the world in impoverished regions to be able to farm as if it were the 21st century, not the 18th century.

Cindy has a heck of a resume. I think we all know Cindy in a variety of roles. She has been a public figure for a long time. But to those who have not followed her career, you should have. She has been deeply involved in the human trafficking scourge of the planet. She has been to the developing world, particularly Africa, numerous times, dealing with women's issues and humanitarian problems.

But I know her best from traveling with her where we went to Africa with the Gates Foundation and others to look at how to modernize farming practices. We visited a woman who had two daughters, basically farming with her two daughters, and the Gates Foundation and Department of Agriculture was trying to provide her with seeds that were more drought-resistant and over time to increase her family's capability to feed itself and actually earn money.

So I am excited about this part of the World Food Program, this agency, and I want to pledge to Cindy that I am going to do everything I can to increase your capability to provide the best farming practices for those people who are on the bubble in terms of being able to live and those people in dire situations to turn their lives around.

And one thing that Cindy and I were talking about was water. Water is the new oil. And this agency, I think, is going to be very aggressive in how to manage water and make sure that we get the best utilization where water exists and desalinization programs where it does not. So, Mr. Chairman, Senator Risch, I am going to be talking to you a lot about the portfolio under Cindy's control.

And I just end with this. I have never known a more decent, capable person in my life. An Ambassador is supposed to represent America in the best fashion. I think the two nominees here today that I know, Jeff and Cindy, will be the best advocates for American interests in Turkey, and I can assure you that when Cindy McCain shows up in the room anywhere in the world, people already know her, they respect her, and she will be a great face for America. And working with Governor Beasley, we are going to turn this world around when it comes to feeding people.

Thank you very much.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Graham.

I know that both of our colleagues have other obligations, and so they should feel free to leave when they need to.

Let me turn to our nominees. Senator Flake, welcome back to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Given Turkey's aggressive actions in the region as well as the repressive tactics used by the Erdogan regime against its own people at home, we need an Ambassador who will not hesitate to hold Turkey accountable and will push it to live up to the principles that undergird NATO membership—individual liberty, democracy, human rights, and the rule of law.

Erdogan's repression is unbecoming of a democracy and unbecoming of a NATO ally. Democracies do not jail journalists, intimidate academics, and infringe upon freedom of religion. They do not renege on their commitments to stop violence against women, and they do not put political opponents in prison.

So, Senator, you will have your work cut out for you, and I look forward to hearing how you plan to address some of these challenges awaiting in Ankara.

Ambassador Gitenstein, we welcome your nomination to this post at a critical time in the transatlantic relationship. The bond between the United States and the European Union has been tested in recent years. Former President Trump repeatedly mocked our European allies while sabotaging the strategic relationship at seemingly every turn. I believe that close ties between Brussels and Washington are not just in our national interest, but in the interest of democracies everywhere.

Going forward, smart diplomacy, careful coordination with our European allies will be critical to dealing with the challenges we both face, whether it be Russia's ambitions in Eastern Europe, China's growing soft power influence and investment in the Balkans, or Turkey's aggressive behavior in the Eastern Mediterranean. Having an Ambassador who works with our European allies will be an important first step.

As Nord Stream 2 continues to be a concern, I hope you will develop a strategy with our European friends on a comprehensive energy plan that shields Europe from extortion at the hands of the Kremlin. In short, we need someone with your knowledge, expertise, and proven record as a diplomat in Brussels as quickly as possible.

Ms. McCain, congratulations on your nomination. I admire your years of advocacy for vulnerable peoples around the world, including your commitment to combatting human trafficking globally. You shared that powerful commitment with your husband of almost 40 years and our much-admired and missed colleague, Senator John McCain.

For these reasons, I believe you are a superb choice to serve as the U.S. Representative to the United Nations Agencies for Food and Agriculture. The challenges these U.N. agencies face today, as you and I discussed yesterday, are enormous.

In this year alone, the number of people in need of urgent food assistance is expected to reach 270 million people, double that of 2020. Conflict and instability continue to push millions of people into acute food insecurity. Climate change threatens food production, and the COVID-19 pandemic and climate change exacerbate the situation even further.

Your role at the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organizations are of the utmost importance in supporting the United Nations work to eradicate poverty, hunger, food insecurity, and promote sustainable agriculture-led economic growth. Your strong leadership will be essential to empowering, supporting, and guiding these agencies in this critical work.

Governor Markell, congratulations on your nomination. Appreciate your service not only as the Governor of Delaware, but most recently as the White House coordinator for Operation Allies. At a time of growing nationalistic sentiment, we have to remain at the leadership of international economic and financial institutions, not abdicate that role. We have to work with our allies to create a stronger, more inclusive global economy that benefits everyone.

The OECD is an important tool for U.S. diplomacy. Together, with OECD member states, which account for 63 percent of the world's GDP and three-quarters of all of the world trade, we can confront the challenges of a global economy. So I look forward to hearing how you plan to approach the OECD upon your confirmation and how you will use your position to advance U.S. interests, such as free markets and good governance, in the liberal international order.

With that, let me turn to our distinguished ranking member for his opening comments. Senator Risch?

STATEMENT OF HON. JAMES E. RISCH,
U.S. SENATOR FROM IDAHO

Senator RISCH. Thank you. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate that.

Good morning, and thank you, all four of you, for your willingness to serve in these capacities. And to your families, as noted by the chairman that families certainly share the sacrifice.

On the nomination of the Ambassador to the European Union, the EU was one of the world's key economic unions, and its regulatory regimes are increasingly attempting to set standards for the world. This week, the U.S.-EU Trade and Technology Council will meet for the first time in Pittsburgh. There are a lot of trade and regulatory issues to discuss, and the results, or lack thereof, are likely to impact our joint ability to stand up against China's predatory trade practices with which we are all familiar.

I was very glad to see that last year, the EU and U.S. started a U.S.-EU dialogue on China. We need to use these discussions to start advancing shared priorities and policies, including those raised in my recent report on transatlantic cooperation on China.

Sadly, European leaders have grown louder in their calls for strategic autonomy, an idea in which European Union nations should decrease their interconnection with the U.S. or contribute to an EU member-only military force. Proponents of this movement claim it will enhance NATO capabilities and will allow Europe to engage in military operations that are outside of U.S. interests. I remain concerned that it will, in fact, deepen divisions within NATO.

Europe is and will continue to be one of our closest allies. There are very few places on the planet where our culture and our values are as congruent as they are with our European friends. As together, their population is much equivalent to the United States, and it is going to take the work of both in order to stand up to the 1.5 billion people of China.

Finally, the Balkan nations are under heavy pressure from China and Russia, which could be better resisted if there was greater integration with the rest of Europe. I look forward to hearing your thoughts on all of these important issues.

On the nomination of Ambassador to Turkey, the relationship between the United States and Turkey has been at an impasse over Turkey's purchase and deployment of Russian S-400 missile launchers. As everyone knows, the system is not interoperable with NATO, and Erdogan, not understandably, insists on buying—it has the S-400 missiles and which makes collaboration with NATO more difficult at best.

Erdogan has claimed that we would not sell them the Patriots that are in the same class as the Russian S-400. We know that is not true. Senator Shaheen and I delivered a letter in 2012 to the Turks at the time they were shopping, telling them they should buy, and we were ready to deliver as many as they needed. Erdogan shrugged when I handed him that letter.

The human rights situation in Turkey also remains difficult. Turkey is one of the highest jailers of journalists and opposition activists in Eurasia and has persecuted multiple locally employed staff of our U.S. missions there. This is not acceptable.

To be fair, Turkey was a key collaborator in Afghanistan, and our military-to-military contacts remain strong. Turkey also continues to house millions of Syrian refugees, and its cooperation is key to delivering aid and assistance to Syria.

Senator Flake, I know that you will be able to straighten these matters out, and happy to be sending you to Turkey to do so.

On the nomination of Ambassador to the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, for 60 years, the OECD has been an important part of our foreign economic policy. As China seeks OECD membership, it is important that our Ambassador understands the challenges we face today from a rising China that promotes a socialist model.

This model seeks to undermine and replace the private sector growth model that has lifted hundreds of millions, indeed, billions of people out of poverty around the world and has led to the greatest period of prosperity in human history. Today, many regret letting China into the WTO. We should not repeat past mistakes.

I look forward to hearing your thoughts on this matter and to working with you to meet this challenge head on.

On the nomination of Ambassador to the United Nations Agencies for Food and Agriculture, the United States is the most generous donor of humanitarian assistance globally. We need a strong and capable representative to the U.N. agencies in Rome—the World Food Program, the Food and Agriculture Organization, and the International Fund for Agricultural Development—to ensure that these agencies are as efficient and effective as possible so we can spread our assistance further and save more lives.

Additionally, our representative must fight against malign Chinese influence in the U.N. I believe you are up to the task, and I look forward to hearing your thoughts on these matters.

Thank you, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Risch.

With that, we will start with our nominees' testimony. We ask you to summarize your testimony in about 5 minutes. Your full statements will be included in the record without objection.

And we will start with Governor Markell and work our way down to Ms. McCain.

STATEMENT OF HON. JACK A. MARKELL OF DELAWARE, NOMINATED TO BE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE ORGANIZATION FOR ECONOMIC COOPERATION AND DEVELOPMENT, WITH THE RANK OF AMBASSADOR

Mr. MARKELL. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

I would like to start by thanking Senator Coons for his generous introduction. The Senator and Annie have been great friends of Carla and mine for three decades, as he mentioned. We are all incredibly proud of the work he is doing in the U.S. Senate for the people of Delaware and the country.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee, it is an honor to appear as the nominee to be the U.S. Representative to the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, and I am grateful to President Biden and to Secretary Blinken for their confidence.

I am indebted to my family, who have played an important role in my being here. My wife, Carla, who is with me today; our kids, Molly and Michael; as well as my mom and sister and her family.

I am also grateful to my father and brother who are no longer with us, as well as to my brother's family.

We are at an inflection point in human history with democratic norms receding in many parts of the world and the global economic system under strain from COVID-19. The OECD has long been a forum to advance our common values and demonstrate what democracies can deliver. But the United States and our allies must continue to demonstrate that democracy, human rights, free markets, and capitalism better deliver growth and innovation and a good quality of life for all our citizens.

The more we show that, as Secretary Blinken has said, the more we can refute the lie that authoritarian countries love to tell. The OECD provides the policy rationale that underlies our economic system and magnifies our voice. President Biden has said we are in competition with China and other countries to win the 21st century. We have to do more than just Build Back Better. We have to compete more strenuously.

Chairman Menendez and Ranking Member Risch, you deserve enormous credit for your bipartisan work on the Strategic Competition Act, which strengthens the U.S. response and abilities to confront the threat of the PRC. The world's authoritarian regimes are trying to show the world that their autocratic systems of single party rule and state-driven economics deliver better results. The OECD is so important, given the democratic community's ongoing competition with the world's autocratic and authoritarian regimes.

I believe I come to the committee with the right package of skills and experiences to advocate on behalf of the United States. After graduating from Brown University, I earned an MBA from the University of Chicago. My private sector career is primarily focused on telecommunications. As Senator Coons mentioned, I helped lead the wireless revolution as the 13th employee and senior vice president at Nextel.

I had long been interested in a career in public service. I always believed that my country had given me enormous opportunities, and I wanted to play a role in ensuring that similar opportunities are available to future generations.

As Governor, I was concerned about the impacts of globalization and automation. I knew that the States and countries that out-educate today will outcompete tomorrow. That is why I have worked hard to ensure that our children had opportunities to thrive in school. For those who wanted to go to college, my team worked to secure opportunities for them to do so, even when they could not afford it.

And we also recognized that many of our young people wanted to go directly to work. So we created terrific new programs to help them do exactly that with the skills needed for good-paying jobs. Good jobs are the best way to solve social problems.

I served as chair of the bipartisan National Governors Association. I learned so much from my colleagues of both parties, and I imagine that the former Governors on this committee also had the chance to learn from and share with their colleagues when they served as Governors.

Although Governors compete with each other to deliver the best economic climate for their constituents, we realize that our States do better when the U.S. does better, and that is one reason OECD is so important.

I will close on a personal note. Both of my parents were first-generation Americans. My dad signed up to fight in the Army during World War II at the earliest opportunity, and he served proudly in Europe. My grandparents left Belarus, Latvia, and Lithuania at the turn of the 20th century, seeking a better life in the United States.

It would have been beyond my grandparents' wildest imagination when they left Eastern Europe that their grandson would have the opportunity to serve Delaware as Governor and then potentially our country as the U.S. representative to a multilateral institution that fosters prosperity for all. They came to the United States in the first place seeking exactly that. It would be an extraordinary honor to play a small part in shaping policies that provide those same benefits for future generations.

Thank you.

[The prepared statement of Mr. Markell follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. JACK A. MARKELL

Chairman Menendez and Ranking Member Risch: You deserve enormous credit for your bipartisan work on the Strategic Competition Act, which strengthens the U.S. response and abilities to confront the threat of the PRC

The world's authoritarian regimes—like the PRC and the Russian Federation—are trying to show the world their autocratic system of single party rule and state-driven economics is more efficient and delivers better results for their people.

The OECD is more important now than ever before given the democratic community's ongoing competition with the world's authoritarian regimes. That's why I am so honored about the opportunity to serve.

I believe I come to the committee with the right package of knowledge, skills, and experiences to effectively advocate on behalf of the United States with other Ambassadors to the OECD as well as with the OECD itself.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Ambassador? If you could just put your microphone on, please?

Ambassador GITENSTEIN. Can you hear me now?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

STATEMENT OF HON. MARK GITENSTEIN OF WASHINGTON, NOMINATED TO BE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE EUROPEAN UNION, WITH THE RANK AND STATUS OF AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY

Ambassador GITENSTEIN. Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and distinguished members of the committee, I am deeply honored by President Biden's nomination to be U.S. Ambassador to the European Union.

If confirmed, serving as this Nation's Ambassador to the EU would culminate my work with the President, beginning with our days together as young men, when I joined his Senate staff in the 1970s, to four decades later in my recent work as U.S. Ambassador to Romania during the Obama-Biden administration.

First, I want to acknowledge my family's role in making my appearance here possible. My late parents and grandparents taught me that patriotism and my Jewish faith are the guideposts of my actions. My sisters taught me that independent, intelligent women are the light of the world.

My children and grandchildren prove that our future is bright because the next generation is undaunted by many of the challenges we face. Most of all, my wife, Libby, who is with me here today—my partner and the love of my life—who still believes in me, especially at those moments when a touch on the shoulder and a word of reassurance are essential.

I grew up in Alabama and graduated from high school in Birmingham when the United States was confronting its own crisis in democracy during the 1960s. As I pursued my undergraduate degree in history from Duke, I watched with awe and pride as the civil rights movement gained its footing against Bull Connor and George Wallace.

In my summers, I worked with reform-minded politicians in Alabama and in the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division, acting in my home State to dismantle segregated schools. I came to understand in a very vivid way how a strong Constitution and civil rights protections in a federated system can bring Democratic and Republican principles to the rule of law in a recalcitrant locale.

This experience drove my passion as Ambassador in Romania to help the EU strengthen democracy and free markets in Romania and taught me how, in 21st century Europe, the EU continues to hold dear its founding documents and values. I know firsthand how the United States, working with multilateral and regional organizations, especially the EU, can strengthen democracy, build free markets, and act as a bulwark against autocracy.

If confirmed, I promise to carry forward those values and principles both at the U.S. Mission at the U.N. and to the work of the EU itself.

One other aspect of my history is also relevant. My father's family was Moldovan and Romanian, my mother's Polish and Austrian. Going to the EU, like serving in Bucharest, is a return to my family's roots. I do so with great humility, recognizing that we have as much to learn from the Europeans and the EU, as they do from us.

If confirmed, my top goal will be revitalizing and raising the level of ambition in the U.S.-EU relationship and supporting the deep and ongoing cooperation between the United States and the EU at all levels, including between the Congress and the European Parliament. I will work to advance the agenda President Biden and his EU counterparts set at the June 2021 U.S.-EU summit. This includes working together to end the COVID-19 pandemic and prepare for future global health challenges; protecting our planet and fostering green growth; strengthening our trade, investment, and technological cooperation; and building a more democratic, peaceful, and secure world.

The U.S.-EU Trade and Technology Council meeting taking place tomorrow in Pittsburgh and our joint pledge earlier this month to reduce global methane emissions are two perfect examples of the kind of values-driven, future-focused cooperation with the EU that I would prioritize as Ambassador, if confirmed.

In a very real sense, both the EU and the United States are evolving, dynamic experiments in democracy. Both seek to form a "more perfect union." While at different stages, neither side is finished with its work.

I can think of no greater privilege than to be part of what President Biden calls the challenge of our generation, proving that democracy and strong, independent institutions are the best form of governance. They are, indeed, the shortest and surest route to the pursuit of happiness.

I know from my experience in Romania that serving as Ambassador is a great challenge, but it is also one of the best jobs in government. If confirmed, I will use that position to strengthen U.S.-EU relations and build support for the administration's foreign policy in the interests of all Americans.

Thank you, and I look forward to answering your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.
Senator Flake?

STATEMENT OF HON. JEFFREY LANE FLAKE OF ARIZONA, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND
PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF TURKEY

Senator FLAKE. Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, members of the committee, thank you for this opportunity to appear before you today.

It is an honor to be nominated as U.S. Ambassador to Turkey, and I am grateful for the trust that the President and Secretary of State Blinken have placed in me.

I have the greatest respect for this committee. It was my home when I was in the Senate. I have served with most of you. I know of your experience, your expertise, your deep commitment to the national interest. If confirmed, I look forward to maintaining a close, consultative relationship with each of you.

I would like to start by thanking my family—my wife, Cheryl, and our five children—Ryan, Alexis, Austin, Tanner, and Dallin. They have sacrificed much through the years and yet still have managed to continually assume the best and look for the good. I am more grateful than I can express.

I should note that more than 30 years ago, when we were in college, my wife was part of a singing-dancing touring group at BYU called the Young Ambassadors, and they traveled to Turkey. So when I was asked if I might want to be Ambassador to Turkey, Cheryl said, “I suppose it is your time now.” And I look forward to traveling with her and cannot wait for the Turkish people to meet my wife, Cheryl.

I am well aware that, if confirmed, I will be the first political appointee to this position in more than 40 years. I will arrive at a particularly pivotal moment in U.S.-Turkey relations. The United States has a longstanding and complex relationship with Turkey, a NATO ally for nearly 70 years. There are areas where our interests intersect and where we are firmly aligned. There are areas where we profoundly disagree.

As this committee is well aware, we have for decades worked closely with Turkey to advance our national security interests, from Korea to Afghanistan and beyond. Our partnership with Turkey enables us to defend NATO’s eastern flank and project U.S. power in the region.

But our interests extend beyond the security realm. Turkey is an important economic partner, hosting more than 1,900 U.S. companies, including some of our largest and most recognized brands, and the United States is Turkey’s fourth-largest source of imports. If confirmed, I look forward to robustly fostering this vital economic relationship.

Having said that, our relationship also faces profound challenges. Despite the United States' efforts to address Turkey's security needs, Turkey still chose to purchase and test fire the Russian S-400 system. This action ran counter to the commitments all allies made at the 2016 NATO summit and rightly triggered Turkey's removal from the F-35 program and the imposition of CAATSA sanctions.

If confirmed, I will consistently reiterate that disposing of this system is the path to removing CAATSA sanctions. I will also warn Turkey that any future purchase of Russian weapons risks triggering further CAATSA sanctions in addition to those already imposed.

At the same time, we should encourage Turkey to purchase U.S. defense items that keep the Turkish military interoperable with NATO. If confirmed, I look forward to working with this committee to determine what defense trade with Turkey is in the U.S. national interest.

Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, as we all know, the authoritarian, anti-democratic impulse is resurgent in the world. There is no value that defines us more as Americans than the rights of free people to determine the course of their lives and the destiny of their countries. In my career, I have not hesitated to speak out on such issues.

I am troubled by Ankara's democratic backsliding and the negative trajectory in terms of freedom of expression, freedom of association, and peaceful assembly in Turkey. Restoring the full freedoms of the Turkish people is a good in itself, and rebuilding confidence in the rule of law in Turkey would go a long way toward expanding the potential for further economic investment and international partnerships. If confirmed, I will challenge Turkey to uphold its domestic and international human rights commitments while also pushing Turkey to live up to its status as a NATO ally.

While some of Turkey's recent actions have advanced U.S. interests in the Middle East, the Mediterranean, and Black Sea, other actions have been destabilizing and unhelpful. If confirmed, I will encourage Turkey to support efforts to find a sustainable long-term solution to the conflict between Armenia and Azerbaijan and encourage peaceful and diplomatic resolutions to disagreements in the Eastern Mediterranean.

Despite the very real challenges to U.S.-Turkish relations, Turkey is an indispensable ally, anchored in NATO and acting as both a bridge and a buffer to a region in constant flux. Our national interest is served when the United States and Turkey work together to confront the very real threats to global peace and security that emanate from Russia, from Iran, and elsewhere in the region.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, members of the committee, if confirmed, I am committed to working with you, as both former and future colleagues, to advance our national interests, and I look forward to your questions.

[The prepared statement of Senator Flake follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. JEFFREY LANE FLAKE

Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. It is an honor to be nominated to be the United States Ambassador to Turkey. I am grateful to President Biden and Secretary Blinken for the confidence they have placed in me.

I have the greatest respect for this committee. It was my home when I was in the Senate. I have served with most of you. I know of your experience, your expertise, and your deep commitment to the national interest. If confirmed, I look forward to maintaining a close, consultative relationship with each of you.

I would like to start by thanking my family—my wife Cheryl and our five children—Ryan, Alexis, Austin, Tanner, and Dallin. They have sacrificed much through the years and have somehow managed to continually assume the best and look for the good. I am more grateful than I can express.

I am well aware that, if confirmed, I will be the first political appointee to this position in 40 years, and will arrive at a particularly pivotal moment in U.S.-Turkey relations. The United States has a longstanding and complex relationship with Turkey, a NATO ally for nearly 70 years. There are areas where our interests intersect and we are firmly aligned, and there are areas where we profoundly disagree.

As this committee is well aware, we have for decades worked closely with Turkey to advance key national security interests, from Korea to Afghanistan and beyond. Our partnership with Turkey enables us to defend NATO's eastern flank and project U.S. power in the region. Turkey has submitted a credible plan to meet defense spending commitments by 2024 and regularly provides forces for NATO missions in the region, such as its recent deployment of F-16s to Poland.

Our interests extend beyond the security realm. Turkey is an important economic partner hosting more than 1,900 U.S. companies, including some of our largest and most recognized brands, and the United States is Turkey's 4th largest source of imports. If confirmed, I look forward to robustly fostering this vital economic relationship.

However, our relationship also faces profound challenges. Despite the United States' tireless efforts to address Turkey's security needs, Turkey still chose to purchase and test fire the Russian S-400 system. This action ran counter to the commitments all Allies made at the 2016 NATO Summit and rightly triggered Turkey's removal from the F-35 program and the imposition of CAATSA sanctions.

If confirmed, I will consistently reiterate that that disposing of the system is the path to removing CATSAA sanctions. I will also warn Turkey that any future purchase of Russian weapons risks triggering further CAATSA sanctions in addition to those already imposed.

At the same time, we should encourage Turkey to purchase U.S. defense items that keep the Turkish military interoperable with NATO. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the committee to determine what defense trade with Turkey is in the U.S. national interest.

Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, as we all know, the authoritarian, anti-democratic impulse is resurgent in the world. There is no value that defines us more as Americans than the rights of free people to determine the course of their own lives and the destiny of their countries. In my career, I have never hesitated to speak out on such issues. Our national interest is served when the United States and Turkey work together to confront the very real threats to global peace and security that emanate from Russia, Iran, and elsewhere in the wider region.

Mister Chairman, Ranking Member, and members of the committee, if confirmed, I am committed to working with you, as both former and future colleagues, to advance our national interests. I look forward to taking your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.
Ms. McCain?

STATEMENT OF CINDY HENSLEY MCCAIN OF ARIZONA, NOMINATED TO BE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE UNITED NATIONS AGENCIES FOR FOOD AND AGRICULTURE WITH THE RANK OF AMBASSADOR DURING HER TENURE OF SERVICE

Ms. MCCAIN. Thank you, Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and the distinguished members of the committee. Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I am honored to be here.

Sitting here in the place that my husband, John, loved the most is a little bit bittersweet for me. Senator Graham, although he is not here now, thank you for all that you said, your kind words. We are so lucky to have him as part of our family.

I am pleased to join my colleagues on this panel today, especially Senator Jeff Flake. Both our family and the entire State of Arizona are grateful for your leadership and for your friendship.

I am grateful and honored to be President Biden's nominee as the United States Representative to the United Nations Food and Agricultural Agencies in Rome. I hope to bring honor, civility, and transparency to the role that you have entrusted me to accept.

One in three people globally do not have access to enough food, and that, simply said, is not okay. I plan to spend my time, if confirmed, working tirelessly to lower that number. I would be honored to help advance U.S. values and worldwide global food security efforts.

The goal is simple to state, but very difficult to achieve. Alleviate hunger and promote agricultural development to increase food access and stability for the hundreds of millions of food insecure around the world. I am very optimistic that with the partners and team we currently have in place in Rome and around the world, we can build on all of the already impressive accomplishments in this arena.

There has never been a more important time for the U.S. leadership on food and agricultural issues both within the U.N. agencies and around the world. I have been working on humanitarian issues the majority of my adult life. My parents taught me that as a woman, I could do anything. My husband, though, instilled in me the desire to serve a cause greater than myself.

I have had the opportunity to pull landmines out of the ground in Mozambique, Angola, and Cambodia. I worked on school feeding programs in Congo and Uganda. I have been able to elevate the plight of Syrian refugees in Greece, Jordan, Turkey, and Lebanon as they fled conflict in their home country. I have battled human trafficking not only here in the United States, but in Southeast Asia and in Europe.

Early in my humanitarian journey, I led a group of medical professionals to multiple conflict zones. I have witnessed firsthand what hunger, conflict, and the ravages of natural disaster can do to communities and families. I have seen U.N. agencies at their best, and at their worst. If confirmed, I will welcome your guidance and wisdom on how best to represent U.S. policies and priorities in Rome.

There are certain things that I look forward to focusing on. Being from Arizona, water has always been an issue. I would like to focus on the intersection of access to water and agricultural needs. I hope to promote American thought leadership, innovation, and technology so others may use less water to feed more people.

I will also focus on representing and fostering U.S. values and integrity. We need to guard against malign actors in the U.N. system and hold others accountable for good governance and transparency. I take very seriously my role in ensuring that the U.S. taxpayer money is not being misused or misspent and will work to reduce redundancy, sharpen focus, and improve efficiency.

The U.S. leadership in this fight against hunger is a tribute to the work of this committee and our workers on the ground around the world, but government contributions just are not enough to take on all of the current global crises we face. I would like to expand public-private partnerships, to bring both new ideas and new donors to fight hunger and food insecurity. I look forward to developing new relationships as we develop local economies and fight poverty.

I have seen firsthand the use of hunger as a weapon in conflict, and it is simply unacceptable. It goes against everything we stand for as a country, and I would like to use the reach and the power of our diplomacy to ensure no person goes hungry at the hands of another person.

Finally, I would like to close by paying a brief tribute to my late husband and your former colleague, John McCain, and to the great cause of his decades of service, human dignity. His efforts to defend human rights wherever they were denied and to advance the values of our democracy to every corner on Earth were undertaken to serve that one end, respect the dignity of every human life.

John believed he had as much dignity as any other person on the Earth, but not one measure more, and he felt a personal responsibility to those of his fellow human beings who suffered oppression and deprivation. Should I be confirmed, he would expect me to use my opportunity to serve the same end, and I will do my very best to do so and hope that he would be proud of me.

Thank you, and I welcome any questions.

[The prepared statement of Ms. McCain follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF CINDY HENSLEY MCCAIN

Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch and distinguished members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today, I am honored to be here. The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Ms. McCain. I am sure he will be.

Let me, before I start my questions, ask questions on behalf of the committee as a whole. These are questions that speak to the importance that this committee places on responsiveness by all officials in the executive branch and that we expect and will be seeking from each of you. So I would ask each of you to provide a simple yes or no answer to the following questions.

Do you agree to appear before this committee and make officials from your office available to the committee and designated staff, when invited?

Mr. MARKELL. Yes.

Ambassador GITENSTEIN. Yes.

Senator FLAKE. Yes.

Ms. MCCAIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you commit to keep the committee fully and currently informed about the activity under your purview?

Mr. MARKELL. Yes.
 Ambassador GITENSTEIN. Yes.
 Senator FLAKE. Yes.
 Ms. MCCAIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you commit to engaging in meaningful consultation while policies are being developed, not just providing notification after the fact?

Mr. MARKELL. Yes.
 Ambassador GITENSTEIN. Yes.
 Senator FLAKE. Yes.
 Ms. MCCAIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And lastly, do you commit to promptly responding to requests for briefings and information requested by the committee and its designated staff?

Mr. MARKELL. Yes.
 Ambassador GITENSTEIN. Yes.
 Senator FLAKE. Yes.
 Ms. MCCAIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Okay, thank you. All of the nominees have answered yes to all four questions.

So we will start a round of 5 minutes. I will start off with myself.

Senator Flake, for many decades, the Armenian genocide has been denied by the descendants of those who perpetrated it. In 2019, the Senate recognized the Armenian genocide for the first time. In April of this year, on Armenian Remembrance Day, President Biden joined us in acknowledging this truth.

In the past, you voted against resolutions which recognize the genocide. Will you join this body and the administration in reaffirming the Armenian genocide?

Senator FLAKE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

If you are confirmed, will you reiterate that commitment on April 24, which is Armenian Genocide Remembrance Day?

Senator FLAKE. I will.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

We have talked here, your own testimony this morning, I must say I listened to your statement, and it certainly is more positive than I would have posited as it relates to Turkey. I guess that is the role of a potential Ambassador. Certainly, when we talk about arms sales again, as the committee that has jurisdiction over arms sales, I see no arms sales going to Turkey unless there is a dramatic change-around on the S-400 and moving forward.

His latest calls, Erdogan's latest calls for supposedly purchasing more is certainly not an invitation to find a pathway to arms sales from the United States. So I just put that out there as something that is truly concerning to me. I wish it was different. I wish he would change course.

Senator Risch spent a lot of time with President Erdogan in the previous administration trying to convince him of a different pathway and was largely rebuffed. And so I think we have given off-ramps to Turkey. Unfortunately, they have chosen not to take it. So that is a concern as well.

If President Erdogan makes additional significant purchases from the Russian defense sector, I assume you will strongly support the imposition of additional CAATSA sanctions?

Senator FLAKE. I will. As I mentioned in the statement, they need to know that any purchase of additional Russian weapons will result in additional CAATSA sanctions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator FLAKE. And these CAATSA sanctions will not be lifted until they have disposed of the current system they have.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

More than 35,000 Turkish troops remain in Northern Cyprus, now almost 5 decades after Turkey first invaded in 1974. Most recently, President Erdogan now pushes for a two-state solution, something that is not recognized by the United Nations, something that is not recognized by our Government, and flagrantly violates the U.N. Security Council resolutions on the occupied section called Varosha.

Will you commit to speak out publicly and privately in the event that Turkey continues to violate Cyprus' exclusive economic zone?

Senator FLAKE. I will. I was pleased to see after the December visit by Erdogan to Cyprus that the United States Government spoke out, as did the U.N., that any of the action that was contemplated with Varosha, for example, would violate Security Council Resolutions 550 and 789.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

And then we will—and I will look forward to your—you said in your opening statement, so I will not explore it more with you, other than to say there are more lawyers and journalists in Turkish jails today than in any other part of the world. That is saying something, considering some parts of the world that are pretty authoritarian.

So the question of human rights is something we would expect you to also engage vigorously upon your confirmation.

Let me turn to Ambassador Gitenstein. France's reaction to AUKUS, I understand the French concern about the consequences or the economic impact of the cancellation of their agreement with Australia, not with us. But France is a vital partner in dealing with China and other global challenges. How do you intend to go about strengthening the U.S. relationships with European allies like France to work together to meet the China challenge?

Ambassador GITENSTEIN. Well, first of all, I was very pleased to see that the President and President Macron had apparently a very good conversation. They reached some common ground. And if I were confirmed and I were sitting in Brussels right now, I would immediately reach out to the leadership of the EU and to the French Ambassador and try and build a personal relationship like I did in Romania and try and strengthen those relationships.

But to the extent the French intend to pursue a strategy, I think as the Ranking Member Risch referred to, in terms of an independent military strategy, it has to be very carefully coordinated with NATO. I have become very friendly with the proposed U.S. Ambassador to NATO Julie Smith. We intend to meet on a very regular basis and develop a common message point and platform and communication with the EU on these very issues.

So while we want to work with the French, it has to be consistent with our national security needs and especially as it relates to NATO.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. One last question.

What steps will you take to increase pressure on the Kremlin and work more closely with the EU to support, you know, a more robust—we have had a series of economic sanctions and other things for Russia's transgressions. The annexation of Crimea, its constant engagement in Ukraine, its use of chemical weapons against its opponents, and so much more. But we have not always been able to get our European allies to join us in a more robust multilateral approach.

How would you approach that?

Ambassador GITENSTEIN. With respect to the Russians?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Ambassador GITENSTEIN. Well, I think this is a vital concern to the United States right now. I am sure someone is going to ask me sometime later about Nord Stream, and I see that I do not have much time to respond to that right now, but I believe that the malign activity of the Russians in the EU and the European region has been demonstrable.

I spent most of the last 10 years of my life in and out of Romania and Central and Eastern Europe, and their efforts are relentless. And they are intended to divide the EU and to divide the EU from us, and it is extremely dangerous. And it is extremely insidious.

I saw it throughout my time as Ambassador in Romania, especially on energy issues, and I think the first step in this regard is to build a unified position with respect to energy issues, but a lot more with respect to Europe. And so I intend to work very hard on that, and indeed, one of the main reasons I talked to the President and the now Secretary of State about wanting this job was because I saw the power that the EU can play on anti-corruption and energy security if all the players in the EU work together, and especially if the Central and Eastern European countries, as I call the borderlands, which are very much the targets of this effort.

And I want to work directly with them and directly with the leadership of the EU on all of these issues. That is why I want to be the U.S. Ambassador to the EU, and I hope you will confirm me.

The CHAIRMAN. I appreciate your answer.

I have questions for the other nominees, but in deference to our colleagues, I will turn to the ranking member.

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Flake, let me say having known both you and your lovely wife, whoever made the decision to send her instead of you with the singing and dancing ambassadors made the right decision. So thanks to whoever made that decision.

Senator FLAKE. Well said.

Senator RISCH. On a much, much, much more serious note, this deterioration of the relationship between Turkey and the United States is—just heartbreaking really for us. They have been a really good ally over the years, and we have done such good things with them. The country itself has made huge strides in its economy and everything else.

The S-400s, I guess, is the apex of our problems, but I hope you will put in your pocket a copy of the letter that Senator Shaheen and I delivered in Ankara in October of 2012, when Turkey was in the process of buying the kind of missiles they were looking for. Both Erdogan and the many, many diplomats, ministers, and everything else we have met with from Turkey tell us, oh, no, we had to buy the S-400s because you would not sell us the Patriots.

Well, Senator Shaheen and I know better than that. We hand delivered that letter to the foreign minister in Ankara in his home and urged them, and the letter itself you can see urges them to buy those.

Why they have turned to Russia is actually beyond me, especially when you look at the history between those two countries that is centuries old and the problems and the animosity they have had. For whatever reason, just absolutely Erdogan—and I think this all comes down to Erdogan. Erdogan himself just has no interest in promoting this relationship with us and with NATO, which is absolutely stunning, given the fact that many, many, many nations on the planet would give a whole lot to be part of NATO. And here they are, tearing the relationship apart.

I have explained to him and others have explained to him that they cannot be part of the military actions that NATO takes or part of the defense system that we have had if they are putting S-400 missiles in their country. It just cannot be done.

And to show you how determined they are, they paid for 5 of the F-35s that are sitting here in the United States. The chairman and I will not allow those planes to be delivered. We have told them that as long as they got S-400s in the country, they cannot have the F-35s. And we are very determined on this, and not only that, they were making 900 parts for the F-35, and we pulled those back.

And so that is how determined they are on this. I do not understand it. I do not get it. And I have spent a lot of time talking with them, and maybe when you come back, you will have some answers for us.

But if I were you, I would take that letter along so when they try to tell you what the facts are, you can show them the facts are not as they say. So it is a real problem, and gosh, we would sure like to welcome Turkey back into the fold. But I think as long as Erdogan is there, I think we have got a serious problem.

So good luck, and we will help you as we can. Is that the letter you have in your hand?

Senator FLAKE. Thank you. I do have it right here.

Senator RISCH. Good for you. You got my vote, Senator. I appreciate that. Thank you.

Let us move over. Governor, China is seeking membership in the OECD, and gosh, we had a real disappointment when they were let into the WTO. And it is not getting any better that is for sure.

Tell me your thoughts about letting China into the OECD.

Mr. MARKELL. Thank you for the question.

One of the core strengths of the OECD is the shared values amongst the members, a commitment to democracy, a commitment to a market-oriented economic system. While there may be some who see the growth in OECD membership as a metric that matters, I do not. I think it is incredibly important that we continue to have allies who maintain those same values.

In fact, one of the real strengths of the OECD, the data that they put out, the research that they put out, is that they are very well positioned to call out China on issues that matter, on the export—credit subsidies and the like. So I think we should have an incredibly high bar when it comes to accession into OECD membership, and that is the position that I will certainly be taking there and certainly something I look forward to consult with this committee on as well.

Senator RISCH. Well said. I think your description, too, of the requirements for membership is very clear, and it certainly does not describe China by not even close. So thank you for that.

Ambassador Gitenstein, you are going to a place where we, as Americans, have over the years unfortunately not fully appreciated our cousin's view of things and have not worked as hard as we should to keep this together. Things like the European strategic autonomy discussion is occurring, and I think that is tragic. There is no place on the planet that is closer to us on values and on culture than our friends in Europe.

So you have got your work cut out for you, but we need to convince them that with the dangers in the world, with the rising of China, with the malign activity of Russia, there is nothing more important than the strategic relationship between the United States of America and our European cousins. I hope you will work at that.

Ambassador GITENSTEIN. I read your report on China, and I thought it was excellent. One of the first things I will do is encourage them to read that report because it makes a very strong case for the threat that China presents to the European Union and to Europe generally and that the notion of developing a common platform between the United States and the EU is important to both the United States and the EU to their strategic interests. And it is extremely important that we reach common ground on these issues, from regulatory issues to strategic issues.

And as I said earlier to the chairman's question, we cannot do anything on military strategic independence without carefully coordinating it with NATO.

Senator SHAHEEN [presiding]. Thank you very much, Senator Risch. Next, we have Senator Cardin on Webex.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you, Madam Chair.

And let me thank all four of our nominees for their willingness to continue to serve our Nation, and I particularly also want to thank your families. This really is a day for the Senate family with Jeff Flake and Cindy McCain. So it is particularly gratifying to see both of you before us, and both of you stressed in your opening statements the importance of advancing American values and human rights in the posts that you have been nominated to.

Ms. McCain, I particularly appreciate your just desire to follow in the late Senator McCain's path in regards to advancing human rights, advancing his legacy, and building on his legacy. I miss your late husband and his passion in the United States Senate and his partnership in advancing so many important issues, including the Global Magnitsky law.

And Senator Flake, I very much appreciated our opportunity to have a conversation in regards to Turkey. As you have heard from many of us, Turkey presents enormous challenges through our relationship. We recognize the strategic importance of Turkey, and we want to build on that relationship. We recognize the important partnership they have in NATO, but we cannot allow the security breaches that we have seen. You have already heard from our chairman and ranking member on that.

I want to drill down a little bit on human rights. As Senator Menendez said, they have more journalists in prison than any other country. You really cannot challenge the Erdogan Government and be safe from harassment or arrest.

What is your strategy to advance democratic values and human rights in Turkey as our representative in Turkey when you are confirmed?

Senator FLAKE. Well, thank you.

This issue particularly of press freedom is one that has been an issue of mine for years during my time in the House and the Senate. I have spoken out on this on a number of occasions, and it is a concern. Turkey currently detains more journalists than any country but China. That is not consistent with the values that we all share in terms of plurality—or pluralism and religious freedom, press freedom, freedom of assembly. A number of issues come to mind.

But I think that I will, if I am confirmed, continue the practice of speaking truth to power, of speaking out and being frank, as our current Ambassador has done and as the State Department and our President has done on this issue. So that is what I intend to do is to be frank.

Senator CARDIN. As you know, you will have partners in this committee that will support your efforts and do whatever we can to help. We want our embassy to be welcoming to those that are speaking on behalf of human rights within Turkey.

Ambassador Gitenstein, I very much appreciated our conversation and your knowledge and commitment in a large part of Europe, particularly those in the developing democratic societies. We have two countries, in addition to Turkey, that are very much backsliding on democratic values and institutions in Hungary and in Poland.

Tell me what you have learned from Romania and how you would apply that to dealing with strengthening democratic institutions in those parts of Europe where we are seeing a backsliding.

Ambassador GITENSTEIN. Well, thank you for that question, Senator.

Well, first of all, I have discussed this extensively with the President over the last 5 or 6 years, and he knows about the work that I did in Romania. And he feels very strongly that one of the primary goals of his foreign policy is to stand up to autocracies wherever they occur. And as you and I discussed, if we cannot get this right in the EU, we probably cannot get it right anywhere.

And I think one of the most encouraging things that is happening within the EU is that they are conditioning their EU structural funds on reporting requirements as they relate to the rule of law and anti-corruption. And I saw in Romania how valuable that is because, as you know, Romania was admitted to the EU on condition, which is known as the cooperation verification mechanism, which is a benchmarking and reporting system that has worked quite well in Romania, and it should work well in Hungary and Poland.

And this will depend entirely on whether the EU continues to press with the conditions they have set on those funds. And as an Ambassador, I will certainly argue for that.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you.

Senator SHAHEEN [presiding]. Thank you very much, Senator Cardin.

Next, we have Senator Young on Webex. Actually, I am told he is not ready. So we will go to Senator Coons.

Senator COONS. Well, thank you. Excuse me, thank you, Madam Chair.

Let me just thank all four of you for your willingness to continue serving our Nation. We have known each other in various roles and various ways over decades or over years, and I know each of you to be a person of great skill and character and capability. You are going to places where we need you, and we need to continue to reinforce that America sends its best and brightest to represent us around the world.

I am excited to hear how you will work together with the EU and the OECD and, in partnership with our NATO Ambassador, will reinforce our values. And Senator Flake, you are going to have quite a challenge dealing with Turkey and trying to strike a balance between their dramatic backsliding on human rights and transparency and democracy, and our strategic relationship is still trying to bring them, as it were, back into the fold.

And Mrs. McCain, we have traveled to many countries together, African countries in particular, and I know your passion, your skill, and your determination has already earned the admiration of all of us here for your hard work combatting human trafficking, fighting for a better future for women and girls, and bringing American values that are rooted in our shared commitment to democracy to your advocacy around the world.

So I look forward to supporting all four of your nominations. If I could briefly, both for Ambassador Gitenstein and for Governor Markell, one of the most challenging issues for the global digital economy is determining the right balance, when law enforcement authorities should have access to citizens' personal data and balancing legitimate security concerns with individual privacy.

And in particular, the safety of human rights advocates and minority party politicians in increasingly repressive countries. We have referenced in your earlier conversations Hungary, Poland, and others.

The OECD has often excelled, Governor Markell, at finding sensible solutions and setting implementation standards for democratic governors, part of why I agree with you. We should be very cautious about China's engagement.

But on this issue, the OECD has hit a road block, and the EU has been reluctant to move multilateral talks forward. As Ambassador to the OECD, how would you work together with Ambasador Gitenstein at the EU to balance data privacy and security interests?

Mr. MARKELL. Thank you for the question, Senator Coons.

I will say this is one of those issues not only are there differences between the U.S. and Europe, there are some, frankly, philosophical differences even within our own country about how this ought to be addressed. Ambassador Gitenstein and I have actually talked a couple times about opportunities to work together. This is one of them.

This is actually also an area where I think it would be important to consult with this committee to get your sense of this particular issue. The OECD excels when it is focused on technical issues like standards, data, research, and reports that ensure that the policy-makers can make the best possible decisions. But I do think this is one of those places where there is so much overlap between the work of the OECD, the influence of the European Union, as well as negotiations backdrop.

So Ambassador Gitenstein and I have developed an excellent relationship, and I know that on this particular issue it is one that we will engage with together frequently.

Senator COONS. Thank you.

And Ambassador Gitenstein, you referenced the EU-U.S. Trade and Technology Council convening in Pittsburgh. I am glad Secretaries Blinken and Raimondo and Trade Representative Tai will attend, and I am interested in hearing how you think we should move forward, both on that balance that Governor Markell was speaking to and how we work together on a raft of new regulations with the EU on AI and digital platforms as well.

I also think on climate and on a border carbon adjustment, we have an enormous opportunity with the EU. I would be interested to hear your views on these complex issues.

Ambassador GITENSTEIN. Well, I am as anxious as you are to see what happens in Pittsburgh tomorrow. You know, because I am not yet confirmed, I am not cleared on all the pre-decisional materials that have been prepared for that, but I can just speak as from my experience, which is I first got to know then-Senator Biden working on the FISA statute, Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, which grew out of the work that I did on the Church committee. And I know how difficult it is to strike the balance between national security and privacy, but it has to be improved, and I think that statute needs to be improved.

And as the Europeans have begun to break new ground in this area with GDPR, I have some questions about how effective that is, and it needs—and you know, because of the Schrems decision, the Europeans are insisting, rightfully, I think, that there be some consolidation of positions between the EU and the United States on those issues. And I think they are going to be difficult issues to resolve, but I intend to put a lot of energy into that.

This is just on the digital privacy and security issues. We will work closely with Jack. Jack and I have become very good friends, and I hope we will meet regularly on this. But the OECD and the EU need to be on the same page, and I will certainly argue for that within the administration and within the EU.

Senator COONS. Thank you.

Senator Flake, you are going to have a difficult balancing act. There is a lot of issues on which to hold Turkey accountable, from Cyprus to repression of religious minorities to the ongoing tense relations with Greece, to the Armenian genocide recognition. There is lots of other things in addition to the S-400 and their human rights violations.

Are there any areas where you think we can actually increase our collaboration partnership and work with them in a positive way or hold that out as a carrot at the same time that you are holding to a tough line on CAATSA sanctions and on insisting that they pull back from their embrace of Russia?

Senator FLAKE. Well, thank you.

As I mentioned in my remarks, there are areas where we have worked with them and continued to work closely with them. They have pushed back against Soviet—Russian aggression in Ukraine and with Georgia. They have supported those countries' aspirations to become members of NATO. So they have been useful there.

They help, to some degree, with the delivery of humanitarian assistance to Syria and were willing to help with regard to Afghanistan and the airport and were with us to the end there. So there are some things that we can build on. But as you mentioned, there are a lot of issues that are challenging, and we will work with them where we can, challenge them where we must.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Senator.

Mrs. McCain, the chairman, having returned, notes that I have taken great liberties with the time allowed for questioning—

The CHAIRMAN [presiding]. Great liberties.

[Laughter.]

Senator COONS.—I look forward to talking with you separately about public-private partnerships and look forward to supporting your important work and the ambassadorship in Rome.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Van Hollen, I understand, is next on our list.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member.

Congratulations to all of you on your nominations, and thank you for your willingness to serve in these important capacities.

And I just want to endorse the comments my colleague Senator Coons made with respect to both our Ambassador to the EU and OECD. We do have to dramatically expand the cooperation between the United States and these two entities, and not just saying it, but taking the practical steps to implement it, especially with respect to the challenge from China around the globe and look forward to working with both of you on that.

Mrs. McCain, congratulations on your nomination. Look forward to supporting you in this important post.

Senator Flake, great to see you and appreciated the conversation that we had. As we discussed, I grew up in a Foreign Service family, spent many of my early years in Turkey. I have great affection for the people of Turkey.

But President Erdogan has taken Turkey way off track and in the wrong direction, both with respect to NATO commitments overall, as well as other actions, malign actions in the region, and undermining human rights at home. And some of them have already been mentioned. He doubled down just this weekend on national TV here on taking another round of S-400s. That means that we will continue to discontinue any cooperation on the F-35s, given the security compromises that would exist.

We need to make sure we implement fully the CAATSA sanctions, and I understand that you have already said in this hearing that you would support an increase in CAATSA sanctions if they proceed with the next purchase. Is that correct?

Senator FLAKE. That is correct.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. You also know that Turkey is out to destroy the Syrian Kurds. Would you agree that the Syrian Kurds have been the tip of the spear for us in our fight against ISIS?

Senator FLAKE. They have been an effective partner with us in defeating ISIS, yes.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. So here we have an erstwhile ally trying to destroy the major partner we had in the fight against ISIS.

I heard my colleagues raise the issue of the situation in Eastern Med and Cyprus. In Cyprus, President Erdogan is going backwards, right? They have now retreated from what had been the agreed-upon approach to the talks there, bizonal, bicomunal approach. And recently, would you agree that his actions in Varosha violated U.N. Security Council resolutions?

Senator FLAKE. Yes, most definitely.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. We also have seen him aiding and abetting the attacks against Armenia. And then, at home, an ongoing effort to actually disqualify and ban the HDP, which is the third-largest political party in Turkey, is it not?

Senator FLAKE. It is.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Okay. Senator Langford and I are going to be soon sending a bipartisan letter to the President raising concerns about these issues, but my question to you is this. President Erdogan has repeatedly taken these actions. He has said very publicly that he does not care what the United States says, does not care what we say. He said that just 6 weeks ago.

So really what matters is what we do. The CAATSA sanctions have gotten their attention, although they have not changed their conduct yet, but it is having an impact on their military. With respect to the HDP and actions on Cyprus, what do you propose that we actually do beyond words to get Turkey's attention?

Senator FLAKE. Well, thank you. Thank you for the question.

And let me just say and commend this committee for pushing so hard for CAATSA sanctions, Section 231. When people say you guys talk but do not do anything, this committee and the Congress and the administration did. And it has had an impact, a significant impact on Turkey's economy because their defense industry is a big part of their economy. And being out of the F-35 program has hurt, and they know that.

With regard to other issues, obviously Cyprus, it was in violation—the action or the statements that were made in July with regard to Varosha, regard to a two-state solution. There is no two-state solution in Cyprus. As you mentioned, it needs to be a bizonal, bicomunal federation negotiated between the parties. That has been our consistent position, and it needs to continue to be.

With regard to banning of political parties and some of the other democratic backsliding, we need to make clear, as we have, and continue to make clear that that is inconsistent with democratic values and inconsistent with commitments that have been made. And so I think that we will continue to speak out on those issues and continue to act with regard to new arms purchases with additional sanctions, and that has got their attention. It has hurt, and it needs to, and I want to commend this committee for doing it.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Well, thank you. I just hope we will take those kind of actions with respect to these other activities that are being taken, and the EU has an important role to play in concert with the United States.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. I understand Senator Young is with us virtually.

Senator YOUNG. Yes, Chairman, thank you.

Ms. McCain, the Chinese Communist Party is actively seeking to use the U.N. standard-setting bodies to their own unique advantage. From telecommunications to international aviation and, yes, agriculture, the authorities in Beijing understand that the U.N.'s specialized agencies possess an outsized ability to help them reshape the global order.

If confirmed, how would you use your position to ensure that FAO is actually seeking to accomplish its core missions and that its activities are free from bias, including from its senior leadership?

Ms. MCCAIN. Thank you. Thank you for the question, Senator.

First of all, if I am confirmed, I will ensure that U.S. leadership and partnerships will not falter on my watch. I am also concerned about their leadership positions and where they are damaging and undermining organizations with malign influences and nefarious practices.

I will be watching very closely to ensure that the FAO DG is following our leadership, which ensures our values and transparency, building coalitions to ensure our leadership remains strong, and I am also committed most definitely to food safety and its global impact. Best-case scenario in what I am saying is that I am watching.

Senator YOUNG. All right. Thank you for that answer.

So the FAO has been doing very important work for a number of years, staving off hunger for millions. And this has been due in large measure to the resources that it can bring to bear in moments and in places of great crisis. Its record in supporting and growing ag capacity and resiliency in the developing world is, however, less positive.

One overlooked dynamic at play is the success that regulators overseas, especially within the European Union, have had in keeping U.S.-led Ag tools like groundbreaking development of genetically modified crops out of the FAO's toolbox, even as they would potentially reduce the threat of drought in paths from crucial staple crops. If confirmed, how would you seek to ensure that the FAO embraces all possible means of supporting the resiliency of agricultural systems, including ones widely practiced in America?

In short, how would you seek to ensure that the FAO actually embraces science in furtherance of feeding those who are hungry?

Ms. MCCAIN. Thank you for the question. Oh, sorry. There, is that—can you hear me?

Senator YOUNG. Yes.

Ms. MCCAIN. I apologize. Thank you for the question.

It is, indeed, an issue, and it is a problem. What I would do is, number one, as I mentioned earlier, is building coalitions and bringing in more of our technology and our biotech overall. And most of all, making sure that we keep track of not just what our leadership is doing, but how we can best strengthen our ability, our multilateralism, our advancement in other areas.

The science and technology are key to our ability to be able to help grow more food with less water, grow more food independently, build sustainable villages, and build sustainable crops. I am a very strong supporter of that. Without that, I do not see how we go any farther with it. We are not going to be able to feed the multitudes that we have unless we consider every option.

Senator YOUNG. Well, thank you for embracing that. It will require, I think, some robust and tenacious diplomacy to persuade some of our European friends of the merits of that position. But I suspect you are going to be doing that. So, thank you.

Ms. MCCAIN. Senator, I have been compared to a chihuahua before in that I bite the ankles and bark enough until people listen to me. And so you have my commitment to being not only determined, but one that will follow through and make sure people hear.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, Ms. McCain.

I think I have 1 minute left, and so I will very quickly ask a question of Mr. Markell. Mr. Markell, the members of the OECD collectively produce 60 percent of the world's goods and services, and they account for 75 percent of global trade. As was indicated earlier, China is not a member, but you indicated I think they are seeking membership.

I understand that India may also be hesitant to join, as they are a large but still emerging economy. What would the consequences be for India becoming a member, and is this something you would advocate for?

Mr. MARKELL. Senator, I am not sure I—

The CHAIRMAN. I think you are good now.

Mr. MARKELL. Thank you. Senator, I could not understand the entire question. I think it had to do with the accession of other countries into OECD membership.

Senator YOUNG. India. Yes, India in particular.

Mr. MARKELL. Okay. So one of the real strengths of the OECD is that its members share a number of common values, not only democracy, not only a commitment to free market systems, but also to a level playing field. Things like a real commitment to anti-bribery, to intellectual property protections, and the like.

The bar for entrance for any new country, including India, is extraordinarily high, and my commitment is certainly to consult with this committee, but also to—should I be confirmed—to bring to my position at the OECD a real sense that we do have a very high bar which is only met through actions, not words.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much. Senator Kaine?

Senator Kaine. Thank you, Mr. Chair and Ranking Member Risch.

And congratulations to this very finely qualified panel of nominees. I have the good fortune to consider three of you as friends.

Jack, you and I worked together as Governors, and you did such good work as a Governor and as chair of the National Governors Association.

Jeff Flake, you were a partner on so many initiatives on this committee, somebody I deeply admire and miss as a member.

And Cindy, we have worked together, and I had the pleasure of sitting with your husband, both on this committee and on the Armed Services Committee. And I will never forget the first time I traveled with your husband, Senator McCain, on a bipartisan delegation, and I think it was to the Middle East and the first press event we did. He said something, and I was stepping to the microphone to dramatically disagree with him. I had been in the Senate for about 2 months and wondered how he would take it.

So I said, "I am going to disagree with you." And he said, "Get up there and disagree with me. We need to show them that we are not all a monolith here." And we were fast friends from that moment.

So thank you all for your service. Ambassador Gitenstein, you are the only one with the good fortune not to have had to work with me in the past.

Let me ask to, Ms. McCain, the three food programs that are based in the U.N. that you will work in representing the United States, they have all faced major challenges because of COVID, which both affect donors, increase food insecurity, and then also make the task of delivery of programs more difficult. So if you could share a little bit about the challenges that this last 18 months has meant for these programs and, as you are starting in to contemplating the position, the kinds of things we should be thinking about from Congress' side to help get through this tough chapter.

Ms. McCain. Well, first of all, thank you very much for the question. And I am glad you survived the trip to the Middle East we used to call the "McCain death march." So I am glad you made it through.

I would like the committee to know that I am very committed to keeping U.S. leadership within the World Food Program and others. That is of deep importance to me and I think also to the United States. And that has never been more present and more definitive than the fact that World Food Program won the Nobel Peace Prize as a result of the good work that they do.

But the U.S. is the largest donor by far. We have to continue to do more. We have to. Whether it is thinking outside the box, bringing new people in, putting together groups that we can discuss good ideas, bad ideas, whatever it may be. But I am committed to making sure that we talk to everybody and we understand issues and consider new ideas in all of this.

I also want to encourage new donors and more country involvement. We carry the load of this, which we do brilliantly, but I would like to make sure that we are able to bring in more people, more ideas, as I said, and more countries to be a part of this. It is important.

Our public-private partnerships have to be expanded as well, and they do a marvelous job. But I am very committed to making sure that we expand our public-private partnership options here.

And also to consider a push for diversity and inclusivity, which is the question—the prior question that you asked me, and more. And most of all, making sure within that diversity and inclusivity that we have a safe workspace for people to work in. And of course, pushing for more technology and innovation in all of this is part of what I feel is not only important, but it is imperative in what we do.

And I would like to get on the ground and really examine what is going on with the issues that you initially talked about and see what can be done, what changes can be made, if that is the case.

Senator Kaine. Thank you, Ms. McCain. I think that you are very well suited for the position.

Senator Flake, the questions that I wanted to ask you have generally been covered by my colleagues. But I guess, you know, maybe big picture, here would be something I hope after some time there you might come back and educate us on.

I think we all share this frustration with the Erdogan and feel like there was some promise at the start, and then it has taken this turn in a number of ways that have been hostile to the United States. But friends of mine who are in Turkey basically say it is not that hard to understand Erdogan's position vis-a-vis the United States if you look at the Turkish population's attitude about the United States.

Now these things can self-reinforce, but you know, leaders are not going to be warm and fuzzy to the United States if the populations have a lot of anti-U.S. sentiment. And I do not know this as an expert on Turkey, but people I know who are experts point out to me a lot that the Turkish population's view of the United States is quite negative. And as an Ambassador, A, you would be in a position to dig in and find out if that is true and then share with us why, but also you will have a unique opportunity with your own diplomatic background from having been in the Senate to, having shared why, giving us strategies and undertaking efforts yourself to start turning that around.

We are not going to have a government that is going to really be a great ally of the United States if their population is very anti-U.S. in their public sentiment, and I would look forward to having that conversation with you, should you be confirmed—and I am confident you will be—down the road after you have been in Turkey for a while.

Thank you very much to the panel, and yield it back, Mr. Chair.

The Chairman. Thank you. Senator Shaheen?

Senator Shaheen. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and congratulations to each of our nominees this morning. We are especially delighted to see our former Senate family back here again.

I am going to begin with you, Mrs. McCain, and I would have identified you more as a Great Dane than a Chihuahua. So I have had Afghans since the takeover of the Taliban who have said to me that they really hope that the United States and the international community will not prevent humanitarian aid from going to the Afghan people because of our opposition to the Taliban. We know there are 14 million in Afghanistan who are food insecure, 2 million of them children who are malnourished.

Winter is coming. So the situation is only going to get worse. So can you talk a little bit about how you will work with the U.N., with the United States, to ensure that desperately needed food gets to those Afghans who are really in need.

Ms. MCCAIN. Thank you for the question, and it is like many of you and all of you, I mean, having had two sons in Afghanistan, I have watched with great interest and many times great horror, seeing what is actually occurring and has occurred there.

Once again, our most vulnerable are being preyed upon, which is the usual drill in a lot of these countries. The U.S. is the largest single donor, though, to humanitarian assistance within Afghanistan and within the region as well. I commit that we will continue the lifesaving support that those need, if I am confirmed.

Most of all, if I am confirmed, I will support all efforts to ensure that humanitarian assistance and in Afghanistan benefits those that it is going to, which is, as you know, is about transparency and the ability to really have good partners on the ground. And I will also continue to monitor what is going on within the country. It is a dicey project, and I know you know that.

It is certainly an evolving situation as well, much like Yemen and Ethiopia right now, and we will continue to work on best practices in addressing the needs of the conflict zones in that area. And if I am confirmed, you have my commitment to do the best I can.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, thank you very much for that answer, and if I can be helpful, please let me know.

Ms. MCCAIN. Thank you. I would rely on the entire committee for help.

Senator SHAHEEN. Absolutely. I know that we are ready to help.

Senator Flake, tomorrow President Erdogan is supposed to meet with Vladimir Putin. They are ostensibly discussing cooperation in Syria, and yet given the surge of Turkish troops in Northwestern Syria to combat Russian airstrikes this week, is there still a threat of a Russian-Turkey joint offensive in Syria, do you think? And how should we respond to that in the United States?

Senator FLAKE. Thank you, Senator.

I have not had classified briefing yet. I have not been confirmed. So I would defer questions to Department of Defense on the possibilities there.

But the meeting with Putin, obviously Ankara has had at least a transactional relationship with Russia on a number of issues. As we mentioned, the purchase of weapon systems. But they have also pushed back in a number of areas as well. Crimea, been consistent in saying that that is part of Ukraine territory and the selling arms to Ukraine and also supporting Ukraine and Georgia in their sovereignty.

So, yes, it is an interesting relationship. I will be very interested to see what comes out of that meeting, to the extent that we know. But with regard to Syria, I would defer to those who know more than I do right now.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, I hope when you get confirmed that that will be an area of focus.

Senator FLAKE. It will.

Senator SHAHEEN. Because, obviously, it is a very difficult situation in the country, as you know.

Governor Markell, as you are probably aware, we are having negotiations around tax policy right now, and it is an issue that the OECD has also been working on. They have had an ambitious framework for how to coordinate tax policy. How optimistic are you that their process can result in agreement, and what should we be thinking about with respect to that as we are looking at what we might do on taxation of income of multinational corporations?

Mr. MARKELL. Well, thank you very much for the question, Senator.

Since I have not been confirmed, I have not been read into all the details yet. My sense is that it is the Treasury Department that has really taken the lead in those negotiations, but the OECD has an important role to play because it provides so much of the technical assistance.

And so, should I be confirmed, obviously I will be supporting the position of the administration, and I look forward to consulting with this committee for your guidance as well.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you very much. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, thank you. I know of no other members seeking recognition. So I have one or two final questions before we close.

Ms. McCain, what you and I spoke about yesterday, the reality of in the context of food insecurity a disproportionate impact upon women and girls, 10 percent higher among women as of 2019. So will you make it part of your advocacy, upon confirmation, for women and girls who have been disproportionately impacted by the pandemic-related food insecurity?

Ms. MCCAIN. Yes, Senator. And may I say that from my experience around the globe and everything that I have done, and all too often our women and children are disposable. And that simply, in this case that I do not buy that, and it is not going to happen.

The CHAIRMAN. Fine, thank you.

And also I think you referred to some of your experiences on water and what not. But part of our challenge globally in terms of food supply chain is the question of climate change, which the Food and Agriculture Organization approaches in a national, regional, and global context using the Paris agreement as structure to which the entity collaborates with member nations.

I hope that as we—in the first instance, this program is about helping people in need, the emergent nature of it. But the question becomes once we have a population that we are directly feeding through these programs, there is an opportunity to also change and transform their lives and how we ultimately create more food, as you suggested, with less water. I hope that you will make that a significant part of your mission upon confirmation.

Ms. MCCAIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Finally, Governor, one of our former colleagues questioned you only about India, but I am more interested as well about the expansion of OECD membership. There are 38 members in the OECD, along with 5 partner countries and 6 countries vying to become full-fledged members. Two of those partner countries include China and India. Russia has been trying to get in for several years but was basically shut out after their invasion of Ukraine in 2014.

What are your thoughts on the accession program for countries trying to join the OECD?

Mr. MARKELL. Thank you for the question.

There should be a very high bar. The OECD, unlike many other multilaterals, has characteristics and qualifications for membership, which are very much focused on a commitment to democracy, a commitment to market-oriented economic systems. And it has just never been more important that countries that share those values demonstrate that we can deliver better than those who have other approaches.

And so there are some who believe that increasing the membership of the OECD is a metric that we should care about. I do not agree with that. I think the OECD is extraordinarily valuable to its member countries. I think it is a great place for convening of like-minded countries, and so I think the bar to accession is extremely high.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. I share your view. Expansion should be based upon those who can meet and share the same values, not just simply for the sake of expansion. So I appreciate that.

And the other point about the OECD, I am increasingly concerned that the United States is not well positioned to engage in economic statecraft for the 21st century, both including promoting U.S. jobs, business investments, engaging in development, financing for infrastructure, and setting standards for emergent technologies and the digital economy. These are all incredibly important areas, as well as that, you know, an American company goes abroad and has maybe got the best product, maybe they got the best performance, maybe they got the best delivery, but they cannot suborn that foreign government under the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act.

Unfortunately, other countries in the world do engage in that process, including countries or companies within the European Union. How do you see, view your role in the OECD in both helping us in these different areas of economic statecraft?

Mr. MARKELL. Well, thank you for that question as well.

My view is that American businesses and American workers can compete successfully anywhere so long as there is a level playing field. And I believe that one of the most critical goals and pieces of the OECD mission is to ensure that there is, in fact, a level playing field.

The OECD's Anti-Bribery Convention is one of the most important things that the OECD has ever done. It ensures that not only member countries live up to those standards, but it sets a model for other countries as well. I know that Senator Cardin on this committee has done some really important work over the years, including the CROOK Act, which he has been pushing.

So whether it is things like anti-bribery, whether it is around issues of stopping the theft of intellectual property, whether it is making sure procurement opportunities are available to U.S. businesses, this is just one of the most important parts of what the OECD does, and I will—if confirmed, I will ensure that focusing on a level playing field is at the very top of my priority list.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

And I will just call to your attention, I am sure you are familiar with this, adherence to the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises, which is a key international framework on responsible business conduct, are required to establish a national contact point to help promote the guidelines to businesses and other stakeholders.

I hope that when you are confirmed, you will work to make that system strong and effective to deal with some of the challenges we have been talking about.

Mr. MARKELL. Thank you, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

All right. I understand there are no other members seeking recognition.

With that, with our thanks to the nominees, the record for this hearing will remain open until the close of business tomorrow, Wednesday, September 29. To colleagues on the committee, please ensure that questions for the record are submitted no later than tomorrow, Wednesday, September 29.

To the nominees, there will inevitably be questions for the record. I would urge you to answer the questions expeditiously and fully so that your nominations can be considered before a full business committee.

And with that, this hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 11:47 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO HON. JACK A. MARKELL BY SENATOR ROBERT MENEZES

Question. Can you expand upon how you view your role at the OECD, if you are confirmed, in helping to renew and replenish US economic statecraft instruments?

Answer. The work of the OECD rests on the shared values of the member nations: a commitment to democracy, human rights, transparency, and open market based economic principles. If confirmed, I will work to coordinate U.S. Government agency engagement with the OECD to ensure the organization's recommended policies and regulations reflect those values and interests and will secure the agreement of other member nations. The resulting policies and regulations will, in turn, help create and expand legitimate investment and financing opportunities for U.S. business and promote U.S. job creation.

Question. Where do you see the biggest challenges? Biggest opportunities?

Answer. I see the most pressing challenge today is building back our economies and societies after the COVID-crisis in a better, more inclusive way. This brings with it opportunities to address the climate crisis, to ensure the gains of trade are shared by all, to manage the disruptive impact of critical and emerging technologies, and to find inclusive and equitable economic strategies consistent with our shared values. If confirmed, I will work to keep the OECD focused on its strengths of high-quality, unbiased data collection and evidence-based analysis to make policy recommendations in those areas. It is here where U.S. engagement and leadership can ensure the organization remains an effective institution that benefits the American people.

OECD Guidelines Review

Question. The OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises are a pioneering set of standards that promote responsible business conduct. The guidelines were last updated in 2011, and the OECD is currently undertaking a stocktaking to see if they are still fit for purpose or need revision. Several stakeholders have identified gaps in the guidelines, particularly in the areas of gender, environmental impacts, and protections of human rights defenders.

- How will you ensure that the potential updated guidelines are strengthened to further incorporate high standards in these areas?

Answer. I agree with you on the importance of the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises (Guidelines), a key set of recommendations from governments to businesses that promote responsible business conduct. I understand the ongoing stocktaking exercise will assess the guidelines, their implementation, and the OECD's overall work on Responsible Business Conduct. If confirmed, I will work with officials from the State Department and other U.S. Government agencies to take into account stakeholder input and consider ways to further strengthen the guidelines consistent with our shared values.

Question. How will you ensure that this review results in a strengthening—rather than a weakening—of the current standards?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with officials from the State Department and other U.S. Government agencies to take into account the input of all relevant stakeholders, including affected groups, and consider ways to further strengthen the Guidelines consistent with our shared values. I agree on the need to avoid a weakening of the guidelines.

Question. As the U.S. Representative to the OECD, how will you ensure that the NCP system is strong and effective to address business and human rights grievances?

Answer. The U.S. National Contact Point for the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises (Guidelines) serves an important role in promoting and implementing the Guidelines, and in facilitating the resolution of allegations brought against a company. The Guidelines provide important government recommendations to companies on responsible business practices, including with respect to human rights. If confirmed, I will work with the State Department and other agencies to review the current work of the U.S. NCP, consider feedback from concerned stakeholders, and take appropriate steps to ensure the mechanism we have in place is a meaningful one.

China

Question. As you know, this committee has been very focused on reframing our relationship with China through the lens of strategic competition—as evidenced by our bipartisan approach in passing the Strategic Competition Act. This historic, bipartisan legislation is clear-eyed about the challenges we face, and is designed to meet this consequential moment in U.S.-China relations.

- How do you plan on using your position at the OECD to effectively confront and compete with China?

Answer. I am deeply concerned by the People's Republic of China (PRC) actions in international organizations that aim to reshape the international order to align with its authoritarian system. If confirmed, I will keep at the forefront of my actions the focus that any OECD engagement with the PRC must support member nation interests and uphold the norms, high standards, and practices that underpin the rules-based global economic order. Additionally, I will work to leverage the OECD's role in developing best practices for global trade, digital economy policy, anti-corruption, infrastructure, and other policy areas to counter alternative models pushed by authoritarian states that undermine global values, rules, and norms.

U.S.-EU trade

Question. Economic ties between the United States and the EU were damaged under President Trump, particularly with the imposition of tariffs on EU food and beverage imports. These tariffs put additional financial strain on families in my home state of New Jersey, many of whom work in food processing, as well as many restaurants who tried to stay afloat during the pandemic. President Biden suspended these destructive tariffs in March 2021. How will you advance stronger trade ties between the United States and the EU as ambassador? Will you commit to seeking a permanent resolution of the large civil aircraft dispute so that consumers, restaurants, and food importers have certainty in the U.S.-EU trade relationship?

Answer. The United States and the European Union represent the largest economic relationship in the world. The Transatlantic trade and investment relationship is vital for our mutual prosperity. If confirmed, I will work closely with the EU and member states to resolve or deescalate difficult bilateral issues, including in trade, with the EU and other partners. I will work together with our European partners to protect the rules-based global trading system—a system under threat from non-market economies. This includes resolution of the large civil aircraft dispute. In addition, I will work with our trade experts in the U.S. Government, in consultation with business, labor, and other stakeholders to support policies that advance our trade and investment objectives with the European Union for our mutual benefit.

China

Question. The United States has expressed strong support for the Three Seas Initiative as an alternative for Chinese investment plans like the 17+1 format. How do you plan to engage European members on Three Seas and other proposals to reduce Chinese malign influence in Europe?

Answer. I agree with Secretary Blinken that the Three Seas Initiative (3SI) is an important tool to bring the private sector to the table alongside governments to make infrastructure projects happen and to develop robust connections among our Central European Allies that link them closer to each other and to Western European countries. If confirmed, I will work with the EU to support resilient infrastructure in Europe, including through the 3SI and the Build Back Better World and Blue Dot Network initiatives. If confirmed, I will use all the tools at our disposal to work with our EU partners to promote an affirmative vision that is rooted in our shared values and promote high-quality, resilient infrastructure both in Europe and globally.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. MARK GITENSTEIN BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. Russia has been slowing its supply of natural gas through Ukrainian pipelines, which has left some EU members at an all-time low in pre-winter stores of fuel. These empty tanks have pushed energy prices in Europe up very high. EU energy regulations state that no single pipeline owner may supply more than 50 percent of the EU's energy capacity.

- Should the flow of Russian natural gas not return to normal before winter, do you believe that the EU will consider suspending or breaking its regulations with regard to Russian supplier, Gazprom, and allow it to provide more than 50 percent of its natural gas supply to fulfill the increased demand in the winter months?

Answer. I am concerned gas storage in Europe is low and the market is undersupplied compared to prior years. The lower-than-normal levels of gas storage illustrate the importance of diversified energy supplies and suppliers to meet Europe's energy security goals. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the European partners to enhance energy security for member states.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to calling on the European Union to implement the rules and regulations required by the Third Energy Package on Nord Stream 2 as well as on the Turk Stream 1 and 2 pipelines?

Answer. The Nord Stream 2 pipeline is a Russian geopolitical project that undercuts the energy security of a significant part of the Euro-Atlantic community. I understand the administration continues to work with Germany, Ukraine, and other European Allies and partners to reduce the risks of an operational Nord Stream 2 pipeline. This includes the package of measures detailed in the July 21, 2021 U.S.-Germany Joint Statement on support for Ukraine, European Energy Security, and our Climate Goals. If confirmed, I will continue to urge the European Union to apply Third Energy Package directives to ensure that all energy projects in Europe are implemented in a transparent and non-discriminatory manner that promote competition.

Question. Some leaders have been discussing the concept of strategic autonomy in Europe's security posture for almost a decade, and in recent years discussion of it has risen due to the perceived decline of American leadership in the world and a weakening of relations with Europe. Strategic autonomy has now become a major topic of discussion among EU leaders following the U.S. surrender of Europe's energy security to Russia through the concession of Nord Stream 2, the disastrous Afghanistan withdrawal that exposed our allies' vulnerabilities in conducting security operations without close U.S. involvement, and the recent AUKUS deal, which, while a good move for our mutual interests in the Indo-Pacific, left a major ally feeling disenfranchised, overall sending a poor message on how the United States values its allies.

- Is it in the interests of the United States for EU nations to pursue strategic autonomy and develop a military that launch major operations outside of our transatlantic military alliances?

Answer. The administration is committed to re-engaging allies and partners and revitalizing our alliances. I welcome European efforts to strengthen European defense that would enhance Transatlantic security. If confirmed, I will work closely with the EU and member states to ensure that this work is complementary to and not duplicative of NATO's efforts and strengthen practical participation by the United States in EU defense programs. I look forward to engaging with Allies and EU partners to reinforce the unparalleled value of Transatlantic cooperation and the NATO Alliance.

Question. How would strategic autonomy improve the issue of burden sharing in defense cooperation between the U.S. and EU members?

Answer. The EU and EU member states are important partners in addressing key foreign policy, security, and economic issues. A strong EU and strong EU member states committing more resources to defense contribute to the goal of enhanced Transatlantic security. If confirmed, I will work with the EU and EU member states to promote greater U.S. participation in European defense projects and ensure that EU Defense initiatives are coherent, interoperable, complementary to and not duplicative of NATO efforts. If confirmed, I will support continued NATO-EU cooperation and to ensure increased burden sharing by Allies.

Question. How would the formation of a European army open the door to the EU pursuing unilateral security interests that diverge from those of the United States?

Answer. A strong Europe, including EU member states should contribute to the goal of enhanced Transatlantic security. If confirmed, I will work with the EU and EU member states to ensure greater U.S. participation in EU defense initiatives and that these initiatives remain coherent, interoperable, complementary with, and not duplicative of, NATO efforts. Additionally, if confirmed, I will seek ways to support continued NATO-EU cooperation.

Question. Should the EU focus efforts more on expanding its membership, or more on helping current members improve their political and economic situations?

Answer. The EU is an important partner in addressing key foreign policy, security, and economic issues. Member states with durable and capable democratic institutions and strong economies enhance this partnership. Closer integration into key European and Euro-Atlantic institutions has strengthened democratic institutions and rule of law in aspirant countries, contributing to political stability and economic prosperity. If confirmed, I will work with the EU and member states to maintain a focus on governance, rule of law, anti-corruption reforms, independent media, and vibrant civil societies—in short, urging the EU to both support accession-related reforms in candidate states and help current members improve democratic governance and rule of law.

Question. What is the consensus in the EU about expansion, given that some members, such as Hungary, have seen democratic backsliding in recent years?

Answer. I am concerned about backsliding on democratic principles and institutions in some EU member states, including in, but not only in, Hungary. The transatlantic relationship is deeply rooted in the United States' and European Union's shared commitment to democratic values, including the rule of law, judicial independence, and media freedom. These values are an essential part of our relationship with the EU and a topic of frank discussions with member states; a demonstrated commitment to democracy and its institutions is also a prerequisite for EU accession. The administration supports the EU and EU member states' efforts to reverse democratic backsliding within the bloc, and we work alongside the EU to support democratic institutions and promote rule of law reforms in states working towards EU accession. If confirmed, I will work with the EU and member states to support and strengthen democracy across Europe.

Question. China has already been making inroads in Europe by laying debt traps in the Balkans, building the PEACE cable to France, buying stakes in major seaports, and creating formats that divide Europe, like the 17+1. Fortunately, European nations have begun to recognize the threat that China poses and have shut down Chinese attempts to influence educational institutions and businesses.

- What are some concrete ways you will help the United States Government coordinate with and provide mutual support to EU members to combat China's influence?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage with the EU and member states on collective approaches to challenging non-market policies and coercive economic practices that undermine the fair and transparent operation of the global economy, including those from the PRC. If confirmed, I will also work with the EU to support resilient infrastructure, including through the Build Back Better World and Blue Dot Network initiatives and the Three Seas Initiative. Finally, if confirmed, I will use all the tools at our disposal—including the U.S.-EU dialogue on China and the U.S.-EU Trade and Technology Council—to address the challenges posed by the PRC and promote rules of the road that reflect the democratic values shared by the United States and Europe.

Question. Do you believe that the United States should honor its earlier commitment to have the Development Finance Corporation invest $300 million in The Three Seas Initiative Investment Fund?

Answer. I understand that U.S. International Development Finance Corporation continues to strongly support the Three Seas Initiative (3SI) and is engaged in promising discussions with the investment adviser of the 3SI Investment Fund. The relevant parties are working intensively on a vehicle to enable DFC to announce its support to the fund consistent with U.S. legal and regulatory requirements. DFC financing can serve as a catalyst in developing renewable and reliable energy networks that can drive development and growth across priority regions. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the EU to promote investments in quality infrastructure and exploring ways to align our respective infrastructure initiatives.

Question. Will you work to urge the European Union to increase its investments in eastern and southern European infrastructure projects (even those outside of the EU), improve its oversight of strategically-important asset sales?

Answer. The United States is committed to working through the G7's Build Back Better World initiative and the Blue Dot Network to support quality, inclusive, sustainable, and high-standard infrastructure development, including in Europe. We also are a strong supporter of the Three Seas Initiative. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the EU to promote investments in quality infrastructure and exploring ways to align our respective initiatives. Also, if confirmed, I will continue discussions on investment screening approaches under the framework of the U.S.-EU Trade and Technology Council.

Question. What strengths do you see in the European Union's recently-released EU Strategy for Cooperation in the Indo-Pacific? What do you see as the main weaknesses in this Strategy?

Answer. The United States and EU share a vision of the Indo-Pacific that is inclusive and based on the rule of law and democratic values and that contributes to the security and sustainable development of the region. Both prioritize cooperation to promote secure, sustainable, free and open maritime supply routes and supply chains. I was glad to see the President and Secretary of State welcomed the EU's new strategy. If confirmed, I will work with the EU as we each implement our respective Indo-Pacific strategies to ensure our approaches are complementary, are rooted in our shared values, and support shared initiatives like Build Back Better World.

Question. The Balkans, as the poorest and least Euro-integrated region on the continent, have come under heavy pressure from Russia and China.

- How could greater integration with the rest of Europe help reverse and resist these outside forces that seek to use the Balkans as an inroads to Europe and establish a beachhead of influence on the continent?

Answer. Closer integration with key European and Euro-Atlantic institutions has proven to contribute to political stability, strengthening democratic institutions and rule of law and advancing economic prosperity. If confirmed, I will work to support the countries of the Western Balkans as they seek to join the Western community of democracies, including by undertaking the required reforms. These efforts will buttress them against malign actors who seek to undermine democratic principles, subvert the rule of law, and divert these countries from their Western paths.

Question. How great of an obstacle do good governance issues, such as corruption, rule of law, and electoral problems pose to Balkan integration into Europe?

Answer. Closer integration with key European and Euro-Atlantic institutions has proven to contribute to political stability, strengthening democratic institutions and rule of law and advancing economic prosperity. The people of the Western Balkans states deserve transparency, rule of law, multi-ethnic democracy, and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. If confirmed, I will work to support their aspirations and support the reform process to help these countries maintain their paths toward the Western community of democracies.

Question. How would the efforts to improve corruption, rule of law, and economic issues in the Balkans benefit from an increase in effort from the EU to integrate the region?

Answer. Closer integration with key European and Euro-Atlantic institutions has proven to contribute to political stability, strengthening democratic institutions and rule of law and advancing economic prosperity. The people of the Western Balkans states deserve good governance, rule of law, multi-ethnic democracy, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and economic opportunity. However, disillusionment with delays on the Western Balkans' EU path opens the door for harmful influences from our strategic rivals. If confirmed, I will work to support the Western Balkans' European aspirations and support the reform process to help these countries maintain their paths toward the Western community of democracies.

Question. In the wake of Brexit, the UK, Ireland and the greater European Union have been left to tackle the issue of the EU-UK customs border between Ireland and Northern Ireland.

- How will you engage in negotiations on this issue to ensure that U.S. trade interests are protected, and that the Good Friday Agreement is preserved?

Answer. The United States supports a close and cooperative relationship between the United Kingdom and the European Union, based on a shared understanding of democratic values, national security, law enforcement, and a broad range of other interests. The United States also wants to see a confident, forward-looking Northern Ireland with a prosperous economy that reflects the identity and aspirations of every tradition. If confirmed, I will encourage both sides to keep the door open to continued dialogue that will enhance the prospect for long-term, positive solutions and promote strong trade and investment ties with the EU, while preserving the Good Friday Agreement.

Question. Should the EU-UK customs border be formed along the border of Ireland and Northern Ireland, or between the island of Ireland and the island of Great Britain, with Northern Ireland receiving a special condition to maintain unity with the rest of the UK? Do you believe there is a better proposal for a solution to the customs border issue?

Answer. Recent unrest in Northern Ireland underscores the importance of safeguarding the gains of the Belfast/Good Friday Agreement. If confirmed, I will encourage all parties to prioritize political and economic stability and to negotiate when differences arise. I would emphasize the need to ensure any Brexit outcomes do not undermine the progress made since the Belfast/Good Friday Agreement. If confirmed, I will support the Belfast/Good Friday Agreement and welcome the provisions in both the EU-UK Trade and Cooperation Agreement and the Northern Ireland Protocol which help protect hard-won gains.

Question. In July 2020, the European Court of Justice struck down the Privacy Shield program, invalidating a critical mechanism for transferring personal data from the EU to the U.S. This has raised significant concerns about the continued viability of transatlantic data flows at an important moment for U.S. economic recovery, as data flows support more than $245 billion in U.S. digital exports to Europe. There is an ongoing interagency effort to negotiate a successor privacy framework with our European partners, without which U.S. companies are likely to increasingly face barriers to engaging in cross-border digital commerce with Europe.

- If confirmed, will you prioritize the on-going negotiations to replace the Privacy Shield program?

Answer. I understand the urgency of this issue for American businesses and for our Transatlantic ties more broadly. If confirmed, I would prioritize continued U.S.-EU negotiations on an enhanced Privacy Shield Framework to facilitate continued transatlantic data flows while ensuring sufficient privacy protections for individuals on both sides of the Atlantic.

Question. Toward that goal, what steps do you plan to take to support a swift and successful conclusion to the efforts to produce a successor Privacy Shield framework?

Answer. I understand the urgency of this issue for American businesses and for our Transatlantic ties more broadly. If confirmed, I would prioritize continued U.S.-EU negotiations on an enhanced Privacy Shield Framework to facilitate continued transatlantic data flows while ensuring sufficient privacy protections for individuals on both sides of the Atlantic.

Question. This month saw the launch of the U.S.-EU Trade & Technology Council (TTC). While the TTC will cover a broad set of issues, it is well-suited to support U.S. engagement with the EU's proposed Artificial Intelligence Act. As with GDPR, the AI Act is likely to be enacted and set a global benchmark for AI regulation.

- If confirmed, will you seek to engage with your EU counterparts—both directly and through the Trade and Technology Council—as the EU's AI Act moves forward toward avoiding divergent regulatory approaches while supporting interoperability in AI governance?

Answer. The United States welcomes the opportunity to collaborate with the EU on governance approaches to technology that advance innovation, take a risk-based approach that reflects our shared democratic values, and address shared global challenges. The U.S.-EU Trade and Technology Council is a key forum for joint efforts to foster trustworthy, secure, and responsible AI that reflects our shared values and commitment to protecting the rights and dignity of all our citizens. If confirmed, I look forward to advancing this effort and to ensure our respective regulatory frameworks maintain a risk-based, innovation-friendly approach.

Question. Given the importance of the EU-U.S. bilateral and the breadth of pressing tech-related issues, how will you seek to comprehensively balance the interests of U.S. businesses with the strategic goal of enhancing a steadfast relationship with our European allies?

Answer. Building on our shared democratic values and economic relationship—the world's largest—if confirmed, I will use my role as U.S. Ambassador to the EU to implement and inform an agreed interagency approach to achieve an appropriate and comprehensive balance between national security and economic security goals. In my previous experience as U.S. Ambassador to Romania, engaging with government officials and stakeholders from business, labor, and civil society was essential to build relationships and find common ground, even on tough issues.

Question. What are your thoughts regarding restarting the Trans-Atlantic Trade and Investment Partnership (TTIP) talks with Europe? What are your thoughts regarding completing free trade agreement talks with the U.K.?

Answer. The administration is reviewing its policies on trade agreements to ensure that trade supports middle-class jobs and labor. If confirmed, I will work with our trade experts in the U.S. Government, as well as business, labor, and other stakeholders to support policies that advance our trade and investment objectives with Europe our mutual benefit.

Question. The U.S. and the EU have, generally speaking, highly developed regulatory processes based on science that are intended to keep our people healthy and safe. As part of the Trans-Atlantic Trade and Investment Partnership (TTIP) talks under President Obama, exploratory efforts were made to find ways to better coordinate or to find equivalence in our respective regulatory processes. Studies conducted at the time of TTIP suggested significant potential cost savings to both sides through potential alignment on regulatory outcomes. Sometimes these savings were far greater than a simple tariff cutting trade agreement would have provided. In addition, to the extent the U.S. and EU could agree on common approaches to regulation, we together could set global standards for others to follow. What are your thoughts about strengthening engagement on the regulatory front between the U.S. and the EU? Is this a realistic goal to think we could create some convergence between us on the regulatory front? How would you contribute to pursuing it, if confirmed?

Answer. President Biden and his EU counterparts established the U.S.-EU Trade and Technology Council in June 2021 as a forum to shape the rules of the road for the 21st century economy and demonstrate how democratic approaches to trade, technology, and innovation can improve the lives of our citizens. The inaugural ministerial meeting took place in Pittsburgh on September 29. The two sides intend to discuss ways to avoid non-tariff barriers, particularly in emerging technology such as artificial intelligence. If confirmed, I will work to ensure our respective regulatory frameworks maintain a risk-based, innovation-friendly approach.

Question. For decades, China has been underwriting steel production through cheap loans and other government interventions. Such Chinese Government support to Chinese steel has hurt the steel industry in the U.S. This overproduction has also injured many other countries as excess Chinese steel (produced according to political directives and not necessarily in response to market demand) is dumped, creating ripple effects throughout the rest of the world including in Europe. Europe should be a potential natural ally in forming a coalition to pressure China to reform its steel practices. What are your thoughts on how we might partner with Europe on countering such anti-market practices by China?

Answer. The United States and the European Union committed in May to enter into discussions that would address global steel and aluminum excess capacity and the deployment of effective solutions, including appropriate trade measures to preserve our critical industries. By working together with our allies to address excess capacity and non-market practices, we can support strong domestic steel and aluminum production, inputs in supply chains critical to our national security. If confirmed, I will support efforts to resolve or deescalate difficult bilateral issues with the EU and other partners and focus on the shared threat we face from non-market economies.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. MARK GITENSTEIN BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question. What is the unify vision of the European Union?

Answer. The President has emphasized the United States' continued commitment to the goal of a Europe whole, free, and at peace. A strong relationship with a united European Union will be essential to face the challenges of the present and future. If confirmed, I will work to revitalize and raise the level of ambition in our relations with the EU to address the challenges we face and promote an affirmative vision rooted in our shared democratic values.

Question. Do you support a European Union having its own Army?

Answer. A strong Europe, including EU member states, should contribute to the goal of enhanced Transatlantic security. If confirmed, I will work with the EU and EU member states to ensure greater U.S. participation in EU defense initiatives, and that these initiatives remain coherent, interoperable, complementary with, and not duplicative of, NATO efforts. Additionally, if confirmed, I will seek ways to support continued NATO-EU cooperation.

Question. How do you plan to plan to foster a "transatlantic view" for security vs. the "Europe alone" attitude espoused by President Macron?

Answer. The EU is a vital partner in addressing key foreign policy, security, and economic issues. A strong EU contributes to enhanced transatlantic security. If confirmed, I will work with the EU and EU member states to ensure that EU security and defense initiatives are coherent, complementary, and interoperable with and not duplicative of NATO efforts. If confirmed, I will seek ways to support and enhance continued NATO-EU cooperation to address the multiple and evolving security challenges confronting the United States, NATO Allies, and EU member states. There is strength in numbers. We are more effective in facing common threats if we work together and combine our resources and expertise than if we work separately.

Question. How can the EU work with NATO to advice the common interest of European Security?

Answer. The administration has committed itself to re-engaging European allies and partners. I welcome European efforts to strengthen European defense including by spending more on defense. If confirmed, I will work closely with the EU and EU member states to ensure that defense efforts should be coherent, complimentary, and interoperable with and not duplicative of NATO efforts. If confirmed I will seek to strengthen NATO-EU cooperation and work with Allies and partners to enhance Transatlantic security. Julie Smith, if confirmed, and I have committed to meet weekly in Brussels towards this goal.

Question. Would you say that Russia, not climate change is the biggest threat to European Security?

Answer. The administration has worked with the EU on strengthening our mutual ability both to resist Russian use of energy as a weapon and to combat climate change, and if confirmed I will continue to do so.

Question. How can the EU stand up to Russia when it continues to peruse Russian energy?

Answer. Europe's continued reliance on Russia for its energy supply remains a top threat to its energy security. Russia is the main EU supplier of crude oil, natural gas, and solid fuels. Russia's nuclear fuel supply monopoly in Central and Eastern Europe is also a matter of concern. The administration strongly supports diversification of energy supplies to diminish the role of geopolitics in energy markets, reduce consumer prices, and enhance energy security. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the European Union on enhancing energy security for member states and pushing back against Russia's attempts to use energy as a weapon.

Question. Would you oppose further European joint energy projects with Russia?

Answer. The administration strongly supports diversification of energy supplies to diminish the role of geopolitics in energy markets, reduce consumer prices, and enhance energy security. If confirmed, I look forward to working with European Union on enhancing energy security for member states and pushing back against Russia's attempts to use energy as a weapon.

Question. What should be the lesson the EU should learn from Ukraine who has had their energy turned off by Russia and now faces severe energy shortfalls this winter?

Answer. If confirmed, I would support the administration's efforts to work with our allies and partners to promote a more secure and sustainable energy future for Ukraine and frontline NATO and EU countries, and to push back against Russian attempts to use energy as a weapon.

Question. Do you see Turkey becoming an EU member in the foreseeable future?

Answer. Turkey will need to meet the EU accession conditions, including implementing reforms that ensure respect for human rights, fundamental freedoms, and democratic institutions. To do this, Turkey will need to undertake reforms to reverse the democratic backsliding that has occurred. If confirmed, I will encourage both the EU and Turkey to continue to concretely advance a positive EU-Turkey agenda and to encourage Turkey, in coordination with our embassy in Ankara, to undertake the necessary reforms.

Question. What would have to change to make that happen or happen faster?

Answer. Turkey will need to meet the EU accession conditions, including implementing reforms that ensure respect for human rights, fundamental freedoms, and democratic institutions. It will also have to make more technical reforms ranging from customs union modernization to migration cooperation. If confirmed, I will encourage both the EU and Turkey to continue to concretely advance a positive EU-Turkey agenda and to encourage Turkey, in coordination with our embassy in Ankara, to undertake the necessary reforms.

Question. How can the EU work with Turkey to manage the humanitarian crisis that is still ongoing in southern Europe?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to work closely with our partners in the European Union and member states on providing humanitarian assistance and diplomatic engagement with Turkey and other countries to respond to the humanitarian issues in the southern Europe. We have encouraged Turkey to maintain its close coordination with the EU and international organizations to promote coordinated, effective, and efficient humanitarian responses in southern Europe.

Question. If confirmed, will you prioritize the on-going negotiations to replace the Privacy Shield program?

Answer. I understand the urgency of this issue for American businesses and for our Transatlantic ties more broadly. If confirmed, I would prioritize continued U.S.-EU negotiations on an enhanced Privacy Shield Framework to facilitate continued transatlantic data flows while ensuring sufficient privacy protections for individuals on both sides of the Atlantic.

Question. What steps do you plan to take to support a swift and successful conclusion to the efforts to produce a successor Privacy Shield framework?

Answer. I understand the urgency of this issue for American businesses and for our Transatlantic ties more broadly. If confirmed, I would prioritize continued U.S.-EU negotiations on an enhanced Privacy Shield Framework to facilitate continued transatlantic data flows while ensuring sufficient privacy protections for individuals on both sides of the Atlantic.

Question. If confirmed, will you seek to engage with your EU counterparts—both directly and through the Trade and Technology Council—as the EU’s AI Act moves forward toward avoiding divergent regulatory approaches while supporting interoperability in AI governance?

Answer. Yes. The United States welcomes the opportunity to collaborate with the EU on governance approaches to technology that advance innovation, take a risk-based approach, reflect our shared democratic values, and address shared global challenges. The U.S.-EU Trade and Technology Council is a key forum for joint efforts to foster trustworthy, secure, and responsible AI that reflects our shared values and commitment to protecting the rights and dignity of all our citizens. If confirmed, I look forward to advancing this effort and to ensure our respective regulatory frameworks maintain a risk-based, innovation-friendly approach.

Question. Given the importance of the EU-U.S. bilateral and the breadth of pressing tech-related issues, how will you seek to comprehensively balance the interests of U.S. businesses with the strategic goal of enhancing a steadfast relationship with our European allies?

Answer. Building on our shared democratic values and economic relationship—the world’s largest—if confirmed, I will use my role as U.S. Ambassador to the EU to implement and inform an agreed interagency approach to achieving an appropriate and comprehensive balance between national security and economic security goals. In my previous experience as U.S. Ambassador to Romania, engaging with government officials and stakeholders from business, labor, and civil society was essential to build relationships and find common ground, even on tough issues.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. JEFFREY LANE FLAKE BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question. The Azerbaijani military attacked ethnic Armenian positions using Turkish drones during the 2020 Nagorno-Karabakh War. Satellite images showed Turkish F-16s at an airport in Azerbaijan, and Armenia claims that a Turkish F-16 shot down one of its planes in Armenian airspace in September 2020. Reports indicate that Turkey recruited and paid Syrian mercenaries to aid Azerbaijan’s military. What tools would you use as Ambassador to hold the Turkish Government accountable for its role in exacerbating international conflicts as it did in Nagorno-Karabakh?

Answer. Over the past several years Turkey has pursued a more independent foreign policy that has at times advanced American interests and in some cases has been unhelpful and destabilizing. If confirmed, I will work with counterparts in the Departments of State, Defense, Treasury, and the United States Congress to encourage and, if necessary, pressure Turkey to take actions in line with NATO and U.S. interests in the region. If confirmed, I will support efforts to engage bilaterally and multilaterally to advance conflict resolution and normalization in the Caucasus.

Question. Ever since the 2016 coup attempt, the Erdogan regime has engaged in increasingly systematic human rights violations, including through mass detentions, undermining elections, arbitrary arrests, indefinite detention, and in some cases, torture. President Erdogan has undermined the judiciary, attacked the free press, and repressed civil society and the political opposition. How will you use your role as Ambassador to highlight these abuses and put pressure on the regime to meet its values oriented commitments as a NATO ally?

Answer. It is in the U.S. national interest for Turkey—a key player on regional issues—to be a stable, democratic, prosperous, and reliable Ally and partner. If con-confirmed, I will reinforce the importance of democracy and human rights to our bilateral relationship and urge the Government to make the necessary reforms to reverse democratic backsliding. If confirmed, I will urge the Government of Turkey to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms, uphold fair trial guarantees, enable civil society and independent media to operate, support the empowerment of women, and defend the rights of all. I will call for the immediate release of all those incarcerated for exercising their fundamental freedoms and participate in events that promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Question. As recently as last week, 22 Turkish fighter jets committed 17 violations of Greek airspace in the Aegean Sea. This behavior is emblematic of past Turkish violations of Greek airspace, as well as forays into the Cypriot Exclusive Economic Zone. How will you engage the Turkish Government on these issues of aggression against U.S. allies and partners?

Answer. I understand the United States has been clear with Turkey that military flights through Greek airspace are unhelpful and provocative. If confirmed, I will encourage Ankara to respect the sovereign airspace of other countries and to operate state aircraft with due regard for the safety of navigation of civil aircraft. Where disagreements exist over the limits of a country's territorial airspace, I will urge coordination and discussion. Disagreements between Greece and Turkey should be resolved through diplomacy and engagement.

Question. Turkey's military efforts against the Syrian Kurds, including through Turkish-sponsored Syrian proxies, undermine U.S. counterterrorism objectives and serve as a major point of friction in what could be a more unified U.S. and Turkish approach to Syria. Previous administrations actively worked to manage and mitigate Turkish concerns with U.S. support to the Syrian Democratic Forces. If confirmed, will you pledge to reinvigorate diplomacy on this front, despite its role as a cross-Bureau issue within the Department?

Answer. Turkey is an important member of the Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS. If I understand correctly, the administration is cognizant of Turkey's long-standing concerns about U.S. cooperation with the Syrian Democratic Forces (SDF) in the counter-ISIS campaign. The SDF's efforts were critical to collapsing ISIS's fraudulent "caliphate" and remain essential to further degrading the group. The Biden administration remains committed to countering ISIS and other terrorist threats to the security of the United States, its partners and allies. If confirmed, I pledge to fully engage with my counterparts across bureaus in the Department of State and in the Department of Defense to advance U.S. policy goals in Syria.

Question. The Turkish Government is actively seeking U.N. approval and cooperation to facilitate the return of Syrian refugees in Turkey to Syria, despite the unsuitable ground conditions for doing so. This reflects the efforts of select European nations, but poses an unacceptable humanitarian and political precedent. If confirmed, will you pledge to advocate against these actions with the Turkish Government, and work collaboratively to identify opportunities to reduce tensions associated with Syrian refugees communities in Turkey?

Answer. The administration appreciates Turkey's generosity in hosting four million refugees, 3.6 million of whom are from Syria, and acknowledges the challenges of doing so both for the Turkish Government and local communities. In line with U.N. assessments, the administration does not believe conditions in Syria at this time are conducive for any systematic or large-scale returns, and I agree. Consistent with international principles, refugee returns should be safe, dignified, informed, and voluntary. If confirmed, I will work with Turkey in line with these principles and explore ways to reduce tensions related to Syrian refugee communities in Turkey and reinforce the administration's position on returns.

Question. The maritime boundary agreement between Turkey and Libya is based on a flawed reading of international maritime law and infringes on the legitimate maritime claims of Turkey's Mediterranean neighbors, especially Greece. What will your message be to Turkey on this? Will you call on them to respect the legitimate claims of their neighbors?

Answer. It is my understanding that the United States generally does not take a position on other states' maritime boundary disputes and calls on all parties to refrain from all actions that risk heightening tensions in the Eastern Mediterranean. If confirmed, I will consistently urge Turkey to resolve maritime delimitation issues with its neighbors peacefully through dialogue and in accordance with international law. In addition, consistent with my understanding of the administration's policy, if I see provocative action being taken I will not hesitate to call it out.

Question. Turkish-backed fighters in Libya pose a significant threat to that country's stability and its upcoming elections, as do Russian-backed fighters from Wagner. Will you urge Turkey to withdraw these Syrians and commit to Libya's political process?

Answer. The administration made public statements strongly supporting the operationalization of UNSC resolution 2570 (2021) and full implementation of the October 23 Libyan ceasefire. If confirmed, I will call on the Turkish Government to use its influence to encourage all Libyan parties to establish the framework and constitutional basis for on-time national elections on December 24.

Question. The EMGF is a great consortium of regional energy players, but its focus on natural gas is not sustainable. In order to avoid the most catastrophic consequences of climate change, all countries need to reduce their reliance and usage of fossil fuels to ensure that global warming does not exceed 2 degrees Celsius. While natural gas is less polluting than oil and coal, it is not a sustainable alternative. How do you think the United States should leverage its role as an official observer to push this forum past an explicit focus on natural gas to one that is focused on a diverse and sustainable regional energy mix?

Answer. The Eastern Mediterranean Gas Forum presents new opportunities for collaboration with allies and key partners. The Forum can help promote greater cooperation, energy security, and economic prosperity throughout the region. If confirmed, I will build on the work between colleagues in the Bureaus of Near Eastern Affairs, Energy Resources, and European and Eurasian Affairs to coordinate our engagement and am eager to learn more about the EMGF's announcement earlier this year that it plans to work with specialists to discuss and promote gas decarbonization. I will also take steps to encourage Turkey, which is not a member of the EMGF, to collaborate with regional partners in incorporating more renewable energy sources for their energy needs.

Question. Turkey is increasingly dependent on energy imports, especially fossil fuels. Turkey's nationally determined contribution (i.e. its Paris Agreement commitment) is critically insufficient to uphold the 2 degrees Celsius global warming limit outlined in the Paris Agreement. Turkey has not submitted an updated nationally determined contribution (required under the Paris Agreement) and their path to a 2 degree Celsius-aligned economy is unclear. How can the United States support lowering the carbon intensity of Turkish energy consumption and increase their climate ambition in line with the 2 degrees Celsius Paris Agreement target?

Answer. Turkey is a leader in renewable energy, producing almost half its electricity from renewable sources, especially hydropower. However, Turkey's current pledge to reduce levels of greenhouse gas emissions is weak and would still allow a doubling in the volume of Turkey's emissions over the next decade. If confirmed, I will engage with the Turkish Government and private sector to seek collaboration on technologies and investment in infrastructure critical to increasing Turkey's energy security and reducing emissions. I will urge Turkey not only to follow through on President Erdogan's very welcome announcement regarding its plan to ratify the Paris Agreement, but also to put forward a strengthened 2030 emissions reduction target consistent with achieving net zero emissions by 2050.

Anomalous Health Incidents

Question. I am very concerned about directed energy attacks on U.S. Government personnel (so-called Anomalous Health Incidents). Ensuring the safety and security of our personnel abroad falls largely on individual Chiefs of Mission and the response of officers at post. It is imperative that any individual who reports a suspected incident be responded to promptly, equitably, and compassionately.

- Do you agree these incidents must be taken seriously, and pose a threat to the health of U.S. personnel?

Answer. This is a sensitive ongoing investigation and is a top priority for Secretary of State Antony Blinken. I understand a major interagency effort is investigating what is causing the incidents and how the Embassy community can be protected. If confirmed, I will do my utmost to ensure anyone who reports an anomalous health incident receives immediate and appropriate attention and care. If confirmed, I will consider it my primary responsibility to ensure the safety and security of the Embassy community.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to ensuring that any reported incident is treated seriously and reported quickly through the appropriate channels, and that any affected individuals receive prompt access to medical care?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that any employee or family member who reports a possible anomalous health incident receives immediate and appropriate attention and care. If confirmed, I will communicate with our workforce to provide care for affected employees and their family members and work together with partners in Washington and the interagency to do what we can to protect against these incidents and, of course, to find the cause of what has been afflicting these members of our Embassy community. If confirmed, I will consider it my primary responsibility to ensure the safety and security of the Embassy community.

Question. Do you commit to meeting with medical staff and the RSO at post to discuss any past reported incidents and ensure that all protocols are being followed?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will consider it my primary responsibility to ensure the safety and security of the Embassy community.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO HON. JEFFREY LANE FLAKE BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. Relations between Turkey and Greece have been strained in recent years, with exclusive economic zone disputes in the Aegean and Mediterranean seas, pressures from mass migration, and tensions over Cyprus. How would you work with the U.S. mission in Greece to take a coordinate approach to protecting U.S. interests affected by the Greco-Turkish relationship?

Answer. The administration has been clear that it supports all efforts to reduce tensions in the Eastern Mediterranean and welcomes exploratory talks between Greece and Turkey. The Biden administration has also made clear that it is committed to ensuring stability in the Eastern Mediterranean, that the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all countries should be respected and protected, and that disagreements in the region should be resolved through diplomacy. If confirmed, I will work collaboratively with our Ambassador in Athens to pursue opportunities for the United States Government to encourage these two important NATO Allies to take the necessary steps to reduce tensions and resolve disputes.

Question. Since its initial intervention in January 2020, Turkey has deployed hundreds of troops and Syrian militia fighters to Libya in support of the then internationally recognized government, the Government of National Accord. After months of fighting between the Turkish-backed GNA and its eastern based rival, the Libyan National Army (LNA), which garnered support from Russia, Egypt, and the United Arab Emirates (UAE) among others, a ceasefire agreement was reached in October 2020. Under the terms of the U.N. brokered agreement, both sides and their respective backers agreed to withdraw all foreign forces and mercenaries from the country. Despite the October 2020 ceasefire agreement, the U.N. Secretary General, in address to the Security Council remarked that thousands of foreign forces remained in Libya as of early September 2021, "with no discernible abatement of their activities." Furthermore, there continues to be ongoing violations of the U.N. arms embargo on Libya by a variety of actors.

- Please provide your assessment of Turkey's role in the conflict in Libya.

Answer. Turkey joins the United States and others in supporting the Libyan-led, U.N.-facilitated political process, including elections on December 24 this year. The administration also publicly and strongly supported the operationalization of UNSC resolution 2570 (2021) and full implementation of the October 23 Libyan ceasefire. If confirmed, I will stress to our Turkish colleagues and all parties involved that it is essential to end the Libya conflict through an inclusive political process, providing essential public services, and through ensuring free, fair, and credible elections.

Question. Since its initial intervention in January 2020, Turkey has deployed hundreds of troops and Syrian militia fighters to Libya in support of the then internationally recognized government, the Government of National Accord. After months of fighting between the Turkish-backed GNA and its eastern based rival, the Libyan National Army (LNA), which garnered support from Russia, Egypt, and the United Arab Emirates (UAE) among others, a ceasefire agreement was reached in October 2020. Under the terms of the U.N. brokered agreement, both sides and their respective backers agreed to withdraw all foreign forces and mercenaries from the country. Despite the October 2020 ceasefire agreement, the U.N. Secretary

General, in address to the Security Council remarked that thousands of foreign forces remained in Libya as of early September 2021, “with no discernible abatement of their activities.” Furthermore, there continues to be ongoing violations of the U.N. arms embargo on Libya by a variety of actors. Please provide your assessment of Turkey’s role in the conflict in Libya.

Answer. The United States has been clear that all foreign fighters and forces need to withdraw from Libya, including Turkish forces. Turkey supports a staged, coordinated withdrawal of its forces that is matched to a withdrawal of other foreign forces in the country. Turkey joins the United States and others in supporting the Libyan-led, U.N.-facilitated political process, including elections on December 24 this year. The presence of foreign fighters in Libya undermines U.S. goals of this Libyan-led political process to resolve the conflict. However, it is also the case that Turkey’s intervention in 2020 secured Tripoli, preventing the fall of the Government of National Accord and averting a humanitarian crisis. As I understand, Turkey’s foreign policy on Libya is aimed at cementing the position of an internationally recognized government in Tripoli that is friendly to Ankara’s security interests in the Eastern Mediterranean and North Africa.

If confirmed, I will stress to our Turkish colleagues and all parties involved that it is essential to end the Libya conflict through an inclusive political process, providing essential public services, and through ensuring free, fair, and credible elections.

Question. If confirmed, how do you propose to work with the U.N. to advance efforts to ensure Turkey’s fully complies with the October 2020 ceasefire agreement?

Answer. If confirmed, I will coordinate closely with my counterparts in the State Department’s Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs (NEA) to ensure Mission Turkey informs and advances U.S. policy in Libya. In coordination with my colleagues in NEA and the Bureau of International Organization Affairs, I will also work with the United Nations Support Mission in Libya to create the conditions for successful elections in Libya in December of this year.

Question. What are the prospects for a full Turkish withdrawal from the country to include its troops, mercenaries, and military equipment?

Answer. I understand the United States supports UNSC resolution 2570 (2021) and full implementation of the October 23 Libyan ceasefire. If confirmed, I will coordinate closely with my counterparts across the State Department to ensure Mission Turkey informs and advances U.S. policy in Libya.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. What are the prospects for a full Turkish withdrawal from the country to include its troops, mercenaries, and military equipment?

Answer. While I am not able to comment on a hypothetical, as I understand, Turkey believes that its direct military intervention helped enable the then U.N.-recognized interim Government of National Accord (GNA) to repel a Russian-supported offensive. Turkey has also claimed credit for the de facto ceasefire since June 2020 that enabled a U.N.-led political process to take hold and the formation of a unity government.

However, the presence of foreign fighters in Libya undermines our goal of a Libyan-led political process to resolve the conflict. Turkey supports a staged, coordinated withdrawal of its forces that is matched to a withdrawal of other foreign forces in the country. We stand ready to facilitate such an agreement, and if confirmed, I will coordinate closely with my counterparts across the State Department to ensure Mission Turkey informs and advances U.S. policy in Libya.

Question. In your view, what interest does Turkey have in remaining involved in Libya?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to call on Turkey to operationalize UNSC resolution 2570 (2021) and support an end to the Libya conflict through an inclusive political process, providing essential public services, and ensuring free, fair, and credible elections.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. In your view, what interest does Turkey have in remaining involved in Libya?

Answer. Turkey's foreign policy on Libya aims to cement the position of an internationally recognized government in Tripoli that is friendly to Ankara's economic and security interests in the Eastern Mediterranean and North Africa. Turkey also hopes to secure a new Arab ally, preferably with an Islamist outlook, in a region where it has few. If confirmed, I will continue to call on Turkey to operationalize UNSC resolution 2570 (2021) and support an end to the Libya conflict through an inclusive political process, providing essential public services, and ensuring free, fair, and credible elections.

Question. Do you see Turkey's interest in remaining involved in Libya changing over the next year?

Answer. The administration made public statements strongly supporting the operationalization of UNSC resolution 2570 (2021) and full implementation of the October 23 Libyan ceasefire. If confirmed, I will continue to call on all parties to support the U.N.-facilitated, Libyan-led political process to ensure free, fair, and credible elections.

FOLLOW-UP TO THE PREVIOUS QUESTION

Question. Do you see Turkey's interest in remaining involved in Libya changing over the next year?

Answer. The administration made public statements strongly supporting the operationalization of UNSC resolution 2570 (2021) and full implementation of the October 23 Libyan ceasefire. Current U.S. outreach to Turkey on Libya is focused on pressing Ankara to use its influence with Libyan parties to get them to reach an agreement on an electoral framework that would enable on-time national elections in December 2021. If confirmed, I will continue to call on all parties to support the U.N.-facilitated, Libyan-led political process to ensure free, fair, and credible elections.

Question. Turkey's objectives in northeast Syria run counter to U.S. interests, particularly with respect to the so-called Operation Peace Spring Zone, which it seized following an offensive in 2019, while we tacitly support their activities in the northwest.

- How do we reconcile these two contradictory policies?

Answer. The United States and Turkey share an interest in sustainably ending the Syria civil war. The United States is grateful for Turkey's continued support to 3.6 million Syrian refugees in Turkey and for being a critical partner in ensuring Syrians have access to life-saving assistance, including through the continuation of cross-border assistance in northwest Syria. Turkey has also been an important member of the Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS. The Biden administration remains committed to countering ISIS and other terrorist threats to the security of the United States and its partners and allies, to include through a limited military presence in northeast Syria. The Syrian Democratic Forces remain a capable and effective partner to U.S. forces on the ground. If confirmed, I will ensure we consult Ankara on Syria policy and seek areas for understanding while also making clear the United States' enduring security interests where we disagree.

Question. To what extent do you feel we share overlapping objectives in Syria?

Answer. The United States and Turkey share an interest in sustainably ending the Syria civil war. The United States is grateful for Turkey's continued support to 3.6 million Syrian refugees and for being a critical partner in ensuring Syrians have access to life-saving assistance, including through the continuation of cross-border assistance in northwest Syria. Turkey has also been an important member of the Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS. The Biden administration remains committed to countering ISIS and other terrorist threats to the security of the United States and its partners and allies.

Question. Please provide your assessment of how Turkish-Russian cooperation in Syria impacts U.S. national security objectives, including with respect to the fight against terror.

Answer. Turkey worked with Russia to maintain the ceasefire in northwest Syria agreed to in March 2020. The maintenance of this ceasefire supports U.S. efforts to advance the political process as outlined in UNSCR 2254. The United States and Turkey share an interest in sustainably ending the Syria civil war. The United States is grateful for Turkey's continued support to 3.6 million Syrian refugees who fled the conflict. Turkey is also an important member of the Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS. The Biden administration remains committed to countering ISIS and other terrorist threats to the security of the United States and its partners and allies.

Question. What are your plans for navigating our relationship with Syria given Turkey's longstanding concerns with respect to U.S. Syrian Kurdish partners?

Answer. The United States and Turkey share an interest in sustainably ending the Syria civil war. It is my understanding that the administration continues to consult Ankara on Syria policy and seeks areas for cooperation. Additionally, the United States recognizes Turkey as an important member of the Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS while being cognizant of Turkey's long-standing concerns about U.S. cooperation with the Syrian Democratic Forces (SDF) in the counter-ISIS campaign. The SDF is the primary counter-ISIS partner of the United States in Syria. The efforts of the SDF were critical to collapsing ISIS's fraudulent territorial "caliphate" and remain essential to degrading the group. The Biden administration remains committed to countering ISIS and other terrorist threats to the security of the United States and its partners and allies. If confirmed, I will continue to work together with Turkey and local Syrian partners for the safety and security of U.S. forces, partner forces, and civilians.

Question. In your view, can the U.S. find a way to balance Syria-Turkish policy short of reaching a solution to the Kurdish issue?

Answer. If I understand correctly, the administration's view is that stability in Syria, and the greater region, is best served through a political process that produces peaceful outcomes in Syria. The United States has committed to working with allies, partners, and the U.N. to ensure that a durable political solution remains within reach. I will continue work to address Turkish concerns while advancing critical U.S. national security interests.

Question. How do you plan to work with Turkey to ensure the continued delivery of humanitarian aid to Syria?

Answer. The United States is grateful for Turkey's continued support to millions of Syrian refugees who fled the conflict. Turkey has also remained an important partner in ensuring Syrians in Syria have access to life-saving assistance. This includes the facilitation of humanitarian assistance to those in need. Turkey was instrumental in the recent passage of UNSCR 2585, allowing for cross-border access for humanitarian aid to Syria. If confirmed, I will continue to work with Turkey to expand humanitarian access to reach those in need.

Question. To what extent are you concerned about allegations of human rights abuses carried out by Turkish backed forces, including HTS, in Syria?

Answer. I am gravely concerned by continued reports that some Syrian groups that Turkey supports are violating the law of armed conflict and committing human rights abuses in Syria. On July 28, the United States imposed sanctions on Ahrar al-Sharqiya - an armed Syrian opposition group known to be receiving support from Turkey - for committing human rights abuses. If confirmed, I will continue to monitor these reports and would urge Turkey to reconsider its relationships with any groups that commit human rights abuses, use its influence to press them to cease human rights abuses, hold perpetrators accountable, and take steps to prevent any such abuses.

Question. Can you commit to working with Turkey to ensure unfettered access to the areas under its control?

Answer. Turkey has remained an important partner in ensuring Syrians have access to life-saving assistance. This includes the facilitation of humanitarian assistance to those in need inside Syria and helping to support Syrian refugees living in Turkey. If confirmed, I will work to ensure those in areas under Turkish control in northwest Syria have unfettered access to critical humanitarian assistance.

Question. In many ways, the growing rivalry between the United Arab Emirates and Turkey has played a key role in reshaping the Middle East and North Africa region, while simultaneously having a notable impact in countries across Africa as well.

- Please provide your perspective on the role the United States should play in mediating tensions between Turkey and our Gulf partners?

Answer. I think I can safely say that the United States would welcome and support efforts by Turkey and the United Arab Emirates to decrease tensions and strengthen cooperation. If confirmed, I will continue to work with Turkey to increase prosperity and security between the two countries and across the wider region.

Question. To what extent do you see this rivalry as having negative implications on U.S. national security interests?

Answer. I think I can safely say that tensions and rivalry between Turkey and the UAE only benefit our adversaries. The United States welcomes efforts to improve the relationship between Turkey and the UAE. If confirmed, I will encourage our NATO Ally Turkey to resolve disagreements in the region through diplomacy.

Question. The security relationship between the United States and Turkey has been at an impasse over the issue of Turkey's purchase and deployment of Russian S-400 missile launchers. How will you communicate to the Turkish Government that while we value Turkey as an ally, there is a limit to the anti-alliance behavior the U.S. will tolerate?

Answer. Turkey is a NATO Ally with which we have many common interests, as well as disagreements. Turkey had the opportunity to buy Patriot surface-to-air missile systems but chose to acquire and test the Russian S-400. This action resulted in significant negative impacts to Turkey, including the imposition of CAATSA sanctions and Turkey's removal from the F-35 program. If confirmed, I will be crystal clear that Turkey should not retain the S-400 system and that any new Russian arms purchases risk triggering new CAATSA sanctions in addition to those already imposed.

Question. Turkey is in increasingly difficult economic straits. Meanwhile, in 2019 and 2020, there was much talk of a U.S.-Turkey trade deal as a potential piece of a larger agreement to smooth over the issues in the bilateral relationship.

- Do you see the realization of a U.S.-Turkey trade deal as a realistic possibility in the next three years?

Answer. I see significant opportunities for the United States and Turkey to continue strengthening our trading relationship. If confirmed, I will seek to promote high-level trade and investment engagement with Turkey, including under the umbrella of the Trade and Investment Framework Agreement (TIFA).

Question. Do you believe that a trade deal with Turkey would be beneficial to the United States?

Answer. I believe that enhanced trade and investment ties with Turkey will help the United States and our business community by creating new trade opportunities for our companies, in particular through reducing barriers to market access. If confirmed, I will work with our trade experts in the U.S. Government and business leaders to ensure that any trade arrangements with Turkey are in the best interests of the United States and our business community.

Question. Do you believe that a trade deal with Turkey would be beneficial to Turkey?

Answer. I believe that enhanced trade and investment ties with Turkey will be beneficial to Turkey by lowering market barriers between our countries, which will be critical to encouraging businesses on both sides to explore new commercial opportunities.

Question. Three current or (now) former locally-employed staff in our embassies and consulates in Turkey currently face restrictions on their freedom for having allegedly taken part in the 2015 coup against Erdogan in some small way. These allegations have very little substance to back them up, and these men are either in prison or unable to leave their home or the country.

- If confirmed, do you commit to be increasingly vocal with the Turkish Government about its role in this abuse of power and to advocate for the full release of these men and an end to their persecution?

Answer. I am deeply troubled by the ongoing legal proceedings, imprisonment, or controls targeting of U.S. locally employed staff—Metin Topuz Mete Canturk and Hamza Ulucay—in Turkey based on unsubstantiated charges related to their official duties. It is my understanding that the United States Government remains deeply concerned by the prosecutions and detentions and follows their cases closely. If confirmed, I will advocate with the highest levels of Turkish officials for the immediate cessation of all judicial processes and restrictions targeting our locally employed staff s.

Question. Such realities are certain to have had an impact on the morale of locally-employed staff at Mission Turkey, and may have even impacted the Mission's ability to hire and retain good staff.

- What is your understanding of morale in Mission Turkey, particularly among LES?

Answer. It is my understanding that the administration has repeatedly expressed concerns regarding Turkey's continued unjust legal proceedings and judicial controls targeting local staff working for our diplomatic mission in Turkey. If confirmed, I will reiterate to Ankara the importance of the immediate cessation of all judicial processes and restrictions targeting our locally employed staff. And if confirmed, I will ensure that the Department of State remains focused on this issue.

Question. How do you intend to improve morale across the Embassy and Consulates?

Answer. If confirmed, I will build on the work of my predecessor, along with the rest of the leadership team of the Embassy and Consulates, to be a firm advocate for the welfare, safety and security of all staff members of Mission Turkey, and especially for the locally employed staff. I will, if confirmed, convey clearly to all members of the Mission Turkey team that the safety and well-being of the staff are my highest priorities.

Question. How do you intend to create a unified mission and vision across Mission Turkey?

Answer. If confirmed, I will immediately assess the situation that prevails across Mission Turkey, review and update the Mission's priorities, strategy, and activities in full alignment with the strategy and priorities of the President and the Secretary of State. As Chief of Mission, I will continually maintain security, morale, well-being, productivity, and effectiveness across all of Mission Turkey -- Embassy and Consulates equally - throughout my tenure.

Question. If confirmed, how will you engage with the Turkish Government to push for significant human rights reforms, including rights for religious minorities and women and girls?

Answer. If confirmed, I will publicly and privately urge the Government of Turkey to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms, enable the participation of civil society and independent media, uphold fair trial guarantees, support the empowerment of women and defend the rights of all, including freedom from gender-based violence. If confirmed, I will also host and participate in events that promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. It is in the U.S. national interest for Turkey to be a stable, democratic, prosperous, and reliable Ally and partner. Although Turkey has withdrawn from the Istanbul Convention on the prevention of violence against women, I will urge them to honor their commitments made in that treaty. If confirmed, I will work with Turkey on areas of mutual concern, reinforce the importance of democracy and human rights to our bilateral relationship, and urge the Government to make the necessary reforms to reverse democratic backsliding.

Question. In the 2021 State Department Human Rights Report, Turkish authorities were described as using "antiterror laws broadly against opposition political party members, human rights activists, media outlets, suspected PKK sympathizers, and alleged Gulen movement members or groups affiliated with the Gulen movement, among others, including to seize assets of companies, charities, or businesses."

- Please describe your engagements, if confirmed, to address these egregious human rights concerns in Turkey?

Answer. The July 2016 coup attempt was a deeply traumatic event for Turkey. I understand and appreciate the Government of Turkey's need to bring the alleged perpetrators of the 2016 coup attempt to justice, but the quality and impartiality of justice matters. Strong judicial independence and respect for the rule of law must accompany any investigation, legal process, or detention to ensure respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. If confirmed, I will urge Turkey to revise its antiterrorism laws in line with the recommendations outlined by the United States during Turkey's 2020 Universal Periodic Review and in accordance with international standards. Strong democratic institutions and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms would expand our potential for partnership in Turkey and around the world.

Question. If confirmed, what steps can the United States Government take to hold Turkey accountable for their excessive numbers of unlawfully held detainees?

Answer. If confirmed, I will call for the immediate release of all those incarcerated based on limited or dubious evidence or on a seemingly arbitrary basis, such as in connection with exercising their fundamental freedoms. Osman Kavala and Selahattin Demirtas are two such cases. I will also urge the Turkish Government to reduce pre-trial detention lengths and revise their antiterrorism laws to meet international standards. Prosecutions must be based on evidence, respect the rule of law, and be consistent with Turkey's domestic and international commitments and obligations to human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Question. Open source reporting has indicated Turkey is abusing the INTERPOL red notice system to target individuals who dare to criticize or belong to a movement the Government does not agree with. Turkey's abuse of an international organization to subvert fundamental human rights cannot stand. What actions will you take, if confirmed, to demonstrate this practice is not tolerated?

Answer. I understand and appreciate the Government of Turkey's need to bring the alleged perpetrators of the 2016 coup attempt to justice, but the quality and impartiality of justice matters. If confirmed, I will urge Turkey to conduct any investigation, legal process, or extradition against individuals alleged to be involved in this crime, or any other, in a manner that respects human rights, due process, and the rule of law.

Prosecutions and extraditions must be based on evidence, respect the rule of law, and be consistent with Turkey's domestic and international obligations to human rights and fundamental freedoms. If confirmed, I will also urge third-country partners to resist pressure and follow due process standards in cases where Turkey seeks politically motivated deportations, removals, or expulsions that may violate international norms or agreements.

Question. According to the 2021 State Department International Religious Freedom Report and Human Rights Report, Turkey has very little tolerance for religious freedom, a fundamental human right. How will you continue to bolster religious freedom in country and work with civil society to increase understanding?

Answer. I understand the Turkish Government maintains several restrictions on the exercise of freedom of religion or belief of concern to the United States. These include limitations on the rights of members of religious minority groups.

If confirmed, I will publicly and privately urge the Government of Turkey to respect freedom of religion or belief and the rights of members of religious minority groups. I will also advocate for issues of top importance to religious minority leaders, such as free and fair religious foundation board elections and the reopening of the Greek Orthodox Halki Seminary.

Question. Internet freedom, or the ability to use the internet without state-sponsored censorship, is limited in Turkey. What can you do, if confirmed, to support this crucial tool for civil society?

Answer. I also have concerns about the Government of Turkey's use of censorship and overly broad terrorism and insult laws to silence critical voices. The Turkish Government's efforts to restrict freedom of expression online, including on social media, run counter to democratic values.

If confirmed, I will convey my firm belief that freedom of expression - including online - strengthens democracy and needs to be protected. I will also urge the Government to revise existing laws to meet international standards, ensure appropriate judicial oversight on media or online regulations, and to refrain from passing new laws that further restrict the freedom of expression online.

Question. President Erodgan's involvement in the Cyprus issue is increasingly concerning. If confirmed, what actions will you take to promote peace and potential reunification between the Republic of Cyprus and the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus?"

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to make clear to Turkey and Turkish Cypriots the U.S. position in support of a Cypriot-led comprehensive settlement to reunify the island as a bizonal, bicommunal federation consistent with U.N. Security Council resolutions to benefit all Cypriots and the wider region. Calls for a two-state solution are unhelpful and will not find an audience in the international community. We appreciate the U.N. Secretary-General's efforts to facilitate the relaunch of political discussions. The status quo is unacceptable, and we hope both sides will engage with the U.N. Secretary-General and his team with openness, flexibility, and compromise to find common ground to restart formal talks. Ultimately though, the responsibility for finding a solution lies first and foremost with the Cypriots themselves.

Question. Turkey jails more journalists than any other country on earth. If confirmed, what steps will you take to advocate for freedom of the press in country?

Answer. I understand Turkey remains second only to China in numbers of incarcerated journalists, and uses censorship, insult, and antiterror laws widely to silence critical voices. If confirmed, I will make clear to the Turkish Government the integral role a free and independent press plays in any democracy. I will urge the Government of Turkey to revise laws or regulations that restrict media freedom and urge that they refrain from passing additional, restrictive laws. I will also engage with Government of Turkey interlocutors to encourage the release of all media workers incarcerated in connection with exercising their fundamental freedoms. I will also engage with media workers and civil society in Turkey to listen to and elevate their concerns on media freedom.

Question. If confirmed, will you work with the Turkish Government to end the practice of forcible repatriation of Uyghurs to China?

Answer. President Erdogan referred to the PRC repression targeting Uyghurs in Xinjiang in 2009 as a genocide. I understand that Turkey currently hosts between 30,000-60,000 Uyghurs. Turkey has welcomed Uyghurs for more than two decades under a variety of visa and immigration statuses. If confirmed, I will continue the administration's efforts to meet regularly with the Turkish Government to discuss Turkey's continued support for Uyghurs in the face of PRC pressure.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. JEFFREY LANE FLAKE BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. In April of this year, President Biden formally recognized the Armenian genocide, something that I, and others, welcomed as it has been an overdue action that I have advocated for years for. However, more work needs to be done. We should continue to press countries that still deny this genocide, like Turkey and Azerbaijan, to end their denials and take the steps necessary to accept responsibility for this crime.

- In your opinion, do you recognize the Ottoman Empire's actions against the Armenians in 1915 as a genocide?

Answer. Yes. President Biden's statement for Remembrance Day this year noted that the United States mourns the one and a half million Armenians who were victims of the Armenian genocide during the final years of the Ottoman Empire. We welcome efforts by Armenians and Turks to acknowledge and reckon with this painful part of their histories, which is a critical step towards building a foundation for a more just and tolerant future.

Question. If confirmed, what actions will you take to press the Turkish Government, and others, to stop denying the Armenian genocide?

Answer. If confirmed, I will implement the administration's policy, honoring the victims of the Armenian genocide and encouraging Turkey to acknowledge and reckon with this painful part of its history.

Question. Turkey has been a NATO member since 1952. However, under President Erdogan, Turkey has not lived up to the values of the NATO Alliance. Its dismal human rights record, purchase of the Russian S-400 missile system despite U.S. objections, and its aggression towards other U.S. allies, like Cyprus, Greece and Israel suggest that Turkey is more of an adversary than a partner to the United States.

- Do you believe that Turkey may be more of an adversary?

Answer. Turkey is a NATO Ally with whom we have many common interests, as well as profound disagreements. If confirmed, I will work with you to encourage and, if necessary, pressure Turkey to take actions in line with U.S. interests in the region and its responsibilities as a NATO Ally. If confirmed, I will continue to collaborate with Turkey in areas of common interest including in Central Asia, Syria, the Black Sea, and others. Working with Turkey to address some of its legitimate security concerns will assist us in that effort. I will also speak clearly and frankly when Turkey's actions or words run counter to our interests.

Question. What is your opinion of the state of democracy in Turkey?

Answer. Turkey is a key NATO Ally and critical regional partner, and the United States is committed to improving the relationship between our two countries. It is in our interest to keep Turkey anchored to the Euro-Atlantic community. We work together closely to confront the serious challenges that face both of our countries. While we may have differences of opinion on some topics, I want our Turkish partners to understand that U.S. concerns come from an Ally and friend that seeks to preserve and deepen our relationship in every dimension.

The United States continues to emphasize the importance of the Turkish Government's adherence to policies and actions that build public trust in the country's democratic institutions and the rule of law, as well as upholding human rights commitments. If confirmed, I will publicly and privately urge the Government of Turkey to make meaningful reforms that ensure human rights and fundamental freedoms, including those of speech and assembly, are guaranteed in accordance with Turkey's own constitution. I will urge the U.N. to restore judicial independence, uphold fair trial guarantees, respect the rule of law, and enable civil society and independent media to function freely.

Question. If confirmed, what specific actions will you take to improve Turkey's interactions with other NATO members?

Answer. Turkey's relations with NATO member countries run the gamut between close cooperation to outright antagonism. As the second largest military in NATO, host of the NATO Land Component Command, and a regular contributor of forces to NATO regional missions, Turkey plays a major role in keeping NATO's collective defense credible. If confirmed, I will encourage additional Turkey-NATO collaboration in areas of common interest, including in Central Asia, Syria, and the Black Sea. I will also speak clearly and frankly when Turkey's actions or words run counter to NATO's interests and work with my fellow Ambassadors in other NATO member countries to do so.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. JEFFREY LANE FLAKE BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question. Last year, a Turkish court sentenced several locally-employed staff of our diplomatic mission to Turkey to lengthy prison sentences for allegedly supporting groups opposed to the Erdogan Government. If confirmed, what will be your strategy for supporting these individuals, including seeking their prompt release and supporting their family?

Answer. I am deeply troubled by the ongoing legal proceedings and controls targeting U.S. locally employed staff in Turkey based on unsubstantiated charges related to their official duties on behalf of our Government. If confirmed, I will support and defend our locally employed staff. In my understanding that the U.S. Government remains deeply concerned by the prosecutions and detentions and follows their cases closely. If confirmed, I will work to ensure all judicial processes, including movement restrictions, are lifted for Metin Topuz, Mete Canturk, and Hamza Ulucay. It is my understanding that the United States Government continues to consult with our locally employed staff and their families and to advocate with the highest levels of Turkish officials for their immediate release from all judicial processes.

Question. How will you ensure that Turkish nationals who directly assist our diplomats are off-limits to the Government's own brand of justice?

Answer. I am deeply troubled by the ongoing prosecution, imprisonment, or legal controls targeting U.S. locally employed staff—Metin Topuz, Mete Canturk, and Hamza Ulucay—in Turkey based on unsubstantiated charges related to their official duties. It is my understanding that the U.S. Government remains deeply concerned by the prosecutions and detentions and follows their cases closely. If confirmed, I will advocate with the highest levels of Turkish officials for the immediate cessation of all judicial processes and restrictions targeting our locally employed staff. The safety and security of all employees of U.S. Embassy Ankara and our consulates in Istanbul and Adana will be my highest priority, if confirmed.

Question. Erdogan has made the production, use, and export of highly capable combat drones a pillar of his country's defense industry and security partnerships throughout not just the region, but the world. The Turkish military has utilized and advised on the use of drones in Iraq and against Nagorno-Karabakh, in many cases drawing no separation between legitimate military targets and civilians. If confirmed what steps should we take to rein in this behavior?

Answer. Turkey is one of the top producers and exporters of unmanned aerial vehicles (UAV) in the world. As Turkey is a relatively cost-effective supplier of advanced drone technology, NATO Allies such as Poland and partners such as Ukraine have sought to purchase Turkish UAVs. Turkey has sold UAVs to countries with whom we would not share this technology. If confirmed, I will stress the importance of Turkey using its capabilities to bolster NATO efforts and to advance mutual U.S. and Turkish goals.

Question. How does Turkish drone proliferation affect our own security partnerships in the region?

Answer. Turkey is one of the top producers and exporters of unmanned aerial vehicles (UAV) in the world, specializing in the production of cost effective unmanned aerial systems. Turkish UAVs in most cases do not directly compete with more advanced U.S. platforms. Turkey's willingness to sell UAVs to countries with whom we would not share our own technology has at times been problematic for regional security. If confirmed, I will stress the importance of Turkey using its UAV capabilities to bolster NATO efforts and to advance mutual U.S. and Turkish goals. This approach would support our policy of preventing state or non-state actors from gaining capabilities that would undermine the safety and security of the United States and our allies and partners.

Question. What have the intervening two years taught us about both the limits of our diplomacy towards Turkey, but also how we must adapt to secure our national interests?

Answer. Over the past several years, Turkey has pursued a more independent foreign policy that has at times advanced U.S. interests but which in some cases has been unhelpful and destabilizing. If confirmed, I will commit to working with colleagues in the executive branch and Congress to find ways to continue strengthening our longstanding relationship with Turkey, while not shying away from identifying and addressing the areas where we disagree.

Question. How have the past several years instructed your views on the appropriateness of our continued military presence at Incirlik Air Base? Should we refocus that presence elsewhere within NATO?

Answer. Our military presence in Turkey, including at Incirlik Air Base, allows for a better defense of NATO's Southern flank and for supporting United States interests in the region. The United States benefits from our presence at Incirlik, and, if confirmed, I will not seek to relocate or reduce this presence. At the same time, the U.S. should continue to maintain and pursue new security partnerships with our Allies throughout the region.

Question. In his interview with CBS this weekend, President Erdogan noted that his Government's preference would be that the United States withdraws all of our troops from Syria, who are active in our efforts to fully defeat ISIS. Given Turkey's own continued presence in Syria, and especially considering the speed and indiscriminate nature of its invasion in 2019, how do you interpret Erdogan's desire for our withdrawal?

Answer. As I understand, Turkey has long-standing concerns about U.S. cooperation with the Syrian Democratic Forces, which Ankara views as tied to Kurdistan Workers Party. The United States has an interest in advancing the campaign against ISIS, to include through preserving a limited military presence in northeast Syria. The Syrian Democratic Forces remain a capable and effective partner to U.S. forces on the ground. If confirmed, I will ensure we consult Ankara on Syria policy and seek areas for understanding while also making clear the United States' enduring security interests.

Question. What do you believe is Erdogan's goal for Syria?

Answer. The United States and Turkey share an interest in sustainably ending the Syrian civil war. We will continue to consult Ankara on Syria policy and seek areas for cooperation. Turkey is an important member of the Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS. I understand that the administration's view is that stability in Syria, and the greater region, can only be achieved through a political process that represents the will of all Syrians and that the United States is committed to working with allies, partners, and the U.N. to ensure that a durable political solution remains within reach.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO CINDY HENSLEY MCCAIN BY SENATOR ROBERT MENEZES

Conflict & Food Insecurity

Question. Today, conflict drives the top ten worst food crises in the world. Food insecurity in conflict-affected countries continues to deteriorate, and people there rely more and more on the U.N. food agencies to provide food relief.

- How can the World Food Program improve its work in conflict-affected countries? What should it do to expand the reach of its food assistance?

Answer. Armed conflict is the primary driver of acute food insecurity globally, impacting eight of the ten worst food crises in the world. U.N. Security Council Resolution 2417 (2018) emphasizes the link between armed conflict and food insecurity and lays out clear expectations regarding the need for unfettered and unhindered humanitarian access. If confirmed, I will work to ensure concerted and collective diplomatic pressure to enable humanitarian access in conflict-affected countries.

Question. How can the U.N. food agencies increase the effectiveness of their aid efforts in the face of national government actions that hinder humanitarian access and deliberately perpetuate food insecurity?

Answer. National interference in aid operations and the obstruction of humanitarian access are unacceptable. If confirmed, I will apply strong diplomatic advocacy on behalf of the Rome-based agencies, including in coordination with like-minded countries, to exert pressure on United Nations Member States denying humanitarian access to their citizens. If confirmed, I will work with our colleagues across the respective U.S. Missions to the United Nations, interagency partners in Washington, and other United Nations Member States to leverage diplomatic engagement and demand full access in conflict-affected and food insecure countries.

Question. How would the principles, priorities and recommended approaches detailed in the Global Food Security Strategy influence your work, if confirmed, at U.N.-FAO?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that U.S. engagement continues to be aligned with the principles and priorities outlined in the Global Food Security Strategy. The U.S. commitment to invest $10 billion domestically and internationally toward transforming food systems to be more effective and inclusive was a first step and clear demonstration of U.S. leadership in accelerating progress toward global food security.

Afghanistan

Question. How can U.S. leadership at the U.N. food agencies promote sustained international engagement in Afghanistan to ensure that millions of people are not pushed to the brink of starvation?

Answer. All three Rome-based food security agencies—FAO, the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD), and WFP—have continued their operations in Afghanistan and are working in at least 28 of the country's 34 provinces. U.S. diplomatic and financial leadership has proven critical to these operations. If confirmed, I will continue efforts to enable the Rome-based agencies to carry out their life-saving work, ensure that aid reaches the most vulnerable, and pursue burden-sharing with allies and partners to ensure sustainability.

Question. You have been a fierce advocate for women and girls throughout your life. If confirmed, how do you plan to advocate for the women and girls who have disproportionately been impacted by pandemic-related food insecurity?

Answer. The COVID-19 pandemic has dramatically and disproportionately impacted women and girls; the prevalence of moderate or severe food insecurity is 10 percent higher among women than men, compared with 6 percent in 2019. If confirmed, I will work with FAO, WFP, and the Rome-based International Development Law Organization (IDLO) to ensure implementation of their gender action plans, and the delivery of concrete results that advance gender equality. If confirmed, I will also continue U.S. support for the innovative partnership between FAO and the IDLO focused on ensuring women and girls' access to affordable and nutritious food even as countries adopt emergency measures in response to health crises.

Question. How can FAO facilitate collaboration across U.N. organizations (like the U.N. Environment Program, UNICEF, and U.N. Development Program) to promote adaptation and resilience in developing countries' agricultural and food production sectors?

Answer. FAO's recently approved Strategic Framework (2022–2031) elevates climate change and prioritizes climate action in the food and agriculture sectors, noting in particular the need to increase adaptation activities. The FAO also plays a key role in implementing the One Health approach, which takes as a whole human health, animal health, and environmental health through a formal tripartite agreement between FAO, WHO, and the World Organization for Animal Health (OIE) with U.N. Environment Program (UNEP) participation. FAO, WFP, and IFAD conduct regular Rome-based agency coordination on climate change and other topics.

If confirmed, I will seek to ensure that FAO works with WFP, IFAD, and other U.N. agencies to match science and evidence-based solutions to national development plans, as part of the follow-up to the U.N. Food Systems Summit held on September 23.

Question. What role should FAO have in assisting member nations in developing their National Adaptation Plans (NAPs)?

Answer. As the lead U.N. agency for agriculture, FAO provides expert guidance to countries on the agriculture, forestry, and fisheries sectors in their NAPs. Through targeted guidelines, FAO plays a pivotal role in assisting members in reducing vulnerability of the agriculture sectors to the impacts of climate change by building adaptive capacities and resilience, addressing agriculture in the formulation and implementation of NAPs, and enhancing the integration of adaptation in agricultural development policies, programs and plans. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that FAO continues to integrate climate change adaptation into all of its programs and provides better climate-adaptation evaluations and data.

U.S. Leadership & Donor Engagement: Donor investments to U.N. food agencies increased in 2020, but the increase did not match the surge in global food needs, exacerbated by the COVID-19 pandemic. Up to 161 million more people faced hunger in 2020 compared to 2019. As you know, humanitarian appeals, including those focused on food assistance, often remain grossly underfunded. The United States is the largest financial contributor to the U.N. food agencies.

Question. How much funding do you think the United States should provide to the U.N. food agencies in Rome?

Answer. The United States is the largest single financial contributor to the Rome-based agencies, and our generosity to this partnership has saved millions of lives. With the generous bipartisan support of the Congress, U.S. financial contributions have remained relatively steady over the last few years. The United States needs to continue to press others to do their share in shouldering their financial obligations to support these agencies. If confirmed, I will continue to press other countries and stakeholders for an equitable division of funding responsibility and burden sharing to fulfil humanitarian and development needs.

Question. If confirmed, you will help lead donor engagement. In what ways can the agencies improve their outreach efforts given that current engagement has not resulted in adequate fundraising?

Answer. It is critically important that other countries and non-state actors step up to match the incredible generosity of the American people. Humanitarian needs are increasing globally, and they will continue to rise if we continue to see growing conflicts, pandemics, and climate shocks. If confirmed, I will work to ensure the Rome-based agencies apply a focused and coordinated approach towards resource mobilization and financing throughout each organization. If confirmed, I will also press the agencies to identify new sources of revenue and will urge other donor countries to maintain or increase their contributions in the face of increasing needs.

Climate

Question. In 2010, FAO launched climate-smart agriculture designed to help develop technical, policy, and investment conditions to achieve sustainable and secure agriculture development under climate change.

- Should the United States increase its technical and financial contributions to support this initiative?

Answer. The FAO's Climate Smart Agriculture initiative is an important part of the U.N.'s commitment to address climate change, and, if confirmed, I look forward to working with the FAO to ensure that the initiative advances our climate change goals. Additionally, if confirmed, I look forward to ensuring that U.S. leadership, led by the Climate-Smart Agriculture and Forestry Partnership Initiative recently announced by Secretary Vilsack, will guide FAO's work in this initiative.

Agriculture

Question. Agriculture, including forestry, fisheries, and livestock production, generate around a fifth of the world's greenhouse gas emissions. The Mitigation of Climate Change in Agriculture (MICCA) program generates technical knowledge, working on the ground to monitor, assess, and implement mitigation strategies.

- How can this program be strengthened?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that farmers have access to available tools and scientific advancements, especially new technologies for sustainable, climate-smart agriculture. In particular, USDA's new Climate-Smart Agriculture Partnership Initiative can provide guidance to the Rome-based agencies to enhance and create new markets and streams of income for farmers while strengthening rural economies and improving tracking and monitoring of greenhouse gas emissions and carbon sequestration.

Question. How should FAO engage to address global agriculture's contribution to the climate crisis (i.e., reducing agriculture's carbon footprint and increasing the capacity of Agricultural activities to capture carbon) and prioritize climate mitigation?

Answer. FAO has a key role in ensuring the development of agri-food systems that produce more food with more socio-economic benefits, but less impact on the environment and natural resources. If confirmed, I will ensure FAO continues to support countries to enhance capacities to implement Nationally Determined Contributions (NDCs) and to adapt to and mitigate the effects of climate change through evidence-based programs and projects related to the agriculture, land, water, and food sectors.

Question. How should FAO approach aquatic resource protection and better integrate marine-based foods (seafood) into its programming?

Answer. Seafood from fisheries and aquaculture are a vital source of food and nutrition in the diets of many around the world—supplying both critical protein and high-quality nutrition to billions—and they are crucial components in sustainable development and developing climate-resilient food systems. If confirmed, I will strongly support efforts by the FAO to recognize the unique role of fisheries and aquaculture in the global food system and promote actions to protect the important contributions of fisheries and aquaculture to global food security.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO CINDY HENSLEY MCCAIN BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Humanitarian Assistance

Question. Long-established humanitarian principles suggest that food aid should be “agnostic,” meaning that it should be targeted toward those with the greatest need regardless of their affiliation. Unfortunately, there is also a long history of food aid being used by malign actors as a weapon against those it is meant to help.

- If confirmed, are you prepared to halt aid deliveries to areas where it is being manipulated by malign actors?

Answer. The World Food Program has significant experience programming humanitarian assistance in conflict settings and continues to strengthen its systems of oversight to ensure that assistance is not misused. With U.S. support, the World Food Program (WFP) has developed robust systems for beneficiary identification and risk mitigation and has stopped distributions-in Yemen, Syria, and elsewhere-when it determined food risked being stolen or diverted. If confirmed, I will seek to ensure that assistance is delivered to those who most need it and is not manipulated by malign actors.

The World Food Program takes a blended approach in its food aid programs: it provides commodities in areas where food is scarce and market-based assistance (electronic transfers, vouchers, etc.) where food is available but inaccessible. When providing commodities, the agency often has to provide “blanket” feeding. When providing market-based assistance, there is room to target assistance more deliberately. There are benefits and risks associated with each of these approaches. If confirmed, it will be your job to find ways to maximize the benefits and minimize the risks associated with each of these approaches, so that the WFP can reach the right people with the right support in the right place at the right time.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to advocating for the use of biometrics within the World Food Program and across other U.N. agencies, particularly when providing market-based assistance, in order to more effectively target assistance, verify beneficiaries, and eliminate duplication and waste?

Answer. If confirmed, I will advocate for the implementation of effective and context appropriate accountability and monitoring mechanisms, in addition to coordinated needs assessments, to ensure that food assistance reaches the people who need it most. Biometrics is an appropriate accountability tool in contexts with the requisite technology, and if confirmed, I will support the implementation of the most effective accountability tools.

Question. Beyond biometrics, are there other ways in which you would seek to enhance the WFP's efficiency and effectiveness, so we can stretch U.S. food aid dollars farther and save more lives?

Answer. The U.S. Government and WFP work closely together to refine methods for beneficiary targeting and identification, to seek efficiencies in the transport and delivery of food, and to monitor and evaluate programs to improve impact and minimize opportunities for waste, fraud, abuse or diversion. The United States has partnered with WFP to advance technical solutions and innovations, in order to ensure more efficient delivery of assistance. If confirmed, I will take an active interest in further enhancing our collaboration to ensure the most efficient use of taxpayer funds to reach the largest possible number of people in need.

Balanced Assistance

Question. The United States works both bilaterally and through multilateral institutions - including the United Nations food and agriculture agencies in Rome—to ameliorate humanitarian conditions, promote food security, and catalyze agriculture-led economic growth in developing countries.

- In your view, what is the appropriate balance between U.S. bilateral and multilateral assistance for food aid and food security?

Answer. Given the growing complexity and number of global humanitarian crises, the flexibility to use the right tool in each intervention and to work with a range of implementing partners is critical. The U.S. Government relies on U.N. partners, including the U.N. World Food Program and the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization, as well as a number of NGO partners to implement food and nutrition programs around the globe. Each crisis calls for a unique blend of partners and assistance modalities to ensure that beneficiaries are reached with the right assistance. Both bilateral and multilateral assistance is critically important, and the appropriate balance varies across countries and contexts. If confirmed, I am committed to ensuring that we utilize appropriate, accountable, and cost-effective humanitarian assistance mechanisms to meet food security needs.

Question. Are there instances when U.S. bilateral assistance might be more appropriate than assistance delivered through the U.N. agencies for food and agriculture?

Answer. The United States provides robust bilateral and multilateral assistance through USAID. USAID works with a range of implementing partners, including U.N. agencies and NGO partners, to carry out its mission of saving lives and reducing food insecurity. If confirmed, I am committed to evaluating and supporting effective, efficient, and accountable delivery of food assistance through the most appropriate means, whether bilateral or as delivered through the U.N. agencies for food and agriculture.

Question. What role could or should the private sector play in promoting food security and catalyzing agriculture-led economic growth?

Answer. Improving U.N. food security agencies' agility in terms of creative and innovative partnerships, including with the private sector, has been a long-term U.S. policy priority. The United States consistently emphasizes the need to integrate private sector views, expertise, and resources during the U.N. Food Systems Summit planning process. This includes the need to account for the aspirations and daily concerns of farmers themselves. If confirmed, I will not support the private sector as an indispensable part of the solution to today's challenges and will its critical role in advancing food security and agriculture-led economic growth.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to advancing science-based approaches to promoting food insecurity at the Food and Agriculture Organization, including through the use of innovative agricultural technologies?

Answer. Advancing science-based approaches is at the core of this administration's policies on addressing food insecurity. If confirmed, I commit to working closely with the U.N. agencies for food and agriculture and other United Nations Member States to press for science-based decision making and greater acceptance of biotechnology.

NOMINATIONS

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 2021

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 2:07 p.m. by video-conference, Hon. Chris Van Hollen, presiding.

Present: Senators Van Hollen [presiding], Menendez, Cardin, Shaheen, Coons, Murphy, Kaine, Markey, Merkley, Booker, Schatz, Risch, Rubio, Johnson, Romney, Portman, Paul, Young, Barrasso, Cruz, Rounds, and Hagerty.

Also Present: Senators Duckworth, Udall, and Graham.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. CHRIS VAN HOLLEN, U.S. SENATOR FROM MARYLAND

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Good afternoon, everybody, officially. Welcome to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearing.

We have some terrific nominees we are going to hear from this afternoon. Before I give some brief opening remarks, though, in deference to our colleagues who are here to introduce some of our nominees, I am going to turn it over to them.

I understand we have Senator Markey here to introduce Leader Cronin. We have Senator Barrasso here to introduce Dr. Gawande, and we, I think, are expecting Senator Duckworth to introduce Captain Sullenberger.

Why don't we kick this off? I see Senator Barrasso.

Senator Barrasso, why do not you kick us off and please introduce Dr. Gawande?

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN BARRASSO, U.S. SENATOR FROM WYOMING

Senator BARRASSO. Thanks so much, Mr. Chairman, and I am pleased to welcome to the committee and to the Senate Dr. Atul Gawande, who is a fellow physician, and President Biden has nominated him to be Assistant Administrator for Global Health at USAID.

Dr. Atul Gawande is truly a highly respected and well known voice in American medicine. He is a surgeon. He is a writer. He is a researcher. In domestic health care discussions, he normally needs no introduction.

Dr. Gawande has devoted his life to public health as well as to medicine. His appreciation for the field started with his parents. They were both physicians, doctors, who emigrated from India to the United States.

He earned a Bachelor's degree in biology and political science from Stanford University. He is a Rhodes Scholar, earned a Master's degree in philosophy, politics, and economics at Oxford. Graduated from Harvard Medical School. Also earned a Master's of public health.

Dr. Gawande completed his general surgical residency training at Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston, and in 2006, he was named a MacArthur Fellow for his work researching and explaining problems faced by surgeons in training.

Dr. Gawande continues caring for patients as a general and endocrine surgeon at Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston. He is a professor at Harvard Medical School.

He is training the next generation of doctors and, as a professor, he is focused on surgical safety, avoiding errors, and health system innovation.

Mr. Chairman, over the years, Dr. Gawande has come to this very office in this room where I am sitting today doing this introduction to meet in a bipartisan way with groups of senators to discuss issues of health care, and he and I know that there are a number of political issues on which he and I do not agree.

But let me just tell you why I am here in front of the committee today. For nearly 20 years, I have been pointing to his remarkable books, and when I talk with medical students I bring the books.

When I talk to sometimes lay organizations and groups, I talk to the books. When I talk about health care and health care providers, I talk to the books. I have all four of them here.

The first one I read was called "Complications: A Surgeon's Notes on an Imperfect Science." Knowing how realistic he is and understanding even though you do your very best and put forth your best efforts, it does not always work out the way you would like as a surgeon.

The next book I read was one called "Better: A Surgeon's Notes on Performance," all aimed at improving performance, in getting better. Even though we live in a world that is complicated, we can always try to do better.

And then we have Sully up here going to be nominated. "The Checklist Manifesto," taken from pilots, what pilots have learned and how we can apply those in the operating room and we have, certainly, done that at the Wyoming Medical Center and at hospitals all across the country, and I believe thousands of lives have been saved by avoiding medical errors as a result of the work that he has done.

And then the book that Senator Booker made reference to, Atul Gawande "Being Mortal," what happens as we age in life and how we care for our parents, and then how our children end up caring for us.

Dr. Gawande has a commitment to excellence, and you read through his books and you come up with the words of diligence, overcoming obstacles, avoiding errors, which is why I believe he would be a very valuable asset and why I am happy to introduce him today.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, Senator Barrasso, and thank you for being here to introduce Dr. Gawande.

And now I am going to turn it over to our colleague, Senator Markey, who is going to be introducing Leader Cronin, who has been nominated to be our Ambassador to Ireland.

Senator Markey?

STATEMENT OF HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY,
U.S. SENATOR FROM MASSACHUSETTS

Senator MARKEY. Thank you. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

It is my pleasure today to introduce my friend, Claire Cronin, as the President's nominee to be the United States Ambassador to the Republic of Ireland, and I would also like to take this time to send my warmest regards to her husband, Ray, and two daughters, Kara and Kerry, who I am sure are watching right now.

Claire, fittingly, comes before us today as a proud public servant from eastern Massachusetts. In her hometown of Brockton, Massachusetts, the city of champions, the undefeated Rocky Marciano shattered boxing records to earn Brockton that title.

The Marvelous Marvin Hagler amplified the legend, and Claire Cronin continued in that tradition by shattering glass ceilings and being a champion in her own right.

The Massachusetts State Legislature, also known as the General Court, traces its earliest origins back to 1629 and the Massachusetts Bay Colony.

Claire wrote one of its latest chapters by becoming the first female chair of the Judiciary Committee, and more recently, the first female majority leader of the Massachusetts House of Representatives.

And while Claire will not be the first female U.S. Ambassador to Ireland, I will note that the only two others to hold that honorable posting also hail from Massachusetts.

As a legislator, former litigator, professional mediator, Claire has always taken the time to listen and respond to the needs and concerns of a diverse set of constituents and stakeholders.

I have seen the way she builds genuine deep bonds within her community by fighting to improve the lives of those she represents. Her commitment to public service, diplomatic acumen, and work ethic are supreme and all critical skills that will serve her well in Dublin.

Claire's leadership has also earned her multiple honors. Most recently, she was awarded the Jewish Community Relations Council Legislative Leadership Award, and was also named the Emerge Massachusetts 2020 Woman of the Year.

The U.S.-Ireland relationship is one of the warmest and closest we have. Our shared values and ancestral ties serve as a bedrock of our modern dynamic relations in the area of commerce, education, culture, and research.

As a proud Irish American, Claire understands that foundation well, and as a maverick public servant she is the ideal candidate to deepen and expand the cross community engagement and ties between our two nations.

There is an old Irish proverb that says, may the hinges of our friendship never grow rusty. I have the utmost confidence that with Claire at the helm, our relation with Ireland will flourish very, very greatly for the 21st century.

Congratulations on your nomination, Claire. I look forward to seeing the history you write in the next chapter.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you. Thank you, Senator Markey, for being here with those good words.

And I see my colleague and friend and ranking member of the Africa Subcommittee, Mike Rounds, is here now and we are both honored to be chairing this full committee hearing for these great witnesses.

Now let me turn it over to Senator Duckworth who is going to be introducing Captain C. B. "Sully" Sullenberger III to be the representative to the Council of the International Civil Aviation Organization.

Senator Duckworth, take it away.

STATEMENT OF HON. TAMMY DUCKWORTH,
U.S. SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS

Senator DUCKWORTH. Thank you so much, Mr. Chairman. It is so hard to follow Senator Markey. I am not as poetic as he is, but I will do my best.

[Laughter.]

Senator DUCKWORTH. It is a real privilege to join the committee today to introduce my good friend, fellow pilot and President Biden's nominee for the distinguished rank of ambassador and U.S. Representative to the Council of the International Civil Aviation Organization, Captain Chesley Burnett "Sully" Sullenberger III.

Mr. Chairman, Captain Sullenberger has dedicated his entire professional life to the pursuit of aviation safety. I commend President Biden for nominating him to represent our nation before ICAO and I am confident that his expertise, experience, and dedication to public service will strengthen our efforts to achieve greater cooperation in international air transportation.

He will restore America's leadership in international institutions at a time when our adversaries are openly questioning our capabilities. The United States' FAA and our aviation regulations are the gold standard for the world.

This gold standard has been tarnished by the failures in oversight of the Boeing MAX-8's development and deployment. We are fixing these failures here at home, but our adversaries seek to undermine America's leadership by exploiting tragedy for their geopolitical gain.

Captain Sullenberger's confirmation as Ambassador to the ICAO will immediately send a signal to the world that United States excellence in aviation and aviation safety is here to stay.

While he is best known for piloting the Miracle on the Hudson, Captain Sullenberger is a longtime aviation safety expert, a renowned public speaker, and a successful author.

Born and raised in Denison, Texas, Captain Sullenberger pursued his childhood love of aviation by learning to fly while still in high school. He pursued his passion for flying at the United States Air Force Academy, where he received the Outstanding Cadet in Airmanship Award.

He went on to serve as a fighter pilot in the United States Air Force, serving in both North America and Europe, and became a flight leader and training officer attaining the rank of captain.

After serving our nation in uniform, Captain Sullenberger became an airline pilot with Pacific Southwest Airlines in 1980, which was then later acquired by U.S. Airways, and he flew with U.S. Airways until his retirement in 2010, though he still flies privately.

Throughout his career, Captain Sullenberger has been an active and passionate safety advocate. While in the Air Force, he was selected to perform accident investigation duties and later he also served as a representative of the Airline Pilots Association during National Transportation Safety Board accident investigations.

Captain Sullenberger served as APA's local air safety chairman, where he contributed to FAA advisory circulars. He was also instrumental in developing, implementing, and eventually teaching U.S. Airways' crew resource management course.

Of course, Captain Sullenberger may be best known for his heroic actions on January 15th of 2009 when he and his crew safely guided U.S. Airways Flight 1549 through an emergency water landing in New York City's Hudson River after their Airbus A-320 lost thrust following bird strikes in both engines.

Thanks to the calm and collected leadership of Captain Sullenberger and his fellow crew members, tragedy was avoided that day and all 155 people aboard Flight 1549 were rescued and reconnected with their families.

Because of him and his crew, children still have their parents, grandmothers and grandfathers were there for the birth of their grandchildren, and many more lives were impacted positively than just the 155 he saved on that day.

Time Magazine ranked Captain Sullenberger second in its top 100 most influential heroes and icons of 2009, and France awarded him their highest order of merit, the Legion of Honor.

Captain Sullenberger is presently an international lecturer and keynote speaker focusing on the importance of aviation safety, high-performance systems improvement, leadership and crisis management, among other topics.

It speaks to Sully's love of country that after already serving his nation in uniform and after a second career ensuring the safety of the flying public he is now willing to take on this new tour of duty.

When he called me and said he was thinking of accepting this nomination, I both cheered him on and offered him words of caution because he is taking on a heck of a lot, and I am so grateful that he is willing to do it.

We Americans are lucky to have Captain Sullenberger on our side and that he will be our representative, and the world is lucky that he will be there, once confirmed, as Ambassador to the ICAO to truly regain aviation safety as a premier institution when it comes to the traveling public.

If confirmed, I have no doubt that Captain Sullenberger will continue his long-standing passion for safety and cooperation in global air travels as our nation's Ambassador to the ICAO.

I thank the committee for allowing me to introduce my friend and strongly encourage all senators to support Captain Sullenberger's nomination to be ICAO Ambassador.

I yield back, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, Senator Duckworth, for that very eloquent and, I would say, poetic as well introduction.

And I am just going to introduce briefly the members of our second panel. I will have a fuller introduction later. We just had introductions from the three distinguished nominees on our first panel. We have another round of equally distinguished nominees on the second panel and I am just going to go through that list.

We have with us Mr. Kent Doyle Logsdon to be Ambassador to the Republic of Moldova, Ms. Sharon L. Cromer to be Ambassador to the Republic of Gambia, Ambassador Virginia E. Palmer to be our Ambassador to the Republic of Ghana, and Howard A. Van Vranken to be Ambassador to the Republic of Botswana.

I am going to keep my opening remarks short because we have a lot to cover, and as Senator Rounds and my colleagues know, we also have a couple of votes that are scheduled to take place shortly. We will have to juggle those.

These hearings, of course, are a very important part of the Senate's constitutional responsibility of advice and consent, and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee has historically taken this responsibility very seriously.

This hearing is part of that process. I will say, and the chairman of the full committee, Senator Menendez, has mentioned this, we do have a backlog of nominees who have been appointed by the President, recommended by the President, but still do not have hearings scheduled.

And so it is really important as we do our constitutional duty and also make sure that we are addressing the national security and foreign policy concerns of our country that we get those folks through the hearing process just as quickly as possible.

With that said, I am pleased that we have these seven exceptional nominees before us today on two panels. These nominees, if confirmed, will help promote the United States' interests on issues of central importance to our country and to this committee, including aviation safety, climate change, bolstering the global pandemic response and vaccine rollout, and strengthening our relationships in key countries in Europe and in Africa.

We have big challenges ahead but I am made more optimistic by the sterling credentials, diverse backgrounds, and impressive careers of today's nominees.

We are joined by several distinguished career members of the Foreign Service, a Senate-confirmed Ambassador, a respected state legislator, a leading surgeon and public health researcher and writer, and one living breathing Miracle on the Hudson.

And by the way, if you have not seen the movie "Sully" I recommend it to you. I just saw it again recently.

Welcome to all of you. Now I want to turn it over to my colleague, Senator Rounds, for any opening remarks, and then we will begin with witness testimony.

Senator Rounds?

STATEMENT OF HON. MIKE ROUNDS,
U.S. SENATOR FROM SOUTH DAKOTA

Senator ROUNDS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Good afternoon to all of you on what is no doubt one of the proudest days of your life and that of your families. Your commitment to public service is commendable. I want to thank you and your families for your willingness to serve.

Let me just begin by just saying I am a part of the Sully Sullenberger fan club. Captain Sullenberger, you were piloting U.S. Airways Flight 1549 on January 15 of '09 when it struck a flock of geese, taking out both engines. Your quick action to ditch the plane in the Hudson River saved all 155 souls on board.

After serving as an Air Force pilot and 30 years as an ATP—an air transport pilot—you have spent the last 10 years as an international lecturer and keynote speaker on a number of topics, including aviation safety.

I will be interested to hear about your concerns and priorities for the ICAO, China's rising influence in international bodies such as the ICAO, and whether ICAO might play a role in helping restore post-pandemic international air travel.

Dr. Gawande, if confirmed, you will bring decades of experience in medicine and public health to the USAID. I believe your work running various public health nonprofits may provide management and logistics experience relevant to USAID's enormous global health supply chains.

If confirmed, you will need to navigate a highly fractured U.S. Government response to the global COVID-19 pandemic. You will also have to manage USAID's relationship with the CDC, which for decades has been fraught with conflict, particularly in countries where both agencies have a presence.

I will be interested to hear your views on how you plan to help elevate global health security and pandemic preparedness as a national security priority.

As the ranking member of the Africa and Global Health Policy Subcommittee, I would appreciate hearing your views about the future of U.S.-China collaboration on public health in Africa generally and the Africa CDC specifically.

I also note that you have described abortion as a woman's right to choose. I am pro-life. I would like to hear whether you think USAID funding should go to support abortion in foreign countries.

Ms. Cronin, as we all know, the United States and Ireland enjoy close relations and have extensive historical and cultural ties. More than 31.5 million U.S. citizens and residents claim Irish ancestry, and I suspect even more on the 17th of March.

Ireland is a reliable international partner and is currently a rotating member of the U.N. Security Council. We have worked closely with Ireland, particularly on pushing back on China's abuses.

That does not mean there is not hard work to be done. There is room for improvement in the area of countering human trafficking, for example.

It will also be a challenge to persuade Ireland to adopt widely-accepted economic measures that it perceives might make it less attractive for foreign investment, such as the 15 percent global corporate tax minimum.

I also look forward to hearing about how you might draw upon your background as an attorney, mediator, and skilled politician to reinvigorate implementation of the Good Friday Agreement in the wake of COVID and the post-Brexit and Northern Ireland Protocol.

Thank you all for being here today and I look forward to your comments.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you. Thank you, Senator Rounds.

Now we will go straight to our witness testimony and why do not we lead off with Captain Sullenberger?

Captain Sullenberger, let me turn it over to you.

STATEMENT OF CAPTAIN C.B. SULLENBERGER III OF TEXAS, NOMINATED TO BE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA ON THE COUNCIL OF THE INTER-NATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION ORGANIZATION WITH THE RANK OF AMBASSADOR DURING HIS TENURE OF SERVICE

Captain SULLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Rounds, members of the committee, I am deeply honored to be with you today as the President's nominee to become the U.S. Representative on the Council of the International Civil Aviation Organization.

Please allow me to begin my statement today with a few comments about my biggest supporters, my wife, Lorrie, and our two daughters, Kate and Kelly. Kate, our older daughter, is a doctor of veterinary medicine in an emergency clinic. Kelly is working full time as a manager of enrollment for a major university and will finish her Ph.D. in the spring.

My wife, Lorrie, put her career on hold to stay home with our girls when, as an airline pilot, I was gone two-thirds of every month. We were equal partners in leading our family through decades of airline life, and we are so grateful that both of our young women found their life passions early and have pursued them so enthusiastically and successfully. If confirmed, Lorrie and I are looking forward to an exciting new chapter in our lives.

Mr. Chairman, I am deeply grateful to the President for this nomination and the confidence in me that he and Secretary of State Blinken have shown by asking that I assume this important role.

I seek this position because I want to once again serve this nation that has afforded me such wonderful opportunities that have filled my life with purpose and meaning.

In leveraging my life experience, I want to help restore and rebuild U.S. leadership in global aviation and increase economic opportunity for all Americans while improving their safety and security when they travel by air.

With COVID, climate change, and security threats, we are at an inflection point. While we are facing great challenges, we also have great opportunities to positively affect global aviation standards and recommended practices for decades to come.

At several points in my over half-century aviation career, along with my many colleagues, I have made significant contributions to our aviation progress.

At each juncture, after each success, I have hoped that my greatest contributions might still lie ahead, and at this juncture that is still my hope and my goal.

The International Civil Aviation Organization may be far from a household name but its purpose and performance are crucial to U.S. national security, and it benefits from the history of American leadership, dating to its founding in 1947.

A remarkable growth in civil aviation over the last 75 years is a testament not just to American innovation but also to the tangible value in multilateral bodies such as ICAO that facilitate cooperation, coordination, and mutual benefit.

If confirmed, I would strive to extend the legacy of U.S. leadership on matters related to aviation safety and security and to harmonize the global aviation standards.

I would underscore the administration's commitment to meaningful action on carbon offsets, sustainable aviation fuels, and gradual direct emissions reductions.

I would also focus intently on actions to strengthen ICAO's culture of transparency and accountability, actions that cannot be delayed, given the recent history of mismanagement at the organization.

I believe corrective measures became more achievable with the recent election of Juan Carlos Salazar as the organization's new secretary general and, if confirmed, I would be a relentless advocate for necessary reforms.

I would also be attentive to the risks posed to international organizations such as ICAO by authoritarian states who see benefit in undermining the purpose and performance of these multilateral venues.

Standard-setting bodies such as ICAO must work for the benefit of all its members, and in keeping with their intended roles, principles, and values. For ICAO, that means the safety, security, and sustainability of civil aviation.

That mission is threatened when member states disregard their international commitments, as in the case of the Belarus Ryanair incident or the repeated unannounced launch of missiles by the North Korean regime.

I also understand that successful American engagement at ICAO requires the strongest possible relationships across federal agencies, including the Federal Aviation Administration, the Transportation Security Administration, and the Department of Transportation, and continuous conversation with aviation industry groups.

Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I would succeed many capable American representatives before me, and I would make every effort to live up to their collective standard.

If I am fortunate enough to represent the United States at ICAO it would be the honor of my lifetime.

Thank you, and I welcome your questions.

If I am fortunate enough to represent the United States at ICAO, it would be the honor of my lifetime.

Thank you, and I welcome your questions.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, Captain Sullenberger.

And as I mentioned, we are going to have some votes going on but we are going to try and keep this hearing going.

And I understand my colleague, Senator Rounds, is going to go vote and then he will return and I will go vote.

Next, let us turn it over to Dr. Gawande, who has been nominated to be Assistant Administrator of the United States Agency for International Development for Global Health.

Dr. Gawande?

STATEMENT OF DR. ATUL A. GAWANDE OF MASSACHUSETTS, NOMINATED TO BE AN ASSISTANT ADMINISTRATOR OF THE UNITED STATES AGENCY FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOP-MENT

Dr. GAWANDE. Thank you.

Senator Van Hollen, Ranking Member Rounds, members of the committee, I am honored to appear today as President Biden's nominee for Assistant Administrator for Global Health at USAID.

I am immensely grateful to President Biden and Administrator Power for putting their trust in me at this critical time. Serving in this role would be a privilege and responsibility my parents could not have imagined for a child of theirs when they met in Brooklyn in the 1960s as young new doctors from India.

I would like to thank my late father, and among my family attending I would like to thank my mother and my sister, Sumeeta, for their love and support, my children, Walker, Hattie, and Hunter, who have made me so proud, and my wife, Kathleen, whose encouragement and sacrifices have made this opportunity possible.

I have been among the beneficiaries of USAID's vital work. My father grew up in a village in Maharashtra that went from suffering recurrent famine and praying for food aid to growing cash crops like sugar cane and cotton for export, thanks to USAID's critical support of agricultural development in India years ago.

Then as a child born in New York, I had an anaphylactic reaction to the smallpox vaccine, preventing my ability to complete vaccination and travel abroad.

USAID's leadership in helping eradicate smallpox in 1979 meant that I could not only travel and work in global health but even be nominated to lead the bureau and dedicated people behind that effort.

If I am confirmed, I commit to working with you and others in Congress in a bipartisan manner to strengthen and support USAID's staff and to further the agency's longstanding leadership in global health, and I will seek to specifically address three simultaneous colossal needs: controlling COVID-19, preparing for the next pandemic, and strengthening global health systems to regain the massive ground lost in advancing life expectancy.

The global health challenges that are facing USAID and our country are daunting. But if I am confirmed, I believe my career as a surgeon, journalist, and public health leader have prepared me for service as assistant administrator.

Over the last two decades, I have had a singular focus on reducing suffering and saving lives through leadership and innovation, to reduce disparities in systems of health care and public health worldwide.

In my research and writing, I have endeavored to expose gaps and produce solutions, and then in my public health roles I have worked to deliver those solutions widely.

And from this firsthand experience, I have learned not just how to make investments but how to use them to make systems work across a wide range of domains in health.

For instance, I led a global partnership that created a two-minute surgical safety checklist that was found in a trial in hospitals from Seattle to rural Tanzania to reduce complications and deaths by more than one-third. Then I helped lead a decade of work that has produced daily use of that checklist in 75 percent of surgical procedures globally.

Through Lifebox, an NGO I co-founded, we lowered the cost of oxygen-monitoring equipment for operating rooms in low income countries by 80 percent.

I also co-founded Ariadne Labs, a center for health systems innovation where we have improved the safety of childbirth in India and sub-Saharan Africa, strengthened outbreak response in the H1N1 Ebola and coronavirus pandemics, and improved primary care in low income countries.

Early in 2020, I turned my work toward the coronavirus pandemic. I co-founded CIC Health, a public benefit corporation to provide logistics and operations for U.S. COVID-19 needs that our existing health system struggled to meet.

We have provided now 3 million coronavirus tests and vaccinations across the Northeast and are now feverishly working to deliver testing capacity for thousands of schools in need.

This experience, along with my publications in medical journals, the New Yorker, and elsewhere during the pandemic led to two additional roles.

I was privileged to serve on the Biden-Harris Transition COVID-19 Advisory Board and then as a co-leader of STAT, a Rockefeller Foundation-supported alliance of COVID-19 officials for 40-plus states who have met weekly in a bipartisan manner for the last year to design and share solutions for controlling the pandemic.

Across my work, I have seen the quiet unrecognized heroism of the people in our public health and development agencies across the country and the world.

They have saved and are saving more lives than most will know by taking on the toughest health challenges of our time, and that is why I could not be more excited by the possibility of joining them at USAID.

It is an extraordinary privilege to be here. I look forward to answering your questions.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Leader Claire D. Cronin, who has been nominated to be our Ambassador to Ireland.

Leader Cronin?

STATEMENT OF THE HON. CLAIRE D. CRONIN OF MASSACHUSETTS, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO IRELAND

Ms. CRONIN. Thank you to Senator Markey for the kind introduction.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, members of the committee, it is my honor to appear before you as President Biden's nominee to be U.S. Ambassador to Ireland. I am grateful to President Biden and Secretary Blinken for their trust and confidence.

If confirmed by the Senate, I pledge to work closely with Congress and the administration to advance United States priorities and reinforce our shared values in Ireland.

First, I would like to thank my husband, Ray, as well as our daughters, Kara and Kerry, for their love and support. I am also grateful to have the strong support of my brothers and sisters, and my close extended family—in-laws, cousins, nieces, and nephews, and of course, my dear friends, who have become a second family to me.

My career is rooted in public service and the law. My path was shaped by the example set by my parents. My mother was a public school teacher and my father a Pearl Harbor survivor who served in the Pacific throughout World War Two. He attended law school with the help of the GI Bill when he returned home.

I was honored to be elected to serve in the Massachusetts House of Representatives in 2012. I was grateful for the opportunity to serve as the first woman to chair the Judiciary Committee in the House and today as the first woman House Majority Leader.

My experience as a mediator shaped my ability to work within the House in a constructive and bipartisan manner. When my grandfather left Donegal for the promise that America held, I cannot help but wonder what he would have thought if he knew his granddaughter will one day be testifying before this esteemed committee as the nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to Ireland.

The Irish first arrived on our shores before the founding of our nation. Their significant contributions, sacrifice, and hard work helped define the American spirit and shape our success today.

Over 30 million Americans claim Irish heritage. The historical, cultural, and economic ties between the United States and Ireland are undeniable and will forever unite our countries.

This strong relationship is demonstrated within my own family. We are blessed and forever enriched by the addition of my sister-in-law Breffni, who was born and raised in Dublin.

If confirmed, the safety and security of Americans in Ireland will be my top priority. If confirmed, I will also advance the shared values that are the bedrock of our enduring ties.

These priorities include addressing global challenges together, increasing our shared prosperity, and strengthening our people-to-people ties.

Ireland has a strong commitment to multilateral institutions, which is central in promoting peace, prosperity, and stability.

While maintaining a policy of military neutrality, Ireland continues to be a valuable partner in maintaining global security through sustained contributions to U.N. peacekeeping, dependable humanitarian assistance, and membership in the D-ISIS Coalition.

If confirmed, I will work with Ireland to ensure that addressing global challenges and partnering in global security continue to be strong elements of our bilateral relationship.

Our economic relationship is the pillar of our strong ties. The U.S. is Ireland's strongest and largest trade and investment partner. More than 900 U.S. firms operate in Ireland, and Ireland is currently the ninth largest investor in the U.S.

If confirmed, I will promote the United States as an investment and exchange destination for Irish companies and individuals, and advocate for increased two-way trade and investment to create jobs in the United States and Ireland.

The United States and Ireland remain committed to the Belfast Good Friday Agreement, which has been the bedrock of peace, stability, and prosperity in Northern Ireland.

If confirmed, I will encourage the United Kingdom, the European Union, and Ireland to engage in productive and cooperative dialogue to resolve the differences over the Northern Ireland Protocol. Our relationship is close and enduring, one that will continue to grow ever stronger as we work together on a range of shared issues.

If confirmed, I will advance our shared priorities and values, expand our rich economic and commercial cooperation, and strengthen our people-to-people ties.

Thank you for the opportunity to testify, and I look forward to answering your questions.

I was honored to be elected to serve in the Massachusetts House of Representatives in 2012. While serving, I was grateful for the opportunity to serve as the first woman chair of the Judiciary Committee in the House, and today as the first woman House Majority Leader.

My experience as a mediator shaped my ability to work within the House in a constructive and bipartisan manner.

When my grandfather left Donegal for the promise that America held, I can't help but wonder what he would have thought if he knew his granddaughter would one day be testifying before this esteemed committee as a nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to Ireland.

The Irish first arrived on our shores before the founding of our nation. Their significant contributions, sacrifice, and hard work helped define the American spirit and shape our success today. Over 30 million Americans claim Irish heritage. The historic, cultural, and economic ties between the United States and Ireland are undeniable and will forever unite our countries.

This strong relationship is demonstrated within my own family. We are blessed and forever enriched by the addition of my sister-in-law, Breffni, who was born and raised in Dublin.

If confirmed, the safety and security of Americans in Ireland will be my top priority.

If confirmed, I will also advance the shared values that are the bedrock of our enduring ties. These priorities include addressing global challenges together, increasing our shared prosperity, and strengthening our people-to-people ties.

Ireland has a strong commitment to multilateral institutions, which are central in promoting peace, prosperity and stability.

While maintaining a policy of military neutrality, Ireland continues to be a valuable partner in maintaining global security through sustained contributions to U.N. peacekeeping, dependable humanitarian assistance, and membership in the D-ISIS coalition.

If confirmed, I will work with Ireland to ensure that addressing global challenges and partnering in global security continue to be strong elements of our bilateral relationship.

Our economic relationship is a pillar of our strong ties. The United States is Ireland's strongest and largest trade and investment partner. More than 900 U.S. firms operate in Ireland and, Ireland is currently the ninth largest investor in the United States.

If confirmed, I will promote the United States as an investment and exchange destination for Irish companies, and advocate for increased two-way trade and investment to create jobs in the United States and Ireland.

The United States and Ireland remain committed to the Belfast/Good Friday Agreement, which has been the bedrock of peace, stability, and prosperity in Northern Ireland.

If confirmed, I will encourage the United Kingdom, the European Union, and Ireland, to engage in productive and cooperative dialogue to resolve differences over the Northern Ireland Protocol.

The United States' relationship with Ireland is close and enduring—one that will continue to grow ever stronger as we work together on a range of shared issues.

If confirmed, I will advance our shared political priorities and values; expand our rich economic and commercial cooperation and strengthen our people-to-people ties.

Thank you for the opportunity to testify and I look forward to answering your questions.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, Leader Cronin, and thank all of the nominees for their testimony here today, and now we will begin questions. We have got a lot of ground to try to cover.

Let me start with you, Captain Sullenberger, and it really is a two-part question. You referenced in your testimony the fact that ICAO is conducting an investigation of the May 2021 forced landing by Belarus of Ryanair.

That was the flight bound for Lithuania, and they did it in order to arrest a dissident journalist, a flagrant violation of human rights, assault on the free press, and potentially a contravention of international aviation law.

What options does ICAO have to address this kind of conduct in order to prevent a repeat of these kind of actions?

Captain SULLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, thank you for that important question, and it is a very important question internationally.

The forced diversion of Ryanair Flight 4978 by Belarus for the arrest of an opposition journalist showed flagrant disregard for international norms of aviation security and safety and, clearly, undermined the critical trust between pilots and air traffic control in the flight information region.

ICAO, as a U.N. organization responsible for setting global standards for the safety and security of international civil aviation, must ensure that those standards are upheld.

If confirmed, I will continue to encourage our partners and allies to fully participate in the ICAO investigation by sharing all information relevant to the incident with ICAO's investigative team and to push for substantive findings, including a chronology of events to be presented to the Council in November.

Already steps have been taken to sanction those involved, including the Belarus minister of transport, the air navigation commissioner, and another official.

I think more action needs to be taken. There is, in the ICAO Charter Article 88, that in certain conditions we can temporarily remove the voting rights of a state for violating international norms.

I think it requires a whole-of-government approach. We should be pulling every lever necessary to hold accountable those responsible for this act.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you for that response. Let me ask you briefly about the issue of climate change and ICAO's role in curbing carbon emissions from international aviation.

I know you are aware of the CORSIA initiative. What more should we be doing in this area and what role can you and ICAO play in making even more progress, going forward?

Captain SULLENBERGER. CORSIA is an important interim step and it is important that we begin immediately.

As you know, with any crisis any denial or delay lowers our chances of success. The sooner we start, the more options we are going to have to deal with this existential threat, the better those options will be, and the lower the cost total in the long run.

The administration supports legislative action to enable full U.S. implementation of CORSIA and, if confirmed, I will support this effort. Many U.S. airlines are already voluntarily beginning taking such action. Those actions remain voluntary through 2026.

I think, again, a whole of government approach. Everything we can be doing we should be doing, including a wide distribution of sustainable aviation fuels in particular.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you. I am now going to—I see Senator Rounds has returned and I am going to turn it over to him for questioning and go vote.

And Senator Rounds, I see Senator Shaheen is next after you but let me turn it over to you. I will be back. Thank you all.

Senator ROUNDS. [presiding]. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am just curious, will we be doing separate questioning for each of the members or can we discuss our questions with the entire panel at this time?

Senator VAN HOLLEN. I think—feel free to ask anybody. If there is interest, we can do another short round for this panel because I did have some questions for some of the other witnesses on this panel as well.

Senator ROUNDS. Excellent. If it is okay with you, Mr. Chairman, I will do my questions with the entire panel and allow Senator Shaheen to do the same, and by that time you should be back in charge again.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. All right. Take care. Thanks. Thank you.

Senator ROUNDS. Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Let me just begin, first of all, by thanking all of you once again for participating and I want to begin with Captain Sullenberger.

In your opening statement, you identified some priority areas that you will focus on at the I-C-A-O, or ICAO. Can you elaborate on what you see as the major U.S. interests for participation in ICAO, and also what benefits does the United States receive from membership?

Captain SULLENBERGER. Thank you, Senator, for that important question.

And that is part of why I want to serve in this capacity. I think it is important that we raise the level of awareness among the American people about what ICAO is and what it does and why it is important, and I want to use my public profile to help do that along with all my colleagues at FAA, at DOT, at TSA and in conference with your committee and the members.

It is important that the American people understand that in ICAO they are responsible for setting and enforcing the best practices, the standards and recommended procedures that airlines and all aviation operators use globally, and it is important for safety and security of everyone who travels internationally by air that those standards be as high as are practicable and that they are uniform and harmonized throughout the world.

And for American companies it is important that we try to harmonize these standards and practices globally so there are not great differences in procedures and standards between areas of the world, and it makes the whole use of airspace more efficient and makes our companies more successful and profitable.

It is important that we—go ahead.

Senator ROUNDS. No. Please finish.

Captain SULLENBERGER. It is important in advancing U.S. economic interests, and one of the things that has been brought up already that we really need to do is to restore and make more robust U.S. leadership in global aviation because we have powerful strategic competitors out there, and particularly the PRC.

And so we need to rally our allies, our partners, and like-minded states to promote values of democracy, of free markets, and not some of the values of autocratic states that appear in some ICAO documents at the request of the PRC that have been certified by the Communist Chinese Party, or that may include some of their rhetoric and their ideology.

Senator ROUNDS. Thank you. That kind of leads into my second question, sir. Some policymakers are concerned about the increasing influence and role of countries that are viewed as U.S. competitors in U.N. bodies.

For example, in recent years, U.N. specialized agencies, including ICAO, are increasingly being led by Chinese nationals. What is your assessment of China's efforts to increase its standing and influence in ICAO?

Captain SULLENBERGER. Currently, because of the methodology that is used based upon nations' contributions to U.N. agencies, we are allowed certain members of U.S. nationals to work in certain U.N. agencies.

Based upon our contributions and our funding for U.N. agencies, we should have at ICAO over 30 U.S. employees and now we have less than 10.

That is one of the things that is foremost in my mind is to improve opportunities for employment at ICAO for Americans who have the knowledge, the skill, the expertise to improve aviation globally and to advance U.S. values and interests and not those of authoritarian states. That is one of the most important things that we can do.

Senator ROUNDS. Thank you, sir. And, look, I appreciate your stepping forward and participating in the public policy discussions. Thank you.

Dr. Gawande, various provisions of law restrict the use of U.S. taxpayer funds to perform or promote abortion overseas. If confirmed, will you commit to upholding these laws in both letter and spirit?

Dr. GAWANDE. I am very clear Congress makes the laws. USAID is not permitted to fund abortion and I am committed to continuing to comply with the laws and regulations that are—that pertain here.

Senator ROUNDS. Thank you.

The committee recently passed a bill to elevate global health security and pandemic preparedness as a national security priority, including by establishing a global health diplomacy lead at the State Department to better align the work of USAID and CDC in the field.

If confirmed, will you commit to working with this committee to make sure it is faithfully implemented?

Dr. GAWANDE. I will, certainly, work closely with the committee if the bill goes through to law to make sure it is appropriately—that we are in compliance with the law and that it is implemented.

I strongly support improving our pandemic preparedness and global health security response and look forward to working with you for ways that we can expand our capabilities even further.

Senator ROUNDS. Dr. Gawande, thank you very much.

Ms. Cronin, Ireland's economic environment attracts foreign investment due to its low tax rates. There has been tension over Ireland's resistance to the 15 percent global corporate tax minimum that over 130 countries have already signed on to.

How will you support efforts to advance solutions on tax issues with Ireland? And also, how would you help reconcile Ireland's differences with the global corporate tax minimum, or is there an alternative to be pursued?

Ms. CRONIN. Thank you very much, Senator, for your question. It is, certainly, an issue that has driven a great amount of discussion and, at times, controversy as we are moving forward with the U.S. proposed global minimum tax rate.

As you rightly stated, over 130 countries have come to reach consensus on this rate, and the idea behind it to level the playing field relative to foreign direct investment in other countries.

Ireland is one of the three countries within the EU who has not agreed to the minimum tax rate. I, certainly, recognize their desire for tax sovereignty, although Ireland has a very strong and positive climate for investment.

They have a well-educated English-speaking and multilingual workforce, a strong judiciary, proximity to both the United States and the EU, good transportation links. All of these things are factors that businesses do consider when they decide to locate in another country or do business there.

I think we have already seen that we have many, many industry leaders have a footprint in Dublin or in Ireland. Certainly, the tax rate—the 12.5 percent tax rate—is something that may have been attractive to those seeking to invest.

But as I said earlier, there are many, many other factors which come into that decision. I think it is important to note the minimum global tax is a floor, not a ceiling. It does still allow good competition and a level playing field.

I know Ireland is very committed to work within a multilateral framework. I would work, try to facilitate discussions with tax experts from the U.S. to meet with Irish Government officials, work within the EOCED to, hopefully, over time, promote this minimum tax with Ireland and hope that without too much longer that they may join with 130 other countries who have agreed to do so.

Senator ROUNDS. Thank you, and thank you once again for stepping forward. My time has expired, and at this time I would turn to Senator Shaheen.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Senator Rounds, and congratulations to all of the nominees this afternoon. We look forward to the opportunity to serve with you.

I want to begin, Captain Sullenberger, with you, because you mentioned in your opening remarks the Ryanair flight, and I had the opportunity to be in Lithuania shortly after that flight was brought down by Lukashenko in Belarus.

And there was a real outrage not just in Lithuania but in Eastern European countries about the impact of a dictator being able to bring down a flight and how that would affect the freedom of all air travel.

I wondered if you could speak to what you think ICAO could do to address any future attempts like we saw in Belarus that brought down a plane just for political purposes.

Captain SULLENBERGER. It is very clear to me, Senator, that the United States must have an effective leadership role, again, with our allies, our partners, our like-minded states, to strengthen ICAO's standards so there is not a gap that autocrats can use and use our freedoms against us through deception, through coercion, to pose a situation where they say that there is a bomb threat and that the device might detonate if they fly into the next airspace or destination and that they must be diverted to Belarus.

And again, that fractures the trust between air traffic in that region and—air traffic control and the pilots and it violates every norm.

There is a debate about whether or not it violates international law. Perhaps the laws and the requirements, the standards, need to be strengthened to close these gaps that others might use to do something similar.

We should be using every lever of power, every bit of influence we can, to isolate, to punish those who do these kinds of acts and make it less likely that anyone else will do that.

But it is going to require a whole of government approach and a real effective partnership achieving consensus among many nations to do what needs to be done. It is going to be hard, but we have to start right now.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you very much for that response, and I hope you will, once confirmed, take the lead in trying to help make that happen at ICAO.

Dr. Gawande, I want to follow up with you. I remember your—some of your articles were, really, blueprints as we were looking at trying to do the Affordable Care Act and put in place an improved health care system. Thank you so much for all of your writings and your research.

I want to ask you about the global gag rule, because when the Biden-Harris administration took over one of the first things they did was to rescind the global gag rule, which I think has been very important to women and to families around the world because we know that it affects the ability of family planning agencies to really engage—often engage with their patients.

Can you speak to the difference that that makes in the ability to provide for the health of women around the world?

Dr. GAWANDE. Thank you, and thank you for the kind words, Senator.

First, I want you to understand I am a strong believer in the evidence that voluntary family planning and reproductive health services are essential to women's health and that there is ample evidence of benefit to infant and child health as well.

Second, I know there is a strong difference of views about the global gag rule and President Biden's decision to rescind the policy.

But I think we can agree that we have had now decades of bipartisan support that has made the U.S. government the global leader in funding voluntary family planning. And not only that, it has made USAID the global leader in technical expertise for enabling voluntary family planning support.

My core commitment, if I am confirmed to the agency, is going to be to, first, follow the law and applicable regulations, and then also advance our leadership in this space.

The global gag rule rescission allows the reach of our programs at USAID to a wider range of organizations that are having a remarkable commitment while also complying with the laws that require that USAID not fund abortion.

And so that ability to expand that leadership and that reach is the primary value that comes from that policy decision.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you. I really appreciate that answer and pointing out that family planning is not abortion, and we should stop including those organizations that help women determine their children, and how many children they can have and want to have and how to space out their families is different than abortion and we should stop treating them the same way. I appreciate that.

Ms. Cronin, congratulations to you as well. As a neighbor—a neighboring legislator, I appreciate the barriers that you have broken in Massachusetts.

And I wanted to—I am also the chair of the Subcommittee on Foreign Relations that deals with Europe and so I have been following the challenges relating to the implementation of the Northern Ireland Protocols as Britain has left Brexit.

Can you talk about how you will work to ensure that the U.S. upholds its commitment to support trade to Northern Ireland and help ensure that the issues are being addressed in the framework of the protocol?

Ms. CRONIN. Thank you, Senator Shaheen. And not only are we neighbors, I lived in Londonderry, New Hampshire, when you were elected as governor.

Senator SHAHEEN. Oh, good.

Ms. CRONIN. Yes.

[Laughter.]

Ms. CRONIN. Clearly, President Biden has stated that he is unequivocally committed to the preservation of the Good Friday Agreement. This is also very clearly shown with strong bipartisan support in both the House and the Senate in Congress—the Senate—and very strong bipartisan support as well.

This will be a shared priority for both the United States and, certainly, for Ireland as well. They have repeatedly expressed great concern that the hard-fought gains of the Good Friday Agreement have been maintained.

Recently, there has been some unrest regarding the Northern Ireland Protocol and its implications. If I were confirmed, I would work with Embassy London, Consul General in Belfast, and the Irish government to make sure that everyone would still come to the table and do everything possible and engage in constructive dialogue in order to preserve the hard-fought gains of the Good Friday Agreement.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you. I think that will be a real challenge as you take over your post, once confirmed.

I look forward to working with all of you—I am sure I am out of time at this point—and really appreciate your responses.

Ms. CRONIN. Thank you.

Senator ROUNDS [presiding]. Thank you, Senator Shaheen.

I know that our chairman is on his way back, and prior to stepping into the next panel, I just—I wanted to ask Dr. Gawande one more question.

I wanted to ask you a question touching on China, Africa, and public health. Amid an otherwise increasingly challenging relationship, the United States and China collaborated to assist the African Union stand up the Africa CDC.

This offered hope that we and China could work together to address some of the world's most challenging problems. Has that collaboration continued in the wake of COVID-19 and will China's construction of the Africa CDC headquarters in Addis give China leverage when it comes to addressing public health concerns in Africa?

Dr. GAWANDE. Thank you, Senator Rounds.

Africa CDC has been an important organization for building capacity in Africa for public health services, public health structures and organization, and I think the critical part of my role, if I am confirmed, to the Global Health Bureau would be to engage directly with Africa CDC to ensure that our leadership, our close connection to Africa CDC, is sustained and that the global values that are reflected by the way we do our work are continued.

We know that China has approached our—their contributions on COVID vaccines in a very transactional way. Where we have donated at the world's most massive level to COVAX and bilateral agreements for vaccines, China has approached it by only providing—primarily providing sales for profit and not upholding the same kinds of values and standards. I do think it is very important for us to be engaged in these organizations like Africa CDC.

I will, lastly, point out that President Biden has elevated the Africa CDC director to become the head of PEPFAR and lead HIV/AIDS here as a nominee, and so he will come before this group as well, I suspect, and I think that this is all an important reflection of how much value Africa CDC has added in a short period of time.

Senator ROUNDS. Thank you, Doctor.

And, Mr. Chairman, I will turn the virtual gavel back over to you, sir.

Senator VAN HOLLEN [presiding]. Thank you. Thank you, Senator Rounds, and thank you all for your indulgence of all of us as we go to vote.

And Senator Rounds really covered the question to Dr. Gawande that I want to focus on and just elaborate a little bit, because I think we are all pleased with the leadership that President Biden has shown in working to get vaccines deployed around the world and our contributions to COVAX.

But we have got a long way to go, we, meaning the international community, especially in Africa where we have got 17 percent of the world's population but only 2 percent of all the shots that have been delivered to date have been in Africa.

And according to the most recent estimate from the World Health Organization, less than 4 percent of the African continent's population has been fully inoculated.

We, on this committee and on the Africa Subcommittee and African Global Health Subcommittee, are going to want to work with you to address those issues.

My final question is also to you, which is, obviously, we want to have all hands on deck to defeat the pandemic. But as you well know, there are all sorts of other diseases that claim people's lives around the world, including especially in Africa. And in many cases, as we have sort of surged resources to deal with COVID we have seen spikes in some of the other areas—diseases in other areas.

Could you just talk a little bit about how we address both at the same time, even with the limited resources that we have got?

Dr. GAWANDE. Yes. These are colossal and daunting challenges to both take on the COVID-19 threat that we have right in front of us, prepare for the next pandemic, but realize that the response and the effects of COVID have severely damaged health care systems and public health gains we have made over the last couple of years.

We have seen vaccination for other conditions, for childhood illnesses, retreat. We have seen progress in preventing maternal and child death retreat. We have seen some of the same kinds of losses in our TB work.

And I think the most critical opportunities that we have there are to now reengage, understanding that we still have—we will have well into 2022 and beyond coping with COVID and, therefore, we will have to reinvigorate our prevention of maternal and child death programs, our HIV/AIDS work, and our TB work.

There are many opportunities to use our focus on COVID to strengthen the systems as a whole, help them get back on their feet, and make it possible to move forward on basic fronts like primary care and delivery of these kinds of capabilities.

I think the bottom line will be that we have a extensive capability at USAID in those global health arenas. I think everybody has been all hands on deck on the COVID work and this is our opportunity to enable those teams now to also get back to advancing their lines of work, and if I am confirmed that is exactly what I will want to make sure we are doing.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, Doctor.

And Leader Cronin, I think Senator Shaheen asked one of the questions I was going to pose to you regarding Ireland and our efforts to establish at least some minimum international corporate tax and, really, the role that you will play in urging Ireland to really support that effort to prevent a race to the bottom.

And I am going to submit for the record a couple questions regarding Brexit and its impact in relations with Northern Ireland and Ireland and the Good Friday Agreement.

But let me say to all of you what a terrific group of nominees with great experience, and we are looking forward to, hopefully, having a fairly rapid markup and vote in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on all your nominations.

I thank all of you for joining us, and now we are going to go to the second panel, unless there are any other members who have anything else to say.

If not, round one is over and we are going to start the second round. Thank you all for being here and for joining us, and congratulations on your nominations.

Dr. GAWANDE. Thank you.

Captain SULLENBERGER. Thank you.

Ms. CRONIN. Thank you.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you.

Ms. CRONIN. Thank you very much.

[Pause.]

Senator VAN HOLLEN. All right. I, certainly, see some of the nominees for the second panel and I am going to kick this off with introductions for each of you, and then you can make your statements and then we will have a round of questions.

I see another vote has just started so Senator Rounds and I will try to juggle this the way we did before.

Let me just introduce all of our distinguished nominees. We have Kent Doyle Logsdon, who is a career member of the Senior Foreign Service and has spent the bulk of his three decades-long career in the European and Eurasia regions.

He is currently chief of staff to the Under Secretary of State for Economic Growth, Energy, and the Environment. Among his past assignments he served as Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary of State in the Bureau of Energy Resources, Deputy Chief of Mission at the U.S. Embassy in Berlin, and chief of staff to both the Deputy Secretary of State for Management Resources and the Deputy Executive Secretary of the State Department.

He is the recipient of Presidential Meritorious Service Awards—the Presidential Meritorious Service Awards, as well as numerous other State Department performance awards.

He speaks Russian, Ukrainian, Thai, and German, holds a Bachelor's degree from the University of Notre Dame and a Master's degree from the University of Virginia.

Welcome to you, Mr. Logsdon.

We also have Sharon L. Cromer, who is a career member of the Senior Foreign Service and currently serves as the USAID Mission Director at the U.S. Embassy in Accra, Ghana. Among her many past assignments, Ms. Cromer served as USAID Mission Director at the U.S. Embassy in Dar es Salaam and at the U.S. Embassy in Abuja.

Ms. Cromer has also served in USAID as the Senior Deputy Assistant Administrator and Acting Assistant Administrator in the Africa Bureau, as Deputy Assistant Administrator in the Management Bureau, and as Acting Senior Deputy Assistant Administrator and Acting Assistant Administrator in the Bureau of Democracy, Conflict, and Humanitarian Assistance.

She is a recipient of a Presidential Rank Award, the USAID Administrators Reengineering Award, and a State Department Superior Honor Award.

Ms. Cromer earned her BA from Barnard College and her JD from Georgetown University Law School.

Welcome to you, Ms. Cromer.

Ambassador Virginia E. Palmer is a career member of the Senior Foreign Service and currently serves as both Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary and as Acting Assistant Secretary for the State Department's Bureau of Energy Resources.

Previously, she served as U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Malawi where she oversaw an annual bilateral assistance budget of over $500 million and the work of 11 U.S. government agencies.

Among her other past assignments Ambassador Palmer has also served as Deputy Chief of Mission and charge d'affaire ad interim at the U.S. Embassy in South Africa and Deputy Chief of Mission and charge d'affaire ad interim at the U.S. Embassy in Vietnam.

Ambassador Palmer is the recipient of numerous superior honor, meritorious honor, and senior performance awards and speaks both Chinese and French. She received her Bachelor's of Science in Foreign Service degree from Georgetown University and her MA from the University of Virginia.

Welcome to you, Ambassador Palmer.

And Howard A. Van Vranken is a career member of the Senior Foreign Service and the Executive Director and Deputy Executive Secretary at the State Department's Executive Secretariat.

He previously served as Executive Director and Acting Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary of the department's Bureau of South and Central Asian Affairs, and as Deputy Executive Director in the State Department's Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs, and South and Central Asian Affairs.

Earlier, Mr. Van Vranken served as Management Counselor at the U.S. Embassy in Rabat, Morocco, and as Deputy Political Counselor at the U.S. Embassy in Baghdad.

Past postings also include assignments in Norway, Yemen, Lebanon, Tunisia, Ireland, and the U.K. He is the recipient of multiple State Department awards and the Presidential Distinguished Service Award, and speaks Arabic, Farsi, and Norwegian. Mr. Van Vranken received his BA from UC Davis and his MA from the Harvard Kennedy School.

Welcome to Mr. Van Vranken.

I am now going to—I do not know, Senator Rounds, if you have any statements here. If not, I was going to turn it over and begin the testimony.

Senator ROUNDS. Mr. Chairman, I will tell you what. I will enter my statement for the record and allow you to begin the testimony, and if you would like to coordinate a plan for both of us getting in to vote in a timely fashion, I would be all ears.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. All right. I am happy to go first—vote first or second, whichever your preference is.

Senator ROUNDS. I will head out right now and, hopefully, get back in time to spell you sir.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. All right. Thank you.

All right. Again, to all our nominees, thank you for your understanding. Senator Rounds is going to go vote, and then he will return and I will go vote as well.

Let us please begin in the order in which I made the introductions and we will begin with Mr. Logsdon.

STATEMENT OF KENT DOYLE LOGSDON OF PENNSYLVANIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF MOLDOVA

Mr. LOGSDON. Thank you very much.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, members of the committee, I am honored to appear today as President Biden's nominee to be the next U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Moldova.

I am grateful to the President and to Secretary Blinken for the confidence they have placed in me. If confirmed, I pledge to work closely with Congress to advance our nation's interests in Moldova.

I would not be here without the love and support of my family: my wife, Michelle, who just retired after 35 years of service as a Foreign Service officer, initially with the U.S. Information Agency and then as a public diplomacy officer at the State Department, our children, who accompanied us to our overseas postings. We are very proud of their resilience and achievements.

Nora is a law student at the University of Virginia and Will is studying music production at Shenandoah University.

And, of course, my parents, who encouraged me in this career—my mother, Carroll, who passed away last year after contracting COVID, and my father, Bill, who just retired after nearly 60 years as a patent attorney.

The world changed after I joined the Foreign Service. The Berlin Wall and the USSR disappeared and the Cold War ended. My wife and I joined many of our colleagues in establishing and building relationships with new countries in Eastern Europe and Central Asia.

I focused most of my diplomatic career working in or on issues involving the countries in this region, and it is exciting to see their progress and development in the past 30 years.

If confirmed, leading our mission in Chisinau would be a highlight of my diplomatic career. The U.S.-Moldova relationship is grounded in shared democratic values and support for a democratic, secure, and prosperous Moldova, anchored in Europe.

With an historic mandate, President Sandu and a reform-oriented government have launched an ambitious program to establish a more transparent and accountable democracy, build a stronger economy, and combat endemic corruption.

At the U.N. General Assembly, President Biden told the world about Moldovan voters' success in delivering a landslide victory for the forces of democracy with a mandate to fight graft to build a more inclusive economy.

Corruption threatens Moldova's economic prospects and democratic future. We must continue to support the Moldovan government's efforts to strengthen the capacity of its institutions to identify, investigate, and prosecute corruption. If confirmed, I will make the fight against corruption one of my top priorities.

We must also continue to be a steadfast partner to civil society, independent media, and other organizations committed to developing participatory democracy and promoting good governance.

Progress in the fight against corruption will strengthen Moldova's investment climate and ensure a level playing field for U.S. business. Moldova has strengthened its financial sector oversight and transparency, and continued reforms will help Moldova unlock further budgetary support from the European Union and IMF to strengthen its economy in the wake of the COVID pandemic.

Support from the United States and the European Union is helping Moldova expand trade and market linkages with the West. The EU is now Moldova's largest trading partner. Moldova is linking its energy infrastructure to Europe and diversifying its energy supply to reduce dependence on Russian gas imports.

Moldova is also committed to transforming its defense forces and their capacity to contribute to international security and peacekeeping missions. U.S. security assistance has been key to this effort. The United States respects Moldova's constitutional neutrality and welcomes its efforts to build a more modern military equipped to counter emerging threats.

Russian malign influence and disinformation threaten Moldova's democratic development, ambitious reform agenda, and European trajectory.

If confirmed, I will work closely with the government leaders, civil society, and international partners to support Moldova's democratic reform agenda and build resiliency against malign influence and disinformation.

Resolving the Transnistria conflict remains a priority. The United States supports OSCE-led efforts to uphold Moldova's sovereignty and territorial integrity while acknowledging a special status for Transnistria.

We need to continue to press Russia to honor its commitments to withdraw its troops and munitions from Moldova, and we are committed to protecting the fundamental freedoms of citizens on both sides of the Dniester River.

If confirmed, I will continue to promote confidence-building measures and seek tangible results through the OSCE-led 5+2 process.

The Moldovan people have chosen a bold path of reform and Western integration. It is in our interest to support them. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the members of this committee and the Congress to do just that.

Improving Moldova's democracy, prosperity, and security will help us develop a key partner in Eastern Europe.

Thank you for your time and consideration. I look forward to your questions.

[Prepared statement of Mr. Logsdon follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF KENT D. LOGSDON

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, members of the committee, I am honored to appear today as President Biden's nominee to be the next U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Moldova. I am grateful to the President and to Secretary Blinken for the confidence they have placed in me. If confirmed, I pledge to work closely with Congress to advance our nation's interests in Moldova.

I would not be here without the love and support of my family. My wife Michelle, who just retired after 35 years of service as a foreign service officer, initially with the U.S. Information Agency, and then as a public diplomacy officer at the State Department. Our children, who accompanied us to our overseas postings. We are proud of their resilience and achievements—Nora is a law student at the University of Virginia and Will is studying music production at Shenandoah University. And my parents, who encouraged me in this career—my mother Carroll, who passed away last year after contracting COVID, and my father Bill, who just retired after nearly 60 years as a patent attorney.

The world changed after I joined the foreign service. The Berlin Wall and the USSR disappeared, and the Cold War ended. My wife and I joined many of our colleagues in establishing and building relationships with new countries in Eastern Europe and Central Asia. I have focused most of my diplomatic career working in or on issues involving the countries in this region and it is exciting to see their progress and development in the past thirty years. If confirmed, leading our mission in Chisinau would be a highlight of my diplomatic career.

The U.S.-Moldova relationship is grounded in shared democratic values and support for a democratic, secure, and prosperous Moldova, anchored in Europe.

With an historic mandate, President Sandu and a reform-oriented government have launched an ambitious program to establish a more transparent and accountable democracy, build a stronger economy, and combat endemic corruption. At the UN General Assembly, President Biden told the world about Moldovan voters' success in delivering "a landslide victory for the forces of democracy with a mandate to fight graft, to build a more inclusive economy."

Corruption threatens Moldova's economic prospects and democratic future. We must continue to support the Moldovan Government's efforts to strengthen the capacity of its institutions to identify, investigate, and prosecute corruption. If confirmed, I will make the fight against corruption one of my top priorities. We must also continue to be a steadfast partner to civil society, independent media, and other organizations committed to developing participatory democracy and promoting good governance.

Progress in the fight against corruption will strengthen Moldova's investment climate and ensure a level playing field for U.S. business. Moldova has strengthened financial sector oversight and transparency. Continued reforms will help Moldova unlock further budgetary support from the European Union and IMF to strengthen its economy in the wake of the COVID pandemic.

Support from the United States and the European Union is helping Moldova expand trade and market linkages with the West. The EU is now Moldova's largest trading partner. Moldova is linking its energy infrastructure to Europe and diversifying its energy supply to reduce dependence on Russian gas imports.

Moldova is also committed to transforming its defense forces and their capacity to contribute to international security and peacekeeping missions. U.S. security assistance has been key to this effort. The United States respects Moldova's constitutional neutrality and welcomes its efforts to build a more modern military equipped to counter emerging threats.

Russian malign influence and disinformation threaten Moldova's democratic development, ambitious reform agenda, and European trajectory. If confirmed, I will work closely with government leaders, civil society, and international partners to support Moldova's democratic reform agenda and build resiliency against malign influence and disinformation.

Resolving the Transnistria conflict remains a priority. The United States supports OSCE-led efforts to uphold Moldova's sovereignty and territorial integrity while acknowledging a special status for Transnistria. We need to continue to press Russia to honor its commitments to withdraw its troops and munitions from Moldova. And we are committed to protecting the fundamental freedoms of citizens on both sides of the Nistru River. If confirmed, I will continue to promote confidence building measures and seek tangible results through the OSCE-led 5+2 process.

The Moldovan people have chosen a bold path of reform and Western integration. It is in our interest to support them. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the members of this committee and the Congress to do just that. Improving Moldova's democracy, prosperity, and security will help to develop a key partner in Eastern Europe.

Thank you for your time and consideration.
I look forward to your questions.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you for your testimony.
Next, we will hear from Ms. Cromer.

STATEMENT OF SHARON L. CROMER OF NEW YORK, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF CAREER MINISTER, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF THE GAMBIA

Ms. CROMER. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today.

I am deeply grateful to President Biden and Secretary Blinken for the confidence they have shown in me as their nominee for U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of the Gambia.

If confirmed, I will collaborate closely with you and other distinguished members of Congress to advance our nation's security and foreign policy interests.

Mr. Chairman, I am here today the product of a loving family. My mother, Thelma Cromer, now deceased, showed me how to care for others and live abundantly despite having so little.

My father, Walter Cromer, Sr., drove a taxi right here in the nation's capital for 60 years and inspired in me the desire to explore the world.

My loving husband of 33 years, Arnold Sobers, Jr., supported me every step. Together, we raised two brilliant daughters, Courtney and Simone, and we now have two adorable grandchildren, Tanoor and Dunia.

I am very grateful to all of my family, friends, colleagues, and mentors across the globe. They are my heroes.

I have served proudly the American people for the past 35 years as a Foreign Service officer with the U.S. Agency for International Development.

I successfully advanced U.S. foreign policy in Southeast Asia and sub-Saharan Africa and managed programs to reduce poverty, halt HIV/AIDS, eradicate malaria, and promote girls' education and women's economic empowerment.

I have mentored and sponsored employees of every race, gender, and sexual orientation, helping them to grow professionally and fully contribute to advancing U.S. goals. I am committed to enhancing diversity, equity, and inclusion in the workforce and in our programs.

As a young university student traveling in the Gambia, I experienced the warm hospitality and proud traditions of the Gambian people.

Today, Americans and Gambians share ideals of democracy, religious tolerance, good governance, and economic prosperity. If confirmed, I will strengthen the U.S.-Gambian partnership.

After 22 years of authoritarian rule, in 2016 Gambians voted for a new president and commenced the transition from dictatorship to democracy. While some reforms have occurred, more must be done to realize the aspirations of Gambians for transparent, democratic, and accountable governance.

If confirmed, I will be a staunch advocate of the Gambia's ongoing democratic transition. I will combat corruption, promote economic prosperity, speak up for human rights, explore ways to improve the primary health care system, and maintain a strong security partnership.

I will pursue U.S. national security and foreign policy interests by helping the Gambian people achieve their goal to become a prosperous, secure, and democratic nation.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, for the opportunity to address you today. I am happy to answer questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF SHARON L. CROMER

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today. I am deeply grateful to President Biden and Secretary Blinken for the confidence they have shown me as their nominee for U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of The Gambia. If confirmed, I will collaborate closely with you and other distinguished members of Congress to advance our nation's security and foreign policy interests.

Mr. Chairman, I am here today, the product of a loving family. My mother, Thelma Cromer, now deceased, showed me how to live a life of abundance despite having so little. My father, Walter Cromer, Sr., drove a taxi right here in the nation's capital for over 60 years and inspired me to explore the world. I am very grateful to all of my family, friends, colleagues, and mentors across the globe. They are my heroes.

Mr. Chairman, I have proudly served the American people for the past 35 years as a Foreign Service Officer with the U.S. Agency for International Development. I successfully advanced U.S. foreign policy in Southeast Asia and sub-Saharan Africa and managed large, complex inter-agency programs, including the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief, the President's Malaria Initiative, Feed the Future, Power Africa, and wildlife anti-trafficking. I championed girls' education, women's empowerment, youth employment, and the rights of marginalized people, including LGBTQI+ communities, to prosper and live in peace and dignity. I have enjoyed mentoring and sponsoring employees of every color, race, religion, gender and sexual orientation; helping each one to grow professionally, assume greater responsibilities, and fully contribute to advancing U.S. goals. If confirmed, I will continue to enhance diversity, equity and inclusion in the workforce and in our programs.

Mr. Chairman, the U.S. and The Gambia have a close bilateral relationship based on shared ideals of democracy, religious tolerance, good governance, security, and economic prosperity. As a young, university student traveling in The Gambia, I experienced the warm hospitality and proud traditions of the Gambian people. It was clear then, and I believe it is true today, that Gambians admire American culture and traditions. If confirmed, I will strengthen the U.S./Gambian partnership for the benefit of both countries.

After 22 years of authoritarian rule, in 2016 Gambians voted for a new president and commenced the transition from dictatorship to democracy. While some promised reforms have been implemented, much more remains to be done if the aspirations of the Gambia people for a transparent, democratic government accountable to the people are to be realized. The upcoming December presidential election will be an opportunity for Gambians to show the world that they are committed to solidifying their hard-won democratic gains. The U.S. has been a steadfast partner, supporting the Independent Election Commission's successful voter registration effort and helping civil society organizations empower citizens through voter education. This December, Gambians will determine their path forward through a free, fair and peaceful election.

Given the opportunity, I will support The Gambia's ongoing democratic process. I will combat corruption and promote economic prosperity which will allow both U.S. and Gambian firms to invest and create good jobs. I will encourage trade and the use of the American Growth and Opportunities Act (AGOA). I will speak up for human rights, and explore ways to improve the primary health care system. Of paramount importance is the need to maintain a strong security partnership. I will pursue U.S. national security and foreign policy interests by helping the Gambian people achieve their goal to become a prosperous, secure, and democratic nation.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and members of the committee for the opportunity to address you today. I am happy to answer any questions.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you for your testimony.

Next, we are going to hear from Ambassador Palmer, who has been nominated to be Ambassador to the Republic of Ghana.

Ambassador Palmer?

STATEMENT OF THE HON. VIRGINIA E. PALMER OF VIRGINIA,
A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE,
CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AM-BASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF
THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF GHANA

Ms. PALMER. Thank you, Senator Van Hollen.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Rounds, and members of the committee, it is a great honor to appear before you today as the nominee to serve as America's Ambassador to the Republic of Ghana.

I appreciate the confidence that President Biden and Secretary Blinken have placed in me and [inaudible] today to have the opportunity to publicly thank my family for their love and support.

My husband Ismail Asmal, a retired Foreign Service Officer, is a wonderful partner and helpmate. My daughters Aliya and Nadia Amal and my son-in-law Paul Adamson are a source of great joy and pride and have a wonderful commitment to helping others. And my mother, Becky Palmer and late Richard Palmer, I want to thank them for their encouragement and example and for letting me take the grandbabies overseas.

I have had the great fortune to represent the country I love around the world for 35 years, 15 in Africa. I have worked in models of democracy and governance and private sector-led growth.

As Ambassador to the Republic of Malawi I oversaw an annual budget of $500 million and led a talented team which helped Malawi achieve HIV epidemic control, improve food security, and serve as a democratic model for the continent. If confirmed, my experience gained as deputy coordinator [inaudible] to support Ghana's work to counter the spread of violent extremism, and as Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary for Energy Resources to help Ghana deal with significant energy sector challenges.

I bring to the job a commitment to the security and well being of embassy staff and a passion for diversity and inclusion, essential to getting policy right and to properly representing our values overseas.

Our close partnership with Ghana spans more than 60 years and is rooted in our shared commitment to democracy and human rights for all, peace and security and economic opportunity and prosperity. Ghana's long democratic tradition, robust media, religious tolerance, and strong civil society make it a leader in West Africa and a model for the continent. With democratic backsliding in the region, Ghana's example and leadership are now more important than ever.

If confirmed, my priorities will be encouraging inclusive economic growth and strengthening regional stability to make the United States—and Ghana—more secure and more prosperous. Essential to success in these endeavors will be work to help Ghana strengthen its democracy and accountability institution.

Until COVID-19 disrupted global markets around the world, Ghana's economy was one of the fastest growing in the world. With the economy beginning to recover from the pandemic, close to 120 American businesses are active in Ghana.

If confirmed, I will be a vigorous advocate for American companies and innovation, and will ensure U.S. public and private investments continue to support pandemic recovery in Ghana's journey to self-reliance.

We will do this by facilitating trade, improving access to credit, boosting agricultural production and enhancing domestic resource mobilization, and improving health and education outcomes.

Working in partnership with our Ghanaian friends to combat corruption and ensure a transparent business environment will be fundamental to these efforts.

Ghana is a key security partner and its leadership is critical to U.S. efforts to promote regional stability and combat violent extremism. We enjoy robust military and law enforcement cooperation.

Ghana is one of the top 10 contributors to U.N. peacekeeping missions and regularly hosts regional military exercises with the United States. It is an exporter of security.

If confirmed, I will work to drive integrated programs on economic growth, rule of law strengthening, security cooperation, and maritime and border security.

I also look forward to working with Ghana as it chairs the Economic Community of West African States, takes up a seat on the U.N. Security Council, and hosts the Secretariat of the African Continental Free Trade Agreement, which will create a trading bloc of more than 1.3 billion people.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and members of the committee, thank you again for this opportunity. I look forward to partnering with you to advance America's interests in Ghana and stand ready to answer any questions you may have now and in the future.

[Prepared statement of Ms. Palmer follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. VIRGINIA E. PALMER

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and members of the committee, It is a great honor to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee to serve as Ambassador to the Republic of Ghana. I appreciate the confidence the President and Secretary Blinken have placed in me by putting my name forward for your consideration. I am deeply grateful for the love and support of my husband Ismail Asmal, a retired Foreign Service Officer, my daughters Aliya and Nadia Asmal and son-in-law Paul Adamson, my mother Becky Palmer and late father Richard Palmer. I would also like to thank my foreign and civil service colleagues across the Government and Embassy locally engaged staff who do tremendous work, in very challenging circumstances, to strengthen U.S. partnerships with countries around the world.

I have had the good fortune to have represented the country I love in fascinating countries around the world for 35 years, 15 in Africa. Throughout my career, I have worked to share American models of democracy and governance and private sector-led growth. As Ambassador to the Republic of Malawi, I oversaw an annual budget of $500 million and led a talented team which helped Malawi achieve HIV epidemic control, improve food security, and serve as a democratic model for the continent. As Deputy Chief of Mission and Chargé d'Affaires in South Africa, I helped manage one of our largest missions and most complex relationships in Africa. If confirmed, I will also draw on experience gained as a leader of the State Department's Counter Terrorism Bureau to support Ghana's work to counter the spread of violent extremism in the region, and as Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary for Energy Resources to help Ghana deal with significant energy sector challenges—and opportunities. I bring to the job a commitment to the security and well-being of Embassy staff and a passion for diversity and inclusion, essential to getting policy right and properly representing our values overseas.

Our close partnership with Ghana spans more than 60 years and is rooted in our shared commitment to democracy and human rights for all, peace and security, and economic opportunity and prosperity. Ghana's long democratic tradition, robust media, religious tolerance, and strong civil society make it a leader in West Africa and a model for the continent. With democratic backsliding in the region, Ghana's example and leadership is ever more important.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with this Committee and Congress to advance U.S. interests in Ghana. My priorities will be encouraging inclusive economic growth and strengthening regional stability to make the United States—and Ghana—more secure and more prosperous. Essential to success in these endeavors will be work to help Ghana strengthen its democracy and governance institutions.

Close to 120 American businesses are active in Ghana and the country's economy is beginning to recover from the pandemic. Until COVID-19 disrupted global markets, Ghana's economy was one of the fastest-growing in the world, with GDP growth of seven percent from 2017 to 2019. Bilateral trade exceeded $1.5 billion in 2020. If confirmed, I will be a vigorous advocate for American companies and innovation and will ensure U.S. public and private investments continue to support pandemic recovery efforts and Ghana's journey to self-reliance. We will continue to help Ghana create an enabling environment for inclusive private sector-led growth by facilitating regional trade, improving access to credit, improving agricultural production and market access, enhancing domestic resource mobilization, and improving health and education outcomes. Working in partnership with our Ghanaian friends to combat corruption and ensure a welcoming and transparent environment for business will be crucial to success of these efforts.

Ghana is a key security partner, and its leadership is critical to U.S. efforts to promote regional stability and combat violent extremism. We enjoy robust bilateral military and law enforcement cooperation. Ghana is among the top dozen contributors to U.N. peacekeeping missions and regularly hosts regional military exercises in partnership with the United States, including this year's Gulf of Guinea maritime security exercise, Obangame Express. If confirmed, I will work to drive integrated programs on economic growth, security sector cooperation, cyber security, and maritime and border security through our bilateral Security Governance Initiative. I also look forward to working with Ghana as it chairs the Economic Community of West African States, serves on the U.N. Security Council, and hosts the Secretariat of the African Continental Free Trade Agreement, which will create a trading block of more than 1.3 billion people.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and members of the committee, thank you again for this opportunity. I look forward to partnering with you to advance America's interests in Ghana and stand ready to answer any questions you may have now and in the future.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you for your testimony.

And now we will hear from Mr. Howard Van Vranken, who has been nominated to be Ambassador to the Republic of Botswana.

I turn it over to you, and I see that my colleague, Senator Rounds, has returned. I apologize. I am going to go vote. But I got somebody here who is going to report to me on your testimony when I return.

All right. I turn it over to you, Senator Rounds.

And Mr. Vranken, please proceed with your testimony.

Senator ROUNDS. [presiding.] Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

STATEMENT OF HOWARD A. VAN VRANKEN OF CALIFORNIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF BOTSWANA

Mr. VAN VRANKEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Rounds, members of the committee. It is a great honor and privilege to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee to serve as the next Ambassador to the Republic of Botswana.

I thank the President and Secretary Biden for the—excuse me, Secretary Blinken for their confidence in me. I am also grateful for this distinguished committee's consideration.

I am especially grateful for my wife, Rebecca, who supported me during nearly two decades of marriage in the Foreign Service and for the endurance of my children—Grace, Robert, and Victor. I would not be here today without their tremendous and ongoing support.

Finally, I want to thank my parents, Robert and Helen, who tirelessly inspired me to explore and embrace the world beyond my native California. I am forever grateful for their sacrifices on my behalf.

During my 33 years of service with the Foreign Service, my work in Africa and the Middle East as well as assignments in Washington have prepared me to deliver impactful results for the American people in the important role for which I have been nominated.

I have served in senior leadership positions in a number of posts, including most recently in Morocco and in Iraq. If confirmed, I will work diligently and with integrity to further strengthen ties between the United States and Botswana.

Botswana is a strategically important and reliable partner on the African continent. We work with Botswana to advance shared global priorities including strengthening democratic institutions and promoting the respect for human rights, ending HIV and the COVID-19 pandemic, and advancing global health security.

Together, we also work on regional and bilateral priorities, including conserving the environment and natural resources, expanding trade and investment, and addressing regional transnational criminal and security challenges.

Our relationship is further strengthened through our valuable university partnerships and education linkages. If confirmed, as we emerge from the pandemic I will look to expand our in-person en-agement to advance these priorities, especially through programming focused on youth and young women and girls.

Economic ties between the United States and Botswana were growing before the pandemic. Even as the United States remains the world's top purchaser of Botswana's diamonds, we will support Botswana's efforts to diversify its economy, to build a knowledge-based economy, and to improve opportunities for American businesses.

U.S. tourists attracted to the country's globally significant national parks and reserves will continue to present an important opportunity for Botswana as the pandemic recedes and travel resumes.

If confirmed, I will work with Botswana to deter and dismantle poaching organizations. I will also work with Botswana to realize the potential offered by Power Africa's mega solar project, an initiative which would transform Botswana into a regionally significant solar power producer, consumer, and exporter.

If confirmed, I will also continue to advance the priorities articulated in the DELTA Act to promote responsible natural resource and wildlife management practices in the Greater Okavango River Basin.

The United States has invested more than a billion dollars in Botswana's health sector through the President's emergency plan for AIDS relief, the PEPFAR program.

While there is still an estimated 9,000 new HIV infections annually in the country, Botswana has made impressive progress in its fight against HIV and it is near epidemic control.

That said, the threat posed by HIV cannot be underestimated. If confirmed, I look forward to securing the sustainability of our PEPFAR investment and leading our interagency health team as we continue to work with the government of Botswana on its HIV response.

If confirmed, I will also work to affirm President Biden's commitment to deliver additional COVID-19 vaccines to Botswana and its neighbors.

The Botswana Defense Force is one of the most professional militaries on the continent and our military engagement remains strong. The United States also sponsors the International Law Enforcement Academy, which has trained more than 12,000 law enforcement and criminal justice professionals from Africa, the Americas, and Southeast Asia.

Support for these institutions improve the rule of law in the country and on the continent, including the capacity to effectively respond to global issues like wildlife and timber trafficking, violent extremism, cybercrime, corruption, and trafficking in persons.

If confirmed, I will work to expand the U.S.-Botswana military partnership and our regional security role through education and training programs.

We expect to see a resurgence in the number of Americans visiting Botswana once we emerge from the pandemic. If confirmed, the safety of our staff and U.S. citizens in Botswana will remain paramount.

The U.S. Ambassador to Botswana also serves as a U.S. representative to the Southern African Development Community, and

I am excited about the opportunity to work towards increased security, health, and economic development across the region with our Southern African nation partners.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today and I look forward to your questions.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I look forward to your questions.

Senator ROUNDS. Thank you, Mr. Van Vranken.

I have submitted my opening statement for the record. But I really feel it is important that we just share with you personally that I would suspect that every career diplomat wonders whether someday, after years of service, they might be nominated by the President of the United States to serve as an ambassador somewhere.

I just want to say congratulations, because after today none of you will have to ask that question again. For Ambassador Palmer, this is twice.

To all of you, thank you for your public service and your continued service on behalf of our country.

I have got a series of questions that I will start with, and then by then I would suspect that our chairman will be back in as well, and I am sure that he has a series of questions as well.

Let me begin with Mr. Logsdon. If confirmed as Ambassador, you will be going to Moldova at a very important time in its history. The president, Maia Sandu, and the new parliament have been elected on a platform of reform and plan to make changes to fight corruption across government, especially in the judiciary.

As Ambassador, how will you work with the new government to support the reforms and see them through to success?

Mr. LOGSDON. Thank you, Senator. I appreciate that question. And, obviously, as you mentioned, this is an historic moment, I think, for the government of Moldova, the people of Moldova, and the United States and our opportunity to assist.

It will not be just us saying we think these are good reforms. This is something we can do to assist the government. The government of Moldova has asked for some very specific kinds of support.

We have worked for many years with different parts of the government and with civil society, and I think the goal for us now is to find ways that we can continue to support President Sandu and her government's desired end state, which is to push back on corruption. That is exactly why the government and President Sandu were elected by the people of Moldova.

Senator ROUNDS. Thank you, sir.

Ms. Cromer, the Gambia's democratic transition, spurred by the ouster of dictator Yahya Jammeh at the ballot box in 2016 was an unexpected victory for democracy on the continent.

Given recent challenges to democracy in West Africa, including four coups in the last year, what are the regional implications for Gambia's continued democratic development and what tools can the U.S. consider to continue to appropriately support democratic and economic reforms as well as economic recovery from the Jammeh era, and more recently, the impacts of COVID-19?

I know I am giving you a multiple question item, but if you could, please, and I will ask again if there is any part of it that you are not comfortable with.

Ms. CROMER. Thank you, Senator. I appreciate the question.

First of all, let me say that the Gambians have decided their own fate. They have voted back in 2016 a new president and have moved on the path from authoritarianism to democracy. It is a difficult path, it is a lengthy path, and it takes a steadfast partner like the U.S. to help them build that democracy.

The top priorities of the U.S. Government, ones which, if given the opportunity to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to the Gambia, I would lead, would be, one, to help build a truly democratic state in the Gambia.

The second would be advancing country-owned, country-led, and sustained development that improves the lives and well being of Gambians.

And third, promoting an investment climate where both U.S. and Gambian enterprises can thrive and trade between the two countries creates good jobs and economic prosperity.

On the COVID front, I had the opportunity this morning to take a walk to the Washington Monument, and on the grounds of the monument there are over 660,000 flag, small flags that have been put in the soil of the Washington Monument grounds, each representing—each flag representing an American who has died of COVID.

This is a moving, beautiful, but sobering memorial to American lives and precious souls, and I would just like to say that the Gambia and other countries in Africa do not have the equipment, the vaccines, the trained staff, PPEs, to address the COVID pandemic, and the capacity to fight COVID-19 and future pandemics is extremely limited in the Gambia.

If confirmed, I will work with the stakeholders on the ground in the Gambia and here in Washington to see what more we can do to build up the Gambia's capacity.

Thank you.

Senator ROUNDS. Thank you, Ms. Cromer.

Ambassador Palmer, Ghana has long been seen as a key U.S. ally in Africa and held up as a stable, democratic, and economic partner and a regional leader. I was impressed by what I saw when I visited Ghana in early 2020.

Given the deeply worrying trends in West Africa, does the U.S. need to adjust its engagement with Ghana to support the resiliency of its institutions and its leadership in the region? If yes, what would be your recommendations?

Ms. PALMER. Thank you for that that question, Senator.

I believe that, indeed, Ghana's example and leadership are very important in the context of democracy backsliding in the region.

I think we need to continue to work to fight corruption in Ghana and to ensure the sanctity of contracts so that Ghana can continue to be a welcoming environment for investment and trade and that sort of beacon or bastion to countering violent extremism.

I do not think we need to reorient. I think we need to continue to integrate our work to ensure inclusive economic growth, particularly in the north, to strengthen Ghana's accountability institutions and work, as I said, to improve contract sanctity and fight corruption.

Senator ROUNDS. Thank you.

Mr. Van Vranken, Botswana is a key partner in southern Africa, particularly given its historic credentials in democracy and maintaining stability and security.

However, challenges and opportunities in the southern Africa region abound including with a mounting extremist threat in Mozambique, the ongoing political and economic crisis in Zimbabwe, efforts to address significant levels of corruption in Angola and South Africa, and the recent democratic transition in Zambia.

As the U.S. Ambassador to Botswana, how will you engage with our Botswanan partners on issues of regional significance? And also, do you view Botswana as an opportunity for bolstered U.S. trade and investment and, if yes, what tools will you employ to encourage increased trade and investment in a diversity of sectors including but beyond the tourism and extractive industries?

Mr. VAN VRANKEN. Thank you for those questions, Senator. They are very pertinent.

In terms of regional challenges, I think that, as you rightly identified, Botswana has a long tradition of democracy and, in that sense, stands as an example in the region.

The government of Botswana has also been a founding member of the Southern African Development Community, the group of Southern African nations, and the government of Botswana has never been shy about voicing outspoken views on regional peace and security issues, and sometimes differing publicly with the policy of the Southern African Development Community.

I think we should continue to encourage the engagement that Botswana has had in the recent past through the Southern African Development Community.

I would note that it was through SADC that Ghana or, excuse me, Botswana deployed nearly 300 troops as part of a standing force to northern Mozambique, and I think that that is something that we should applaud and encourage.

Regarding economic development and, particularly, trade and investment beyond the extractive or diamond sector as well as tourism, I think that there are areas that we can support Ghana.

We have already initiated an agreement—excuse me, a memorandum of intent between Botswana and Namibia for the Power Africa, the mega solar project. That would provide two to five gigawatts of solar power and would replace coal—imported coal-fired electricity that Botswana currently imports from South Africa, and would enable it to be a—potentially, a significant exporter of solar power in the region.

I think that there is ample opportunity for American firms in a project such as that. I also think that we should continue to find areas in AGOA as well as through Prosper Africa to facilitate trade between the two countries.

I do think that this is a potential area where we can collaborate to both of our satisfaction.

Thank you, Senator.

Senator ROUNDS. Thank you, sir.

And I know that our chairman is on his way back from the vote. I am going to take advantage of a few more minutes here to ask a couple of questions, and when the chairman comes in I know he will have a hard stop, but he is going to try to get some questions in. I see the chairman has just arrived back on the thing.

Mr. Chairman, I finished with my questions. I know that you have a hard stop coming up. Whenever you are completed it is fine with me if you close the meeting, sir.

And once again, I want to say just thank you to all of our guests here today in front of us, our applicants. Clearly, we have to say thank you for their hard work and dedication to public service and to the State Department here in our country.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. [presiding]. Thank you, Senator Rounds, and thank all of you for your testimony. And I got a report on the questions that Senator Rounds asked, not surprisingly because we work together. He covered a lot of the territory that I would have between his questions and your comments.

I would, Mr. Van Vranken, just like to follow up on the issue of loss of dollars in Botswana as a result of the huge drop off in tourism because of COVID-19.

One of the other issues, though, in Botswana, as you know, in terms of their long-term sustainability and the sustainability of—continue to attract tourists is protection of wildlife, and there is a serious poaching issue still in Botswana.

Can you just talk a little bit about how the United States, through your efforts and USAID and others, can help address that poaching issue?

Mr. VAN VRANKEN. Thank you very much, Senator.

That is an excellent point. There has been a significant drop off in tourism dollars. To date, the United States has provided very important support to the government of Botswana to help them combat wildlife trafficking.

We have helped to build the capacity of the government to conduct intelligence-led operations focused on poachers. We have, for more than a decade, have provided wildlife trafficking intervention training through our International Law Enforcement Academy in Botswana.

That has helped not only Botswana but also regional partners. I think that we should sustain those efforts and continue to work through the Southern African Development Community on law enforcement and anti-poaching efforts.

Thank you, sir.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you. I also had one follow-up as well on Ghana for Ambassador Palmer, because as you indicated, Ghana has had a robust democracy and peaceful transitions of power and have been supporters, overall, of human rights.

There was, though, a recent report by Human Rights Watch regarding discrimination—harsh discrimination against the LGBT community there as well as a proposed draconian anti-LGBT bill.

Could you just comment on that and what your role can be in addressing that matter?

Ms. PALMER. Thank you for that question, Senator.

It is an issue of a great deal of concern to me. I think it is important that we note that we are not asking for special rights for members of the LGBT community but only the rights that other Ghanaians enjoy under the Ghanaian constitution and the international human rights charters to which Ghana is a signatory.

There are moral and legal reasons for ensuring that the rights of the LGBT community are respected. But, importantly, there are also public order and public health reasons why draconian legislation and discrimination are a bad idea.

I think it is also very important to think about this just in terms of discrimination. What the LGBT community in Ghana is asking for, I understand, is freedom from violence, freedom from harassment, freedom from discrimination.

I am not equating my situation with that, but when I was falling in love with a nonwhite South African 35 years ago, our relationship was illegal and that is because his humanity was not respected and was not believed to be the same as mine. And, fortunately, those laws have changed and we think now how could that ever have been.

And I hope that that will be the case all over for vulnerable groups, including women and girls and the LGBT community, and I will work to ensure that those human rights are respected.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you for that statement, and also your own experiences and how they can relate to this situation.

I want to thank all of you. I want to thank your family members, who you introduced. Usually, we have a chance to meet people in the hearing room. Unfortunately, we are not able to do that now.

As Senator Rounds said, I have a hard stop at 4:00 o'clock, but I do not know, Mike—Senator, if—I am happy to turn this over to you for additional questioning if you would like or we can close the hearing now.

Senator ROUNDS. Mr. Chairman, I intend to submit a couple of questions for the record. But other than that, I am prepared to close it at this time, sir.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Okay.

Let me just, again, underscore the comments my partner, Senator Rounds, made just a few minutes ago and thanking all of you for your service.

As somebody who grew up in a Foreign Service family, I am proud of the service of our Foreign Service officers and the entire family at the State Department, and look forward to supporting your confirmation.

And maybe Senator Rounds and I will have a chance to come visit those of you in your countries where you are going to be representing the United States.

Thank you all very much.

[Whereupon, at 4:01 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL SUBMITTED FOR THE RECORD

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO CAPT. C.B. SULLENBERGER III BY SENATOR ROBERT MENEDEZ

COVID-19

Question. What actions do you believe ICAO should take to protect the air traveling public, and flight crews aboard commercial airlines, from the COVID-19?

Answer. The impact of COVID-19 pandemic on civil aviation is unprecedented. ICAO moved quickly to establish the Council Aviation Recovery Task Force (CART) to provide guidance to governments and industry operators to restart the international air transport sector safely and promote recovery from the impacts of COVID-19 on a coordinated global basis.

ICAO is convening a ministerial conference on COVID and aviation in mid-October to rally governments from every region to implement the CART recommendations and enable the recovery of international civil aviation. I believe these are the right first steps to move toward a safe restart of the aviation sector, and if confirmed, I will continue to promote these efforts to protect the air travelling public and flight crews aboard commercial airlines.

Question. Do you believe the global airline industry will adopt adequate policies to protect its customers and employees?

Answer. Airlines have already taken significant steps to protect customers and employees by implementing health mitigation measures such as requiring the use of masks on board aircraft, enhanced cleaning and disinfection procedures, health assessments of crew and passengers, enhancing airport security checkpoint procedures, and the minimizing of in-person interaction through use of new technologies. For transportation and travel to resume safely and sustainably, it is in the best interest of the global airline industry to continue all of these measures, and if confirmed, I will continue to promote these actions.

Question. Do you believe ICAO has the authority and mandate to coordinate and establish some set of uniform standards or protections against the spread of the COVID-19?

Answer. The United States participated actively in ICAO's CART task force, which has issued three reports since the beginning of the pandemic. Each report provided substantive and actionable recommendations for promulgating a framework for the detection and control of COVID-19 among air passengers and crew such that more stringent control measures, such as mandatory quarantines, could be relaxed or removed entirely.

In the long-run, ICAO must continue to work with member States and the WHO to implement WHO recommendations on science and public health in the civil aviation domain, as well as to facilitate the efficient and secure flow of limited health information among air passengers and States to prevent and mitigate the effects of future pandemics on air transport. If confirmed, this will be a top priority of mine at ICAO.

Climate Change

Question. The ICAO Assembly at its 40th Session in 2019 adopted a resolution that reiterated two aspirational goals for the international aviation sector: a 2 percent annual fuel efficiency improvement through 2050 and carbon neutral growth from 2020 onwards.

- Do you think these goals is adequate?

Answer. It is important that ICAO Member States were able to come together to adopt these goals. If confirmed, I look forward to working with colleagues across the government to determine how best the United States can help achieve the existing climate goals and lead efforts to increase ambition where possible, consistent with the President's policy to press for enhanced climate ambition and the integration of climate considerations across a wide range of international fora, including on aviation. Aviation's recovery from the global pandemic also provides ICAO an opportunity to reassess whether these current goals are truly sufficient in light of the global recognition of the need to address climate change.

Question. What do you foresee as the biggest challenges to meet these goals?

Answer. Some of the biggest challenges ahead include making sure there is robust global participation, particularly for countries with significant international aviation activity, on ICAO measures like CORSIA, and accelerating both state and private sector deployment of cleaner technology, sustainable aviation fuels, and implementation of more efficient operations. Different countries have different profiles for aviation growth: some have very developed networks and industries with more opportunities for reducing emissions, while others are seeing significant expansion of aviation markets and are less likely to support increased ambition globally if they believe it will affect their industry.

Question. What tools should the Biden Administration provide to meet these goals?

Answer. The United States already plays a critical role at ICAO. To achieve these goals or to push for more ambitious goals, the United States needs to be a leader, and needs to work to develop a strong coalition of states to work with us both bilaterally and at ICAO. The Biden Administration is committed to working toward reducing the sector's emissions in a manner consistent with the goal of net zero emissions for our economy by 2050.

Question. In September 2021, a coalition of 100 environmental groups called on the Biden Administration to strengthen greenhouse gas emission standards in the airline industry.

- Do you think the current ICAO standards are sufficient? If not, what changes do you believe are necessary?

Answer. The current standards represent the first ever greenhouse gas emission standard for commercial aircraft. Establishing this global standard was an important achievement and a critical first step, but it is likely to be insufficient as technology advances. It will be critically important to strengthen these standards, and, if confirmed, that is something that I plan to pursue in ICAO.

Question. ICAO adopted the Carbon Offset and Reduction Scheme for International Aviation (CORSIA) in 2016 and in 2018 the parties to ICAO took further action to advance the CORSIA through the establishment of Standards and Recommended Procedures (SARPs) for parties to comply with the CORSIA.

- Does FAA have sufficient authorities to comply with the CORSIA that would meet the threshold of the SARPs?

Answer. It will be critical for the United States to be in a position to fully implement CORSIA, which U.S. airplane operators have broadly supported. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Congress, in coordination with the Federal Aviation Administration, Department of Transportation, and Department of State colleagues to ensure there is the necessary legislative authority to implement CORSIA and other ambitious climate measures.

Question. Will you commit to working with FAA on advising Congress on the development of legislation that may be necessary to ensure the U.S. is in full compliance with ICAO's CORSIA?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Congress, in coordination with FAA, DOT, and DOS colleagues to ensure there is the necessary legislative authority to implement CORSIA and other climate measures.

Malevolent Influence in International Organizations

Question. Will you commit to working with likeminded countries to ensure the agenda and decisions of ICAO and Parties to the Chicago convention operate transparently, and that you will maintain vigilant of the weight and influence of countries that do not share the U.S.' values and economic interests?

Answer. Standard-setting bodies are essential to the national security and economic security of the United States, our partners, and allies. Organizations such as ICAO must remain transparent and accountable to member states, focused on mandates and core competencies, and led by independent, qualified individuals. If confirmed, I will prioritize working with allies and partners to strengthen ICAO's governance and its ability to fulfill its mandate: the safety, security, and sustainability of civil aviation. This will include opposing efforts by states, including the PRC, that seek to make ICAO and other international organizations less transparent and accountable or to use the organization to advance their own interests. If confirmed, I will also continue to support greater U.S. representation at ICAO, including by advocating for qualified and independent candidates.

Air Safety and Boeing 737 Max

Question. What role do you believe ICAO has to intervene or resolve country decisions to ground or prohibit Boeing 737 Max from their airspace?

Answer. It is up to a State's regulatory authority to determine whether to allow an aircraft to conduct operations within its territory. On November 18, 2020, the FAA published the final Airworthiness Directive with its findings and decisions regarding recertification of the Boeing 737 MAX flight control systems. The FAA worked alongside Transport Canada Civil Aviation (TCCA), the European Union Aviation Safety Agency (EASA) and the National Civil Aviation Agency of Brazil (ANAC) in approving all the design changes to the Boeing 737 MAX. Following the FAA's rescission of its prior grounding order on November 18th, 2020, over 178 countries have since taken steps to allow the reintroduction of the aircraft.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO CAPT. C.B. SULLENBERGER III BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. In 2019, the State Department withheld about $2 million in contributions pursuant to Sec. 7048(a) of the FY2019 Consolidated Appropriations Act, which mandates the withholding of 15 percent of contributions to international organizations that do not implement sufficient whistleblower protections. After the adoption and implementation of key ethics and oversight reforms, the U.S. restored full funding.

- If confirmed, will you direct the U.S. Mission to ICAO to push for the full adoption and implementation of the remaining ethics and oversight reforms?

Answer. The Administration is committed to improving transparency and accountability at ICAO, including eliminating waste, fraud, and abuse, as well as protecting whistleblowers from retaliation. If confirmed, I will focus intently on and fully support actions to help ICAO leadership develop a culture of transparency and accountability within the organization—actions that cannot be delayed given the recent history of mismanagement.

Question. How will you hold the body accountable for doing so given it has fallen way short in the past?

Answer. If confirmed, I will be a relentless advocate for necessary reforms. I believe corrective measures at ICAO became more achievable with the recent election of Juan Carlos Salazar, the former head of Colombia's civil aviation authority, as the organization's new Secretary General. If confirmed, I will continue U.S. engagement with ICAO leadership and other member states to ensure that ICAO's transparency and accountability mechanisms meet UN System-wide best practices.

Question. Are you familiar with the whistleblower scandal at ICAO in recent years where the secretary general of ICAO, Fang Liu, was accused by a senior official-turned-whistleblower of "toxic and hostile" leadership marked by "cronyism" and "favoritism," and where no investigation place and the whistleblower was fired by ICAO?

Answer. I am familiar with the whistleblower scandal that occurred at ICAO, and with the cyberattack that spurred it. Following a high-level claim of retaliation in June 2019, I understand that the U.S. Mission increased its efforts to address deficiencies in ICAO's ethics framework, investigation procedures, and Secretariat transparency. Concerted action on the part of the United States led to ICAO's adoption of a new whistleblower protection policy and new procedures for investigating complaints of staff misconduct in 2020. If confirmed, I will continue to work to assure that whistleblowers can report wrongdoing without fear of reprisal and will also commit to working closely with the organization to ensure it is effectively implementing its new whistleblower protection policy.

Question. In brief, a breach of ICAO's servers by a Chinese state-sponsored hacker group which took place in 2019 and revealed in 2019. The hackers reportedly gained access to the agency's system through a compromised laptop belonging to the son of then-ICAO Council President Olumuyiwa Benard Aliu. The hackers compromised the laptop of an ICAO official was in Beijing. Leaked documents show that ICAO staff sought to cover up the incident, and Liu reportedly ignored internal recommendations to investigate further. Are you familiar with this case which has been widely reported on?

Answer. Yes, I am familiar with the serious cyberattack at ICAO that was revealed in 2019, and the deeply flawed response within the organization. Important reforms were subsequently put in place to deal with the lack of accountability in the handling of this issue, and if confirmed, I will press for continued implementation of those reforms to ensure enhanced transparency in the handling of these types of cases.

Question. What is your perspective on protecting whistleblowers and do you commit to withholding the legislatively mandated portion of funds from ICAO if the agency reneges on its whistleblower protection reforms?

Answer. If confirmed, I will push to ensure that ICAO's transparency and accountability mechanisms meet UN System-wide best practices, and I will work closely with the organization to ensure it is effectively implementing its new whistleblower protection policy. I will also work to ensure that whistleblowers can report wrongdoing without fear of reprisal. I will ensure that the Department's actions with respect to ICAO are consistent with U.S. law, and that all options are explored in support of the organization's whistleblower protections.

Question. On January 8, 2020, the Islamic Republic of Iran shot down Ukraine International Airlines Flight PS752, a civilian aircraft departing a Tehran airport. 176 innocent passengers and crew members were killed, including 138 people with ties to Canada. More than a year after the downing, the governments of Canada and Ukraine have rejected Iran's handling of, and investigation into, the PS752 downing, pushing for Iran's full adherence to international conventions. The G7 Summit Communique reaffirmed the G7's commitment to addressing this case.

- If confirmed, will you commit to publicly and meaningfully supporting our allies and partners in Canada and Ukraine to pursue full accountability, transparency, and justice in this case, including at ICAO?

Answer. The United States participated in the investigation of the shoot down of Ukraine International Airlines Flight PS752, with the inclusion of an accredited representative on the investigation team. I understand that the ICAO Accident Investigation Panel formed a working group to continue to discuss some of the unique circumstances raised by the accident. If I am confirmed, I am committed to continuing to work with our international partners to ensure the integrity of the accident investigation process, to push for accountability for those responsible for the shoot-down of Ukraine International Airlines Flight PS752, and to call on Iran to uphold its responsibilities to the victims and families of this tragic incident.

Question. Since 2013, Taiwan has been systematically excluded from participating at ICAO, including during key discussions to stop the spread of COVID-19 in the early days of the pandemic. Taiwan operates one of the busiest airports by passenger and cargo traffic in the world.

- Can you commit to championing Taiwan's bid to attain observer status at ICAO?

Answer. If confirmed, I will be committed to supporting Taiwan's meaningful participation in ICAO, in line with longstanding U.S. policy. Aviation security, safety, and environmental impacts are matters of global importance, and should involve all interested stakeholders, including Taiwan, which has a major aviation sector and can both benefit from and contribute to technical discussions on aviation safety and security based on its own aviation experiences.

Question. How will the U.S. Mission to ICAO, in conjunction with the State Department, specifically work to assist Taiwan in its bid?

Answer. If confirmed, I will press ICAO leadership to provide meaningful participation for Taiwan at all appropriate levels and events. It is critical that Taiwan both contribute to and benefit from technical aviation safety and security discussions that occur at ICAO in various fora. If confirmed, I will make this a priority at ICAO and work with the State Department and other agencies to identify opportunities and events to support Taiwan's participation so that the international community can benefit from its contributions on this important issue.

Question. On May 23, 2021, Ryanair flight FR4978 was forcibly diverted by the government of Belarus and a passenger was arrested. ICAO has taken up an investigation of this event.

- Can you commit to ensuring that the fact-finding investigation into Ryanair Flight FR4978 is completed with transparency?

Answer. The forced diversion of Ryanair Flight 4978 by Belarus and subsequent arrest of an opposition journalist and a colleague showed flagrant disregard for international norms of aviation security and safety and undermined the critical trust between pilots and air traffic control. ICAO, as the UN organization responsible for setting global standards for the safety and security of international civil aviation, must work to ensure those standards are upheld.

If confirmed, I will work to ensure our partners and allies, and all related parties fully participate in the ICAO investigation by sharing all information relevant to the incident with ICAO's investigative team and to push for substantive findings, including a chronology of events, to be presented to the ICAO Council in November.

Question. How will you work to combat malign Chinese influence at ICAO?

Answer. Standard-setting bodies are essential to the national security and economic security of the United States and our partners, friends, and allies. Organizations such as ICAO must remain transparent and accountable to membership, focused on mandates and core competencies, and led by independent, qualified individuals. If confirmed, I will prioritize working with allies and partners to strengthen ICAO's governance and its ability to fulfil its mandate: the safety, security, and sustainability of civil aviation. If confirmed, I will oppose efforts by states, including the PRC, that seek to make ICAO and other international organizations less transparent and accountable or to use the organizations to advance their own interests. If confirmed, I will also continue to support greater U.S. representation at ICAO, including by advocating for qualified and independent candidates.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO CAPT. C.B. SULLENBERGER III BY SENATOR MIKE ROUNDS

Question. What leadership role, if any, do you think ICAO could and should take in lifting travel restrictions and restoring post-pandemic international air travel?

Answer. The impact of COVID-19 pandemic on civil aviation is unprecedented. ICAO moved quickly to establish the Council Aviation Recovery Task Force (CART) to provide guidance to governments and industry operators to restart the international air transport sector safely and promote recovery from the impacts of COVID-19 on a coordinated global basis.

While it is up to member states to lift restrictions on travel across borders, ICAO can continue to play an important role in identifying the tools and resources necessary to do so. In the long run, ICAO must continue to work with member states and the World Health Organization to ensure a more robust disease surveillance and contact tracing capability in the civil aviation domain, as well as to facilitate the efficient and secure flow of limited health information among air passengers and states to prevent and mitigate the effects of future pandemics on air transport. If confirmed, this will be a top priority of mine at ICAO.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO DR. ATUL A. GAWANDE BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

COVID-19

Question. Nearly two years into the COVID-19 pandemic access to the COVID-19 vaccine in poor and developing nations remains a challenge. For example, Africa has vaccinated only 3 percent of its population due to lack of supply.

- What are the major challenges to increasing the global supply of COVID-19 vaccines produced in the United States and Europe and what role if any will you play relative to helping overcome those challenges?

Answer. While there have been significant improvements and scale-up in global manufacturing, there remain constraints in the supply of some key input materials, as well as constrained capacity to "fill and finish" vaccines into vials. I understand that USAID is working closely with the U.S. International Development Finance Corporation and other partners to expand global vaccine manufacturing, including by supporting efforts to build human resource capacity for vaccine production and enabling the regulatory environment to review the safety and quality of vaccines before sale and use. If confirmed, I will work with colleagues across the U.S. Government to spur innovative solutions to these challenges.

- What is your understanding of the efficacy of vaccines produced in China and Russia, and if confirmed what messages, if any, should you deliver to countries about the safety and efficacy of these vaccines?

Answer. While Sinopharm and Sinovac have been shown in certain studies to be less effective than several other COVID-19 vaccines, studies against prior prevailing SARS-CoV-2 strains have shown Sinopharm and Sinovac have a favorable protective impact against critical illness and both have received Emergency Use Listing from the World Health Organization (WHO). Russia's Sputnik V vaccine produced by Gamaleya Research Institute has not yet received Emergency Use Listing from the

WHO or a stringent regulatory authority. I note that the Biden-Harris administration is dedicated to increasing U.S. vaccine sharing efforts and ensuring broad availability of safe and effective vaccines to more countries in need, through COVAX and bilaterally, and continues to call on others to do the same.

- Assuming availability of supply comes on line, what will be the most significant challenges to what is commonly referred to as “putting shots in arms” in countries with weak health systems, and what role will you play if confirmed to ensure those challenges have been addressed prior to COVID–19 vaccination doses become available?

Answer. Accelerating worldwide vaccine administration is an even bigger challenge than increasing supply. If confirmed, I will support USAID’s efforts in this area as a top priority. Bolstering country readiness is critical to the success of the U.S. donation of Pfizer doses and other vaccines, in particular. I understand that the President has announced that USAID plans to allocate additional American Rescue Plan funds for vaccine readiness. This builds on previous investments to support partner countries to strengthen their vaccination programs, including setting up vaccination sites, training vaccinators, providing logistics support to the “last mile,” fighting vaccine misinformation, and securing cold chain equipment.

- If confirmed, what actions would you plan to take, related to implementing the objectives of the September 2021 U.S. COVID–19 Summit?

Answer. At the September COVID–19 Summit, the President announced that USAID plans to provide $195 million in support for country vaccine readiness efforts in support of the “Vaccinate the World” target and $50 million to expand access to oxygen in support of the “Save Lives Now” target. I understand that USAID will provide an additional $100 million for rapid response interventions, including addressing needs in COVID–19 hot spots and will also play a key role supporting the administration of an additional 500 million Pfizer vaccines to be donated by the United States. If confirmed, I commit to supporting these efforts as well as working with our partners, the private sector, and other countries to support reaching the Summit targets.

- What is your view of the role the Coalition for Epidemic Preparedness Innovations (CEPI) can play in combatting the COVID–19 pandemic, and future pandemics, and what level of funding should USAID provide to the organization?

Answer. I understand that USAID currently provides support to CEPI’s core vaccine development program. If confirmed, I intend to consider all possible avenues where USAID can improve country COVID–19 vaccine capacity. CEPI has been an effective innovator. If I am fortunate enough to lead the Bureau for Global Health, I will explore how CEPI’s work aligns with the U.S. funding portfolio for efforts to expand use of existing vaccines and prepare for new variants.

Health Systems Strengthening

Question. If confirmed, how will you prioritize Health Systems Strengthening? Will you commit to consulting with my staff on your plans in this area, if confirmed?

Answer. Health systems strengthening has been a major focus of my career, and if confirmed, I look forward to working with USAID colleagues, and your staff, to prioritize this work. I understand that USAID recently released a new Vision for Health Systems Strengthening, and I plan to ensure that USAID’s approach described in the Vision is implemented across the Agency’s programs. In particular, I will prioritize support for local organizations and locally-derived solutions and work with countries and partners to leverage health resources across public, private, and community sectors. This includes supporting USAID’s efforts to optimize the impact of those resources to advance equity and quality of healthcare.

Tuberculosis

Question. If confirmed, how will you prioritize tuberculosis control efforts, in particular case finding, equitable and high quality treatment, and research and development of innovative diagnostics, therapies, and vaccines?

Answer. COVID–19 has had a devastating impact on the global tuberculosis (TB) response. If confirmed, I will ensure USAID continues its TB recovery efforts in the highest impacted countries, focusing on expanding access to TB detection, such as with TB and COVID–19 bi-directional testing and community-based contact investigations. If confirmed, I look forward to overseeing efforts to improve the quality of TB and drug resistant TB treatment through, for example, innovative digital technology, and supporting research for new and better treatment and diagnostic tools. I will also support coordination with other partners, leveraging their additional resources for late-stage development and uptake of new TB vaccines.

Global Women's Health

Question. As the world continues to confront COVID-19, women's health services must be part of any comprehensive response to the pandemic. The COVID-19 pandemic has led to increased incidences of sexual exploitation and gender-based violence as well as decreased access to reproductive and maternal health care. In March 2021, the United Nations Population Fund reported that an estimated 12 million women experienced disruptions in access to family planning due to the pandemic, leading to 1.4 million unintended pregnancies. These impacts have been especially devastating for women and girls already in the grip of humanitarian crises, from Afghanistan to Venezuela. Already, women's progress over the past 25 years has begun to be reversed.

- How will USAID meet the expanding health needs of women and girls impacted by the secondary effects of COVID-19, including gender-based violence? What steps will USAID's Bureau of Global Health take to halt the reversal of progress in women's health and rights?

Answer. U.S. investments in reproductive and maternal health, and gender-based violence prevention and response, are vital to women's health, gender equality, and the empowerment of women and girls. They also support the Biden-Harris administration's health and development priorities. If confirmed, I will continue efforts to reach those most vulnerable, especially women and girls; ensure continued and equitable access to life-saving voluntary family planning and maternal health care; support countries to develop enabling environments for healthy behaviors; and increase the health sector's capacity to prevent and address gender-based violence.

- How will USAID seek to ensure that women in humanitarian emergencies who have been disproportionately impacted by the secondary impacts of COVID-19 receive access to critical health care services?

Answer. I understand USAID's humanitarian programming in the context of COVID-19 takes an integrated health and protection approach to ensure women and girls in humanitarian emergencies have access to critical healthcare services, including antenatal care, safe delivery at birth, postnatal care, and voluntary family planning. Programs also address myths, misconceptions, and misinformation. In light of the dramatic increase in gender-based violence (GBV) resulting from the pandemic, I understand that USAID partners are expanding services to directly address pandemic-related GBV needs. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that USAID's longer term global health investments build on the important work of the Bureau for Humanitarian Assistance in countries where the Agency works.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO DR. ATUL A. GAWANDE BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

In General

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to upholding the statutory structure and organizational principals of the U.S. Agency of International Development (USAID), whereby the agency operates as an independent agency under the foreign policy direction of the U.S. Secretary of State?

Answer. Yes, I will uphold the statutory structure and organizational principles by which USAID formulates and executes U.S. foreign economic and development assistance policies and programs, subject to the foreign policy guidance of the President, the Secretary of State, and the National Security Council.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to working in a bipartisan manner with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, including by providing timely, accurate, and complete information on relevant U.S. global health strategies, initiatives, and funding?

Answer. Yes.

Waste, Fraud, and Abuse

Question. A recent report by the Center for International Private Enterprise (CIPE) Anti-Corruption and Governance Center suggests that an estimated five to ten percent of annual humanitarian aid is lost to corruption, while an estimated seven percent of global spending on public health is lost to waste, fraud, and abuse.

The United States is, by far, the single most generous donor of both humanitarian and global health assistance.

- If confirmed, will you commit to upholding a zero tolerance policy for waste, fraud, and abuse in the programs under your purview?

Answer. Yes.

Question. If confirmed, will you also uphold a zero tolerance policy for USAID staff and implementing partners who engage in the sexual exploitation and abuse of the vulnerable communities they are meant to serve?

Answer. Yes.

Management

Question. USAID has a diverse workforce, supported by 22 different hiring mechanisms, that has been under enormous stress over the last few years, in large part due to persistent management challenges, budget uncertainty, and COVID-19 and its associated stresses. To further complicate matters, if confirmed, you will be charged with managing an operational bureau that consumes roughly one third of the USAID budget and programs that cut across nearly every development sector. With the perceived importance of bureaus and initiatives all-to-often measured by the resources they manage, competition can be fierce and cooperation difficult.

- What is your understanding of morale within the Bureau for Global Health?

Answer. I understand that the COVID pandemic has created challenges for the entire Federal workforce, and USAID has the relatively unique additional challenges of a substantial overseas workforce. More broadly, I understand that USAID has been asked to take on expanding duties, and the staff at the Bureau have been under tremendous pressure for the past 18 months as the Agency has responded to the COVID-19 pandemic.

Question. How do you intend to improve morale across the bureau?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to addressing morale and strengthening community at USAID. Among my top, early priorities will be to gain a comprehensive understanding of the issues affecting morale, as well as the agency's personnel structure and human resources and management mechanisms that can be used to address the most critical issues. Through two decades of management experience, I have come to understand the value of listening to my teams, creating opportunities for personal and professional growth at all levels, and ensuring that the often incredibly difficult work undertaken by my staff or organization is publicly and privately acknowledged.

Question. How do you intend to create a unified mission and vision across the bureau, while also accounting for the areas of overlap with other agencies, bureaus, offices, and initiatives?

Answer. I understand that the size and scope of the Global Health Bureau can create coordination challenges within the Agency, and across other departments and agencies. At the same time, I see tremendous opportunity in leveraging the expertise and experience of the Global Health Bureau in coordination with the State Department, Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, Department of Health and Human Services, and others, at a policy level and on specific public health issues. If confirmed, I commit to building constructive relationships with my colleagues and counterparts at USAID and across the interagency to further U.S. foreign policy interests and strengthen global health.

Question. How would you describe your management style?

Answer. I work hard to be an effective leader of leaders. That means, in managing organizations small and large, I've worked to establish, communicate, and win support for clear priorities; to secure the leaders and resources to achieve them; and to build the transparency and relationships that enable people to pull together in the same direction. When these come together, extraordinary things happen.

Question. In your view, how would your management style translate in a USAID setting, where your workforce is composed of career foreign and civil servants, as well as a dizzying array of political appointees, Foreign Service Limited appointments, Participating Agency Service Agreements, contractors, and grantees?

Answer. Establishing clear priorities, the needed talent and resources, and the strong relationships required for execution is particularly challenging in federal government. But these principles of effective leadership apply equally in the public sector as the private sector.

Question. As a political appointee rather than career foreign or civil servant, do you believe it is incumbent upon Agency leaders to integrate themselves into bureau operations and culture? If yes, how do you intend to do so?

Answer. Yes. I believe that USAID is made stronger as an Agency by combining the talents and skill sets of all its staff, regardless of their hiring mechanism. If I am confirmed, I will seek to integrate myself into that ecosystem, both to understand how the Global Health Bureau works and to add my perspective as a physician and public health leader. If confirmed, I will do this by holding listening sessions to understand the challenges facing current staff and solicit advice on how we can create a workforce that is more diverse and inclusive.

Question. Do you believe it is ever acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either in public or in private?

Answer. No.

Question. In order to incentivize and ensure employee excellence at USAID, accurate performance reviews for all categories of employees are critical, though often lacking.

- Do you believe that it is important to provide employees with accurate, constructive feedback on their performance in order to encourage improvement and reward those who most succeeded in their roles?

Answer. Yes, I do. I understand that USAID has five performance management systems which emphasize ongoing, constructive feedback and require formal conversations during the annual performance cycle. USAID also has a robust awards and recognition program that includes annual performance bonuses and incentive awards. If confirmed, I commit to working within these systems to encourage employees to achieve success both within and on behalf of USAID.

Question. If confirmed, would you support and encourage the managers in your bureau to provide clear, accurate, and direct feedback to employees in order to improve performance and reward high achievers?

Answer. Yes. I would encourage managers to continue providing clear, accurate, and direct feedback to employees on a regular basis and as part of their annual performance appraisals. Constructive feedback is critical to helping employees be successful and to ensure that underperforming employees get back on track. It also allows managers to recognize and reward individuals and groups for contributions to the accomplishment of USAID's mission, goals, and objectives.

Global Health Security

Question. Should the United States engage in highly risky public health research—such as gain-of-function or other life sciences research that poses dual-use concerns—in cooperation with countries that do not have adequate biosecurity standards, that have violated or failed to uphold the International Health Regulations, or where the United States cannot certify that such country is in compliance with the Biological Weapons Convention?

Answer. I do not support USAID conducting research that would make viruses more lethal or transmissible in cooperation with such countries. Furthermore, it is my understanding that USAID does not fund gain-of-function research, and that USAID has not funded or conducted any studies or experiments anywhere in the world that would make viruses more lethal or transmissible.

Question. If confirmed, will you ensure USAID's research and development grants are fully vetted and do not flow to partners, including through sub-grants, engaged in such research, particularly in countries with lax biosecurity standards?

Answer. I understand that USAID provides clear guidance in all Global Health Security (GHS) programming to implementing partners on compliance and adherence to rigorous biosafety and security protocols and that USAID does not fund any gain-of-function research through prime or sub-partners. USAID requires regular reporting on implementing partners' activities supported with its funding, which must adhere to the criteria laid out in the award. This reporting is closely monitored by USAID staff to ensure compliance with U.S. Government regulations pertaining to GHS research. If confirmed, I will continue to implement this guidance and will not fund any gain-of-function research with USAID funds.

Question. If confirmed, how would you enhance USAID's monitoring and evaluation of sub-grants related to life sciences research?

Answer. It is my understanding that for all awards, USAID requires regular reporting on partners' activities supported with Agency funding, which must adhere to the parameters of each award. If confirmed, I will work to ensure USAID continues to provide robust oversight of awards to monitor activities and the appropriate use of funds, and that award-level safeguards related to monitoring sub-awards are included in each applicable award.

Question. In your private capacity, you have asserted that the “lab leak” theory—i.e. that the COVID-19 pandemic may have its origins in an accidental exposure or leak from a lab in Wuhan, China—is plausible and merits further investigation.

- If confirmed, will you commit to conducting a comprehensive review, to include lessons learned, of all USAID grant funding to entities in the People’s Republic of China for the previous 10 years and sharing the results of such review with this committee?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to engaging with the committee regarding USAID-funded global health activities in the People’s Republic of China. Lessons learned from past programming can and should help shape the Agency’s future approaches. I supported the President’s decision to direct the Intelligence Community to conduct a full investigation into the origins of COVID-19, as well as administration efforts with partners and allies to seek a second phase study by the WHO. We also know getting to the bottom of the origin of this pandemic will help us understand how to prepare for the next pandemic.

Question. If confirmed, will you also commit to providing this committee with all requested information on USAID funding to EcoHealth Alliance?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to responding to the committee’s requests for information on USAID’s prior funding for EcoHealth Alliance which, I understand, has concluded.

Question. In your testimony, you indicate that your top three priorities as USAID Assistant Administrator for Global Health would be to accelerate the global response to COVID-19, prepare for the next pandemic, and strengthen health systems. In July, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee passed S. 2297, the International Pandemic Preparedness and COVID-19 Response Act, with overwhelming bipartisan support. The top three priorities you have outlined align with this bill.

- Are you familiar with S. 2297, the International Pandemic Preparedness and COVID-19 Response Act?

Answer. Yes.

Question. Do you agree with the legislation’s basic principles that: (1) U.S. global health security and diplomacy are inextricably linked; (2) enhanced leadership by the Department of State will be required to advance an effective U.S. global health security and diplomacy strategy overseas; (3) while a competent entity at the Department of State should align and coordinate U.S. foreign assistance efforts, the technical experts at USAID and the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) should be trusted to lead in design and implementation of programs under such strategy; (4) international early warning systems are lacking and must be strengthened; and (5) an international financing mechanism that incentivizes countries to identify and close measurable gaps in health security, including through enhanced early warning, will be required to help us get ahead of the next pandemic.

Answer. I support the idea of improving our pandemic preparedness and global health security activities, and I agree that diplomacy and assistance are both critical tools in these efforts. I know that USAID works closely with the Department of State, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and others to ensure the U.S. is best positioned to prevent, detect, and respond to infectious disease threats. If confirmed, I commit to working with you on all efforts to advance global health security.

Question. USAID missions have the authority to make cross-cutting investments in health systems strengthening while implementing disease- and sector-specific initiatives, yet often fail to do so. S. 2297 thus seeks to incentivize USAID investments in health system strengthening through the creation of a pilot program.

- If confirmed, which countries and investments would you prioritize under such a pilot program?

Answer. Health systems strengthening (HSS) has been a major focus of my career, and if confirmed, I look forward to working within the Agency to ensure this work is prioritized, including by identifying opportunities for future investments in specific partner countries. I understand USAID recently released a Vision for Health System Strengthening, which outlines a clear approach for designing, implementing and monitoring HSS activities. If confirmed, and if such a pilot program is created,

I will seek to partner with countries interested in fully implementing USAID's HSS approach.

Question. Where are the greatest opportunities for success, and where are the greatest obstacles?

Answer. Since programs have the opportunity to make efficiency gains by addressing common health system challenges, I think the countries that implement a range of global health programs offer the greatest opportunity for success. I also understand that this same dynamic can be an obstacle to integrated programming because different programs operate under their own unique sets of objectives. If confirmed, I will work to better integrate global health programming to overcome this obstacle.

Question. The President's FY2022 budget request for the Department of State, Foreign Operations, and Related Programs proposes a substantial increase for global health security.

- If confirmed, which partners and investments would you prioritize?

Answer. I understand that the President's FY2022 budget request would increase global health security funding with a significant portion focused on USAID. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you, the National Security Council staff and relevant Departments, and colleagues at the Agency on potential plans to scale up bilateral country programs as well as support multilateral organizations working to develop tools to end the COVID-19 pandemic and more effectively prevent and respond to future ones. I will also work to ensure that USAID's Global Health Security programming continues to build resilience for future epidemics and pandemics by supporting partner countries scale up the core public health capacities that are needed to prevent avoidable epidemics, detect threats early, and respond rapidly and effectively to disease outbreaks to stop them from becoming national or global emergencies. Moreover, I will ensure that global health security investments complement the broader approach to health systems strengthening so that USAID's investments help countries withstand future shocks.

COVID-19

Question. The American Rescue Plan (ARP) provided USAID with $905,000,000 to prevent, prepare for, and respond to coronavirus, to include support "for a multilateral vaccine development partnership to support epidemic preparedness." Though there was virtually no consultation on the authorizing language, the authors reportedly intended to require USAID to dedicate a substantial portion of this amount for a substantial contribution to the Coalition for Epidemic Preparedness Innovations (CEPI). More than six months later, the substantial contribution envisioned in the ARP has yet to materialize. This has raised questions about the level of confidence USAID has in CEPI's model and operations.

- If confirmed, will you commit to provide to this committee a complete, detailed spending plan for the funds received through the American Rescue Plan (ARP) for the international COVID-19 response, to include all aspects of the response, from vaccine sharing to second order impacts?

Answer. I understand that the State Department and USAID provide Congressionally-mandated reporting on COVID-19 funding, including obligations and disbursements by country and partner, every 60 days. If confirmed, I will ensure consultations with the committee continue and that USAID provides regular briefings on the use of American Rescue Plan funding.

Question. If confirmed, would it be your intention to engage with CEPI for the research and development of COVID-19 vaccines, including vaccines to combat COVID-19 variants, as well as vaccines to disrupt transmission of new and emerging infectious diseases with pandemic potential?

Answer. I understand that USAID currently provides support to CEPI's core vaccine development program. While I am not privy to administration discussions on the use of American Rescue Plan funding, if confirmed, I intend to consider all possible avenues where USAID can improve COVID-19 vaccine capacity. CEPI has been an effective innovator. If I am fortunate enough to lead the Bureau of Global Health, I will explore how CEPI's work aligns with the U.S. funding portfolio for efforts to expand use of existing vaccines and prepare for new variants.

Question. What is your assessment of CEPI's performance to date? For what reason might USAID be hesitating to make contributions?

Answer. While I am not privy to administration discussions on the use of American Rescue Plan funding, if confirmed, I will assess how CEPI's capabilities would advance the administration's efforts to support a multilateral vaccine development partnership to enhance epidemic preparedness and look forward to consulting with you on those efforts.

Question. USAID, in coordination with the U.S. Department of State, currently is managing United States contributions to COVAX.

- How would you assess the performance of COVAX to date?

Answer. I understand that COVAX has performed well in the context of unforeseen and ongoing constraints to the global vaccine supply, including the restricted export of vaccines from India. While it appears that COVAX is below its original delivery projections, vaccine donations from the United States and other donors continue to increase the immediate supply to low and lower-middle income countries. If confirmed, I will continue to support efforts to expand the availability of safe and effective vaccines globally to bring this pandemic to an end.

Question. How can USAID ensure that COVAX is working expeditiously to get shots in arms while guarding against waste, fraud, and abuse?

Answer. It is my understanding that USAID's $4 billion in contributions to Gavi/COVAX in 2021 was provided in tranches, allowing USAID to ensure Gavi/COVAX obtained the funding needed from other donors to scale up global vaccine access, while closely monitoring COVAX's performance. USAID also participates in Gavi's Audit and Finance Committee, and has the opportunity to regularly review risks involved in procuring and delivering COVID-19 vaccines. It is my understanding that Gavi/COVAX has established methods for receiving reports of fraud, and that all allegations are overseen by Gavi's Investigation Managing Director and Whistleblower Compliance Officer. If confirmed, I will support efforts by USAID to strengthen and reinforce existing systems to mitigate these threats to multilateral and bilateral vaccine campaigns and strengthen fraud awareness and reporting.

Question. How can USAID ensure that U.S. financial contributions to COVAX are not used to underwrite the purchase and distribution of substandard Chinese COVID-19 vaccines, particularly following the announcement that COVAX would, in fact, begin making major purchases of Chinese vaccines?

Answer. My understanding is that Gavi allocated the $4 billion contribution from the U.S. prior to the decision to purchase Sinopharm and Sinovac vaccines, and that no U.S. funds were used for those purchases. If confirmed, I look forward to working within the administration and with Congress to make certain that the U.S. continues to engage constructively with Gavi to ensure a robust supply of safe, effective, and high-quality vaccines to COVAX Advance Market Commitment (AMC) countries.

Question. Under what circumstances would U.S. bilateral vaccine contributions be more appropriate than contributions via COVAX?

Answer. Donating doses through the multilateral COVAX initiative is, in most cases, generally more cost-effective and efficient than a bilateral donation, as it allows the U.S. Government to utilize COVAX's existing legal agreements with manufacturers and countries, and ensures that countries have access to necessary ancillary materials (e.g. syringes) and logistics support. Bilateral donations, in contrast, require the U.S. Government to arrange logistic support directly with recipient countries and develop new legal agreements. In some specific instances, particularly with high-income countries, bilateral donations offer a faster and more direct route for sharing vaccines.

Question. The Biden administration has identified critical shortages in COVID-19 testing, treatment, and vaccine readiness, particularly in developing countries. Within the Access to COVID-19 Tools (Act) Accelerator, the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria's COVID-19 Response Mechanism is responsible for the diagnostics and health systems strengthening pillars. The United States has committed $3.5 billion to the Global Fund for this purpose.

- Given your own private sector experience in expanding access to COVID-19 diagnostics, what is your assessment of the Global Fund's performance to date? What is the Global Fund getting right, and what would you do differently?

Answer. The Global Fund (GF), a valued U.S. Government partner, moved quickly to announce COVID-19 funding that allowed countries to respond to the escalating crisis. I understand that GF has leveraged volume commitments to reduce the cost of rapid antigen based test kits by 40 percent and is expected to supply more than 110 million tests during 2021. If confirmed, I will work with the GF to provide robust assistance to countries to support the achievement of GF grant targets, while acknowledging that adjustments may be necessary during the COVID-19 pandemic.

If confirmed, I will also work with the Global Fund to ensure their core mission remains fulfilled, given the increased needs globally to address HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, and malaria.

President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR)

Question. USAID overseas missions have a long history of stretching the boundaries when it comes to permissible uses of PEPFAR funds, including when using PEPFAR funds to finance the construction of schools in Malawi despite the availability of education funds earmarked by appropriators annually for this purpose, or when using PEPFAR funds statutorily set aside to support children who have been made vulnerable by HIV/AIDS for activities with no discernable connection to HIV/AIDS.

- If confirmed, will you commit to working closely with the Office of the U.S. Global AIDS Coordinator and Health Diplomacy (OGAC) at the U.S. Department of State to ensure that USAID's efforts to combat HIV/AIDS are efficient, effective, aligned and complementary to the work of OGAC?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to working with OGAC to ensure USAID's efforts to combat HIV/AIDS are efficient, effective, aligned, and complementary to the work of OGAC. I understand that USAID has established planning, monitoring, and oversight procedures and has dedicated personnel for monitoring activities to foster greater accountability for the use of resources toward epidemic control and the attainment of PEPFAR goals. If confirmed, I will continue to ensure that USAID employs the core principles that have been paramount in realizing programmatic success to date, including: demonstrating clear outcomes and impact of U.S. Government investments through robust data and analytics, finding efficiencies to increase impact, and managing for results and accountability.

Question. Will you work to ensure that USAID missions meaningfully contribute to, but also adhere to, PEPFAR's Country Operating Plan (COP) process?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that USAID Missions continue to contribute and adhere to PEPFAR's COP process. It is my understanding that USAID Mission teams engage actively in strategic planning discussions with their interagency team, USAID Global Health Bureau counterparts, and local stakeholders -- including the host government and implementing partners -- to analyze new data, discuss prior performance, and reach consensus on the new COP's direction to ensure full accountability and ownership.

Multilateral and Bilateral Global Health Programs

Question. There has been strong focus over the last year and a half on multilateral institutions to address global health challenges, including but not limited to the U.S. international response to the COVID-19 pandemic.

- Recognizing that multilateral and bilateral programs work collaboratively, and that each have their own unique strengths and challenges, what would you consider to be the appropriate balance between multilateral and U.S. bilateral global health assistance and programs to address existing and emerging global health challenges?

Answer. Multilateral institutions bring together bilateral donors, foundations, and other entities and support global alignment around common objectives. I think it is critical that USAID engage with global institutions to influence and support policy and practice worldwide. At the same time, USAID's bilateral programs work directly with country institutions on implementation. USAID's comparative advantage is its collaboration globally and at the country level with multilateral and bilateral partners. That collaboration is the catalyst for sustainability and the achievement of U.S. foreign policy and development goals.

Family Planning and Reproductive Health

Question. The President's FY2022 budget request for the Department of State, Foreign Operations, and Related Programs proposes a substantial increase for Family Planning and Reproductive Health (FP/RH), through both bilateral aid programs and contributions to the U.N. Population Fund.

- If confirmed, will you commit to ensuring full and complete USAID compliance with current law, which prohibits the use of U.S. foreign assistance to perform or promote abortion as a method of family planning, support involuntary sterilizations, or lobby for or against the legalization of abortion overseas?

Answer. Yes.

Question. Do you recognize the fungibility of U.S. foreign assistance? If confirmed, will you commit to ensuring that U.S. foreign assistance does not enable implementing partners to perform or promote abortion as a method of family planning, perform involuntary sterilizations, or lobby for or against the legalization of abortion?

Answer. USAID funding does not support abortions or involuntary sterilizations. If confirmed, I commit to continuing to comply with all applicable laws, including the Helms and Siljander amendments, in implementing the Agency's programs.

Question. To your knowledge, is the Chinese Communist Party (CCP)-led government of the People's Republic of China (PRC) deploying coercive abortion, forced sterilization, or other involuntary population control measures in Xinjiang Province?

Answer. While I do not have direct knowledge nor have I studied the documentation on this issue, I do know that the People's Republic of China is committing atrocities against Uyghurs and other ethnic minorities in Xinjiang Province.

Question. You have written extensively about the correlation between increased access to contraception and reduced demand for abortion. If confirmed, will you ensure that information on family planning is locally sensitive and includes options for natural family planning?

Answer. Yes.

Preventable Maternal and Child Deaths

Question. Thanks in large part to commitments under the 2012 global Call to Action, and subsequent U.S. leadership and investment through USAID's Acting on the Call strategy, significant gains have been made in reducing preventable maternal and child deaths around the globe. Unfortunately, much of this progress is now at risk.

- USAID's Acting on the Call strategy expired in 2020. If confirmed, how would you renew and reinvigorate the strategy to reflect the unique challenges posed by the COVID-19 pandemic, ensure local input, and galvanize other donors to join the fight to end preventable child and maternal deaths by 2030?

Answer. I understand that USAID is finalizing a new strategy to guide its child and maternal programming, and will prioritize proven interventions and support countries in their efforts to end preventable child and maternal deaths by 2030. If confirmed, I commit to working with the global health community to continue focusing on building healthier, stronger, and more self-sufficient partner countries, and to leverage other donor, private sector, and host country resources towards addressing this shared goal.

Question. How important is restoring access to routine vaccinations to this effort, particularly in areas plagued by insecurity and conflict?

Answer. Restoring access to routine vaccinations is critical to USAID's efforts to prevent child and maternal deaths. WHO-UNICEF global immunization estimates indicate 23 million children missed out on basic vaccines through routine immunization services in 2020—3.7 million more than in 2019. Most of these children live in communities affected by conflict, in under-served remote places, or in informal or slum settings with limited access to basic health and key social services. If I am confirmed, restoring and shoring up immunization services will be an urgent priority in order to stop a wave of preventable outbreaks of vaccine-preventable diseases, such as measles, and backsliding in child mortality gains made over the past two decades.

Water, Sanitation, and Hygiene

Question. Access to safe water, sanitation, and hygiene (WASH) in healthcare facilities is critical to: establishing and sustaining strong health systems; preventing the spread of infectious diseases; addressing the growing challenge of antimicrobial resistance; and to ensuring quality care and the safety of patients and health workers. Yet, a recent WHO/UNICEF report cited that globally, 1-in-3 healthcare facilities does not have access to safe drinking water, soap, and hand sanitizers, and every year 17 million women give birth in facilities without adequate WASH.

- If confirmed, would incorporating WASH into the bureau's health systems strengthening programs, and particularly those led by the Office of Health Systems, be a priority?

Answer. As a medical professional, I understand that access to safe water, sanitation and hygiene (WASH) in healthcare facilities is essential to providing quality healthcare and protecting healthcare workers and patients from infections, such as COVID-19. I have also seen firsthand how the COVID-19 pandemic has highlighted the critical importance of WASH in disease prevention and infection control. If confirmed, I commit to working with public and private development partners to strengthen WASH in healthcare facilities to improve quality of care.

Question. Will you commit to working with the Bureau for Resilience and Food Security and the USAID Global Water Coordinator to prioritize WASH across each of the bureau's health programs, ensure alignment of effort, and eliminate duplication and waste?

Answer. Health is one of the most critical and well demonstrated WASH benefits. My understanding is that there is strong coordination between the Bureau for Resilience and Food Security (RFS) and the Global Water Coordinator. This includes intra-agency coordinating groups and the integrated management of programs and Mission support by the RFS Center for Water, Security, Sanitation, and Hygiene; GH Office of Maternal, Child Health and Nutrition; and Regional Bureaus. If confirmed, I commit to continue to ensure effective collaboration through existing platforms and to work with colleagues to improve internal USAID WASH program alignment.

Polio

Question. USAID has long worked with U.N. agencies and private sector partners, including Rotary International and the Gates Foundation, to eradicate polio. These efforts have achieved notable success. Since the launch of the Global Polio Eradication Initiative in 1988, more than 2.5 billion children have been immunized, two of the three known strains of wild poliovirus have been eradicated, and global cases have been reduced by 99 percent. Today, wild poliovirus remains endemic in just two countries: Pakistan and Afghanistan. Still, the COVID-19 pandemic and the Taliban takeover in Afghanistan threaten to reverse these gains.

- If confirmed, will you prioritize efforts to eradicate polio globally, including through the reinvigoration of public-private partnerships and utilization of innovative approaches to track infections and expand access to vaccinations in vulnerable, hard to reach communities?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to continuing USAID's 25-year history of collaborating with public and private partners to eradicate polio, including through the use of international and local non-governmental organizations, and community and faith-based organizations, to reach the hardest-to-reach communities through gender-inclusive and equity-focused approaches.

Question. How can USAID and its partners expand the reach of polio vaccines in Pakistan and Afghanistan while ensuring the protection of vaccinators?

Answer. The threat to polio workers continues to be grave; in this year alone, more than 10 people have been killed while supporting polio eradication efforts. I understand that USAID's polio work in Pakistan and Afghanistan has focused on funding a network of staff to detect, track, and report wild and vaccine-derived polio cases. This surveillance data is essential for WHO, UNICEF, and others to plan polio campaigns and to implement timely outbreak response measures. USAID collaborates with multilateral organizations and other partners to mitigate risks to healthcare workers that support polio eradication. If confirmed, I will continue to ensure USAID and its partners maintain and expand access to polio vaccines, while prioritizing the safety and security of all polio program staff.

Localization

Question. Successive administrations—both Democrat and Republican—have launched initiatives to “localize” U.S. foreign assistance, including by building the capacity of local partners to design programs and manage U.S. funds directly, rather than working as sub-awardees to large, U.S.-based development contractors and non-governmental organizations. Each of these initiatives has had mixed results.

- What is your view of “localization”?

Answer. In my view, localization can increase the input, ownership, and decision-making of the people who live development challenges daily in their communities. If confirmed, I will support Bureau approaches to localization efforts that reinforce implementation of global health activities that are guided by the people and institutions who drive change in their own countries and communities. I understand this is a key feature of USAID's Vision for Health System Strengthening that guides the work of the Office of Health Systems.

Question. How can the Bureau for Global Health more effectively empower local partners through its program consultation, design, and implementation processes?

Answer. Local capacity for development program design and management often requires development itself. I agree it is important that USAID work to support and grow a diverse set of partners who understand specific development needs and challenges, and continue to ease their access to Agency grant and contracting opportunities. If confirmed, I will work with USAID's global health programs and broader Agency efforts that I understand to be underway, to better enable local actors to define priorities and lead their communities' and countries' development agendas.

Question. Is it appropriate to set targets for "localization" and, if so, what would you consider to be reasonable and appropriate?

Answer. I do not believe that localization can be solely based on providing increased numbers of grants to local organizations or management targets that emphasize inputs over impact. If confirmed, I will work with USAID's global health programs and broader Agency efforts that I understand to be underway, to better enable local actors to define priorities and lead their communities' and countries' development agendas.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO DR. ATUL A. GAWANDE BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. In 1998, you wrote an article titled, "The Human Cost of Crippling Castro" where you criticized the longstanding U.S. policy of withholding financing and support for the Castro and Diaz-Canel regimes. For years, I have sought to clarify that the U.S. does not sanction Cuba, or sanction the Cuban people, but on a regime that is the number one reason why Cuba is the only country in the world where Cubans cannot succeed. For proof, we just need to look at the most recent protests in July, where Cubans across the island took to the streets against the regime's long history of economic mismanagement and violation of Cuban's basic rights.

- Understanding that you wrote this article more than two decades ago, do you oppose U.S. efforts to deny funding to the Castro-Diaz-Canel regime in Cuba?

Answer. If confirmed, I will abide by existing restrictions concerning Cuba, including the Cuban Democracy Act of 1992 and the Cuban Liberty and Democratic Solidarity (LIBERTAD) Act of 1996. As you rightly note, the Cuban regime's violent crackdown on dissent both preceding and in response to the July 11 protests demonstrates the Government's blatant disregard for its people and economic mismanagement. I agree that no funding for Cuba should go to the regime. I understand that current funding only benefits the Cuban people, carried out by independent organizations and strictly adheres to the relevant U.S. laws governing the provision of assistance in Cuba.

Question. In that same article, you praise the high quality of Cuba's medical sector, which the regime uses to promote its international medical missions. However, the U.S. State Department, in its most recent Trafficking in Persons Report, found that these missions are only possible through forcing Cuban doctors to work.

- In your opinion, is a health care system that relies on the forced labor of its doctors and nurses really something to admire?

Answer. Based on these findings and evidence that has emerged in recent years, I believe this system ultimately is exploitative and coercive to its participants. Any system that relies on systematic and deliberate violations of people's human rights should be publicly denounced. As stated in the State Department's 2021 Trafficking in Persons Report with regard to participants in Cuba's international medical missions, "The Government failed to inform participants of the terms of their contracts, which varied from country to country, confiscated their documents and salaries, and threatened medical professionals and their family members if participants left the program."

Question. You have written significantly on the subject of abortion. Some of this writing indicates a seemingly nonchalant attitude to abortion as a method of family planning, which raises grave concerns for your role, if confirmed, of overseeing all USAID assistance for global health programs.

- Do you support abortion as a tool of family planning?
- Do you believe the United States should no longer prohibit the use of U.S. Government funds for the performance of abortion?
- Do you support the use of partial-birth abortions?

Answer. I am clear that USAID does not fund abortions and that Congress passes the laws governing the use of U.S. Government funds. Since 1973, the Helms Amendment has prohibited the use of U.S. foreign assistance funds to pay for the performance of abortion as a method of family planning, or to motivate or coerce any person to practice abortions. I take this and other restrictions, including other restrictions related to abortion, very seriously. If confirmed, I commit to ensuring that USAID continues to comply with the law, including the Helms and Siljander amendments, in implementing the Agency's programs.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. CLAIRE D. CRONIN BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question. On September 13, the British Government unilaterally announced that customs checks on EU imports were delayed from October 2021 until January 2022. The checks were part of the Brexit deal that kept Northern Ireland within the EU single market and avoids the need for a hard border with Ireland. Will you convey to the Irish government your staunch support for the Northern Ireland Protocol in the Brexit withdrawal agreement? How will you make clear that many in Congress do not support a U.S.-UK FTA without full implementation of the Northern Ireland Protocol?

Answer. If confirmed, I will protect the hard-fought gains of the Belfast/Good Friday Agreement. I will encourage all parties to prioritize political and economic stability and to negotiate when differences arise. I would emphasize the need to ensure any Brexit outcomes do not undermine the progress made since the Belfast/Good Friday Agreement.

Question. The British Government has proposed an across-the-board amnesty for all criminal prosecutions related to the Troubles. This amnesty would be wider than more than 300 other post-conflict amnesties, including the one issued by Pinochet in Chile, according to a study from Queen's University Belfast. This proposed amnesty is incompatible with the human rights-related commitments of the GFA. What steps should the U.S. take to ensure that victims of Troubles-era violence and their families receive proper justice and accountability?

Answer. There are many complexities surrounding the past in Northern Ireland and addressing these issues in a constructive way is essential. If confirmed, I will work closely with the Irish government and colleagues at Embassy London and our Consulate General in Belfast to urge Northern Ireland's political parties to negotiate when differences arise in order to build a peaceful and prosperous shared future in Northern Ireland.

Question. Ireland was elected to the United Nations Security Council for 2021—2022. During its Presidency in September, Ireland focused on the UN-led peace process in Libya, the Middle East Peace Process, and the situations in Syria, Yemen, Sudan, and South Sudan. Given Ireland's leadership on peacekeeping, climate, and security, how will you work with Irish partners to build coalitions that address our mutual priorities?

Answer. Ireland is already a strong advocate for many shared priorities. If confirmed, I will ensure U.S. priorities remain top agenda issues for my engagement with Irish officials. I will seek the most effective ways to work with Ireland to advance key U.S. policy objectives, including expanding the bilateral business and economic relationship, combatting the global pandemic, countering the destructive influence of bad actors, strengthening transatlantic ties, and providing a safe and business-friendly environment for American citizens and companies working in Ireland.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. CLAIRE D. CRONIN BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. Despite generally good relations between the two countries, one of the sticking points in our relationship is the rather high level of illegal immigration of Irish citizens into the U.S. While this issue tends to fly under the radar, there are an estimated 10,000-50,000 Irish citizens residing illegally in the United States.

- Do you believe that illegal Irish immigrants should be lumped together in immigration reform bills with other groups of illegal immigrants?

Answer. The history of Irish immigration to the United States is as old as our country and contributes to our strong bonds of friendship and history. During President Biden's March meeting with Taoiseach Micheál Martin, the leaders expressed their support for an earned path to citizenship for immigrants to the United States, as proposed in the U.S. Citizenship Act of 2021. If confirmed, I will work to implement the applicable U.S. immigration laws and policies for Irish immigrants, in coordination with the Department of Homeland Security and other Administration partners and in support of the Administration's commitment to the humane enforcement of U.S. immigration law.

Question. Do you commit to working to find a legal remedy for this issue?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to supporting the Administration's efforts to create a humane and effective immigration system, recognizing both that strong borders are fundamental to our national security and that welcoming immigrants is core to our national identity. I will support and defend any legal remedies to this issue, if I am confirmed.

Question. Many in the U.S. Congress have vocally told London that they will not ratify any U.S.-UK trade deal if the Good Friday agreements are seen to be undermined in any final post-Brexit agreements that the UK may make with the European Union.

- Do you agree with this stance? Why or why not?

Answer. If confirmed, I will protect the hard-fought gains of the Belfast/Good Friday Agreement. I will encourage all parties to prioritize political and economic stability and to negotiate when differences arise. I would emphasize the need to ensure any Brexit outcomes do not undermine the progress made since the Belfast/Good Friday Agreement.

Question. Ireland has signed on to the Paris Climate Agreement, however it has continued to lag behind its emissions reduction goals.

- How do you plan on engaging with Irish government and organizations to encourage them to reach their emissions goals under the Paris Agreement?

Answer. Ireland is eager to work with the United States to raise the profile of the issue. In July, Ireland passed a Climate Action Bill committing to halving carbon emissions by 2030 and reaching net-zero emissions by 2050. As member of the European Union (EU), Ireland has no country-specific Nationally Determined Contribution (NDC) under the Paris Agreement—they are currently working to meet the bloc's collective target. However, with agriculture constituting the biggest share of carbon emissions, Ireland is now in the process of setting ambitious legally-binding targets for climate change mitigation and adaptation. If confirmed, I will work with U.S. and Irish Government officials and scientific experts to ensure that ambitious climate goals are met.

Question. In May 2021, the regime of Aliaksandr Lukashenka forced down a Ryan Air flight that was in Belarusian airspace on its way from Athens, Greece, to Vilnius, Lithuania. Once on the ground, the Lukashenka regime forcibly removed Belarusian opposition journalist Raman Pratasevich and his girlfriend from the flight. Mr. Pratasevich has since been seen to be forced to make confessions of his sins against the regime on Belarusian television. Ryan Air is an Irish airline, and after the hijacking, many questions were raised about the airline's role in allowing the plane to be escorted to the ground.

- Now, after several months of EU-forced routing around Belarusian airspace, airlines are beginning to question when the restrictions will disappear. The stance of Ryan Air is particularly important. If confirmed, will you commit to working to maintain this overfly ban over Belarus?

Answer. Belarus's forced diversion of a commercial Ryanair flight under apparently false pretenses and the subsequent removal and arrest of Raman Pratasevich, a Belarusian journalist, and his traveling companion, was a direct affront to international norms. The United States strongly condemned these actions and has since taken measures, including issuing a Level 4 travel warning against travel to Belarus, and imposed sanctions and air travel restrictions. The United States has also strongly supported the investigation of the incident by the International Civil Aviation Organization, which is slated to present its findings in November. If confirmed, I would work with the Irish government to support the Belarusian people in their aspirations for a free, democratic, and prosperous future and support their call for the regime to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Question. According to the State Department's 2021 Trafficking in Persons (TIP) Report, Ireland was listed on Tier 2 Watch List for the second year in a row. Tier 2 Watch List, by definition, states:

Countries and territories whose governments do not fully comply with the Act's minimum standards but are making significant efforts to bring themselves into compliance with those standards, and: The estimated number of victims of severe forms of trafficking is very significant or is significantly increasing and the country is not taking proportional concrete actions; or There is a failure to provide evidence of increasing efforts to combat severe forms of trafficking in persons from the previous year.

- Ireland seems to be in both categories. If confirmed, what steps would you take to engage with the host government on this critical issue?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage with U.S. and Irish authorities to encourage cooperation and regularly raise trafficking in persons at the highest levels of the Irish government. While the government recently convicted two traffickers for the first time under its trafficking law, I will continue to urge the Irish government to take concrete actions in addressing the recommendations from this year's Trafficking in Persons Report. Specifically, I will encourage the government of Ireland to vigorously investigate, prosecute suspects, and convict traffickers using the human trafficking law as well as improve systemic deficiencies in their victim identification, referral, and assistance.

Question. If confirmed, how would you engage with the office of the Ambassador at Large for Trafficking in Persons?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage with U.S. authorities, including a confirmed U.S. Ambassador at Large for Trafficking in Persons, and the relevant Irish authorities, to encourage cooperation to make progress in combating trafficking in persons.

Question. Do you believe that progress is possible in Ireland? Is there sufficient political will to tackle this growing problem?

Answer. The Irish government continues to work with the U.S. government to address these issues. As noted in the 2021 Trafficking in Persons Report, the government made some significant efforts to combat trafficking during the reporting period, including designating an independent human trafficking national rapporteur and increasing funding for victim assistance, awareness campaigns, and training. In June 2021, Ireland convicted two Irish citizens—the first convictions under the anti-trafficking law since it was amended in 2013. In September, courts sentenced the traffickers to over five years' imprisonment. If confirmed, I will engage with U.S. and Irish authorities to encourage cooperation and progress in combating trafficking in persons. In addition, I believe that progress can be made by effectively using public diplomacy tools to increase awareness and victim identification.

Question. There are certain statutory limitations on how long a country can be consistently listed on the Tier 2 Watch List. After a certain amount of time, they must improve to Tier 2 or be moved to Tier 3. What do you believe are some concrete steps that the United States and the government of Ireland can take together to prevent further slipping to Tier 3?

Answer. For the second consecutive year, Ireland remained on the Tier 2 Watch List in the State Department's 2021 Trafficking in Persons report. If confirmed, I will urge the Irish government to take concrete actions in addressing the prioritized recommendations the Department highlighted in this year's Trafficking in Persons Report, especially with regard to increased prosecutions and victim identification and assistance. While the government has made some progress in recently convicting two traffickers for the first time under its trafficking law, if confirmed, I will encourage the government of Ireland to vigorously investigate, prosecute suspects, and convict traffickers of both sex and labor trafficking.

Question. Embassy Dublin has been under enormous stress over the past few years dealing with COVID and the local lockdowns it caused.

- What is your understanding of morale in Embassy Dublin?

Answer. Ireland has enforced three strict national lockdowns. The Foreign Service Officers and Locally Employed Staff at Embassy Dublin have dealt with significant challenges posed by COVID-19. I am grateful for their service, despite the difficulties. If confirmed, I will prioritize meeting with Embassy employees, including the Deputy Chief of Mission, to understand the impact of the pandemic on the mission.

Question. How do you intend to improve morale across the Embassy?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure everyone on my team is treated professionally, their rights are respected, they are safe and secure, and they have the resources necessary to perform their jobs. I believe that all members of U.S. Embassy Dublin are one team working for the good of the U.S.-Ireland relationship, and the interests of the United States and the American people.

Question. How do you intend to create a unified mission and vision across Embassy Dublin?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure everyone on my team is treated professionally, their rights are respected, they are safe and secure, and they have the resources necessary to perform their jobs. My commitment will be to ensure we use our available resources as effectively as possible to advance our top policy priorities. I believe that all members of U.S. Embassy Dublin are one team working for the good of the U.S.-Ireland relationship and the interests of the United States and the American people.

Question. Management is a key responsibility for chiefs of mission. How would you describe your management style?

Answer. My career is rooted in public service and my experience as a mediator shaped my ability to work with colleagues of all backgrounds in a constructive manner. My management style is also shaped by my service as the first woman House Majority Leader in Massachusetts. My leadership style is collaborative and team oriented. I regularly engage with members of my team and always seek to create a space for open dialogue and diversity of thought. Despite the team approach, I recognize that decision making authority rests with me and that I am responsible for the outcome of the decision. If confirmed, I will work hard to foster an environment of respect as the Embassy carries out important work on behalf of the American people.

Question. How do you believe your management style will translate to an embassy setting, where resources may not be readily available and your diplomatic workforce are career employees?

Answer. As I understand it, the State Department continuously reviews its priorities, organization, and staffing relevant to the needs of each mission. If confirmed, my commitment will be to ensure we use our available resources as effectively as possible to advance our top policy priorities. If necessary, I would advocate for additional resources to carry out our mission.

Question. As a political appointee rather than career diplomat, do you believe it is incumbent on new chiefs of mission to integrate themselves into embassy operations and culture? If yes, how do you intend to do so?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, one of my first actions as ambassador will be to meet the entire team at our Embassy in Dublin, including the Deputy Chief of Mission.

Question. Do you believe it is ever acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either in public or private?

Answer. No.

Question. How do you envision your leadership relationship with deputy chief of mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work closely with the Deputy Chief of Mission to advance U.S. priorities in Ireland, including: protecting the safety and security of Americans, growing our economic relationship, and advancing shared political priorities. I expect to have a positive working relationship and to work together closely.

Question. If confirmed, what leadership responsibilities do you intend to entrust to your deputy chief of mission?

Answer. If confirmed, one of my first actions as ambassador will be to meet the entire team at our Embassy in Dublin, including the Deputy Chief of Mission. I will consult closely with the Deputy Chief of Mission on a range of issues and value the institutional knowledge provided.

Question. Public diplomacy is an important aspect of U.S. foreign policy efforts.

- What is the public diplomacy environment like in Ireland? What public diplomacy challenges do U.S. diplomats face there?

Answer. The deep cultural, familial, and economic U.S.-Ireland connections provide a strong foundation on which Embassy Dublin promotes U.S. policy goals, such as recovering from the COVID-19 pandemic, responding to the climate crisis, and standing up for our shared democratic values. With a sophisticated knowledge of American history, customs, and politics, many Irish enjoy positive experiences in the United States as tourists, students, or professionals. If confirmed, I will use public diplomacy tools including cultural programming, exchanges like the Fulbright program, and traditional and social media to bolster people-to-people ties across the country and expand the pool of key influencers who advocate for U.S. interests.

Question. How do you balance the importance of Main State versus the in-country mission when it comes to tailoring public diplomacy messages for foreign audiences?

Answer. The State Department's foreign policy goals—whether in Washington, DC or Ireland—are the same. The public diplomacy team at Embassy Dublin presents information to their local audience using their understanding of that audience and the local environment. The Embassy blends rapid reposting or amplification of Department or administration messaging with post-generated content directly tailored to contextualize the material to achieve the greatest impact with local audiences. If confirmed, I will continue to deploy public diplomacy staff and resources to analyze, engage, inform, and influence Irish audiences in support of U.S. foreign policy goals.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. CLAIRE D. CRONIN BY SENATOR MIKE ROUNDS

Question. Recently, the COVID pandemic and the post-Brexit Northern Ireland Protocol have posed challenges to further implementation of the Good Friday Agreement. Political turmoil over the issue has again given rise to public unrest, including outbreaks of violence from loyalists in Northern Ireland in April 2021. As Ambassador, how can you use your role to facilitate dialogue and de-escalation around Northern Irish sectarian issues, from the Irish side of the border?

Answer. Recent unrest in Northern Ireland underscores the importance of safeguarding the gains of the Belfast/Good Friday Agreement. If confirmed, I would work with colleagues in London and Belfast, and with the Irish government, to encourage political and community engagement to ensure the gains of the hard-won peace are protected.

Question. Ireland has recently been downgraded to the Tier 2 Watch List in the State Department's annual Trafficking in Persons report. Ireland has only rarely prosecuted anyone for human trafficking. As Ambassador, what will you do to raise the profile of this issue of concern?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage with U.S. and Irish authorities to encourage cooperation and regularly raise trafficking in persons at the highest levels of the Irish government. While the Government has made some progress in recently convicting two traffickers for the first time under its trafficking law, I will urge the Irish government to take further concrete actions to address the recommendations from this year's Trafficking in Persons Report. Specifically, I will encourage the government of Ireland to vigorously investigate, prosecute suspects, and convict traffickers using the human trafficking law as well as improve systemic deficiencies in their victim identification, referral, and assistance.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KENT DOYLE LOGSDON BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question. In November 2017 and December 2018, parties to the OSCE's 5+2 format reached agreements on elements of the Berlin-plus Protocol. If confirmed, how will you leverage the United States' status as an observer to the format to continue to make progress towards full implementation of the protocol?

Answer. If confirmed, I pledge to continue our close and collaborative engagement with the OSCE and likeminded allies and partners to ensure productive, results-oriented discussions under the 5+2 format. The United States hopes to see continued progress on remaining confidence-building measures, underlying political and security issues, and maintaining a focus on advancing human rights. If confirmed, I am ready to work with the Government of Moldova and international partners under the OSCE framework to support full implementation of the protocol, including: enhanced movement through the Nistru River security zone, registration and facilitation of international traffic, and resolution of criminal cases.

Question. In a recent address to the U.N. General Assembly, President Sandu called for the withdrawal of Russian troops from Transnistria and the destruction or removal of weapons caches in the region. How would you engage parties in the 5+2 format to ensure that Moldovan independence, sovereignty, and territorial integrity are recognized?

Answer. The United States fully supports President Sandu's and the Government of Moldova's call on Russia to honor its Istanbul Summit commitments and withdraw its troops and munitions from Moldovan territory. If confirmed, I will actively continue this support through direct dialogue with our partners in the OSCE and with the parties to and mediators of the OSCE-led 5+2 process. I will uphold the U.S. commitment to the 5+2 process and its goal to achieve a comprehensive, peaceful, and sustainable settlement that upholds Moldova's sovereignty and territorial integrity, with a special status for Transnistria within Moldova's internationally recognized borders.

Question. President Sandu and Prime Minister Gavrilita have embarked on an ambitious reform agenda since Moldova's parliamentary elections in July 2021. The reforms aim to root out corruption at all levels of the Moldovan Government and have been welcomed by the international community. However, an August 2021 open letter signed by Moldovan civil society groups called for increased transparency with regard to reform efforts. How will you work to support the Moldovan Government's anti-corruption efforts while also encouraging appropriate public consultation?

Answer. The United States is committed to supporting President Sandu and the Moldovan Government as they pursue reforms to strengthen democratic institutions and combat corruption. Engagement with Moldovan civil society is a key component of U.S. support. Civil society plays an important role in promoting accountability of elected leaders, driving meaningful reform, promoting access to justice for vulnerable communities, and strengthening independent media. If confirmed, I will support an open and consultative reform process that incorporates a diverse range of stakeholders, including civil society and international experts. I will also ensure that the U.S. Embassy amplifies successes of the Moldovan Government's anticorruption efforts.

Question. LGBTI individuals in Moldova continue to be victims of discrimination, hate crimes, and verbal and physical assaults. What will be your strategy for supporting civil society groups that work with the LGBTI community?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work closely with civil society organizations and likeminded international partners to urge the Moldovan Government to adopt policies to protect the rights of LGBTIQ+ persons and to address impunity for hate-based crimes against all vulnerable communities and minority groups. I will ensure the United States continues to support improving accountability for perpetrators of hate crimes against LGBTIQ+ persons and protecting the rights of victims of these crimes. If confirmed, I also will focus on building the capacity of civil society to advocate for all individuals to fully exercise their human rights and fundamental freedoms and to support investigations of hate crimes against LGBTIQ+ persons.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KENT DOYLE LOGSDON BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. What areas in the U.S.-Moldova relationship do you see as most ripe for improvement?

Answer. The United States has two key priorities for our bilateral relations. The first is to promote the development of strong government institutions that advance accountability, democracy, and human rights, and that work for the Moldovan people. The second is to strengthen Moldova's sovereignty, independence, and territorial integrity to counter Russian malign influence and empower Moldovans to pursue their chosen European path. The United States, in coordination with our European partners, is focused on providing the political and technical support needed to advance the new government's reform agenda. The United States is also ready to assist Moldova's economic recovery through market-oriented reforms and increased transparency.

Question. Moldova's forward progress has at times been hampered by their inability to fulfil the conditions required by the IMF to receive much needed funds. As many neighboring states have moved forward economically, Moldova's economy has remained stagnant and dependent on remittances.

- As one of the major contributors to the IMF, what role do you believe the United States should play in helping rebuild ties between Moldova and the IMF?

Answer. The United States is committed to assisting Moldova in building a robust, diversified, and export-oriented economy with stronger links to Western trade partners. IMF assistance and associated reforms have helped Moldova make important progress in strengthening transparency and oversight in its financial sector. If confirmed, I will support ongoing dialogue between Moldova and the IMF on reaching agreement on future assistance packages that will encourage the strengthening of the rule of law in Moldova and deliver both important governance reforms and much-needed financial assistance as Moldova builds back its economy in the wake of the COVID pandemic.

Question. Moldova remains completely dependent on Russia for its gas supplies. If confirmed, do you commit to helping Moldova explore and develop other, non-Russian sources of power, and to helping push the country to implement programs that will make it more energy efficient and thus use less Russian gas?

Answer. If confirmed, I would focus on supporting Moldova's energy security and diversification by leveraging U.S. technical assistance to promote renewable energy and alternative sources of gas supply and encourage reforms to better link Moldova to European energy markets. Collectively, these efforts can help to reduce Moldova's dependence on Russian gas imports. In addition, linking Moldova's energy infrastructure to its neighbors, such as Ukraine and Romania, will support further diversification.

Question. Moldova's struggle with Russian-backed and institutionalized corruption are well-chronicled. In 2014, for instance, $1 billion disappeared from Moldovan banks and has not been retrieved.

- Do you believe that the United States should assist the Government of Moldova in their fight against corruption by providing them with intelligence on the whereabouts of certain individuals or their financial accounts who are suspected of having stolen from or defrauded the Moldovan people?

Answer. We support the Moldovan Government's efforts to implement anti-corruption reforms and to investigate and prosecute those involved in corruption, including those who participated in the 2014 billion-dollar bank fraud. Corruption continues to slow economic development and threatens Moldova's European trajectory. If confirmed, I am committed to working with Moldova to promote and ensure accountability for corrupt actors and assist the Moldovan Government's investigations to hold those complicit in the 2014 billion-dollar bank fraud to account in whatever way we can.

Question. Do you believe that visa or financial sanctions should be utilized by the United States against the aforementioned individuals? Why or why not?

Answer. The United States stands with the Moldovan people in their fight against corruption. If confirmed, I will seek to use all available tools, as appropriate, to promote accountability for corrupt actors undermining the integrity of democratic institutions and rule of law in Moldova, regionally, and globally.

Question. A new anti-corruption-focused government has recently come to power in Moldova. But time is short for them to make progress, and the entrenched interests working to maintain their grip on Moldova's politics and economy are strong.

- What role do you think the United States should play in helping Moldova fight corruption?

Answer. If confirmed, I will make the fight against corruption one of my top priorities. Moldovan voters chose a new government with a clear anticorruption mandate. U.S. assistance to Moldova is focused on promoting the development of strong, independent, and democratic justice sector institutions. As the new Moldovan Government seeks to implement its ambitious reform agenda, the United States can help Moldova build capacity within key anticorruption institutions, promote global best practices, and increase the effectiveness of its justice sector.

Question. What tools does the new government have to begin the fight to corruption, and what new anti-corruption tools could they develop to enhance reform efforts.

Answer. Moldova's fight against corruption has benefited from an increasingly independent judiciary, the development of specialized anticorruption and integrity bodies, and robust exchanges with the United States and our European partners to implement international best practices. To achieve its anticorruption goals, the new government can continue to strengthen accountability and transparency within judicial and prosecutorial oversight bodies. In the financial sector, Moldova is working to improve financial transparency and develop its financial intelligence capabilities. If confirmed, I would support Moldova's push to expand its anticorruption agenda, in consultation with independent experts and civil society.

Question. In the 2021 Trafficking in Persons Report, Moldova was identified as remaining on Tier 2 due to lack of prosecutorial efforts and systemic corruption in law enforcement.

- How will you work with the Moldovan authorities to address these issues if you are confirmed as Ambassador?

Answer. If confirmed, I will encourage the Moldovan Government to strengthen its investigative and prosecutorial capacity to combat human trafficking, as well as press for improved government support, services, and justice for trafficking victims. U.S. support in the fight against human trafficking in Moldova is centered on victims and includes programs to increase access to services. Rooting out corruption in law enforcement and the judiciary, as well as building capacity within Moldovan law enforcement agencies, will improve Moldova's ability to prosecute and prevent trafficking.

Question. In the 2020 International Religious Freedom report, Moldova was identified as partially tolerant of religious freedom, with noted anti-Semitic incidents.

- What is your assessment of this particular issue and if confirmed, how will you work with the Ambassador At Large to bolster religious freedom in-country?

Answer. While Moldova's constitution and laws provide for religious freedom, discrimination against members of religious minority groups persists, particularly anti-Semitism and anti-Muslim hatred. If confirmed, I will work closely with the State Department's Office of International Religious Freedom, civil society, the Moldovan Government, and religious communities to combat religiously motivated hatred and to promote respect for all religious groups. Efforts to strengthen Moldova's anti-discrimination body will support accountability for perpetrators of religiously motivated hate crimes. If confirmed, I will also work to advance freedom of religion or belief and freedom of expression within the Transnistria region.

Question. In the 2021 Human Rights Report, Moldova was identified as having serious human rights concerns, particularly during the COVID-19 pandemic, including the freedom of expression, assembly, and movement.

- If confirmed, what steps will you take to address these instances with the host government?

Answer. The United States welcomes the commitment of the new government to advance human rights as a policy priority. The United States remains concerned about pervasive human rights issues, including discrimination and impunity for hate crimes against members of minority groups and vulnerable communities. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the Moldovan Government to improve the human rights situation in the country. The United States remains deeply concerned about the deteriorating human rights situation in Transnistria, including the prosecution of individuals for exercising their human right and fundamental freedoms. If confirmed, I will press for improved protection of vulnerable communities in Transnistria.

Question. How will you direct your embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work closely with civil society organizations to help us assess human rights issues, develop programs, and advocate for stronger policies and reforms. The U.S. Embassy in Chisinau enjoys strong and longstanding relationships with civil society on human rights and democracy issues. Civil society has played an important role in promoting accountability of elected leaders, driving meaningful reform, supporting the rights of members of minority groups and access to justice for vulnerable communities, and strengthening independent media.

Question. Many U.S. missions have been under enormous stress over the last few years, in large part due to COVID.

- What is your understanding of morale throughout Embassy Chisinau?

Answer. Embassy Chisinau continues to attract a talented and diverse group of foreign service professionals and their families. The COVID pandemic, as well as movement restrictions and strain on Moldova's healthcare system, presented new challenges for the Embassy in Chisinau. However, access to vaccinations for all staff and U.S. family members, as well as continued U.S. assistance to support Moldova's recovery from the pandemic, have contributed to improved resiliency and health and safety. In addition, the team in Chisinau has been energized through engagement with the new pro-reform, Western-oriented government. If confirmed, I would fully support Embassy staff and continually seek ways to promote good morale at post.

Question. How do you intend to improve morale at Embassy Chisinau?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with my deputy chief of mission to ensure that we create an atmosphere in which our staff knows that they can bring serious issues to us and know that they are being heard at the highest level. I will ensure that everyone in the mission understands that my highest priority is the safety and security of the team. If confirmed, I will promote training and professional development, and ensure that all staff members are aware of the employee and family support resources that the Department offers to assist employees.

Question. How do you intend to create a unified mission and vision at Embassy Chisinau?

Answer. If confirmed, I plan to establish a strong team with a clear understanding of our goals and objectives, maintain open and transparent communications throughout the mission by sharing information, and seek ways to support and ensure the safety and community of the mission the community—both American and local staff.

Question. Management is a key responsibility for chiefs of mission.

- How would you describe your management style?

Answer. I have a collaborative management style. I believe in sharing information and empowering my team, being open to ideas and suggestions from throughout the mission, and providing clear guidance and decisions as needed to lead.

Question. Do you believe it is ever acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either in public or private?

Answer. I do not believe it is ever acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either in public or private.

Question. What lessons did you learn from your tenure as deputy chief of mission in Berlin?

Answer. As Deputy Chief of Mission in Berlin, I learned it is important to build a strong team and to provide the guidance needed to empower the members of your team to lead their own sections and agencies in support of overall mission goals and objectives. As Deputy Chief of Mission, I focused on increasing diversity throughout the mission, but especially within the senior team. I also learned it is important to take care of your team, including their families, especially in difficult and uncertain times.

Question. How do you envision your leadership relationship with your deputy chief of mission?

Answer. I have been a deputy chief of mission (DCM) twice—in Tbilisi, Georgia, and in Berlin, Germany. To be successful, a DCM must be the Chief of Mission's alter ego, confidante, and partner in managing and leading the mission. If confirmed, I fully expect to have that kind of positive relationship with my DCM in Chisinau.

Question. If confirmed, what leadership responsibilities do you intend to entrust to your deputy chief of mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I anticipate entrusting my deputy chief of mission to manage the day-to-day operations of the mission, and to be fully engaged on and informed about all aspects of policy and mission management should the deputy need to step in to lead.

Question. In order to create and continue employee excellence at the Department, accurate and direct employee evaluation reports (EERs) for Foreign Service Officers are imperative, though often lacking.

- Given your time as chief of staff to the Deputy Secretary for Management and Resources, do you believe that it is important to provide employees with accurate, constructive feedback on their performances in order to encourage improvement and reward those who most succeeded in their roles?

Answer. I believe it is critical to provide employees with accurate, constructive feedback on their performances in order to encourage improvement and reward those who most succeeded in their roles. I will hold accountable those who have performance or conduct issues. This is what I have done throughout my career.

Question. If confirmed, would you support and encourage clear, accurate, and direct feedback to employees in order to improve performance and reward high achievers?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will support and encourage clear, accurate, and direct feedback to employees in order to improve performance and reward high achievers. I will hold accountable those who have performance or conduct issues.

Question. It is imperative that U.S. diplomats get outside of posts abroad to meet with local actors, including host government officials, non-government organizations, and fellow foreign diplomats stationed in Moldova.

- In your experience, do U.S. diplomats get outside of our embassy walls enough to accomplish fully their missions?

Answer. In my experience, U.S. diplomats have gotten outside of our embassy walls sufficiently to accomplish our mission, and if confirmed I would stress the importance of getting outside of our Embassy by example. Access to and engagement with local contacts and populations is an important part of our work overseas. Throughout my career, I have participated in public outreach to all parts of society—from students to non-governmental organizations to the media—and will continue to do so.

Question. How do you intend to improve the ability of U.S. diplomats to better access all local populations?

Answer. If confirmed, I will encourage embassy staff to spend time engaging with local populations and developing contacts. I will also lead by example to demonstrate to my team that it is important to engage with our local counterparts and to participate in public outreach to provide information about our goals in a country and to learn from our hosts about local conditions.

Question. Public diplomacy is an important aspect of U.S. foreign policy efforts.

- What is the public diplomacy environment like in Moldova? What public diplomacy challenges do U.S. diplomats face there?

Answer. The United States enjoys dynamic people-to-people ties with Moldovans through many U.S.-sponsored exchange programs, and Moldovan alumni of U.S. programs have become key leaders in government and civil society. Moldovans are eager to engage with U.S. diplomats and the Embassy has a robust program of public outreach. The media environment remains challenging, as consolidated ownership and disinformation create a narrow space for independent media. The United States has consistently supported the development of independent media and resiliency against disinformation. If confirmed, I would engage in public outreach and work to improve the ability of Moldovan citizens to get their news from reputable media outlets.

Question. How do you balance the importance of Main State versus the in-country mission when it comes to tailoring public diplomacy messages for foreign audiences?

Answer. If confirmed, I will focus on closely coordinating the efforts of Washington- and Chisinau-based public affairs teams to ensure there is a unified approach to highlighting key messages and U.S. policies in Moldova. The small size of the Moldovan media market and the great public interest in the U.S.-Moldova relationship enables the mission to take advantage of the local media platform to convey U.S. priorities and build cross-cultural ties. In addition, the embassy has focused on expanding outreach to amplify U.S. messages for a wider range of audiences outside Chisinau.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO SHARON L. CROMER BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question. President Adama Barrow has reneged on his promise to serve a three-year term, declaring his intention to stand for reelection in a presidential poll scheduled for December 4 of this year. In addition, his party has blocked the approval of a new constitution, which would have established presidential term limits, and he reportedly formed a political alliance with the party of his predecessor, Yahya Jammeh, whose term in office was characterized by severe political repression and human rights abuses.

- What are the prospects for credible elections in the face of what appears to be Barrow's backsliding relative to democracy?

Answer. Presidential elections in December 2021 will be a critical benchmark. The Government is encouraging free, fair, and transparent election campaigns in what could be the first election without government interference and intimidation in a generation. Credible ballot counting will be essential. Both the ruling party and main opposition party were responsible for blocking the constitutional referendum. That said, President Barrow's recent comments about closing down space for the opposition to operate are troubling. For the December 2021 presidential election, I understand the U.S. election observation mission will work in concert with our like-minded partners to ensure that electoral authorities are accountable to the public and that any attempt to improperly alter the election's outcome will be detected and publicized.

Question. What are the most significant actions the U.S. can do in support of a sustainable democratic transition?

Answer. Gambian democracy is still in its infancy and its steps forward are still unsteady. It will take the country significant time to put in place the institutions needed to create a vibrant democracy. The amended Constitution should be put to a referendum, the National Assembly needs to fulfill its legislative role, and the courts must address the backlog of cases which delays prisoners from getting a fair trial. If given the opportunity to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of The Gambia, I will use my experience as a Mission Director and senior leadership positions at USAID headquarters to help Gambians build a truly democratic state and to advance country owned, led and sustained development that improves the lives and well-being of Gambians.

Question. What steps will you take, if confirmed, to support a lasting transition to democracy?

Answer. The courageous decision of Gambians to vote out of office the increasingly authoritarian and dictatorial former president was successful in large part due to an intervention led by the democracies of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS). Global democracy and governance indicators show that The Gambia is making modest progress but is still a fledgling democracy emerging from 22 years of under-investment in democratic governance and the rule of law. If confirmed, I will advocate for reforms to create a firm foundation for a transparent, democratic, and accountable system of governance. Presidential elections in December 2021 will be a critical benchmark for the democratic trajectory of the West Africa region.

The Gambia is on the Tier 2 Watch List according to the State Department's 2020 annual Trafficking in Person's Report. According to the report, "the government did not convict a trafficker for the third consecutive year, victim services remained inadequate overall, and some law enforcement officers allegedly requested bribes to register trafficking complaints."

Question. What programs and activities is the U.S. supporting to help the Gambia improve the conviction rate for traffickers and support trafficking victims?

Answer. The State Department continues to engage diplomatically and programmatically on combating human trafficking in The Gambia. In 2019, the TIP Office awarded $750,000 to the International Organization of Migration (IOM) to work with three existing One Stop Centers for victims of gender-based violence and train staff to screen for and provide comprehensive services to victims of trafficking. The project also aims to strengthen the National Anti-Trafficking Task Force to coordinate the Government's anti-trafficking response. Additionally, IOM provides training to criminal justice practitioners on conducting proactive investigations and identifying trafficking. If confirmed, I will continue to support this important work.

Question. What U.S. assistance programs and activities help combat police corruption?

Answer. Corruption is a significant and growing problem in The Gambia. Police commonly proposition citizens for bribes at checkpoints. Unfortunately, the Department of State does not have any programming that directly addresses police corruption in The Gambia. However, the Department is aware of the harmful effect of corruption in the public sector, including in the criminal justice sector, and is considering opportunities to work with police, special investigators, and judicial actors to reduce corruption. If confirmed, I will increase engagement with my Gambian counterparts and anticorruption leaders to fight against corruption in all of its forms. I will also enlist the full resources of the Department of State's anticorruption teams and other USG resources to support these efforts.

Question. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. While I was USAID Mission Director in Tanzania in 2016, the Government raided the offices of a USAID implementing partner, broke into a USAID financed warehouse, confiscated commodities, arrested Implementing Partner employees who were providing HIV services, and demanded the confidential names of beneficiaries perceived to be homosexual. The beneficiaries feared for their lives and went into hiding, suspending provision of their life-saving HIV/AIDS care and treatment. We resolved the matter by addressing it as a public health and human rights issue. I deployed staff to meet secretly with beneficiaries to ensure their safety and collect evidence from their experiences to inform security and programmatic actions. I made the difficult decision to temporarily close outreach services for the safety of our implementing partners and beneficiaries. I engaged in quiet diplomacy with champions in the Ministry of Health who influenced decisions behind the scenes. Through these efforts, my USAID/Tanzania staff and I protected the safety of Tanzanians, reinstated needed HIV/AIDS services, and upheld American values.

As Mission Director in Ghana, I guided my democracy staff to make an award to a local partner to conduct a pre-election survey of Ghanaians' impressions of the upcoming December 2020 presidential and parliamentary elections. The survey showed that Ghanaians had considerable confidence in the upcoming election process and youth were positively engaged in the political process. The widely disseminated survey results were used to counter heated political rhetoric about the lack of confidence in elections and Ghana's security forces. In meetings arranged by the U.S. Ambassador with the top political party representatives, I advocated for party leaders to publicly commit to nonviolence by signing a Peace Accord brokered by civil society. The leading Presidential candidates agreed to do so, and the December 2020 elections were free and fair, and held peacefully.

Question. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Republic of the Gambia? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. The Gambia transitioned to democracy in 2017 after 22 years of dictatorship. As a fledgling democracy The Gambia faces challenges in implementing a democratic system, but global democracy and governance indicators show that The Gambia is making modest progress rather than backsliding. Presidential elections in December 2021 will be a critical benchmark. The Government is encouraging free, fair, and transparent election campaigns in what will be the first election without government interference and intimidation in a generation. Credible ballot counting will be essential. President Barrow has made troubling comments about closing down space for the opposition to operate. The Truth, Reconciliation, Reparations Commission (TRCC) has set the stage for accountability and transitional justice, but the Government must take the necessary action to implement those recommendations and hold accountable those most responsible for violations and abuses of human rights.

Question. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Republic of the Gambia? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. If confirmed, advancing democratic governance and principles in The Gambia will be a key priority. I will call on political parties across the spectrum to respect the results of the presidential election. I will work to ensure that opposition activities are not unlawfully curtailed.

Question. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, supporting democracy and governance will be my top priority. USAID just launched a multi-year Promoting Rights and Justice initiative to support justice sector reform with a current value of over $7 million, and the MCC Board just approved a Threshold Program valued at $25 million. If confirmed, I will prioritize assistance for capacity building in the legislature and the justice sector and for electoral system reform.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Republic of the Gambia? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Throughout the course of my career, I have worked tirelessly to promote respect for human rights and achieved goals through partnership with civil society groups and NGOs. If confirmed, I will strengthen and build on our existing relationships and look to form new relationships with worthy organizations. I will engage closely with civil society organizations and NGOs to strengthen their capacity and will call on the Government to work together with these groups to build a better, fairer, and more just country.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to strengthening the relationships our mission has built with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties. I will strive to support the efforts of these figures and parties to protect the inclusive political environment in The Gambia, including their efforts to advance electoral reform and put the draft constitution to a referendum. I will urge the Government to respect the freedoms of association and peaceful assembly of all political actors, even those who do not agree with the Government. Through public statements, small grants and other programming, and direct engagement, I will advocate for a political environment that is inclusive of women, youth, minorities, and those who might otherwise be marginalized.

Question. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Republic of the Gambia on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Republic of the Gambia?

Answer. The power of a free press to hold government to account, to expose corruption and malfeasance, and to investigate allegations of violations and abuses of human rights cannot be understated. Fortunately, the Government of The Gambia is not currently engaged in undermining the Gambian press, but we must remain vigilant. If confirmed, my Embassy team and I will meet regularly with independent, local press and engage with the Gambian Government on issues of press freedom.

Question. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. After 22 years of dictatorship, democracy and the democratic process are still developing in The Gambia and the country is particularly vulnerable to the destructive effects of disinformation and propaganda. If confirmed, I will continue current engagement and promote new engagement with government and opposition groups, the press, and civil society organizations to counter disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in The Gambia, including through public statements and Embassy social media platforms.

Question. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Republic of the Gambia on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Organized labor groups, including unions, are an important element of protecting and promoting the welfare of workers. If confirmed, I will commit to actively engage with the Government of The Gambia on the right of workers to exercise freedom of association, including to form and join independent trade unions, and speak out against incidents when this freedom is restricted.

Question. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Republic of the Gambia, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity?

Answer. Throughout my career, protection and promotion of respect for human rights has been one of my top priorities. If confirmed, I fully commit to using all available methods to promote and defend the human rights and dignity of all Gambians, regardless of their sexual orientation or gender identity.?

Question. What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer (LGBTQ) people face in Republic of the Gambia?

Answer. A large majority of Gambian citizens view same-sex conduct as contradictory to their values. Faith organizations and media are unsupportive of members of the LGBTQI+ community and oppose any measure to recognize members of the LGBTQI+ community as legitimate or worthy of protection. Same-sex sexual conduct is criminalized in The Gambia. Both the Barrow administration and those campaigning for president have stated that “homosexuality is a non-issue in The Gambia” and decriminalization is neither needed nor a possibility. Due to the cultural and political environment, LGBTQI+ persons are significantly marginalized in The Gambia. The LGBTQI+ community has specifically requested that Western diplomatic missions not make their situation a highly visible aspect of our engagement specifically because it puts them at risk and undermines their own quiet efforts to change minds and attitudes among their fellow Gambians.

Question. What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTQ people in Republic of the Gambia?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to lead the U.S. Government’s efforts to encourage change—especially decriminalization—while ensuring our efforts do not put at risk those we seek to help. I will ensure that members of the LGBTQI+ community are aware of our strong support for their dignity, for their human rights, and for their full inclusion in Gambian society and look for ways to support steps to realize this important goal.

Question. Will you commit, if confirmed, to ensuring that you fully brief members of Congress and/or their staff each time you are in Washington for visits or consultations during your tenure as Ambassador to the Gambia?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work together with the State Department’s Bureau of Legislative Affairs to respond promptly to all appropriate requests for information and briefings for members of Congress and their staff and to offer such briefings whenever I am in Washington or remotely from Post.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO SHARON L. CROMER BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. Given recent challenges to democracy in West Africa, including 4 coups in the last year, what are the regional implications for The Gambia’s continued democratic development?

Answer. The courageous decision of Gambians to vote out of office the increasingly authoritarian and dictatorial former president was successful in large part due to an intervention led by the democracies of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS). Global democracy and governance indicators show that The Gambia is making modest progress but is still a fledgling democracy emerging from 22 years of under-investment in democratic governance and the rule of law. If confirmed, I will advocate for reforms to create a firm foundation for a transparent, democratic, and accountable system of governance. Presidential elections in December 2021 will be a critical benchmark for the democratic trajectory of the West Africa region.

Question. Do you believe it is the sign of a healthy democracy when a duly elected government, in consultation with its citizens, extends the term of office of the presidency even if that means it would extend the term of the current President in power? If confirmed, how would you respond to the Gambia doing something like this?

Answer. While every country retains the right to make constitutional changes, the United States government has long opposed any constitutional changes designed to favor incumbent elected leaders or the extension of an incumbent’s term in office. I believe that regular, democratic, and peaceful transitions of power yield more accountability, help build and maintain stronger institutions, and engender less corruption. According to a recent Afrobarometer survey, an overwhelming majority of Gambian citizens strongly favor term limits on the office of the President. If confirmed, I will speak out publicly against any attempt to alter the constitution or extend term limits against the will of The Gambian people.

Question. From your perspective, what should be the top priorities for US policy toward The Gambia?

Answer. Beyond serving and protecting American citizens, our key policy priorities include strengthening The Gambia's democratic institutions, encouraging good governance including supporting The Gambia's own justice sector reform initiatives and efforts to hold accountable those most responsible for the widespread violations of human rights during the Jammeh era, strengthening the capacity of Civil Society and The Gambian legislature to constructively exercise their constitutional authorities, and encouraging economic growth. If confirmed, I will continue to promote inclusive country-led development and enhance U.S. influence in the face of strategic competition. Each of these priorities furthers U.S. interests by promoting regional stability, limiting our strategic competitors' expansion, and creating new markets for U.S. goods.

Question. In your opinion, is The Gambia a good target for increased U.S. investment? If yes, how will you support increased U.S. trade and investment with The Gambia as ambassador, if confirmed?

Answer. Investors in The Gambia face multiple challenges: a small market, weak institutions, poor infrastructure, inadequate electrical supply, high tax burden on formal enterprises, corruption, and bureaucratic hurdles. Despite these challenges, U.S. companies are market leaders in telecommunications, agriculture, and health care in The Gambia, and other opportunities exist. If confirmed, I will ensure the Mission maintains close contact with the small number of U.S. businesses in The Gambia, advises firms in the United States seeking to enter the Gambian market, and coordinates with the Foreign Commercial Service to publicize public tenders of interest to American companies.

Question. In November 2020, I published a Senate Foreign Relations Committee majority report entitled "The United States and Europe: A Concrete Agenda for Transatlantic Cooperation on China." The report gave several recommendations on increased transatlantic cooperation, including in Africa, to counter Chinese malign influence more effectively. In what ways should the United States partner with European countries to build on likeminded interests in the Gambia and counter the malign influence of China?

Answer. The Gambia's relationship with the People's Republic of China (PRC) is defined by transactional and opaque decision making, with The Gambia providing access to natural resources in exchange for Beijing's provision of infrastructure development. PRC companies and labor are generally utilized, undermining Gambian companies and the Gambian labor force. The country's interaction with most international partners is based on financial assistance: the government often acts in direct response to requirements set forth as conditions for continued or increased aid. The EU's regular infusion of millions of Euros in direct budgetary support gives it significant leverage in The Gambia. The recent signing of a Development Objective Agreement to expand USAID operations in country and the unanimous approval of a MCC Threshold Program can help to cement the United States as a partner of choice.

Question. How will you work to attract U.S. investment opportunities to the Gambia?

Answer. If confirmed, I will maintain close contact with the small number of U.S. businesses in The Gambia, regularly advise firms in the United States seeking to enter the Gambian market, work with the American Chamber of Commerce in The Gambia, and coordinate with the Foreign Commercial Service to publicize public tenders of interest to American companies.

Question. What particular insights and areas of expertise do you envision bringing to the role of US Ambassador to The Gambia given your significant experience with USAID, including having served as USAID Mission Director four times in Africa?

Answer. My experience working in fragile democracies, such as Indonesia after the downfall of President Suharto, leads me to believe that after 22 years of authoritarian rule which ended in January 2017, the Gambian government is still in its infancy and its steps toward democracy are unsteady. It will take the country significant time to put in place the infrastructure needed to create a vibrant democracy. The Constitution should be amended, the National Assembly needs to fulfill its legislative role, and the courts must address the backlog of cases which delays prisoners from getting a fair trial. If given the opportunity to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of The Gambia, I will use my experience as a Mission Director and senior leadership positions at USAID headquarters to help Gambians build a truly democratic state, advance country owned, led and sustained development that improves the lives and well-being of Gambians, and promote an investment climate where both U.S. and Gambian enterprises thrive and two-way trade between our countries create good jobs and economic prosperity.

Question. How will you prioritize U.S. democracy and governance assistance to support the Gambia's ongoing democratic transition?

Answer. USAID just launched a multi-year Promoting Rights and Justice initiative to support justice sector reform with a current value of over $7 million, and the MCC Board just approved a Threshold Program valued at $25 million. If confirmed, I will prioritize assistance for capacity building in the legislature and the justice sector and for electoral system reform.

Question. What are the most urgent priorities for the Gambia in its effort to build a sustainable democracy?

Answer. While the Barrow government has shown admirable support for democratic norms leading to remarkable increases in rankings in press freedoms and human rights, essential reforms remain incomplete. Many core promises of Barrow's 2016 campaign remain unfulfilled. The statutory framework exploited by former president Jammeh remains in place, and The Gambian government must renew its focus on eliminating the mechanisms that supported his abuses. Key pieces of legislation, especially anticorruption measures and reforms of the criminal code, remain pending. Corruption is a particularly potent threat to democratic reform. Gambians perceive the Barrow government as increasingly plagued by both high-level and small-scale corruption, a problem that requires both urgent attention and a robust statutory framework. The Presidential election scheduled for December 2021 must be free and fair, electoral processes must be transparent, and all parties must abide by the results. If confirmed, I will advocate for a respect for human rights, the rule of law, accountability, access to justice, adherence to constitutionally-mandated term limits, and strong democratic institutions as fundamental to a country's peace and prosperity.

Question. How can the United States best use the tools it has to hold corrupt Gambian officials accountable for corrupt behavior? If confirmed, what would be your approach in using those tools?

Answer. There are no quick fixes to corruption in The Gambia, but passing comprehensive anti-corruption legislation is a necessary first step. Surveys of the Gambian public show their steadily worsening view of the government's handling of corruption, and urgent action is needed. Existing laws requiring government officials to disclose their assets are weak, unenforced, and insufficient. If confirmed, I will aggressively push the Gambian government to pass this legislation, work with civil society organizations shining a light the problem, and support the Gambians who are tirelessly working to root out corruption. I will also enlist the full resources of the Department of State's anticorruption teams and other U.S. government resources to supports these efforts.

Question. Can you provide your view on supporting U.S. funded, independent international election observation missions?

Answer. Independent monitoring efforts are essential to the U.S. objective of supporting free and fair elections, and transparent election processes in The Gambia. For the December 2021 presidential election, I understand the U.S. observation mission will work in concert with our like-minded partners to make clear to Gambian authorities that they are accountable to the public and that attempts to improperly alter the election's outcome will be detected and publicized.

Question. Would you support a U.S. funded, independent international election observation mission for Gambia's next general election?

Answer. If confirmed, I would carefully consider how U.S. support to observation efforts can contribute to free and fair electoral processes in The Gambia. For the December 2021 elections, U.S. diplomats will be on the ground to determine if the government follows through on their obligations to conduct a free and fair election that reflects the will of the people. In addition, recipients of U.S. grant funds will dispatch local observers to every polling place in the country to observe the voting process and provide regular reports. Taken together, the effort will give the United States a comprehensive view of this critical juncture in The Gambia's democratic development.

Question. Many U.S. missions have been under enormous stress over the last few years, in large part due to COVID. What is your understanding of morale throughout Embassy Banjul?

Answer. Respecting this nomination process, I have not engaged directly with Embassy/Banjul staff. However, I understand morale is high despite the enormous workload.

Question. How do you intend to improve morale at Embassy Banjul?

Answer. Embassy Banjul is a small mission. There are only 12 U.S. Direct Hires which often means that staff must assume multiple roles and cover for colleagues who are on leave or away from Post, or when there are staffing gaps due to the assignment process. I understand that staff members, American and Gambian alike, are knowledgeable, collegial, and enthusiastic about their work. If confirmed, I intend to nurture that enthusiasm by identifying the talent in each individual and growing that talent, ensuring the well-being of staff members and their families, and creating a work environment that promotes respect for everyone and celebrates our teamwork and achievements large and small.

Question. How do you intend to create a unified mission and vision at Embassy Banjul?

Answer. If confirmed, I will create a unified “one team” approach in Embassy Banjul which draws on the expertise and talents of staff assigned to Embassy Banjul and also includes officers from USAID, Treasury, Commerce, Agriculture and other agencies who support Banjul from Embassies in Dakar and Accra, as well as Washington. Everyone who supports the mission’s integrated country strategy must feel welcomed and supported as vital member of Banjul’s team. Management is a key responsibility for chiefs of mission.

Question. How would you describe your management style?

Answer. As a senior leader, I have always believed that it is my duty and responsibility to mentor and sponsor staff to make sure they grow professionally, feel appreciated and supported, and are given opportunities to take on new responsibilities and contribute to U.S. goals. For the past eight years, I have devoted each Friday to mentoring staff. I mentor staff by delegating tasks, encouraging questions and brainstorming, providing guidance, as needed, and welcoming new ideas. I never assume that I have all the answers. I communicate regularly and consult broadly, seeking out different perspectives. I lead quarterly town halls and regularly communicate via email to the entire staff on current topics. When the time comes to make a decision, I don’t hesitate to do so. When problems arise, I expect to be notified promptly so we can resolve them together rather than let them fester. I place staff wellbeing and creating a respectful working environment above all else. To accomplish this, family must come first. It is important to me to pause, acknowledge and celebrate successes both big and small and reward exceptional performance.

Question. Do you believe it is ever acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either in public or private?

Answer. It is never acceptable to berate subordinates in public or private. Such action is not only unkind and disrespectful, but also abusive and ineffective.

Question. How do you envision your leadership relationship with deputy chief of mission?

Answer. The relationship between the chief of mission (COM) and the deputy chief of mission (DCM) is extremely important. The DCM serves as a trusted advisor to the COM. In this respect, trust must be built and maintained between the two for the smooth operation of the mission and the well-being of the entire staff. I intend to include the DCM in all internal meetings and keep him/her abreast of all external affairs.

Question. If confirmed, what leadership responsibilities do you intend to entrust to your deputy chief of mission?

Answer. The deputy chief of mission is the chief of staff, responsible for the day-to-day management of the mission. All State Department section heads will report to the DCM. In order to create and continue employee excellence at the Department, accurate and direct employee evaluation reports (EERs) for Foreign Service Officers are imperative.

Question. Do you believe that it is important to provide employees with accurate, constructive feedback on their performances in order to encourage improvement and reward those who most succeeded in their roles?

Answer. It is extremely important for managers to provide accurate and constructive performance feedback to employees on a regular basis. I check in with staff frequently and offer mentoring sessions if they have any concerns about their performance or careers. I conduct formal performance feedback with direct reports on a quarterly basis. When performance appears to be lacking, I provide immediate feedback in private and work with the employee to find ways to improve their performance. I recognize accomplishments through awards and public recognition.

Question. If confirmed, would you support and encourage clear, accurate, and direct feedback to employees in order to improve performance and reward high achievers?

Answer. Yes. I believe that it is the responsibility of leaders to create leaders, not followers. Nurturing leadership requires clear, accurate, and direct feedback tailored to the individual's needs. I am rewarded when staffs grow and take on new roles and responsibilities that advance their careers.

Question. In your experience, do U.S. diplomats get outside of our embassy walls enough to accomplish fully their missions?

Answer. It is imperative that U.S. diplomats get outside of posts abroad to meet with local actors, including host government officials, non-government organizations, and fellow foreign diplomats stationed in the Gambia. To properly execute our jobs, we must travel beyond the boundaries of the capital and engage with stakeholders throughout the country. I understand the Embassy Banjul team leaves the building to meet with local contacts, develop connections in the community, and spread America's message. There is no substitute for in-person connections, and our team relies on those links to accomplish our mission goals. Face-to-face conversations not only supply the information key to the U.S. government's decision-making process, they also provide opportunities to inform and persuade the Gambians who make the country's most important decisions. Developing those relationships consistent with appropriate security measures is a core component of our work, and the reason diplomats are stationed abroad.

Question. How do you intend to improve the ability of U.S. diplomats to better access all local populations?

Answer. The Gambia is a diverse democracy comprised of countless social, tribal, economic, and cultural groups. If confirmed, I endeavor to meet with representatives of all of them on a regular basis. I will target outreach efforts to broaden and strengthen the country's representative democracy while also developing links to marginalized communities. Public Diplomacy programs are an essential tool to expanding this outreach effort. Exchange programs give the Embassy an unparalleled tool to influence key members of diverse communities. If confirmed, I will strive to ensure that no group is overlooked, and that the rights of members of Gambian minority groups are respected. Public diplomacy is an important aspect of U.S. foreign policy efforts.

Question. What is the public diplomacy environment like in The Gambia?

Answer. In general, the Gambian people view the United States positively, based on connections with the Gambian diaspora in the United States; their appreciation for U.S. assistance, and U.S. popular culture; and a belief in our shared values of democracy, security, prosperity, and respect for human rights. If confirmed I will use public diplomacy resources to promote a favorable view of the United States and its foreign policy, advance democratic values, and encourage inclusive economic growth. I will focus the Public Affairs Section on youth and emerging voices, furnishing them with the tools needed to become entrepreneurs, civil society leaders, and advocates for democracy and good governance.

Question. What public diplomacy challenges do U.S. diplomats face there?

Answer. Payment for positive press is rampant in the Gambia, causing a reduced level of trust in the media. Capacity among journalists is low. If confirmed, I will support efforts to build a free, professional, and independent press.

Question. How do you balance the importance of Main State versus the in-country mission when it comes to tailoring public diplomacy messages for foreign audiences?

Answer. In my experience, Posts have latitude to tailor our public messaging to local issues and concerns. If confirmed, our message at Post will be the same as our messaging from Washington: that Americans and Gambians share the same ideals of democracy, religious and social tolerance, good governance, security, and economic prosperity. I will ensure that our public diplomacy posture continues to play a key role in promoting our many shared values and America's generous financial assistance and support across the range of issues.

Question. In the 2021 Trafficking in Persons Report, The Gambia was identified again as Tier 2 Watch List due to lack of resources and ongoing failure to prosecute traffickers. How will you work with the Gambian authorities to address these issues if you are confirmed as Ambassador?

Answer. Although The Gambia did not fully meet the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking, it is making efforts to do so. Gambian courts have some recent success in convicting trafficking cases, but remain challenged by lack of resources, inadequate space for remanded prisoners, defendants absconding while on bail, and victims reluctant to testify or provide evidence due to a cultural emphasis on forgiveness or fear of retaliation. While the government is making progress towards identifying victims among vulnerable populations, such as through the adoption of a new national referral mechanism, additional improvements are needed. If confirmed, I will work with the Gambian government to address the prioritized recommendations in the 2021 TIP Report.

Question. In the 2020 International Religious Freedom report, The Gambia was identified as generally tolerant of religious freedom. What is your assessment of this particular issue and if confirmed, how will you work with the Ambassador At Large to bolster religious freedom in-country?

Answer. Religious freedom is a key U.S. foreign policy priority, and the Department continues to closely monitor the religious freedom situation in The Gambia. The Gambia is generally tolerant of religious freedom and members of the majority Muslim population are largely accepting of members of the Christian minority. If confirmed, I commit to working with the Ambassador at Large for International Religious Freedom and Congress to emphasize the importance of continued religious tolerance and to address religious freedom concerns in The Gambia.

Question. As Ambassador, how would you advocate for former Gambian president Yahya Jammeh to personally face justice for the gross violations of human rights and corruption committed while president?

Answer. The Truth, Reconciliation, Reparations Commission (TRRC), established to investigate and publicize the wrongs committed during Jammeh's rule, has concluded and should issue its final report soon. A newly created National Human Rights Commission is operating with significant and notable independence. Yahya Jammeh should face justice for the crimes he allegedly committed. The United States can help through building capacity in the judiciary and publicly supporting the efforts of the TRRC, but it is up to the Gambian people and courts to decide the fate of the former dictator.

Question. How do you envision the United States supporting the implementation of Gambia's Truth, Reconciliation and Reparations Commission (TRRC) report once it is released to the public? If confirmed as ambassador, how would you personally prioritize the report's implementation?

Answer. The TRRC is essential to The Gambia's national healing process after decades of nondemocratic rule characterized by allegations of human rights violations and abuses and lack of respect for human rights. The Commission has set the stage for accountability and transitional justice, but much hard work remains. The country has to make hard choices to hold former officials accountable and obtain justice for victims. If confirmed, I will press the government to hold accountable those responsible for the egregious crimes, violations and abuses of human rights, and affronts to dignity testified to at the Commission. In the 2021 Human Rights Report, The Gambia was identified as having some serious human rights concerns, like the use of forced disappearances, attacks on freedom of expression, and a climate of impunity.

Question. If confirmed, what steps will you take to address these instances with the host government?

Answer. After the election of President Adama Barrow in 2016, the new government quickly recognized and moved to respect Gambians' human rights. This included an end to arbitrary detention, political persecution, and censorship. The Gambia is moving in the right direction, but there is still work to be done. If confirmed, I will press the Government of The Gambia to investigate allegations of human rights violations and abuses thoroughly and transparently, and to hold accountable those responsible for human rights violations and abuses.

Question. How will you direct your embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground?

Answer. Throughout the course of my career, I have worked tirelessly to promote respect for human rights and achieved goals through partnership with civil society groups and NGOs. If confirmed, I will strengthen and build on our existing relationships and look to form new relationships with worthy organizations. I will engage closely with civil society organizations and NGOs to strengthen their capacity and will call on the Government to work together with these groups to build a better, fairer, and more just Gambia that respects the rights of all.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. VIRGINIA E. PALMER BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question. According to the State Department 2020 Country Reports on Human Rights Practices “Impunity remained a significant problem in the Ghana Police Service. Corruption, brutality, poor training, lack of oversight, and an overburdened judicial system contributed to impunity. Police often failed to respond to reports of abuses and, in many instances, did not act unless complainants paid for police transportation and other operating expenses.” What is your understanding of the level of police corruption in Ghana?

Answer. My understanding of the level of police corruption in Ghana is that it remains a significant problem and is fueled by impunity, poor training, lack of oversight, and an overburdened judicial system.

Question. Are there U.S. funded programs aimed at addressing police corruption?

Answer. The Department of State does not have any programming that directly addresses police corruption in Ghana. However, the Department is aware of the harmful effect of corruption in the public sector, including in the criminal justice sector, and is considering opportunities to work with police, special investigators, and judicial actors to reduce corruption.

Question. How, if confirmed, will you engage on the issue of police corruption?

Answer. If confirmed, I will prioritize working with our like-minded partners and the Department of State’s Bureau of International Narcotics Law Enforcement to identify opportunities to create programming that can address police corruption while empowering Ghana’s professional police officers.

Question. The Committee to Protect Journalists has reported on a number of worrying cases of the detention, harassment and abuse of a number of journalists in 2021, and a call from a ruling party politician that a journalist to be targeted for attack. Are media freedoms in jeopardy in Ghana?

Answer. Ghana enjoys a vibrant and free media, with over 350 radio stations, more than 120 television operators on air, and approximately 250 newspaper and magazine publications, plus active and growing internet use and social media presence. Freedom of speech and expression are enshrined in Ghana’s constitution. There have been a few high-profile cases of violence and threats of violence against journalists. The Government often responds appropriately to protect freedom of the press, but some of these threats have come after stories alleging official corruption. Exchange and training programs for journalists, such as fact-checking, data journalism, and even journalism ethics, are welcomed and in demand across Ghana. If confirmed, I commit to doing all I can to ensure these freedoms are protected and enhanced in Ghana.

Question. Are attacks on the media indicative of broader threats to the right of individuals to criticize the Government?

Answer. Freedom of speech and expression, freedom of assembly, and other fundamental freedoms are enshrined in Ghana’s constitution. Although there are some reports of violence and threats of violence, or unjustified arrests or prosecution against journalists, they are generally free to be critical of the Government without fear of reprisal.

Question. What steps will you take, if confirmed, to support media freedoms in Ghana?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support media freedom by encouraging the Ghanaian Government to appropriately protect freedom of the press by thoroughly investigating cases of violence, threats of violence, unjustified arrests, and prosecution of journalists. I will also continue programs to enhance the professionalism and expertise of Ghana’s journalists.

Democracy & Human Rights

Question. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have had the honor to work on democracy and governance issues for much of my 35-year career. I served as the Labor Officer in the PRC immediately after the Tian An Men massacres in 1989, for example, and drafted the first reporting on exports made from Chinese prison labor. I was the first Western diplomat granted access to several Chinese prisons, providing important information for human rights reporting and U.S. customs actions to ensure U.S. workers were not disadvantaged. For this work, I received a Meritorious Honor Award and runner up for the Department's 1991 Labor Officer of the Year.

In Zimbabwe from 1993-1997, I ran the Democracy and Human Rights Fund that provided project financing to ZimRights and the Legal Resources Foundation and seed money to establish the Zimbabwe Lawyers for Human Rights, Southern African Human Rights Research, and Documentation Trust and other groups. These groups formed the core of the Zimbabwe Election Support Network which challenged Robert Mugabe's human rights and electoral abuses from 2000-2016. I established the first Human Rights Donor Coordination Group to leverage U.S. democracy and human rights resources and avoid duplication. To address rampant child abuse and rape, I brought together officials from the Zimbabwe police, Attorney General's office, and human rights organizations, which had not previously cooperated, to draft legislation and change arrest procedures to establish the first child-friendly courts, receiving Meritorious and Superior Honor Awards for this work.

In Hong Kong, I drafted Human Rights Reports for Hong Kong and Macau and helped acquire Public Interest Benefit Parole for Chinese Christians persecuted for their beliefs but unable to apply for refugee status because they could not leave the PRC. That work contributed to better U.S. understanding of the House Church movement in the PRC.

In Vietnam, I was the Front Office's principal interlocutor with the Ministry of Public Security on human rights issues and met regularly with dissidents under house arrest or in prison. After one such visit (and lots of work from Washington and Embassy teams) Tran Khai Thanh was released from prison and allowed to travel to the United States.

In Malawi, I represented the United States on the U.N.-led Election Support Network and oversaw U.S. Government support for national elections, including an NDI-run Parallel Voter Tabulation, support for Malawi police and military providing security for the election, and U.S. participation in international election monitoring efforts. I spoke out frequently on the need for Malawi to respect the human rights of all, including LGBTQ persons. I hosted multiple gatherings of faith leaders to promote religious tolerance and respect for the human rights of all, including women and girls and LGBTQ persons.

If confirmed, I pledge to continue work to advance democracy, good governance, and respect for human rights in Ghana.

Question. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Republic of Ghana? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. Ghana is widely considered to be one of the leading democracies on the African continent and generally respects human rights. Continuing problems include reports of arbitrary or unlawful killings by the Government or its agents; harsh and life-threatening prison conditions; arbitrary arrest or detention; serious problems with the independence of the judiciary; violence and threats of violence, or unjustified arrests or prosecutions against journalists; serious acts of corruption; violence against women; and existence of the worst forms of child labor. Although the Ghanaian Government has taken steps to prosecute and punish officials who commit human rights violations or abuses, whether in the security forces or elsewhere in the Government, impunity remains a problem.

Question. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Republic of Ghana? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. Our close partnership with Ghana spans more than 60 years and is rooted in our shared commitment to democracy and human rights for all, peace and security, and economic opportunity and prosperity. Ghana's long democratic tradition, robust media, religious tolerance, and strong civil society make it a leader in West Africa and a model for the continent. With democratic backsliding in the region, Ghana's example and leadership is ever more important.

Strengthening democracy and governance institutions are essential to regional stability and inclusive economic growth. Potential impediments include the culture of corruption, slow bureaucratic processes, and a lack of resources. If confirmed, I will continue aggressive programs to strengthen Ghana's anti-corruption and electoral institutions and increase Ghanaian women's participation in political life.

Question. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, combatting corruption and addressing issues related to adherence to contractual commitments will be among my top priorities. Integration of U.S. Government programs, particularly those dealing with inclusive economic growth, accountability and proper delivery of government services to Ghanaian citizens, is key to success of these efforts. I will also aggressively pursue programs to end trafficking and child labor.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Republic of Ghana? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. I will. The promotion of respect for human rights is a central pillar of our relations with Ghana. If confirmed, I will strengthen relationships with civil society leaders and human rights advocates in Ghana, the United States and internationally. I will work, where possible in partnership with diplomatic counterparts, to proactively counter any efforts to close the space for NGOs and civil society to operate, including via legal or regulatory measures.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to meeting with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties and to advocating for access and inclusivity for women, minorities, and youth within political parties. To encourage genuine political competition, I will work to strengthen existing relationships and build new ones across the political spectrum.

Question. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Republic of Ghana on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Republic of Ghana?

Answer. Freedom of speech and expression, freedom of assembly, and other fundamental freedoms are enshrined in Ghana's constitution. Ghana has over 350 radio stations, more than 120 television operators on air, and approximately 250 newspaper and magazine publications. If confirmed, I will lead Embassy engagement to expand Ghana's vibrant and free media. I also commit to meeting regularly with independent and local press in Ghana.

Question. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the Embassy's ongoing engagements with civil society and government counterparts to promote the importance of countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country.

Question. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Republic of Ghana on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. If confirmed, I will commit to actively engage with Ghana on the right of workers to exercise freedom of association, including to form and join independent trade unions, and call out incidents when this right is restricted.

Question. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Republic of Ghana, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to using my position to defend human rights and the dignity of all Ghanaians, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity.

Question. What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer (LGBTQ) people face in Republic of Ghana?

Answer. In Ghana, people who identify as lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and queer face increasing anti-LGBTQI+ rhetoric and actions that threaten the human rights of members of that community. Ghana's Constitution guarantees freedom of speech and expression, and freedom of assembly to all Ghanaians, not just to certain groups. These freedoms are foundational to our two democracies and must be vigorously defended. Failure to do so creates serious public order and public health problems.

Question. What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTQ people in Republic of Ghana?

Answer. I am deeply concerned about the evolving situation around the LGBTQI+ community in Ghana. In his video address to the AU, President Biden affirmed the United States policy to promote respect for the human rights of all individuals, including women and girls, LGBTQI+ individuals, persons with disabilities, and persons of every ethnic background, faith, and heritage.

If confirmed, I will urge national leaders in Ghana to uphold protections provide in Ghana's constitution for all individuals, consistent with its human rights obligations and commitments. I will work with diplomatic counterparts and allies in civil society and the LGBTQI+ community to address the uptick in hateful rhetoric and intimidation tactics.

Congressional Consultations

Question. Will you commit, if confirmed, to ensuring that you fully brief members of Congress and/or their staff each time you are in Washington for visits or consultations during your tenure as Ambassador to Ghana?

Answer. Yes.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. VIRGINIA E. PALMER BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. In your opinion, what are the most significant domestic and external threats Ghana faces?

Answer. Ghana and its neighbors confront significant threats from violent extremists from the north, and piracy and illegal fishing in the Gulf of Guinea. Domestically, the COVID pandemic, corruption, unemployment, burdensome fiscal deficits and debt, an uptick in hateful rhetoric and actions against members of the LGBTQI+ community pose threats to Ghana's development goals and role as democratic model.

Question. In your opinion, how should we strengthen our partnership with Ghana on counterterrorism operations in the region?

Answer. Ghana is well-respected for its proactive involvement and positive leadership on security issues throughout West Africa. If confirmed, I will support Ghana's regional leadership role and will strengthen our partnership with Ghana to counter violent extremism by continuing integrated U.S. programs on inclusive economic development, rule of law strengthening, and security and law enforcement cooperation.

Question. Where are the opportunities to do more with Ghana to counter threats in littoral West Africa?

Answer. Ghana is internationally recognized for its commitment to advancing peace on the continent, and around the world, through participation in U.N. and AU peacekeeping missions. Ghana ranks among the top ten countries worldwide for its contributions to peacekeeping operations. Currently, Ghana is supporting U.N. peacekeeping missions in South Sudan, Lebanon, and Mali.

Opportunities to do more with Ghana to counter threats in littoral West Africa include encouraging Ghana to support additional U.N. missions in the region as those environments evolve, as well as fortifying the Department of State's security assistance provided to Ghana's military and police forces through the International Military Education and Training (IMET) program, Foreign Military Financing (FMF), and the Peacekeeping Operations (PKO) accounts. The Accra Initiative provides an important opportunity for locally-developed regional cooperation to counter violent extremism and bolster regional security. Ghana also plays an important role, as a model of democratic practice and through its leadership of ECOWAS, to counter democratic backsliding in the region.

Question. If confirmed as ambassador, how can you, and the U.S. more broadly, continue to build Ghana's role as an active and constructive actor in West African regional affairs?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with Ghana as it chairs the Economic Community of West African States, serves on the U.N. Security Council, and hosts the Secretariat of the African Continental Free Trade Agreement—roles that build Ghana's profile as an active and constructive actor in West African regional affairs. In addition, I will prioritize programs like the International Police Peacekeeping Operations Support program, through which the Department of State's Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs (INL) provides training and assistance to the Ghana Police Service to improve the capacity of Formed Police Units and individual police officers deployed to U.N. peacekeeping missions.

Question. Do you believe the United States should support robust democracy and governance assistance programs in comparatively stronger African democracies like Ghana? If so, what should be the strategic focus for these efforts?

Answer. Yes. Ghana's long democratic tradition, robust media, religious tolerance, and strong civil society make it a leader in West Africa and a model for the continent. Supporting anti-corruption efforts, promoting respect for human rights and strengthening the rule of law are important to achieving all of our security and economic goals in Ghana. With democratic backsliding in the region, strategically supporting Ghana's leadership and example of robust democracy and governance is ever more important and, if I am confirmed, will remain the focus of assistance programming efforts.

Question. Do you believe it is the sign of a healthy democracy when a duly elected government, in consultation with its citizens, extends the term of office of the presidency even if that means it would extend the term of the current President in power? If confirmed, how would you respond to Ghana doing something like this?

Answer. Every country has the right to make constitutional changes as long as they are made through a consultative and broad process that includes all stakeholders, including civil society and opposition parties. However, constitutional changes designed to favor incumbents or extend terms erode democratic principles. If confirmed, I will advocate for regular, democratic transitions of power, which yield more accountability, stronger institutions, and less corruption.

Question. Can you provide your view on supporting U.S. funded, independent international election observation missions?

Answer. Promoting democracy and human rights has long served as the basis of American foreign policy. Election observation can promote public participation, encourage transparency and public confidence in the electoral process, and mitigate the potential for electoral violence. Both U.S. Mission observers and independent observation missions help deter fraud at polling stations and facilitate the collection of critical information on conditions. To ensure real democratic gains, it is important that our elections work not focus solely on Election Day, but also address institutional or conduct problems in the lead up to elections.

Question. Would you support a U.S. funded, independent international election observation mission for Ghana's next general election?

Answer. If confirmed, I would carefully consider how U.S. support to observation efforts can contribute to free and fair elections, and transparent electoral processes in Ghana.

Question. Ghana made a modest improvement from previous years in Transparency International's 2020 Corruption Perceptions Index. How can the United States best support Ghana in its fight to curb corruption in government and the private sector?

Answer. Changing the culture of corruption in Ghana is essential for attracting more foreign investment, promoting sustainable, inclusive economic growth, and eliminate Ghana's dependence on foreign assistance. The United States can best support Ghana in its fight to curb corruption in government and the private sector by encouraging the Ghanaian Government to reinforce existing anti-corruption institutions like the Office of the Special Prosecutor, promote transparency, and enforce anti-corruption laws. If confirmed, I will utilize all available tools and programs, including visa restrictions, to support Ghanaian efforts to combat corruption.

Question. How can the United States best use the tools it has to hold Ghanaian officials accountable for corrupt behavior? If confirmed, what would be your approach in using those tools?

Answer. Driven by a combination of corrupt interest and political expediency, Ghana's adherence to contractual commitments has been inadequate and is concerning for U.S. and other foreign companies. If confirmed, I utilize all available tools and programs, including visa restrictions, to support Ghanaian efforts to combat corruption. I will work to strengthen Ghana's accountability institutions, including the Office of the Special Prosecutor.

Question. How can the United States best support Ghana in curbing the corrupt behavior of those companies and government officials of malign foreign actors like China that feed on corrupt governments and business environments?

Answer. Improving anti-corruption institutions, laws and regulations and their implementation is critical to improving Ghana's business environment, achieving Ghana's development goals and curbing the corrupt behavior of malign actors. If confirmed, I will push back on corrupt or coercive practices that damage our interests and those of our Ghanaian partners, including impingement on state sovereignty, economic coercion, and the abusive use of new security technologies.

Question. How is the United States working with Ghana's Government to curb efforts by malign foreign actors seeking to use their country as a hub for propagating disinformation campaigns in the U.S. and other countries? As Ambassador, how will you prioritize this issue with the Ghanaian Government?

Answer. If confirmed, I will prioritize this issue with the Ghanaian Government by supporting a central part of this effort: exposing malign foreign actors' tactics so that partner and allied governments, civil society organizations, academia, the press, and the international public can conduct further analysis of their own and thereby increase collective resilience to disinformation and propaganda.

Question. How should the United States build on its existing defense and security cooperation with Ghana? Where are the opportunities and the risks?

Answer. The United States should build on its existing defense and security cooperation to help Ghana and its neighbors counter violent extremism, combat transnational crime and strengthen the rule of law. These efforts are most effect when our security and law enforcement cooperation, inclusive economic growth and the rule of law (including anti-corruption) efforts are integrated. Ghana's military is known for its professionalism and is critical to our ability to counter global threats in the sub-region. Fortifying this cooperation poses significant opportunities and few risks.

Question. The instability in the Sahel is now bleeding over into the Littoral states in the Gulf of Guinea. Because of this concern, these coastal countries, led by Ghana, have established the Accra Initiative to build capacity and support a more integrated approach to intelligence gathering and crisis response. Does the U.S. plan to support the Initiative with technical and material assistance. Is it considering bilateral assistance to Ghana to establish the Secretariat?

Answer. The United States has provided bilateral assistance to Ghana to support the Accra Initiative since September 2020 through Trans-Sahara Counterterrorism Partnership (TSCTP). Those efforts help prevent further spread of violence in West Africa. If confirmed, I will engage relevant stakeholders to explore ways the United States can support Ghana and the Accra Initiative address this threat.

Question. Would Ghana be a strong candidate for a bilateral free trade agreement with the United States? If not, why not? If so, why?

Answer. Yes. Bilateral trade exceeded $1.5 billion in 2020 and with the U.S. recording a trade surplus of $112 million.

In addition, Ghana hosts the secretariat of the African Continental Free Trade Area (AfCFTA), which will modernize and streamline the continent's overall trade and economic systems and create a trading block of 1.3 billion people, creating opportunities for greater commercial ties between the United States and all of Africa.

Question. What is your view on the role of the U.S. Prosper Africa initiative in driving increased trade and investment between the U.S. and Ghana? Do you believe the U.S. should focus more of its efforts vis-a-vis Prosper Africa toward large African U.S. economic partners like Ghana?

Answer. The U.S. Prosper Africa Initiative drives increased trade and investment between the United States and Ghana by bringing together services and resources from across the U.S. Government to empower businesses with market insights, deal support, and solutions to strengthen business climates. Prosper Africa will advance opportunities to build new markets for American products, drive billions of dollars of investment in Africa, and support thousands of new jobs for both African and American workers.

China and the Indo-Pacific

Question. China is keen to secure the affections of Africa's next generation of leaders. The Chinese Government claimed in 2019 that Ghana had the highest number of African students studying in China. How do you view such educational exchanges and opportunities playing in projecting "soft power"?

Answer. African countries are our partners in pursuing our shared interests—from security, global health, climate change, democracy, and economic growth. African publics continue to prefer the United States to the PRC, and democratic values to authoritarianism. If confirmed, I will capitalize on this soft power—engaging with youth, promoting exchanges and study in the United States, and promoting American business.

Question. Do you agree or disagree that an increased proportion of Ghanaians attending U.S. colleges and universities would more closely tie the current and future relationship of the country to the U.S.?

Answer. I agree that an increased proportion of Ghanaians attending U.S. colleges and universities would more closely tie the current and future relationship of the country to the United States.

Question. If you agree, what can and should the U.S. do to boost opportunities for Ghanaians to study in the U.S.?

Answer. With a population of 1.3 billion people whose median age is 19 years old, African youth are one of the continent's most important resources. Expanding existing links and promoting new partnerships at the university level will strengthen Ghana's educational institutions as instruments of national development—enhancing regional prosperity, security, and stability. Such cooperation also promotes the U.S. value of academic freedom, which is under increasing threat across the world as global competitors expand their own educational programs targeting the continent's scholars and students. If confirmed, I commit to promoting this important American export and to strengthening academic ties between the U.S and Ghana.

Question. China is one of, if not Ghana's biggest, trading partner and foreign investment source. While the United States enjoys long-standing and consistently strong relations with Ghana, the country is a leading African buyer of U.S. goods, and there is typically a large U.S. trade surplus with Ghana. Despite this, the U.S. trade and investment relationship lags in comparison to the country's bilateral trade and investment relationship with China. What should the United States prioritize to improve its bilateral trade and investment relationship generally with Ghana, and in what ways can the U.S. improve American businesses interest and competitiveness to drive greater U.S. investment in Ghana?

Answer. If confirmed, the Embassy team and I will meet the challenge the PRC presents by ensuring that American companies can compete on an even playing field, providing a meaningful alternative to the PRC's economic approach, and promoting entrepreneurship, and fair practices. I will be a vigorous advocate for American companies and innovation and will ensure U.S. public and private investments continue to support pandemic recovery efforts and Ghana's journey to self-reliance. If confirmed, I will continue to help Ghana create an enabling environment for inclusive private sector-led growth by facilitating regional trade, improving access to credit, improving agricultural production and market access, enhancing domestic resource mobilization, and improving health and education outcomes.

Question. In November 2020, I published a Senate Foreign Relations Committee majority report entitled "The United States and Europe: A Concrete Agenda for Transatlantic Cooperation on China." The report gave several recommendations on increased transatlantic cooperation, including in Africa, to counter Chinese malign influence more effectively. In what ways should the United States partner with European countries to build on likeminded interests in Ghana and counter the malign influence of China?

Answer. The United States should partner with likeminded countries to counter negative actions and influence of the PRC by calling out and confronting nondemocratic behavior and insisting that all economic actors on the continent adhere to the highest standards of transparency, anti-corruption, debt sustainability, environmental protection, and respect human rights, including labor rights. In addition, Ghana recently expressed an interest in establishing a partnership with NATO. If confirmed, I will encourage Ghana and our NATO allies to advance this partnership, which provides security benefits for NATO and Ghana.

State Department Management and Oversight

Question. Many U.S. missions have been under enormous stress over the last few years, in large part due to COVID. What is your understanding of morale throughout Mission Ghana?

Answer. My understanding is that morale throughout the Mission is strong, motivated by staff's commitment to the important mission of bolstering regional security and countering violent extremism, promoting inclusive economic growth and improving health outcomes. However, staff, particularly Locally Employed (LE) Staff whose families have not been vaccinated, remain very concerned about the risks associated with Ghana's very low vaccination rates and concerned about a full return to in-office work. COVID-19-related travel restrictions limiting opportunities for rest and recuperation and even regional change of scene also have a negative effect on morale.

Question. How do you intend to improve morale at Mission Ghana?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with the Ghanaian Government to increase vaccination levels of the Ghanaian public. This will both help us achieve our broader public health goals and allow us to increase in person diplomacy since "diplomacy is a contact sport." I will work to fill vacancies in a timely manner, recruiting diverse staff and ensuring they enjoy opportunities to do fulfilling work and provide policy input. I will also work hard to ensure that Locally Employed Staff salaries (currently negatively affected by rising inflation) remain competitive.

Question. How do you intend to create a unified mission and vision at Mission Ghana?

Answer. In general, the best way to create a unified mission is to communicate broadly about what our goals are and successes and lessons learned as we work toward them. That is even more important with COVID-19-induced teleworking inhibiting in person meetings where brainstorming and spontaneous exchanges of information are more free flowing. If confirmed, I will also rely heavily on "thematic" working groups, such as the Law Enforcement Working Group and the Countering Violent Extremism Working Group. These working groups will include law enforcement and security agencies as well as USAID, DoD, and the Embassy Deal Teams, to create synergies and ensure all elements of U.S. national power are used to advance U.S. interests in Ghana and the region.

Question. Management is a key responsibility for chiefs of mission. How would you describe your management style?

Answer. I am direct and decisive. I welcome collaboration and demand information sharing and respect for others. I am fast and not particularly linear. I believe diplomacy is personal and that my contacts need to believe that I am a credible interlocutor, honest, forthright, and, where possible, helpful.

Question. Do you believe it is ever acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either in public or private?

Answer. It is never acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either in public or private.

Question. What lessons have you learned from your tenure leading Embassy Lilongwe?

Answer. I came to have a stronger belief that our development assistance programs are more effective when they are integrated. For example, production enhancements have little effect if they are not accompanied by improved market access (i.e., it does not help me to produce more tomatoes if I cannot get them to market) and assistance aimed to improve the health and education outcomes of girls and young women pays huge dividends in achieving all our other development goals. I am pleased that Ghana's Integrated Country Development Strategy integrates the Mission's security, inclusive economic growth and rule of law programs.

When Malawi was slow to implement much needed reform of the agriculture sector despite looming famine, I learned that "we cannot want it (reform, good programs, etc.) more than they do;" policy change and development and other programs will be more effective when there is strong local/indigenous demand for them.

I learned very positive lessons about how good, bold ideas can come from unexpected agencies/personnel. For example, our $90 million project to keep girls in school and break the cycle of HIV transmission from older men to younger girls to boys arose from Peace Corps at an Embassy Adolescent Girls and Young Women Task Force meeting.

Question. How will your management style and approach differ from Embassy Lilongwe?

Answer. With Ghana serving as host to the African Continental Free Trade Agreement Secretariat, Chair of ECOWAS, and member of the U.N. Security Council, if confirmed, I will focus more attention on regional and international issues than I did in Lilongwe.

I will continue to rely on interagency working groups for policy development and operational coordination. Embassy Accra's Country Team is larger and more senior than Lilongwe's. I hope that agency and section heads will have more experience establishing and maintaining accountability measures; I will nonetheless remain attentive to these issues.

Question. How do you envision your leadership relationship with deputy chief of mission?

Answer. I have served twice as Deputy Chief of Mission (DCM) and know that there is no more important relationship in the Mission. If confirmed, my DCM will be my alter ego. Through regular meetings, scheduled and ad hoc, I will ensure that we are in sync and that the DCM has full input into policy formulation and decision making. Where possible we will divide responsibilities, ensuring that important conclusions or insights from meetings are always shared.

Question. If confirmed, what leadership responsibilities do you intend to entrust to your deputy chief of mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ask the DCM to chair the Emergency Action Committee, Law Enforcement Working Group, and other Interagency Working Groups as required, participating myself when requested/required. I will ensure that the entire Mission understands that the DCM enjoys my full faith and confidence and speaks for me, but that my door is always open if there are issues they do not feel comfortable raising with him/her.

Question. In order to create and continue employee excellence at the Department, accurate and direct employee evaluation reports (EERs) for Foreign Service Officers are imperative, though often lacking. Do you believe that it is important to provide employees with accurate, constructive feedback on their performances in order to encourage improvement and reward those who most succeeded in their roles?

Answer. I believe it is important to provide employees with timely, accurate, constructive feedback on their performance to encourage improvement and reward those who most succeed in their roles.

Question. If confirmed, would you support and encourage clear, accurate, and direct feedback to employees in order to improve performance and reward high achievers?

Answer. If confirmed, I would support and encourage clear, accurate, and direct feedback to employees in to improve performance and reward high achievers.

Question. It is imperative that U.S. diplomats get outside of posts abroad to meet with local actors, including host government officials, non-government organizations, and fellow foreign diplomats stationed in Ghana. In your experience, do U.S. diplomats get outside of our embassy walls enough to accomplish fully their missions?

Answer. I agree that it is essential for diplomats to get outside of the Embassy to meet with host country officials, thought leaders and the public as well as diplomatic counterparts. This is an essential part of representing the United States and ensuring proper "branding" of our programs, initiatives, and companies. This is even more challenging with COVID-induced telework requirements, but in my experience, U.S. diplomats get outside of the embassy walls enough to fully accomplish their mission.

Question. How do you intend to improve the ability of U.S. diplomats to better access all local populations?

Answer. If confirmed, I will utilize all available public diplomacy tools for in-person, virtual and media engagement. I will encourage in-country travel and representation outside of the capital. I would be remiss if I did not note the importance of local staff in shaping and articulating our mission and programs and their important role as interface between American diplomats and local communities.

Question. Public diplomacy is an important aspect of U.S. foreign policy efforts. What is the public diplomacy environment like in Ghana?

Answer. Ghana enjoys a vibrant and free media, with over 350 radio stations, more than 120 television operators on air, and approximately 250 newspaper and magazine publications, plus active and growing internet use and social media presence. Freedom of speech and expression, freedom of assembly and other fundamental freedoms are enshrined in Ghana's constitution. Although there are some reports of violence and threats of violence, or unjustified arrests or prosecution against journalists, they are generally free to be critical of the Government without fear of reprisal. Ghanaians generally have a positive impression of the United States.

Question. What public diplomacy challenges do U.S. diplomats face there?

Answer. U.S. diplomats face limited public diplomacy challenges in Ghana. Public Diplomacy exchange programs, like the Mandela Washington Fellowship and Fulbright exchanges are enormously popular and help to create a robust alumni network across the country in various areas of interest.

Question. How do you balance the importance of Main State versus the in-country mission when it comes to tailoring public diplomacy messages for foreign audiences?

Answer. Post has latitude to tailor our public messaging to local issues and concerns. If confirmed, I will ensure that our public diplomacy posture continues to play a key role in promoting our many shared values and America's generous financial assistance and support across the range of issues.

Human Rights

Question. In the 2021 Trafficking in Persons Report, Ghana was identified as Tier 2 due to lack of adequate resourcing for law enforcement as well as a lack of prosecutions of traffickers. How will you work with Ghana authorities to address these issues if you are confirmed as Ambassador?

Answer. Ghana has maintained a Tier 2 ranking in the Trafficking in Persons Report since in 2018, indicating significant efforts to combat trafficking. Trafficking within the country is more prevalent than transnational trafficking, and the majority of victims are children subjected to forced labor. Children can fall prey to economic hardships in Ghana, and some are subjected to forced child labor within Ghana in the fishing, cocoa, artisanal gold mining, and agriculture sectors as well as in domestic service, street hawking, begging, potting, and quarrying. Ghanaian girls, and to a lesser extent boys, are also subjected to sex trafficking within Ghana, including in the Central, Volta, and Greater Accra regions.

If confirmed, I will encourage the Government to increase its resources to better train and equip the police force to investigate trafficking cases. I will also encourage the Government to provide appropriate shelters for trafficking victims. I will encourage assistance be provided to organizations working on the front lines to combat human trafficking.

Question. In the 2020 International Religious Freedom report, Ghana is described as having religious freedom enshrined in the constitution but does lack general understanding of respective religions in civil society. What is your assessment of this particular issue and if confirmed, how will you work with the Ambassador At Large to bolster religious freedom in-country?

Answer. Religious freedom is a U.S. foreign policy priority, and the Department continues to closely monitor the religious freedom situation in Ghana. Religious freedom and interfaith communication are among Ghana's greatest strengths. Muslim and Christian leaders emphasize the importance of religious freedom and tolerance and report communication and coordination among themselves as well as with those from smaller minority faiths on a wide array of matters. If confirmed, I commit to work with the Ambassador at Large for International Religious Freedom and Congress to emphasize the importance of religious freedom, addressing any religious freedom concerns, and further strengthen tolerance and respect among and for religious communities in Ghana.

Question. In the 2020 Human Rights Report, Ghana was identified as having serious human rights concerns, including arbitrary or unlawful killings by the Government, cruel treatment or punishment by the Government, corruption, the worst forms of child labor, and more. If confirmed, what steps will you take to address these instances with the host government?

Answer. The Ghanaian Government generally respects human rights. Continuing problems include reports of arbitrary or unlawful killings by the Government or its agents; harsh and life-threatening prison conditions; arbitrary arrest or detention; serious problems with the independence of the judiciary; violence and threats of violence, or unjustified arrests or prosecutions, against journalists; serious acts of corruption; violence against women; and existence of the worst forms of child labor. Although the Ghanaian Government has taken steps to prosecute and punish officials who commit human rights violations or abuses, whether in the security forces or elsewhere in the Government, impunity remains a problem. If confirmed, I will encourage the Ghanaian Government to address impunity and hold accountable those responsible for human rights violations and abuses.

Question. How will you direct your embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground?

Answer. Ghana's Constitution provides for freedom of speech and expression and freedom of assembly for all Ghanaians, not just to certain groups. These freedoms are foundational to our two democracies and must be vigorously defended. If confirmed, I will direct the Embassy team to work closely with our like-minded partners and allies in civil society to ensure these rights are respected for all Ghanaians; support PEPFAR's anti-stigma and anti-discrimination support to members of the LGBTQI+ community and people living with HIV; and stand up against injustice toward women and girls, LGBTQI+ individuals, members of religious minority groups, and people of all races and ethnicities.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. VIRGINIA E. PALMER BY SENATOR MIKE ROUNDS

Question. Gaddafi was deposed in Libya in October 2011. Tens of thousands of Malians who had been working in Libya for a better living returned home. Many of these ethnic Tuaregs (TWAHH-regs) had even served in Gaddafi's military and returned to Mali with guns and artillery. Shortly thereafter, in January 2012, Tuareg rebels destabilized Mali, which paved the way for violent extremist groups to gain a foothold. Since then, the march of violent extremism has continued southward, destabilizing Burkina Faso and now threatening Ghana, Côte d'Ivoire, Togo and Benin. What effect, if any, did Libya's destabilization have on security in sub-Saharan Africa? Also, given this worrying trend, how can we strengthen our partnership with Ghana to counter violent extremism and terrorism in the region?

Answer. Smuggled arms looted from Gaddafi's armories have impacted security in sub-Saharan Africa. The region's porous borders and the vast ungoverned regions of the Sahel have always complicated monitoring the movement of people and goods, including armaments from Libya, that have constituted the economy of the Sahel for hundreds of years.

Ghana is well-respected for its proactive involvement and positive leadership in security issues throughout West Africa. Ghana is also internationally recognized for its commitment to advancing peace on the continent, and around the world, through participation in U.N. and AU peacekeeping missions. Ghana ranks among the top dozen countries worldwide for its contributions to peacekeeping operations with missions in South Sudan, Lebanon, and Mali. If confirmed, I will support Ghana's regional leadership role and will strengthen our partnership with Ghana to counter violent extremism by continuing integrated U.S. programs on inclusive economic development, rule of law strengthening, and security and law enforcement cooperation.

Question. Many of Africa's biggest challenges—trade, migration, violent extremism—are transnational in nature. However, embassies are understandably focused on bilateral relations. Do you think a regional focus on Western Africa might be effective and what might you do as ambassador to develop a more regional view?

Answer. Yes. A too narrow focus on bilateral issues allows our adversaries to exploit seams in policy and along national boundaries. For example, if customs and border security are improved and anti-corruption measures enforced on one side of a border but not another, terrorists and criminals will still be able to take advantage of weak borders to move materiel and personnel. If confirmed, I will work to support the Trans-Sahara Counter Terrorism Partnership and the Accra Initiative, a Ghanaian-led effort to strengthen the capabilities of Benin, Burkina Faso, Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana and Togo to combat violent extremism. These efforts will require close coordination with my fellow Ambassadors in the region, AFRICOM, the U.S. Coast Guard, U.S. agencies in Washington, and Congress. It is also important that these regional efforts integrate security sector support (maritime and border security, military, and law enforcement cooperation) and programs to strengthen the rule of law and combat corruption, improve cyber security, and spur inclusive economic growth.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO HOWARD A. VAN VRANKEN BY SENATOR ROBERT MENEDEZ

Question. Despite Botswana's solid democratic reputation, some observers have suggested that press freedom has declined in recent years, pointing to the draconian media regulations, self-censorship by journalists, and the disturbing use of Cellebrite technology to unlock a journalist's phone to access their sources.

- Do you agree that Botswana has experienced a decline in freedom of the press? What will you do, if confirmed, to pressure the Government of Botswana to roll back its restrictions on press freedom?

Answer. Botswana's constitution and laws provide for freedom of expression. Media contacts reported 10 years of self-censorship and dwindling advertising revenues under former President Khama. Upon taking office in 2018, President Masisi initially demonstrated a welcoming approach to the media and press freedom. However, this has largely stalled and the promised Freedom of Information bill has not yet materialized. State-owned media generally feature uncritical reporting on the Government and are sometimes susceptible to political interference. Opposition political parties claim that state media coverage heavily favors the ruling party.

If confirmed, I will continue the U.S. Embassy work to support media professionalization through exchanges, trainings, and other initiatives, such as assisting the Office of the Presidency to set up a Presidential Press Office. Helping the Government of Botswana create a press office which is proactive, responsive, and a source for useful and credible information for the press and the public directly supports our Mission Goal 1: Botswana has institutions, policies, and practices which respond to the needs and improve equitably the lives of its inhabitants by addressing the need to strengthen institutions to promote accountable, transparent, and democratic governance.

Question. If confirmed as Ambassador to Botswana, you would also represent the United States at the Southern African Development Community. Southern Africa faces myriad challenges to the stability of the sub-region, including the insurgency in Mozambique.

- Do you believe that SADC is an effective organization to promote security, democracy, and prosperity in Southern Africa? Would deeper engagement with SADC advance U.S. interests?

Answer. SADC's goals of promoting regional cooperation and integration, economic growth, socio-economic development, and durable peace and security among its member states have never been more important. SADC has achieved notable successes promoting regional peace and security and economic development for the betterment of the SADC region's most important resource—its people. SADC's enduring support helped Lesotho negotiate vital government reforms and undertake a peaceful transition of political power, and in Mozambique the organization's deployment of a Standby Force is helping combat the ISIS-linked terrorist threat. SADC continues to promote regional peace and security as demonstrated by its positive role in helping Zambia and the Democratic Republic of Congo resolve a longstanding border disagreement. And through its Southern African Power Pool, SADC is mobilizing resources to address energy shortages that threaten regional development and economic integration.

If confirmed, I will seek to deepen our engagement with SADC, including by advocating for the organization to play a proactive role in promoting good governance, respect for human rights, and democratic values, and in holding its members accountable when they fall short. By insisting that all its members respect human rights and the rule of law, SADC can send a powerful message that it intends to be a force for positive change for all citizens across southern Africa.

Question. What are the major barriers to improving conditions and protections for women, sexual minorities, and indigenous people in Botswana? What will you do to promote equality for groups that face discrimination if confirmed?

Answer. Botswana generally has a good human rights record and laws have been enacted to protect vulnerable populations. However, some problems remain. I am concerned about societal problems that threaten respect for human rights including high rates of gender-based violence; discrimination against women and children, persons with disabilities, persons with HIV/AIDS, lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex persons; and trafficking in persons.

There are also growing concerns among Botswana's public that COVID-19 related movement restrictions and the Government's stated need to take on extra-legislative responsibilities as a response could impinge on some of their human rights, such as the freedom of peaceful assembly. If confirmed, I will continue to work closely with the Government of Botswana and civil society organizations to address these concerns and promote equality for all. If confirmed, I will encourage them to focus their attention on the most pressing human rights concerns in Botswana and will look for synergistic opportunities to cooperate with these groups to advocate for reform, accountability, and respect for human rights.

Democracy & Human Rights

Question. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. While serving in Iraq in 2008-2009, I worked directly with local government leaders and NGOs to build democratic processes and to strengthen civil society organizations in support of representative and responsive local government. Working through implementing partners, we facilitated training for local leaders, established a free and independent radio station, and identified local youth leaders to participate in national training programs. Our goal, in part, was to decentralize decision-making and implementation authority from the central and provincial governments to empower and hold accountable leaders at the local government level for activities which directly impacted their constituents.

During my second tour in Iraq in 2011-2012, I spearheaded our efforts to resettle exiled Iranian nationals from Iraq to third countries. Those individuals, who were wanted by the Iranian Government, were under direct threat because of their perceived political affiliation. Together with others in the U.S. Government and UNHCR, we worked to safeguard the individuals' human rights and to promote the protection of refugees and the rule of law. In part as a result of my work, dozens of individuals were relocated legally to the safety of third countries.

Question. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Botswana? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. Botswana has a long track record as one of Africa's enduring democracies. The people of Botswana are justifiably proud of this democratic track record. However, there remain issues to address. Concerns detailed in the 2020 Human Rights Report include undue restrictions on freedom of expression, the press, and the internet, including the existence of criminal slander and libel laws; interference with freedom of association; acts of corruption; and the existence of the worst forms of child labor, including the commercial sexual exploitation of children and forced labor.

Question. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Botswana? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to partner with governmental and non-governmental organizations in Botswana, where we are involved in political party strengthening and a number of democracy building activities, including youth outreach, promoting women's participation in the political process, supporting the development of women candidates for public office, and advocacy for independent parliamentary debates.

Botswana's Parliament has only seven women members; three were elected in 2019, and the remainder appointed to specially elected seats by President Masisi. Gender based violence (GBV) also remains a major problem. Government figures from 2018 indicate that 37 percent of women in Botswana experience some form of GBV during their lives. This trend was exacerbated by lengthy COVID-19 lockdowns in 2020. The Government embarked on an anti-GBV campaign in late 2020, which included public awareness, dedicated GBV courts, and new operating procedures for police handling GBV cases and victims. If confirmed, I will continue to work with the Government of Botswana and civil society to combat this serious social scourge.

Question. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. The U.S. Embassy has focused on improving the participation of women in politics and political life through public awareness campaigns, bilateral engagement with the political parties and government leadership, and a $250,000 African Regional Democracy Fund grant to provide political training to women interest in politics. We also supported women and youth through a series of COVID-19 relief grants offering youth training and entrepreneurial skills development through mask making clinics, and through a grant to a women's GBV clinic to create an automated 24-hour help hotline via WhatsApp.

USAID's Democracy and Governance programming strengthens the capacity of governmental institutions, civil society groups, and regional organizations to promote democratic practices. This work is accomplished by better linking political parties to their constituents and develop platforms based on citizen needs; fostering land rights for indigenous populations; and promoting gender-equality and human rights. USAID is also assisting workers and communities impacted by mining to understand and assert their rights. If confirmed, I will continue to support this important work through USAID and other U.S. Mission programs and initiatives.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Botswana? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. The promotion of respect for human rights is a central pillar in our relations with Botswana. If confirmed, I will continue and strengthen the relationships built by the U.S. Government and our partners with Botswana, U.S., and international civil society members working in this space. I will also engage with labor unions and workers. I will continue to advance opportunities to strengthen the capacity of civil society organizations and amplify their voices, encourage the Government to collaborate with these organizations for the betterment of Botswana, and ensure that we coordinate our efforts with diplomatic and international missions.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to continue to strengthen the relationships our U.S. Mission has built with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties. I will strive to support the efforts of these figures and parties to develop a more inclusive political environment throughout Botswana. If confirmed, I will advocate for the freedoms of association and peaceful assembly for all political actors, even those who do not agree with the Government. If confirmed, I will advocate through public statements, targeted small grants and other programming, and direct engagement with a diverse spectrum of Botswana leaders and community members for a political environment that is inclusive of women, youth, minorities, and Botswana who might otherwise be marginalized.

Question. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Botswana on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Botswana?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage with media practitioners, like-minded missions, civil society, government, and international partners to underscore the importance of an independent, professional, and open media to a free and democratic society. If confirmed, I will seek resources to continue support to both Botswana's private and state-run media, including professional exchanges, targeted training programs, and seminars to educate journalists and media stakeholders about their rights. Botswana journalists have consistently participated in U.S. Government-sponsored professional exchange programs on investigative reporting, safeguarding freedom of expression, and the media's role in strengthening democratic institutions, and I will continue to prioritize these exchanges and training opportunities.

Question. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and malign propaganda by foreign state and non-state actors. If confirmed, I also commit to working with like-minded partners in Botswana to counter disinformation and malign propaganda campaigns.

Question. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Botswana on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. The United States has a long and strong tradition of supporting the rights of workers to exercise freedom of association, including to form and join independent trade unions. If confirmed, I will commit to engage with unions, relevant government offices, and the private sector to support labor rights. If confirmed, I will mobilize U.S. Government policies, programs and trade agreements to empower workers in all sectors to organize, successfully bargain with their employers, and improve working conditions.

Question. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Botswana, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity?

Answer. Protecting human rights and democracy is a priority for the U.S. Mission in Botswana. If confirmed, I will strive to defend the human rights and dignity of all persons in Botswana, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity.

Question. What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer (LGBTQ) people face in Botswana?

Answer. Botswana is a generally tolerant country, and there are no recent reports of attacks against the LGBTQI+ community by authorities. However, there were reported societal incidents of violence, societal harassment, and discrimination. Lingering societal problems can threaten respect for human rights, including the rights of lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex persons, and increase vulnerabilities faced by these populations. Botswana's legal statutes are mixed on the issue. The High Court struck down penal code section 164 criminalizing consensual same-sex activity in 2019; the Botswana Court of Appeal has set a date for the appeal on October 12, 2021. If confirmed, I will strive to defend the human rights and dignity of all persons in Botswana, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity.

Question. What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTQ people in Botswana?

Answer. Protecting human rights and democracy is a priority for our mission in Botswana. The U.S. Mission has strong ties with LGBTQI+ civil society groups and relies on the 2019 landmark legal case to deepen social acceptance of LGBTQI+ persons in Botswana. If confirmed, I will continue these efforts with the goal that Botswana can become a model for other nations in Africa and show that decriminalization is possible.

Congressional Consultations

Question. Will you commit, if confirmed, to ensuring that you fully brief members of Congress and/or their staff each time you are in Washington for visits or consultations during your tenure as Botswana?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit, in coordination with the State Department's Bureau of Legislative Affairs, to respond promptly to all appropriate requests for briefings and for information by this committee.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HOWARD A. VAN VRANKEN BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. Botswana is one of four Sub-Saharan African countries identified as "free" in Freedom House's Freedom in the World 2021 report. The State Department characterizes Botswana as "an excellent democratic partner." Underlying a democratic system that has produced democratic elections, strong tolerance of the political opposition, and effective governance practices, is one that also often undermines democratic pluralism—one that ensures the ruling party remains firmly in power.

- What is your assessment of the resilience of Botswana's democracy?

Answer. Botswana has a long track record as one of Africa's most successful and enduring democracies. Botswana is a constitutional, multiparty, republican democracy. Its constitution provides for the indirect election of a president and the popular election of a National Assembly. If confirmed, I will promote democratic values and seek to strengthen democratic institutions.

Question. Are there any areas where you, as U.S. Ambassador if confirmed, will engage Botswana on issues related to freedom and democracy?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to work closely in partnership with government and non-governmental organizations in Botswana on U.S. Government initiatives. These include political party strengthening and a number of democracy building activities, including youth outreach, promoting women's participation in the political process, supporting the development of women candidates for public office, and advocacy for independent parliamentary debates.

Question. In Botswana's 2019 parliamentary elections, the ruling Botswana Democratic Party (BDP) received 406,561 votes (52.65 percent of total votes). What role does Botswana's first-past-the-post electoral system play in limiting power sharing with a growing proportion of votes by the political opposition in the country? What reforms does Botswana's electoral system need to ensure greater equity among the country's main political parties and actors?

Answer. Botswana's Parliamentary system of elections is like those used in many countries across the world. However, critics in countries where first-past-the-post voting is applied, including in Botswana, argue that this system is unfair to smaller political parties and groups that are underrepresented in the political process, such as women and ethnic minorities. Opposition parties argue that this system gives the ruling party a voting majority in parliament which enables it to implement its own policy objectives even if they do not have popular support. Botswana plans a constitutional reform process in the near future. If confirmed, I would work with all stakeholders on ways to advocate this process encompasses a broad set of issues, including the electoral system.

Following the 2019 elections, international observer missions made several recommendations for improvement of electoral processes, including related to funding of political parties, representation of women and youth in political parties, standardization of polling station procedures, improving registration and voter education procedures, among other legal and procedures reforms. Enacting such reforms will ensure that elections in Botswana produce results that enjoy broad support, including through representation of opposition and equity among political parties. If confirmed, I will seek to engage the Government and political parties on these issues in advance of the next elections.

Question. What is your view on a democratic system like Botswana that has never undergone a partisan transition of power and has seen an unbroken parliamentary majority by the same ruling party and control over the executive since independence?

Answer. Botswana's electoral system provides opportunities for changes in political power. In recent elections, opposition parties have made inroads in increasing parliamentary representation, particularly in 2014. However, factors such as opposition party cohesiveness, political financing, and incumbency have all helped the Botswana Democratic Party maintain its majority. If confirmed, I would continue our work with all stakeholders in ensuring that Botswana's political system remains fair and transparent.

If confirmed, I will promote democratic values and seek to strengthen democratic institutions, including through electoral processes that have credibility and integrity in representing the will of the people of Botswana.

Question. Do you believe the United States should support robust democracy and governance assistance programs in comparatively stronger African democracies like Botswana? If so, what should be the strategic focus for these efforts?

Answer. Botswana has been a strong proponent of democracy and respect for human rights within Africa. If confirmed, I will earnestly work to continue U.S. Embassy programming that strengthens the capacity of governmental institutions, civil society groups, and regional organizations to promote democratic practices.

Question. Do you believe it is the sign of a healthy democracy when a duly elected government, in consultation with its citizens, extends the term of office of the presidency even if that means it would extend the term of the current President in power? If confirmed, how would you respond to Botswana doing something like this?

Answer. Botswana's strong democratic tradition includes term-limits that are respected by presidents, the political parties, and the electorate. I expect this respect for constitutional limits will continue. If confirmed, I will promote democratic values and seek to strengthen democratic institutions.

Question. Can you provide your view on supporting U.S. funded, independent international election observation missions? Would you support such a mission for Botswana's next general election?

Answer. The U.S. Government supports efforts to ensure transparency in elections in all nations. Botswana's elections are regularly observed by external teams from the Southern African Development Community (SADC) and the African Union. Bot-swana welcomes and supports these missions and would likely be amenable to additional electoral observation if the conditions warrant such a mission.

Question. In the area of conservation, Botswana is a critical partner. The Okavango River Delta in northwest Botswana is one of the world's largest inland river deltas, and serves as a critical source of biodiversity and home to Africa's largest remaining elephant population. However in Botswana, as in other countries across the continent, wildlife trafficking and human animal conflict are persistent challenges that have become more acute during the COVID pandemic.

- As U.S. Ambassador to Botswana, if confirmed, how will you engage with our Botswanan partners on issues related to conservation?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work earnestly to continue the U.S. Government engagement with the Government of Botswana and civil society to protect the country's valuable natural resources, including its wildlife and endangered ecosystems, such as the Okavango Delta, inscribed on UNESCO's list of World Heritage Sites (WHS) in 2014.

Question. How will you as U.S. Ambassador engage the Government of Botswana to ensure the country's elephant population is ethically controlled and the Government follows adequate measures to ensure long-term conservation of their native elephant population?

Answer. Sustainable management of Botswana's natural resources, including the Okavango Delta and the country's wildlife, is not only a critical conservation goal, but also vital for Botswana's long-term economic health. Tourism, primarily ecotourism, accounted for 10 percent of Botswana's GDP and 10 percent of its total employment pre-pandemic.

If confirmed, I will encourage community-based natural resource management efforts that can make an important contribution to conservation and growth of the tourism sector, as well as to rural development and poverty eradication. If confirmed, I will work with U.S. agencies to promote best practices on wildlife conservation and management, including for Botswana's elephant population.

Question. What more should the Government of Botswana do to curb poaching and wildlife trafficking? How can the United States build on existing efforts to support Botswana in its fight against both poaching and trafficking of wildlife? What more can the United States do to help enforce existing national and international anti-wildlife trafficking laws in Botswana?

Answer. Botswana is committed to wildlife protection, and we appreciate the Government of Botswana's ongoing efforts on this issue. If confirmed, I pledge to continue supporting important wildlife trafficking assistance to Botswana, including training and building capacity in law enforcement personnel, both in country and regionally.

Trends across the continent indicate better organized, more lethal, and sophisticated poaching and wildlife trafficking criminal organizations. Botswana considers these organizations a national security threat. If I am confirmed, I will commit to working with my government counterparts to deter and dismantle these criminal organizations in Botswana.

Question. What additional tools can the U.S. draw on to provide support to Botswana in both preserving biodiversity and improving livelihoods for the Botswanan people

Answer. Botswana has unique biodiversity and remains highly vulnerable to climate change, especially with regard to access to water for drinking, irrigation, and climate change's effects on complex biospheres such as the Okavango Delta. If confirmed, I will continue to engage with our partners including government, commercial, and civil society groups in support of the conservation goals of the DELTA Act.

Question. What opportunities exist for the United States to build on its defense cooperation with Botswana?

Answer. There are opportunities to strengthen our already robust defense partnerships through the International Military Education and Training (IMET) and the National Guard State Partnership Program. There are opportunities for PEPFAR and the Department of Defense HIV/AIDS Prevention Program (DHAPP) to implement HIV prevention programs to combat HIV/AIDS within the defense forces. Botswana would also welcome participation in additional regional military exercises.

Question. In the 2021 Trafficking in Persons Report, Botswana was identified as Tier 2 due to a "lack of formal procedures to identify and refer victims to care and devoted substantially less funding for victim care than in the previous reporting period.” How will you work with the Government or appropriate entities to address these issues if you are confirmed as Ambassador?

Answer. The Government of Botswana does not fully meet the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking; however, it is making efforts to do so. Botswana remained a Tier 2 country in the 2021 TIP Report and has publicly reiterated its commitment to reaching Tier 1. In the 2021 reporting period, the Government of Botswana referred all identified victims to NGOs, funded and implemented the anti-trafficking national action plan, and provided additional services to victims who participated in trials against their traffickers. However, the Government did not convict any traffickers and identified significantly fewer victims than in the 2020 reporting period.

If confirmed, I will encourage the Government of Botswana to create and institutionalize procedures to identify trafficking victims and train stakeholders on such procedures, increase funding for NGOs to which the Government refers trafficking victims for shelter and services, and significantly increase efforts to investigate, prosecute, and convict traffickers through continued engagement with the Government, civil society, and international partners.

Question. In the 2020 International Religious Freedom report, Botswana was identified as tolerant of religious freedom. What is your assessment of this particular issue and if confirmed, how will you work with the Ambassador At Large to continue to bolster religious freedom in-country?

Answer. Religious freedom is a U.S. foreign policy priority, and the Department continues to closely monitor religious freedom in Botswana. As noted, Botswana provides for freedom of thought and religion, with certain exceptions, protects against governmental discrimination, and has a high degree of religious tolerance and robust interfaith relations. If confirmed, I commit to work with the Ambassador at Large for International Religious Freedom and Congress to emphasize the importance of religious freedom, addressing any religious freedom concerns, and further strengthening tolerance and respect among and for religious communities in Botswana.

Question. In the 2020 Human Rights Report, Botswana was identified as having serious human rights concerns, including infringement or suppression of freedom of expression, press, the internet, association, as well as corruption and child labor.

- If confirmed, what steps will you take to address these instances with the host government?

Answer. Botswana generally has a good human rights record. However, some problems remain. These include occasional allegations of excessive use of force and abuse by security personnel, police corruption, and shortcomings in the judicial process, including lengthy delays and failure to inform defendants of their pretrial rights.

I am concerned about societal problems that threaten respect for human rights including high rates of gender-based violence; discrimination against women and children, persons with disabilities, persons with HIV/AIDS, lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex persons; and trafficking in persons.

There are also growing concerns among Botswana’s public that COVID-19 related movement restrictions and the Government’s stated need to take on extra-legislative responsibility as a response could impinge on some of their human rights, such as their freedom of peaceful assembly. If confirmed, I will continue these efforts as I engage the Government of Botswana to address concerns detailed in the 2020 Human Rights Report.

Question. How will you direct your embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground?

Answer. The U.S. Embassy maintains excellent relationships with all of Botswana’s major civil society organizations. These organizations rely on us to act as a voice of conscience both in the public sphere and in our engagement with the Government. If confirmed, I will continue to work closely with Botswana’s community of civil society organizations and will encourage them to focus their attention on the most pressing human rights concerns in Botswana and will look for synergistic opportunities to cooperate with these groups to advocate for reform, accountability, and respect for human rights.

Question. Government resettlement schemes, policies that undermine aboriginal minorities’ cultural practices and identities, and economic disenfranchisement are all areas where the Government has increasingly marginalized the aboriginal San and Basarwa people. In what ways should the United States work with the Government of Botswana to improve the rights and economic survival of these aboriginal people?

Answer. The U.S. Government continues to follow the situation of the San in Botswana, including the legal dispute between some San communities and the Botswana Government over their families' rights to reside within Botswana's Central Kalahari Game Reserve (CKGR). The Botswana Government has agreed to abide by all relevant court rulings regarding the San rights to live within the CKGR, but it has interpreted these rulings narrowly. If confirmed, I will continue to support the ongoing dialogue between the Botswana Government and San representatives regarding community welfare and living conditions.

Question. In March this year, Botswana became the 46th African country to sign on to China's Belt and Road Initiative (BRI). The BRI cooperation agreement will undoubtedly boost relations between the two countries and focus on infrastructure construction and other projects traditionally supporting the BRI. How will you ensure the United States interests and relationship with Botswana is not undermined by these deepening ties with China?

Answer. The Government of Botswana sees China as an important partner and investor, but there has been unhappiness within Botswana about PRC business practices, after problems with several high-profile PRC construction projects. If confirmed, I will work to build upon our decades-long investment in African human capital (health and education) in order to strengthen our ties with Botswana, including through initiatives like the Power Africa Mega Solar program.

Question. In November 2020, I published a Senate Foreign Relations Committee Majority Report entitled "The United States and Europe: A Concrete Agenda for Transatlantic Cooperation on China." The report gave several recommendations on increased transatlantic cooperation, including in Africa, to counter Chinese malign influence more effectively. In what ways should the United States partner with European countries to build on likeminded interests in Botswana and counter the malign influence of China?

Answer. The United States and our European partners share an interest in supporting Botswana's efforts for financial transparency, respect for human rights, respect for freedom of expression, and efforts to counter corruption. We are concerned about the PRC's influence on these areas in Botswana. If confirmed, I would continue to work with European nations and the Government of Botswana to strengthen Botswana's resilience to malign external influence. If confirmed, I will work with European and other likeminded partners to speak up against China's malign actions and attempts to undermine the international rules-based system, including through advancing U.S. economic interests, countering China's aggressive and coercive actions, sustaining our military engagement, and engaging on U.S. positions in the U.N. system.

Question. According to Reporters sans frontiers (RSF), press freedom declined significantly under President Ian Khama. While violations of press freedom have declined under President Masisi, there remain significant obstacles to freedom of the press in Botswana, including a legal framework that has no law on access to information and draconian laws such as the 2008 Media Practitioners Act. As U.S. Ambassador to Botswana, if confirmed, how will you engage the Botswanan Government on issues of freedom of information and freedom of the press?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the U.S. Embassy work to support media professionalization through exchanges, trainings, and other initiatives, such as assisting the Office of the Presidency to set up a Presidential Press Office. Helping the Government of Botswana create a press office which is proactive, responsive, and a source for useful and credible information for the press and the public directly supports our Mission Goal 1: Botswana has institutions, policies, and practices which respond to the needs and improve equitably the lives of its inhabitants by addressing the need to strengthen institutions to promote accountable, transparent, and democratic governance.

Question. Many U.S. missions have been under enormous stress over the last few years, in large part due to COVID.

- What is your understanding of morale throughout Mission Botswana?

Answer. COVID-19 has exacted a heavy toll on U.S. Mission Botswana, as many members of our community have lost loved ones. While there is currently a downward trend in cases across the region, Botswana's COVID-19 case count remains the highest in the Southern African region.

COVID-19 exacerbated some of Botswana's infrastructural weaknesses like telecommunications, healthcare, and food availability. The Mission has adapted to this new environment, with staff building stronger ties with each other as they rely on one another more than they did prior to the pandemic. The U.S. Mission continues to prioritize Embassy morale through tools such as regular town halls, which provide a platform for staff to connect with leadership and for speakers to discuss resilience and coping mechanisms.

Question. How do you intend to improve morale at Mission Botswana?

Answer. If confirmed, the safety and security of the official community will be of primary importance. I will seek to support employees and their families to create an inclusive and welcoming culture where individuals are safe and can achieve professional and personal goals. As I expect one of my sons (who is 15 years old) and my wife, Rebecca, will accompany me (and my other children will spend significant time with me in Botswana), I will focus on schooling and educational needs for children and work with U.S. and Botswana officials to expand U.S.-accredited education where possible.

Question. How do you intend to create a unified mission and vision at Mission Botswana?

Answer. If confirmed, I will lead regular discussions with all agencies to establish and review goals and develop strategies and tactics to achieve common objectives. If confirmed, I will engage all employees and stakeholders to conceive and articulate clearly what we will do, and how we will do it. If confirmed, I will create a culture of inclusion in which all employees' contributions are valued.

Question. Management is a key responsibility for chiefs of mission.

- How would you describe your management style?

Answer. I aspire to create a leadership culture in which all are encouraged to contribute, create, and grow. My ideal is a workplace in which people achieve shared objectives while respecting and valuing everyone's contributions. This requires from leadership and employees a recognition of individuals strengths and areas of development, and a respect for shared values, inclusion, and our institutions.

Question. Do you believe it is ever acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either in public or private?

Answer. There is no acceptable place for 'berating' subordinates, either in public or in private.

Question. What lessons have you learned from your tenure as the director of NEA-SCA/EX?

Answer. While Executive Director of NEA-SCA/EX, I learned quickly the limits of my own ability to achieve goals without delegating responsibility and authority when appropriate. My experience leading that organization affirmed to me that subordinates need space to learn and grow, and that results which fall short of full success represent valuable opportunities to adjust styles and inculcate a culture of continual learning and improvement. I refined the ability to delegate and build a spirit of inclusion during my time as Executive Director.

Question. How do you envision your leadership relationship with deputy chief of mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I expect to collaborate closely with the Deputy Chief of Mission to conceive goals, then implement and oversee tactics and activities to achieve those goals. If confirmed, I will work with the Deputy Chief of Mission to articulate and maintain high ethical standards and create a culture of inclusion and respect. If confirmed, I will lean on the Deputy Chief of Mission's deep area expertise and seek her counsel before developing or implementing policy. I believe Deputy Chiefs of Mission are most effective, productive, and valued when they are permitted to work with independence, while understanding that the Chief of Mission is ultimately responsible in all ways for the work of the Mission.

Question. If confirmed, what leadership responsibilities do you intend to entrust to your deputy chief of mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ask the Deputy Chief of Mission to lead our internal effort to address the COVID pandemic. I will also ask her to lead recruitment efforts for Foreign Service and other agencies' diplomatic personnel. If confirmed, I will collaborate with her closely on policy implementation, engagement with the Government of Botswana, and outreach to key groups-particularly youth-through traditional and social media.

In order to create and continue employee excellence at the Department, accurate and direct employee evaluation reports (EERs) for Foreign Service Officers are imperative, though often lacking.

Question. Do you believe that it is important to provide employees with accurate, constructive feedback on their performances in order to encourage improvement and reward those who most succeeded in their roles?

Answer. Yes.

Question. If confirmed, would you support and encourage clear, accurate, and direct feedback to employees in order to improve performance and reward high achievers?

Answer. Yes.

Question. It is imperative that U.S. diplomats get outside of posts abroad to meet with local actors, including host government officials, non-government organizations, and fellow foreign diplomats stationed in Botswana.

- In your experience, do U.S. diplomats get outside of our embassy walls enough to accomplish fully their missions?

Answer. The most effective U.S. diplomats are those who actively engage broadly with people throughout all parts of society in the country to which they are assigned.

The safety and well-being of our U.S. Mission staff is paramount. Thus, during COVID-19, especially during the recent third wave, we have limited our external engagement and official travel to mission critical. However, during normal times our U.S. Mission community is actively involved in external engagement with our government, civil society, and media partners and members of the international community throughout the country. In the meantime, we have been actively involved in external engagement on virtual platforms and in small group settings to maximize safety.

Question. How do you intend to improve the ability of U.S. diplomats to better access all local populations?

Answer. If confirmed, and as health and safety conditions permit, I will encourage U.S. diplomats to engage actively, broadly and in-person with local populations. Until then, we will maintain active engagement through virtual media. If confirmed, I intend to regularly visit people in each district of Botswana and use those visits to facilitate contacts for other U.S. diplomats.

COVID-19 limited physical interactions and poor telecommunications infrastructure made virtual interactions difficult. However, nearly all Mission personnel have been vaccinated and the number of vaccinated Botswana is also increasing. This should improve our ability to access more people locally as in-person interactions will remain the preferred form of engagement in Botswana.

Once the COVID-19 situation improves we intend to fully re-engage with all our stakeholders throughout the country in-person. I will prioritize our Embassy's travel and site visits to our partners and beneficiaries in the field, on priority issues including our HIV/AIDS response and wildlife trafficking, to improve our collective understanding of the myriad issues at stake, underscore U.S. leadership on these issues, and to monitor U.S. Government funds.

Once we achieve a healthy threshold of vaccinated people, we plan to return to hosting more representational events as they have historically been well received, especially our Fourth of July celebrations. A resumption in issuing tourist and business visas will also increase our interaction as it will raise interest in the United States.

Question. In recent years, the Financial Action Task Force (FATF), an intergovernmental standards-setting body on anti-money laundering matters (AML), of which the United States is a member, identified Botswana as strategically deficient on AML. How is the United States supporting AML compliance efforts in Botswana and what steps will you take as ambassador to ensure the country continues to make improvements in this area?

Answer. The United States supports Botswana's efforts to strengthen its compliance with international AML standards, including through U.S. Department of Treasury technical assistance. If confirmed, I will work diligently to ensure the U.S. Embassy continues to support Botswana's efforts to bolster its anti-money laundering capacity.

Question. Do you think the Department should require chiefs of mission have experience in the region to which they are nominated?

Answer. The Department of State looks for officers who exemplify the six Core Values (accountability, character, community, diversity, loyalty, service) and the Department's Leadership and Management Principles (model integrity, plan strategically, be decisive and take responsibility, communicate, learn and innovate constantly, be self-aware, collaborate, value and develop people, manage conflict, and foster resilience) when selecting Chiefs of Mission. Candidates for COM positions must possess: outstanding interpersonal skills; deep regional and functional professional experience; demonstrated effectiveness in leading people, policies, and programs; proven skills in public diplomacy, navigating the interagency process, leading and motivating teams; talent for advocating U.S. foreign policy interests, including promoting democracy and good governance, rule of law, and economic interests; and the ability to operate at the senior U.S. national security policy level. The Department also seeks COM candidates who have championed diversity and will continue to foster diverse and inclusive teams and hold people accountable for performance and conduct. COM nominees are able to apply these values and principles in any geographic region to advance U.S. interests.

Question. With little experience in the sub-Saharan Africa, how are you approaching this assignment?

Answer. Mission Botswana has a strong team which I am looking forward to meeting and leading. I am confident that our respective experiences will complement each other.

I have engaged in an accelerated program to learn as much as possible as quickly as possible about the region through the Foreign Service Institute and consultations with regional experts. If confirmed, I will broaden that engagement to include regional experts throughout and outside the U.S. Government.

Question. Do you consider your lack of experience in the region a handicap in starting your position as COM?

Answer. I come to this assignment with a long history of success in leading people and managing programs and resources to achieve goals. Those experiences are directly applicable to this challenging assignment. I also approach this assignment cognizant that the region is richly complex, and I will need to seek advice, counsel, and recommendations from a range of experts from throughout and outside the U.S. Government in order to succeed.

The State Department prides itself in developing adaptable generalists who bring the breadth of their experience to every assignment. There are naturally strong arguments for having regional experts, but I am confident that I can bring new approaches to bear based on my experience at other posts. My work in the Department's Executive Secretariat also gave me a unique perspective on how Africa fits into our overall foreign policy, experience which I believe make me a strong advocate for the needs of Mission Botswana.

Question. If confirmed, would you consider your lack of experience in Africa in identifying a deputy chief of mission?

Answer. The Department of State provides a list of suitable Deputy Chief of Mission candidates for a Chief of Mission to select when those positions become open. If confirmed, I will select a DCM who compliments my skills, experience, and knowledge to ensure the U.S. Mission in Botswana is best placed to advance U.S. interests.

Question. Public diplomacy is an important aspect of U.S. foreign policy efforts.

- What is the public diplomacy environment like in Botswana? What public diplomacy challenges do U.S. diplomats face there?

Answer. The strong U.S.-Botswana bilateral relationship facilitates a positive public diplomacy environment. The Botswana public is generally receptive to U.S. Government programs and messaging on our policy priorities. The challenges that do exist include capacity issues like an organization's ability to maintain and implement grants on behalf of the U.S. Government; the lack of a flourishing civil society which limits our ability to offer diverse programming; and the poorly developed press corps. However, journalists are eager to gain additional training and experiences through USG media exchange programs. COVID-19 has severely impacted the Mission's ability to conduct in person exchanges and outreach, and poor internet connectivity and availability make virtual programming challenging.

Question. How do you balance the importance of Main State versus the in-country mission when it comes to tailoring public diplomacy messages for foreign audiences?

Answer. The Embassy's Public Affairs Office does a good job balancing these occasionally differing objectives. The Mission's strategic planning working group meets monthly to discuss important policy objectives and to decide how to best deliver messaging to the public. Due to our strong bilateral relationship, the Botswana public is largely receptive to our messaging. As a Mission, we focus most of our messaging on our priority policy goals and objectives including our health partnerships under PEPFAR, women's empowerment, democracy and governance, environmental issues, regional security, and strengthening the economy. However, we also deliver messaging on Washington's policy priorities. The Botswana public is also receptive to these messages. Most public messaging is delivered via our influential social media platforms including Facebook and Twitter, but also via traditional media including radio, television, and newspaper interviews, which is dominated by state media.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO HOWARD A. VAN VRANKEN BY SENATOR MIKE ROUNDS

Question. Botswana's HIV prevalence rate is improving but remains the fourth highest in the world, with 19.9 percent of adults HIV-positive in 2020. What is your assessment of the importance and effectiveness of U.S. support to combatting HIV/AIDS and other public health emergencies in Botswana, including the COVID pandemic?

Answer. U.S. support through PEPFAR has played and will need to continue to play an important role in supporting Botswana's HIV/AIDS response. While Botswana is a high HIV-burdened country, it has been making significant progress toward controlling its HIV epidemic and that control must be sustained. The health systems and capacities that have been strengthened for the HIV/AIDS response have also been instrumental in helping to respond to other health threats, including COVID-19. Botswana funds approximately 60 percent of its national response to HIV/AIDS and PEPFAR has strategically filled service delivery gaps and provided technical support to scale up and strengthen services.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 2021

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:00 a.m., via Video-conference, Hon. Brian Schatz presiding.

Present: Senators Schatz [presiding], Cardin, Murphy, Booker, Van Hollen, and Hagerty.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. BRIAN SCHATZ, U.S. SENATOR FROM HAWAII

Senator SCHATZ. Good morning. This hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

We are here to consider four important nominees—Ambassador Laura Holgate to be the U.S. Representative to the Vienna Office of the U.N. and the U.S. Representative to the International Atomic Energy Agency; Caryn McClelland to be the U.S. Ambassador to Brunei Darussalam; David Young to be U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Malawi; and Claire Pierangelo to be the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Madagascar and to the Union of the Comoros.

Congratulations to the four of you on your nominations. Our thanks for your willingness to serve and to the members of your families because this is a family sacrifice as well.

I understand that our distinguished former colleague Senator Nunn is here to introduce Ambassador Holgate this morning. So we will turn to him first before any opening statements.

Senator Nunn?

STATEMENT OF HON. SAM NUNN, FORMER U.S. SENATOR FROM GEORGIA

Senator NUNN. Thank you very much, Chairman Schatz. Can you hear me okay? I am not—

Senator SCHATZ. We can hear you fine.

Senator NUNN. Great. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Hagerty, Senator Cardin, and others on the Foreign Relations Committee.

I am honored to present Laura Holgate to this committee, and I strongly recommend that she be confirmed as our Nation's Ambassador to the Vienna Office of the United Nations and the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Mr. Chairman, our Nation is fortunate to have a nominee with the experience, the knowledge, and the diplomatic skills that Laura would bring to this important role if confirmed by the Senate.

Laura has served more than 30 years in critical national security positions, both inside and outside government. She has broad experience. She has skilled leadership. Laura has sound judgment, and she has an international reputation as a very capable diplomat and persuasive advocate of U.S. priorities.

She also brings a background and spirit of nonpartisanship. I know that firsthand, Mr. Chairman, because I have worked closely with her, and she has worked so closely with Senators and staff over the years.

So, Mr. Chairman and Senator Hagerty, I have known Laura for almost all of her professional career. She was part of the Ash Carter Harvard University team that worked closely with my partner Senator Dick Lugar and with me to persuade Congress to create what became known as the Nunn-Lugar Cooperative Threat Reduction Program.

Laura later led this program at the Pentagon and was part of the team that achieved one of the most significant global security steps of our era—Belarus, Kazakhstan, and Ukraine getting rid of all of their nuclear weapons and joining the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty. So Laura has been at the forefront of policy innovation as well as implementation to reduce nuclear, biological, and chemical threats for really her entire career.

When the Nuclear Threat Initiative was created in the year 2001 by Ted Turner and by me, I knew Laura was one of the most capable people that we could ever find. So I persuaded her to become one of the first employees of NTI. Laura's strong relationships with colleagues in the U.S. departments and agencies on Capitol Hill and really around the world helped her work with others to improve nuclear security and keep weapons and weapons-usable material, most important, out of the hands of terrorists globally.

At NTI, Laura led a number of international threat reduction projects that helped make the world safer, and I am just going to mention a couple. In 2001, she directed NTI's important role in the removal of two bombs' worth of highly enriched uranium from a poorly secured facility in Serbia. This project, led by the U.S. Government with cooperation from Serbia, Russia, and the IAEA, laid the foundation for the U.S. Government's program known as the Global Threat Reduction Initiative.

Most recently, she helped produce our NTI's Nuclear Security Index, which is recognized globally, I believe, as the premier open source resource and tool for tracking and improving the security of some of the deadliest materials in the world.

Importantly, Mr. Chairman and Senator Hagerty, Laura has continued her lifelong commitment to broadening the number of talented women in the nuclear security field, enhancing our national and our global security. Laura knows that giving women a fair shake strengthens our national security and also strengthens our Nation.

Laura served from 2009 to 2016 at the National Security Council, where she exhibited strong leadership in coordinating U.S. Government efforts to reduce weapon of mass destruction threats and prevent catastrophic terrorism. In particular, she led preparations for the four nuclear security summits under President Obama, which made significant progress in securing nuclear materials globally.

We do not get much encouraging news, but Mr. Chairman, over the last 20 or so years under both parties, both Presidents, Republicans and Democrats, we have moved from 50 nations with nuclear material known as highly enriched uranium to 23 nations. Still a lot of challenges, but Laura has played a huge role in all of that.

In conclusion, Chairman Schatz and Senator Hagerty and members of the committee, I am confident that Laura is fully prepared to serve in this critical role. I strongly support her nomination by President Biden, and I urge the committee's support. And of course, I urge strongly her confirmation by the full Senate.

So thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you very much, Senator Nunn, and thank you for your public service and leadership over many, many years.

We will now turn to my opening remarks, followed by Senator Hagerty.

Ambassador Holgate previously served as the U.S. Representative to the IAEA and Vienna Office of the U.N. in 2016. She also served as Director for Weapons of Mass Destruction, Terrorism, and Threat Reduction on the NSC, where she led the preparation of four nuclear security summits. The IAEA is facing a number of challenges to one of its core missions, ensuring that states comply with their nonproliferation treaty commitments to maintain only peaceful nuclear programs.

Iran is currently blocking IAEA access to many of its nuclear facilities, and North Korea moves ahead with its nuclear capabilities. Ambassador Holgate brings a wealth of experience to this important role, and we look forward to hearing about how she plans to engage the IAEA on nonproliferation matters and the peaceful use of nuclear science and technology to solve today's challenges, including climate change.

Pleased to see Caryn McClelland, a career Foreign Service officer, nominated as our next Ambassador to Brunei. In her distinguished career at State, she has served in senior-level positions in the Indo-Pacific and Europe as well as on oceans and international environmental issues and commercial and business affairs, all of which position her well for this assignment.

In particular, her background working energy issues, as we seek to work with Brunei to transition its economy to a zero-carbon future, is invaluable. I look forward to hearing her thoughts on that issue today.

I am also interested in her views on Brunei's approach to trafficking in persons and LGBTQ issues under Sharia law, issues this committee continues to monitor closely.

Next, we have David Young. David Young is a career member of the Senior Foreign Service. He currently serves as the charge d'affaires at the U.S. Embassy in Lusaka, Zambia, and previously served as the charge d'affaires at the U.S. Embassy in Pretoria, South Africa, and Deputy Chief of Mission at the U.S. Embassy in Abuja, Nigeria. His extensive experience in Southern Africa will serve him well if confirmed as our next Ambassador to Malawi.

At a time when many African countries are experiencing democratic backsliding, Malawi stands out as having achieved a democratic transition, thanks to the vigilance of its citizens and the independence of its institutions. Still, Malawi faces serious challenges, including widespread poverty, corruption, and the threat of climate change and natural disasters, such as Cyclone Idai in 2019.

And despite meeting its goals to control HIV/AIDS, Malawi still has one of the world's 10 highest HIV prevalence rates. I look forward to hearing how, with sufficient engagement and assistance, the United States can help Malawi turn its recent democratic success into long-term stability and prosperity.

Lastly, Claire Pierangelo is a career member of the Senior Foreign Service. She currently serves as Principal Officer at the Consulate General in Lagos, Nigeria. Madagascar is facing difficult circumstances, and our Embassy urgently needs an experienced diplomat like Claire Pierangelo. High-stakes competition between political elites has dangerously destabilized Madagascar, with alleged coup and assassination plots pushing the country to the brink of a political crisis.

Even more alarming is Madagascar's vulnerability to climate change. Southern Madagascar is on the edge of a deadly famine, one of the first to be caused by climate change rather than man-made conflict, according to the U.N.

The Union of the Comoros, where Ms. Pierangelo would also represent the United States, if confirmed, faces governance challenges such as corruption and authoritarianism. It is becoming vulnerable to climate change, which is spurring irregular migration and affecting access to food and to water. I hope to hear how the United States can help these two countries to confront these challenges.

So while the four of you have a number of challenges ahead, I am confident that your knowledge and experience will serve you well as you take them upon confirmation.

I now turn to the ranking member, Senator Hagerty, for his opening comments.

STATEMENT OF HON. BILL HAGERTY, U.S. SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE

Senator HAGERTY. It is an honor to be with both of you. Mr. Chairman, I also want to thank the nominees for being here today. As you said, it is a great commitment, and it is a family commitment, and I appreciate and congratulate all of you for your nomination.

I would like to start with the nominee for Representative of the United States to the International Energy Agency. This position has a unique responsibility in advancing the security of the United States by promoting the safe, secure, and peaceful use of nuclear technologies.

I would like to share just a little bit of my own background from this perspective. Not long after my arrival in Tokyo as the U.S. Ambassador to Japan, North Korea tested a thermonuclear weapon, highlighting for me the continued challenges and threats that we face from nuclear proliferation around the world.

The United States and our allies need to work very closely together on this, and I look forward to hearing from the nominee about how best to prevent states from diverting their civil nuclear energy programs to military purposes as we approach the 21st century.

Next, I would like to turn to the nomination to be the Ambassador to Brunei Darussalam. The United States and Brunei work closely together on a bilateral and regional agenda to tackle some of the most pressing issues, particularly in light of Brunei's role in ASEAN. I look forward to hearing from Caryn on ways to advance the U.S.-Brunei relationship. I have had the opportunity to work with Caryn in the past. I look forward to hearing from her today.

I would also like to turn to the nominee to be Ambassador to Malawi. The United States continues to partner with Malawi in order to advance accountable democratic governance, to foster private sector growth, and to advance health, education, energy, and environmental sectors in Malawi. I am interested in hearing from the nominee on these subjects when we get to them.

Last, I would like to focus on the nominee to be the Ambassador to Madagascar. And as Madagascar continues to play—transition toward a free democracy, the United States will play a critical role as one of the largest providers of assistance to Madagascar. I look forward to hearing from our nominee about ways to bolster the partnership between the United States and Madagascar.

Mr. Chairman, I yield my time back to you. Thank you.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you very much, Senator Hagerty.

All of our nominees will be provided an opportunity to give their testimony. We asked them to be as brief as possible. We are about to enter into a series of five votes to keep the Government open. So that if we can do this expeditiously, we will not have to hand the gavel back and forth.

So we will start our testimony from our nominees. We ask you to summarize your statement in 5 minutes or even less. All of your full statements will be included in the record without objection, and we will proceed in the order that you appear on the hearing notice, beginning with Ambassador Holgate.

STATEMENT OF HON. LAURA S.H. HOLGATE OF VIRGINIA, NOMINATED TO BE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE INTERNATIONAL ATOMIC EN-ERGY AGENCY, WITH THE RANK OF AMBASSADOR, AND TO BE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE VIENNA OFFICE OF THE UNITED NATIONS, WITH THE RANK OF AMBASSADOR

Ambassador HOLGATE. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Hagerty, and members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today to serve—as the President's nominee to serve as the U.S. Permanent Representative to the United Nations, the International Atomic Energy Agency, and other international organizations in Vienna.

I am grateful to President Biden and to Secretary Blinken for their confidence that they have placed in me, and I am especially grateful to Senator Nunn for his mentorship over the years and for his generous remarks this morning.

This is a critical moment for the United States' interests in the IAEA and other U.N. offices in Vienna. Iran, nuclear energy, space, cyber crime, climate change, the opioid epidemic—none of these challenges can be adequately met by the United States acting alone. We helped create the U.N. system to align the interests and combine the strengths of multiple nations to address global challenges, and I firmly believe that these institutions are more necessary today than ever.

My experience inside and outside the United States Government has prepared me to play this vital role in Vienna. If I am confirmed in this position, I pledge to strengthen and broaden the partnerships with other member states and with the Vienna-based U.N. agencies and further develop the coalitions that we need to achieve U.S. priorities.

Key among these goals is to work to make sure the IAEA has the mandate and the capacity to address evolving challenges and the greater demands being placed upon it. The IAEA must have the technical, human, and financial resources it needs to implement global safeguards, including in critical areas such as Iran and to be prepared to return to North Korea should a monitoring agreement be reached there.

The IAEA's Directorates of Nuclear Energy, Safety and Security, and Safeguards must work better together to guide and monitor the safe and secure expansion of next-generation nuclear energy in a way that helps address climate change without increasing nuclear risk.

If confirmed, I will press international organizations in Vienna to continue to make progress on management reforms, transparency, and accountability. I will encourage intensified efforts towards achieving greater gender and regional diversity and greater representation of U.S. citizens, especially at senior and policymaking levels. And I will revitalize the International Gender Champions chapter, which I helped found during my previous appointment.

The achievement of these and other U.S. priorities will face the growing influence of Russia and China in multilateral organizations, and I believe the U.S. must be even more present, active, and visible at these fora. And if confirmed, I will strengthen the essential relationships with traditional diplomatic partners and work hard to build new connections with countries who are eager to see U.S. leadership on the issues they care about.

Mr. Chairman, I am eager to return to the post I held so briefly and optimistic about the opportunities to re-engage the diplomatic and U.N. community, many of whom I know well. I am grateful to this committee for its attention and to my family, friends, and colleagues observing these proceedings online for their love, support, and inspiration as I pursue a return to public service.

Thank you very much.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. LAURA S.H. HOLGATE

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Hagerty, and members of the committee: I am honored to appear before you today as the President's nominee to serve as the U.S. Permanent Representative to the United Nations (U.N.), the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) and other International Organizations in Vienna. I am grateful to President Biden and to Secretary Blinken for the confidence they have placed in me.

This is a critical moment for the United States' interests in the IAEA and the other U.N. offices in Vienna. Establishing confidence that Iran's nuclear activities are solely peaceful and remain so, strengthening the global nuclear architecture that promotes security of nuclear materials and facilities, supporting the safe and secure expansion of nuclear energy and other peaceful nuclear technologies, promoting effective efforts to combat transnational crime and corruption, and supporting innovative peaceful applications of space science demand active, focused leadership and engagement by the United States to promote our national interests and advance our contributions towards shared global priorities. Indeed, none of these challenges can be adequately met by the United States acting alone—we helped create the U.N. system to align the interests and combine the strengths of multiple nations to address global challenges, and I firmly believe that these institutions are more necessary today than ever.

My experience inside and outside the United States Government has prepared me to play this vital role in Vienna. I have focused on reducing nuclear, biological, and chemical threats since 1989, when I wrote my MIT masters thesis on chemical weapons destruction. From the Pentagon to the Energy Department to the White House, and—briefly—in Vienna, I have spent over 15 years designing, leading, and coordinating federal programs to reduce and eliminate nuclear, chemical, and biological weapons, through bilateral and multilateral cooperation. In my 12 years at the nongovernment Nuclear Threat Initiative, I have developed and piloted creative solutions to nuclear challenges, many of which have been adopted by the United States and the IAEA.

Mr. Chairman, it was my distinct honor to have been supported by this committee and confirmed by the Senate in 2016 to the position for which I am now again being considered, and I served for six months in that role, leading UNVIE's talented team of Foreign Service Officers, locally engaged staff, and civil servants from multiple U.S. agencies.

If I am confirmed in this position, I pledge to strengthen and broaden the partnerships with other member states and with the Vienna-based U.N. agencies, and further develop the coalitions that we need to achieve U.S. priorities. Key among these goals is to work to make sure the IAEA has the mandate and the capacity to address evolving challenges and the greater demands being placed on it. The IAEA must have the technical, human, and financial resources it needs to implement global safeguards, including in critical areas such as Iran, and to be prepared to return to North Korea, should a monitoring agreement be reached there. The IAEA's Directorates of Nuclear Energy, Safety and Security, and Safeguards must work better together to guide and monitor the safe and secure expansion of next-generation nuclear energy in a way that helps address climate change without increasing nuclear risks. The IAEA's Directorates of Technical Cooperation and Nuclear Sciences and Applications must strengthen initiatives to safely and securely provide the benefits of nuclear technology to all, including innovations to speed the diagnosis of pandemic health threats.

If confirmed, I will press international organizations in Vienna to continue to make progress in management reforms, transparency, and accountability. I will encourage intensified efforts toward achieving greater gender and regional diversity, especially at the senior and policy-making levels, and revitalize the International Gender Champions chapter, which I helped found during my previous appointment.

The achievement of these and other U.S. priorities will face the growing influence of Russia and China in multilateral organizations. I believe the U.S. must be even more present, active, and visible in these fora and if confirmed, I will strengthen the essential relationships with traditional diplomatic partners and work hard to build new connections with countries who are eager to see U.S. leadership on issues they care about.

Mr. Chairman, I am eager to return to the post I held so briefly, and optimistic about the opportunities to reengage the diplomatic and U.N. community, many of whom I know well. I am grateful to this committee for its attention, and to my family, friends, and colleagues observing these proceedings on-line for their love, support, and inspiration as I pursue a return to public service.

STATEMENT OF CARYN R. MCCLELLAND OF CALIFORNIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE,
CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AM-
BASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF
THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO BRUNEI DARUSSALAM

Ms. MCCLELLAND. Thank you very much.

Chairman Schatz, Ranking Member Hagerty, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to be here today before you as President Biden's nominee to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to Brunei Darussalam. If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with this committee to advance U.S. interests in Brunei.

I would also like to take this opportunity to thank my family, friends, mentors, and colleagues whose support and guidance has been critical throughout my career. Most importantly, I want to recognize my daughter, Marlowe, who has shared this adventure with me for the last 13 years, and my parents, Robert and Catherine. Without their constant love, support, and encouragement, I would not be here today.

The U.S.-Brunei relationship has flourished over the years as we continuously work together to promote a more stable, peaceful, and prosperous Indo-Pacific region. We have enjoyed more than 170 years of close cooperation since our countries signed the Treaty of Peace, Friendship, Commerce, and Navigation in 1850. The United States was also among the first countries to establish diplomatic relations with Brunei after it became fully independent from the United Kingdom in 1984.

Our partnership with Brunei and our support for ASEAN centrality remain a cornerstone of our Indo-Pacific policy. The United States works closely with Brunei, especially during its role as the ASEAN chair in 2021. Brunei's time leading ASEAN coincided with the two most acute challenges to face ASEAN since its inception, the coup d'etat in Burma and COVID-19.

Brunei has been a steady and constructive partner on both issues. Our shared commitment to addressing some of the region's most pressing challenges will continue to yield cooperation, including on pandemic response, confronting the climate crisis, and resolving the conflict brought on by the coup and violence in Burma.

The robust security, economic, and people-to-people ties between our two countries are at the core of our relationship with Brunei. Our defense relationship is described in our Memorandum of Understanding on Defense Cooperation, and our military-to-military ties have become a cornerstone of the U.S.-Brunei bilateral relationship.

Prior to the pandemic, Brunei conveyed a strong desire to increase participation in military exercise and engagements with the United States, particularly with respect to enhancing maritime domain awareness. While many in-person defense exchanges have either been postponed or canceled due to the COVID-19 restrictions, Brunei remains committed to our defense partnership, as witnessed by its recent purchase of U.S.-origin defense equipment and its continued participation in our bilateral maritime exercises.

We have a shared interest in maintaining peace and stability, unimpeded lawful commerce, and respect for international law, including freedoms of navigation and overflight and other lawful activities in the South China Sea. If confirmed, I will look for opportunities to strengthen our partnership in these areas with the Bruneian Government and work with Brunei to uphold the rules-based international order that has underpinned the region's security and prosperity.

We have also fostered a positive economic relationship with Brunei and enjoy a robust trade in goods such as aircraft, machinery, technology, iron, steel, and others. U.S. goods and services trade with Brunei totaled an estimated $262 million in 2020.

We have frequently worked with Brunei and other regional economies to lower barriers to trade and investment across the Indo-Pacific region, leveling the playing field for U.S. companies and supporting job growth at home. If confirmed, I hope to further expand our bilateral trade relationship and advance an economic agenda that promotes shared prosperity, leverages economic potential, and builds inclusive and resilient economies, especially as the entire region works toward pandemic recovery.

If there is one thing the past year and a half has taught us, it is the true value of personal relationships. Our cultural, educational, and people-to-people ties with Brunei are critically important to advance both mutual understanding between our nations and our bilateral relationship. In a country with limited exposure to the United States, engaging the next generation of Bruneian leaders and change-makers is vital.

Prior to the pandemic, approximately 50 Bruneians participated annually in U.S.-sponsored exchange programs, including the Young Southeast Asian Leaders Initiative, the International Visitor Leaders Program, and Fulbright Program, and other professional and academic exchanges. The U.S. Embassy in Brunei also maintains a robust network of more than 300 alumni of U.S. Government exchange programs and works regularly with Bruneian civil society to collaborate on addressing issues of mutual concern, such as empowering women, promoting entrepreneurship, and protecting the environment, among other issues. If confirmed, I intend to leverage these exchange programs and other initiatives to broaden our people-to-people ties in the future.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to appear here today, and I look forward to your questions.

Thank you.

Mr. Young?

STATEMENT OF DAVID JOHN YOUNG OF VIRGINIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF MALAWI

Mr. YOUNG. Chairman Schatz, Ranking Member Hagerty, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee to be the next Ambassador to the Republic of Malawi.

I appreciate the confidence the President and my colleagues at the Department of State have shown in me through this nomination, and if confirmed, I look forward to working with you and other Members of Congress and staff to advance U.S. interests in Malawi.

As I appear before you today, I wish to acknowledge the steadfast support I have received throughout my career from my wonderful life partner, my wife, Diane Weisz Young; and our children, Paul and Sarah; as well as my brothers, Keith and Terry; and in-laws Howard, Ann, and Gregg Weisz. The inspiration and love I have received from my family have inspired my public service across 32 years working for the Department of State.

The United States has a wide range of overlapping interests in Malawi, from strengthening democracy and promoting respect for human rights to support for market economics and inclusive growth, from investments in health and education to support for the country's peacekeeping efforts across the African continent. Our assistance programs mirror these interests, and our governance programming bolsters the country's democracy and helps our Malawian partners promote respect for human rights, combat corruption, and promote better performance by government agencies. Our bilateral trade and investment engagements hold promise to help lift Malawians out of poverty and to help American companies interested in investment.

Malawi today stands at a high point in its international profile and regional leadership. Its independent judiciary overturned the flawed 2019 presidential election, and the victory of President Lazarus Chakwera in 2020 marked only the second election re-run on the continent and the first to unseat an incumbent. The peaceful transition of power that followed was a testament to Malawians' commitment to democratic ideals.

A primary responsibility of any Ambassador is the protection of American citizens and American interests. In Malawi, that now includes joining the global fight to combat the spread of COVID-19. And for decades, we have supported Malawi's efforts to combat HIV/AIDS. In so doing, we have saved millions of lives, and we have become the partner of choice for health programming. I was pleased to see the recent arrival in Lilongwe of more than 300,000 U.S.-provided Johnson & Johnson COVID-19 vaccine doses.

Malawi's heavy dependence on agriculture offers opportunities for U.S. Government and private sector engagement. American expertise can invest and advance efforts towards crop diversification, generate greater revenue, and fight poverty through improved yields.

Having worked on African issues for the past decade, and with more than 5 years' service in Southern Africa, I am also cognizant of the worker exploitation occurring in this sector. If confirmed, I will work with Malawian, American, and international partners to combat human trafficking and other human rights violations.

The United States has enjoyed decades of close collaboration with the Malawian military, and their defense force's apolitical posture following last year's—the 2019 election had a huge impact on the transition to democracy. Malawian soldiers contribute to peacekeeping operations in some of the world's most dangerous places, and if confirmed, I hope to find new ways for Malawi to further enshrine itself as a net exporter of security.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to appear before you today, and I would be honored to answer any questions.

Thank you.

[The prepared statement of Mr. Young follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF DAVID J. YOUNG

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Hagerty, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee to be the next Ambassador to the Republic of Malawi. I appreciate the confidence the President and my colleagues at the Department of State have shown in me through this nomination. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you and other members of Congress and staff to advance U.S. interests in Malawi.

As I appear before you today, I wish to acknowledge the steadfast support I have received throughout my career from my wonderful life partner, my wife Diane Weisz Young, and our children Paul and Sarah, as well as my brothers Keith and Terry, and in-laws Howard, Ann, and Gregg Weisz. The inspiration and love I have received from my family have inspired my public service across 32 years working for the Department of State.

The United States has a wide range of overlapping interests in Malawi—from strengthening democracy and promoting respect for human rights to support for market economics and inclusive growth, from investments in health and education to support for the country's peacekeeping efforts across the African continent. Our assistance programs mirror these interests. Our governance programming bolsters the country's democracy and helps our Malawian partners promote respect for human rights, combat corruption, and promote better performance by government agencies. Our bilateral trade and investment engagements hold promise to help lift Malawians out of poverty and to help American companies interested in investment. The U.S. encourages Malawi to move along a sustainable development trajectory that curves toward expanding trade as a means to increase prosperity. Our investments in Malawi's human capital help to build a healthy, educated, and self-reliant population.

Malawi today stands at a high point in its international profile and regional leadership. Its independent judiciary overturned the flawed 2019 presidential election, and the victory of President Lazarus Chakwera in 2020 marked only the second election re-run on the continent and the first to unseat an incumbent. The peaceful transition of power that followed was a testament to Malawians' commitment to democratic ideals. President Chakwera assumed leadership of the 16-member Southern African Development Community in August and in this role is helping contribute to pro-market, good governance reforms in Malawi and across the region. If confirmed, I will work to expand our partnership with President Chakwera's Government to advance these mutual interests.

The primary responsibility of any ambassador is the protection of American citizens and American interests. In Malawi, that now includes joining the global fight to contain the spread of COVID-19. For decades we have supported Malawi's efforts to combat HIV/AIDS. In doing so we have saved millions of lives, and we have become the partner of choice for health programming. I was pleased to see the recent arrival in Lilongwe of more than 300,000 U.S.-provided Johnson & Johnson COVID-19 vaccine doses. If confirmed, I will serve as a faithful steward of these investments to ensure and expand the impact of our citizens' unmatched generosity.

Malawi's heavy dependence on agriculture offers opportunities for U.S. Government and private sector engagement. American expertise can advance efforts towards crop diversification, generate greater revenue, and fight poverty through improved yields. Having worked on African issues for the past decade, and with more than five years' service in southern Africa, I am also cognizant of the worker exploitation occurring in the sector. Malawi must do more to combat human trafficking, including protecting vulnerable workers and prosecuting those responsible for forced labor. If confirmed, I will work with Malawian, American, and international partners to support these efforts.

The United States has enjoyed decades of close collaboration with the Malawian military. The Malawian Defense Force's apolitical posture following the annulment of the 2019 elections and the subsequent transfer of power speaks to the strength of its independence and its unshakeable commitment to democracy. Malawian soldiers contribute to peacekeeping operations in some of the world's most dangerous places. Like others, I mourn the death of a Malawian peacekeeper killed in the Democratic Republic of the Congo in May this year. If confirmed, I hope to find new ways for Malawi to further enshrine itself as a net exporter of security.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to appear before you today. I would be honored to respond to any questions.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you, Mr. Young.
Ms. Pierangelo?

STATEMENT OF CLAIRE A. PIERANGELO OF CALIFORNIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NONMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF MADAGASCAR AND TO SERVE CONCURRENTLY AND WITHOUT ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION AS AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE UNION OF THE COMOROS

Ms. PIERANGELO. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and distinguished members of the committee. I am honored to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee as Ambassador to the Republic of Madagascar and to the Union of the Comoros.

Please let me thank my family and my friends who have supported me throughout my career. My parents, the late Dr. Anthony and Mrs. Rose Cobino Pierangelo. My beloved sons, Luca and Nicholas, who have been my intrepid travel companions and my most avid supporters. And my brothers and their families and my friends, who have always made sure that we had a welcoming home to come home to.

Mr. Chairman, I have served across four continents. I have led teams working on economic reform, public health crises, violent extremism, radicalism, terrorism, and the challenges posed by the lack of democratic institutions and the rule of law. As a San Diego native, I was an avid student of the challenges of wildlife conservation through the work of the San Diego Zoo Global Wildlife Alliance, and I have carried that passion with me throughout my career.

If confirmed to be concurrently Ambassador to Madagascar and Ambassador to the Union of the Comoros, I will safeguard U.S. interests, and I will strengthen our relationship with the peoples and governments in these nations. We enjoy positive relationships with Madagascar and Comoros as we partner with them to address their many domestic, regional, and global challenges.

We have an opportunity in the next few years to support the Malagasy and Comorian people in their upcoming presidential elections in order to reinforce democratic principles, to advocate for full and open political participation, and to press for the protection of human rights. Strong democratic institutions and stability are the precursors to resilient and sustainable development.

If confirmed, my team and I would support the independent democratic aspirations in Madagascar and Comoros and would seek to counter malign influences and disinformation.

These two nations sit at the maritime crossroads between the Indian Ocean, Africa, and the Atlantic, and they deserve our increased strategic attention. The sea lanes linking these regions are an important geostrategic maritime transit route. The region's largest deep-water port is situated at the northern tip of Madagascar. Oil and gas reserves in the area, including potential large reserves off of the coast of Madagascar, have attracted interest and investment from countries who do not always prioritize these nations' long-term security interests.

Stability in the region is also threatened by climate change, creating serious humanitarian, economic, and environmental crises. An extended drought in Southern Madagascar has thrown 1.4 million people into food insecurity and has caused internal migration that threatens unique ecosystems. COVID-19 has brought significant health and economic challenges, and there is an urgent need for additional vaccine doses.

Of course, if confirmed, encouraging U.S. trade, protecting U.S. investment, and promoting greater economic self-sufficiency would be top priorities. We have robust development assistance programs and collaborate closely with other international partners.

If confirmed, I can commit to advancing these efforts, as well as combatting threats to Madagascar's biodiversity. I would look forward to working with the Peace Corps to resume its historically vibrant programs in Madagascar and in Comoros.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and distinguished members of the committee, thank you so much for the opportunity to speak with you today. If confirmed, I would serve proudly as the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Madagascar and to the Union of the Comoros. I welcome advice from you and your staff on United States' interests in this region.

And one of the highlights of my Foreign Service career has always been facilitating the visits of Members of Congress in the countries where I served, and I would hope to host you and/or your staff in the future.

And I welcome any questions. Thank you, sir.

[The prepared statement of Ms. Pierangelo follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF CLAIRE PIERANGELO

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee as Ambassador to the Republic of Madagascar and to the Union of the Comoros.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank my family and friends who have supported me throughout my career: My parents, the late Dr. Anthony and Mrs. Rose Pierangelo, who lived their lives helping others and who would have been thrilled to be here today. My beloved sons Luca and Nicholas Pierangelo, who have been my intrepid travel companions and my most avid supporters. My brothers and their families and my friends who always made sure we had a welcoming home upon our return.

Mr. Chairman, I have served across four continents, from Cold War Europe to a newly independent Haiti to a Southeast Asia in transition and now in a challenged West Africa. These were often tough, sometimes dangerous environments. I have led teams working on economic reform, public health crises, violent extremism and terrorism, and the challenges posed by lack of democratic institutions and rule of law. I have worked closely with our Department of Defense colleagues on disaster management, maritime security and as an assistant professor at the National War College. As a San Diego native, I was an avid student of the challenges of wildlife conservation through the San Diego Zoo Wildlife Alliance and I have carried that passion throughout my career.

If confirmed to be concurrently Ambassador to the Republic of Madagascar and Ambassador to the Union of the Comoros, I will safeguard U.S. interests and strengthen our relationships with the peoples and governments in these nations. We enjoy positive relationships with Madagascar and Comoros as we partner with them to address their many domestic, regional and global challenges.

With the upcoming presidential elections in Madagascar in 2023, and in Comoros in 2024, we have an opportunity to partner with the Malagasy and Comorian people to reinforce democratic principles, to advocate for full and open political participation, and to press for the protection of human rights. Fair and transparent electoral processes would strengthen democracy and support stability, a precursor to fostering resilient and sustainable development. If confirmed, my team would support the independent democratic aspirations in Madagascar and Comoros and would seek to counter malign influence and disinformation.

These two nations sit at the maritime crossroads of the Indian Ocean, Africa and the Atlantic and deserve our increased strategic attention. The sea lanes linking Madagascar, Comoros and East Africa are an important geostrategic transit route for tankers and other maritime traffic. The region's largest deep-water port is situated at the northern tip of Madagascar. Oil and gas reserves in the area, including potential large reserves off western Madagascar itself, are attracting interest and investment from countries who do not always prioritize these nations' long-term security.

Stability in the region is also threatened by climate change, creating serious humanitarian, economic, and environmental crises. Southern Madagascar has suffered an extended drought, throwing more than 1.4 million people into food insecurity and causing internal migration that threatens unique ecosystems. COVID-19 has brought significant health and economic challenges to Madagascar and Comoros and there is an urgent need for additional vaccine doses to protect their populations and combat this threat to the global community.

If confirmed, encouraging U.S. trade, protecting U.S. investment, and promoting greater economic self-sufficiency would be top priorities. The U.S. Mission to Madagascar, largely through USAID, has robust development assistance programs, and collaborates closely with other international partners. Our efforts are focused on providing basic healthcare, primary education, and emergency food aid in the south; combatting wildlife trafficking and corruption; and promoting good governance, and economic development. If confirmed, I commit to advancing these efforts, as well as combatting threats to Madagascar's biodiversity, including illegal fishing, deforestation, and unsustainable harvesting of its unique flora and fauna. I would look forward to working with the Peace Corps to resume its historically vibrant programs in Madagascar and Comoros.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, distinguished members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to speak with you today. If confirmed, I would serve proudly as the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Madagascar and the Union of the Comoros. I welcome advice from you and your staff on the United States' interests in Madagascar and Comoros. One of the highlights of my Foreign Service Career has been facilitating the visits of members of Congress to the countries where I served and I hope to host you or your staff in the future. I welcome any questions.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you to all of our testifiers.

Before I start my own questions, I have some general questions that speak to the importance that this committee places on responsiveness by all officials in the executive branch. I would like to ask each of you to provide a simple yes or no answer to the following questions.

Do you agree to appear before this committee and make officials from your office available to the committee and designated staff, when invited?

Ambassador HOLGATE. Yes.

Ms. MCCLELLAND. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG. Yes.

Ms. PIERANGELO. Yes.

Senator SCHATZ. Do you commit to keeping the committee fully and currently informed about the activities under your purview?

Ambassador HOLGATE. Yes.

Ms. MCCLELLAND. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG. Yes.

Ms. PIERANGELO. Yes.

Senator SCHATZ. Do you commit to engaging in meaningful consultation when policies are being developed, and not just providing notification after the fact?

Ambassador HOLGATE. Yes.

Ms. MCCLELLAND. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG. Yes.

Ms. PIERANGELO. Yes.

Senator SCHATZ. Finally, do you commit to promptly responding to requests for briefings and information requested by the committee and its designated staff?

Ambassador HOLGATE. Yes.

Ms. MCCLELLAND. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG. Yes.

Ms. PIERANGELO. Yes.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you.

My first question is for Ambassador Holgate. Ambassador, one of the most difficult issues that the IAEA has to manage is verifying and monitoring Iran's nuclear program. The Director General of the IAEA said in a recent report that Iran is stonewalling its investigation into past activities and jeopardizing important monitoring work. Can you talk about how the United States can best support the IAEA's effort to monitor Iran?

Ambassador HOLGATE. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I agree that this is a critical requirement and important mission of the U.S. team, both here in Washington and in Vienna. And I know that the team has been working very closely with Director General Grossi to be sure he has everything he needs to do that in the way of political as well as financial and technical support.

I think it is critical, too, for—if I were to be confirmed, for the U.S. Ambassador in Vienna to lead coordination with the other diplomatic community there in Vienna and to provide support and information as requested by the agency to help them do their work. This is obviously a whole-of-government effort that is led here in Washington. I have not been fully briefed on the details of the U.S. policies and decision-making there, but I know what it is like to be the Vienna face of those policies, and if confirmed, I am fully ready to play that role.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you very much.

The IAEA's Peaceful Uses Initiative has helped more than 150 countries harness nuclear science to address real world challenges. We have seen radiotracers help track marine plastics, radiolabeled molecules help to improve vaccines against infectious diseases, and climate is another area where there is a lot of potential not just in terms of nuclear energy. Can you talk about how the IAEA can help countries to use nuclear science and technology to combat the climate crisis?

Ambassador HOLGATE. Mr. Chairman, I think that is a really important and fascinating topic. When I was in Vienna before, that was my very first visit offsite was to the U.N.'s—the IAEA laboratory in Seibersdorf outside Vienna, where they are undertaking this research, and the U.S. has been at the forefront of raising funds to update that laboratory. The new so-called renewals lab is now operating and has significantly increased its capability to train member states' representatives in some of the technologies that you have described, whether sterile insect technique or isotopic tracing or the full range of application of nuclear science.

I am proud that the U.S. Government has been supportive of this effort through the Peaceful Uses Initiative and through its voluntary contributions to the technical cooperation budget. And if confirmed, I would continue to advocate for such contributions and to make sure that those who receive the contributions understand that they come from the United States and that they represent support by the United States of their development ambition.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you very much.

Ambassador Hagerty?

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you, Chairman Schatz.

And I would like to come back to the first question that you brought up with Ms. Holgate pertaining to Iran and their malign behavior. The Biden administration is seeking to rejoin the 2015 Iran nuclear deal. It is an agreement that did not receive the advice and consent of the United States Senate. It is an agreement that I feel is deeply flawed.

Since 2018, the IAEA, which is the world's nuclear watchdog, has continued to investigate new evidence of undeclared nuclear materials and activities in Iran. In 2019 and in 2020, the IAEA found evidence of undeclared uranium particles in three sites in Iran, which could indicate potential covert Iranian nuclear activities.

So far, Iran has stalled the IAEA's investigation, including their access to nuclear science. Iran has removed and covered up evidence, and Iran has provided so-called explanations that the nuclear watchdog deems not technically credible.

Under the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty, Iran is required to declare to IAEA inspectors its use of nuclear material, its sites where it uses such material, and sites where it carries out sensitive nuclear activities. And I want to be clear here, Iran's obligations to the IAEA are completely separate from the nuclear deal, and they endure regardless of what happens with the Iran nuclear deal status.

So, Ambassador Holgate, I would like to come back and just be clear. Do you agree that Iran is actively frustrating, even stonewalling, the IAEA's ongoing investigation of undeclared Iranian nuclear activities?

Ambassador HOLGATE. Ranking Member Hagerty, I do understand that that is the case.

Senator HAGERTY. I am glad you agree. Do you believe that Iran is in compliance with the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty?

Ambassador HOLGATE. I think the issues that are going on with both current and historical activities create grave concerns about Iran's commitment to safeguards and to peaceful uses, and that is why the United States has been supporting Director General Grossi's efforts to return Iran to a compliance state with its safeguards requirements.

Senator HAGERTY. Well, I certainly think what you are saying is that they are not in compliance. They certainly cannot be in compliance if they are not willing to answer IAEA questions on undeclared nuclear activities. Would you agree with that?

Ambassador HOLGATE. Sir, I have not been briefed on the intelligence details of the current concerns about Iran. So I would hesitate to draw a strong conclusion on that.

Senator HAGERTY. Well, let us move on. The IAEA's Director General has issued several reports on Iran that make it clear that that IAEA has serious outstanding concerns regarding possible undeclared nuclear material and the activities that are taking place in Iran today. Due to Iran's lack of cooperation, the fact that Iran is limiting verification and access by international nuclear inspectors, the IAEA's Director General has reported that the agency is having a difficult time ensuring that Iran's nuclear program is exclusively peaceful.

And in a recent development, the IAEA said last Sunday that Iran has failed to honor the terms of a deal struck 2 weeks ago to let international nuclear inspectors into Iran to access and repair equipment for monitoring nuclear materials and activities. Again, activities that likely are being diverted to military purposes.

Iran and the IAEA have made this recent deal as Iran faced the prospect of a formal censure by the IAEA Board of Governors for its obstructionism. So, Ambassador Holgate, if you are confirmed, do you commit to advocating for the United States to use its voice and vote on the 35-nation IAEA Board of Governors in order to hold Iran accountable for its ongoing noncompliance with its nuclear obligations and to censure Iran for repeatedly frustrating the international watchdog's ongoing investigation of Iran's undeclared nuclear activities?

Ambassador HOLGATE. Senator Hagerty, I can certainly say that, if confirmed, I will use the U.S. voice and vote in the Board of Governors to promote a full return of Iran to IAEA safeguards compliance and to make sure the Director General has the tools he needs to do that.

Senator HAGERTY. Well, I appreciate that. I think it is incumbent upon the United States to hold egregious proliferators like Iran accountable. The position that you will be going into will provide that opportunity, and I certainly hope and expect that you will use every bit of United States influence to make certain that we hold actors like Iran and their malign behavior to full account.

Thank you, and I yield my time back, Mr. Chairman.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you very much.

Senator Cardin?

Senator CARDIN. Well, Mr. Chairman, thank you very much.

And to all four of our nominees, thank you for your careers of public service. We very much appreciate your willingness to continue to serve our country. You all are certainly very well experienced and qualified for the positions that you have been nominated to.

Ms. Holgate, I am going to continue with the IAEA for one moment, if I might? In July, I did have an opportunity to be in Vienna, and I did meet with the Director General Grossi. And I must tell you, I am impressed by his leadership at the IAEA. But I want to come at this from a little bit different position.

He made an interesting observation, and I want to get your view on this. That the IAEA itself, you talk about having the capacity to deal with, for example, the JCPOA, and he pointed out that the IAEA was constructed based upon member countries being friendly or cooperative to how the IAEA would operate, that they would be willing partners.

Well, obviously, Iran is not a willing partner. So my question to you, and this follows up a little bit on Senator Hagerty's point. Do we need to look at some changes at the IAEA, recognizing that Iran is not an honest broker here, that they will never be an honest broker, and that we need to have the authorities within IAEA that would not necessarily be needed in a country that is more cooperative?

Ambassador HOLGATE. Thank you, Senator Cardin. That is a very interesting question and one that I have not yet discussed with the State Department colleagues that I would be working with, if confirmed.

The IAEA is nested within the broader U.N. system, and the responsibilities for actions, mandatory actions are sited with the U.N. Security Council. The IAEA Board of Governors has the opportunity to refer issues to the Security Council when they are not available to be addressed within the mandate of the agency.

I think there are interesting opportunities with the upcoming Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty review conference to consider whether the underlying treaty that governs these issues can be strengthened and accountability tools can be added or improved. And I would look forward to participating in any conversations around those topics, if I am confirmed in this role.

Senator CARDIN. Would you commit to this committee that when you are confirmed, that you will come back to us with your evaluation as to the capacity of the IAEA to be able to enforce agreements in regards to Iran so that we have an honest—it can be done in an open or closed session, but that you would share with us your belief as to how effective the IAEA can be under its arrangement under United Nations in monitoring the activities of Iran?

Ambassador HOLGATE. Senator, if I am confirmed, I would be happy to make that commitment to you and the committee.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you. I appreciate that.

Ms. Pierangelo, I want to talk a little bit about Madagascar and also Comoros. Both countries have significant corruption problems. President Biden has indicated that corruption is a core national concern of the United States, a national security interest concern of the United States.

We are asking those missions that are in countries that have significant challenges on corruption to build up their internal capacity within the mission to deal with corruption. So do we have your commitment that this will be a high priority, if you are confirmed, to be able to have the capacity within your mission to understand the challenges in the countries and to be able to provide technical help and assistance for anti-corruption measures?

Ms. PIERANGELO. Senator Cardin, I would look forward to that, if confirmed. You know, fundamentally accountable institutions sustained by a commitment to the rule of law, transparency are essential to creating a climate whether you are talking about political stability or economic stability. We need to have that as a precursor.

So our mission I know is working very diligently on this issues, and sir, we would welcome any additional resources. And I certainly would commit that once I am on the ground, if confirmed, I will do my own personal assessment with my team to assess what we need and how we would deploy it.

So, thank you, sir. That would be very welcome.

Senator CARDIN. And I will just end on this. There is legislation that our committee has already acted on that would require our missions to rate how well countries are doing in regards to fighting corruption based upon a tier rating system similar to what we use in trafficking in humans. I would ask that you help us and support us in getting that type of legislation to the finish line.

I recognize you will not have a direct role to play in this. Believe me, I understand that. But if we had that in place, then it makes it easier in your bilateral relationship to point out that this is a policy requirement that requires attention in every country that the United States have missions.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will yield back my time.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you, Senator Cardin. Do we have Senator Van Hollen online?

[No response.]

Senator SCHATZ. Senator Booker?

[No response.]

Senator SCHATZ. Any other members of the Foreign Relations Committee wishing to ask the nominees any questions?

[No response.]

Senator SCHATZ. Ranking Member Hagerty, anything else?

Senator HAGERTY. I would just applaud your chairmanship today, Senator Schatz. I appreciate all the candidates being with us.

I am going to submit a number of additional questions through the QFR process, and I want to congratulate you on a very well-conducted hearing.

Thank you.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you very much. Pleasure to work with you, and thanks to the staff of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee as well as my staff and everybody for being willing to serve, and especially their families.

If there are no more questions for our witnesses, the record will remain open until the close of business on Friday, October 1 for questions. I would urge the nominees, if you get questions for the record, to answer them fully and expeditiously so that we can consider your nominations at a business meeting and get you marked up and get you confirmed as quickly as possible.

With the thanks of the committee for your willingness to serve, this hearing is adjourned.

Ambassador HOLGATE. Thank you very much.

Ms. PIERANGELO. Thank you, sir, and to all the members of the committee, thank you for your time.

[Whereupon, at 10:46 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO HON. LAURA S.H. HOLGATE BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question. Serious concerns have been raised about the ability of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) to verify and monitor Iran's comprehensive safeguard agreement. Iran continues to stonewall the IAEA's investigation into undeclared nuclear materials and activities that were uncovered in 2018 and is refusing to allow the IAEA to access critical monitoring equipment. The Joint Statement between Iran and IAEA Director General Rafael Grossi issued on September 12th, 2021 was wholly inadequate in addressing these issues.

- How is Iran's stonewalling of the IAEA, which it has suffered no penalty for, impacting the credibility of the agency?

Answer. I believe the IAEA is highly credible in the implementation of its verification "watchdog" mission and it is in the U.S. interest that it remain so. For that reason, if confirmed, I will strongly support the IAEA's ongoing investigation in Iran into indications of possible undeclared nuclear material and, along with the rest of the international community, expect full Iranian cooperation with inspectors-without delay-as the IAEA works toward conclusions.

Question. What impact is Iran's refusal to cooperate with the IAEA having on the global non-proliferation regime?

Answer. IAEA safeguards are implemented for the purpose of providing assurances regarding the peaceful use of nuclear energy and are an essential element of maintaining the credibility and effectiveness of the global nonproliferation regime. Iran is obligated under its NPT-required safeguards agreement to declare to the IAEA nuclear material and nuclear activities in Iran. Iran's failure to provide substantive or technically credible responses to the IAEA's questions related to possible undeclared nuclear materials and activities in Iran is cause for serious concern because of both what it suggests for Iran's intentions and its implications for the global non-proliferation regime. Thus, it is vital that Iran provide such responses to the IAEA, and if confirmed, I will strongly support the IAEA's ongoing investigation and, along with the rest of the international community, expect full Iranian cooperation with inspectors without delay.

Question. Iran is currently denying IAEA requests for access to nuclear sites and is resisting providing the IAEA with a complete nuclear declaration. Do you think other states will follow Iran's example?

Answer. Article III of the Non-Proliferation Treaty requires all non-nuclear weapons states to accept IAEA safeguards in order to ensure that nuclear material is not diverted for non-peaceful uses. If confirmed, I will continue the United States' long-standing support for the IAEA and its mandate to ensure that all countries, including Iran, adhere to their safeguards obligations.

Question. Why was a resolution criticizing Iran's unwillingness to cooperate with the IAEA withdrawn before the last IAEA Board of Governors meeting?

Answer. As I was outside of government at the time of the last IAEA Board of Governors meeting, I am not in a position to comment on any internal deliberations among Board members regarding potential actions related to the IAEA's ongoing attempts to engage Iran on unresolved questions related to its safeguards agreement. If confirmed, I will strongly support the IAEA's ongoing investigation in Iran into indications of possible undeclared nuclear material and, along with the rest of the international community, expect full Iranian cooperation with inspectors-without delay-as the IAEA works toward conclusions. President Biden has made clear he is committed to ensuring that Iran never acquires a nuclear weapon.

Question. In your opinion what impact are Iran's limitations on the IAEA having on the agency's ability to monitor and verify Iran's nuclear program?

Answer. I share the concerns reported by IAEA Director General in September that Iran's decision to stop implementing its nuclear-related commitments under the JCPOA, including the Additional Protocol, is seriously undermining the IAEA's verification and monitoring activities. If confirmed, I will work to press Iran to provide the IAEA with full and immediate cooperation as it seeks to both monitor and verify Iran's JCPOA nuclear commitments as well as resolve ongoing questions related to Iran's safeguards agreement.

Question. The IAEA monitors Iranian compliance with the July 2015 Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA) provisions. Some the provisions of the nuclear agreement require addition IAEA access beyond those of Iran's comprehensive safeguards agreement. Tehran has stopped complying with many of these provisions while at the same time vastly expanding its nuclear program.

- Do you believe the United States should rejoin the JCPOA if Iran refuses to allow a full IAEA investigation into the undeclared nuclear materials and activities it uncovered in 2018?

Answer. President Biden has made clear he is committed to ensuring that Iran never acquires a nuclear weapon, and that the JCPOA is still the best diplomatic option for addressing the threats posed by Iran's nuclear activities. If confirmed, I will strongly support the IAEA's ongoing investigation in Iran into indications of possible undeclared nuclear material and, along with the rest of the international community, expect full Iranian cooperation with inspectors-without delay-as the IAEA works toward conclusions.

Question. Is the current gap in IAEA monitoring of Iranian centrifuge activities increasingly the level of uncertainty around how many and what types of centrifuges Iran has produced and assembled this year?

Answer. The IAEA Director General reported in September that lack of access to the IAEA's monitoring equipment is seriously compromising the IAEA's ability to maintain continuity of knowledge over Iran's nuclear-related activities. If confirmed, I will work to press Iran to provide the IAEA with full and immediate cooperation as it seeks to both monitor and verify Iran's JCPOA nuclear commitments as well as resolve ongoing questions related to Iran's safeguards agreement.

Question. Do you agree that Iran over the last 12 months has made significant technical progress in key nuclear areas? If so will this progress require alterations to the JCPOA in order to sustain the original objective of a 12 month breakout time?

Answer. Iran's continued efforts to advance its nuclear program, and in particular its uranium enrichment capabilities, are a cause for serious concern. Although I defer to the intelligence community on questions related to the impact of Iran's nuclear advances on its fissile material breakout timeline, the Biden administration has been clear that such advances make it more difficult to restore the nonproliferation benefits originally achieved by the JCPOA. If confirmed, I will work with Special Envoy Malley and his team to ensure the strongest possible IAEA verification and monitoring of Iran's nuclear program.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO HON. LAURA S.H. HOLGATE BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. Iranian officials have recently sexually harassed and intimidated female IAEA inspectors. What should we do if this behavior continues?

Answer. I am very concerned about reports that IAEA inspectors are experiencing inappropriate treatment at the hands of Iranian security personnel. Such behavior and any attempt to intimidate IAEA inspectors is unacceptable and, if confirmed, I will work in close coordination with other members of the IAEA Board of Governors to ensure that the Board takes appropriate action in the event that the Director General reports additional incidents. The IAEA Director General and the Secretariat will have the United States' full support on these matters.

Question. On 9/26/2021, the IAEA said Iran had failed to honor the terms of a deal struck two weeks ago letting IAEA inspectors in to service monitoring equipment in the country. Iran and the IAEA had made this recent deal as Iran faced the prospect of a formal censure by the IAEA Board of Governors.

- Given Iran's failure to abide by this agreement, should the U.S. use its voice and vote to pursue a formal censure by the Board of Governors?
- Why or why not?

Answer. The Biden administration has been clear that Iran must follow through on the commitments it made in the September 12 Joint Statement with the IAEA, including by providing the IAEA with needed access to service its monitoring equipment and inviting the Director General to Tehran for discussions related to unresolved safeguards issues. If confirmed, I will work in close coordination with Special Envoy Malley as well as the IAEA Board of Governors to insist that Iran provides full and immediate cooperation with the IAEA as it seeks to verify both Iran's safeguards agreement as well as its JCPOA nuclear-related activities.

Question. The IAEA said in a September report, “Since 23 February 2021, the Agency’s verification and monitoring of activities have been seriously undermined as a result of Iran’s decision to stop the implementation of its nuclear related commitments.” Given this statement, how much confidence can we have in present Iranian negotiations and statements?

Answer. I share the concerns reported by IAEA Director General in September that Iran’s decision to stop implementing its nuclear-related commitments under the JCPOA, including the Additional Protocol, is seriously undermining the IAEA’s verification and monitoring activities. If confirmed, I will work to press Iran to provide the IAEA with full and immediate cooperation as it seeks to both monitor and verify Iran’s JCPOA nuclear commitments as well as resolve ongoing questions related to Iran’s safeguards agreement.

Question. Will you commit to supporting a thorough IAEA investigation in Iran to ascertain the nature and status of its nuclear program, including necessary requests for access to military sites, personnel, and documentation, to ensure the end of Tehran’s nuclear weapons program and activities?

Answer. If confirmed, I will strongly support the IAEA’s ongoing investigation in Iran into indications of possible undeclared nuclear material, including all requests for information and access deemed necessary by the Director General and the Secretariat. As the IAEA Board of Governors has made clear, Iran must provide full cooperation with the IAEA without further delay.

Question. What would you do to encourage the IAEA to investigate Iran’s potentially ongoing nuclear weaponization work, which the nuclear archive indicates Tehran hid and dispersed at research institutes, universities, and military sites after 2003?

Answer. Iran is obligated under its NPT-required safeguards agreement to declare to the IAEA nuclear material and nuclear activities in Iran. If confirmed, I will strongly support the IAEA’s verification and monitoring activities in Iran, including the IAEA’s ongoing efforts to investigate questions related to undeclared nuclear materials and activities in Iran.

Question. Considering Iran’s failure to address the IAEA’s questions on undeclared nuclear materials and activities, do you believe Iran is in compliance with the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty?

Answer. I have serious concerns about Iran’s compliance with the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty in light of the IAEA’s ongoing safeguards investigations and Iran’s failure to provide the IAEA with the cooperation necessary to resolve them. Iran must engage and cooperate fully with the IAEA in a way that leads to credible, concrete progress and toward resolution of these issues. I have full confidence in the IAEA to pursue any indications of undeclared or diverted nuclear material that could contribute to any renewed Iranian pursuit of a nuclear weapon.

Question. Do you think the Biden administration should commit to not lifting or waving sanctions on Iran until Iran—among other demands—fully and credibly complies with the IAEA’s requests to resolve the outstanding issues on undeclared nuclear materials and activities?

Answer. I share the views of the Biden administration and the IAEA Board of Governors that Iran must provide full cooperation with the IAEA without further delay. If confirmed, I will strongly support the IAEA’s ongoing investigation in Iran into indications of possible undeclared nuclear material and will work closely with our partners and allies as well as the IAEA to ensure that Iran provides the IAEA with the necessary cooperation.

Question. Is it possible for the IAEA Board of Governors to truly hold Iran accountable, if the Board’s main recourse is snapping back all U.N. sanctions on Iran and ending JCPOA—a deal that the Biden administration has said it hopes to revive?

Answer. The IAEA Board of Governors has the ability to hold Iran accountable to its nuclear-related commitments under the JCPOA and its NPT-related safeguards obligations, including through authorities it has under the IAEA Statute with respect to safeguards compliance and its actions in support of the JCPOA participants. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that the IAEA makes full use of its authorities as it works to monitor Iran’s implementation of its JCPOA nuclear-related commitments and continues its investigation of questions related to undeclared nuclear material in Iran.

Question. Doesn't the desire to revive the JCPOA actually create a dynamic that discourages IAEA Member States from taking Iran's safeguards violations to the U.N. Security Council?

Answer. Iran's legal obligations under its safeguards agreement with the IAEA are separate from its JCPOA nuclear-related commitments. Iran is obligated under its NPT-required safeguards agreement to declare to the IAEA nuclear material and nuclear activities in Iran. If confirmed, I will strongly support the IAEA's ongoing investigation in Iran into indications of possible undeclared nuclear material and, along with the rest of the international community, expect full Iranian cooperation with inspectors-without delay-as the IAEA works toward conclusions.

Question. What would you do to end Iran's use of extortion—escalating to take threatening and dangerous actions, then demanding concessions from the U.S. to solve and problem it created?

Answer. Iran's nuclear escalations have implications for both its nuclear-related commitments under the JCPOA and its legal obligations under its safeguards agreement with the IAEA. If confirmed, I will strongly support the IAEA's monitoring and verification activities in Iran so that our response to Iran's actions with respect to its nuclear program is informed by timely and detailed reporting from the IAEA.

Question. What is your position on the use of the snapback mechanism at the U.N.? Does the U.S. have the authority to call for its use?

Answer. The snapback mechanism was designed to provide leverage to help ensure Iran performed its commitments under the JCPOA. The Trump administration invoked snapback in a way that was never contemplated by the deal, namely after unilaterally exiting it. Virtually none of our allies or partners recognized this invocation of snapback. The Biden administration believes that the United States will be in a stronger position to counter the full range of threats posed by Iran, including its nuclear program, by working in close concert with our allies and partners. On specific questions related to the legal authority available to the United States in connection with the snapback mechanism under U.N. Security Council resolution 2231, I would defer to the U.S. Mission to the United Nations as well as the Department's Office of the Legal Adviser.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO HON. LAURA S.H. HOLGATE BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question. Iran has made a number of breaches of its commitments under the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA) after President Trump unilaterally withdrew the United States from the agreement in 2018 and re-imposed sanctions. In your view, is a diplomatic resolution or the use of military force the most effective and lasting way to prevent a nuclear armed Iran?

Answer. The administration believes that diplomatic efforts to achieve a mutual return to compliance with the JCPOA are the best path forward at this time to prevent Iran from ever acquiring a nuclear weapon.

Question. On Sept. 15th, the United States, United Kingdom, and Australia announced AUKUS—a trilateral security agreement that will supply Australia with nuclear propelled submarines. As the U.S. Ambassador to the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), will you encourage Australia to adopt the Additional Protocol to its IAEA Comprehensive Safeguards Agreement and/or take other steps that require strong nonproliferation standards for other non-nuclear weapon countries who may seek a nuclear propulsion program of their own?

Answer. Australia was the first country to bring into force an Additional Protocol to its IAEA Comprehensive Safeguards Agreement, doing so in December 1997. As President Biden said in announcing this partnership: "Our governments will now launch an 18-month consultation period to determine every element of this program . . . We'll all undertake this effort in a way that reflects the longstanding leadership in global nonproliferation and rigorous verification standards, in partnership and consultation with the International Atomic Energy Agency." As announced, over the 18-month consultation period, the shared objective of maintaining the strength of the non-proliferation regime and Australia's exemplary non-proliferation credentials will be central to the three countries' discussions. If confirmed, I will work to reinforce this effort.

Question. I am concerned about press reports that the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia is moving quickly to master the early stages of the nuclear fuel cycle with cooperation from China and outside IAEA safeguards. If confirmed, what specific steps will you take to encourage Saudi Arabia to rescind its Small Quantities Protocol and adopt the Additional Protocol?

Answer. Saudi Arabia is a party to the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) and a strong security partner of the United States. Under the NPT, it is obligated not to acquire nuclear weapons and to accept IAEA safeguards to verify the non-diversion of nuclear material to weapons purposes. If confirmed, I would work to ensure that Saudi Arabia continues to abide by these important nonproliferation obligations and encourage Saudi Arabia to take further steps, including rescinding its Small Quantities Protocol and bringing into force an Additional Protocol.

Question. Given Crown Prince Mohammad bin Salman's statement in 2018 that "if Iran developed a nuclear bomb, we will follow suit as soon as possible," what concerns, if any, do you have that a maturing Saudi Arabia nuclear program would remain exclusively peaceful?

Answer. Saudi Arabia is a party to the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) and a strong security partner of the United States. Under the NPT, it is obligated not to acquire nuclear weapons and to accept IAEA safeguards to verify the non-diversion of nuclear material to weapons purposes. If confirmed, I would work to ensure that Saudi Arabia continues to abide by these important nonproliferation obligations and encourage Saudi Arabia to take further steps, including rescinding its Small Quantities Protocol and bringing into force an Additional Protocol.

Question. As the Senior Director on the National Security Council in the Obama administration, you served as the "Sherpa" or organizer for the Nuclear Summit process that saw roughly fifty countries eliminate and secure fissile material from their civilian stocks. Given the difficulty to reach consensus in the Conference on Disarmament on a fissile material cutoff treaty, would you support an ad hoc convening of countries, modeled on the Nuclear Security Summit process, to lead countries to make commitments that secure and reduce highly enriched uranium and plutonium, and perhaps weapons, from their non-civilian stocks?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue efforts to cooperate with countries aimed at securing and eliminating excess weapon-usable nuclear material, including by encouraging additional subscribers and actions under IAEA Information Circular (INFCIRC) 912 "Joint Statement on Minimizing and Eliminating the Use of Highly Enriched Uranium in Civilian Applications" and related INFCIRCS, such as INFCIRC/908 "Joint Statement on Mitigating Insider Threats" and INFCIRC/909 "Joint Statement on Transport Security of Nuclear Materials," that resulted from the Nuclear Security Summit process. I will also support the IAEA's convening additional International Conferences on Nuclear Security and Review Conferences of the Amended Convention on Physical Protection of Nuclear Materials, which create opportunities for countries to make pledges regarding their voluntary application of IAEA nuclear security guidelines to non-civilian nuclear materials. Similarly, national reporting under United Nations Security Council Resolution 1540 offers a platform for national statements regarding non-civilian nuclear materials. If confirmed, I would encourage states to follow the lead of the United States in reporting on their measures for securing and reducing non-civilian nuclear materials.

Question. If confirmed, in what ways will you work to educate Members of Congress and the American public about the technical advances of the International Monitoring Stations (IMS) and the International Data Centre since the U.S. Senate last considered a resolution of ratification of CTBT in 1999? Based on your experience, what degree of confidence does the United States have that it can detect a low-yield nuclear explosion and how would unlocking the on-site inspection provision of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test Ban Treaty (CTBT), through entry into force, assist with verification?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with Congress to highlight the significant technological advances in both the U.S. National Technical Means (NTM) as well as the capabilities of the International Monitoring System (IMS) that the CTBT establishes. The IMS is now nearly 90 percent complete, composed of more than 300 facilities, employing four separate technologies, that provide data and analytical products to the CTBT signatory States. While no remote monitoring system has the capability to detect nuclear explosions with extremely low yield, once in force the treaty's on-site inspection capability will allow the deployment of inspectors using a broad array of close-in techniques and equipment to look for evidence of a nuclear explosion.

Question. If North Korea has observed a moratorium on nuclear test explosions since 2017 but it remains one of the eight Annex II countries who have yet to ratify the CTBT required for the treaty to enter into force. Should North Korea's adoption of the CTBT be priority in future U.S. negotiations with North Korea on its nuclear program, and if not, why not?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration believes that a global, legally binding ban on nuclear explosive testing is in the national security interest of the United States. Entry into force of the CTBT will enhance our efforts to prevent the further proliferation of nuclear weapons. The administration will take all appropriate opportunities to encourage ratification by the remaining Annex 2 states, including North Korea.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. LAURA S.H. HOLGATE BY SENATOR TED CRUZ

Question. Since 2007, it has nearly always been the position of the United States that Iran is not a member in good standing within the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT). Even pursuant to the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA), Iran would not have returned to being a member in good standing until the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) reached a "Broader Conclusion" (BC) verifying the exclusively peaceful nature of Iran's nuclear program. In April 2019, then-nominee to be Special Representative for Nuclear Nonproliferation Jeffrey L. Eberhardt confirmed in writing to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that "given Iran's past noncompliance with both its safeguards agreement and its NPT obligations, its failure to fully address IAEA questions related to past activities relevant to the development of a nuclear explosive device, and the emergence of new questions surrounding Iran's motives for retaining and concealing documents, equipment, and personnel related to its past nuclear weapons program, Iran's standing as a non-nuclear-weapon State Party to the NPT cannot be described as 'good.'"

- Do you agree with Mr. Eberhardt's assessment? If not, why not?

Answer. The United States has, including in the 2021 Compliance Report, indicated concern with regard to Iran's compliance with Article III of the Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT). Given Iran's past non-compliance with its obligations under the NPT and Iran's NPT-required safeguards agreement and its present failure to fully address the IAEA's current questions related to implementation of that safeguards agreement, Iran's standing as a non-nuclear-weapon State Party to the NPT cannot be described as "good."

Question. Do you consider Iran's past possession of the Nuclear Archive seized by Israel, including the materials in the Archive relevant to the development of nuclear weapons, to constitute non-compliance by Iran of its obligations under the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT)? If yes, please explain why. If no, please explain why.

Answer. I have serious concerns about Iran's compliance with the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT), and if confirmed, I will help implement U.S. policy to support the IAEA's work to monitor and assess Iran's compliance with its NPT-required safeguards agreement. Iran must cooperate fully with the IAEA to address the serious, outstanding issues related to potential undeclared nuclear material in Iran. As a non-nuclear-weapon State Party to the NPT, Iran is obligated not to manufacture or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons. Under the JCPOA, Iran reaffirmed this commitment, and if confirmed, I will work to prevent Iran from ever obtaining a nuclear weapon.

Question. Do you consider Iran's past concealment of the Nuclear Archive seized by Israel, including the materials in the Archive relevant to the development of nuclear weapons, to constitute non-compliance by Iran of its obligations under the NPT? If yes, please explain why. If no, please explain why.

Answer. Iran's long history of denial and concealment regarding its past nuclear weapons program is of serious concern. If confirmed, I will fully support the IAEA as it uses its safeguards authorities to investigate any indication of undeclared nuclear material or activities in Iran. I am committed to preventing Iran from ever acquiring a nuclear weapon.

Question. Do you believe that Iran should be entitled to the use of civilian nuclear technology even if they are not a member in good standing of the NPT? If yes, please explain why. If no, please explain why.

Answer. Article IV of the NPT recognizes the right of all the Parties to the Treaty, including Iran, to develop research, production and use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes without discrimination and in conformity with Articles I and II of the Treaty. Iran must, however, comply with its international obligations when undertaking nuclear activities, including its obligations under Article II of the NPT not to manufacture or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons and its NPT-required safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency. If confirmed, I will fully support the IAEA as it uses its safeguards authorities to investigate any indication of undeclared nuclear material or activities in Iran.

Question. Do you consider Iran to be entitled to benefit from nuclear technology pursuant to Article IV the NPT? If yes, please explain why. If no, please explain why.

Answer. Article IV of the NPT recognizes the right of all the Parties to the Treaty, including Iran, to develop research, production and use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes without discrimination and in conformity with Articles I and II of the Treaty. Iran must, however, comply with its international obligations when undertaking nuclear activities, including its obligation under Article II of the NPT not to manufacture or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons and its NPT-required safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency. If confirmed, I will fully support the IAEA as it uses its safeguards authorities to investigate any indication of undeclared nuclear material or activities in Iran.

Question. Do you consider Iran to be specifically entitled to benefit from nuclear technology pursuant to Article IV the NPT? If yes, please explain why. If no, please explain why.

Answer. Article IV of the NPT recognizes the right of all the Parties to the Treaty, including Iran, to develop research, production and use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes without discrimination and in conformity with Articles I and II of the Treaty. Iran must, however, comply with its international obligations when undertaking nuclear activities, including its obligation under Article II of the NPT not to manufacture or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons and its NPT-required safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency. If confirmed, I will fully support the IAEA as it uses its safeguards authorities to investigate any indication of undeclared nuclear material or activities in Iran.

Question. In 2015, you testified before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. When asked about the issue of Iran's possible military dimensions, you responded: "the JCPOA is focused on the future rather than the past." In 2017, you wrote, "The unusually intrusive verification measures contained in the JCPOA are a specific response to Iran's decades of deception regarding its nuclear activities,"

- Given we do not have a comprehensive accounting of Iran's PMD program, and taking into consideration Iran's decades of deception to the IAEA on its nuclear program, how is it possible to have an accurate appraisal of Iran's activities as they evolve, when the international community lacks a baseline for verification efforts?

Answer. The IAEA has reported significant concerns regarding potential undeclared nuclear material and activities in Iran, and we have full confidence in the Agency to pursue its critical verification and monitoring responsibilities there. It is essential that Iran fully comply with its legally binding obligations under the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty and its comprehensive safeguards agreement with the IAEA to resolve these important matters without further delay. If confirmed, I will support the IAEA's monitoring and verification activities in Iran.

Question. Despite the Board of Governor's December 2015 Final Assessment, which closed the chapter on PMDs in order to move forward with implementation of the JCPOA, the issue of Iran's possible military dimension remains outstanding.

- If confirmed, do you plan to reopen the PMD file? If not, why not?

Answer. President Biden has made clear he is committed to ensuring that Iran never acquires a nuclear weapon. If confirmed, I will strongly support the IAEA's monitoring and verification activities in Iran so that the IAEA can provide the strongest possible assurance that all nuclear materials in Iran remain in peaceful uses, and that Iran is not undertaking any undeclared nuclear activities.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO HON. LAURA S.H. HOLGATE BY SENATOR CHRIS VAN HOLLEN

Question. Under the new AUKUS partnership, the United States and United Kingdom will help Australia construct and operate nuclear-propelled submarines. This initiative presents an opportunity to set a strong precedent for establishing a system of IAEA safeguards on naval nuclear reactors under the jurisdiction of non-nuclear weapon states party to the NPT. Such a system should balance the need to protect sensitive military technology and facilities with the need to ensure against the diversion and misuse of nuclear materials used in naval propulsion.

- Would the supply of fabricated naval nuclear fuel by the United States or United Kingdom pose less of a proliferation risk than the development by Australia of indigenous enrichment and fuel fabrication capabilities designed to produce its own naval nuclear fuel?

Answer. As President Biden said in announcing the AUKUS partnership: “Our governments will now launch an 18-month consultation period to determine every element of this program . . . We’ll all undertake this effort in a way that reflects the longstanding leadership in global nonproliferation and rigorous verification standards, in partnership and consultation with the International Atomic Energy Agency.” As announced, over the 18-month consultation period, the shared objective of maintaining the strength of the non-proliferation regime and Australia’s exemplary non-proliferation credentials will be central to the discussions. If confirmed, I will support the United States’ longstanding policy of seeking to limit the spread of enrichment and reprocessing technologies around the world because of the proliferation risks those technologies pose.

Question. Would the reapplication of IAEA safeguards on spent fuel once discharged from naval nuclear reactors help address proliferation risks?

Answer. As President Biden said in announcing the AUKUS partnership: “We’ll all undertake this effort in a way that reflects the longstanding leadership in global nonproliferation and rigorous verification standards, in partnership and consultation with the International Atomic Energy Agency.” As the three partners have committed to engage with the IAEA throughout the coming months, and if confirmed, I will be fully committed to setting a high standard for international verification and implementing all obligations to the IAEA under our respective safeguards agreements.

Question. Do you believe the use of seals and other black-box safeguards equipment and techniques would help the IAEA maintain “continuity of knowledge” over the naval nuclear fuel cycle while protecting classified or sensitive military information and facilities?

Answer. As President Biden said in announcing this partnership: “We’ll all undertake this effort in a way that reflects the longstanding leadership in global nonproliferation and rigorous verification standards, in partnership and consultation with the International Atomic Energy Agency.” As the three partners have committed to engage with the IAEA throughout the coming months, and if confirmed, I will be fully committed to setting a high standard for international verification and implementing all obligations to the IAEA under our respective safeguards agreements.

Question. A longstanding objective of United States nonproliferation policy has been to make universal the adoption of the Additional Protocol (AP) and to establish it as a condition of international nuclear supply. There has been considerable progress on this front, and currently 137 states and Euratom have in force an AP with the IAEA.

Nevertheless, there remain major holdouts who have evinced little interest in bringing into force an AP with the IAEA. Brazil and Argentina possess significant nuclear infrastructures and enrich uranium indigenously, while Egypt and Saudi Arabia are looking to expand their own nuclear programs. Moreover, Russia and China are engaging in nuclear commerce with countries that do not have APs in force.

- What enticements and sticks can we use to encourage these holdouts to bring into force APs with the IAEA?

Answer. Achieving universal adherence to the Additional Protocol (AP) is a high priority for the United States. Zimbabwe recently brought the number of APs in force to 138. The United States raises this objective at all levels, including the Secretary of State, in diplomatic engagement on nonproliferation. In particular, the United States raises it in bilateral engagement with countries that have not yet brought an AP into force, including those mentioned here. If confirmed, I will continue to stress that implementation of the AP would build confidence and facilitate cooperation on the peaceful use of nuclear technology, and I will support the Department of Energy's active program to help states implement comprehensive safeguards agreements and APs. This assistance helps states that have limited technical capacity and helps dispel concerns and misconceptions about the AP.

Question. A longstanding objective of United States nonproliferation policy has been to make universal the adoption of the Additional Protocol (AP) and to establish it as a condition of international nuclear supply. There has been considerable progress on this front, and currently 137 states and Euratom have in force an AP with the IAEA.

Nevertheless, there remain major holdouts who have evinced little interest in bringing into force an AP with the IAEA. Brazil and Argentina possess significant nuclear infrastructures and enrich uranium indigenously, while Egypt and Saudi Arabia are looking to expand their own nuclear programs. Moreover, Russia and China are engaging in nuclear commerce with countries that do not have APs in force.

- How can we make progress on establishing the Additional Protocol as a condition of international nuclear supply?

Answer. The United States is committed to establishing the Additional Protocol (AP) as a condition of nuclear supply and plays a leading global role in stressing the AP as an instrument that facilitates increased peaceful nuclear cooperation. If confirmed, I will continue to work with nuclear suppliers to highlight the importance of the AP as a condition of nuclear supply both bilaterally and multilaterally, including in the Nuclear Suppliers Group.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. LAURA S.H. HOLGATE BY SENATOR BILL HAGERTY

Question. In 2015, the Iran nuclear deal artificially closed the IAEA's investigation into the "possible military dimensions" of Iran's nuclear program in 2015. But in 2018, the importance of re-opening this investigation became clear and obvious after Israel's revelation to the world that Iran possessed a massive secret archive on its efforts related to making nuclear weapons. If confirmed, will you commit to supporting an in-depth IAEA investigation in Iran to ascertain the nature and status of its nuclear program, including any necessary requests for access to military sites, to nuclear scientists and other personnel, and to documentation, in order to ensure the end of Iran's nuclear weapons program and Iran's activities related to nuclear weapons capability? Please begin your response with a yes or no.

Answer. President Biden has made clear he is committed to ensuring that Iran never acquires a nuclear weapon. If confirmed, I will strongly support the IAEA's monitoring and verification activities in Iran so that the IAEA can provide the strongest possible assurance that all nuclear material in Iran remains in peaceful uses, and that Iran is not undertaking any undeclared nuclear activities.

Question. Many United Nations agencies that deal with international drug trafficking and other international crimes are headquartered in Vienna, including the U.N. Office on Drugs and Crime, the International Narcotics Control Board, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the U.N. Transnational Organized Crime Convention Conference of States Parties, and the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice. Illegal narcotics, particularly fentanyl and related substances, are taking a dramatic toll on American youth. Much of this can be attributed to China, including fentanyl precursors and expertise to manufacture these substances. When you previously held this position, how did you leverage these organizations to fight this scourge of fentanyl and related substances, including holding China and other nations accountable for their actions in fueling it? If confirmed, how would you use policy, budget, and personnel decisions by these agencies to address the fentanyl crisis and opioid overdose epidemic? Do you commit, if confirmed, to using every possible measure at these organizations to combat the fentanyl production and smuggling that is affecting every state, and to keeping me and other committee members informed of your efforts?

Answer. The United States supports initiatives implemented by the U.N. Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) and its associated bodies that provide member states with guidance, resources, and tools to address the challenge of synthetic drugs and reduce global trafficking in synthetics and precursor chemicals. During my previous tenure, the United States led a successful global effort to place two of the main precursor chemicals used to produce fentanyl under international control and urge countries to take innovative national action against fentanyl and its precursors. If confirmed, I will further cooperate with the Vienna-based organizations and other member states to enhance member state capacity and collective action to counter the threat these substances pose, as well as engage with Congress to keep them informed.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO CARYN R. MCCELLAND BY SENATOR BILL HAGERTY

Question. If confirmed, one issue that you will immediately confront is China's inroads into Brunei and China's malign influence throughout Southeast Asia and the Indo-Pacific. Brunei sits on the South China Sea, much of which China falsely claims. Although Brunei has not been involved in the frequent incidents that some other South China Sea claimants have, it is an active participant in negotiations between ASEAN and China over these issues and over a possible Code of Conduct for parties in the region, especially as this year's chair of ASEAN. How would you characterize Brunei's approach to the disputes in the South China Sea? If confirmed as Ambassador, would you encourage Brunei to play a more active role in diplomacy in the South China Sea? Do you believe Brunei is willing to play such a role?

Answer. Like other South China Sea littoral states, Brunei's maritime claims overlap with the PRC's expansive and unlawful maritime claims. Both the United States and Brunei have a clear national interest in the peaceful resolution of disputes, unimpeded lawful commerce, and compliance with international law, including freedoms of navigation and overflight and other lawful uses of the sea. Brunei has been an active participant in ASEAN activities related to the South China Sea, including the ongoing negotiations of an ASEAN-China Code of Conduct. If confirmed, I will support Brunei's efforts to advocate for its rights and those of other Southeast Asian claimants in the South China Sea.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO DAVID JOHN YOUNG BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question. Corruption continues to be a major challenge for Malawi, with recent administrations facing high-profile corruption scandals and with low-level corruption being a daily reality for regular Malawians. What anti-corruption activities is the United States currently supporting in Malawi? Are they adequate in your view? If confirmed, in what areas will you advocate the U.S. focus its anti-corruption investments?

Answer. U.S. Mission programs, including a recently launched program with the Malawian Police Service, work to combat Malawi's endemic corruption. Training programs through the Public Affairs Section and other offices highlight the corrosive effect of corruption on Malawi's investment climate. USAID provides technical assistance to the Malawian Government, including embedded advisors who work hand in hand to combat corruption and pursue asset recovery. USAID works with local governments to put in place more accountable and transparent use of government resources. If confirmed, I plan to seek further avenues to combat corruption and improve governance at all levels.

Question. Like many countries in Africa, Malawi is facing a massive youth bulge. According to some estimates, more than half the population under the age of 18. Are there adequate educational and employment opportunities for Malawi's youth population? What U.S. assistance programs are focused on addressing any gaps in such opportunities? If confirmed, what steps will you take to ensure that U.S. assistance programs adequately address the potential destabilizing economic and political impacts the youth bulge can have in the face of inadequate economic opportunities?

Answer. Malawi faces major challenges in educating its youth, and illiteracy is widespread. USAID funds a wide variety of education programs benefitting students at the primary, secondary and tertiary levels. USAID has helped every primary schoolchild in Malawi have access to a schoolbook for the first time in the country's history. We partner with U.S. universities to expand digital online learning for all Malawi's public universities, particularly focusing on women students and those from marginalized communities. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that U.S. assistance programs address the challenges of the youth bulge, so that young people have path to improved educational and employment opportunities.

Question. What areas of U.S. assistance have been particularly impactful in Malawi with regards to economic diversification and growth? If confirmed, what areas will you recommend for increased U.S. investment?

Answer. Malawi completed a $350 million Millennium Challenge Corporation Compact in 2018 that improved the enabling environment for economic growth through increased capacity to build, operate, and regulate the power sector. USAID is working through a variety of programs to diversify the economy away from subsistence agriculture to more valuable cash crops. USAID works to aggressively engage and strengthen the private sector to create greater economic opportunities, including in aquaculture, fisheries and ecotourism. If confirmed, I will advocate strongly for the introduction and expansion of projects like these that seek to diversify and grow Malawi's economy and raise Malawians out of poverty.

Question. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. While in Zambia as Chargé d'Affaires, I led our Mission's efforts to support a free and fair election in August 2021. This involved major coordination across 20 months, and we played important roles behind the scenes to push back against ruling party harassment, press for a result that reflects the will of the people, and help independent media stay in business. I have played roles in helping obtain prisoner releases of LGBTQI+ individuals in Zambia on two occasions, and while in Hanoi, I helped secure the release of two dozen Vietnamese prisoners who had been detained on political and religious grounds. During my tenure in Abuja, I helped intervene to prevent the arrest of the speaker of the national assembly in Nigeria.

Question. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Malawi? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. Over the past year, the Chakwera administration has made significant gains restoring Malawi's democratic trajectory and implementing good governance reforms. However, endemic corruption, lack of local capacity, and insufficient funds impede the implementation of President Chakwera's anti-corruption agenda. Pre-existing patronage networks now seek to stall ongoing reform efforts, and declining development assistance from the United Kingdom and likeminded missions has imperiled the efforts of independent accountability institutions. Fortunately, the United States remains Malawi's partner of choice on these issues, and if confirmed, I will advocate strongly for further efforts towards democratic reforms and institutionalization.

Question. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Malawi? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. If confirmed, I hope to press the ruling government to appoint and confirm heads of watchdog agencies including the Financial Intelligence Agency and the Office of the Auditor General. I also hope to expand our efforts to professionalize the institutions that uphold Malawi's democracy, including the Electoral Commission, media outlets, and democracy activists. I have seen firsthand the significant impact of trainings from U.S.-based institutions like the National Democratic Institute (NDI), the International Republican Institute (IRI), the Solidarity Center, and the Center for International Private Enterprise (CIPE), and if confirmed I plan to advocate for these organizations' continued engagement in Malawi.

Question. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to identify and support reputable Malawian and international partners who share our commitment to helping Malawi build an inclusive, responsive, and resilient democracy. As I have done in my other leadership roles, I plan to ensure our Mission has strict accountability measures in place for the disbursement, monitoring, and evaluation of bilateral assistance. I will seek to ensure that all staff are held to the highest possible standards and equipped with the most up to date training and tools. I will also prioritize assistance that bolsters

Malawi's ability to push back against the corrosive forces of corruption and the malign influence of strategic competitors, including the People's Republic of China.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Malawi? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Yes. Nongovernmental and civil society organizations play a critical role in upholding democracy, especially in developing countries. During my decade of work on African issues I have worked closely with NGO counterparts to solicit information, raise awareness, and advance U.S. objectives. We do our best work when we hear from all actors on the ground, so I plan to maintain my open-door policy for Malawian activists and encourage my colleagues at Embassy Lilongwe to do the same. If confirmed, I also hope to find ways to use the wealth of American and international expertise to build capacity for heroes of democracy in Malawi.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. Yes. Inclusivity—both for frequently marginalized groups and opposition parties—is a cornerstone of my personal leadership style and Department policy more broadly. The United States has a vested interest in the promotion of inclusive, resilient democracy in Malawi and across the continent. If confirmed, I will work closely with our State Department, interagency, international, and Malawian partners to advance these efforts. In Malawi, this will mean further U.S. support to key institutions like the Electoral Commission and Malawi's historically independent judiciary. It will also mean advocating for American and international support for the civil society groups and watchdog institutions that uphold government accountability.

Question. Will you and your Embassy team actively engage with Malawi on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Malawi?

Answer. Yes.

Question. Will you and your Embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. Yes.

Question. Will you and your Embassy teams actively engage with Malawi on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Yes.

Question. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Malawi, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity?

Answer. Yes.

Question. What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer (LGBTQ) people face in Malawi?

Answer. Members of the LGBTQI+ community in Malawi face many of the same pressures felt by their counterparts throughout southern Africa. Societal pressure, stigma, and discrimination create a climate of fear for many members of these communities, and many LGBTQI+ individuals justifiably believe that they cannot freely express their sexual preferences, gender identity, or true selves. There continue to be laws that criminalize consensual same-sex sexual activity as "unnatural offenses," even though they are not actively enforced. An ongoing lack of access to justice means that members of this community are unable to adequately seek justice when they become victims of discrimination or persecution.

Question. What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTQ people in Malawi?

Answer. If confirmed, I will commit to meet regularly with members of the LGBTQI+ community in Malawi and learn from them how the U.S. Mission can best be helpful in the local context they face. As I have learned from my work in Zambia and Nigeria, it is critically important to be in touch with LGBTQI+ leaders in a country to know how to be helpful and not to do harm. If confirmed, I will make inclusive programming a core tenet of the Mission's internal and external ethos, and I will work with interagency, international, and Malawian partners to support LGBTQI+ champions and expand U.S. funded programming that supports members of the community.

Question. Will you commit, if confirmed, to ensuring that you fully brief Members of Congress and/or their staff each time you are in Washington for visits or consultations during your tenure as Ambassador to Malawi?

Answer. Yes.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO DAVID JOHN YOUNG BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. In November 2020, I published Senate Foreign Relations Committee Majority Report entitled "The United States and Europe: A Concrete Agenda for Transatlantic Cooperation on China." The report gave several recommendations on increased transatlantic cooperation, including in Africa, to counter Chinese malign influence more effectively. In what ways should the United States partner with European countries to build on likeminded interests in Malawi and counter the malign influence of China?

Answer. The U.S. Mission in Lilongwe works closely with likeminded European partners, to support Malawi's democracy through investments in the electoral commission, judiciary, civil society, and accountability institutions. If confirmed, I will work with likeminded partners to counter malign influence, promote free market and democratic values, and support the rule of law and anti-corruption efforts. Further efforts to combat corruption will improve the investment climate and advance our goals of fiscal transparency. If confirmed, I will work closely with the U.S. International Development Finance Corporation to support U.S. private sector opportunities in Malawi and to ensure Malawi has active U.S. alternatives to Beijing-based creditors.

Question. Do you believe it is the sign of a healthy democracy when a duly elected government, in consultation with its citizens, extends the term of office of the presidency even if that means it would extend the term of the current President in power?

Answer. Actions by a President in power to change the laws to allow him or her to remain in office extralegally pose an inherent threat to any democracy's health. A healthy democracy abides both by the will of its people and the underlying legal foundations upon which it rests. This requires the active participation of all citizens to safeguard democracy.

Question. If confirmed, how would you respond to Malawi doing something like this?

Answer. Any effort that might seek to upend the existing democratic order would undermine the legitimacy of Malawi's democracy. If confirmed, in such a scenario I would work with colleagues in Washington and local and international partners to defend democracy and push back against extralegal efforts to thwart the will of the people.

Question. What lessons will you draw from your experience as Chargé d'affaires in Zambia in your role as U.S. Ambassador to Malawi, if confirmed?

Answer. The recent democratic Presidential election in Zambia shows that U.S. Government programming, combined with activist U.S. private and public diplomacy, can help support and safeguard democratic values. These efforts played an important role in the Zambian political transition and the election of President Hakainde Hichilema. Zambia, like Malawi, has a comprehensive program to combat HIV/AIDS through the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR), and there are many similarities between the programs in the two countries. The two U.S. Missions in Zambia and Malawi also work to expand two-way trade and investment and strengthening the private sector in both countries is a key goal.

Question. Do you agree that democracy and governance programming is an essential element of an assistance portfolio? Why?

Answer. Yes. The United States has a vested interest in advancing democracy around the world. As President Biden said in his address before the 76th Session of the United Nations General Assembly, democracy remains the best tool we have to unleash our full human potential. Democracies value and protect the intellectual, social, and economic contributions of their citizens. Democracies are also inherently more stable and responsive to the demands and expectation of their polities. Investments in democracy programming ensure the longevity and impact of our assistance programs across all sectors.

Question. What opportunities as U.S. Ambassador to Malawi do you envision for yourself, if confirmed, in supporting democratic processes and the development of resilient democratic institutions in Malawi?

Answer. If confirmed, I will press the ruling government to appoint and confirm heads of watchdog agencies including the Financial Intelligence Agency and the Office of the Auditor General. I will also expand our efforts to professionalize the institutions that uphold Malawi's democracy, including the Electoral Commission, media outlets, and democracy activists. I have seen firsthand the significant impact of trainings from U.S.-based institutions like the National Democratic Institute (NDI), the International Republican Institute (IRI), the Solidarity Center, and the Center for International Private Enterprise (CIPE). If confirmed, I will advocate for these organizations' continued engagement in Malawi.

Question. Can you provide your view on supporting U.S. funded, independent international election observation missions?

Answer. Election observer missions play a critical role in our efforts to support democracy, especially in developing countries. Independent observers provide critical quantitative and qualitative insight about the functioning of electoral processes. This data allows the United States and our international partners to determine whether an election is free and fair, and whether electoral results in a country accurately reflect the will of its people. By supporting these efforts, we communicate the centrality of democracy promotion and support in our foreign policy.

Question. Would you support such a mission for Malawi's next general election?

Answer. Yes.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to working closely with the Office of the U.S. Global AIDS Coordinator and Health Diplomacy (OGAC) at the U.S. Department of State to ensure that the U.S. country team in Malawi's efforts to combat HIV/AIDS are efficient, effective, aligned and complementary to the work of OGAC?

Answer. Yes.

Question. Will you work to ensure that each of the agencies operating under Chief of Mission authority—notably USAID and CDC—meaningfully contribute to, but also adhere to, PEPFAR's Country Operating Plan (COP) process?

Answer. Yes.

Question. Will you also ensure that each of the agencies operating under Chief of Mission authority in Malawi uphold their commitments to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that all future funding for the Secondary Education Expansion for Development (SEED) program will be derived from funds appropriated for basic and secondary education, rather than for PEPFAR?

Answer. Yes.

Question. What is your understanding of morale throughout Mission Malawi?

Answer. The isolation, hardship, and fear caused by COVID-19 have had a particularly adverse effect on our overseas Missions, including in Malawi. The current lull in local infection rates, seasonal rotation of staff, and the lifting of government-imposed lockdowns have improved morale. Nevertheless, remote work in a developing country is a distinctly difficult and isolating experience for American and Malawian staff alike.

Question. How do you intend to improve morale at Mission Malawi?

Answer. If confirmed, I plan to make staff morale a central focus of my tenure. American diplomats and our interagency colleagues in the field make incredible sacrifices to advance our nation's objectives. If confirmed, I will begin by building trust with all levels of the Embassy's staff and soliciting local ideas for how we overcome our shared challenges and more effectively accomplish our mission.

Question. How do you intend to create a unified mission and vision at Mission Malawi?

Answer. Throughout my career I have upheld a "One Team" approach that values the contributions, voice, and role of every individual. Effective and responsive management is critical in this effort. American and Malawian managers should be equipped with the most effective tools and held to the highest standards. The follow-on effects of COVID-19 have accelerated isolation at our overseas missions, and if confirmed, I hope to make interagency relationships a central focus of my tenure.

Question. How would you describe your management style?

Answer. I believe strongly in a One Mission, One Team approach, and in my leadership roles over the past decade in Missions in Africa, I have sought to put this principle in practice. I have worked to set up cross-cutting interagency teams to advance our shared interagency Mission goals, including working groups that have advanced our democratic and electoral goals in Nigeria and Zambia, and our Northeast Working Group in Nigeria. I believe strongly in 360 communication, empowering and listening to all team members, and working closely with Locally Employed Staff, who provide the continuity and ongoing capacity of our Missions' work.

Question. Do you believe it is ever acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either in public or private?

Answer. No.

Question. How do you envision your relationship with deputy chief of mission?

Answer. Having served in leadership roles at multiple Missions in Africa, including three times as a deputy chief of mission, I am deeply committed to empowering and supporting the deputy chief of mission to help improve the work of the Mission. The relationship between the chief of mission and deputy chief of mission is critical to the success and morale of a Mission. If confirmed, I will build a relationship based on honesty, accountability, and collegiality, and I will equip my deputy to act decisively on the wide array of policy, security, and management issues we face.

Question. If confirmed, what leadership responsibilities do you intend to entrust to your deputy chief of mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will sit down immediately with my deputy chief of mission and jointly work with him or her to develop a collaborative plan for how we lead the Mission together. In general, I would seek to have the deputy chief of mission serve as the "chief of operations" of the Mission, ensuring that the Mission implements and executes the goals of our work together as a Mission team. I hope to work with the deputy chief of mission to identify issue areas where the deputy would take lead in policy development, public outreach, and performance management. This could focus on a variety of agency programs, but I believe it important that the two of us jointly assess the particular areas once we are on the ground working together.

Question. Do you believe that it is important to provide employees with accurate, constructive feedback on their performances in order to encourage improvement and reward those who most succeeded in their roles?

Answer. Yes.

Question. If confirmed, would you support and encourage clear, accurate, and direct feedback to employees in order to improve performance and reward high achievers?

Answer. Yes.

Question. In your experience, do U.S. diplomats get outside of our embassy walls enough to accomplish fully their missions?

Answer. In the countries where I have served, I have come to appreciate the importance of in-person relationships. I prioritize such these engagements, and I have been committed throughout my career to wide ranging work in this area. I recognize that diplomats around the world face many challenges to their safety and security, and we must mitigate the risks as we do our jobs outside the embassy walls. Security and health concerns have restricted diplomats' ability to safely move around outside the embassy walls in some countries. I applaud the contributions of the members of Diplomatic Security, the United States Marine Corps, and others who keep us safe overseas.

Question. How do you intend to improve the ability of U.S. diplomats to better access all local populations?

Answer. If confirmed, the safety of American and locally engaged personnel under my purview will be my top priority. I will lead by example in accessing local populations, and I will encourage my colleagues to expand our in-person access across all of Malawi. That said, we will of course remain cognizant of the particular logistical and security challenges our Mission faces in Malawi. Prioritizing staff training and the procurement of safe and reliable housing and transportation equipment will advance these efforts.

Question. What is the public diplomacy environment like in Malawi? What public diplomacy challenges do U.S. diplomats face there?

Answer. Malawians are eager to learn more about and engage with the United States. Malawi's low internet penetration rate requires a reliance on radio broadcasting and in-person travel. Embassy events receive significant attendance and local coverage. Public diplomacy staff have strong professional relationships with members of public and privately owned media outlets. The advance of high-speed cellular service through Malawi will broaden our reach, especially with Malawi's outsized youth population.

Question. How do you balance the importance of Main State versus the in-country mission when it comes to tailoring public diplomacy messages for foreign audiences?

Answer. Effectively conveying our public diplomacy messages requires fluency in both U.S. policy and best practices on the ground. Achieving both takes intentional work at all levels of the Mission. In my previous leadership roles, I have prioritized forging relations with my Washington-based colleagues, and I have encouraged my staff members to do the same. I have also advocated within the Department for the unique role played by Mission staff members, who have unmatched contextual knowledge of what strategies are most effective. These relationships pay dividends as we work to shape and deliver effective messages.

Question. In the 2021 Trafficking in Persons Report, Malawi was identified as Tier 2 due to inadequate government efforts to address sex trafficking, reporting, or identifying victims or traffickers by the Government, and more. How will you work with the host government to address these issues if you are confirmed as Ambassador?

Answer. If confirmed, I will prioritize our work to combat human trafficking as one of my top policy emphases. I will immediately and frequently communicate the importance of combatting human trafficking through private and public diplomacy. I have worked extensively on human trafficking issues in each leadership position I have held over the past decade, and I have found that offering solutions is a necessary companion to identifying problems. The U.S. Government and U.S.-based institutions offer a wealth of expertise, and if confirmed, I hope to connect Malawian partners with experts who can offer support on how to prevent trafficking, prosecute traffickers, and protect victims.

Question. In the 2020 International Religious Freedom report, Malawi was identified as having community tension regarding religious freedom. What is your assessment of this particular issue and if confirmed, how will you work with the Ambassador At Large to bolster religious freedom in-country?

Answer. Malawi boasts a long history of interreligious tolerance, though within communities there are societal pressures to adopt locally dominant religious practices. If confirmed, I plan to draw upon my experience in previous assignments to advance religious freedom. I served as Director of the Office of International Religious Freedom and deeply value the shared advocacy that Missions and Washington colleagues do on behalf of religious freedom. In Nigeria, we developed programs of Christian-Muslim dialogue and peacebuilding to address widespread farmer-herder violence in the Middle Belt of the country. The support and expertise of Department principals, including the Ambassador-at-Large, are crucial to these efforts.

Question. In the 2020 Human Rights Report, Malawi was identified as having significant human rights abuses including harsh and life-threatening prison and detention center conditions; arbitrary arrest or detention; significant acts of corruption; lack of investigation and accountability for violence against women; and criminalization of same-sex sexual conduct. If confirmed, what steps will you take to address these instances with the host government?

Answer. In my prior positions, I have found that offering solutions and support is the most effective approach to advancing our objectives. Malawi faces serious human rights challenges, many of which derive from a lack of local capacity to uphold laws and the enshrined rights of individuals. To address these concerns, if confirmed, I will work to identify the key institutions that warrant our support. The U.S. Mission in Lilongwe has preexisting programming with some of these, including the Malawian Police Service, and if confirmed I hope to expand these programs. Malawi also needs significant legal reform to protect the rights of all citizens, including women and persons in same-sex relationships.

Question. How will you direct your embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground?

Answer. If confirmed, I will lead the U.S. Mission team in continuing to strengthen close relationships with civil society organizations and to maintain an open-door policy for our Malawian partners. These individuals frequently have unparalleled access, relationships, and information, and they can play a key role in advancing human rights and a wide range of our objectives.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO DAVID JOHN YOUNG BY SENATOR BILL HAGERTY

Question. Malawi is among the poorest countries in the world, and our bilateral relationship is heavily focused on development issues. The challenges women and girls face are particularly crucial to address. On September 28, I introduced legislation, along with a group of senators that includes Senators Rubio and Portman from this committee, to formalize the Women's Global Development and Prosperity (W-GDP) initiative. W-GDP—which was established in February 2019 as a groundbreaking, whole-of-government approach to advancing women's economic empowerment—reached 12 million women worldwide during its first year and seeks to reach 50 million women by 2025. This legislation would advance women's economic empowerment by removing educational and skills barriers to female participation in the workforce; promoting women's entrepreneurship and increasing female access to capital and markets; and reforming laws and practices that prevent women's full and free participation in the global economy. What key economic challenges do Malawian women and girls face? Drawing on examples from your past service, how would you seek to work with Malawians to promote women's economic empowerment?

Answer. Women and girls in Malawi face economic challenges, societal discrimination, and limited access to capital, education, and professional opportunities. Insufficient child and health care mean many women and girls carry disproportionate familial duties. As I have done in other assignments in Zambia, Nigeria, and South Africa, if confirmed I will work to use U.S. Mission resources through USAID and through Public Affairs Section training programs to empower women, expand skills training, create mentorship networks, and provide small grants to start-up businesses run by women. If confirmed, I will also work with development partners to expand programs that support female students, entrepreneurs, activists, and civil society leaders.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO CLAIRE A. PIERANGELO BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question. People in southern Madagascar are experiencing famine-like conditions. What is your assessment of how effective the Malagasy Government has been at organizing a response? Are there actions the U.S. Mission could take to help improve the response? What are the potential second-order impacts of famine on the country as a whole, and what steps would you take, if confirmed, to mitigate them?

Answer. This is not only a difficult challenge, but an existential one as well. The Malagasy Government has limited capacity to address the drought-induced food insecurity facing southern Madagascar. In addition to providing significant financial support, the U.S. Mission has encouraged other donor countries to support this humanitarian crisis and continues to work closely with NGOs and U.N. agencies such as the World Food Program to address the immediate need and develop plans to assist the population adapt to drought conditions. The most significant impact is internal migration, which threatens unique ecosystems.

I would work with the U.N., NGOs, other donor countries, and U.S. agencies like USAID to determine what more we can and should be doing. I would also work with the Malagasy Government to assess their efforts on assisting displaced persons and concurrently protecting endangered environmental resources.

Question. Madagascar was slow to join the COVID-19 Vaccines Global Access initiative, (COVAX), and President Andry Rajoelina spent the early months of the COVID-19 pandemic touting an herbal remedy for the disease. He also criticized vaccines. If confirmed, what steps will you take to encourage the Government to take a science based approach to containing and mitigating the COVID-19 pandemic, and take steps to plan for the effective procurement and distribution of vaccines once they are available?

Answer. The situation has improved recently. Madagascar received a U.S. Government donation of 302,400 doses of the Johnson and Johnson vaccine in late July and there has been strong public acceptance of it. I will proactively seek opportunities to encourage the Government of Madagascar to promote vaccines and utilize the mission's excellent connections within the health community and our public diplomacy tools to support this message. I will commit Mission resources to help the Government of Madagascar address the challenge of an underdeveloped health system and poor transportation infrastructure, which inhibit large-scale, rapid distribution of vaccines, particularly to rural areas far from the capital Antananarivo.

Question. Competition between political elites in Madagascar has had violent and destabilizing consequences in the last twelve years, including a coup in 2009. This year, President Rajoelina claimed that security forces foiled a coup plot against him. What is your assessment of the level of political stability in Madagascar—is another coup likely? If confirmed, what steps will you take to reduce tensions between political elites?

Answer. Although the Government of Madagascar claimed there was a coup attempt this summer, the Rajoelina administration appears relatively stable and we assess that a successful coup is not likely in the near term. I commit to building relationships with all political parties in Madagascar and engaging with the diplomatic community to facilitate discussion among the political elites.

Question. Presently, the United States has limited diplomatic engagement with Comoros, and provides little in the way of foreign assistance. Would an expansion of ties be in the interest of the United States? What are potential areas of cooperation? If confirmed, would you increase engagement with the Comorian Government?

Answer. There are excellent opportunities to expand our diplomatic engagement with Comoros to the benefit of U.S. interest, particularly in the arena of maritime security due to its location on the Mozambique Channel, which is a major trafficking artery. Assistance in expanding capacity in maritime security, establishing transparent and accountable institutions, and in basic health and education would be immediate priorities in expanding our bilateral relationship.

Question. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Early in my career I served in Haiti in the post-“Baby Doc” era where we worked to support its fledgling democracy. Later in my career, in both Vietnam and Indonesia, the issues of democracy and human rights were at the top of our agenda. Whether advocating for human rights for our local staff or for the population at large, this is something I take very seriously and has been a priority in every post that I have served. I realize these issues are front and center in Madagascar and Comoros, so my team and I would have a lot to work to do, if I were confirmed. I commit to prioritizing these issues in both countries.

Question. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Madagascar and Comoros? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. As Senator Cardin has noted, corruption is a significant issue in Madagascar and Comoros. Both countries also face challenges in the electoral process, with disinformation from malign actors in Madagascar, and opposition party boycotts in Comoros. If confirmed, I will use upcoming elections in Madagascar in 2023 and in Comoros in 2024 to support both countries in strengthening their democratic institutions to ensure the elections ultimately reflect the will of their citizens.

Question. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Madagascar and Comoros? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. My first step would be to assess the current challenges to democracy in Madagascar and Comoros and develop an action plan to address these challenges. I expect that action plan would include outreach to opposition parties and civil society as well as programs to encourage greater transparency in government.

Question. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. I would review the current allocation of government assistance, gather input from my team and civil society partners, and assess how to prioritize these limited resources. I would look to find a balance between humanitarian assistance on one hand and programs to build the Government of Madagascar's capacity and establish good governance practices on the other.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Madagascar and Comoros? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Yes, I would make it a priority to meet with civil society members in Madagascar and Comoros to understand their challenges and to most effectively utilize USG programs that support their work. I will staunchly defend the rights of civil society and take appropriate actions to ensure their ability to operate freely in Madagascar and Comoros.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. Yes, I commit to meeting with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties in both countries. With elections coming up in 2023 and 2024, I would work with my team to create a plan to establish relationships with opposition parties, including diaspora groups. I also commit to advocate for diverse participation in the political process.

Question. Will you and your Embassy team actively engage with Madagascar and Comoros on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Madagascar and Comoros?

Answer. Yes, I commit to actively engage with the media and staunchly defend freedom of the press. I also commit to regularly meeting with the independent, local press in both Madagascar and Comoros.

Question. Will you and your Embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. Yes, I commit to engage with a variety of government and non-government counterparts to counter disinformation, whether disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors.

Question. Will you and your Embassy teams actively engage with Madagascar and Comoros on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Yes, I commit to actively engage with the Governments of Madagascar and Comoros to support the rights of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions.

Question. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Madagascar and Comoros, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity?

Answer. Yes, I commit to use my position to defend the human rights of all Malagasy and Comorian people, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity.

Question. What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer (LGBTQ) people face in Madagascar and Comoros?

Answer. In Madagascar, no law prohibits same-sex sexual conduct for those aged 21 and older. . Nonetheless, members of the LGBTQI community report they face social stigma and discrimination, particularly within their own families. In Comoros, same-sex sexual activity is illegal, although authorities do not actively enforce the law. Due to societal pressure, LGBTQI persons generally do not reveal their sexual orientation.

Question. What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTQ people in Madagascar and Comoros?

Answer. I commit to regularly meeting with LGBTQI organizations and advocating for their rights in Madagascar and Comoros.

Question. Will you commit, if confirmed, to ensuring that you fully brief members of Congress and/or their staff each time you are in Washington for visits or consultations during your tenure as Ambassador to Madagascar and Comoros?

Answer. Yes, I would welcome the opportunity to fully brief members of Congress and/or their staff each time I am in Washington for consultations.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO CLAIRE A. PIERANGELO BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. Given the administration's redefined Prosper Africa policy, how will you prioritize U.S. investment into Madagascar, and ensure there is a level playing field given the pervasive levels of corruption that exist in Madagascar's institutions and its judiciary? Further, will you focus on the settling of the standing investment disputes with US companies, including Symbion Power?

Answer. Corruption in Madagascar is a significant obstacle for U.S. business, and I recognize that accountable institutions, sustained by a commitment to the rule of law and transparency, are essential to creating a business climate conducive to foreign investment. I commit to working with the Government of Madagascar to reinforce the need for accountable institutions and provide U.S. expertise in developing transparent government. I also commit to support U.S. companies to settle investment disputes.

Question. Do you believe it is the sign of a healthy democracy when a duly elected government, in consultation with its citizens, extends the term of office of the presidency even if that means it would extend the term of the current President in power? If confirmed, how would you respond to Madagascar or Comoros doing something like this?

Answer. Constitutional changes should be made through a consultative process that includes civil society, opposition parties and all other stakeholders. Constitutional changes designed to favor incumbents or extend terms against the will of the people erode democratic principles and undermine stability. If confirmed, I will advocate for regular, democratic transitions of power, which yield more accountability, stronger institutions, and less corruption.

Question. In November 2020, I published Senate Foreign Relations Committee majority report entitled "The United States and Europe: A Concrete Agenda for Transatlantic Cooperation on China." The report gave several recommendations on increased transatlantic cooperation, including in Africa, to counter Chinese malign influence more effectively. In what ways should the United States partner with European countries to build on likeminded interests in Madagascar and Comoros, and counter the malign influence of China?

Answer. The United States should partner with likeminded countries to counter negative actions and influence of the PRC. We need to call out and confront non-democratic behavior and insist that all economic actors on the continent adhere to the highest standards of transparency, anti-corruption, debt sustainability, environmental protection, and respect for human rights, including labor rights.

Question. Can you provide your view on supporting U.S. funded, independent international election observation missions? Would you support such a mission for Madagascar's next national election?

Answer. Promoting democracy and human rights has long been a core task of American foreign policy. Election observation can promote public participation, encourage transparency and public confidence in the electoral process, and mitigate the potential for electoral violence. Both U.S. Mission observers and independent observation missions help deter fraud at polling stations and facilitate the collection of critical information about the conduct of the elections. To ensure real democratic gains, it is important that our elections work not focus solely on Election Day, but also address problems in the lead up to elections that inhibit the ability of all parties to compete on an equal basis.

Question. Many U.S. Missions have been under enormous stress over the last few years, in large part due to COVID. What is your understanding of morale throughout Mission Madagascar?

Answer. I am impressed with the resiliency of the team in Madagascar in general but in particular during the difficult last 18 months under COVID-19. Morale remains good at post thanks to the efforts of the former Ambassador and the current Deputy Chief of Mission.

Question. How do you intend to improve morale at Mission Madagascar?

Answer. At every one of my posts, taking care of our teams has been my top priority. First, I would assess where things stand today with both the American and local staff in both Madagascar and Comoros through direct communication and interaction. And then together, we would see what changes, if any, were necessary. The bottom line is always communication and interaction. Even at the height of terrorism in Indonesia and direct attacks in my consular district when I was principal officer in Surabaya, my team and I were united and mutually supportive. That is always my number one goal.

Question. How do you intend to create a unified mission and vision at Mission Madagascar?

Answer. I successfully faced this challenge in my last three overseas leadership positions in large and complex, multi-post missions—Indonesia, Vietnam and Nigeria. Creating a true “One Team, One Mission” approach takes a unified strategic approach, time, effort and honesty. The results are always worth the work. I would aim to do the same at Mission Madagascar.

Question. Management is a key responsibility for Chiefs of Mission. How would you describe your management style?

Answer. Whether I was supervising a section of 10 or a Mission of 900, my approach has always been to be as communicative and transparent as possible and to welcome and incorporate the great contributions of my team. I solicit input first and then carefully listen to my staff before making decisions. However, ultimately, I must take responsibility for our decisions and back up my team. I am also fully aware of when I must make the difficult decisions.

Question. Do you believe it is ever acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either in public or private?

Answer. No. Any action that does not convey respect or professionalism is not only unacceptable, it is simply counterproductive. This goes not only for supervisors but also for other staff, including our local staff.

Question. How do you envision your relationship with Deputy Chief of Mission?

Answer. The COM-DCM relationship is extremely important because it sets the tone for the Mission. If confirmed, I would create a close partnership with the incumbent, relying on him for both policy and personnel guidance and the critical “truth-to-power” reality checks. The DCM is the eyes and ears of the Mission and I intend listen.

Question. If confirmed, what leadership responsibilities do you intend to entrust to your Deputy Chief of Mission?

Answer. As a former DCM and two-time principal officer, I know what a critical role the DCM should play in both bilateral policy issues and internal Mission management. The DCM should not be chained to their desk but should be representing the Mission outwardly as well. Just as the DCM should lead and mentor our mid-level and more junior staff, they must have the opportunity to lead at the Mission level to prepare themselves for more senior positions.

Question. In order to create and continue employee excellence at the Department, accurate and direct employee evaluation reports (EERs) for Foreign Service Officers are imperative, though often lacking. Do you believe that it is important to provide employees with accurate, constructive feedback on their performances in order to encourage improvement and reward those who most succeeded in their roles?

Answer. This is a topic dear to my heart. As Director of the Office of Performance Evaluation in the then-Bureau of Human Resources, I led the team responsible for major reform of the EER, promotion and awards. I personally introduced the changes with outreach to more than 10,000 foreign service employees over two years. Those reforms were just a first step to creating a more responsive system such as the new Meritorious Service Increase award process and I am happy to say that these efforts are ongoing. Key to all these efforts is the push for supervisors to be honest, fair, and responsive in their evaluations. The Department continues to prioritize this effort, as do I personally.

Question. If confirmed, would you support and encourage clear, accurate, and direct feedback to employees in order to improve performance and reward high achievers?

Answer. Yes, I believe that is very important. I have not only supported such efforts but have championed them and tried to educate my colleagues on this issue. It is critical not only to the assessment of the rated employee but to the development of supervisors and future Department leaders.

Question. It is imperative that U.S. diplomats get outside of posts abroad to meet with local actors, including host government officials, non-government organizations, and local citizens. In your experience, do U.S. diplomats get outside of our Embassy walls enough to accomplish fully their missions?

Answer. If you ask my team my overriding motto, they would tell you in unison "If you are sitting behind your desk, you are not doing your job." At every post that I have worked in or led, this has been true. Our best work is done when we are engaged with our host country and its nationals. That is often a challenge, especially in large Missions, where we must respond to the demands of Washington and the interagency 24/7. I believe that the Chief of Mission must set the expectation, provide the resources, and if need be, pick up the slack in order for our staff to get out of the office, interact with the people and support U.S. interests.

Question. How do you intend to improve the ability of U.S. diplomats to better access all local populations?

Answer. In most cases, it is simply a matter of time and resources. If confirmed, I, along with my DCM, will make sure our team have enough of both.

Question. Do you think the Department should require Chiefs of Mission have experience in the region to which they are nominated?

Answer. In my experience, the overriding qualification for any COM must be proven leadership and management experience. That is not something that can be learned on the job. Secondly, experience in strategic policy making that can be applied to any post or situation should be considered. If one can combine those two skills with regional experience, that would be ideal. However regional experience on its own should not be considered sufficient, in my opinion.

Question. With little experience in the sub-Saharan Africa, how are you approaching this assignment?

Answer. I have served across four continents and led Missions in three postings. That includes senior leadership in arguably our most important partner in Africa, Nigeria, where I run a multi-agency post of 400 American and local staff plus 200 security contractors. Lagos is larger than 80 percent of our sub-Saharan Africa posts, including Madagascar, and is important to our overall Africa policy. If confirmed, I will bring my years of experience in Africa and elsewhere to this challenging assignment.

Question. Do you consider your lack of experience in the region a handicap in starting your position as COM?

Answer. I bring extensive strategic leadership and more specifically, experience in the complex, sometimes dangerous, and always challenging Nigerian environment to the table. In Vietnam, I led a team of more than 900 staff in Hanoi and Ho Chi Minh City, both as Deputy Chief of Mission and as Chargé d'Affaires for more than one year. In Surabaya, I led a team of 120 in two posts (including Bali) through terrorist attacks, pandemics, and natural disasters.

Question. If confirmed, would you consider your lack of experience in identifying a Deputy Chief of Mission?

Answer. Yes, that would be one of many factors I would consider. I have extensive experience in recruiting, hiring, mentoring and supporting my senior staff. Many of my former staff and mentees are now in leadership positions of their own including multiple Deputy Chiefs of Mission and Deputy Assistant Secretaries. I also have an extensive network and knowledge of our next level of leaders through my time in the Human Resources Bureau and as assistant professor and Acting Deputy Commandant at the National War College.

Question. Public diplomacy is an important aspect of U.S. foreign policy efforts. What is the public diplomacy environment like in Madagascar? What public diplomacy challenges do U.S. diplomats face there?

Answer. Mission Madagascar's public diplomacy program is small but robust. As in many countries, there is always more demand for engagement, training, and exchange programs but the Mission is actively engaged. If confirmed, I will move back to more in-person programs, but virtual programs will continue to be an important tool. Challenges are more physical than philosophical at this point, with poor infrastructure, transportation challenges and distances posing some obstacles to travel and programming.

Question. How do you balance the importance of Main State versus the in-country Mission when it comes to tailoring public diplomacy messages for foreign audiences?

Answer. Post has latitude to tailor public messaging to local issues and concerns. If confirmed, I will ensure that our public diplomacy posture continues to play a key role in promoting our many shared values and America's generous financial assistance and support across the range of issues.

Question. As Ambassador, what would be your approach to dividing your time and attention between Madagascar and Comoros?

Answer. If confirmed, I will make this one of my first on-the ground assessments. COVID-19 restrictions hampered the Mission's outreach to Comoros, but two teams have travelled since May, and the current Chargé d'Affaires will be visiting the first week of October. I look forward to her and the DCM's thoughts on the best way forward.

Question. How frequently would you plan to travel to Comoros to meet in-person with partners?

Answer. It would be my goal to visit as often as is feasible. Just as important is making sure that our team at all levels travel regularly, not just the Chief of Mission.

Question. In the 2021 Trafficking in Persons Report, Madagascar remained on Tier 2 due to lack of accountability of complicit government officials, as well as failure to end facilitating child sex trafficking, among several other key areas of potential improvement. How will you work with the Government to address these issues if you are confirmed as Ambassador?

Answer. I commit to work with the Government of Madagascar to make improvements in preventing trafficking in persons. I would continue to support our efforts to increase transparency of government institutions and to alleviate poverty, which together address the roots of this issue.

Question. In the 2020 International Religious Freedom report, Madagascar was identified as having religious freedom issues within civil society. What is your assessment of this particular issue and if confirmed, how will you work with the Ambassador At Large to bolster religious freedom in-country?

Answer. Religious freedom is a U.S. foreign policy priority, and the Department continues to closely monitor the religious freedom situation in Madagascar. I commit to working with civil society and the Malagasy Government to ensure all citizens enjoy freedom of religious thought and expression as provided in the country's constitution. My understanding is that there are several, discrete challenges for specific religious groups in Madagascar and that the country overall is accepting of religious diversity. If confirmed, I will work with the Ambassador-at-Large for International Religious Freedom and Congress to emphasize the importance of religious tolerance and to address religious freedom concerns in Madagascar.

Question. In the 2020 Human Rights Report, Madagascar was identified as having a litany of human rights abuses, including impunity for security forces and within government ranks. If confirmed, what steps will you take to address these instances with the host government?

Answer. If confirmed, I will assess the situation and develop an action plan to reduce the instances of extrajudicial killings, which would likely include improving training for Malagasy security forces.

Question. How will you direct your Embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground?

Answer. If confirmed, I will make it a priority to meet with civil society members in Madagascar and Comoros to understand their challenges and to most effectively utilize USG programs that support their work. I will staunchly defend the rights of civil society and take appropriate actions to ensure their ability to operate freely in Madagascar and Comoros.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO CLAIRE A. PIERANGELO BY SENATOR BILL HAGERTY

Question. Madagascar is one of the most interesting places in the world, with unique flora and fauna and a very distinct culture and population, but it also remains a very poor country. Trade—and the jobs that it sustains—are key to self-sustaining development. Good jobs solve so many social challenges. In what manner and in what sectors might you seek to increase U.S. trade with and investment in Madagascar? What role do you see for potentially greater trade and investment engagement in Madagascar via U.S. programs like Prosper Africa and Power Africa?

Answer. Commercial engagement is one of the top Mission goals and as an economic officer, I have always put that at the forefront of my professional efforts. I was pleased to learn that the Mission team has put a strong focus on increasing its outreach, including to U.S. businesses. If confirmed, I would work hard to ensure fair treatment by local officials and others to counter weak rule of law and corruption. Sustainable development would be our goal. In Nigeria, my team and I have worked with Prosper Africa and Power Africa programs and I would welcome seeing how we can bring that expertise and opportunity to Madagascar.

Question. The Comoros Islands sit in a strategic location in the Indian Ocean, particularly with respect to combatting piracy and the threat it poses to international sea commerce. What are your views on the programmatic focus and impact of America's International Military Educational Training (IMET) program in Comoros, especially on military professionalization and counter-piracy initiatives in the Indian Ocean?

Answer. The objective of the U.S. IMET training program is to professionalize the Comorian military, especially its maritime forces. This is particularly important due to the country's strategic location in the Mozambique channel, a major piracy artery. The Mission's Department of Defense staff are working hard within the constraints of their finite resources to build cooperative security partnerships with Comoros and with like-minded allies in the region. Our current bilateral partnership with Comoros on maritime security issues is strong, and developing their capacity is a long-term project. If confirmed, I would welcome working with our Department of Defense colleagues on the ground, as I have done in Indonesia, Vietnam, and Nigeria.

NOMINATIONS

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 5, 2021 (a.m.)

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:17 a.m., in Room SD-106, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Robert Menendez, chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Menendez [presiding], Cardin, Shaheen, Kaine, Booker, Van Hollen, Risch, Johnson, Young, Cruz, and Hagerty.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ, U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

The CHAIRMAN. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

We are here to consider the nominations for three important positions: Ms. Mallory Stewart to be the Assistant Secretary of State for Arms Control Verification and Compliance, Ms. Lisa Carty to be the U.S. Representative on the U.N. Economic and Social Council and an alternative representative to the U.N. General Assembly, and Mr. Steve Bondy to be the Ambassador to Bahrain.

Congratulations on your nominations. We appreciate your willingness and also those of your families to serve. Your families are, certainly, part of the sacrifice on behalf of the nation, so we appreciate them as well.

Ms. Stewart, the AVC Bureau is critical in the State Department and to our national security, leading U.S. diplomatic efforts to confront our adversaries about their most dangerous weapons.

I am pleased to see you bring a wealth of experience to this important role, including from your current service on the National Security Council as the Senior Director for Arms Control and Non-proliferation and your years in the State Department as Deputy Assistant Secretary in the AVC Bureau working on these issues.

If confirmed, you will have to address a series of challenges from the very start, including a weakened AVC Bureau, the result of years of neglect under the previous administration, at the exact moment that we are entering a more dangerous world.

The head of our nuclear forces, Navy Admiral Charles Richard, recently called China's explosive growth and modernization of its nuclear and conventional forces breathtaking.

Russia continues to modernize its shorter-range nonstrategic weapons and has shown a willingness to use chemical weapons against its own citizens.

Iran is moving closer to having enough material for a nuclear weapon. I am concerned that the Bureau is unprepared for this more dangerous world and that it lacks the resources and staff it needs to effectively negotiate with our strategic rivals.

I trust that, if confirmed, you will use your knowledge and skills to prioritize strengthening AVC, and I look forward to hearing your thoughts on how to address the challenges ahead.

Ms. Carty, congratulations on your nomination. It is reassuring that President Biden has nominated you, a consummate professional with decades of experience working with the United Nations and the Department of State to this role to help address the economic, humanitarian, and social challenges facing the globe.

Under President Trump, the United States, largely, abdicated a leadership role at the United Nations. From attempting to pull out of the World Health Organization in the middle of a global pandemic to undermining international protections for women, girls, and LGBTI individuals, to defunding or cutting funding to key agencies, we sent the signal that the United States would no longer lead, I should say, ceding space and influence to China and Russia.

If confirmed, you will join a new team committed to repair what has been undermined, including support for human rights, democracy, and addressing the metastasizing humanitarian crisis around the world, including the most recent one in Afghanistan after the rapid collapse of the Ghani Government and Taliban takeover.

I look forward to hearing your thoughts on how critical the agency's initiatives like those promoting the equal rights of women and girls can continue in Afghanistan. And, if confirmed, I trust that you will draw on your decades of relevant experience to effectively engage within and work to strengthen the U.N. system.

Mr. Bondy, welcome to the committee. I am pleased to see such an experienced diplomat and Livingston, New Jersey, native nominated for a critical Gulf post.

I am not surprised that someone from the Garden State has merited a dozen State Department awards, a Service Commendation award from the Department of Defense, and a Presidential Rank Award, and speaks five languages.

I would also like to note that I am not the only one to praise your service. Retired General Votel, former commander of CENTCOM who served with you, has noted that you are, quote, "extraordinarily well qualified for this position," and called you, quote, "an effective collaborator who is deeply respected across the military and within the interagency."

I also have a statement from Ambassador Hugo Llorens praising your service and record and, without objection, I move to enter those statements into the record.

[The information referred to above is located at the end of this hearing transcript.]

The CHAIRMAN. U.S.-Bahrain ties are long-standing. As the host of the U.S. Naval Forces Central Command and the Navy's Fifth Fleet, Bahrain is an essential U.S. partner in our shared efforts to maintain stability and security in the Arabian Gulf.

As the region continues to face instability of threats, most concerning from Iran, it is critical that we have a skilled diplomat in place to strengthen and maintain our partnership.

Bahrain has also led the change for more regional diplomacy as an original signatory to the Abraham Accords, and I have full confidence you will work to further their political, economic, and cultural normalization with Israel.

Your extensive experience in the Middle East, including time spent as the Counselor for Political and Economic Affairs in Bahrain and more recently as the Deputy Chief of Mission and charge d'affaires in Abu Dhabi, will certainly serve you well and the country well in navigating our Embassy in Manama.

I look forward to each of your testimonies. And with that, let me turn to the ranking member for his opening remarks.

STATEMENT OF HON. JAMES E. RISCH,
U.S. SENATOR FROM IDAHO

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and good morning. Welcome to our nominees.

On the nomination of Assistant Secretary of State for Arms Control Verification and Compliance, I want to make clear that a sole-purpose nuclear declaratory policy or any perceived weakening of the U.S. nuclear deterrent will be a betrayal of our allies and will embolden China and Russia. It will also cause allies to lose confidence in the Biden administration's commitment to NATO's Article 5 commitments and to Asia security.

The position you have been nominated to is incredibly important to not only the United States but also our allies and, for that matter, our enemies.

For decades, U.S. administrations have embraced the long-standing policy of strategic ambiguity regarding the use of nuclear weapons. While administrations have thought about changing to a no-first-use policy, they realized international security was more important than ideology.

Indeed, the Obama administration itself studied this closely and rejected such a policy change twice. Earlier this year, our British allies also rejected this change.

The Biden administration says it wants to strengthen U.S. alliances. U.S. allies have told me and have told us that they strongly object to a change to a no-first-use or sole-purpose, which is nothing more than a no-first-use in disguise policy. This administration should listen to them.

On the nomination of Ambassador to the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations, the United States remains the largest donor to the United Nations.

In recent years, the Chinese Communist Party has used its minimal donations to leverage a large-scale malign influence campaign affecting, in particular, the NGO committee in order to block NGOs critical of China, and they support NGOs that are actually run by the Chinese Communist Party. More must be done to stop this harmful practice.

The Biden administration has also decided to run for a seat on the Human Rights Council. The Council is known for its anti-Israel bias and troubling countries, including the worst human rights offenders on the planet like China, Cuba, Russia, and Venezuela.

I strongly oppose any attempt by the United States to rejoin this sham group until reforms have been achieved.

On the nomination of Ambassador to Bahrain, United States and the Kingdom of Bahrain have enjoyed a close relationship since the 1940s.

Home to the U.S. Navy's Fifth Fleet and the International Maritime Security Construct, Bahrain is a lynchpin for regional stability and serves as a critical front against Iran's regional aggression.

I remain concerned that Iran continues its efforts to destabilize Bahrain and arm the terrorist groups that operate there.

On the human rights front, Bahrain has come a long way since the Arab Spring. While there is more work to be done, certainly, the Kingdom has made strides in effective policing, advancing human rights, and curbing trafficking in persons. It is vital that we continue this important work.

Finally, I applaud Bahrain's growing relationship with Israel with its signing of the Abraham Accords. These agreements finally offer a path forward for peace in a troubled region, and the recent visit of the Israeli foreign minister and Embassy opening were encouraging steps.

Should you be confirmed, it is critical that you work to encourage Bahrain and Israel to deepen their diplomatic, economic, and security relationship. This is a priority effort.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Risch.

All right. We will turn to our nominees. We ask you to summarize your statements in about five minutes or so so we can have an opportunity for robust questions.

Your full statements will be included in the record, without objection, and we will start with Ms. Stewart and work our way down the aisle.

STATEMENT OF MALLORY A. STEWART OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, NOMINATED TO BE ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE [VERIFICATION AND COMPLIANCE]

Ms. STEWART. Thank you, Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, and members of this committee for the opportunity to appear before you today.

It is my distinct honor and pleasure to be President Biden's nominee for the role of Assistant Secretary for Arms Control, Verification and Compliance at the Department of State.

I want to thank the President and Secretary Blinken for their confidence in me and for the opportunity, if confirmed, to help advance and protect American national security.

I would also like to thank my colleagues and friends who have supported me throughout this process, and I would especially like to thank my parents, my husband, and our three children. I could not have achieved anything without their encouragement, their guidance, their patience, and their endless love and support.

The Arms Control, Verification and Compliance Bureau, AVC, is at the forefront of some of the most challenging and pressing national security priorities. I know firsthand just how important, complex, and challenging AVC's work is because, if confirmed, this would be a return to the Bureau in which I proudly served as the Deputy Assistant Secretary.

I also had the privilege of working on the AVC portfolio prior to that during my time in the State Department's Legal Adviser's Office, and I continue to work many of these issues in my current role at the National Security Council.

I joined the State Department's Legal Adviser's Office in 2002. I was inspired to leave my law firm job in part by the events of 9/11 amidst the swirl of international outreach, coordination, and concern.

Throughout my time working on arms control and treaty issues, I have personally witnessed the value of international cooperation, engagement, and dialogue, even and sometimes especially with nontraditional partners and potential competitors.

In order to most effectively achieve the Bureau's mission, AVC must continue its work to reestablish U.S. leadership in multilateral institutions and reengage with allies and partners.

The Biden-Harris administration recognizes that the challenges we face are not ours alone and cannot be solved by any one nation. That is why it has placed a great deal of importance on engagement and has begun the work to revitalize and strengthen our alliances in the Euro-Atlantic and Indo-Pacific to better deter and defend against growing threats.

But engagement with allies is only one piece of the diplomacy puzzle. We must also engage with our main competitors, like Russia and China, and attempt to keep an open dialogue.

It is important to be able to engage on security even at times of bilateral tension and disagreement. That is why this administration is engaged in a strategic stability dialogue with Russia and why we seek to engage in meaningful dialogue on nuclear and other strategic stability threats with China.

From an administrative perspective, I am specifically interested in expanding AVC's capacity to work on the challenges posed by these countries' increasingly aggressive behaviors.

If confirmed, I would welcome the opportunity to lead this important Bureau, together with the many dedicated professional public servants that uphold the Bureau's national security mission every day.

AVC's work to address the existential threat posed by nuclear weapons, deter the use of all weapons of mass destruction, and contend with emerging technology security challenges in a rapidly evolving security environment is critical to American security.

If confirmed, I would hope to partner with the Hill and with other departments and agencies to make sure the Bureau has the necessary support and resources to fulfill its important mission.

Working together, we need to make sure AVC has the best tools and analytical capabilities available now and in the future to provide robust verification of arms control, nonproliferation, and disarmament agreements and commitments, as well as rigorous assessments of compliance with those agreements and commitments, including in order to provide Congress with a complete and accurate accounting of the arms control landscape through the Annual Compliance Report.

I was personally involved with the Compliance Report when I was a DAS in AVC, and I think it is critically important and it needs to be thorough, clear, and credible. If confirmed, I will make its timely delivery to Congress a priority.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, members of this committee, you have my commitment that, if confirmed, I will work in close coordination with you and deeply respect your role in the formation of foreign policy.

There are a great number of challenges we face, but we face them together and we must resolve them together.

Thank you again for the opportunity to be here today, and I look forward to your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Forty-seven seconds to spare. That is pretty good.

Mr. Bondy?

STATEMENT OF STEVEN C. BONDY OF NEW JERSEY, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE KINGDOM OF BAHRAIN

Mr. BONDY. Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Risch, distinguished members of this committee, thank you for your warm welcome and thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee to be the United States Ambassador to the Kingdom of Bahrain.

I am extremely grateful to the President, a fellow Fightin' Blue Hen of the University of Delaware, and to Secretary Blinken for the confidence they have shown in me with this nomination.

It is the thrill of a lifetime to be in this position and, if confirmed, I look forward to working closely with this committee and the Congress on the important foreign policy interests of the United States in Bahrain.

I would like to start by recognizing and thanking my wife, Meghan, who has been a steadfast supporter and source of inspiration through thick and thin, including the two years I served in war zones.

Our daughter, Rachel, is here today and our son, Drew, is tuning in from Brooklyn. Rachel and Drew traveled the world with us and enrich our lives with their love and global perspective. My parents, George and Enid Bondy, are also watching today's proceedings from Daytona Beach. I owe them all more than I can say.

Mr. Chairman, I am excited at the prospect, if confirmed, of returning to a country where my family and I spent three wonderful years. Bahrain was a key part of the recent Operation Allies Refuge, facilitating and supporting over 7,000 Americans and others transiting the country on their way to the United States. Bahrain once again demonstrated it is not just a partner or an ally, it is a real friend.

The foundation of that friendship begins with our shared national security interests. The United States Navy has had an enduring presence in Bahrain since the 1940s and it has been home to the U.S. Navy Central Command and Fifth Fleet since the Gulf War.

Bahrain is a safe, secure, and welcoming home to the 8,500 U.S. military members and their families who are in country.

The United States works collaboratively with the Bahraini Government to address threats to the internal security of the Kingdom and the region, particularly from Iran.

This joint security work helps keep safe American citizens, investments, and interests in the country, and if confirmed, I will have no higher priority than protecting the safety and security of Americans in Bahrain.

Mr. Chairman, a year ago, Bahrain and Israel signed the Abraham Accords agreement, shepherded by the United States. This bold act represents a change in the strategic orientation of the Kingdom, and it opened the door to Bahrain and Israel developing their relationship across a wide spectrum of shared interests.

If confirmed, I will devote my energy and creativity to expanding and strengthening this relationship. The President and the Secretary have been clear that human rights are at the center of our foreign policy.

If confirmed, a primary focus of our bilateral engagement will be to advance respect for human rights and political participation, particularly as the 2022 parliamentary elections approach.

We will continue to have open and honest exchanges with Bahrain on these important matters, recognizing both where more progress needs to be made as well as where and when Bahrain has made meaningful progress.

Mr. Chairman, I was fortunate to be serving in Bahrain when our bilateral free trade agreement entered into force in 2006. That agreement established a solid basis for our commercial relations, and American companies can play an important role as the Bahraini economy emerges from the COVID pandemic. If confirmed, I will advocate on behalf of American companies pursuing opportunities in Bahrain.

Mr. Chairman, the United States and Bahrain have a friendship that goes back almost 120 years when intrepid Americans established the American Mission Hospital and related school in Manama.

It will be my distinct honor, if confirmed, to build upon this legacy as the United States Ambassador to Bahrain.

I welcome any questions you may have.

[The prepared statement of Mr. Bondy follows:]

STATEMENT OF LISA A. CARTY OF MARYLAND, NOMINATED TO BE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA ON THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL OF THE UNITED NATIONS, WITH THE RANK OF AMBASSADOR, AND TO BE AN ALTERNATE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE SESSIONS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED NATIONS, DURING HER TENURE OF SERVICE AS REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA ON THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL OF THE UNITED NATIONS

Ms. CARTY. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Risch, distinguished members of the committee, it is truly an honor to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee to become the U.S. Representative to the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations.

I am grateful to the President, to Secretary Blinken, and to Ambassador Thomas-Greenfield for their confidence in me. If confirmed, I will do my best to live up to their trust and to work closely with all of you on the committee.

I would like to begin by expressing my deep appreciation to my family, to my husband, Bill Burns, an exceptionally dedicated public servant who has inspired and supported me since we first met as Junior Foreign Service officers nearly 40 years ago, and to our daughters, Lizzy and Sarah, who from infancy through college shared our Foreign Service journey and the many moves that that entailed.

I wish that my parents and my in-laws, each models of exemplary service, could see this moment. My father was a proud graduate of the U.S. Merchant Marine Academy and a Korean War veteran, my mother, a public school special education teacher.

My father-in-law served in the U.S. Army for 34 years with my mother-in-law, his full partner in all the sacrifices that required. Their example and the love and support of my family are a very large part of why I am here today.

I approach this new challenge with considerable humility, with an abiding commitment to public service, with faith in the power of clear-eyed diplomacy in the pursuit of American interests and human rights, and with a well-grounded sense of both the possibilities and the limitations of the United Nations, and with few illusions about the complicated world around us.

It is a world in which the U.N. has a crucial role, especially in tackling the humanitarian, development, human rights, and social issues to which I have devoted nearly four decades as a career diplomat and then as an official of the United Nations.

It is a world in which the COVID pandemic and a changing climate have worsened problems of poverty, instability, and health insecurity, especially for women and girls, and where the U.N.'s Economic and Social Council can play a key role in mounting a global response consistent with U.S. interests.

It is a world in which authoritarian rivals like China and Russia and others seek advantage in the U.N. system and where active and energetic American diplomacy is required to counter them.

And it is a world in which the capabilities of the United Nations matter enormously, but also require relentless U.S. insistence on transparency, accountability, and reform as well as unwavering resistance to anti-Israel bias.

My professional background provides a unique combination of skills to help the United States take on these challenges. I spent 25 years as a Foreign Service officer working extensively on humanitarian, health, gender, and development issues, with field experience in Asia, Russia, and the Middle East.

I served as a Pearson Congressional Fellow working for Senator Nancy Kassebaum on the Africa Subcommittee, I worked for USAID on health programs in Russia, and served as the State Department's regional refugee coordinator based in Amman, Jordan.

I have decades of experience in multilateral diplomacy and a strong sense of how to navigate the U.N. system shaped by 10 years of work in U.N. entities, first, with the joint United Nations program on HIV/AIDS working hand in hand with PEPFAR, and most recently with the U.N.'s Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs where, through the combined efforts of U.S.

Government counterparts and courageous and committed U.N. colleagues, we helped alleviate suffering in some of the world's worst crises.

Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I look forward to working hard to put that background to good use in support of American interests. I will work hard to ensure that U.N. efforts across the responsibilities of the Economic and Social Council are effective, well run, and consistent with U.S. goals.

I will work hard with allies and partners to mobilize coalitions and achieve practical outcomes and I will work hard with all of you to ensure the closest possible collaboration with Congress.

Thank you very much again, Mr. Chairman, for your consideration. This is truly the honor of a lifetime, and if confirmed, I will devote the full measure of my skill and experience to serve the best interests of the American people. I look forward to your questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF LISA A. CARTY

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Risch, members of the committee, it is truly an honor to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee to become the U.S. Representative to the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations. I am grateful to the President, Secretary Blinken and Ambassador Thomas-Greenfield for their confidence in me. If confirmed, I will do my best to live up to their trust and to work closely with all of you on this committee.

I would like to begin by expressing my deep appreciation to my family—to my husband, Bill, an exceptionally talented public servant, and accomplished diplomat, and to our daughters, Lizzy and Sarah, who from infancy through college, shared our Foreign Service journey and the many moves that entailed. Serving overseas, particularly at challenging posts, asks a lot of family members, and I will be forever grateful that they so readily embraced the demands of Foreign Service life. I wish that my parents, and my in-laws—each models of exemplary service—could see this moment. My father was a proud graduate of the U.S. Merchant Marine Academy and a veteran of the Korean War, my mother, a public-school special education teacher, my father-in-law served in the U.S. Army for 34 years with my mother-in-law his full partner in all the sacrifices that entailed. Their example, and the love and support of my family, are a very large part of why I am here today.

I approach this new challenge with considerable humility; with an abiding commitment to public service; with faith in the power of clear-eyed diplomacy in the pursuit of American interests and human rights; with a well-grounded sense of both the possibilities and limitations of the United Nations; and with few illusions about the complicated world around us.

I spent a quarter-century as a Foreign Service Officer, working extensively on humanitarian, health, gender and development issues, with field experience in Asia, Russia and the Middle East. I served as a Pearson Congressional Fellow working for Senator Nancy Kassebaum on the Africa Sub-committee and with Congressman Tony Hall on the Select Committee on Hunger. I worked for USAID on health programs in Russia; and served as the Regional Refugee Coordinator for the State Department, based in Amman, Jordan. I have decades of experience in multilateral diplomacy, and a strong sense of how to navigate the U.N. system shaped by ten years of work in U.N. entities—first with the United Nations Program on HIV/AIDS where I served as the principal U.N. focal point for the PEPFAR program and most recently with the U.N.'s Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, where I worked with U.S. Government counterparts and courageous and committed U.N. colleagues to help alleviate suffering in some of the world's worst crises.

Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I look forward to working hard to put that background to good use in support of American interests at the United Nations. I will work hard to ensure that U.N. efforts across the responsibilities of the Economic and Social Council and its subsidiary bodies are effective, well-run, and consistent with U.S. goals. I will work hard with allies and partners at the U.N. to mobilize coalitions and achieve practical outcomes. And I will work hard with all of you to ensure the closest possible cooperation with Congress.

Thank you very much again, Mr. Chairman, for your consideration. This is the honor of a lifetime, and if confirmed, I will devote the full measure of my skill and experience to serve the best interests of the American people. I look forward to your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you all very much. We will go through a series of five-minute rounds. But before we do that, I have a series of questions on behalf of the committee as a whole that I would like to ask each nominee.

They speak to the importance that this committee places on responsiveness by all officials in the executive branch and that we expect and will be seeking from you.

I would ask each of you to provide just a simple yes or no answer to the following questions.

Do you agree to appear before this committee and make officials from your office available to the committee and designated staff when invited?

Mr. BONDY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. If you can give me a verbal response, please.

Ms. STEWART. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Okay. I cannot hear you. Sorry. Your microphone is not on.

Do you commit to keep the committee fully and currently informed about the activities under your purview?

Ms. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. BONDY. Yes.

Ms. CARTY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you commit to engaging in meaningful consultation while policies are being developed, not just providing notification after the fact?

Ms. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. BONDY. Yes.

Ms. CARTY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And do you commit to promptly responding to requests for briefings and information requested by the committee and its designated staff?

Ms. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. BONDY. Yes.

Ms. CARTY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Okay. All of the witnesses—I mean, the nominees have answered yes to those questions. I will—the chair will reserve his time and I will turn to the ranking member.

Senator RISCH. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Ms. Stewart, I want to start, first of all, on the very important role you have on—that you are seeking here with the Bureau. And as I said to you in my opening statement that the Biden administration wants to strengthen U.S. allies, and we all do, the alliances that we have and the agreements we have.

The U.S. allies, however, have told us that they strongly object to a change to a no-first-use or sole-purpose policy for reasons I have previously stated.

Are you aware of their objections?

Ms. STEWART. Thank you, Senator, for the question. I share your concern about allies and partners understanding U.S. deterrence.

Senator RISCH. That was not the question. The question was are you aware that they have strenuous objections to what the administration is proposing?

Ms. STEWART. I have seen some traffic and assessments of engagements, and there has been numerous engagements with allies and partners.

Senator RISCH. You are aware that our partners and our allies have strenuous objection to what is being considered here. Is that a fair statement or not?

Ms. STEWART. I think I am not sure if I understand the term "strenuous objection." I think they are concerned about what we are—

Senator RISCH. Will you go so far as to say they have an objection?

Ms. STEWART [continuing]. I do not even know if it is an objection. But, perhaps, the point is that I think through our engagement we hope to explain and understand and really hear from them further as to their—

Senator RISCH. You are telling me, as you sit here today, you do not understand that our allies have strong objections to what the administration is considering? Is that what you are telling me?

Ms. STEWART. I would definitely agree that there are certain concerns about what is possibly in the consideration process. But I think the effort that we are undergoing to engage with them is to really understand what those concerns are and to, hopefully, address those concerns through part of the engagement process.

Senator RISCH. You will not go to where I need you to be and that is to get a good clear understanding. If we, on the committee, on Republican side of the committee, have an understanding that our allies have strong, strong objections to what you are considering, how is it that you cannot concede that?

I understand you are saying they have concerns. Would you agree with me that they are stronger than concerns?

Ms. STEWART. I guess—and I definitely appreciate what you are trying to sort of get at here. My concern to completely satisfy your question is that we are still very much in the process.

We do not know the result of the Nuclear Posture Review that the Department of Defense is leading, and so it is very hard to say that allies and partners can have objections to a process that has not sort of played out and we have not had a chance to engage more fulsomely with them as to where the direction is going, and there is a lot of considerations in the process.

If they object, it seems like they are prematurely objecting to something that we have not established.

Senator RISCH. You have already said if they object. You do not know that they are objecting. Is that correct?

Ms. STEWART. I think the concern is what would they be objecting to at this point, without the actual report.

Senator RISCH. I am not going to get you there, so I am not going to pursue that any further. But let us—let me say I am disappointed in your answers.

We are acutely aware of objections. Strong objections have been raised by our allies. If you are not, you need to get on board before I am going to be able to vote for your confirmation.

You were in the same Bureau in the Obama administration. You are aware that twice they considered adopting a no-first-use or sole-purpose policy. You are aware that you, are you not? Once early on in their administration and then again during the time you were there between 2015 and 2017. Is that correct?

Ms. STEWART. Yeah.

Senator RISCH. Would you tell this committee why the Obama administration decided not to adopt the no-first-use or sole-purpose policy?

Ms. STEWART. My understanding is that they had a lot of effort to engage and understand partners' perceptions. And I am sorry that you take issue with my statement. I think the concern is that we really need to allow the process to play out and we need to understand the best advice from the Department of Defense leading this process and how that can be implemented through policy, that we work with partners and allies to explain and understand.

But to your question—sorry—the approach in the Obama administration to get to fundamental purpose of deterrence, was really to accommodate many of the challenges we faced with our deterrence efforts and to understand integrated deterrence issues within the report, and to address some of the existential threats that we faced at that time.

Senator RISCH. But you agree with me they specifically rejected adopting a no-first-use or sole-purpose policy? Do you agree with that?

Ms. STEWART. I was not part of the NPR process during that time.

Senator RISCH. Did not they or did not they?

Ms. STEWART. They did not have sole-purpose or no-first-use in the Obama—

Senator RISCH. And they specifically rejected it after considering it and studying it. Is that correct?

Ms. STEWART [continuing]. I assume that they looked at it closely, but I was not part of that process yet.

Senator RISCH. And I agree with you, we need to let the thing play out. But if we are going to let the—if we are going to let the process play out, we need to have at least a clear understanding of what our allies are telling us and it looks to me like you got a long ways to go to get there.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Shaheen?

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and congratulations to each of our nominees today. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you.

I would like to begin, excuse me, with you, Ms. Carty, and as the representative to the U.N.'s Economic and Social Council, I wanted to assess your feeling about the Commission on the status of women, which is the only global body dedicated to the promotion of women and girls empowerment and equality and aids to mainstream women's equality in U.N. activities.

[Clears throat.]

Senator SHAHEEN. Excuse me.

As you look at the role that you can play within ECOSOC and with the Commission, how do you think efforts to improve women's empowerment could be bolstered by the work of the Commission and do you see specific changes that you can be engaged in that will help with that?

Ms. CARTY. Senator Shaheen, thank you so much for that question. I have spent a fair part of my career working on issues related to women and girls and gender, and it is an issue that is very near and dear to my heart.

I see multiple opportunities, Senator, across the U.N. system where I could help through a position in ECOSOC advance U.S. goals regarding the well being of women and girls if I was confirmed for this position.

I think CSW offers particular opportunities. I think the important thing is to be very strategic and forward thinking in how we engage there and to make sure that we approach each CSW session with a very clear sense of what we want to try to achieve and we work very deliberately with CSW and other missions in New York, other governments, to try to make sure of one mind about the objectives we will pursue during those sessions.

Senator SHAHEEN. Can you give me an example of a priority that you would have as you are looking at a first place to focus?

Ms. CARTY. One issue, Senator, I feel is terribly important is the issue of education for women and girls. It is something, unfortunately, where there have been huge and significant setbacks in the context of the COVID epidemic.

We know that there are tens of thousands, millions, of girls out of school at this point who may never get back into school, and I think that would be a really important area, actually, across the U.N. system for specific focus, because we know that without that kind of access to education that it really imperils a young girl's future.

I would encourage CSW to look at that set of issues.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you. And we know that empowering women and girls also adds to the stability in communities and countries, the potential opportunities and prosperity and economic opportunities in countries as well.

Ms. Stewart, I was really pleased to see the Biden administration extend the New START treaty, something that I worked on 10 years ago when it was before this body.

But as we think about how we continue to engage with the Russians, where do you think we should be thinking and how can we build on that to cover tactical weapons, emerging nuclear technologies, other efforts that we really need to address?

Ms. STEWART. Thank you, Senator.

I share your concerns with respect to the Russian challenges that we are facing right now. Russia's new nuclear weapons and its diversification in dual-use delivery platforms represent a threat to strategic stability.

The strategic stability dialogue is an interagency process to seek risk reduction and greater understanding of the policies and actions of the two nations.

In the plenary led by Deputy Secretary Sherman, we have agreed to two working groups for experts. First, in principles and objectives for the future of arms control, and second, the capabilities and actions with strategic effect.

We have made clear that we want to address all of Russia's nuclear weapons, including nonstrategic nuclear weapons and novel delivery systems.

Our driving principles in this process will be increasing U.S. and allied security, ensuring effective verification and faithful compliance for legally binding measures, and avoiding future miscalculation or misunderstanding.

We are only at the beginning of our conversations, and so I agree with you we need to be careful to understand the full range of challenges and misunderstanding potentials that we face.

No determinations about specific approaches have been made. But the strategic stability dialogue is a very good first step to try to engage and understand where we have overlapping concerns and where we can make progress towards stabilizing our relationship.

If confirmed, I hope to consult closely with this Congress to address this process further and to truly understand how we can best evaluate and consider this threat.

Senator SHAHEEN. And so are you optimistic? You said you think it is a good first step. Are you optimistic that we may be able to make some progress?

Ms. STEWART. I am cautiously optimistic that, in certain arenas, there is some progress we can make that we can understand where our collective advantage for both the U.S. and Russia and, hopefully, the global community can be satisfied by taking important actions to address destabilizing behavior and to lead to the best norms of responsible behavior.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

I understand the next colleague who is available is Senator Van Hollen virtually.

Senator Van Hollen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank all the witnesses for your service. Congratulations on your nominations.

Ms. Carty, a question regarding the Sustainable Development Goals at the United Nations. We have gotten a recent report indicating that since the onset of COVID-19 we have seen an increase in extreme poverty, declines in educational achievement, increased violence against women and girls, and other trends that threaten to reverse some of the positive development gains that we have made in recent decades.

The Economic and Social Council of the United Nations has the main responsibility for integrating—addressing these issues across different U.N. agencies.

What goals you think we need to be most focused on when it comes to regaining lost ground? Where have we lost the most ground and what role can you play and the United States play in trying to catch up?

Ms. CARTY. Senator, thank you very much for that question and for flagging what really is an ancillary impact of the COVID epidemic that we all need to keep very much within our lines of sight.

The truth is the U.S. has driven so much of that global development progress over many decades and it is now all at risk. I do think, Senator, the SDGs present a very important roadmap for how to bring the global community together in a common effort to ensure that we are trying to regain ground on all those issues that you just mentioned, whether it is food insecurity, increasing rates of poverty, or you mentioned with Senator Shaheen children out of school.

The list is quite long, and many of the SDGs directly address those risk areas, Senator. There are ones focused on health, on education, on economic well being, on the climate. I think we actually have to be very strategic, look where the needs are right now most acute, and then try to prioritize action around those SDGs first.

But I would just be clear, Senator, in saying I know Secretary Blinken has embraced the SDGs as a roadmap for development, and I think one of the real values that they bring is they do provide a path, a common path, and set benchmarks for progress.

If confirmed for the position, Senator, I would very much look forward to focusing on the SDGs as a key component of my work. Thank you.

Senator Van Hollen: Thank you. Maybe you can follow up with respect to which areas you think are in most need of focused attention right now.

Mr. Chairman, can you still hear me?

The CHAIRMAN. I can, Senator.

Senator Van Hollen: I think—so I do not know if—Ms. Carty, just a follow-up question for you. According to a July report by the International Service for Human Rights, China has repeatedly used its seat on ECOSOC to block applications from NGOs working on human rights issues, and not only blocking NGOs working in China but China has, essentially, acted as a shield for other authoritarian regimes.

Are you familiar with this situation and what would you do about it, if confirmed?

Ms. CARTY. Senator, thanks very much. I am not familiar with that specific report. But I am, certainly, familiar with the broad issue at stake here. And just I would say to start that we have to be very clear we can leave no space for China to try to undermine the fundamental values and principles of the U.N. system.

We have seen this play out very specifically in the NGO committee, which is the committee that accredits NGOs for U.N. representation.

I have worked at many points over my career, Senator, with non-governmental organizations and I fully understand the importance of the perspective they can bring to the table. They must be there, but it must be legitimate credible NGOs that are there.

If confirmed for this position, I would work across the NGO committee to ensure that entities that should be at the table are, particularly those that China might seek to deny a place to, perhaps NGOs working on human rights or press freedoms or other broad democracy and governance issues, and I would ensure that those that do not belong at the table do not have a place.

Thanks, Senator.

Senator Van Hollen: Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I thank all of you. I have some questions to submit for the record, but congratulations to all.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Kaine?

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair, and congratulations to all the witnesses.

Mr. Bondy, I think I will spend my five minutes with you. You have significant experience in a really important region of the world and I want to ask you about a couple of issues dealing with the U.S.-Bahrain relationship.

First, Bahrain has been a good partner in the United States in our evacuation of Afghans. They have been very helpful in being the home of our Fifth Fleet.

Bahrain has also had some serious concerns about human rights issues, mass arrests in 2011, and it is a country where the leadership is kind of a minority Sunni population that is in leadership, but about 70 percent of the population is Shi'a.

Talk about what you could do, should you be confirmed, to promote more attention to human rights in Bahrain.

Mr. BONDY. Senator, thank you very much for the question.

Indeed, as you say, there has been traditionally a fair bit of friction and tension within the Kingdom of Bahrain between the various communities. If we were to rewind 10 years ago, as you said, when there was quite a bit of strife in the country, we would have to say that the trend lines since then have been exceedingly positive.

Indeed, the Government of Bahrain has used a new legislative mechanism called the alternative sentencing law to release over 3,500 convicts who were in prison and they have now been able to depart the prison and find other ways to sort of get on with their lives.

Additionally, Senator, there is a new juvenile justice law which elevates the age from 15 to 18 of who can be tried as a majority age individual and that has resulted, in fact, in some people between the ages of 15 and 18 really serving kind of very shortened sentences in juvenile detention centers rather than as full-blown prisoners.

But, Senator, you absolutely have hit the nail on the head. Promoting human rights is absolutely an essential tenet of the administration's foreign policy, and if confirmed, I will seek to use several fora that we already have established either through the strategic dialogue or in regular quarterly meetings between the Embassy and an inter-ministerial grouping in Manama to continue to promote the values and the interests that we have with regard to human rights.

Senator KAINE. Mr. Bondy, thank you for that.

Switching to another topic, in the last couple days something positive happened. Foreign Minister Lapid of Israel visited Bahrain to open the Israeli Embassy there. Very, very positive.

I was a supporter of the Abraham Accords when they were announced for a couple of reasons. I feel like the normalization of relations between nations in the region and Israel was actually a public expression of what was already sort of going on sub rosa, and rather than have it be sub rosa why not put it on the table that we are now going to work together on issues of common cause?

A normalized diplomatic relationship is not a Good Housekeeping seal of approval but it is just a way of having channels of dialogue and communication and normal relations, which are beneficial.

But the other reason I strongly support the Abraham Accords is I have been just so discouraged about the absence of progress toward a two-state solution in Israel. I visited Israel for the first time in 1998. I went to the West Bank as well.

And, frankly, in the 23 years since then the situation has moved farther away from the peace between an Israel and Palestine living side by side that we contemplated when we recognized the State of Israel at its foundation during the Truman presidency.

I view the Abraham Accords as giving nations in the region kind of skin in the game. Their populations want them to do things to promote a successful resolution and a Palestinian nation that lives peacefully side by side with Israel.

You were the charge at the UAE. The UAE was one of the other nations that normalized relations with Israel in this way. What do you see as prospects of building upon the Abraham Accords to break the stalemate that has existed for so long and find a path forward to the peace that we have longed for for decades?

Mr. BONDY. Thank you, Senator, for that very important question and for your comments on the situation.

Indeed, the Abraham Accords are—they represent a strategic change for the region and, in fact, in my career I also served in Jordan when Jordan made peace with Israel. I view strengthening and expanding the relationship of two very good friends and allies, Bahrain and Israel, as a very important book end to my own career with the Foreign Service.

But I believe there is great potential for those two friends to build their relationship all the way across the spectrum, and I will devote my energy and creativity, if confirmed, to helping them to do exactly that, Senator.

Senator KAINE. Mr. Chair, I yield back.

Senator CARDIN. [Presiding.] Thank you, Senator Kaine.

I understand we have next by WebEx Senator Young.

[No response.]

Senator CARDIN. Senator Young, are you there?

[No response.]

Senator CARDIN. I will pursue my questioning and then we will come back to Senator Young if he is available.

First off, let me thank all of our nominees for their public service and they are willing to continue in public service. These are difficult times.

We thank you and your families. Each of the positions that you have been nominated to are extremely important to our national security and to America's interests.

Ms. Carty, I am going to follow up on the Sustainable Development Goals. I was listening to your response to Senator Van Hollen. But I want to concentrate on one that was not mentioned during that exchange and that is Sustainable Goal Number 16.

It is the one that the United States was the initiator of to include it among the SDGs. It is a new one so, therefore, it is going to be more challenging to implement accountability standards.

And it is a little bit more difficult to establish accountability standards for SDG 16 as compared to others that we have established ways of evaluating how well we are doing in meeting the SDG goals.

Will you tell me your strategy on dealing with SDG 16, which deals with good governance, so that I can have your assurances that this will be a very high priority if you are confirmed to this position?

Ms. CARTY. Thank you very much, Senator.

And I think it is so important that the U.S. did insist on adding that as one of the core SDGs because it is fundamental to everything else that needs to happen. It is fundamental to how the U.N. system needs to work.

If confirmed, Senator, I would work very aggressively with other like-minded governments to ensure that we did have the clearest possible benchmarks and indicators, meaningful benchmarks and indicators, practical benchmarks and indicators, to track progress on SDG 16 and also to ensure that where we saw backtracking we had effective means of calling that out.

I think it comports very well, Senator, with broader U.S. development policy and, if confirmed, I look forward to paying sustained attention and working with you and your staff on that.

Senator CARDIN. I appreciate that. We are going to try to help you by establishing a rating system for how well countries are doing on fighting corruption, which is one of the key ingredients—anti-corruption—to have good governance.

We are going to try to help you, but I can assure you I will be sending you information and expecting responses in regards to carrying out President Biden's acknowledgement that corruption is a national security core concern so you have a chance to do something about that with the SDG 16.

And speaking about backtracking on good governance, Mr. Bondy, Senator Kaine already covered this point but I just want to cover it from a little bit different angle, and that is that, yes, Bahrain is an important ally of the United States in so many different areas, including our strategies against Iran as well as the Abraham Accords and moving forward with normalization with relations with Israel.

During Arab Spring, Bahrain was one of the most aggressive countries in dealing with removing the rights of the citizens of their own country and abuses that occurred. We saw some reforms, but it appears now they have backtracked on many of those issues.

I appreciate your comments about some of the issues concerning youthful offenders. But my information shows they are still using the arrest powers indiscriminately to crack down on any opposition to the Government at all, including peaceful demonstrations.

I just really want to stress the point that with a country that we have a strategic partnership with that is backtracking on their commitments on human rights, we have to be very clear that that is a major concern to us and it affects our ability to strengthen the ties between our two countries.

Mr. BONDY. Senator, I am very grateful for your comments on this important matter. It is difficult for me to comment on whether there is backtracking or forward movement as you know, obviously, I am not serving in the capacity.

However, I can assure you, Senator that raising the broad swath of human rights issues would be something that I would eagerly do if confirmed as ambassador, and we do have several mechanisms where we can raise kind of the broad policy issues as well as specific cases.

And I will say that my understanding is that our Bahraini partners have been very open to having that free and frank dialogue and, if confirmed, I would welcome the role of this committee and the Congress to play in this extremely important set of human rights issues.

Senator CARDIN. And let me mention one other part that our missions play in countries where NGOs or advocates have a challenging time in exercising their rights, their basic human rights, where the U.S. mission becomes a safe place for them to be able to get support for being heard.

Do you commit, if confirmed, that our mission in country will always be a safe haven for those trying to exercise their basic human rights?

Mr. BONDY. Yes, Senator, I do. Those activities go on already where we have a broad swath of outreach to human rights defenders and human rights organizations, and if confirmed, I absolutely want to continue that outreach.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you. I believe Senator Young is now available vis-a-vis WebEx.

Senator Young?

Senator YOUNG. Thank you so much, Mr. Cardin.

Mr. Bondy, very good to see you, sir. Congratulations to you on your nomination and to all the other panelists on your nominations.

Mr. Bondy, Bahrain recently committed to partner with Task Force 59 and will be the first nation to partner with that group. According to NAVCENT, they agreed to collaborate in October on manned/unmanned teaming exercise to evaluate advanced unmanned surface vessels.

Will you commit to support Bahrain's partnership with the Fifth Fleet's recently created unmanned systems task force, Task Force 59, and will you work to promote other Gulf States joining this important initiative?

Mr. BONDY. Senator, I absolutely can support that. I think it is a very important initiative in order to continue to promote freedom of navigation and safe transport in the—on the high seas.

Senator YOUNG. Very good.

Sir, in light of the Abraham Accords and Israel's entry into CENTCOM, will you commit to push as hard as possible to get the Israeli military as integrated as possible in the multilateral activities at CENTCOM and the Fifth Fleet lead out of Bahrain, including maritime security efforts in the Gulf and Red Sea and regional efforts on missile defense and counter drone efforts?

Mr. BONDY. Senator, I believe that moving forward on building the relationship between Israel and Bahrain in a broad spectrum of areas all the way, starting with military and security as you are describing and then moving all the way across to economy, trade, education, technology, and people-to-people ties, is incredibly important.

And certainly, if confirmed, I would like to find a way to use the convening power of the United States in order to involve Israel more closely in planning and discussions related to preserving security in Bahrain and the Gulf region.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you.

And lastly, sir, will you commit to work with CENTCOM and the Fifth Fleet to get an Israeli naval liaison officer assigned to NAVCENT in Manama?

Mr. BONDY. Senator, I admit that I am unaware of that specific initiative. But, if confirmed, I absolutely would want to consult with the Department of Defense, with NAVCENT, assist in any way that I could play a useful role.

Senator YOUNG. That makes sense, Mr. Bondy. I will look forward to, should you be confirmed, following up with you and your consultation with DOD, and if there is any way I could be of assistance in furtherance of that effort I will be happy to do so.

Ms. Stewart, congratulations to you as well. We continue to see the foundation of strategic arms control crumble away. Years ago, I spent a brief stint of time working on the staff of former Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee Dick Lugar. I feel especially responsible to ensure the legacy of arms control is protected and renewed.

To do that, we must have partners and processes that we can trust. At the same time, we want to ensure that we do not erode our defensive capabilities by entering into an agreement that is one sided.

What are the core areas of New START, Ms. Stewart, that need to be updated in order for the U.S. and Russia to have confidence in the agreement?

Ms. STEWART. Thank you, Senator, for that question. I definitely appreciate your background in this issue and I am very glad to hear that you are concerned about the future in this arena, as I am as well.

Because of the downturn in relations with the Russian Federation, effective arms control is more valuable now than it was in 2010, and it is important to maintain the boundaries on nuclear competition even as we hold the Russian Federation to account for its reckless and aggressive actions.

I think the verifiable limits on Russian intercontinental range nuclear forces allow us to make better informed judgments about the sufficiency of U.S. nuclear forces and help diminish the possibility of a costly and dangerous nuclear arms race.

As you know, New START also provides a forum for ongoing dialogue on strategic stability in nuclear weapons at a time when tensions between our countries are elevated and bilateral relations are increasingly challenged.

As to your specific question, it would be useful in the next steps beyond the New START treaty to address the nonstrategic nuclear weapons of the Russian Federation to understand their limitations, numbers, and parameters in a way that could comprehensively address our concerns with respect to a lack of strategic stability by their increasing presence.

As for the specifics of a next step agreement beyond New START, I think we definitely have to consider, as many administrations have, how to bring in the nonstrategic nuclear weapons and the novel delivery systems, including the unmanned delivery platforms, to address their concerns from a strategic stability vantage.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you. I think my time is about to end. I am curious whether there is any interest in Russia for a revised INF after the Trump administration pulled out on account of the fact that it had essentially become a unilateral agreement.

Unless you have a yes or no answer on that, which I would welcome, maybe we can talk about that later.

Ms. STEWART. Thank you. I look forward to discussing this with you, if confirmed.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. [Presiding.] Thank you.

Senator Cruz?

Senator CRUZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Welcome to the nominees.

Ms. Stewart, the post that you would hold, if you are confirmed, is one that is critically important to the national security of the United States. Among other things, the bureau you would be heading is responsible for the annual report mandated by Congress on international adherence to arms control treaties.

This report serves both as a proxy and a litmus test for the seriousness with which presidential administrations approach dangerous proliferation.

During the Trump administration, I repeatedly urged the president to untangle the United States from Cold War style treaties that only constrained us, both because Russia cheated on them and China was not even bound by them.

President Trump rightly extracted us from treaties like the INF and Open Skies. The annual compliance report, which documented Russian and Chinese proliferation, was a crucial part of the case I made and the decisions that President Trump took.

I want to discuss with you how you would approach these issues, if confirmed. Let us start with China. China is engaged right now in a nuclear buildup that likely puts them in violation of their obligations under Article 6 of the NPT. The U.S. has limited leverage to stop this buildup, though.

I have previously introduced legislation that would impose sanctions on parts of the Chinese military sector unless they come into compliance with their already existing NPT Article 6 obligations for good faith negotiations.

Do you agree that China is in violation of its Article 6 obligations?

Ms. STEWART. Thank you, Senator. I share your concern about China's growing nuclear arsenal, and it does pose a security threat to the United States and our allies.

That said, I intend to, if confirmed, work closely with the lawyers and the experts in the Arms Control Bureau to understand more fully the exact development and capacity enhancement that China is engaging in and to understand how that implicates their Article 6 obligations under the NPT.

Senator CRUZ. Does that mean you do not have an opinion right now about whether China is in violation of their Article 6 obligations?

Ms. STEWART. I think I need to understand better exactly the parameters of their development and what they intend to do. I understand there is future plans and, certainly, rapid expansion in the future, and I need to understand exactly where that is going to be implicated with respect to their nuclear capacities.

Senator CRUZ. All right. Let us turn to Russia.

You have been a noted advocate of the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty. As you know, the United States Senate has pointedly refused to ratify the CTBT, in part because of Russian behavior.

In its 2021 Compliance Report, the Trump administration rightly called out this behavior. I would like to quote from that report.

Quote, "The United States finds that since declaring its testing moratorium Russia has conducted nuclear weapons experiments that have created nuclear yield and are not consistent with the U.S. zero yield standard."

Do you agree with that assessment?

Ms. STEWART. I agree with the assessment in the Compliance Report, yes.

Senator CRUZ. Do you commit to ensuring, if you are confirmed, that you would continue to document such noncompliance?

Ms. STEWART. Absolutely.

Senator CRUZ. Okay. Let us shift then to Iran.

Since 2007, it has nearly always been the position of the United States that Iran is not a member in good standing within the Treaty on the Nonproliferation of Nuclear Weapons, the NPT.

We know the Iranian regime kept nuclear weapons blueprints on the shelf even while they were still pretending to comply with the Iran deal.

In April 2019, then nominee to be Special Representative for Nuclear Nonproliferation, Jeffrey Eberhardt, confirmed in writing to this committee that, quote, "Iran's standing as a nonnuclear weapons state party to the NPT cannot be described as good."

Do you agree with Mr. Eberhardt's assessment?

Ms. STEWART. Thank you for the question. I do.

Senator CRUZ. Do you consider Iran's past possession of the nuclear archives seized by Israel, including materials in the archives relevant to the development of nuclear weapons, to constitute non-compliance by Iran of its obligation under the NPT?

Ms. STEWART. We, certainly, share the concern that this is a serious issue we need to look into. But I think we need more understanding and information regarding that background file to assess whether that constitutes a violation of the NPT.

Senator CRUZ. Okay. And final question. I am concerned about the possibility of the Biden administration adopting a, quote, “no-first-use” nuclear policy. China has formally declared a no-first-use policy, but the Chinese Communist Party has proven itself willing to break such promises after we agree to them.

Do you personally support a no-first-use policy for the United States?

Ms. STEWART. Thank you.

With respect to that question I would, certainly, defer to the Department of Defense process that is presently undergoing to understand what exact policy is being included in a statement of no-first-use.

That said, I appreciate that we need to ensure our extended deterrence commitments to our allies and partners remain strong and credible, as the President has stated that we would do in our Interim National Security Strategic guidance.

And it is important to make sure allies and partners understand that whatever steps we take our commitment to their defense is unshakable.

Senator CRUZ. You do not have any personal views on this topic, though?

Ms. STEWART. I have a lot of personal views with respect to the underlying policies being considered in the Nuclear Posture Review. But I am certainly—I am certainly welcoming the—

Senator CRUZ. What are those views? That is the question is what are those views?

Ms. STEWART. I think we have to—we have to really consider how we can take steps to reduce the role of nuclear weapons in our deterrence. But we have to do so in a way that ensures our extended deterrence commitments to our allies and partners remain strong and credible.

And I think, regardless of the policy language, the words will be informed by the concerns that the Senator raised earlier. They will be informed by our engagement with the allies and partners to ensure them of our unshakeable commitment.

And so if the policy is no-first-use, if it is sole-purpose, if it is fundamental purpose or if it goes back to the 2018 Nuclear Posture Review, it has to be done with a good sense of understanding of our commitments.

And we need to make sure that our commitments to our allies are strong and unshakable, and we need to understand their concerns and address them.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator CRUZ. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. There are no other members before the committee, as I understand it. I will ask questions myself.

Before I do, I want to wish Senator Cardin a very happy, joyous, and healthy birthday and many more, one of our key members of the committee.

[Singing.]

Senator CARDIN. We now understand that Senator Menendez's Senate career is his second career. His first career is as a singer and a performer. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. I am not giving up my day job. I like to eat. But happy birthday. This is what happens when you sing—I sang to Jeanne Shaheen. Now he wants to be sung to. I made that mistake of doing that in public. In any event, happy birthday, Ben.

And I understand—I do not know if he is here anymore, but a former member of the staff, John Ryan, who is at the State Department, shares an illustrious birthday with Senator Cardin. Happy birthday to him as well.

Let me, on a serious note, turn to our nominees.

Ms. Stewart, you may have heard my opening comments and I am wondering, do you believe that the department as it is presently configured, as it is presently staffed, is up to the challenge ahead?

Ms. STEWART. Thank you, Senator.

I share your concerns that the Bureau of Arms Control has been challenged through the previous administration—losing resources, losing supporting staff—and I agree that bringing on a new generation of experts and enabling the good transfer of institutional knowledge will be a priority as will expanding our ability to confront and contend with an increasingly aggressive China and new and emerging technological challenges.

I agree with you we also need to expand and enhance our work to create a new generation of tools and technologies that will enhance verification and allow us to better monitor compliance.

We need to position ourselves to work closely with the intelligence community and the U.S. interagency to explain the basis for the U.S. Government's compliance concerns to the international community in an effort to shine a light and, hopefully, resolve those concerns.

And finally, we need to work to rebuild an understanding of the importance of arms control measures in coordination with deterrence to achieve a lasting and sustainable strategic stability.

If confirmed, all of these are issues that I hope to work on in close cooperation with you to expand and enhance the capacity of the Bureau to address the numerous challenges that face us.

The CHAIRMAN. We have an extraordinary array of issues that your department would have responsibility for and for which I think we face some major challenges.

Let me ask you specifically, it appears that we have reached a critical juncture in our diplomatic efforts to contain Iran's nuclear program. It continues to stonewall the IAEA's investigation into undeclared nuclear materials and activities that were uncovered in 2018 and is refusing to allow the IAEA to assess critical monitoring equipment.

I do not even understand quite the much ballyhooed agreement that was reached by the IAEA. All they did is they took out the components that were previously being used for monitoring but which they cannot see and put in the new chips to continue to monitor but which they cannot see.

We do not have any eyes on site during this period of time to understand how far they have advanced, and Tehran is pressing forward with their nuclear program with a current breakout time to produce the necessary material for a weapon near where it was before the JCPOA was signed.

What impact is Iran's refusal to cooperate with the IAEA having on compliance with the nuclear nonproliferation treaty and do you think that Iran has really walked away without very much consequence, that other states will follow Iran's lead and refuse to fully cooperate with the IAEA?

Ms. STEWART. Thank you, Senator. I completely share your concerns on this issue. This administration remains committed to ensuring Iran never acquires a nuclear weapon and we continue to believe diplomacy, in coordination with our allies and regional partners, is the best path to achieve that goal.

We, clearly, have a series of fundamental disagreements on a wide range of issues. Iran's lack of cooperation on safeguards in the JCPOA, its support for terrorism, its ballistic missile programs, destabilizing actions throughout the region, and its abhorrent practice of using wrongfully detained U.S. citizens and foreign nationals as political tools are all issues of grave concern.

But with respect to your specific point, if we do not address the numerous challenges that Iran poses, we will risk other countries following Iran's lead and we will risk the diminishment of the IAEA and the NPT itself.

This administration is very focused on understanding what we can do to address all of these challenges while supporting the IAEA.

AVC's sister bureau, the ISN Bureau, is the lead in the T family on this issue. If confirmed, I will work to make sure AVC is ably assisting the department in its efforts to prevent Iran from acquiring a nuclear weapon and to ensure support for the IAEA in all of its efforts.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. I have questions for you on China but I will submit them for the record. I would like a full answer when you receive them.

Let me turn to Mr. Bondy. We, obviously, you, obviously, support the continued partnership with Bahrain to address counterterrorism needs in the region. Is that correct?

Mr. BONDY. Yes, I do.

The CHAIRMAN. And as well as maintaining the close security partnership that we have between the United States and Bahrain?

Mr. BONDY. Yes, I do, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. We applaud that Bahrain and the UAE became countries that normalized relations with Israel. But, if confirmed, what steps can you take as ambassador to preserve the space for a continued dialogue on normalization, how we could help foster Israel's growing ties with Bahrain?

Mr. BONDY. Yes, Senator. Thank you very much for the question.

This is an issue set that, if confirmed, I would want to devote all of my creativity and energy in order to expand the relationship between two of our close friends and allies in the Middle East region.

Indeed, I believe there is quite a bit of progress that can be made. At least at this stage both sides have taken the fundamentally important step to complete and sign and promote the Abraham Accords, and now comes the time where it needs to be operationalized.

As we heard earlier, the Israeli Foreign Minister did visit Bahrain just a few days ago. Bahrain does have an ambassador now in Israel and my understanding is Israel shortly will have an ambassador in Bahrain.

I would, certainly, want to, if confirmed, consult with the Israeli Embassy, the Israeli ambassador. But I do believe, Senator, that there is a great amount of room for joint cooperation be it in the military and security realm, all the way across to people-to-people contact, and I would want to look for opportunities in order to enhance that relationship.

The CHAIRMAN. I have said to several of our nominees going to some of these countries is that it is great that the Abraham Accords were signed. It is great that there is normalizing.

But normalizing has to go a step beyond. If you are allies you are allies. That means you stand up for Israel at institutions like the United Nations. It means you engage within the region to engage other countries within the region.

As you say, it has to become operational. Otherwise, it is just a piece of paper for which there is a recognition of a relationship. But what that relationship is is really, ultimately, embodied by the actions of both countries, bilaterally, in each case. I hope to see that in the case of Bahrain.

I do have questions about our—the human rights, and I will submit those for the record that I would like to see you respond to.

Finally, Ms. Carty, I look at what some people say about ECOSOC and there are some who say that ECOSOC lacks any real authority and that it works—overlaps with the activities of the U.N. General Assembly.

It has been suggested that the Council could play a greater role in global economic and development policy. The U.N. has passed several reforms over the years, including as recently as this year, to strengthen ECOSOC's policy guidance role and to improve collaboration between ECOSOC, its subsidiary councils, and other U.N. entities.

What is your assessment of the most recent ECOSOC reforms? Do you believe that ECOSOC should have a greater policy-setting role?

Ms. CARTY. Senator, thanks for the question.

I think it is still a work in motion, Senator, as best I understand the situation. ECOSOC does play an important role in framing the conversation that then goes on to the General Assembly in creating reports, resolutions, documents. It can set the context for how key issues are discussed, key issues that matter substantially to the United States.

If confirmed for this position, Senator, I would always keep that in mind, how do we work effectively across the ECOSOC body to ensure that their operations are effectively supporting important U.S. goals that are within the purview of the committee.

I am a firm believer, Senator that the U.N. functions best when the U.S. is in a leadership role and is, clearly, at the table and I would hope, if confirmed, to bring that to the ECOSOC discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. One last question for you. I am concerned about China's increasing influence and role in U.N. bodies. ECOSOC consults with more than 5,100 registered nongovernmental organizations to inform its work.

I am deeply concerned that within ECOSOC China has used its seat on the Council's committee on NGOs to block applications from NGOs working on human rights issues.

I know you are not there yet but you have been involved in this field in general. How do you assess China's efforts to use its increased influence at ECOSOC and elsewhere in the U.N. system to undermine civil society and silence the voices of those who champion human rights?

Ms. CARTY. Senator, I think this absolutely is a problem and it needs to be a top priority. We know that there is a broader effort undertaken by China across the U.N. system to try to insert its authoritarian values in place of core U.N. principles.

We cannot allow that to happen. There are particular risks in the ECOSOC space and, in particular, in the NGO committee where I understand China has acted to ensure that NGOs that represent Tibet or the Uighurs are not allowed to participate.

If confirmed for this position, Senator, I share fully with you the view that NGOs and civil society provide an absolute critical perspective. Credible organizations need to be at the table and I would devote the full measure of my energies to ensure that was, in fact, the case.

The CHAIRMAN. We look forward to that. This committee as well as the Senate has spoken with one voice on China and, therefore, whether it be on arms control issues or whether it be about its nefarious activities at the U.N. that I have just described, we look forward to a forceful response.

Senator Hagerty has made it under the wire. He is now recognized.

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you, Senator Menendez. It was my honor to follow you in the Banking Committee meeting just a few minutes ago and thank you for your comments there and your leadership there.

Ms. Stewart, I would like to turn a question to you. The United States has a long history of using nuclear deterrent to prevent not only nuclear aggression but nonnuclear forms of aggression that either threaten us or our allies.

Jim Baker, who served as President George H. W. Bush's Secretary of State, wrote about the use of calculated ambiguity. Using calculated ambiguity in America's policy to deter and prevent Saddam Hussein, I think, had a real effect, looking at the possible use of chemical and biological weapons of mass destruction during the 1991 Gulf War.

We use calculated ambiguity to make an enemy think really hard about the possible consequences before they might launch chemical or biological weapons against the United States, knowing that the response could include a full range of options, including nuclear.

In 2020, presidential candidate Biden argued that, and I am going to quote, "The sole purpose of the U.S. nuclear arsenal should be deterring and, if necessary, retaliating against a nuclear attack," the end of his quote.

From my perspective as a businessman, I always think it is a bad option to take tools and options off the table, particularly with dealing in situations where the United States or our allies might be in danger.

I want to ask you, Ms. Stewart, do you support adopting a sole-purpose policy?

Ms. STEWART. Thank you so much for that question. I agree, this is a really difficult area and it is a very complicated analysis that, right now is being led by the Department of Defense to really have a whole-of-government review of our deterrence posture, our Missile Defense Review, our nuclear policy, and our broader national defense guidance. I think this is a hard issue.

With respect to sole-purpose, with respect to no-first-use, with respect to sort of the policy formulations, ultimately, United States declaratory nuclear policy will be a decision for the President, and the particular language chosen for this policy will be fully informed by the perspectives of our allies and partners.

And as I mentioned before, we will engage allies and partners. We will continue—and we have been engaging with them—to assure them that the United States commitment to their defense is unshakable and to explain how our rationale for the declaratory policy is chosen by the President in the best national security interests and how we intend to assure our allies' and partners' security consistent with that policy.

To your specific question, the policy formulations that the Department of Defense right now is coming up with will fully take into account the strategic threat environment we face and will certainly lay out the concerns and the challenges with respect to any option on the table.

I do not want to get ahead of where the department is on this. But I understand that all different formulations of what that policy could be are on the table. The concern I have is when we say sole-purpose, what sort of formulation of that are we discussing? Or if we say no-first-use, what formulation?

There are several different, I guess, semantic conversations we could have about what you are looking at and what you are considering in the NPR process and what the Department of Defense is putting on the table, again, fully informed by their threat assessment.

There are certain sole-purpose formulations that may make more or less sense, depending on what we are trying to address throughout the NPR, and looking at the integrated deterrence considerations.

But I think these will all be very carefully observed and studied and presented to the President.

Senator HAGERTY. I can confidently say this, that anything we do in an environment like we have right now where the threat is escalating, anything that we might do that would limit our options would weaken the United States. It would embolden our adversaries and it will cause our allies to question us.

I encourage you strongly as you look at this policy, as you contemplate the responsibilities that you are facing, that you take every effort to broaden our options and not restrict them in any manner.

Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. That concludes our hearing.

The record for this hearing will remain open until the close of business on Wednesday, October 6th, 2021. I ask colleagues to ensure that questions for the record are submitted no later than tomorrow, on Wednesday.

I would say to the nominees inevitably there will be questions that will be directed to you. I would urge you to answer them fully as well as expeditiously as possible so that your nominations can be considered before the committee at a business hearing.

And with thanks to the committee, this hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 11:40 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO MALLORY A. STEWART BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question. Photos from commercial satellites have revealed three new fields of intercontinental ballistic missiles. The size and scope of these missile fields indicate China is abandoning its previous nuclear strategy based upon minimal deterrence and instead is moving toward a strategy of assured retaliation against the United States, which is similar to Russia's nuclear strategy. This committee began to address this issue in the bipartisan "Strategic Competition Act," which lays out the need for effective arms control in the face of China's military modernization and expansion. What are your thoughts about when and how the United States should approach China to begin talks on strategic stability or arms control?

Answer. I believe the United States must pursue arms control measures to reduce the dangers from the People's Republic of China's (PRC) growing nuclear arsenal. These efforts will go together with ones designed to bolster deterrence in the region. The administration hopes that Beijing will come to see that arms control is in its own security interest and is a mechanism to reduce the risk of military crises and manage the threat of destabilizing arms races. U.S. allies and partners will be key to success here and the administration will work with them to regularly urge the PRC to engage meaningfully with the United States on arms control. If confirmed, I commit to consult Congress at an appropriate time on potential measures to be pursued with China.

Question. What issues do you believe the United States should focus on?

Answer. The best way to address emerging nuclear threats to the United States and our allies and partners is to ensure our strategic deterrent remains safe, secure, and effective and pursue arms control that enhances U.S., allied, and partner security. The People's Republic of China's (PRC) growing nuclear arsenal represents one such threat that the United States must address over the coming years. If confirmed, one of my focus areas will be on how best the State Department can expand the expertise and resources needed to contend with arms control challenges posed by the PRC.

Question. Do you believe the AVC Bureau has the resources and staff necessary to effectively negotiate with China?

Answer. If confirmed, one of my top priorities is ensuring the Bureau has the appropriate resources to pursue the administration's arms control objectives, including potential engagement with the People's Republic of China. I would be grateful for Congressional support in this effort.

Question. I supported the extension of the New START Treaty for a full five years. I agreed with the Biden administration that a full extension would allow the United States to retain the benefits of New START while we address the many, many areas of concern we have with Russia. The United States and Russia just completed their second Strategic Stability Dialogue but it is still unclear to me what exactly we are seeking to accomplish in our discussions with Russia. Should the United States and Russia seek to build on New START with a new treaty that imposes deeper reductions in both sides' strategic nuclear forces?

Answer. The Biden-Harris administration will use the five-year extension of the New START Treaty to pursue with Russia, in consultation with Congress and U.S. allies and partners, arms control that addresses all Russian nuclear weapons. It would be premature to speculate about U.S. nuclear force levels and potential limits in future arms control before the Nuclear Posture Review is complete and President Biden sets U.S. nuclear strategy.

Question. Should we seek a new type of agreement that incorporates shorter-range nuclear weapons, not currently covered by New START?

Answer. The United States will use the time provided by the five-year extension of the New START Treaty to pursue with Russia, in consultation with Congress and U.S. allies and partners, arms control that addresses all Russian nuclear weapons, including novel strategic systems and non-strategic nuclear weapons. Incorporating Russian non-strategic nuclear weapons into arms control is a longstanding and bipartisan U.S. objective.

Question. What impact will China's nuclear buildup have on our ability to reach future arms control agreements with Russia?

Answer. The United States should pursue arms control measures with Russia and the People's Republic of China (PRC) that advance the security of the United States, U.S. allies, and partners. The PRC's rapid expansion of its nuclear arsenal presages a more dangerous future, with a considerably larger number of sophisticated nuclear delivery systems capable of targeting a multitude of actors in the Indo-Pacific and beyond. This larger nuclear arsenal will buttress a broader PRC military build-up and contribute to arms racing dynamics that will complicate how we approach arms control challenges in the future.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MALLORY A. STEWART BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Duties and Qualifications

Question. What background and experience do you possess that qualify you to perform the duties of Assistant Secretary of State for Arms Control, Verification, and Compliance (AVC)?

Answer. In 2004, I joined the Office of Treaty Affairs in the Department of State's Legal Adviser's office and focused on the Arms Control and Nonproliferation treaties portfolio. I have been working on these issues ever since, as a lawyer for the AVC Bureau and as a policy maker in the Bureau. I was a principal member of the technical staff and senior manager at Sandia National Laboratories, where I worked on arms control and nonproliferation policy support. Most recently, I have served as Senior Director at the National Security Council for Arms Control, Disarmament, and Nonproliferation. Before I started as a Deputy Assistant Secretary in AVC, I was closely involved with many of the significant issues confronting the Bureau. For example, I was the lead lawyer for the delegations that negotiated our missile defense agreements with Poland and Romania. I also provided legal support for the New START negotiations and effort to develop rules of responsible behavior in emerging technology domains. I was also involved in the negotiations of the 2013 U.S.-Russian Framework for the Elimination of Syrian Chemical Weapons and the subsequent international architecture erected at the United Nations and in the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW) to implement that Framework. After becoming the Deputy Assistant Secretary for Emerging Security Challenges and Defense Policy in the AVC bureau, I led numerous space security dialogues with partners and allies, and I was able to support Assistant Secretary Frank Rose in the Space Security Dialogue with China. In that role, I also led the Bureau's efforts to produce the Annual Compliance Report, and then was responsible for briefing that report to the Hill, as well as foreign governments interested in its conclusions. During my time at Sandia National Labs, I learned more about the technical side of verification and compliance. I supported numerous projects on behalf of the State Department or the Department of Defense to further our arms control and nonproliferation policies and objectives, and gained a much deeper understanding of the crucial role of the national labs in so many of our deterrence, strategic stability, and arms control and verification capacities. Finally, as a Special Assistant to the President and the Senior Director for Arms Control, Disarmament, and Nonproliferation, I have been leading the interagency policy processes on these issues for over 8 months. This has provided me with a clear view of how the entire nuclear policy arena operates and interacts (both domestically and internationally) and the challenges, stovepipes, and perspectives that exist. If confirmed, my experience and interagency connections in this field will serve me well in the role of AVC Assistant Secretary.

Question. If confirmed, do you believe that there are any steps that you need to take to enhance your expertise to perform the duties of Assistant Secretary of State for Arms Control, Verification, and Compliance?

Answer. Given the numerous challenges posed by weapons of mass destruction and emerging technologies, it is important that everyone working to mitigate these challenges continually enhance and expand our personal knowledge and understanding. If confirmed, I will continue my own efforts to understand the scope of both the challenges facing the Bureau and the varying perspectives—both international and domestic—on how to address them. This includes listening to and working with Congress, the interagency, as well as international allies and partners to maximize our collective efforts to improve international security.

Major Challenges and Priorities

Question. In your view, what are the major challenges confronting the next Assistant Secretary of State for Arms Control, Verification, and Compliance?

Answer. There are numerous challenges facing AVC as a whole, some of which I outlined in my opening statement. If confirmed, I look forward to tackling all of them with the help of the experts in the Bureau, at State and around the Government. A top priority would be to enable and empower the Bureau to bring in and retain the necessary expertise to effectively address the growing threats to strategic stability, including China, emerging technologies, and attribution and accountability challenges in the face of mis- and disinformation. Impending retirements and staff attrition must also be addressed. The institutional transfer of knowledge from key experts and opportunities for growth and career development would also be a major focus of mine.

Question. If confirmed, how would you address these challenges?

Answer. If confirmed, I would make it a priority to enhance bipartisan focus on the Bureau's crucial work on global strategic stability. I would also work to expand AVC's ability to work hand in hand with the U.S. interagency focused on nuclear policy, through more dialogues, detail opportunities, and other exchanges, so that the Bureau's tool set can be used to continue to strengthen national security and reduce risks internationally. In particular, I would want to focus on working with the interagency to better integrate deterrence and arms control policies, so they can be mutually reinforcing. Working together with the Hill, I would make the case that AVC needs the best tools and analytical capabilities available, now and in the future, to provide accurate, credible, and robust verification of arms control, non-proliferation, and disarmament agreements and commitments, as well as rigorous assessments of compliance with those agreements and commitments, including in order to provide Congress and our partners and allies with a complete and accurate accounting of the arms control landscape through the annual Compliance Report.

Question. If confirmed, what would be your main priorities?

Answer. Longstanding top priorities for the AVC Bureau continue to include reducing the risk of nuclear and conventional war through effective arms control mechanisms such as: risk reduction, transparency, prevention of unintended escalation, negotiation of effectively verifiable international agreements, and bilateral and multilateral diplomacy to prevent miscalculation and misunderstanding. The Bureau has also long sought to limit vertical nuclear proliferation, and to pursue accountability for and deter the use of chemical, biological, and all weapons of mass destruction. Rapid advances in science and technology require that the Bureau continue its work to tackle new challenges: from creating norms of responsible behavior in space, to addressing security challenges underseas and in the Polar regions, to grappling with advancements in cyber capabilities and other emerging technologies that can threaten strategic stability. Finally reinvigorating and reemphasizing the mission of the Bureau, and supporting the international organizations who support attribution and accountability in our arena, needs to be at the forefront of our efforts. Our ability to hold bad actors accountable under the arms control architectures requires unassailable credibility on our part. That means AVC must be at the forefront of fulfilling U.S. commitments to that architecture.

Question. The Bureau of Arms Control, Verification, and Compliance includes a diverse set of portfolios and issues. What criteria would you apply and what processes would you follow to establish priorities and evaluate tradeoffs in time and resources between the various AVC commitments?

Answer. If confirmed, I would strive to align the use of AVC's staff, time, funding, and other resources with priorities identified by the President and Secretary of State and articulated in the Interim National Security Strategic Guidance and other relevant administration documents, as well as by Congressional mandate. In general, and in conformity with these aforementioned sources of strategic guidance, I would also seek to devote resources to issues based on the magnitude of their potential impact on national security and potential benefit for U.S. efforts to enhance arms control, disarmament, and international security cooperation. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that AVC's Bureau Strategic Plan and Bureau Resource Request reflect full alignment with these criteria for prioritizing the use of resources to fulfill the Bureau's critical national security mission.

Question. What resources does AVC have to call upon within its own bureau, and that it has contracted, to verify, and make compliance determinations with respect to other nations' adherence to their NPT obligations, U.S. nuclear cooperative agreements, and the military diversion of civilian nuclear facilities in violations of existing IAEA safeguards agreements?

Answer. It is my understanding that AVC employs 1.25 FTEs engaged in assessing compliance with the Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT), which includes compliance with required IAEA safeguards agreements, but does not assess compliance with U.S. nuclear cooperative agreements. There are no contracts supporting verification of compliance with the NPT at present. The U.S. Government conducts its own analysis of Iran's compliance with the NPT and makes its own findings, drawing on the IAEA's reports, and extensive reporting by the U.S. Intelligence Community. The principal analysis for the annual Compliance Report is drafted by AVC and coordinated within the Department of State. This draft analysis and findings are then sent to the interagency and a thorough, government-wide vetting and clearance process takes place. When the interagency review is completed, State finalizes the analysis and findings as part of the annual Compliance Report.

Question. How do these resources compare with those AVC has on tap to make determinations regarding possible violations of the Outer Space Treaty, the CTBT, the BWC, and CWC? Please give specific staffing numbers in full-time staffer equivalents and in dollars contracted out for relevant outside analysis.

Answer. I understand that AVC's full-time staff equivalents devoted to verifying compliance with the specified treaties at present are as follows: zero FTEs for the Outer Space Treaty, zero FTEs for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty (CTBT), 3.5 FTEs for the Biological Weapons Convention (BWC), and 10.5 FTEs for the Chemical Weapons Convention (CWC). Should compliance issues arise related to the Outer Space Treaty, AVC staff who cover Outer Space security issues could be allocated to assess such concerns. As the CTBT is not in force yet, no FTEs are dedicated to assessing compliance with it; however, two FTEs work on issues related to CTBT and work to assess compliance with the LTBT and TTBT, as well as states' adherence to their respective voluntary testing moratoria. There are no contracts supporting verification of compliance with the Outer Space Treaty at present. There are no contracts for monitoring compliance with the CTBT, since it is not in force, but ongoing projects relevant to monitoring compliance with the LTBT, TTBT, and states' adherence to voluntary nuclear explosive testing moratoria amount to $1,310,324 at present. Currently, there are three projects supporting BWC compliance and strengthening attribution measures for biological weapons investigations totaling $976,000. AVC also has two current projects related to supporting CWC compliance verification totaling $350,075 at present.

Question. What percentage of verification and compliance analysis does AVC simply delegate to the Intelligence Community and State's Intelligence and Research Bureau?

Answer. As required by statute, the Department of State, led by AVC, prepares compliance analysis as part of the annual Compliance Report, in consultation with the Departments of Defense and Energy and the Joint Chiefs of Staff. As also required by statute, the report is submitted with the concurrence of the Director of National Intelligence. Thus, the Intelligence Community, including the Department of State's Bureau of Intelligence and Research, reviews and concurs with the annual Reports. The AVC Bureau is uniquely positioned to employ a cadre of WMD technical and arms control policy experts who are involved in the rigorous compliance assessment process. Compliance assessments are informed by all-source intelligence products, comprising both finished analysis and raw reporting, relevant to verification of foreign states' compliance with their obligations. For nearly all agreements, AVC convenes Verification and Compliance Analysis Working Groups at which interagency partners, especially those identified by statute as participants in the annual compliance report process, participate in reviewing activities of concern and making recommendations on a compliance determination for respective Compliance Reports.

Question. What are your views on the relationship between the Assistant Secretary of State for Arms Control, Verification, and Compliance and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, in particular, and with Congress in general?

Answer. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee and Congress have an important role in the formation of foreign policy. You have my commitment that, if confirmed, I will work in close coordination with the committee and Congress.

Question. If confirmed, what actions would you take to sustain a productive and mutually beneficial relationship between Congress and the Assistant Secretary of State for Arms Control, Verification, and Compliance?

Answer. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee and Congress have an important role in the formation of foreign policy. My goal, if confirmed, is to work with Congress on resolving a number of challenges that we face as a nation. You have my commitment that, if confirmed, I will work in close coordination with the committee and Congress to achieve our shared objectives.

Question. U.S. Strategic Command leader Admiral Richard says China's "breath-taking" nuclear buildup is the final piece of capability to build a military able to coerce and confront the U.S. and our allies to change the world order. Do you agree with this assessment? Why or why not? What are your views on the causes of China's nuclear expansion? What are the implications?

Answer. The People's Republic of China's (PRC) ongoing rapid expansion of its nuclear arsenal presages a more dangerous future, with a considerably larger number of sophisticated nuclear delivery systems able to reach the United States and our allies and partners than in the past. This larger nuclear arsenal will buttress a broader PRC military build-up and its increasingly assertive and threatening behavior to U.S. allies and partners. Precisely because Beijing is the least transparent member of the P5 nuclear weapon states, accurate assessments of its nuclear trajectory and intentions are difficult. China's behavior, in addition to the concerns expressed by Admiral Richard and others, highlights why the United States must pursue arms control to reduce the dangers from the PRC's growing nuclear arsenal.

Question. Air Force Secretary Kendall recently referred to a potential Chinese fractional orbit bombardment system (FOBS). What can you share about a possible Chinese FOBS capability? How would such a capability affect the credibility of China's no first use policy?

Answer. I defer to the Intelligence Community for a specific assessment. Overall, China's ongoing advances to its nuclear arsenal raise questions regarding its intent and undermine its claims to seek a minimum nuclear deterrent backed by a no-first use policy.

Question. Would an operational FOBS violate the Outer Space Treaty?

Answer. Consistent with longstanding U.S. policy, an object carrying nuclear weapons or other weapons of mass destruction that completes only a fraction of an orbit is not a violation of Article IV of the Outer Space Treaty. Longstanding U.S. and international views are that while the Outer Space Treaty prohibits the placement of WMD in orbit, it does not prohibit nuclear weapons or other WMD transiting through space for part of their trajectory.

Question. We understand the prior administration AVC had found cause to find China in violation of the NPT Article VI. What is your view of Chinese refusal to engage in good faith negotiations as required by the NPT? Are they in compliance with article VI?

Answer. The PRC's nuclear weapons build-up risks undermining decades of international progress toward nuclear disarmament. The State Department's most recent Compliance Report did not find the PRC to be in violation of its obligations under Article VI of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty. If confirmed, I will consult with legal and policy experts at the Department of State on a variety of matters related to the PRC's behavior in the nuclear weapon arena, including its compliance with Article VI.

Question. China has resisted numerous attempts to engage in bilateral or multilateral engagement regarding arms control, and has instead embarked on a major expansion and improvement of its nuclear forces. How do we get China to the arms control table?

Answer. The administration will pursue arms control measures to reduce the dangers from the People's Republic of China's (PRC) growing nuclear arsenal. These efforts will be paired with actions to bolster deterrence in the region. The administration is developing and evaluating specific proposals, and, if confirmed, I commit to consulting Congress at an appropriate time on potential measures to be pursued with the PRC and how best the State Department can develop and retain government expertise regarding arms control with the PRC.

Question. The New START Treaty excludes Russia's tactical nuclear weapons and so-called "exotic" strategic delivery systems. If Russia fields some of these exotic systems before the expiration of New START, how should the U.S. respond?

Answer. The New START Treaty limits Russia's Avangard hypersonic glide vehicle and will limit the Sarmat heavy ICBM at the appropriate point in its development cycle. Whether the two nuclear-powered novel systems announced by President Putin in March 2018 will be operational by New START's scheduled expiration in February 2026 remains to be seen. The United States will use the time provided by the extension of New START to pursue with Russia, in consultation with Congress and U.S. allies and partners, arms control that addresses all Russian nuclear weapons, including novel strategic systems not subject to New START and non-strategic nuclear weapons.

Question. Which of Russia's so-called "exotic" systems do you believe are most concerning for U.S. security? Please explain the reasoning behind your answer.

Answer. Each of the novel systems poses unique challenges. Based on the unclassified information that is available, the nuclear-powered, nuclear-armed cruise missile appears to be volatile, unreliable, and dangerous, posing a threat to the entire world, including Russia. If confirmed, I will consult with the U.S. Intelligence Community on Russia's "exotic" weapon systems, and I will engage with the Department of Defense on the military implications of these systems.

Question. What do you believe the Russian reaction will be, if any, to the recent U.S. declassification of nuclear stockpile numbers?

Answer. Declassifying U.S. nuclear stockpile numbers demonstrates the serious U.S. commitment to transparency and confidence-building measures that can enable further progress on reducing nuclear risks. We encourage Russia and the People's Republic of China (PRC) to do the same and act in a more transparent manner. The declassification of U.S. stockpile numbers has shown U.S. leadership in nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament efforts. Others have welcomed our transparency and joined us in calling on Russia or the PRC to declassify their nuclear stockpile numbers.

Question. What is your understanding of Russia's nuclear doctrine and how it views nuclear deterrence?

Answer. Russia publicly states it would only use nuclear weapons in two scenarios: in response to the use of weapons of mass destruction against it and/or its allies, or if the existence of the Russian state is threatened. Yet Russia conducts exercises with scenarios simulating limited nuclear first use and maintains an arsenal of 1,000 to 2,000 non-strategic nuclear weapons, which is projected to grow. Russia has developed a wide range of new dual-capable ground-, sea-, and air-based short- and intermediate-range missile systems. Such weapons range U.S. allies and partners in Europe and East Asia—as well as U.S. forces stationed there—and both our deterrence strategy and our approach to arms control must address these threats. If confirmed, I will consult with the U.S. Intelligence Community on Russian nuclear policy, strategy, doctrine, and forces.

Question. What are your views on what objectives the U.S. should have for the U.S.-Russia Strategic Stability Dialogues?

Answer. President Biden and President Putin agreed in June 2021 to pursue an integrated, robust, and deliberate Strategic Stability Dialogue. Through this dialogue, the Biden administration seeks to lay the groundwork for future arms control and risk reduction measures, while maintaining a consistent and iterative discussion on threats to strategic stability. While the administration seeks a more stable and predictable relationship with Russia through constructive engagement and aims to lessen the potential for miscalculations and misunderstandings, it will also hold Russia accountable when it disregards its international obligations and commitments. I agree with this approach.

Question. What is your understanding of Russia's objectives for the U.S.-Russia Strategic Stability Dialogues?

Answer. President Biden and President Putin agreed in June 2021 to pursue an integrated, robust, and deliberate Strategic Stability Dialogue. Through this dialogue, Russia has publicly stated it wants to raise U.S. capabilities and actions that it perceives as undermining strategic stability, such as U.S. missile defenses, U.S. precision-guided weapons, U.S.-NATO capabilities and exercises near Russian borders, and U.S. forward-deployed nuclear weapons in Europe.

Question. In a response to Congressional questioning in April 2021, the head of U.S. Strategic Command, Admiral Richard, stated that “Limited U.S. response options are intended to provide a more credible deterrent to limited attack against the U.S., Allies and partners rather than relying primarily on the threat of large-scale nuclear responses. Without this capability, Russia may perceive an advantage at lower levels of conflict that may encourage limited nuclear use.” Do you agree with Admiral Richard’s assessment? Does this capability enhance U.S. leverage in diplomatic engagement with the Russians over their own non-strategic nuclear arsenal?

Answer. I agree that limited U.S. response options are intended to provide a more credible deterrent to limited attack against the United States and our Allies and partners rather than relying primarily on the threat of large-scale nuclear responses. I believe the United States should have modern, credible, and effective nuclear forces that deter adversaries from nuclear use, no matter how limited. The ongoing Nuclear Posture Review process is analyzing how to accomplish this, and Admiral Richard’s expertise and views will factor into that analysis.

Question. Russia has violated previous arms control agreements like the INF Treaty and the BWC. It has repeatedly used banned chemical weapons against its own citizens and tolerated their use by its allies like the Assad regime. Since the fear of violating global norms and commitments does not appear to be a major constraint on Russia’s actions, what other strategies can we employ to actually enforce these norms and ensure Russian behavior does not deteriorate further?

Answer. The 2021 Compliance Report and the Condition 10(C) Report detail Russia’s violations of both the BWC and CWC. If confirmed, I intend to work closely with the interagency, Allies, and partners to identify options to hold Russia accountable for its use of chemical weapons (CW) and identify measures to bring Russia back into compliance with its treaty obligations. The United States uses the full range of tools in its toolkit to respond to Russia’s CWC and BWC violations. For example, the United States added key Russian Ministry of Defense institutes to the Department of Commerce’s Entity List because the U.S. Government has reasonable cause to believe these facilities are associated with Russian biological weapons program. The United States also led efforts at the OPCW that resulted in the addition of two families of Novichoks to the CWC Annex on Chemicals. Further, the United States imposed sanctions under the Chemical and Biological Weapons Control and Warfare Elimination Act of 1991 (“CBW Act”) on Russia for the use of a Novichok chemical weapon in the poisoning of Russian opposition leader Alexei Navalny that included restrictions on exports and purchases of Russian sovereign debt to send a clear signal that Russia’s use of CW has severe consequences.

Most recently, the United States, along with 44 other countries, posed a series of questions to Russia regarding the poisoning of Mr. Navalny under Article IX at the OPCW Executive Council meeting that took place October 5–8, 2021.

The United States will continue to take steps to deter Russia’s use of chemical weapons. This will include engaging Russia bilaterally and multilaterally, as well working with allies and partners at the OPCW Executive Council and Conference of the States Parties and in U.N. fora, including the Security Council, and using public messaging to express our concerns. If confirmed, I will explore further measures to address Russian non-compliance with the CWC. There can be no impunity for the use of chemical weapons.

Question. It is our understanding that Russia has withdrawn its offer to freeze its warhead production that was offered under the Trump administration. What is the administration’s strategy to constrain Russian non-strategic nuclear forces? What technology does the United States possess that would allow it to verify a potential Russian declaration? Has the State Department/AVC invested any funds in developing technologies that could assist in the verification of Russian NSNW? If so, what is the status of those programs and how far along in the TRL process is the technology?

Answer. Russia never proposed to freeze nuclear warhead production. It said in October 2020 that it could accept a U.S. proposal to freeze the size of each side’s nuclear arsenal, in conjunction with a one-year extension of New START. An arrangement on these terms was not finalized, in part, because Russia deemed U.S. efforts to define “warheads” and discuss verification of the freeze as unacceptable extra demands.

The Biden-Harris administration will use the five-year extension of the New START Treaty to pursue with Russia, in consultation with Congress and U.S. allies and partners, arms control that addresses all Russian nuclear weapons, including non-strategic nuclear weapons. Identifying and analyzing appropriate verification technologies, ranging from National Technical Means to on-site inspections, will be an important component of those efforts. If confirmed, this would be a priority for me and an issue on which I would consult with Congress, including ensuring sufficient funding to explore and develop new verification technologies.

Question. What do you view as the purpose of Iran’s nuclear program?

Answer. The United States has made clear its longstanding concerns with Iran’s nuclear program, in particular Iran’s pre-2004 efforts to develop nuclear weapons. As a non-nuclear-weapon State Party to the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, Iran is obligated not to manufacture or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons. Under the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action, Iran reaffirmed this commitment. If confirmed, I will strongly support the administration’s efforts to ensure that Iran never obtains a nuclear weapon.

Question. In your assessment, do Iran’s nuclear program and ballistic missile program indicate a desire by the Iranian Government to have a nuclear weapons capability?

Answer. The United States has assessed that Iran pursued nuclear weapons until late 2003. Iran’s long history of denial and concealment regarding its past nuclear weapons program, its continued escalation of nuclear activities beyond the limits in the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action, and its ballistic missile development and proliferation all remain serious concerns today. Like President Biden, I am committed to ensuring that Iran never acquires a nuclear weapon.

Question. Given Iranian advances in space-based delivery systems and ballistic missiles, does the Iranian regime remain in compliance with the NPT? Why or why not? Please provide a detailed answer.

Answer. The Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) is solely focused on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and does not address missiles or any other potential delivery platform. Nonetheless, I have serious concerns about Iran’s compliance with the NPT independent of Iran’s ballistic-missile-related activities. If confirmed, I will work with legal and policy experts to monitor and assess Iran’s NPT compliance. President Biden has made clear he is committed to ensuring that Iran never acquires a nuclear weapon.

Question. Does the United States conduct its own analysis of Iranian compliance with its safeguards and other NPT commitments or does it rely strictly on the IAEA process? If the former, please describe in detail who makes that determination and what process it entails.

Answer. The U.S. Government conducts its own analysis of Iran’s compliance with the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty and makes its own findings. The IAEA’s reports inform that analysis. After consultations with the U.S. Intelligence Community (IC), the principal analysis for the annual Compliance Report is drafted by the State Department. The Department’s draft analysis and findings are then sent to the interagency and a thorough, government-wide vetting and clearance process takes place. When the interagency review is completed, State finalizes the analysis and findings as part of the annual Compliance Report.

Question. Under the 2015 Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA), the limitations on Iran’s uranium enrichment expire between 2026 and 2031. If the U.S. rejoins the JCPOA, do you assess that Iran will be legally able to increase its uranium enrichment after 2031?

Answer. As reported by the International Atomic Energy Agency, Iran is currently pursuing a uranium enrichment program far in excess of the limits under the JCPOA. A mutual return to compliance with the JCPOA would restore important restrictions on the size and scope of Iran’s nuclear activities, and its uranium enrichment-related activities in particular, as well as the strongest verification and monitoring measures ever negotiated. While Iran would be permitted to expand key uranium enrichment activities again in 2031 under the JCPOA, the Biden administration has made clear that a mutual return to compliance with the deal remains the best available option to restrict Iran’s nuclear program and provide a platform to address Iran’s destabilizing conduct moving forward.

Question. In 2018, Israel's Mossad released a series of Iranian nuclear files, which included information about at least three uranium enrichment facilities that Iran had hidden from the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). Do you agree that providing the IAEA access to those sites is essential to ensuring oversight of Iran's nuclear program?

Answer. The administration takes Iran's full implementation of its legally binding obligations under the Non-Proliferation Treaty and its safeguards agreement with the IAEA very seriously. Iran must provide the IAEA with requested information and access in response to any question or concern related to potential undeclared nuclear materials and activities in Iran. If confirmed, I will strongly support the IAEA's monitoring and verification mandate in Iran.

Question. In 2018, Israel's Mossad released a series of Iranian nuclear files, which included information about at least three uranium enrichment facilities that Iran had hidden from the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA).

Answer. My understanding is that the Biden administration will not take Iran at its word regarding assertions about its nuclear program. The JCPOA provided the strongest verification and monitoring measures ever negotiated to help ensure Iran's nuclear activities are exclusively peaceful. Resumption of mutual compliance with the deal would ensure the renewed implementation of these important measures, as well as restrictions on the size and scope of Iran's nuclear activities. Like President Biden, I am committed to ensuring that Iran never acquires a nuclear weapon.

Question. What are your views on how to define "integrated deterrence"?

Answer. I defer to the Department of Defense for a specific definition of integrated deterrence. The administration believes the security challenges faced by the United States and our allies and partners require a reliance on all elements of national power, not just military tools. As such, there is a strong role for diplomacy to play in strengthening the alliances, institutions, agreements, and norms that underwrite international security. If confirmed, I will engage with the Department of Defense and Congress on how arms control can be used to strengthen deterrence.

Question. How would unilateral U.S. reductions in the nuclear triad and the nuclear weapons complex enable the United States to negotiate with Russia and China from a position of strength?

Answer. Whether unilateral or reciprocal, any potential reductions would need to be carried out in a manner consistent with the objective of ensuring the United States sustains a modern, credible, and effective deterrent so long as nuclear weapons exist. I would never support unilateral reductions that endanger U.S. security or weaken U.S. negotiating leverage.

Question. Which emerging technologies most threaten strategic stability, and why? How can we best address these technologies through existing structures?

Answer. Emerging technologies offer challenges and opportunities to strategic stability. Artificial Intelligence (AI) and Quantum technologies have the potential to provide significant benefits to U.S. national security. AI, for example, could enhance deterrent capabilities and provide tools that improve situational awareness and decision-making capabilities, therefore, avoiding an unintended escalation during a crisis. However, it is important to consider the potential risks from such systems as well. If confirmed, we need to determine whether there are norms of responsible behavior that can be developed around the use of these systems. If confirmed, I look forward to addressing these challenges with Russia and the People's Republic of China.

Question. In your view, would allowing Russian or Chinese inspectors to visit U.S. missile defense sites be an acceptable measure to build trust and transparency? If so, should we insist on reciprocal inspection rights? How would such measures comply with the prohibitions of 10 USC § 130h?

Answer. No decision has been made on whether to seek agreement with Russia or China on transparency measures related to U.S. missile defense programs, including missile defense site inspections. The United States would condition any agreement on receiving reciprocal rights from the Russian Federation and/or the People's Republic of China (PRC). Also, to the extent any agreement would include inspections at U.S. missile defense sites on the territory of allied or partner nations, the United States has committed to approach each Host Nation, prior to any discussion with Russia, to obtain Host Nation approval and conditions for permitting such inspections, and their conduct, on their sovereign territory. I fully recognize that any agreement with the Russian Federation must comply with the prohibitions of 10 USC § 130h.

Question. Does the Biden administration support the development and deployment of INF non-compliant systems such as GLCM to Eastern Europe and Asia?

Answer. The U.S. withdrawal from the INF Treaty due to Russia's material breach and failure to return to compliance resulted in that treaty's termination. As such, there are no longer "INF non-compliant" missiles. The Department of Defense (DoD) continues work on capabilities that would previously have been prohibited under the INF Treaty. I defer to DoD for further program details, but the United States would consult with allies, partners, and Congress prior to any foreign deployments.

Question. What is the difference between a "no first use," "sole purpose," or "fundamental purpose" policy?

Answer. Various declaratory policy options will be reviewed as part of the Department of Defense-led Nuclear Posture Review. That ongoing analysis and the continuing allied and partner consultations will inform my own view on declaratory policy. It would be premature to define these terms before the NPR process has begun a detailed discussion on the matter. At the same time, I understand the concerns expressed among some allies and partners, members of Congress, and experts regarding U.S. adoption of a "no-first-use" or "sole purpose" policy. Those concerns will inform the review process.

[Additional Information—10/28/2021]. Among "no first use," "sole purpose," and "fundamental purpose," most commentators assess "no first use" to be more restrictive than the other two. More exacting distinctions will vary depending on how each is defined. The DoD-led Nuclear Posture Review (NPR) is developing and evaluating different declaratory policy options and their implications. The NPR process will seek to clarify exactly what the formulations mean and avoid potential misunderstandings regarding the implications of the various policies. It would be inappropriate to speculate on specific definitions or differences with the NPR work still ongoing.

Question. What are your views on the United Kingdom's declaratory policy? Was the UK wrong to maintain its long-standing policy of ambiguity in its latest integrated review?

Answer. The administration supports the UK's efforts to ensure its defense and commend the UK for its openness on its nuclear policy and posture. Such transparency reduces the risks of misunderstanding and promotes stability. We call on Russia and the People's Republic of China to adopt a similar level of transparency about their nuclear policies.

[Additional Information—10/28/2021]. I agree with the administration's view of UK declaratory policy, and the United States commends the UK for its openness on its nuclear policy and posture. The administration further supports the United Kingdom's efforts to maintain a credible nuclear deterrent. The United States calls on Russia and the People's Republic of China to adopt a similar level of transparency.

Question. We understand our allies have messaged strongly to the Biden administration against weakening the U.S. nuclear deterrent through adoption of a No First Use/Sole Purpose policy. The administration has previously ignored allied concerns on NordStream2, Afghanistan, and AUKUS. Given widespread allied concerns over a shift in declaratory policy, how would a major shift in this policy be consistent with the President's pledge to "rebuild," U.S. alliances? What concrete steps are you prepared to take to assure allies that the Biden Admin ensure their security?

Answer. The Biden administration is working to reinvigorate and modernize our alliances and partnerships around the world. They are a tremendous source of strength and a unique American advantage. We are working to reaffirm, invest in, and modernize NATO and our alliances with Australia, Japan, and the Republic of Korea—which, along with our other global alliances and partnerships, are America's greatest strategic assist. I understand the concerns expressed among some allies and partners, members of Congress, and experts regarding potential U.S. adoption of a no-first-use or sole purpose declaratory policy. These two options do not reflect a binary choice. They are among various declaratory policy options being reviewed as part of the Department of Defense-led Nuclear Posture Review. That ongoing analysis and the continuing allied and partner consultations will inform my own view. If confirmed, I will work to ensure the President is aware of allied and partner views to inform his decisions on U.S. nuclear posture and policies.

[Additional Information—10/28/2021]. Under the Biden-Harris administration, the United States is working to modernize its military capabilities and ensure the U.S. armed forces are equipped to deter adversaries, defend the U.S. people, interests, and allies, and defeat a variety of threats that emerge. As part of our overarching integrated deterrence, the United States will retain a strategic deterrent that remains safe, secure, and effective so that U.S. extended deterrence commitments to its allies remain strong and credible for the purposes of assurance.

Question. We understand the State Department recently surveyed over 30 countries asking for their views on U.S. nuclear policy and any potential shifts in our declaratory policy. In addition to the responses to this outreach, we also understand there is at least one cable from this summer that codifies this feedback from a meeting between administration officials and their counterparts in the United Kingdom, France, and Germany in a cable. Do you commit to providing the committee with the details of allied feedback to the State Department, including the cable referenced previously?

Answer. As announced, the administration is implementing a robust engagement plan with allies and partners as part of the ongoing Nuclear Posture Review (NPR). Those consultations are classified diplomatic exchanges and part of a current and ongoing process. I will note that allies and partners have provided a broad range of views that are being fed into the NPR process. If confirmed, I commit to work with Congress, through the Department's Bureau of Legislative affairs, to accommodate the vital oversight needs of this committee.

[Additional Information—10/28/2021]. Congressional oversight is a recognized and critical authority of Congress and of this committee. Taking into account the possible need for use of secure facilities and secure means of communication for classified information, and the potential for damage to diplomatic relations with our allies if confidential diplomatic communications are unduly disclosed publicly, I commit, if confirmed, to work with the Department to accommodate the oversight needs of this committee, including as to the matters you reference.

Question. In your testimony, you reference varying definitions of "Sole Purpose". How is this not an obfuscation and how would such a nuanced approach be a legitimate diplomatic response to our allies' and partners' grave concerns?

Answer. Allies and partners have provided a broad range of views that are informing the Nuclear Posture Review (NPR). The administration continues to factor those views into its deliberations, including of various declaratory policies. My point was that as the NPR evaluates various policies, how they affect allied and partner perceptions of the strength and credibility of U.S. extended deterrence commitments needs to both be understood within the U.S. Government and explainable to foreign governments.

Question. The Obama administration twice considered changing declaratory policy, and decided against changes both times. Why?

Answer. The Obama administration explained in its 2010 Nuclear Posture Review that it did not adopt a sole purpose declaratory policy because "there remains a narrow range of contingencies in which U.S. nuclear weapons may still play a role in deterring a conventional or chemical and biological weapon attack against the United States or its allies and partners."

[Additional Information—10/28/2021]. I was not part of the 2010 NPR process and have no firsthand knowledge into the decision-making process from 2010. Whether nuclear weapons may still play a role in deterring a conventional or chemical and biological weapon attack against the United States or its allies and partners is among the contingencies being evaluated as part of the ongoing DoD-led Nuclear Posture Review. It would be premature to comment prior to that analysis being completed.

Question. In what ways do you see the United States exercising its global leadership on arms control issues, and if confirmed, what would you do to advance and balance both U.S. interests and arms control efforts?

Answer. Some examples of current efforts that demonstrate U.S. leadership on arms control include the Strategic Stability Dialogue with Russia, support for disarmament and nonproliferation progress at the U.N. First Committee and in other multilateral institutions, efforts to modernize the Vienna Document and consider proposals for future conventional arms control architecture that enhances international security, continued efforts to marshal international support for holding countries like Russia and Syria accountable for their use of chemical weapons, and dialogue with our allies and partners to support action in concert toward these ends. We also strive to lead by example by ensuring that U.S. nuclear policy and doctrine are consistent with the President's guidance to find ways to reduce the role that nuclear weapons play in our national security posture while taking into account security conditions and ensuring that our deterrence capabilities, and extended deterrence for our allies, remain safe, secure, strong, and credible. If confirmed, I intend to continue these efforts to protect our national security and ensure that the United States remains a leader in arms control by pursuing arms control dialogues, risk reduction best practices, and transparency and confidence-building measures that enhance strategic stability and reduce the risks of conflict escalation and miscalculation.

Question. The USG has once again released numbers on the U.S. nuclear weapons stockpile, and called on other states with nuclear weapons to do the same. Russia and China refused to reciprocate when the Obama administration first tried this. Do you believe they will reciprocate this time?

Answer. Declassifying U.S. nuclear stockpile numbers demonstrates the serious U.S. commitment to transparency and confidence building measures that can enable further progress on reducing nuclear risks. While we would encourage Russia and the PRC to be more transparent, the declassification of U.S. stockpile numbers has not harmed U.S. national security and has shown U.S. leadership in nuclear non-proliferation fora. Others have welcomed our transparency and joined us in calling on Russia and the PRC to do the same.

Question. Should the State Department present data on its own estimates for China and Russia record of progress toward the achievement of the goals of the NPT?

Answer. We assess a variety of information in evaluating progress toward the achievement of the goals of the NPT. I defer to the Intelligence Community on sharing sensitive information publicly. We are concerned about Russian and PRC weapons development and modernization. The Strategic Stability Dialogue with Russia, part of which will discuss next steps in nuclear arms control, is designed to address such concerns. If confirmed, I will consult with legal and policy experts at the Department of State on matters related to the PRC's behavior in the nuclear weapon arena, including its progress toward the achievement of NPT goals.

Question. What are your views with respect to the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons (TPNW)?

Answer. The TPNW risks undermining U.S. deterrence relationships that are still necessary for international peace and security and may reinforce divisions that hinder our ability to work together to address pressing proliferation and security challenges. All NATO Allies remain opposed to the TPNW, as repeatedly stated by the North Atlantic Council, most recently in June of 2021. Any disarmament effort must take into account the international security environment, and legally-binding measures must include effective verification.

Question. Should the United States actively dissuade other States from joining the TPNW, or from participating in TPNW-related events and initiatives?

Answer. The United States has expressed, and will continue to express, our views on what we believe to be the significant defects of the Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons (TPNW) and discouraged other states from becoming Parties to the TPNW. We have also shared our intentions not to participate in the first meeting of TPNW States Parties in March of 2022 in any capacity as such participation could be seen as giving the treaty unwarranted credibility. We also have encouraged our allies and partners not to participate.

Question. Should the United States deny assistance to allies or partners who join the TPNW?

Answer. Allies that benefit from extended nuclear deterrence have declined to join the TPNW. The United States continues to share our views on what we believe to be the significant defects of this treaty with our Allies and partners. We also have encouraged Allies and partners to conduct their own independent analysis of the potential impacts of the TPNW on national interests, legal commitments, and policy. It remains to be seen how TPNW states parties will interpret and implement many of the treaty's provisions, how this might impact their security relationships, and how the United States would react to specific situations.

Question. Do you believe that membership in the TPNW would preclude a country from being a member of NATO, a nuclear alliance? Would TPNW membership preclude a nation from partaking in NATO or U.S.-led exercises?

Answer. The Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons (TPNW) is incompatible with U.S. extended deterrence relationships that are still necessary for international peace and security and may reinforce divisions that hinder the international community's ability to work together to address pressing proliferation and security challenges. U.S. allies covered by extended nuclear deterrence (which includes all NATO Allies, plus Australia, Japan, and South Korea) share our view that the TPNW is incompatible with our extended nuclear deterrence arrangements.

[Additional Information—10/28/2021]. The Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons (TPNW) is incompatible with U.S. extended deterrence relationships that are still necessary for international peace and security, and U.S. allies covered by extended nuclear deterrence share this view. While it remains to be seen how TPNW States Parties will interpret and implement the treaty's provisions, the text of the TPNW could have significant negative consequences for States Parties' ability to cooperate with nuclear-weapon States such as the United States, including in the context of a nuclear alliance like NATO. In particular, the TPNW's prohibition on assisting, encouraging, or inducing conduct otherwise prohibited by the treaty, which includes the possession of nuclear weapons, is vague and, depending on how broadly the treaty's obligations are interpreted, could have potentially sweeping implications for a TPNW State Party's ability to participate in NATO, as well as its ability to join in U.S.-led military exercises.

Question. What do you see as your role, if confirmed, in strengthening support for the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) and the nuclear non-proliferation regime, as compared to the tenets of the TPNW?

Answer. If confirmed, I intend to work closely with the Bureau of International Security and Nonproliferation (ISN) to strengthen political support for the Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) and to achieve a positive outcome at the upcoming NPT Review Conference. I would support and contribute to efforts, led by the President's nominee for Special Representative for Nuclear Nonproliferation, Adam Scheinman, to explain the U.S. record on arms control and our demonstrated commitment to the ultimate goal of nuclear disarmament in accordance with NPT Article VI. I would continue to oppose the Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons, which ignores the security environment, undercuts deterrence, and does not offer a practical path toward that goal.

Question. What are your views on the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty (CTBT)?

Answer. A global, legally-binding ban on nuclear explosive testing in all environments is in the national security interest of the United States. Entry into force of the CTBT would enhance our efforts to prevent the further proliferation of nuclear weapons.

Question. What do you think the United States' role should be in continuing to work with the CTBT?

Answer. I believe it is important for the United States to display leadership and remain fully engaged with the work of the CTBT Preparatory Commission to ensure its capabilities are as robust as possible.

Question. Does U.S. annual support to CTBT require any metric or reporting on how the funds are spent? How does the United States ensure the funds are strictly for the IMS not operations of the CTBT or general expenses?

Answer. Through exchanges of letters in 2018 and again in 2021, the United States has conveyed all applicable U.S. funding restrictions on the funds it provides to the CTBT Preparatory Commission. In response, the Preparatory Commission's Executive Secretary has acknowledged those restrictions and confirmed that U.S. funds will be used consistent with them.

Expenditures on the International Monitoring System (IMS) and International Data Centre (IDC) comprise more than 80 percent of the CTBT Preparatory Commission's annual budget, while the U.S. assessed contribution provides 22.5 percent of the funds available to the Commission for all its activities.

Question. What are your views on the zero yield standard to which the United States adheres, as compared to the interpretation by other CTBT signatories such as Russia and China?

Answer. Once in force, the CTBT would ban nuclear explosive tests of any yield. The treaty's negotiating record and public statements by leaders and/or senior officials from every P5 state at the time the treaty was negotiated, signed, and presented for domestic approval make clear that the CTBT is a "zero-yield" treaty. Russian and PRC officials have since stated that their respective countries continue to have the same understanding of the CTBT scope that was discussed when the treaty was negotiated.

Question. For the past several years, the Intelligence Community and the Department of State have highlighted U.S. concerns that Russia, and especially China, are conducting nuclear tests that may be inconsistent with this standard. In your view, should countries that conduct tests producing nuclear yield face repercussions? If so, what actions would you recommend the international community take in response to these alleged activities on the part of China and Russia?

Answer. The State Department's most recent Compliance Report outlines the findings and concerns the U.S. Government has regarding Russian and Chinese activities related to nuclear testing. Specifically, the Compliance Report analyzes adherence to each country's unilaterally declared nuclear explosive testing moratorium. Nuclear testing is a threat to international security and highlights the need for an in-force ban that the Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty and its associated verification mechanisms can help provide. In the meantime, if confirmed, I pledge to work with allies and partners to highlight and confront nuclear testing wherever it occurs.

Question. The Obama administration considered supporting ratification of the CTBT through a resolution in the U.N. Security Council and a "political statement expressing the view that a nuclear test would defeat the object and purpose of the CTBT" that would be referenced in the U.N. resolution. Regardless of one's view about the necessity of nuclear testing, do you agree that seeking U.S. ratification of CTBT through customary international law mechanisms or any method outside Senate's advice and consent role is unconstitutional?

Answer. As I understand it, the Obama administration never sought to ratify the CTBT other than through the normal constitutional process. There is no mechanism for U.S. ratification of a treaty outside of such a process. The P5 statement in 2016 indicated that a nuclear explosive test would defeat the object and purpose of the CTBT, and a U.N. Security Council resolution then took note of that statement. This did not constitute U.S. ratification of the CTBT. The United States has not ratified the treaty and would require Senate advice and consent or statutory authorization under our domestic law before it could do so.

Question. To be clear, do you believe the President can circumvent the Senate's constitutional role regarding the ratification of treaties in any way?

Answer. No. Senate advice and consent or statutory authorization would be required in order for the United States to ratify the CTBT. Neither may be achieved without the Senate's approval.

Question. Please describe the main challenges you believe the United States faces when it comes to biological threats.

Answer. The biological threat landscape is broad, encompassing naturally occurring, accidental, and intentional incidents with potential impacts to humans, animals, agriculture, materiel, and the environment. Pathogenic biological threats do not respect national borders and create unique challenges to fully assessing, preventing, protecting against, responding to, and recovering from biological incidents. If confirmed, I would work to strengthen the Biological Weapons Convention so it is an improved resource for the international community to protect against the threat landscape, dissuade and deter BW development, and raise the costs of starting or maintaining a BW program, especially including State or non-state actor biological threats.

Question. Please describe your understanding of how advancements in biotechnology, including the emergence of synthetic biology, change the biological threat picture and create new challenges in assessing compliance with the Biological Weapons Convention. Is the Biological Weapons Convention fit for purpose in contending with emerging biotechnology that pose dual-use concerns?

Answer. The BWC prohibits the development, production, stockpiling, or transfer of biological weapons. It underscores the overarching global norm that the weaponization of disease is repulsive and unacceptable. Even as advancements in biotechnology broaden the spectrum of threats, this ban applies to all biological weapons—regardless of any new technological advances. The BWC also provides a unique international forum where States Parties can come together to share information and agree to take certain actions—like developing relevant national oversight or participating in transparency activities. There is an ongoing administration effort to strengthen the BWC. The BWC Review Conference planned for August 2022 will be a key opportunity. One of the United States' priorities will be to set up a systematic process to inform States Parties about science and technological advances, including synthetic biology, in part to support effective biological risk assessment and management.

Question. What is the United States doing to strengthen the BWC? Is the BWC verifiable? If not what are we doing to address U.S. understanding and knowledge of Chinese BW programs?

Answer. The COVID-19 pandemic underscores the need to prevent future outbreaks—whether natural, accidental, or deliberate in origin. To that end, there is more that BWC States Parties can do. If confirmed, I will work to break the two-decade deadlock over strengthening the Biological Weapons Convention and bring the Convention into the 21st century. In particular, I would lead the AVC Bureau's portion of efforts to strengthen the BWC at the upcoming Review Conference and take steps to intensively explore measures to strengthen implementation and promote compliance and transparency.

As noted in the 2021 Compliance Report, the People's Republic of China engaged in dual-use applications, which raises concerns regarding its compliance with Article I of the BWC. In addition, the United States does not have sufficient information to determine whether China eliminated its assessed historical biological weapons (BW) program, as required under Article II of the Convention. If confirmed, I will work closely with the Intelligence Community and interagency partners to improve the United States' understanding of Chinese efforts in this field and to clarify our concerns related to Chinese compliance with the BWC.

Question. Please describe your views on China's national strategy of military-civil fusion and the challenges it poses to the United States. How should military-civil fusion inform U.S. cooperation with China on biotechnology and other related sectors?

Answer. Through its Military-Civil Fusion (MCF) strategy, the PRC pursues collaboration with foreign research institutions, academia, and private firms to acquire the key technologies needed for the People's Liberation Army's future war fighting capabilities, often without those institutions' knowledge of the intended end-use/user or in contravention of existing export license conditions. As a result, its MCF strategy threatens the trust, transparency, reciprocity, and shared values that underpin international science and technology collaboration. It undercuts fair global business practices and is a direct challenge to the international rules-based order and the end-use assurance mechanisms by which we traditionally safeguard technology from military diversion.

Across all sectors, the U.S. continues to strengthen our investment review process, bolster export controls, secure supply chains, and prioritize cases involving the PRC's intellectual property theft. The administration is encouraging our allies and partners in government and industry to implement similar measures. As the PRC has explicitly highlighted the importance of international collaboration at the university level to drive this strategy, the United States issued Presidential Proclamation 10043 to restrict visas for some Ph.D. and post-doctoral researchers seeking to undertake studies in the United States. The United States should continue to raise awareness within the academic and business communities about the risks of collaborating with PRC-based and state-linked entities to protect intellectual property and prevent the misuse of technology—including biotechnology—to drive PRC military modernization. We should also encourage adoption of appropriate risk mitigation measures that include technology transfer and data protection controls, transparency of beneficial ownership, and ability to screen foreign investments against national security risks.

Question. Do you think the United States should cooperate with countries where we have concerns about compliance with the Biological Weapons Convention on biotechnology, pathogen research, and other categories of biological research that could be weaponized or serve a dual-use function?

Answer. It is my view that the United States should not cooperate with countries of compliance concern on specific research where we believe there is significant potential that information, technology, or material we provide could be used for nefarious purposes. In this vein, I strongly support oversight of Life Sciences Dual Use Research of Concern. It is important, however, to continue dialogue with those countries to clarify and resolve compliance concerns and to promote strong biosafety and biosecurity practices and governance. Further, if some countries have the only access to certain pathogens, the United States must find a way to ensure that public health experts can continue their necessary collaborative work to be able to protect us from naturally occurring outbreaks, while minimizing our national security risks.

Question. Do you commit to prioritizing engagement with industry, academia, the health research community, and other stakeholders outside traditional national security circles on the United States' compliance concerns with respect to the Biological Weapons Convention? If so, what three steps will you take to make good on this commitment, should you be confirmed?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit that the AVC Bureau will engage those outside traditional national security circles (e.g., industry, academia, the health research community) and with international counterparts about the United States' compliance concerns with respect to the Biological Weapons Convention. The AVC Bureau plans to engage those outside (and inside) traditional national security circles in the run-up to the BWC Review Conference and during the BWC Review Conference itself through bilateral engagements and briefings, NGO roundtables, and public outreach events.

Question. Is there currently a review process within the United States Government for approving or disapproving life sciences or biological research collaboration with other countries that could pose dual-use concerns, including research on pathogens, viruses, and toxins? What role, if any, does the Department of State play in this review process? Within the Department of State, what role does AVC play in this process? If such a process exists, what type of evidentiary information must be included to determine whether such research collaboration is appropriate?

Answer. When researchers apply for federal funds to be used in a collaborative research project, a number of oversight mechanisms or other review processes may be triggered. For example, research projects funded by Federal agencies are subject to a variety of oversight policies implemented by the respective funding agency, including policies regarding Dual Use Research of Concern (DURC) and high-risk experiments involving pathogens of pandemic potential. Where collaborations involve the transfer of U.S.-origin materials, equipment, or intangible technology, such transfers may be subject to license requirements under relevant export laws and regulations. If such collaborations involve individuals from certain countries traveling to the U.S. for research-related purposes, those individuals may be subject to visa vetting procedures. The AVC Bureau would be consulted if the proposed cooperation raised any potential issues related to compliance with the Biological Weapons Convention.

Question. What role does the Department of State play in formulating and implementing the following guidance?

- United States Government Policy for Oversight of Life Sciences Dual Use Research of Concern, available at <https://www.phe.gov/s3/dualuse/documents/us-policy-durc-032812.pdf>;
- National Science Advisory Board for Biosecurity, Proposed Framework for the Oversight of Dual Use Life Sciences Research: Strategies For Minimizing The Potential Misuse Of Research Information (2007), available at <https://osp.od.nih.gov/wp-content/uploads/Proposed-Oversight-Framework-for-Dual-Use-Research.pdf>
- National Science Advisory Board for Biosecurity, Recommendations for the Evaluation and Oversight of Proposed Gain-of-Function Research (2016), <https://osp.od.nih.gov/wp-content/uploads/2016/06/NSABB-Final-Report-Recommendations-Evaluation-Oversight-Proposed-Gain-of-Function-Research.pdf>
- Report on Adherence to and Compliance with Arms Control, Nonproliferation, and Disarmament Agreement and Commitments (Compliance Report)

Answer. The Department of State participates in formulating U.S. Government policy guidance through interagency processes coordinated by the National Security Council, including the U.S. Government Policy for Oversight of Life Science Dual Use Research of Concern (the other two documents are not policies but reports that informed U.S. Government policy deliberations). As such, if confirmed, I would take part in the review of implementation of such U.S. Government policies. The Department of State is not involved in review processes that are established internal to other government agencies, unless that Department or Agency identifies a concern that would affect a Department of State equity, such as treaty compliance. If confirmed, I would strive to improve collaboration and transparency amongst interagency members on these issues.

Question. If confirmed, what standard will you use in deciding how much unclassified information is required to make an unclassified finding in the Compliance Report?

Answer. If confirmed, I will apply the same rigorous standard the United States has used since the report's inception to determine how much unclassified information is required to make an unclassified finding in the Compliance Report. It is important to be able to corroborate unclassified findings with supporting information, so the public and country in question understands what led the United States to make the determination. The Department works closely with the Intelligence Community and interagency to determine what information can be included in the unclassified report. The classified annex provides additional substantiating information for Congress.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit not to conceal or obfuscate evidence of violations of arms control treaties or agreements just because they cannot be entirely proven in the unclassified domain?

Answer. If confirmed, I pledge to safeguard classified information in accordance with law, regulation, and policy. At every level of classification, I would seek to substantiate conclusions with material evidence at the appropriate level of classification and would consider advocating for declassification and public release of information where it is in the U.S. national security interest to do so.

Question. Do you disagree with any of the findings of the 2021 Compliance Report?

Answer. No, I do not disagree with any of the findings in the 2021 Compliance Report.

Question. Would you have disclosed the fact of Russia's violation of the Intermediate Range Nuclear Forces Treaty in 2014, even though this violation could not be conclusively proven in the unclassified domain?

Answer. U.S. compliance determinations are made stronger by how much evidence can be publicly shared. Sometimes there are legitimate reasons for limiting publicly available information. In 2014, the United States made public its determination of Russia's INF Treaty violation. That action was justified by years of accumulating and evaluating information, compliance analysis, and diplomacy with Russia.

Question. What role should concerns about Russian or Chinese diplomatic blowback play in determining whether to include an unclassified finding in the report?

Answer. It is my view that the report should provide as much detail as can be included in the unclassified Compliance Report regarding questions and concerns with countries' compliance with and adherence to arms control agreements and commitments to which they are party. If there is sufficient information to support making an unclassified finding in the Compliance Report, concerns regarding diplomatic blowback from Russia and China should not affect the inclusion of that finding. The AVC Bureau engages in bilateral dialogues with countries identified as having compliance concerns and that includes Russia and China. Including unclassified supporting information to corroborate the report's findings helps facilitate such bilateral dialogue.

Question. Do you believe that you, if confirmed as Assistant Secretary of State for the AVC Bureau, would need the approval of State Legal to offer policy assessments regarding any country's possible violation of existing arms control agreements, including, but not limited to the NPT?

Answer. If confirmed, I pledge to offer Secretary Blinken, President Biden, and all other senior U.S. Government officials my best possible policy advice, seeking legal advice, including from the Department's Office of the Legal Adviser, as appropriate. Any assessment of a country's compliance with its legal obligations under an international agreement will necessarily entail legal analysis as to the parameters of those obligations, as well as intelligence and other reporting furnishing the best available evidence of states parties' compliance or non-compliance with their binding obligations as the United States understands them.

Question. Do you agree, without qualification, if confirmed, and on request, to appear and testify before this committee, its subcommittees, and other appropriate committees of Congress? Please answer with a simple yes or no.

Answer. Yes.

Question. Do you agree, without qualification, if confirmed, to provide this committee, its subcommittees, other appropriate committees of Congress, and their respective staffs such witnesses and briefers, briefings, reports, records—including documents and electronic communications, and other information, as may be requested of you, and to do so in a timely manner? Please answer with a simple yes or no.

Answer. I commit to work to accommodate the vital oversight needs of Congress.

Question. Do you agree, without qualification, if confirmed, to consult with this committee, its subcommittees, other appropriate committees of Congress, and their respective staffs, regarding your basis for delay or denial in providing testimony, briefings, reports, records—including documents and electronic communications, and other information, as may be requested of you? Please answer with a simple yes or no.

Answer. Yes.

Question. Do you agree, without qualification, if confirmed, to keep this committee, its subcommittees, and other appropriate committees of Congress, and their respective staff apprised of new information that materially impacts the accuracy of testimony, briefings, reports, records—including documents and electronic communications, and other information you or your organization previously provided? Please answer with a simple yes or no.

Answer. Yes.

Question. Do you agree, without qualification, if confirmed, and on request, to provide this committee with records and other information within their oversight jurisdiction, even absent a formal committee request? Please answer with a simple yes or no.

Answer. I commit to work to accommodate the vital oversight needs of the committee.

Question. Do you agree, without qualification, if confirmed, to respond timely to letters to, and/or inquiries and other requests of you or your organization from individual Senators who are members of this committee? Please answer with a simple yes or no.

Answer. Yes.

Question. Do you agree, without qualification, if confirmed, to ensure that you and other members of your organization protect from retaliation any AVC employee, federal employee, or contractor employee who testifies before, or communicates with this committee and any other appropriate committee of Congress? Please answer with a simple yes or no.

Answer. Yes.

Question. If confirmed, do you agree to provide to this committee relevant information within the jurisdictional oversight of the committee when requested by the committee, even in the absence of the formality of a letter from the Chairman?

Answer. I commit to work to accommodate the important oversight needs of the committee in coordination with the Bureau of Legislative Affairs.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO MALLORY A. STEWART BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question. The number of full time equivalents (FTEs) decreased for the Arms Control, Verification, and Compliance Bureau (AVC) during the Trump administration, which compounded a demographic problem where approximately half of the Bureau is eligible to retire. What is the current number of FTEs in the Bureau? And what additional hiring authorities from Congress would help recapitalize the AVC workforce to aid it in the robust bilateral strategic dialogue with Russia, efforts to engage China on meaningful arms control measures, and the host of other challenges that the Bureau is responsible for addressing?

Answer. If confirmed, rebuilding the workforce of the Bureau of Arms Control, Verification and Compliance (AVC) would be my top management priority. The total number of Washington, DC-based full-time equivalent staff in AVC as of October 2021 is 87, which is 23 percent lower than the total as of January 2017. AVC needs a reinvigorated workforce that can help address the dangers posed by chemical, biological, radiological, and nuclear weapons, and their delivery systems, as well as the emerging threats of the 21st century. It is my understanding that the Department would appreciate Congressional support to increase its capacity to address these critical issues of national security. If confirmed, I will support the Under Secretary's intention to recruit a diverse cadre of additional arms control experts. I also commit to uphold and fully implement the Department's leadership and management tenets, including support for diversity and inclusion, to strengthen the Bureau.

Question. Is the State Department concerned that the addition of two new nuclear weapon capabilities in the 2018 Nuclear Posture Review, the deployed low-yield W76(2) warhead and the planned sea-launched nuclear cruise missile, risk leading to inadvertent escalation in a conflict with an adversary? Would continuing to field these new roles for U.S. nuclear weapons be consistent with the President's Interim National Security Guidance to "take steps to reduce the role of nuclear weapons in [U.S.] national security strategy?"

Answer. The W76-2 and the nuclear-armed sea-launched cruise missile were directed in the 2018 Nuclear Posture Review. The ongoing NPR process is reviewing U.S. nuclear weapons capabilities, including the W76-2 and the nuclear-armed sea-launched cruise missile, to assess whether and how they fit into the administration's overarching objectives of reducing the role of nuclear weapons in our national security strategy, while ensuring our strategic deterrence remains safe, secure, and effective and that our extended deterrence commitments to our allies remain strong and credible.

Question. How has the United States recently worked through the Extended Deterrence Dialogues with Japan and South Korea, as well as other bilateral consultations related to the Nuclear Posture Review process, to reaffirm our commitment to our allies' defense irrespective of any possible changes to U.S. nuclear weapons declaratory policy or force structure?

Answer. Extended deterrence plays a foundational role in advancing U.S. national security objectives. In the Nuclear Posture Review process, the administration is consulting with U.S. allies and partners, including those in the Indo-Pacific, through a variety of standing deterrence dialogues and ad-hoc consultations. The Administration has conveyed to allies and partners the United States' commitment to ensuring U.S. extended deterrence remains strong and credible.

Question. China has reportedly recently constructed over 250 intercontinental ballistic missile silos as part of a plan to possibly expand its strategic forces in addition to plans to construct fast breeder reactors that could expand its stockpile of plutonium for nuclear weapons. At what level has the Department (or the White House) conveyed its concerns about any future effort to fill those newly discovered silos? In order to better understand the intent behind these developments, does the United States intend to invite China to a bilateral strategic dialogue or make it an agenda item of the P5 process?

Answer. Many U.S. officials, including Secretary of State Blinken at the ASEAN Regional Forum in August, have noted deep concern with the rapid growth of the People's Republic of China's (PRC) nuclear arsenal. Beijing has clearly and sharply deviated from its decades-old nuclear strategy based on minimum deterrence. In consultation with U.S. allies and partners, the administration will pursue arms control measures to address the PRC's growing nuclear arsenal. The administration is developing and evaluating specific proposals, and, if confirmed, I commit to consulting Congress at an appropriate time on potential measures and how best the State Department can develop and retain government expertise regarding arms control with the PRC.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MALLORY A. STEWART BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question. We have multiple open-source reports about China's increased nuclear posture. This clearly indicates that China must be incorporated into strategic arms discussions, and the longer they refuse the harder that conversation will be. I also recognize that China is coming from a different place than the United States and Russia which will require a different approach. If confirmed, how would you seek to contain China's growing nuclear weapons arsenal?

Answer. We must pursue arms control measures to reduce the dangers from the People's Republic of China's (PRC) growing nuclear arsenal. These efforts will be pursued in coordination with actions to bolster deterrence in the region. The Administration will work with allies and partners to regularly urge the PRC to engage meaningfully on arms control. The Administration is developing and evaluating specific proposals, and, if confirmed, I commit to consulting Congress at an appropriate time on potential measures to be pursued with China.

Question. The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) has publicly confirmed that it found particles of processed uranium at three undeclared facilities in Iran. Are you aware of that?

Answer. As reported by the IAEA Director General, the IAEA continues to investigate questions related to four undeclared locations in Iran, including three where the IAEA has detected the presence of nuclear material. Iran's failure to provide the IAEA with the necessary information and cooperation to resolve these questions is deeply troubling. The administration takes Iran's full implementation of its legally binding obligations under the Non-Proliferation Treaty and its comprehensive safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) very seriously. Iran must provide the required cooperation with the IAEA without delay. If confirmed, I will work closely with the Bureau of International Security and Nonproliferation to ensure that the IAEA has our continued full support in urgently resolving safeguards problems with Iran.

Question. Commercial satellite imagery analyzed by independent researchers at the Institute for Science and International Security demonstrated that at one facility in Iran, there was a steady progression of containers being removed followed by sanitization work. The IAEA found uranium at that site. Do you agree with that assessment?

Answer. In a September report to the IAEA Board, the Director General reiterated his deep concern that the IAEA had found indications that nuclear material had been present at three locations in Iran, that Iran had yet to provide the necessary explanation for the presence of such nuclear material at those locations, and that the current locations of the nuclear material were not known to the IAEA. We have made clear our serious concerns that Iran has failed to respond to the IAEA on these matters. It is essential that Iran fully comply with its legally binding obligations under its comprehensive safeguards agreement with the IAEA without further delay, and if confirmed, I will work closely with the Bureau of International Security and Nonproliferation to ensure that the IAEA has our continued full support in urgently resolving these safeguards problems with Iran.

Question. Do you agree that it is an obligation under Article III of the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty (NPT) to declare all nuclear material to the IAEA?

Answer. Article III requires each non-nuclear-weapon State Party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) to accept safeguards on all of its source or special fissionable material in all peaceful nuclear activities, as set forth in an agreement to be negotiated and concluded with the International Atomic Energy Agency. The IAEA's comprehensive safeguards agreement enables NPT non-nuclear-weapon States Parties to implement this obligation and requires those states to declare to the IAEA all nuclear material that is required to be safeguarded under the NPT.

Question. Is Iran a party to the NPT with a signed Comprehensive Safeguards Agreement with the IAEA?

Answer. Yes. Iran ratified the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) in 1970 and remains a State Party to the Treaty. Iran's NPT-required Comprehensive Safeguards Agreement with the IAEA came into force in 1974 and remains in force.

Question. Do you agree that Iran is in non-compliance with the NPT?

Answer. I have serious concerns about Iran's compliance with the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT), and if confirmed, I will help implement U.S. policy to support the IAEA's work to monitor and assess Iran's compliance with its NPT-required safeguards agreement. Iran must cooperate fully with the IAEA to address the serious, outstanding issues related to potential undeclared nuclear material in Iran. As a non-nuclear-weapon State Party to the NPT, Iran is obligated not to manufacture or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MALLORY A. STEWART BY SENATOR TED CRUZ

Question. Since 2007, it has nearly always been the position of the United States that Iran is not a member in good standing within the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT). Even pursuant to the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA), Iran would not have returned to being a member in good standing until the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) reached a "Broader Conclusion" verifying the exclusively peaceful nature of Iran's nuclear program. In April 2019, then-nominee to be Special Representative for Nuclear Nonproliferation Jeffrey L. Eberhardt confirmed in writing to this committee that “given Iran’s past noncompliance with both its safeguards agreement and its NPT obligations, its failure to fully address IAEA questions related to past activities relevant to the development of a nuclear explosive device, and the emergence of new questions surrounding Iran’s motives for retaining and concealing documents, equipment, and personnel related to its past nuclear weapons program, Iran’s standing as a non-nuclear-weapon State Party to the NPT cannot be described as ‘good.’”

- Do you agree with Mr. Eberhardt’s assessment?

Answer. Yes. Given Iran’s past non-compliance with its obligations under the NPT and Iran’s NPT-required safeguards agreement and its present failure to fully address the IAEA’s current questions related to implementation of that safeguards agreement, Iran’s standing as a non-nuclear-weapon State Party to the NPT cannot be described as “good.” The United States has thoroughly detailed the concern with Iran’s compliance with Article III of the NPT, including in the 2021 Compliance Report.

Question. Do you consider Iran’s past possession of the Nuclear Archive seized by Israel, including the materials in the Archive relevant to the development of nuclear weapons, to constitute non-compliance by Iran of its obligations under the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT)?

Answer. I have serious concerns about Iran’s compliance with the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT), and if confirmed, I will work with legal and policy experts to monitor and assess Iran’s NPT compliance. Iran must cooperate fully with the IAEA to address the serious, outstanding issues related to potential undeclared nuclear material in Iran. As a non-nuclear-weapon State Party to the NPT, Iran is obligated not to manufacture or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons.

Question. Do you consider Iran’s past concealment of the Nuclear Archive seized by Israel, including the materials in the Archive relevant to the development of nuclear weapons, to constitute non-compliance by Iran of its obligations under the NPT?

Answer. Iran’s long history of denial and concealment regarding its past nuclear weapons program is of serious concern. The Biden-Harris administration will not take Iran at its word regarding assertions about its nuclear program and fully supports the IAEA as it uses its safeguards authorities to investigate any indication of undeclared nuclear material or activities in Iran. Like President Biden, I am committed to ensuring that Iran never acquires a nuclear weapon.

Question. Do you believe that Iran should be entitled to the use of civilian nuclear technology even if they are not a member in good standing of the NPT?

Answer. Article IV of the NPT recognizes the right of all the Parties to the Treaty, including Iran, to develop research, production and use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes without discrimination and in conformity with Articles I and II of the Treaty. Iran must, however, comply with its international obligations when undertaking nuclear activities, including its obligations under Article II of the NPT and its NPT-required safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Question. Do you consider Iran to be entitled to benefit from nuclear technology pursuant to Article IV the NPT?

Answer. Article IV of the NPT recognizes the right of all the Parties to the Treaty, including Iran, to develop research, production and use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes without discrimination and in conformity with Articles I and II of the Treaty. Iran must, however, comply with its international obligations when undertaking nuclear activities, including its obligation under Article II of the NPT not to manufacture or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons.

Question. Do you consider Iran to be specifically entitled to benefit from nuclear technology pursuant to Article IV the NPT?

Answer. Article IV of the NPT recognizes the right of all the Parties to the Treaty, including Iran, to develop research, production and use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes without discrimination and in conformity with Articles I and II of the Treaty. Iran must, however, comply with its international obligations when undertaking nuclear activities, including its obligation under Article II of the NPT not to manufacture or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons.

Question. Do you assess that China is in violation of its Article VI obligations?

Answer. China's nuclear weapons build-up risks undermining decades of international progress toward nuclear disarmament. If confirmed, I will consult with legal and policy experts at the Department of State on a variety of matters related to China's behavior in the nuclear weapon arena, including its compliance with Article VI.

Question. What leverage does the United States currently possess to dampen China's nuclear buildup?

Answer. U.S. allies and partners in Asia will be key to success in the administration's efforts to bring the People's Republic of China (PRC) into any arms control measures, and the administration will work with them to regularly urge the PRC to engage meaningfully with the United States on arms control. The administration will pursue arms control measures to reduce the dangers from the PRC's growing nuclear arsenal and will make the case to Beijing that arms control is in its security interest. Arms control is not a trap designed to weaken China's defenses, but a mechanism to reduce the risk of military crises and manage the threat of destabilizing arms races, something that is in the interest of all countries.

Question. For decades, China claimed that all it needed was a "minimum deterrent," but the CCP seems to be pursuing a capability far beyond that threshold. Why now? And how should the U.S. respond to China's nuclear modernization?

Answer. The People's Republic of China's (PRC) apparent build-up of nuclear capabilities is cause for concern and may signal a departure from its decades-long nuclear strategy based on minimum deterrence. I defer to the Intelligence Community for a specific assessment on the timing of this build-up. In parallel to the PRC's nuclear build-up, its broader geopolitical goals appear to be shifting as well. The PRC's military activities highlight Beijing's increasing comfort with the employment of military forces to achieve its foreign policy objectives. As the administration pursues arms control measures to reduce the dangers from the PRC's growing nuclear arsenal, the administration will simultaneously maintain the capabilities to defend against a range of PRC military threats to the United States and our allies and partners.

Question. Turning now to Russia. You have been a noted advocate of the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty. As you know, the United States Senate has pointedly refused to ratify the CTBT, in part because of Russian behavior. In its 2021 compliance report, the Trump administration rightly called out this behavior. I'd like to quote from that report: "The United States finds that, since declaring its testing moratorium, Russia has conducted nuclear weapons experiments that have created nuclear yield and are not consistent with the U.S. 'zero-yield' standard." Do you agree with that assessment?

Answer. Yes. I agree that since declaring its testing moratorium, Russia has at times conducted nuclear weapons tests or experiments that have created nuclear yield, which is not consistent with the zero-yield standard.

Question. Do you commit to ensuring, if you are confirmed, that you would continue to document such non-compliance?

Answer. Yes. I commit that, if confirmed, I will continue to document non-compliance and inconsistencies with arms control obligations and commitments in the annual Compliance Report.

Question. I am concerned about the possibility of the Biden administration adopting a misguided "no-first-use" nuclear policy. Russia used to have a no-first-use policy, but formally scrapped it years ago when the Kremlin feared its conventional forces were insufficient. Our principal adversary, China, has formally declared a no first-use policy, but the Chinese Communist Party has proven itself willing to break any promise that suits its ambitions.

- Do you believe China's commitment to not use nuclear weapons first in a conflict?

Answer. I doubt the People's Republic of China's (PRC) commitment to a no-first-use policy. There is ambiguity over the conditions under which Beijing would act outside of its professed no-first-use policy. Some People's Liberation Army (PLA) officers have written publicly of the need to spell out conditions under which China might need to use nuclear weapons first. There has been no indication that national leaders are willing to address such nuances and caveats publicly. However, ongoing PRC advances in its nuclear arsenal, such as an exploration of low-yield warheads, raise questions regarding PRC intent and undermine its claims to maintain a minimum nuclear deterrent backed by a no-first-use policy.

Question. Do you personally support a no-first-use policy for the United States?

Answer. No.

Question. Do you believe we have transparency into Iran's nuclear program?

Answer. While the IAEA maintains near daily access at key nuclear facilities in Iran under Iran's IAEA Safeguards Agreement, the IAEA has reported that its verification and monitoring activities have been seriously undermined as a result of Iran's decision to stop the implementation of its nuclear-related commitments under the JCPOA, including the Additional Protocol. A return to mutual implementation of the JCPOA would restore the JCPOA's transparency measures, which are the strongest verification and monitoring provisions ever negotiated.

Question. Given we do not have a comprehensive accounting of Iran's PMD program, and taking into consideration Iran's decades of deception to the IAEA on its nuclear program, how is it possible to have an accurate appraisal of Iran's activities as they evolve, when the international community lacks a baseline for verification efforts?

Answer. The IAEA has reported significant concerns regarding potential undeclared nuclear material and activities in Iran, and we have full confidence in the Agency to pursue its critical verification and monitoring responsibilities there. It is essential that Iran fully comply with its legally binding obligations under the NPT and its Comprehensive Safeguards Agreement with the IAEA to resolve these important matters without further delay. The JCPOA provided the strongest verification and monitoring measures ever negotiated. Resumption of mutual compliance with the deal would ensure the renewed implementation of these measures, as well as its restrictions on the size and scope of Iran's nuclear activities.

Question. Despite the Board of Governor's December 2015 Final Assessment, which closed the chapter on PMDs in order to move forward with implementation of the JCPOA, the issue of Iran's possible military dimension remains outstanding. If confirmed, do you plan to reopen the PMD file? If not, why not?

Answer. President Biden has made clear he is committed to ensuring that Iran never acquires a nuclear weapon. If confirmed, I will strongly support the Department's efforts, as they relate to my position as AVC Assistant Secretary, to bolster the IAEA's monitoring and verification activities in Iran so that the IAEA can provide the strongest possible assurance that Iran is not undertaking any undeclared nuclear activities. A return to mutual implementation of the JCPOA would restore the JCPOA's transparency measures, which are the strongest verification and monitoring provisions ever negotiated.

Question. On April, 1, 2018, Tiangong-1, China's prototype space station, re-entered the earth's atmosphere after an uncontrolled re-entry. On May 11, 2020, the Chinese Long March 5B rocket, re-entered the earth's atmosphere after an uncontrolled re-entry. On May 8, 2021, another Chinese Long March 5B core stage re-entered the earth's atmosphere after making an uncontrolled re-entry. In response to the most recent uncontrolled entry, NASA Administrator, Bill Nelson, said that "It is clear that China is failing to meet responsible standards regarding their space debris."

- Do you agree with the assessment that China is currently violating the spirit of the Outer Space Treaty?

Answer. Along with the United States and over 90 other members of the U.N. Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, the PRC joined consensus in June 2019 on 21 voluntary, non-legally binding guidelines for the long-term sustainability of outer space activities. One of these guidelines calls for states to "[t]ake measures to address risks associated with the uncontrolled re-entry of space objects." We urge all nations, including the PRC, to abide by their commitments and implement these guidelines, encouraging transparency and information sharing with other nations. If confirmed, I will work with my colleagues within State and at NASA to highlight the long-standing U.S. space policy principle that responsible space actors operate with openness, transparency, and predictability to maintain the benefits of space for all humanity.

Question. Do you agree that in the case that space debris causes damage in the United States or in other nations party to the Outer Space Treaty from a Chinese Government launched space vehicle, that China would accept liability for damages under Section VII of the Outer Space Treaty? If not, please list what specific actions the Peoples Republic of China has taken to assure the United States that it would comply with Section VII of the Outer Space Treaty?

Answer. In addition to its obligations under the 1967 Outer Space Treaty, the PRC is a party to the 1972 Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects. The Liability Convention provides that a launching State shall be absolutely liable to pay compensation for damage caused by its space objects on the surface of the Earth or to aircraft in flight and has fault-based liability for damage caused to objects in space. The Liability Convention also provides for procedures for the settlement of claims for damages. These two treaties, along with 1968 Astronaut Rescue and Return Agreement and the 1976 Registration Convention, provide a basic legal framework within which interested States can work to protect their interests. The PRC has also stated in the U.N. Committee on the Peaceful Use of Outer Space that “wide adherence to the United Nations treaties contributes to creating a safe, secure and sustainable atmosphere for the development of outer space activities.”

Question. Do you agree that China’s continued use of uncontrolled re-entries constitute a national security threat? If not, then why?

Answer. As NASA Administrator Nelson noted in May 2021, spacefaring nations must minimize the risks to people and property on Earth of re-entries of space objects and maximize transparency regarding those operations. The PRC has yet to implement responsible standards regarding some of their space debris, which results in uncontrolled re-entries. It is critical that the PRC act responsibly and transparently in space to ensure the safety, stability, security, and long-term sustainability of outer space activities as well as human life.

Question. On July 31, 2019[,] at a Brookings Institution event titled “Assessing Space Security: threat and response,” you stated that “the legal framework for both the commercial side and the military engagements and the evolution of the players in space has to catch up and it hasn’t caught up.” Please elaborate on your statement.

- Please list all aspects of the legal framework for “military engagements” that need to be updated and how would you, in your potential role at the Department of State, update them?

Answer. As the Biden-Harris administration’s Space Priorities Framework notes, “[as] space activities evolve, the norms, rules, and principles that guide outer space activities also must evolve.” In this regard, I believe that it is essential for the United States to continue to lead in strengthening global governance of space activities to uphold and strengthen a rules-based international order for space.

The principles of 1967 Outer Space Treaty remain the indispensable foundation for these efforts. In this regard, I fully support the Biden-Harris administration’s focus on developing legally non-binding approaches to reduce threats to space systems through the further development and implementation of norms, rules and principles of responsible behaviors. There are advantages to focusing on voluntary, legally non-binding norms of responsible behavior, such as the ability to adapt quickly to changing circumstances or technologies, allowing new and novel uses of space to be explored rather than restricted, and to allow civil and commercial operators to have more of a voice in their development.

Question. Please list all aspects of the legal framework for “commercial side” need to be updated and how would you, in your potential role at the Department of State, update them?

Answer. It is essential for the United States Government to work closely and collaboratively with U.S. commercial industry and allies to promote the implementation of existing measures and lead in the development of new measures that contribute to the safety, stability, security, and long-term sustainability of space activities. The United States also must demonstrate how the full range of its governmental and private sector space activities can be conducted in a responsible, peaceful, and sustainable manner.

Question. Will updating the legal frameworks for military or commercial engagements require updating or amending the Outer Space Treaty, if so how, if not, why not? Please describe any risks or potential disadvantages to updating or amending the Outer Space Treaty?

Answer. As the Biden-Harris administration’s Space Priorities Framework notes, “[as] space activities evolve, the norms, rules, and principles that guide outer space activities also must evolve.” In this regard, I believe that it is essential for the United States to continue to lead in strengthening global governance of space activities to uphold and strengthen a rules-based international order for space.

The principles of 1967 Outer Space Treaty remain the indispensable foundation for these efforts. In addition to the Outer Space Treaty, I fully support the Biden-

Harris administration's focus on developing legally non-binding approaches to reduce threats to space systems through the further development and implementation of norms, rules and principles of responsible behaviors. There are advantages to focusing on voluntary, legally non-binding norms of responsible behavior, such as the ability to adapt quickly to changing circumstances or technologies, allowing new and novel uses of space to be explored rather than restricted, and to allow civil and commercial operators to have more of a voice in their development.

Question. Please describe how updating "legal frameworks" would impact the commercialization of space and why?

Answer. U.S. commercial space activities are on the cutting edge of space technology, space applications, and space-enabled services. As a result, I believe that the existing international legal framework provides a solid foundation upon which commercial space activities and interests of the U.S. private sectors can thrive. Based upon this framework, domestic U.S. law and regulations must provide clarity and certainty for the authorization and continuing supervision of non-governmental space activities, including for novel activities such as on-orbit servicing and orbital debris removal.

Question. On January 11, 2007, China launched a ballistic missile from Xichang Space Launch Center that aimed at a nonoperative Chinese weather satellite, the Fengyun 1C, completely destroying the satellite. The destruction of the satellite created more than 3,000 pieces of space debris, the largest ever tracked, and much of it is expected to remain in orbit for decades.

- Please describe how China's actions, as described above, violate the Article IV and Article IX of the Outer Space Treaty? If not then, why not?

Answer. It is my understanding that the administration of President George W. Bush did not make a determination of Chinese compliance with the Outer Space treaty following China's 2007 ASAT test. If confirmed, I commit to working with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on enhancing countries' compliance with their Outer Space Treaty commitments.

Following Russia's reckless November 2021 destructive anti-satellite weapon test, Secretary Blinken stated, "We call upon all responsible spacefaring nations to join us in efforts to develop norms of responsible behavior and to refrain from conducting dangerous and irresponsible destructive tests like those carried out by Russia." In addition, Deputy Secretary of Defense Hicks called on all nations to refrain from recklessly conducting destructive anti-satellite testing, which significantly increases the risk to human spaceflight and other satellites, and to foster a safe, sustainable space environment.

China's ASAT test in January 2007 was inconsistent with the Space Debris Mitigation Guidelines of the Inter-Agency Space Debris Coordination Committee, which was endorsed by the China National Space Administration.

Question. Please describe the threat on space exploration and the commercialization of space from space debris, and further specifically describe the threat from space debris created as a result of Chinese, Russian, and North Korean actions.

Answer. Both China's ASAT test in January 2007 and Russia's in November 2021 were inconsistent with the Space Debris Mitigation Guidelines of the Inter-Agency Space Debris Coordination Committee, which were endorsed by Roscosmos and the China National Space Administration. Russia's November 2021 test also was inconsistent with the [voluntary, legally non-binding] Space Debris Mitigation Guidelines of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space in June 2007, which were endorsed by the U.N. General Assembly in December 2007. As NASA Administrator Nelson noted in May 2021, spacefaring nations must minimize the risks to people and property on Earth of re-entries of space objects and maximize transparency regarding those operations.

Question. Do you agree that China's actions threaten the United States' national security? If not, then why?

Answer. I am very concerned that the PRC has developed counterspace weapons capabilities intended to target U.S. and allied satellites and that both China and Russia believe that counterspace operations will be integral to potential military campaigns against the U.S. and its allies. If confirmed, I plan to work with the Department of Defense and the Intelligence Community to use those tools available to the Department of State to address these threats as part of a whole of government response.

Question. On December 13, 2001, President George W. Bush announced the United States' withdrawal from the Anti-Ballistic Missile (ABM) Treaty, which took effect on June 13, 2002.

- Do you agree that the United States should attempt to re-enter the ABM treaty? If so, please describe why?

Answer. The ABM Treaty terminated upon the United States' withdrawal, and thus cannot be rejoined.

Question. On December 13, 2001, President George W. Bush announced the United States' withdrawal from the Anti-Ballistic Missile (ABM) Treaty, which took effect on June 13, 2002.

- Please list what potential national security implications rejoining the ABM treaty would have on the United States?

Answer. The ABM Treaty terminated upon the United States' withdrawal, and thus cannot be rejoined. If the United States were still a party to the 1972 ABM Treaty, it would prohibit or constrain the United States from continuing to develop and deploy strategic and theater ballistic missile defense (BMD) systems in terms of, for example, capability, geographic location, numbers, and basing modes.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO STEVEN C. BONDY BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Trafficking in Persons

Question. In the 2021 Trafficking in Persons Report, Bahrain was identified as Tier 1 but still has room for improvement, especially on adequately identifying trafficking victims as compared to labor law violations.

- How will you work with Bahrain to address these issues if you are confirmed as Ambassador?

Answer. Human trafficking is an issue of serious concern to the U.S. Government. While Bahrain has made strides to reform its labor sponsorship system in recent years, even as many of those reforms were politically sensitive within the country, I agree there is more that needs to be done. Bahrain is a regional leader on labor issues, and Bahrain's engagement with its neighbors on the subject has led to important reforms elsewhere. The annual State Department TIP report documents areas of concern and recommendations for further improvement. If confirmed, I intend to work with Bahraini officials to further improve efforts to address forced labor vulnerabilities inherent in the sponsorship system and safeguard workers against abuses.

Question. What is your assessment of this particular issue and if confirmed, how will you work with the Ambassador At Large to bolster religious freedom in-country?

Answer. Bahrain has been a regional leader in religious freedom for minority religious groups represented by Bahraini citizens as well as expatriates resident in the country. In that regard, following the signing of the 2020 Abraham Accords, Jewish life is reviving in Bahrain with a historical synagogue now being operational. Bahrain is the only Gulf Arab country that recognizes Ashura, the most significant time of the Shia religious calendar, as an official holiday. However, the International Religious Freedom Report documents continued discrimination against and marginalization of its Shia citizen population. If confirmed, I will urge Bahrain to continue to expand respect for freedom of religion or belief and to promote an inclusive society that upholds religious freedom for the members of all religions and religious sects. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the State Department's Ambassador at Large for Religious Freedom on this issue.

Question. If confirmed, what steps will you take to address these instances with the host government?

Answer. Human rights are at the forefront of the administration's foreign policy, as they have been for me throughout my career. If confirmed, I intend to lead several established channels for human rights dialogue with Bahrain, including through our annual Strategic Dialogue and other high-level engagements, as well as to engage on specific cases as needed. Our partnership with Bahrain is strongest when based on shared values and frank and honest engagement. I appreciate Congress's focus and engagement on this important topic, and if confirmed, I look forward to working with members to continue to advance human rights in Bahrain.

Question. How will you direct your Embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure the U.S. Embassy in Manama continues to engage a wide range of civil society, including activists both inside and outside of Bahrain and those associated with Bahraini citizens imprisoned for exercising their rights. If confirmed, I look forward to continuing this important work and will look for opportunities to build upon it.

Question. If confirmed, what steps do you plan on taking to further implementation of the Abraham Accords?

Answer. The Abraham Accords agreement between Israel and Bahrain represents a change in the strategic orientation of the Kingdom, and it has already made an important contribution to regional security and economic development. While the two countries have already opened embassies in each other's countries, launched direct air connections, and signed a number of MOUs, if confirmed, I would work to strengthen relations between these two important friends and allies across a wide spectrum of areas, from military to economic to trade to education. Building people-to-people ties is a particular area of interest that would yield long-term dividends. I would want to consult with the Bahraini Government and the Israeli Embassy in Bahrain to see where they felt the greatest opportunities lie.

Question. How would you propose strengthening the Bahraini public's support for normalization between Bahrain and Israel?

Answer. It is essential for both U.S. and regional security interests that Israel is further integrated into the region. To further demonstrate for the Bahraini public the benefits of normalization, relations and linkages must grow organically, particularly between the peoples of the two countries. Direct Gulf Air flights servicing travelers between Bahrain and Israel represent a big step in this regard and facilitate ties in a number of areas such as commerce, technology, medicine, education, and tourism. If confirmed, I would support building economic and trade partnerships between the two countries, or in a trilateral forum involving the United States, so that the Bahraini public can see and feel the benefits of normalization.

Question. In light of the Abraham Accords and Israel's entry into CENTCOM, if confirmed, will you commit to advocating for Israel's full integration into the multilateral activities that CENTCOM and the Fifth Fleet lead out of Bahrain, including maritime security efforts in the Gulf and Red Sea, and regional efforts on missile defense and counter-drone efforts?

Answer. Integrating Israel into Gulf security planning and operations represents one of the most significant potential benefits of the Abraham Accords. If confirmed, I will engage Bahraini and United States military leaders to promote integrating Israel into regional operations, including maritime and other security efforts commanded from Bahrain.

Question. In your view, what benefits would this have for regional stability?

Answer. Bahrain's leaders have been clear that their relationship with Israel and decision to normalize is in the country's strategic interest. Indeed, the two countries have many common security interests. Further cooperation and interoperability between the two countries can only strengthen their ties and security and improve regional and United States security.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to work with CENTCOM and the Fifth Fleet to get an Israeli naval liaison officer assigned to NAVCENT in Manama? Please provide your assessment of the obstacles and challenges to doing so.

Answer. If confirmed, I will commit to work with CENTCOM and the Fifth Fleet to get an Israeli naval liaison assigned to NAVCENT in Manama. Enhanced Israeli participation in Gulf security planning and operations will improve regional and United States national security.

Question. What role should Bahrain play in efforts to counter Iranian regional aggression?

Answer. Bahrain is a steadfast U.S. ally and, as such, has consistently supported U.S. efforts to counter Iran's regional aggression. The threat posed by Iran and its proxies is very real to Bahrain and U.S. interests in Bahrain. If confirmed, I plan to work closely with our Bahraini partners to help bolster their security while supporting a comprehensive approach towards addressing Iran's destabilizing behavior.

Question. If confirmed, what steps do you plan on taking to build upon, and expand, the International Maritime Security Construct (IMSC) established in 2019 in response to growing Iranian threats to freedom of navigation in the Gulf?

Answer. Bahrain's hosting of the IMSC to ensure safe transit in the Gulf is an important example of its commitment to maritime security and freedom of navigation at a time when Iran continues to threaten commercial shipping in the Gulf. If confirmed, I will work with CENTCOM, NAVCENT, and the Bahrain Defense Force to ensure that their response to Iran in the region remains robust and forceful and facilitates the smooth flow of transport through open sea lanes.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to support Bahrain's partnership with the Fifth Fleet's Task Force 59?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will work with CENTCOM, NAVCENT, and Bahrain Defense Force leaders on Bahrain joining the Fifth Fleet's Task Force 59.

Question. How can the US leverage this partnership with Bahrain to encourage other Gulf states to join Task Force 59?

Answer. Task Force 59 is an innovative and unique initiative in the Gulf. If confirmed, I would work with CENTCOM and United States diplomatic missions in the region to encourage other Gulf states to join. Success in its mission would be the best advertisement for others to join.

Question. What is your assessment of Iranian efforts to destabilize Bahrain politically and militarily?

Answer. Iran directs, trains, supplies, and funds militia groups across the region to advance its interests, undermine regional stability, and threaten U.S. partners, including Bahrain. Iran has a long history of cultivating, advising, and training armed Shia militant groups in Bahrain. The threat from Iranian-backed militants and other destabilizing actors is real; Bahraini and U.S. authorities have worked closely together to counter it for years and continue to do so on an ongoing basis. If confirmed, I intend to coordinate closely with the Bahraini Government to ensure our joint interests are adequately protected from threats of all kinds. We will continue to use a comprehensive approach using a variety of tools to counter the full range of Iran's destabilizing behavior. Working with Bahrain to promote internal security protects American citizens, investments, and interests in the Kingdom.

Question. How can the United States, Bahrain, and potentially other regional partners strengthen cooperation to counter these efforts by Tehran?

Answer. The United States and Bahrain can continue to strengthen cooperation to counter Iran's destabilizing behavior through exercises and increased interoperability. Task Force 59 is a great example of a new initiative to counter evolving threats. Targeted United States training of vetted Bahraini internal security units and enhancing counter-terrorism financing/anti-money laundering activities all contribute to safety and security inside Bahrain. If confirmed, I would work to continue these efforts.

Question. If confirmed, how do you plan to work to ensure Bahrain's concerns are addressed in a future agreement with Iran?

Answer. The administration continues to consult closely with Bahrain and all of its regional partners on U.S. engagement with Iran. Commitment to Bahrain, a Major Non-NATO Ally, is strong and will remain so. If confirmed, I would work with the Government of Bahrain to keep them apprised of developments in U.S. engagement with Iran to further strengthen our partnership.

Question. Where should Iran's malign proxy activity fall in terms of the priorities in the context of negotiations with Tehran?

Answer. The President and the Secretary have been clear that the administration has fundamental problems with Iran's actions across a series of issues, including its support for terrorism, its ballistic missile program, its destabilizing actions throughout the region, and its abhorrent practice of using wrongfully detained U.S. citizens and foreign nationals as political tools. An Iran with a nuclear weapon would be likely to act even more provocatively when it comes to these issues, so the Biden-Harris administration has been clear that Iran will not be allowed to obtain a nuclear weapon. If confirmed, I will ensure continued support to a comprehensive approach using a variety of tools to counter the full range of Iran's destabilizing behavior, which includes its proxy activity in Bahrain.

Question. If nuclear talks between the U.S. and Iran fail to yield results, what steps should the U.S. be prepared to take to address Iran's malign proxy activity which pose a serious threat to partners like Bahrain?

Answer. The U.S. Government will continue to rely on a comprehensive approach using a variety of tools to counter the full range of Iran's destabilizing behavior and stand steadfast with our partners in the region in support of their security. If confirmed, I will work closely with Bahraini partners on ways and means to counter malign Iranian activity in the Kingdom.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO STEVEN C. BONDY BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question. How, if at all, do you expect U.S.-Bahrain relations to change in light of Bahrain's 2020 normalization agreement with Israel?

Answer. Bahrain signing the 2020 Abraham Accords agreement with Israel represents a historic opportunity to deepen our relationship with Bahrain, which was already strong, and to assist our two regional friends and allies to broaden and strengthen their bilateral relationship. Bahrain's leaders have been clear that their relationship with Israel and decision to normalize is in their country's strategic interest. If confirmed, I intend to work to deepen not only the U.S.-Bahrain bilateral relationship and the Bahrain-Israel bilateral relationship, but also explore opportunities to promote the Bahrain-Israel-U.S. trilateral relationship.

Question. What can the U.S. Embassy in Bahrain do to elevate and enhance Bahrain's relationship with Israel?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to devoting my time and energy to operationalizing the Bahrain-Israel Abraham Accords agreement. While a number of MOUs have already been signed, I would work to broaden and strengthen relations between these two important friends and allies across the broad spectrum of topics, from military to economic to trade to education, and particularly on people-to-people ties, which provide benefits for the long term. I would also want to consult with the Bahraini Government and the Israeli Embassy in Bahrain to see where they felt the greatest opportunities lie.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO STEVEN C. BONDY BY SENATOR CHRISTOPHER MURPHY

Question. Can you please clarify your answer as to the status of human rights in Bahrain and how you will promote human rights if confirmed as Ambassador?

Answer. The United States is encouraged by steps the Bahraini Government has taken in recent years to improve its human rights record in the past decade. If confirmed, I will work to promote continued positive momentum. The Biden-Harris administration has been clear that there are continued concerns about the human rights situation in Bahrain, as detailed in the State Department's annual Human Rights Report and discussed often with Bahraini interlocutors. If confirmed, human rights will be a priority for me, and I intend to lead engagement in several established channels for human rights dialogue with Bahrain, including our annual Strategic Dialogue and other high-level engagements. I will engage on specific cases as these arise, including regarding those individuals imprisoned for exercising their rights. I appreciate Congress's focus and engagement on this important topic, and if confirmed, I look forward to working with members to continue to advance human rights in Bahrain.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO LISA A. CARTY BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question. How can the United States work within ECOSOC to effectively push for consistent and high level U.N. engagement to address the undermining of humanitarian assistance and access? Does ECOSOC have a strong role to play here? How has ECOSOC's Humanitarian Affairs Segment (HAS) improved the U.N. response to the humanitarian crises and how can it be improved?

Answer. The U.N. Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC) provides a multilateral platform for Member States to discuss ways to meet growing humanitarian needs and improve the humanitarian system to reach the most vulnerable communities. In 2021, the United States' ECOSOC engagement prioritized the coordination and provision of humanitarian assistance to vulnerable populations impacted by conflict, COVID-19, and natural disasters, as well as the importance of humanitarian access and the protection and safety of United Nations and humanitarian personnel. If confirmed, I will ensure the United States continues working within ECOSOC to act ambitiously in addressing the compounded risks of conflict, climate and the COVID-19 pandemic while protecting and advancing principled humanitarian assistance.

The HAS provides an important platform for the international community to strategically engage on the most pressing humanitarian issues. If confirmed, I will seek to further improve the HAS by ensuring that its discussions are focused on the most urgent priorities aligned to U.S. humanitarian concerns, as well as issues related to advancing inclusion, including with respect to sex and gender, innovation and partnership, greater respect for international law, and accountability for those actors who obstruct humanitarian assistance.

ECOSOC Reform

Question. There are some who say ECOSOC lacks any real authority and that its work overlaps with the activities of the U.N. General Assembly. It has been suggested that the Council could play a greater role in global economic and development policy. The U.N. has passed several reforms over the years, including as recently as this year, to strengthen ECOSOC's policy guidance role and to improve collaboration between ECOSOC, its subsidiary councils, and other U.N. entities

- What is your assessment of the most recent ECOSOC reforms? Do you believe that ECOSOC should have a greater policy-setting role?

Answer. The reform of ECOSOC is an ongoing process. Sustained efforts by the United States have successfully influenced ECOSOC to implement reforms to improve its efficiency and effectiveness. For example, ECOSOC's ongoing revitalization work has reduced the number of days of ECOSOC activities by eliminating and/or shortening duplicative and lengthy segments and meetings, restructured the ECOSOC calendar into more streamlined groups, and required subsidiary bodies to assess whether they need annual negotiated outcomes. There has also been progress aligning the agendas of the General Assembly, ECOSOC, and ECOSOC's subsidiary bodies to eliminate duplicative segments. If confirmed, I will continue to urge ECOSOC to eliminate duplicative sessions, segments, and activities to allow ECOSOC and its subsidiary bodies to focus on core tasks.

Question. How, if at all, will these ECOSOC reforms contribute to U.N. efforts to more effectively respond to the COVID-19 pandemic and related humanitarian crises?

Answer. ECOSOC plays a pivotal role in addressing the COVID-19 pandemic, economic recovery, and humanitarian crises. If confirmed, I will work with ECOSOC and likeminded partners to press to make ECOSOC more relevant, effective, and accountable to its Member States. ECOSOC reforms will allow the organization to better rationalize and prioritize its work to successfully address the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic and make progress towards achieving the 2030 agenda.

Question. China's Role in ECOSOC, Targeting NGOs: I am concerned about China's increasing influence and role in U.N. bodies. ECOSOC consults with more than 5,100 registered non-governmental organizations to inform its work. I am deeply concerned that within ECOSOC, China has used its seat on the Council's committee on NGOs to block applications from NGOs working on human rights issues.

- How do you assess China's efforts to use its increased influence at ECOSOC and elsewhere in the U.N. system to undermine civil society and silence the voices of those who champion human rights? Are we doing enough to push back against this?

Answer. There is no doubt that China is seeking to advance its interests across the U.N. system. Countering malign Chinese action requires vigilant and energetic U.S. engagement. Chinese influence in ECOSOC has been a particular issue. Preserving space for credible NGO voices, on human rights or other key issues, must be a top priority. The United States has serious concerns about any ECOSOC NGO committee member insisting NGOs align with particular political positions as a condition for the committee to grant U.N. consultative status. The United States has had success, including at ECOSOC, coordinating with allies and partners to push back against PRC attempts to undermine core U.N. principles. If confirmed, I will work with allies and partners to continue to object to the PRC's practice of demanding NGOs use so-called "correct U.N. terminology" in their applications, websites, and documents when referring to Taiwan, Hong Kong, Macau, or Tibet, which has the effect of censoring organizations' online presence, unduly restricting freedom of expression of their members, and stifling dissenting voices. If confirmed, I will work diligently to counter unhelpful Chinese actions, in particular with NGO committee members, and to ensure representation of credible civil society groups.

Question. The rapid collapse of the Ghani Government and Taliban takeover exacerbated a large-scale humanitarian and forced migration crisis. Fragile financial conditions and the Taliban's sidelining of women and girls are among the broader challenges facing the country. I am concerned about the hundreds of U.N. Afghan staff, many women and ethnic minorities, whose lives are at great risk right now. The U.N. has reported dozens of incidences of looting of U.N. offices, threats and beatings of U.N. staff throughout the country. What more can be done to assist U.N. Afghan staff who are in great peril right now?

Answer. The United States, along with our partners, continues to engage diplomatically to press the Taliban to allow safe, unfettered access for all humanitarian actors, including female aid workers. We also strongly support the efforts of the U.N. security system, including the U.N. Department of Safety and Security, to advise U.N. personnel and NGO aid providers in the field on security risks and security measures. If confirmed, I will continue to press for the safety of all humanitarian workers and U.N. personnel and their unfettered access to deliver needed services to the Afghan people.

Question. What role should the Humanitarian Affairs Segment of ECOSOC play in bringing together actors from the U.N., private sector, and populations in need to meet the dire humanitarian needs within Afghanistan, particularly in light of the complex-and evolving-sanctions regime in place against the Taliban?

Answer. The ECOSOC Humanitarian Affairs Segment (HAS) has furthered efforts by the United States and our partners to ensure that humanitarian aid in Afghanistan adheres to humanitarian principles, reaches those most in need, is robustly funded, and leverages partnerships, including with the private sector, to maximize innovation and effectiveness in humanitarian response. If confirmed, I will seek to ensure the United States and our partners continue to support the HAS's important and growing role in bringing together stakeholders to address humanitarian needs and ensure unfettered access by and safety of U.N. and humanitarian partners.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO LISA A. CARTY BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. Are you familiar with S. 2297, the International Pandemic Preparedness and COVID-19 response Act?

Answer. I have read the legislation you reference and agree that sustained attention to the question of World Health Organization (WHO) reform is an urgent priority. If confirmed, I will support the Biden-Harris administration's active engagement in the WHO's Member State Working Group on Strengthening WHO Preparedness for and Response to Health Emergencies (WGPR). Through this mechanism, the United States is advancing its interests and demonstrating its commitment to strengthening and reforming the WHO to ensure it can deliver on its vital global mission to advance health, health security, and the prevention of and response to future biological catastrophes.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to advancing the core principles of this Act through ECOSOC, including by elevating the importance of SDG #3 targets 3C and 3D?

Answer. I understand that the United States is already working to advance multi-pronged efforts that are consistent with the core principles of the draft International Pandemic Preparedness and COVID-19 Response Act.

The Biden-Harris administration is fully committed to supporting equity in global health emergencies in ways that are consistent with the Act and Targets 3C and 3D of the Sustainable Development Goals. This means ensuring that developing countries have access to vaccines, oxygen, and therapeutics, and investing in capacity building to equip developing and developed countries with tools for early warning and risk reduction as pandemic and other health threats emerge. If confirmed, I will work with allies and partners to advance these priorities, which were also reflected in the President's Global COVID-19 Summit on September 22.

Sustainable Development Goal #5

Question. Through its various bodies, specialized agencies, programs, funds, resolutions, and summits, the United Nations seeks to advance the status of women internationally, including through Sustainable Development Goal #5, relating to gender equality. Often times, this has included advocacy for "the reproductive health rights of women."

- In your view, does the term “reproductive health” include access to abortion?

Answer. My understanding is that the United States has a long history of joining consensus on the use of the term “reproductive health” in global multilateral forums as part of its commitment to gender equality and the empowerment and protection of women and girls. Since the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) defined the term in its Programme of Action as adopted by 187 governments, references to reproductive health have been included in scores of U.N. resolutions and included in the Sustainable Development Goals. The ICPD defined reproductive health as “a state of complete physical, mental and social well-being and not merely the absence of disease or infirmity, in all matters relating to the reproductive system and to its functions and processes.” The ICPD Declaration definition does not include a direct reference to abortion. If confirmed, I will continue to support efforts to promote women’s physical, mental and social well-being and their comprehensive inclusion in all appropriate U.N. agencies, programs, funds, and resolutions.

Question. Is a woman’s access to abortion a “right” protected under the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, an indicator of gender equality under SDG #5, or a target under SDG #3.7 (ensure universal access to sexual and reproductive health-care services)?

Answer. My understanding is that the term ‘abortion’ is not in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The SDG 5.6 indicators are: “proportion of women aged 15-19 years who make their own informed decisions regarding sexual relations, contraceptive use and reproductive health care” and “number of countries with laws and regulations that guarantee full and equal access to women and men aged 15 years and older to sexual and reproductive health care, information, and education.” Target 3.7 is “By 2030, ensure universal access to sexual and reproductive health care services, including for family planning, information and education, and the integration of reproductive health into national strategies and programmes.” If confirmed, I will continue to support efforts to promote women’s physical, mental and social well-being.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to fully complying with current laws prohibiting the use of U.S. foreign assistance to perform or promote abortion as a method of family planning, to support involuntary sterilizations, or to lobby for or against the legalization of abortion overseas?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to upholding the law, including all laws related to our foreign assistance.

Question. If confirmed, will you also commit to ensuring full compliance with the U.N.’s “zero tolerance” policy with regard to sexual exploitation and abuse, whether such acts are committed by U.N. personnel themselves or partners implementing U.N. humanitarian and development assistance programs?

Answer. The United States will absolutely not tolerate sexual misconduct, including sexual exploitation and abuse (SEA), in any of its forms and at any level across the multilateral system. Such acts are a scourge that undermines the very foundation of foreign assistance. The United States has been a leader, including through pushing through a landmark U.N. Security Council resolution in 2016 and urging the U.N. system at the highest levels and throughout the organization to adopt detailed and robust policies to prevent and respond to sexual exploitation and abuse (SEA), including to ensure that the U.N. takes a survivor-centered response to any such allegation, strengthens and improves its reporting and response mechanisms, and holds all perpetrators accountable. If confirmed, I will support the administration’s push to fully enforce Secretary-General Guterres’s “zero tolerance” policy, including through the Office of the Special Coordinator on Improving the United Nations Response to Sexual Exploitation and Abuse and the Office of the Victims’ Rights Advocate for the United Nations.

Sustainable Development Goal #16

Question. While the Sustainable Development Goals failed to prioritize democracy and good governance as the foundation upon which all stable, healthy, and prosperous societies are built, SDG #16 may serve as a building block for future negotiations. Targets relating to the rule of law, government transparency and accountability, and combatting corruption are particularly relevant in the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic.

- If confirmed, how will you advance the principles of democracy and good governance as foundational to advancement to each of the SDGs?

Answer. The United States has consistently stressed that the fundamental values articulated in SDG 16 must form the basis for the achievement of the 2030 Agenda as a whole, and it has noted the importance of the cross-cutting and foundational values that drive progress on sustainable development, including transparency, good governance and the rule of law, and promoting equality and human rights. It is critically important for the United States to push for the recognition of the Agenda's underlying values across the U.N. system. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that these values feature prominently in U.N. resolutions and other negotiated documents and work closely with U.N. organizations to ensure that their policies and practices reflect those values.

Energy Security and Climate Action

Question. Expanding access to reliable and affordable energy will be key to the advancement of nearly all of the SDGs, particularly for SDG #1 (to end poverty in all its forms everywhere). Yet, many of the proposals coming out of the Biden administration appear to be prioritizing green energy options that are impractical and out of reach for the poorest of the poor and may exacerbate, rather than eliminate, energy poverty.

Moreover, there are serious concerns about the potential for China to manipulate commitments under the SDGs and the upcoming U.N. Climate Change Conference (COP26), such that the Chinese Government and its state-owned enterprises profit through the sale of “green” technologies to low carbon emitters in the developing world in order to meet U.N.-imposed policies and requirements while failing to take meaningful action to reduce its own consumption.

- If confirmed, how will you balance SDGs #7 (clean energy) and #13 (climate action) against each of the other SDGs?

Answer. It should be possible to advance progress on energy security and climate action without compromising progress across other SDGs. Renewables—specifically wind and solar—are the cheapest form of new electricity in most of the world today. The cost for many key clean energy technologies has continued to decline, additionally, they can be deployed cost-effectively at varying scales, making them increasingly essential to expanding energy access. Importantly, developing countries and major emitters, such as India, recognize these complementarities and have incorporated massive renewables deployment in their economic development agendas. It will be important as climate negotiations continue to ensure that China is not seeking unfair advantage or exploiting international agreements for its own gain. If confirmed, I would work to guard against unfair Chinese actions and develop complementarities across the energy, climate and other SDGs.

Question. How will you ensure that low carbon emitters in the developing world are not penalized by energy development and consumption policies and requirements imposed by the U.N.?

Answer. The Paris Agreement does not impose any “energy development and consumption policies or requirements” on emerging economies, and instead allows all parties to set nationally determined climate goals that reflect their unique national circumstances. The United States understands that every country, from high carbon emitters to low carbon emitters, faces a unique set of climate and energy-related challenges. As such, each country will follow a different path to successfully transition to a clean energy future. If confirmed, I would work to aim to encourage and support those transitions through both bilateral and multilateral engagements.

Question. The People's Republic of China (PRC) Government is actively trying to reshape international institutions to advance its malign development model, including the United Nations.

- If confirmed, how will you work with our democratic allies and partners to build resiliency to attempts by the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) to undermine the integrity of multilateral institutions and longstanding, widely held democratic values, including with regard to the important work of ECOSOC to advance the Sustainable Development Goals?

Answer. There is no doubt that China is seeking to advance its interests across the U.N. system. Countering malign Chinese action requires vigilant and energetic U.S. engagement. If confirmed, I would make this a top priority. The United States has had success coordinating with allies to push back against PRC attempts to undermine core U.N. principles, including at ECOSOC. The committee's report, The United States and Europe: A Concrete Agenda for Transatlantic Cooperation on China, provides an important roadmap to help pursue this goal. The United States shares many priorities with countries around the world, including developing countries, yet too often in multilateral fora, and particularly at ECOSOC, votes do not align. If confirmed, I will work with colleagues across the Department to strengthen current alliances and partnerships as well as improve outreach to a broader group of countries based on shared priorities, both in New York and through bilateral channels.

Question. Will you commit to monitoring such attempts and taking appropriate actions?

Answer. The United States is best able to address these attempts when we are engaged and leading at the U.N., the General Assembly, and its subsidiary bodies including ECOSOC. If confirmed, I will use our re-engagement with the U.N. system to reassert U.S. leadership and work with our partners and allies to push back against the PRC's attempts to reshape the U.N. and international rules, standards, and values. If confirmed, I will seek to improve the U.N.'s effectiveness, transparency, and impartiality, support qualified and independent candidates for key positions, and ensure that we advance our priorities on issues ranging from human rights to emerging technologies to the implementation of the Sustainable Development Goals.

Question. China has focused intensely on securing leadership roles in various U.N. agencies, particularly those overseeing technical standards that will shape the future. In many cases, these leaders have overtly advanced CCP goals, instead of acting independently to advance the global good. It is clear the United States has had mixed success with elections for heads of International Organizations in the past, and is taking more robust and coordinated steps to advocate for qualified and independent candidates in U.N. bodies.

- If confirmed, will you prioritize robust strategies to secure the election of qualified and independent candidates to lead ECOSOC?

Answer. If confirmed, one of my highest priorities will be the appointment and election of qualified, independent candidates to leadership positions in the U.N. system. I would hope to draw on my extensive experience in the U.N. system to help advance this goal. Such personnel are critical to ensuring the U.N. operates effectively and in line with its foundational principles and values, and they bring strong technical and policy skills that enhance the performance and outcomes within the U.N. system, which, in turn, bolster our efforts on U.N. reform and good governance. The Bureau of International Organization Affairs has established a new office focused in part on managing, supporting, and coordinating elections and appointments for qualified U.S. and likeminded candidates for leadership roles in the U.N. system. That office works closely with our multilateral missions, including in New York and Geneva, to ensure the United States identifies and advocates on behalf of interested candidates for key positions across U.N. organizations and agencies.

Question. My report last year on U.S.-Europe cooperation on China notes that China abuses its seat on the U.N.'s NGO committee to block legitimate NGOs who would be critical of China's horrible human rights record, particularly against the Uyghurs and Tibetans.

- If confirmed, how would you ensure that China does not block legitimate NGOs from joining the committee?

Answer. PRC efforts to block legitimate NGOs from participating in the U.N. prevent the valuable contributions of civil society and other important non-state stakeholders. The United States has serious concerns about any ECOSOC NGO committee member insisting NGOs align with particular political positions as a condition for the committee to grant U.N. consultative status. The United States has had success, including at ECOSOC, coordinating with allies to push back against PRC attempts to undermine core U.N. principles. We will work with our allies and partners to continue to object to the PRC's practice of demanding NGOs use so-called "correct U.N. terminology" in their applications, websites, and documents when referring to Taiwan, Hong Kong, Macau, or Tibet, which has the effect of censoring organizations' online presence, unduly restricting freedom of expression of their members, and stifling dissenting voices. If confirmed, I will work with NGO committee members and allies to continue to push back against these efforts and ensure the committee's work is open, transparent, and accessible to civil society around the globe.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
 SUBMITTED TO LISA A. CARTY BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

SDG

Question. As Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee on State Department and USAID Management, International Operations, and Bilateral Development, my subcommittee has responsibility for reviewing the budget and operations of the State Department and USAID. SDG 16, in my view is the key to achieving all the other sustainable development goals, as it seeks to develop “peaceful and inclusive societies . . . provide access to justice for all and build effective, accountable and inclusive institutions at all levels.”

- Should you be confirmed, how do you plan on ensuring that SDG16 will remain central to the UN’s approach to implementing the SDGs and keep adversaries from advancing an alternative view on democracy and human rights?

Answer. The United States has consistently stressed that the fundamental values articulated in SDG 16 must form the basis for the achievement of the 2030 Agenda as a whole, and it has noted the importance of the cross-cutting and foundational values that drive progress on sustainable development, including transparency, good governance and the rule of law, and promoting equality and human rights. It is critically important for the United States to push for the recognition of the Agenda’s underlying values across the U.N. system. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that these values feature prominently in U.N. resolutions and other negotiated documents and work closely with U.N. organizations to ensure that their policies and practices reflect those values.

Question. Unfortunately, the President’s budget omitted specific support for the U.N. Joint SDG Fund. In your capacity, will you recommend that the U.S. become a lead donor that will attract additional investment from like-minded countries, multiplying the Fund’s impact? How do you plan on engaging partners to encourage them to prioritize the Joint SDG Fund?

Answer. A key aspect of the 2030 Agenda was the recognition that countries are primarily responsible for their own achievement of the SDGs, using funding from all sources, including domestic resource mobilization, domestic and international public finance, private sector investment, and civil society. Initiatives like the Joint SDG Fund, which seeks to leverage contributions to catalyze larger financial flows, are an important U.N. contribution to that funding. If confirmed, I will carefully consider how U.S. assistance can best support U.S. policy goals and whether the U.S. should contribute to the Joint SDG Fund.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
 SUBMITTED TO LISA A. CARTY BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question. The biggest issue that I, and many others have with the U.N. is that it allows any nation to participate as an equal member no matter what the nation’s current practices are.

ECOSOC is responsible for many committees’ councils and commissions including the Commission on the Status of Women. If ECOSOC is to be taken as a serious organization that promotes human dignity, then it can’t allow nations to make a mockery of basic principles at home while purporting to investigate similar abuses elsewhere.

- If confirmed, would you oppose the Taliban from occupying the Afghanistan seat on the Commission on the Status of Women?

Answer. Per longstanding practice, the United States will only support countries with a commitment to the full equality of women in law and practice for election to the Commission on the Status of Women. If confirmed, I will continue this practice.

Question. If confirmed, can you commit to opposing the Taliban from serving on any council or committee that is under ECOSOC?

Answer. As a general practice, U.N. subsidiary bodies such as those under ECOSOC defer questions on credentialing to the U.N. General Assembly and its Credentials committee. I understand the administration is working closely with like-minded governments and others in the international community to hold the Taliban to account for the statements and commitments it has made to responsible governance, including respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. The Taliban’s actions will matter more than its words. If confirmed, I will closely coordinate with colleagues across the U.S. Government and U.N. system to support the administration's objectives to hold the Taliban to account.

Question. Across a variety of international organizations, China is attempting to place its candidates as leaders or manipulate international standards and avoid shining the spotlight on its country's authoritarian practices. Within ECOSOC, China has reportedly used its seat on the Council's committee on NGOs to block applications from NGOs working on human rights issues. What is your assessment of China's efforts to increase its influence in U.N. bodies, particularly ECOSOC?

Answer. There is no doubt that China is seeking to advance its interests across the U.N. system. Countering malign Chinese action requires vigilant and energetic U.S. engagement. Chinese influence in ECOSOC has been a particular issue. The United States has serious concerns about any ECOSOC NGO committee member insisting NGOs align with particular political positions as a condition for the committee to grant U.N. consultative status. The United States has had success, including at ECOSOC, coordinating with allies and partners to push back against PRC attempts to undermine core U.N. principles. The United States works with our allies to object to the PRC's practice of demanding NGOs use so-called "correct U.N. terminology" in their applications, websites, and documents when referring to Taiwan, Hong Kong, Macau, or Tibet, which has the effect of censoring organizations' online presence, unduly restricting freedom of expression of their members, and stifling dissenting voices. If confirmed, I will work diligently to counter unhelpful Chinese actions, in particular with NGO committee members and allies, to continue to push back against these efforts and ensure the committee's work is open, transparent, and accessible to civil society around the globe.

Question. If confirmed, what steps would you take to highlight China's manipulative practices and counter its efforts to control ECOSOC and related committees?

Answer. The United States is best able to address these attempts when we are engaged and leading at the U.N., including the General Assembly and its subsidiary bodies including ECOSOC. If confirmed, I will work with our partners and allies and strengthen partnerships to push back against the PRC's attempts to reshape the U.N. system and undermine the international rules-based order upon which it is based. If confirmed, I will also take targeted actions to oppose harmful PRC efforts that include its attempts to exploit the U.N. system and other international organizations to promote its "One Belt, One Road" Initiative as a way to achieve the Sustainable Development Goals or its efforts to introduce PRC ideology into negotiated U.N. products.

Communications Received Supporting the Nomination of Steven C. Bondy to be U.S. Ambassador to the Kingdom of Bahrain

LETTER SUBMITTED BY AMB. HUGO LLORENS (RET.)
IN SUPPORT OF STEVEN C. BONDY

The Office of Ambassador Hugo Llorens (ret.)

October 4, 2021

Dear Senator Menendez:

Steve Bondy is excited about his Senate Confirmation hearing this coming Thursday, October 7. As a long-time mentor, but also a friend, I have heard some say Steve may not be as sensitive about inter-agency cohesion. I wanted to convey that nothing could be further from the truth.

Steve worked for me as a member of my leadership team at the time I led the U.S. Embassy in Kabul in the period 2016-17. Steve was my Assistant Chief of Mission. In that position he served as the Chief Operating Office of the largest Embassy in history with a staff 8,500 representing 22 U.S. government agencies. Steve and I worked together on a daily basis, seven days a week and 12 or more hours per day. We managed some of the most challenging diplomatic and security issues on America's national security portfolio.

As the Assistant Chief of Mission, Steve's responsibilities were immense and the range of issues he managed were expansive, from oversight of security of thousands of Embassy staff in a war zone, to strengthening the physical plant of our perimeter and building, to combatting opium and heroin drug trafficking. Steve directly led the largest U.S. law enforcement team deployed overseas, including huge FBI and DEA contingents. In all of these roles Steve was a superb leader and manager. In all my dealings with him, I found him to be extraordinarily inclusive, collaborative, and supportive, engaging the range of section and agency heads under him to ensure they were closely synchronized and carrying out their operations in support of US national interests.

In my 36-year State Department career, with 20 years of senior leadership experience as a two-time Ambassador, two-time DCM, and two-time Principal Officer, I have never worked with an officer who was as closely aligned with our military counterparts as Steve. He had a close, cooperative relationship with the commander of the Resolute Support Mission, General Mick Nicholson, and all of his senior staff officers. Through his experience working at JSOC for three years, Steve was intimately familiar with Special Operations and collaborated with the senior special operations officer in country, then-Major General Scott Howell, who Steve knew well from JSOC days. Steve also maintained extremely close and collaborative ties with the general officer responsible for intelligence and his team. Throughout, all of our military officer counterparts had the utmost respect for Steve. They respected his total dedication, his competence, and his talents as a team player.

Steve is an honorable and patriotic American. He is more than ready to be an outstanding US Ambassador to Bahrain. I have full confidence that he will develop a unified, cohesive Country Team and collaborate closely with the three-star commander of US Navy Central Command. We can rest assured that with Steve as a leader, our national security and foreign policy are in the very best hands.

Sincerely,

Ambassador Hugo Llorens (ret.)

LETTER SUBMITTED BY GEN. JOSEPH L. VOTEL, USA (RET.), PRESIDENT AND CEO, BUSINESS EXECUTIVES FOR NATIONAL SECURITY, IN SUPPORT OF STEVEN C. BONDY

Business Executives

General Joseph L. Votel, USA (Ret.)
President and CEO

Applying best business practices to address the nation's most pressing security challenges

October 4, 2021

Senator Robert Menendez
Chairman, Senate Foreign Relations Committee
Hart Senate Office Building
SH-528
Washington, DC 20510

Mr. Chairman,

I am retired General Joe Votel, former JSOC, SOCOM and CENTCOM Commander, and I am writing to offer my very strongest endorsement for confirmation of Mr. Steve Bondy as our Ambassador to Bahrain.

I have known Steve since 2013 when I selected him from a group of senior Diplomatic Corps officers to be my Policy Advisor at the Joint Special Operations Command (JSOC). As such, he was my principal advisor on interagency communication, coordination and collaboration. In a word – he was excellent and I implicitly trusted his counsel on a variety of sensitive and high risk activities that we conducted pursuant to our assigned missions. When I departed JSOC in 2014 and moved to US Special Operations Command (SOCOM), and then subsequently to US Central Command (CENTCOM), I continued to interact regularly with Steve, who was then serving in key positions in Embassies across the Middle East. Again, he was a trusted voice whose input I personally sought and valued. As a Charge d'Affaires, his Country Teams were excellent and always well-coordinated. Steve always demonstrated, in abundance, the skills and attributes required for senior government leadership overseas and especially within the interagency. He is a skilled communicator and an effective collaborator who is deeply respected across the military and within the interagency.

I am confident that the Committee will find him an extraordinarily well qualified nominee for this position and one who will represent our President and our Nation with distinction, integrity and honor.

Very respectfully,

General Joseph L. Votel, USA (Ret.)
President & CEO

NOMINATIONS

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 5, 2021 (p.m.)

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 2:32 p.m., in Room SH-216, Hart Senate Office Building, Hon. Jeanne Shaheen presiding.

Present: Senators Shaheen [presiding], Menendez, Cardin, Murphy, Kaine, Markey, Van Hollen, Johnson, Romney, and Young.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. JEANNE SHAHEEN, U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW HAMPSHIRE

Senator SHAHEEN. Good afternoon, everyone. We are looking for Senator Markey, but we are going to go ahead and begin before he gets here. He is going to do introduction of Vicki Kennedy today.

At this point, the hearing of the Foreign Relations Subcommittee on European Affairs will come to order and I would like to recognize the ranking member, Ron Johnson, who is also here.

We are here today to consider nominations for four important positions representing the United States in several partner countries in Europe: Mr. Jeffrey Hovenier to be Ambassador to the Republic of Kosovo, Mr. Michael Murphy to be Ambassador to Bosnia and Herzegovina, Ambassador Julissa Reynoso Pantaleon—I am sorry for massacring your last name—to be Ambassador to the Kingdom of Spain and the Principality of Andorra, and Mrs. Victoria Reggie Kennedy to be Ambassador to the Republic of Austria.

Let me begin by congratulating each of you on your nomination and thank you for agreeing to take on the commitments of being an Ambassador of the United States, should you be confirmed.

Let me also welcome your relatives who are here. I always think of hearings for ambassadorial candidates as kind of like a wedding. Everybody is happy when they are here.

I wanted to take a moment also today to celebrate the diversity of our nominees appointed by this administration.

I have participated in a number of nomination hearings this year, and I have been struck by the diversity of the appointments which reflects the diversity of our country. Of the 21 nominees who have been confirmed by the Senate, 52 percent are women, over half of the State Department nominees are people of color, and one in three nominees is either an immigrant or a child of immigrants. You all are in very good company.

The nominees today are not only well qualified, but you offer a unique perspective that will serve to strengthen our ability to advance U.S. policy interests overseas.

I have been heartened to hear the stories of nominees who were born outside of the United States or whose parents immigrated to America in hopes of providing a bright future for their children.

Your experiences not only enrich America, they also advance America's interests overseas as a living testament to America's values in action. Thank you all for agreeing to stand as candidates for these positions.

I think we will go ahead and begin opening statements and take a break if Senator Markey is able to come here so he can do the introduction.

I also want to recognize former Senator Chris Dodd, who is hiding in the audience. Thank you very much, Senator Dodd, for being here. It is nice to see you, although I almost did not recognize you. But it is great to have you here.

I want to also point out that we are in the middle of votes, and so at some point Senator Johnson and I will take our leave to go vote and we will hand the gavel to each other during that time.

Again, thank you for agreeing to be considered for these posts.

For more than two decades, Kosovo has demonstrated the importance of the NATO Alliance. The U.S. and Kosovo's strong transatlantic and regional security cooperation is supported by the NATO-led Kosovo force, which has maintained peace and security in the country for more than 20 years.

In the coming years, Kosovo must work with Serbia to reach a final comprehensive agreement to normalize relations. This is paramount to a more stable region.

Unfortunately, corruption remains a problem in Kosovo and, as a committed ally, the U.S. should push Kosovo to address the underlying causes of corruption. Mr. Hovenier's distinguished career in the Foreign Service has prepared him for the geopolitics of the Balkans, I am sure.

He currently serves as the Deputy Chief of Mission in Ankara, Turkey, and has previously served in Berlin, Lima, Athens, and Vienna, to name a few places. I am sure that your deep diplomatic experience will serve you well in Kosovo.

I am going to do introductions for the other nominees and then we will ask you to give your opening statement.

Next, we have Michael Murphy, who is a career member of the Senior Foreign Service with a distinguished history with the department. He has been nominated to be the U.S. Ambassador to Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Like Kosovo, Bosnia has come a long way since the breakup of the Soviet Union. The Dayton Agreement continues to provide the framework for governance in Bosnia-Herzegovina, and I was glad to see earlier this year the appointment of a new High Representative to oversee civil aspects of the agreement.

If confirmed, I hope that a priority of yours will be addressing unemployment, particularly among the young people in the country. While down compared to recent years, the youth unemployment rate in Bosnia is at an abysmal 34 percent.

Bosnia and Herzegovina must continue to work with the U.S. and the international community to provide economic opportunities for its young people and prevent creeping malign foreign influence from taking advantage of the economic situation.

Julissa Reynoso Pantaleon, we welcome you back to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. You previously served as Ambassador to Uruguay and we welcome your nomination to the Kingdom of Spain and the Principality of Andorra.

Ambassador Reynoso, you have undoubtedly followed Spain's generous efforts in supporting the evacuation of vulnerable and at-risk Afghans through the use of two military bases.

Spain is a long-standing strong ally of the United States, and we hope your role will strengthen these bilateral ties. As a NATO ally, we are, of course, grateful for all of Spain's security contributions.

But we continue to urge the country to increase its defense spending to support NATO's collective efforts in addressing shared challenges. Although the war in Afghanistan has now ended, NATO must divert its attention to confront new pressing challenges, and we welcome Spain's partnership to help NATO rise to this challenge.

Ms. Reynoso, I, additionally, hope that your current role as First Lady Jill Biden's chief of staff and previous role as co-chair of the White House Gender Policy Council will help you ensure that gender equality and women's empowerment remains a concern across U.S. foreign policy.

I am now going to turn it over to Senator Markey to introduce Victoria Kennedy, and then I will ask Senator Johnson if he will give his opening statement.

Senator Markey?

STATEMENT OF HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY,
U.S. SENATOR FROM MASSACHUSETTS

Senator MARKEY. Thank you, Senator Shaheen.

And it is my pleasure to introduce my friend, Victoria Reggie Kennedy, as the President's nominee to be U.S. Ambassador to Austria. I would like to welcome her son, Curran, who is here with us today.

I also understand that Vicki's daughter, Caroline, and her husband, Alex, as well as Vicki's mother, Doris, are all watching on television today, and we know Vicki's late father, Judge Edwin Reggie, would be so proud of her.

Vicki is a public servant at heart, which is how she has fused her intellect with her desire to serve. She is an advocate for art education, has a track record of working on initiatives that empower women and girls to promote a more inclusive society.

While her roots are in Louisiana, where she was born, raised, and educated, Vicki has become a very valuable member of our community in Massachusetts. She is a member of the board of directors of the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce and serves on the board of the New England Council.

Her legal and business experience make her perfectly poised to represent the United States in Austria, one of the top 10 fastest growing U.S. trade partners and foreign direct investors as of 2019.

From 2015 to 2020, direct foreign investment in the United States has grown by more than 40 percent, sustaining an estimated 34,000 jobs in our communities.

The modern U.S.-Austria relationship forged in the aftermath of World War Two is built on a commitment to our shared values of democracy, rule of law, and the protection of human rights.

These are values that Vicki Kennedy understands and promotes as the president of the board and co-founder of the Edward M. Kennedy Institute, a nonpartisan nonprofit organization headquartered in Boston that educates the public about the unique role of the United States Senate in our system of government, established in honor of her late husband and our former colleague, Ted.

The Kennedy Institute has won both domestic and international awards for its innovative and interactive design and approach to encouraging participatory democracy, invigorating civil discourse, and inspiring the next generation of citizens and leaders to engage in the civic life of their communities.

Vicki's commitment to public service, good governance, and civic engagement will serve her well as she represents the United States and Austria at a time when our cooperation with the European Union is vital as we grapple with the mutual challenges of the pandemic, rising authoritarianism and nationalism, and the climate crisis.

Vienna is also home to the International Atomic Energy Agency and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, both of which are key to President Biden's commitment to reinvigorate U.S. global leadership with a focus on diplomacy and rebuilding alliances.

Vicki's political skill will make her an important asset to the President's commitment to build back a better foreign policy after a period of tumults unique in our history.

And if I may quote my longtime delegation partner and Vicki's beloved husband, Ted, this is what he said: "Together, we have known success and seen setbacks, victory and defeat. But we have never lost our belief that we are called to a better country in a newer world."

Vicki has spent her life working for a better country. I have no doubt that Vicki will bring all of her skills to support this administration. Congratulations on your nomination. I look forward to more years of your dedicated service to our great nation, and I recommend with no conditions that this committee give her a unanimous vote of support to take on this very important position.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you very much, Senator Markey.

I will now turn to Senator Johnson for his opening statement before asking each of our nominees to give their statements.

STATEMENT OF HON. RON JOHNSON,
U.S. SENATOR FROM WISCONSIN

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Madam Chair. In the interests of time, I will just ask that my prepared opening statement be entered in the record and, really, just wanted to welcome the nominees and their families.

Thank you for your past service. All of you, nominees and family members, I think you all realize, particularly those who have already served in similar capacities, this is a commitment. This is an act of service and sacrifice on the part of the entire family, and we truly appreciate it.

I do want to say thank you to those that took the time to meet with me. I am always struck, not only just today but in previous meetings with the ambassador nominees, how they generally express what an honor it is to represent the United States to the chosen country.

It is just true. I think we all recognize what a unique nation America is, and in discussions, whether it is with Kosovo or Bosnia and Herzegovina, these are nations that are struggling with democracy, and the advantage of representing the United States, as we discussed, is that they generally recognize America as wanting to be helpful. We are not there seeking some advantage. We are not there trying to control things. We just want what is best for the people of those countries. And so that makes it a pretty unique experience being U.S. ambassador to any nation.

And I think my only other comment—we had these in our meetings as well—is we do rely on ambassadors and members of the embassies to communicate with members here so that we can be helpful.

I think we need to be mindful as members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that what we say can have an impact passing resolutions, but we need the ambassadors and members of the embassy to let us know how we can be helpful.

In my previous life, I managed sales individuals, and I would always impress upon them, yes, it is your responsibility to represent the company to the customer.

It is your responsibility to represent America to your country but it is also important that you represent your country that you are ambassador to back to us. We need to have the expertise that you are going to develop as our ambassadors to these nations.

Again, I sincerely thank you for your past service. Thank you for your willingness to serve and I look forward to your testimony.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you very much, Senator Johnson.

We will now ask each of our nominees to give their opening statements. We are going to ask that you summarize your testimony in five minutes but your full statements will be included for the record, without objection.

And we will begin with you, Mr. Hovenier.

STATEMENT OF MR. JEFFREY M. HOVENIER OF WASHINGTON,
A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE,
CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AM-
BASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF
THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF KOSOVO

Mr. HOVENIER. Madam Chair, Ranking Member, and distinguished members of the committee, it is an honor to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee as U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Kosovo.

I am humbled by the trust and confidence the President and Secretary of State have placed in me, and I hope to earn your trust as well. If confirmed, I pledge to work closely with this committee and the Congress to advance the United States interests and priorities in and with Kosovo.

Thank you for this opportunity to recognize my wife, Laura Hovenier, who is here with me today and to thank her for her love, counsel, support, and patience. She and our four children—Helen Sabin, Peter Hovenier, Megan Atkin, and Julia Hovenier—have made significant sacrifices in this rewarding but challenging life we have shared as a Foreign Service family.

If confirmed, I would be particularly honored to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to Kosovo, a country that emerged from the horrors of the breakup of the former Yugoslavia and the ethnic cleansing of the Milosevic regime.

The United States played an essential role, together with our European partners, to protect the people of Kosovo and support them in their effort to establish a multi-ethnic democratic country.

I had the good fortune to participate in these efforts in various capacities, including as a member of the U.N. team led by former Finnish President Martti Ahtisaari that developed the “Ahtisaari plan” and paved the way for Kosovo’s independence.

The people of Kosovo have never forgotten America’s role and steadfast support over the last 22 years, and as a result, Kosovo is one of the most pro-American countries in the world and a close partner. Following democratic elections in February, a new government has taken office with a decisive mandate, and the U.S.-Kosovo relationship remains positive and productive.

I want to particularly acknowledge the early and generous response of the people in the Government of Kosovo in hosting evacuees from Afghanistan. The Government of Kosovo agreed to temporarily host up to 2,000 at-risk Afghans, many of whom served the U.S. Government and NATO at great personal risk.

But receiving refuge when in need is something that many Kosovoans intimately remember.

If confirmed, I intend to lead a whole-of-government effort to advance the following priorities.

Continuing U.S. support for a sovereign democratic Kosovo, as this remains essential to regional stability and key to our long-standing strategic goal of a Europe that is whole, free, and at peace.

Supporting the EU-facilitated dialogue to normalize Kosovo-Serbia relations, which, to quote President Biden, “should be centered on mutual recognition.”

Normalization is essential to regional stability and security, and will pave the way for both countries’ integration into Euro-Atlantic and European institutions. If confirmed, I will encourage Kosovo authorities to engage constructively, flexibly, and with urgency.

Continuing to help Kosovo rebuild from the COVID-19 pandemic—when Kosovo requested our help, the United States delivered. In September, the United States donated over 500,000 life-saving Pfizer vaccine doses to Kosovo. This shipment was the largest single COVID-19 vaccine donation to Kosovo by any country or organization.

If confirmed, I will continue to support the Government of Kosovo, Kosovo citizens, and its independent justice institutions as they work to strengthen the rule of law, improve governance, and combat corruption.

I will also work to advance human rights for all citizens of Kosovo, particularly emphasizing ethnic and religious minorities.

In 1999, our commitment to human rights led us to intervene with our NATO allies in Kosovo, saving innocent lives. We remain committed to this.

I will work with our partners in Kosovo to foster economic growth and an improved enabling environment to help address Kosovo's high unemployment rate and assist Kosovo in securing a sustainable and green energy future to attract investment, create jobs, curb migration, and reduce environmental damage.

Finally, if confirmed, I will support the Kosovo Security Forces' continued, gradual, and transparent development to a multi-ethnic NATO interoperable territorial defense force.

By building on Kosovo's first international deployment together with U.S. forces and its first hosting of Defender Europe 21 exercises, we can help Kosovo transition from consumer to provider of security.

Thirteen years ago, the people of Kosovo claimed their right to determine their own future and status as a sovereign and independent state. In those 13 short years they have achieved something remarkable, a capable and successful democracy with an economy that supports prosperity for all Kosovians.

If confirmed, it would be the honor of my career to lead the women and men of the U.S. Mission to work with the Government and people of Kosovo and our international partners on these priorities.

Thank you for your attention. I would be pleased to take your questions.

STATEMENT OF MR. MICHAEL J. MURPHY OF NEW YORK, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA

Mr. MURPHY. I just realized that.

Chair Shaheen, Ranking Member Johnson, and distinguished members of the committee, it is a privilege to appear before you today as President Biden’s nominee as U.S. ambassador to Bosnia and Herzegovina.

I am honored by the confidence and trust the President and the Secretary of State have placed in me and, if confirmed, I pledge to work closely with this committee and others in Congress to advance the United States interests in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

I want to recognize my wife, Kimberly, who devoted 30 years to public service, starting in the Senate and followed by a career in the Foreign Service. Without her love, patience, and support, I would not be sitting here today.

I also want to thank my parents, John and Barbara Murphy, who died in 2019 and 2018, respectively, but who I am confident are watching over me now. They instilled in me the values that have guided my career: a strong work ethic, a devotion to public service, and a commitment to integrity.

If confirmed, I look forward to returning to Sarajevo, where I served from 2006 to 2009. I found the people of Bosnia and Herzegovina welcoming and friendly, and I am eager to engage with them again.

There has been a strong bipartisan consensus throughout my career that a Europe whole, prosperous, and at peace is in our national interests. The United States' engagement in and support for Bosnia and Herzegovina are critical to accomplishing that goal, and our leadership there is essential.

If confirmed, I will make it a priority to support implementation of the Dayton Peace Accords, subsequent state-level reforms, and most importantly, Bosnia and Herzegovina's sovereignty and territorial integrity.

Twenty-six years of peace is a great achievement but we cannot take it for granted. We must steadfastly support an independent, democratic, and multi-ethnic Bosnia and Herzegovina. We must support the Office of the High Representative and implementation of its 5+2 agenda.

If confirmed, I will also support the following. First, I will support Bosnia and Herzegovina's Euro-Atlantic aspirations. I will work with our allies and partners to facilitate the reforms necessary for Bosnia and Herzegovina to move towards EU membership and a deeper partnership with NATO.

Euro-Atlantic integration is the surest path to the democratic, prosperous, and secure future that all of Bosnia and Herzegovina citizens seek and deserve.

Second, I will support rule of law reforms, especially anti-corruption activities. Corruption in Bosnia and Herzegovina damages U.S. national security by undermining the functionality and stability necessary for Dayton implementation, by putting at risk Bosnia and Herzegovina's Euro-Atlantic integration, and by exposing Bosnia and Herzegovina to malign external influences.

Third, I will support reforms to promote economic growth, bolster trade and investment with the United States, and create the prosperity necessary for the citizens of Bosnia and Herzegovina and their children to enjoy the opportunities that come from a thriving economy.

Fourth, I will work to counter efforts by local and outside actors, especially Russia and the People's Republic of China, that threaten our interests and undermine Bosnia and Herzegovina's future.

I am grateful for this committee's leadership highlighting the challenges posed by malign actors and providing tools and resources to push back against them.

Fifth, I will support efforts to advance reconciliation among Bosnia and Herzegovina's constituent peoples and others. The 1992–94 war in Bosnia and Herzegovina was a terrible tragedy. One hundred thousand lives were lost and horrible crimes were committed, including the genocide in Srebrenica.

The guilt for Srebrenica and other crimes rests with those who committed them, not with entire ethnic groups. The duty of today's leaders is to hold perpetrators accountable, acknowledge and honor the victims, and promote reconciliation.

It is also to focus their energies on building a common democratic and prosperous future for all in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Finally, if confirmed, I will focus on the safety and security of U.S. citizens as well as the security and well being of the United States mission in Sarajevo, its branch offices in Banja Luka and Mostar, and the employees of all three.

This includes hiring, recruiting, developing a diverse group of American and local staff, and ensuring our diplomatic platforms are sufficiently robust to advance our interests.

Madam Chair, I thank this committee and other members of Congress for your interest in Bosnia and Herzegovina. I appreciate your time, and I look forward to your questions.

STATEMENT OF HON. JULISSA REYNOSO PANTALEON OF NEW YORK, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE KINGDOM OF SPAIN, AND TO SERVE CONCURRENTLY AND WITHOUT ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION AS AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE PRINCIPALITY OF ANDORRA

Ambassador REYNOSO. Madam Chair, the ranking member, and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee to be U.S. Ambassador to the Kingdom of Spain and Principality of Andorra.

I am deeply honored to be considered by the Senate for this position and grateful to President Biden and Secretary Blinken for the confidence they have placed in me.

Let me especially thank Dr. Jill Biden. Dr. Biden is the reason I am here. She is one of the most remarkable people I have ever met, and she and the President honored me by giving me the opportunity to serve this country and this administration.

If confirmed, I look forward to another opportunity to serve this great nation.

I would like to recognize my family, friends, mentors, colleagues who have supported me over the years, many of them who are virtual at this time and in different parts of the world, primarily in New York City.

There are too many to name, but here present with me is my mother, Rosario, and my sister, Jessica, and my son is presently in kindergarten.

[Laughter.]

Ambassador REYNOSO. I will also like to extend my gratitude to my dear colleagues at the White House, especially those from the Office of the First Lady, who I am sure are eating popcorn and watching, and my colleagues at the General Policy Council. I want to especially thank my dear friend and brother, Anthony Bernal.

Finally, I want to thank Secretary Clinton and Cheryl Mills, who, in 2009, gave me the opportunity to first serve at the U.S. Department of State as the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State and then as U.S. Ambassador to Uruguay.

If confirmed, it would be my privilege to lead the U.S. mission to one of their strongest bilateral partners, where our talented interagency teams in Madrid and Barcelona work tirelessly to expand U.S.-Spanish cooperation in defense, law enforcement, commerce, and trade, science, education, and people-to-people exchanges.

The relationship between the United States and Spain is strong. We share important values including a commitment to democracy, human rights, and the rule of law. Sound economic policies, investment in people, a desire to protect the planet from the impacts of climate change, a commitment to peacefully resolve disputes between nations, and respect for the multilateral system.

If confirmed, I look forward to continue the productive partnership and transatlantic alliance between our two countries and will work diligently to advance those goals.

Spain is a vital bilateral partner and a NATO ally whose government is already reenergizing transatlantic cooperation with the Biden administration as a host of next year's NATO Summit, the outstanding cooperation we have enjoyed with our Spanish hosts at Naval Station Rota and Moron Airbase, for nearly 70 years the tangible example of our strong partnership including Operation Allies Refuge and Operation Allies Welcome.

In Afghanistan, over 30,000 Spanish military personnel served alongside Americans during the 20-year mission, and over a hundred Spaniards tragically lost their lives.

Beyond our strong defense partnership, Spain enjoys a special relationship with Latin American nations and Latinos in the United States due to linguistic, cultural, and historic affinities.

Spain and Latin American nations have a long and vibrant tradition of exchanges in training and law enforcement, defense, and other sectors.

Spain and the United States share goals in protecting human rights and democracy throughout the hemisphere. The United States and Spain also share a deep economic relationship, trading over $36.9 billion in goods and services in 2020 alone.

Spain is the tenth largest source of foreign direct investment in the United States, and the United States, in turn, is the largest source of foreign direct investment in Spain.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with the Government of Spanish President Pedro Sanchez, civil society, and the private sector to build upon our already strong bilateral relations and expand the political, commercial, educational, and cultural ties between our two countries.

If confirmed, I also look forward to fostering a relationship with the Principality of Andorra and working together with Andorra's head of government, Xavier Espot Zamora, to further our joint goals to support democracy, human rights, and financial transparency.

Finally, if confirmed, I will work closely with this body, with the members of this committee, to ensure your interests and concerns are addressed and we work together to advance our interests while strengthening our partnership with Spain and Andorra.

Thank you for your time, members, and I am so happy to be here and happy to answer your questions—any questions you may have. Thanks again.

STATEMENT OF VICTORIA REGGIE KENNEDY OF MASSACHUSETTS, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF AUSTRIA

Mrs. KENNEDY. I am having—am I on? Thank you.

Chairwoman Shaheen, Ranking Member Johnson, distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you to be Ambassador to the Republic of Austria.

I am grateful and humbled by President Biden's confidence in me. I thank Senator Markey for his generous introduction. I am delighted that my son, Curran, is here with me today, and it means the world to me to be joined by my dear friend, Senator Chris Dodd.

My daughter, Caroline, and her husband, Alex, are watching from Germany, and my mother and other family members are viewing from various parts of the country.

I am thinking today in a special way of my late husband, who revered this place, and of my late father, the first diplomat in our family, who was appointed by President Kennedy as Special Envoy to the Middle East in 1961.

One of the countries my father visited as envoy was Lebanon, the land his parents left in 1920 in their early 20s to come to America. Forty-one years later, their youngest son landed in Beirut to find his parents' entire village at the airport to greet him. His grandmother was in that crowd and he met her for the first time as the representative of the President of the United States. What a moving testament to the American dream.

I have five siblings, and all our lives were shaped by that sense of infinite possibility. I grew up in a small town, Crowley, Louisiana. I attended Catholic schools and then Newcomb College, followed by Tulane Law School. I clerked for a federal appellate judge and then began private law practice.

I first traveled to Europe with my brother when we were college students, faithfully following a guidebook entitled "Europe on $5 to $10 a Day." That gives you an idea how long ago it was.

But when we arrived in Vienna, we were overjoyed to find a letter from our parents with a little something extra in it and a note that read, "So you can enjoy the music." How glorious it was to attend the opera in Vienna and hear a concert in Salzburg.

From that time on, Austria was special to me. Of course, I could not have imagined then that I would be sitting here today. But I feel my background has prepared me well.

As a lawyer in a global law firm, I have led diverse teams to resolve complex problems, working collaboratively toward a common goal. I am a trustee of the Kennedy Center, where I have chaired the Education Committee for more than a decade.

I am president of the board of the Edward M. Kennedy Institute for the United States Senate, which focuses on the vital role of the Senate in our governance, fosters civil dialogue, and seeks to inspire new generations to engage in civic life. And I have been an active member of the business community in New England, serving on the boards of our Regional Business Council as well as the Chamber of Commerce.

U.S.-Austrian relations are strong, based on our mutual interests and shared ideals. We have been friends for a long time, first establishing formal diplomatic ties in 1838, and we have just marked the 74th anniversary of the Marshall Plan with which in partnership with Austria has turned into an investment that is an economic success story that continues to pay dividends for both of our countries.

Our bilateral economic ties are strong and growing. The United States is the second largest market for Austrian exports and bilateral trade is projected to be greater this year than last.

Austria recorded the second fastest rate of growth in foreign direct investment in the United States in 2020 and that direct investment overall has resulted in the creation of tens of thousands of U.S. jobs.

If confirmed, I am eager to strengthen our trade and investment relationship even further. Austria and the United States share many common values and perspectives, including support for human rights and the rule of law.

Austria is a member of the global coalition to defeat ISIS and has contributed peacekeepers and trainers around the world.

If confirmed, I will work tirelessly to advance America's interests and values, and strengthen and deepen our already strong relationship with Austria across the full range of political, security, economic, and social issues that bind us together.

Thank you very much. I look forward to answering your questions. It is an honor to appear before you today.

His grandmother was in that crowd, and he met her for the first time, as the representative of the President of the United States. What a moving testament to the American dream.

I have five siblings, and all our lives were shaped by that sense of infinite possibility. I grew up in a small town, Crowley, Louisiana. I attended Catholic schools and then Newcomb College, followed by Tulane Law School. I clerked for a federal appellate judge and then began private law practice.

I first traveled to Europe, with my brother, when we were college students, faithfully following a guidebook entitled "Europe on $5 to $10 a day." (That gives you an idea of how long ago it was.) But when we arrived in Vienna, we were overjoyed to find a letter from our parents with a little something extra and a note that read: "So you can enjoy the music." How glorious it was to attend the opera in Vienna and hear a concert in Salzburg. From that time on, Austria was special to me. Of course, I couldn't have imagined then that I would be sitting here today.

But I feel my background has prepared me well. As a lawyer in a global law firm, I have led diverse teams to resolve complex problems, working collaboratively toward a common goal. I'm a Trustee of the Kennedy Center, where I've chaired the Education Committee for more than a decade. I'm President of the Board of the Edward M. Kennedy Institute for the United States Senate, which focuses on the vital role of the Senate in our governance, fosters civil dialogue and seeks to inspire new generations to engage in civic life. And I've been an active member of the business community in New England, serving on the Boards of our regional business council as well as the chamber of commerce.

U.S.-Austrian relations are strong, based on our mutual interests and shared ideals. We've been friends for a long time, first establishing formal diplomatic ties in 1838. And we've just marked the 74th anniversary of the Marshall Plan, which helped rebuild Europe after World War II. Austria, in partnership with the United States, turned this investment into an economic success story that continues to pay dividends for both countries.

Our bilateral economic ties are strong and growing. The United States is the second largest market for Austrian exports, and bilateral trade is projected to be greater this year than last. Austria recorded the second fastest rate of growth in foreign direct investment in the United States in 2020. Their direct investments overall have resulted in the creation of tens of thousands of U.S. jobs. If confirmed, I am eager to strengthen our trade and investment relationship even further.

The United States and Austria share many common values and perspectives, including a support for human rights and the rule of law. Austria is a member of the Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS and has contributed peacekeepers and trainers around the world. Austria is also a valued partner in the Western Balkans, where it contributes nearly 350 troops to NATO's KFOR mission for peace and stability in Kosovo, and nearly 300 troops to the EU's stabilization mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

If confirmed, I will work tirelessly to advance America's interests and values and strengthen and deepen our already strong relationship with Austria across the full range of political, security, economic and social issues that bind our nations together.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to appear before you today. I would be happy to answer any questions.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you very much.

Before we begin the panel's questioning, I have some questions for each of the nominees that I am going to ask you to respond to either yes or no, and we will go down the line and ask that each of you verbally respond.

First question, do you agree to appear before this committee and make officials from your office available to the committee and designated staff when invited?

Mr. Hovenier?

Mr. HOVENIER. Yes.

Senator SHAHEEN. Mr. Murphy?

Mr. MURPHY. Yes.

Senator SHAHEEN. Ms. Reynoso?

Ambassador REYNOSO. Yes.

Senator SHAHEEN. Mrs. Kennedy?

Mrs. KENNEDY. Yes.

Senator SHAHEEN. Do you commit to keep this committee fully and currently informed about the activities under your purview?

Mr. HOVENIER. Yes.

Mr. MURPHY. Yes.

Ambassador REYNOSO. Yes.

Mrs. KENNEDY. Yes.

Senator SHAHEEN. Do you commit to engaging in meaningful consultation while policies are being developed, not just providing notification after the fact?

Mr. Hovenier?

Mr. HOVENIER. Yes.

Mr. MURPHY. Yes.

Ambassador REYNOSO. Yes.

Mrs. KENNEDY. Yes.

Senator SHAHEEN. And do you commit to promptly responding to requests for briefings and information requested by the committee and its designated staff?

Mr. HOVENIER. Yes.

Mr. MURPHY. Yes.

Ambassador REYNOSO. Yes.

Mrs. KENNEDY. Yes.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you to all of our nominees for answering yes to all four questions. We will hold you to that, once confirmed.

We are going to rotate questions as we normally do between the chair and ranking member, and then we will go to the other members who have arrived.

Each member is going to have five minutes to question and we may do more than one round, depending upon how many senators show up.

First of all, I am going to begin with you, Mr. Hovenier, as soon as I can find my question.

I think this is, really, both for you and for Mr. Murphy because it speaks to what is happening in the Balkans, and Kosovo and Bosnia and Herzegovina have long aspired for membership to the EU and NATO.

But it is unlikely, I think, based on what I am seeing and what I am hearing from Europeans that membership is unlikely to be granted anytime soon.

The question that I have is how do we keep those countries looking West? What kind of incentives can we provide to them to help them as they aspire to join the EU and look West so that they are not tempted by Russia and China?

I will begin with you, Mr. Hovenier.

Mr. HOVENIER. Thank you for that question.

In some respects, Kosovo is sui generis in the Balkans because since neither Russia nor China have recognized Kosovo as an independent state, while we still keep an eye on things, and if confirmed, this will be a very high priority of mine to keep an eye on efforts by Russia to exercise malign influence or by China in some ways, there is not the same national affinity as in some other parts of the Balkans towards some of that behavior.

That said, the problem you raised is something that I think concerns all of us. As you are aware, the European Union will have a summit tomorrow, and if press reports can be believed they will reiterate and restate their commitment to enlargement, including the Western Balkans.

I think in the short term our task is to continue to encourage the authorities of Kosovo and, if confirmed, this will be a priority of mine, to continue to do the reforms that are required so that they are ready for membership both in the EU and in NATO.

The European Union has played a constructive role in many ways with regard to Kosovo, both through assistance. But you are right that this incentive of eventual membership has been a very important catalyst for reform and change and, if confirmed, one of my priorities will be to try to build further momentum and to work with our European Union partners to ensure that the prospect is real and that real reform is carried out consistent with their obligations, should they obtain membership either in the EU or in NATO.

And on that one last thing, I would like to add and would be to encourage those EU member states who have not yet recognized Kosovo to think seriously about the implications of that, which would also be part of our diplomacy.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you. Yes, that would be very helpful.

Mr. Murphy, really, the same question. I was in Bosnia and Herzegovina back in 2010 with then Senator George Voinovich, and one of the things we heard from the Bosnians was how important it would be to have some signal from NATO about the prospects there.

And we came back and argued very strongly that Bosnia should at least get MAP—Membership Action Plan—to help them understand that that aspiration was possible in the future, should they continue with reforms.

What do you think the most important aspects of reform are right now in Bosnia and Herzegovina so that they can continue to aspire to NATO and to the EU?

Mr. MURPHY. Let me start by emphasizing the importance of continued strong U.S. engagement and leadership in the Western Balkans and advising Herzegovina in particular.

I think our presence, our engagement, is critically important to motivating and pressing the domestic parties in Bosnia and Herzegovina to do the right thing.

Second, one of the things, if confirmed, that I will hammer home in my engagements publicly and privately is that the reforms associated with Euro-Atlantic integration, while it takes time to meet the EU requirements, have immediate benefits to the people of Bosnia and Herzegovina now.

That includes a more open and free democracy, a more open and free economy with greater opportunities for prosperity for all including the children of the citizens of Bosnia and Herzegovina, a better future for them. I would continue to stress those points, if confirmed.

With regards to NATO particularly, I want to underscore that the United States strongly supports NATO's open door policy and the membership aspirations of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

We are focused now on the benefits of deepening the partnership that exists between Bosnia and Herzegovina where there is a consensus within Bosnia and Herzegovina to pursue that partnership.

The key challenge there and one I will make a priority, if confirmed, is to encourage the Government to press forward with its reform program and present it to the Alliance because that will serve as a catalyst to getting more allied engagement to support the reforms necessary for Bosnia to move forward.

Thank you.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you very much. I am out of time, and I am going to go vote. But I am delighted that we are joined by the chair of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Senator Menendez, and I am going to turn it over to him to—because I know he has some questions.

The CHAIRMAN [presiding]. Thank you, Madam Chair, very much. Congratulations to all of you on your nominations, and I appreciate my colleague's indulgence.

I would have had this panel before a full committee, but in order to get nominees out there we had the able work of Senator Shaheen doing it so because your assignments are incredibly important, which is why I do not always come to subcommittee hearings. But I want to come to this one because there is a couple of nominees here to places that I deeply care about.

Ambassador Reynoso, let me start with you. It is good to see you again. I am concerned. Spain is an important ally. NATO ally, Rota Bay, the—all of the elements of our relationship is very important.

But I am deeply concerned that the Spanish have not been particularly helpful, particularly in the Western Hemisphere. I am sure that they would not like us acting the way they are acting towards us if it was in their sphere of the world.

And so I get deeply concerned that Spain has taken views that are outside of the democracy and human rights provisions that we would want to see of a NATO ally.

I am deeply concerned when I see their actions as it relates to Cuba and their unwillingness to join us in our global declaration.

It seems to me that the Spaniards are more—care more about their hotels and investments than they care about democracy and human rights there. It worries me to see what role the Spaniards are playing in Venezuela as well, which is a cancer in the Western Hemisphere.

And I could go on about other places as well where the Spaniards have not been as forthcoming but, if anything, not only not forthcoming, they seem to be contrary to where we are at in our own hemisphere.

If you are to be confirmed, would you tell me what you would do to try to get our Spanish friends more in line with democracy and human rights in this hemisphere?

Ambassador REYNOSO. Thank you, Senator. It is wonderful to see you again.

And let me start by thanking you for your leadership in this space. Obviously, this is an issue that you care deeply about and so do I.

Given my trajectory in Latin America and the Caribbean, I am quite familiar with the lackluster presence or politics and policy of Spain vis-a-vis some of these countries, primarily Cuba and Venezuela and Nicaragua, I should say as well.
